Again you will get easily confused at how much Nigerians love to celebrate every occasion. We have greetings for a new house, new car, new month, when the rain fall(aku ojo oo) ,when the sun shine(aku orun Yi oo) ,new wife, even when you buy a new phone.

You will definitely have a new name. (oyinbo Pepper) you won't even have a choice than to accept it. It's a general name for whites. Some kids might just decide to sing the oyinbo anthem for you. (oyinbo pepper, If e eat pepper, you go yellow more more). It's a song that shows how much we appreciate you being here .lol.

You might find it weird how much we love to eat our swallow with our hands. To us it's how we enjoy it. To you it's going to be really weird.

Nigeria is an interesting country. You either hate it or love it. I choose to love it.

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

Frank Odindo Researcher at Kenya Researchers Limited (2013–present)
August 30, 2019

This is Ramsey Nouah and Genevive Nnaji.
They are two of the most popular African personalities in the world as far as film goes (Genevieve Nnaji and Ramsey Nouah).

They are Nigerians. They embody everything about Nigeria: hard work, tenacity, sheer power of the will, and extroversion.

Now, these two Nigerians helped bring Nigeria to the rest of Africa. Their movies penetrated national borders and were shown in nearly every TV on the continent. Just by dubbing their tapes and reselling them for a dollar on the streets, bootleggers in Nairobi and other cities made enough money to live on.

Individually, Genevive, 40 years old, has starred in 80 movies spanning 30 years of acting, concluding with Lionheart in 2018, which she also wrote and produced (acquired by Netflix for $3 million).

Ramsey Nouah, 48 years old, has starred in about 50 movies spanning 2 decades. Of course, both of them have won the AMA and shattered other records in Nollywood.

They made other Africans take to Nigeria like an infant takes to suckling…

At their peak in the 1990s and 2000s, Ramsey and Genevive were more famous in Africa than Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie were. They brought us the Nigerian romance. Every man wanted to be a Nigerian lover and every girl wanted to be loved like a Nigerian queen.

Then something went wrong…

Nigerians got wind of their popularity across the globe. A tiny bird whispered into their ears that the whole world is in love with them.

True to form, they committed to share their love with the rest of the planet. Like manna from heaven, they came in troves to America, Canada, Europe, even Asia. Those who could not find a way out of the continent settled in other African countries. Kenya, South Africa and Gambia are among the top destinations.

But even those who remained in Lagos swore to spread the love the best way they know how: the Internet. If you had an email, you were going to receive at least one love message from a Nigerian Prince or princess, with promises of love like no other.

Americans started complaining that the Nigerian Prince was asking for money too frequently without ever actually coming to see them (419 Scam).

South Africans started complaining that Nigerians are stealing their jobs (Nigeria-South-Africa-Relations)

In many countries of Europe, they made it impossible for Nigerians to gain entrance, and those who claimed to be visiting as tourists were carefully monitored and aptly sent home as soon as their visas expired. But being Nigerians, they wooed and married the European women, thus becoming part of the team.

But most impressively, in Kenya, the youth started rioting, saying Nigerian men were spoiling Kenyan ladies with too much romance, making it impossible to get a lady to date without money.
Afraid that Nigeria is taking over the world, all nations panicked and schemed to find a way to overcome the looming monopoly. The world united against Nigeria.

South Africa chased them away. Kenya chased them away. America unleashed the FBI after them. Nigerians arriving in Europe were looked at once and stamped with “back to sender.”

But Nigerians are holding no grudges against anyone. They have assured us that every evil deed charged against them was the act of but a few misguided individuals ('The misdeeds of a few': Nigeria speaks out over $46m fraud case.)

A lot of people do not like Nigerians because of generalisations and misconceptions founded on the bad experiences they have had with a few Nigerians. There are scammers and thieves and loudmouths and deadbeats and cons from Nigeria. But so are there such scoundrels in every country.

It is mostly based on stereotype. Millions of Nigerians don’t deserve the hate they get.

Why do Nigerians believe that their traditional methods or ways of treating ailments are no longer effective?

That's a very wrong premise.

Most Nigerians believe in the traditional treatment, sometimes to the detriment of their health.

They believe that people lived longer before, pointing to some old person, because of the herbs. But forgetting that he is the only survivor of his age group.

They believe only things that are bitter or painful are effective in treatment.

They believe the remedy their grandmother told them is more effective.

As a medical practitioner, I had seen late stage illness at the blick of death many times.

The same person has been given herbs from the garden, then a pharmacy was tried, followed by the axillary nurse that lives down the street. Finally showing up at a clinic very very sick and penniless.

Everybody is not a medical doctor, just as everyone is not a tribomedical practitioner.

As no one but a medical doctor can diagnose an illness, pick the right drug to use and for how long and how much, why is it that Nigerians think they all know how to use the herbs? And that a herb for “fever" will treat all diseases that cause fever in our community, from malaria, infection or even Lassa fever? Or a drink for cough would likewise handle pneumonia and Tuberculosis.

The Nigerian is convinced that herbs are better then modern medicine. While the herbs are real, after all modern drugs are improved drugs that once came from plants. The Nigerian had self diagnosed himself, started a drug (herb) he knows nothing about, or how much to take.

Then we wonder why life expectancy in Nigeria is amongst the lowest in the world

My advice, if you want to treat yourself traditionally, seek out a well known herbalist in your area first.

Before you think herbs are a better treatment than modern medicine. Think of this. Even the American, British, Russian, Indian and Japanese once depended wholly on their own traditional treatment. They accepted improvement and now live much longer then us.

So while I wish it was true that the Nigerian had entered the 21st century in regards to their health. That is not true. Tribomedical remedy remains the first point of call for Nigerians.

Related Questions

How would you cure the religious mentality in Africa, specifically in Nigeria?

What are the best ways to prevent cancer?

Why does juju seem to be associated with Nigerians and is believed only in by Nigerians?

What do you think of the Nigerian Federal Government's decision to compile a a no-fly list of Nigerians they suspect of being part of the End SARS movement?

Why are fulani people lighter skinned? I am a Fulani and most people around me, including myself are lighter skinned compared to other tribes. Is it only that Nigerian Fulanis are lighter? Because I've seen very dark Senegalese fulanis
Why don't Nigerians fix Nigeria instead of flocking to other countries?

What is a white African person called?
An African.

And when they become American. They are African American too.

Here is the most famous African-American of them all.

Most be very confusing to be an "African American" those days.

Why do people always think Nigeria is the largest production of oil and gas in Africa?

Why do people hate Nigerians?

Is it possible for foreign aid to go to the citizens directly and bypass the corrupt governments such as Nigeria?

Why was Africa a fertile ground for slave trade?

Do you think the proposed digital Naira by the Central Bank of Nigeria succeed?

Do you think Boko Haram and ISWAP will take over the Nigerian government if left unchecked?

If the bandits could successfully carry out an attack on Nigeria Defense Academy (NDA), how safe are the ordinary citizens of Nigeria?

Which state has the highest demand for yam in Nigeria?

Do you need new yam from Zaki-Biam, Benue State?

What are some interesting weapons that originated in Africa?

Does Gram-free pay Nigerians at all? If no, why?

Why do Nigerians believe that their traditional methods or ways of treating ailments is no longer effective?

What is onyema?

What are similarities and differences in political approach of African States to the Vaccination processes against Covid-19 pandemic?

Can I sell local farm produce online in Nigeria?

Do you think Boko Haram and ISWAP will take over the Nigerian government if left unchecked?

Jeff traveller, expat, student of the world, still learning14h ago

It's less that Nigeria risks an overt takeover by Islamic forces, but rather insecurity threatens to derail the potential for economic growth and is even impacting the education of younger citizens as kidnappings become depressingly repetitive.

Nigeria desperately needs to improve the security situation both to protect the safety of average citizens and to attract foreign investment. Absent progress on this front the chances of a military coup are rising, and I for one wouldn't blame the generals if they return Naija to its past practice of military rule to clean up messes civilian governments cannot manage to control.

So Islamic insurgents could indeed derail Nigeria's politics, but most likely by provoking a return to a military dictatorship.

Ironically Buhari's own military rule, when he enforced public behavior like proper queueing and cracked down on corruption in the early 1980s, helped his image when he was elected in 2015: we all expected to see a strong and determined leader who would force the untrulely back into line and sweep corruption aside with his symbolic broom. Instead Nigerians have experienced the lassitude of an elderly man in poor health, who reserves his emotions for murdered cows instead of the suffering of his fellow Nigerians.

Odds and tradition favor a Yoruba Christian as the next president if democracy holds. If a new president can rally the military there is hope a balance can be struck between the Muslim powerbrokers in the north who too often support such groups like Boko Haram for their own designs, and the Christian southerners who have been suffering under attacks from herdsmen especially during Buhari's presidency. Many southerners feel it is past time to kill a few cows and push the Fulani back to their northern states.

Most Nigerians just want enough peace and stability to get on with their own lives and plans. Sure, more regular light and better roads would be appreciated, but at this point in the nation's history just being able to send one's children to school without worrying about kidnappings or travel without bandit attacks derailing the trip would be a definite improvement over current affairs.

So no, I don't think an Islamic revolution is the primary challenge facing Nigeria, but left unchecked such insurgencies could derail the recent rise of democratic rule in the nation. In the end the Christian south has more wealth, population, and power than the drier pastoral lands of the north. They'll hold their own, God willing.

What Naija needs is effective governance so citizens can make their own choices. Getting there though, that's the difficulty. That I do worry about. Boko Haram, not so much.

Related Links

How would you cure the religious mentality in Africa specifically in Nigeria?

What are the best ways to prevent cancer?

Why does juju seem to be associated with Nigerians and is believed only in by Nigerians?

What do you think of the Nigerian Federal Government's decision to compile a a no-fly list of Nigerians they suspect of being part of the End SARS movement?

Why are fulani people lighter skinned? I am a fulani and most people around me, including myself, are lighter skinned compared to other tribes. Is it only that Nigerian Fulanis are lighter? Because I've seen very dark Senegalese fulanis
Why don't Nigerians fix Nigeria instead of flocking to other countries?

Why do people hate Nigerians?

The Nigerian Dream Answered by Boris Ezomo

Who are those people?

Do you mean other nationalities?

Hate is such a strong word, dislike is better.

Well first is that just like the Americans, we are all into get rich quick state of mind. Yet unlike the Americans, we refuse to obey laws, be they Nigerian or that of a host nation.

I will use the UK were I was for over two decades as an example. And every example is real. You can google them for more details.

In the UK, a Nigerian would park his BMW in between several job centres and present himself with different identities. Sign for unemployment benefits. That is his job for that day. Till next day. Racking thousands from the British taxpayer.

While a British "benefit thief" is the one that is still collecting unemployment benefits but secretly working.

Or having a house, and your wife using her maiden name to apply for rent payment assistance for her and her children, who are using her surname. Been paid by the government to live in your own home. Worse is that the guy has the same arrangement with his girlfriend in his other house.

See the difference? The sad part is that the offender and many of the Nigerians in Britain think they are doing nothing wrong.

Nigerian import people to the UK and force them into prostitute, or even murder children for ritual sacrifice, and toss their body in the River Thames.

British Nigerians get caught with drugs in the far East and start begging British to help, After trying to import drugs to them.
Anything bad in the press especially involving money, Nigerian is there. Even if they are now British, they are presented as "An Nigerian based in ---was today arrested by special----- for ——-" Is a daily thing in the UK.

Once an acquaintance who became homeless, asked me to let him use my address to collect his mail. He took a loan using my address and phone number and vanished. Collection agents did not leave me alone, till I threatened to sue Barclays Bank for harassment.

To the British, due to the actions of our kin. You as a Nigerian are a criminal until proven innocent.

I was in a professional job and the British needed me. Never once did anyone blink that I was Nigerian, and everyone treated me no different from anyone else.

But that is me, I arrived legally, I offered them my skill which is in high demand.

While the majority of Britons are exposed to Nigerians with little education that sneaked into their country, and ripping them off. Claiming justification because we were once colonised by them.

People abroad don't like us because of the way many of us behave abroad. It takes only one bad egg to spoil the whole crate. In case of Nigerian create, there are lots of bad eggs.

Related Links

Can I sell local farm produce online in Nigeria?

What are the answers for the place of Nigeria in the knowledge economy? Evaluate, analyse, describe and/or suggest reinforcing ideas to fostering the situation.

How does Nigeria, a nation with over 200 million people, have had less than 3,000 deaths related to COVID?

What is the summary of the chapters of the Nigerian Constitution?

What is the world's rating of President Muhammadu Buhari's performance as a democratic president?

How do I redeploy to another state during the NYSC in Nigeria?

What are profitable startup businesses that I can set up in Nigeria?

Do you know that what happened to Afghanistan could repeat in Nigeria?

Nigeria appears to be one of the most successful countries at battling COVID-19, what is their secret?

What are the main causes of Naira devaluation?

What are the economics of Agege bread production? How is the economy of scale sustained in the Nigerian bread industry? Is all of the grain Nigerian grain? Do bakers peddle the bread themselves or do they have the infrastructure to be able to export?

2021 nigerian scholarship for pilot students?

What are some of the benefits of snail farming to the African economy?

Why has Mark Zuckerberg educated Nigerian youth on Facebook codes?

Ifeanyichukwu Aniebo, former Lecturer at University of Port Harcourt (1979-2009)

Answered Fri

I am sorry I have to disagree with this statement. Nigerians, who ever that maybe, definitely DO NOT believe that their traditional methods or ways of treating ailments are no longer effective.

Depending on which part of Nigeria you are thinking of, you must have noticed that the first person to be consulted on the treatment of a serious ailment, is a traditional healer, given the chaos, and corruption, that have taken over the western style hospitals. It is only when this consultation fails, that the hospital is visited. Besides, it is better to die in a hospital, than in a native doctor's 'clinic'!

Even the almost ubiquitous western pharmacy, has not dented this approach, because if one has no money, one can not go there first, except for such over the counter palliatives for pain, slight fever, headaches, nausea, vomiting, diarrhea and so on. Dogon yaro (lemon grass, that most likely grows in your backyard) is still preferred for the treatment of malaria when one doesn't have money, especially given that some states haven't paid their workers for TWELVE MONTHS! And those with broken bones are often taken to the traditional healers first … little money down and treatment commences!

Despite the battering the traditional healers and their methods have had over the sixty years of Nigeria's existence, they are beginning to have a resurgence. While our trained medical doctors and nurses leave in droves to other better deserving countries, literate children of traditional healers have left the cul de sac of government employment and set up shops as traditional healers.

And we mustn't forget that the elite doesn't trust the western style medical establishment, hence the rise in medical tourism. The irony lost on the medical tourists is that more often than not, they are running to the same pe

Are the numbers of Christians and Muslims in Nigeria equal?

Aniekpeno Ekong

Read the scriptures in original Hebrew and Aramaic text Thu

According to a 2018 estimate in The World Factbook by the CIA, the population is estimated to be 53.5% Muslim, 45.9% Christian (10.6% Roman Catholic and 35.3% other Christian), and 0.6% as other.

In a 2019 report released by Pew Research Center in 2015 the Muslim population was estimated to be 50% while the Christian population was estimated to be 48.1%.The Pew Forum in a 2010 report compared reports from several sources. The 1963 Nigerian census found that 47% of the population was Muslim, 34% Christian, and 18% other. The 2008 MEASURE Demographic and Health Survey (DHS) found 53% Muslim, 45% Christian, and 2% other; the 2008 Afrobarometer poll found 49% Christian, 50% Muslim, and 1% other; Pew's own survey found 52% Muslim, 46% Christian, and 1% other.

Nigeria has one of the largest Muslim populations in West Africa. In Nigeria, about 52 percent of the population is Muslim. Most of Nigeria's Muslim population live in the Northern and Central states. Islam was introduced to northern and central Nigeria in the middle ages as early as the 11th century and was well established in the major capitals of the region by the 16th century, spreading into the countryside and toward the Middle Belt uplands. Shehu Usman Dan Fodio established a government in Northern Nigeria based on Islam before the advent of European colonialism.

Nigeria has the largest Christian population in Africa though Christians are about 48% of the population. According to a 2011 Pew report, over 80 million Nigerians are Christians. Among Christians, about a quarter are Catholic , three quarters are Protestant, and about 750,000 belong to other Christian denominations and a few of them are Orthodox Christians. The majority of Christians are found in the south east, South-South, south west and Middle-belt region.

Apart from Benin and Warri, which had come in contact with Christianity through the Portuguese as early as the 15th century, most missionaries arrived by sea in the 19th century. As with other areas in the African continent, Roman Catholics and Anglicans each tended to establish areas of hegemony in southern Nigeria.

Presbyterians arrived in the late 17th century in the Ibibio, Annang and Efik lands and the Niger Delta area and had missions in the middle belt as well. The works of the Presbyterian Church in Calabar from Scotland by missionaries like Rev Hope M. Waddell, who arrived in Calabar 10 April 1846, in the 19th century and that of Mary Slessor of Calabar are examples.

These are verifiable facts.

Related Links

Do you think Boko Haram and ISWAP will take over the Nigerian government if left unchecked?

If the bandits could successfully carry out an attack on Nigeria Defense Academy (NDA), how safe are the ordinary citizens of Nigeria?

Which state has the highest demand for yam in Nigeria?

Do you need new yam from Zaki-Biam, Benue State?

What are some interesting weapons that originated in Africa?

Does Gram-free pay Nigerians at all? If not, why?

Why do Nigerians believe that their traditional methods or ways of treating ailments is no longer effective?

What is onyema?

What are similarities and differences in the political approach of African States to the Vaccination processes against Covid-19 pandemic?

Can I sell local farm produce online in Nigeria?

Will I succeed if I create a question and answer website like Quora in Nigeria?

How much does it cost in US dollar terms to provide minimum vital support to feed, shelter and provide water for your family, yourself and three children in Cape Town, South Africa?

How is Bill Gates helping Africa?

Could Nigeria's Muslim population be 100 million people, although the number of Christians in Nigeria is equal?

Do you know that what happened to Afghanistan could repeat in Nigeria?

Trendingonline24
Answered by Theophilus E.Daniel-Kagbare August 20

You have no idea, at all, do you, of the nature and character of this country, Nigeria? Go beyond the surface. Take a good look back at this country since 1960. It has defied all. All fears and evil predictions.

It has survived all sorts of abuses by its people and leaders. It's been betrayed by its supposed Founding Founders. It has survived the hate of secessionists and continues to best them. It will survive the incompetence, seeming subversion, by intent, of whoever is at the helm at any time, including now.

Like an abused child, rejected by its parents, Nigeria has a life all its own. It is a child of destiny. Unstoppable.

The host of hell cannot stop Nigeria, much less Islamic State of wherever, Boko Haram, Taliban and whatnot. And I say that based on the experience of this country, not mere hope.

Related Links
Do you need new yam from Zaki-Biam, Benue State?

Can I sell local farm produce online in Nigeria?

How do I redeploy to another state during the NYSC in Nigeria?

Why do most Nigerian males hate seeing Nigerian movies?

Hakeem Lawal Lives in NigeriaDecember 5, 2019

Main reasons are these.

1. It lacks substance

2. Content is too predictable.

3. Storyline is the same. Different movie, same storyline, different actors.

4. Using wrong people for roles due to discrimination or godfatherism. You see someone acting a hausa speaking role but he isn't hausa and in the movie, it will look so obvious from the way he speaks the hausa that he is not a northerner.

5. Editing problems and Many more

However as a guy, the likes of UP NORTH, KING OF BOYS, ROYAL HIBISCUS HOTEL, LION HEART, MERRY MEN etc are changing my mindset. The directors have gotten the problem and so far have done so well fixing it.

By the way, some foreign movies have dumb storyline too. I am also looking forward to Nigerian movies in series form..

Related Links

Why are Nigerians dark-skinned?

What could only happen in a Nigerian movie?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why is it difficult for Nigerians to see through the lies of the Nigerian Church?

Is there a must see Nigerian movie?

Only in Nigeria do people look down on Nigerians for schooling in Nigeria. Why?

Is it true that Nigerians won't scam other Nigerians?

Emeka Ochiabuto Lives in Nigeria (1990–present) February 22, 2020

Scam has no national barrier.

Nigeria is a country made of three sets of people

First: those who do not know (the Hausa's)

Second: those that think the know (the Igbo's)

Last: those who actually know (the Yoruba's)

The first group constitute 87% of poverty in the country and adhere strictly to hierarchical order or system. Hardly involved in scam. The belief in a simple life, they complain about poverty, but never think about leaving poverty. This group hardly scam fellow Nigerians, except when they live around the other groups. But hardly scam an Hausa person.

The last group similarly adheres to hierarchical order. Partially involved in scam when opportunity arises. The belief in the life of opportunity. This group can scam a fellow Nigerian (Yoruba inclusive) when opportunity arises.

The second group has a hierarchical system but pretends it doesn't exist. The wait is not for a scam opportunity, but creates a scam opportunity. This group can scam anybody.

Related Links

Do you find it easy to trust Nigerians especially because there have been many cases of Nigerian scams (especially the dating scams)? Why or why not?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why are there so many scammers in Nigeria? They're using American soldier's names so you can't know if they are real soldiers or a scammer.

How do Nigerian scammers find and decide which women to scam, is it true they all sit in one room while scamming women or is that just a theory?

How do I know if I might be getting scammed by a Nigerian?
Why are Nigerians seen as fraudulent and dubious people?

I am looking for evil witches, especially from Africa/Nigeria. I have heard that they kill people in order to get magical energy. I want to interview them. Does anyone know them?

Kolawole Olashile Alabi Data Analyst Wed

By Interviewing them, you mean asking a series of questions about the "evil witches" aspect of their life? How did they got to be witches? Was it inherited from their old ones or they joined willingly or forced to join? Why do they choose to be evil and not the good ones? How killing people in order to get magical energy is a norm in their society?
And the part of killing people to get their magical energy. Pheew

Do you think they will entertain those questions from you or they are easy to identify or recognize? There's No one that does evil that will come out or tell someone else that they do it and we are even talking about witches here.

If by chance I get to know any, I don't think I'll let you know && believe me I don't wish or pray to know any.

Nigeria is hard already, why add evil witches to it???

Related Links

Does Gram-free pay Nigerians at all? If no, why?

Why do Nigerians believe that their traditional methods or ways of treating ailments is no longer effective?

What is onyema?

What are similarities and differences in political approach of African States to the Vaccination processes against Covid-19 pandemic?

Can I sell local farm produce online in Nigeria?

Will I succeed if I create a question and answer website like Quora in Nigeria?

How much does it cost in US dollar terms to provide minimum vital support to feed, shelter and provide water for your family, yourself and three children in Cape Town, South Africa?

How is Bill Gates helping Africa?

Are the numbers of Christians and Muslims in Nigeria equal?

Could Nigeria's Muslim population be 100 million people, although the number of Christians in Nigeria is equal?

Is the number of Muslims in India twice as the number of Muslims in Nigeria, with 200 million Muslims in India, compared to 100 million Muslims in Nigeria?

How many agricultural engineering factories are there in Nigeria?

Which store is the best in Lagos?

What is the main reason for the under development of Africa?

What is the fate of Nigerians after the latest security breach of the Nigerian defence academy and the constant banditry and kidnappings? What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why is Nigeria doing so poorly as a nation even though Nigerian immigrants excel when they live in other countries?

Why is Nigeria called the giant of Africa?

Is Africa poor because of colonization? If colonization never happened, how would Africa have been?

Why is Africa so poor?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?

Why is Nigeria called the giant of Africa when its among the African countries with the highest poverty rate?

Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?

Can Nigeria become the superpower of Africa?

Why is Africa rich but Africans are poor?

Why are Nigerians poor despite Nigeria being the giant of Africa?

Kelly Raymond Self Employed at Self-Employment May 3, 2020

Well, it's a complex situation. Nigeria has got itself into a fix and I know that is the reason why that question popped up. It's a problem of ideology and misunderstanding of the concept of governance.

Nigerians see elected public officials such as governors, presidents and the likes as leaders and not servants. This has a psychological effect on those elected to man those positions. It makes them behave in manners completely different from their counterparts abroad.

Nigerians or mostly Africans misuse power. They do so forgetting that power came from the people... oh wait, did it?

In Nigerias polity, party is supreme. As a political office holder you're just a representative of your party and not of the people.

As with other African countries elections in Nigeria have never been free or fair (forget what the media tells you)

The media is highly sensored, maybe more than the citizens actually realize. You know why most cases of corruption barely make it to your TV screens? The media is not like it was in the 60s and 70s

The citizens are extremely complacent. When the citizens refuse to kick against injustice or openly react to matters of that nature, they indirectly embrace it so it thrives.

The government and the people are not one and the same. Ever since Nigeria received independence from Britain and we chose democracy, there has been a divide between the people and the government. While democracy is the government of the people for the people and by the people, Nigeria carved out its own subliminal connotation being Nigeria's democracy is the government of the government, for the government and by the government. The people are not in that equation and any attempt to bring them in make you stick out like a sore thumb. The government decide who gets justice and who doesn't. Now can you expect that system to successfully prosecute itself? The people on the other hand are left to struggle to survive and survive. The government acts as referees just in case the fight for survival gets too bloody. Nothing more.

The people in government pilfer the treasury. They all do it. They do it so frequently that it has almost become normal. But it isn't.

None of the agencies/arms of the government operate autonomously. They get their orders and even funding from, you guessed correctly, the government. So, how do you think they would be fair? Nothing checks the government so they can misbehave unabated.

The people are no different from the government. Nigerians are opportunists and that can be attributed to their sharp and overactive survival instincts. They don't care if their decisions would affect someone else adversely. Small businesses would inflate the price of everyday items and goods whenever there is a holiday coming, end of the year or even when there is a minor or major disaster. Imagine food getting expensive just because there is a worldwide outbreak of SARS Covid-19. Prices of essential stuff that would normally cost $3.99 surged to $8. These are items the average household needs to survive the week. Yet the same small business owners would complain about politicians being corrupt.

This is why the cycle has continued and would likely continue until Nigerians sit up and realise that the greatest problem of Nigeria is Nigerians.

Related Links

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why is Nigeria doing so poorly as a nation even though Nigerian immigrants excel when they live in other countries?

Why is Nigeria called the giant of Africa?

Is Africa poor because of colonization? If colonization never happened, how would Africa have been?

Why is Africa so poor?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?

Why is Nigeria called the giant of Africa when it's among the African countries with the highest poverty rate?

Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?

Can Nigeria become the superpower of Africa?

Why is Africa rich but Africans are poor?

What is so special about Nigeria and why is the country so important?

Jeff February 12, 2018

Well now we could, and indeed others have, write a book on such a rich topic. Given Quora works better with shorter posts I'll mention the two most obvious points: people and oil.

Nigeria is home to almost one fifth of the African continent's human population. Roughly 1 in 6 Africans is a Nigerian. That's a tremendous potential for both good and, well, problems. Problems that are quite unlikely to remain in one nation: Nigerians can be found all over the globe. Nigeria is currently a youthful nation and the already large population is expected to double by 2050, to 400 million people, making Nigeria likely to move from the 7th most populous nation globally to to the third, behind only China and India.
Nigeria is OPEC's only sub-Saharan member. I've seen various ranks for Nigeria's oil production, ranging from 4th to 7th in export volume of crude. This makes Nigeria important in international politics as oil will remain a vital resource for the foreseeable future, as it is used not just for fuel for transportation and heating, but also fertilizer, plastics, paint, and other common commercial products. The wealth generated by oil exports also offers both hope for moving Nigeria forward, and concern that it lubricates corruption, hampering essential development, leading to a devastating feedback loop for both Nigerians living at home and contributing to emigration.

Honestly there is much more to the nation than these two topics, but they are the most obvious and important to non-Nigerians. I'll close with a few photos of my own on the land here for other perspectives of Naija:

Mighty Aso Rock, by the National Zoo in Abuja above. Aso's companion monolith, Zuma Rock is below. Zuma Rock is roughly 40 kilometers west of the capital, and offers a pleasant stroll.

Local handicrafts above, at Mama Africa's, on the outer ring road by Jabi, Abuja.

The country's namesake river, one of the longest in the world, and the longest in West Africa, the Niger River, right where the Benue River joins it by Lokoja.

One of Nike's art galleries, on Airport Road, near Abuja. And last but very much not least for me, a real Naija treasure, my wife:

So people, oil, landscapes, and personal relationships: all sorts of reasons Nigeria matters.

Related Links

What is Nigeria known for in your country?

What does Nigeria do better than other countries?

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

How is Nigeria as a country?

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

What is Nigeria famous for?

What is the uniqueness of Nigerian culture?

Victor Dirikebamor

.
Follow
StorytellerUpdated February 8, 2020

Cultures and traditions are supreme here!

There is a tribe in south-south Nigeria, a woman can't "cheat" without dire repercussions.

If for any reason, a married woman seeks excitement outside her home the children are the first to fall sick, no, not only that, they die... One after the other.

When children die mysteriously in a family, the first person the family suspects is the wife.

They could invite her on a family meeting and ask her these silly questions:

Did any man other than your husband had sex with you?

Did any man touch you inappropriately by mistake? probably by holding your hand or putting his hand across your shoulders?

Did you take money or gifts from any man without telling your husband?

This is serious in such places.

Do you know the most frightening thing?

Even Christians, most Christians, about 80% of Christians Reverend and believe in this.

Married women from such places refuse to “cheat” not only because it is morally wrong, but because they don't want to wreak havoc in their family.

These tribes are not the only ones who put culture and tradition before religion, so many Nigerians do and as such it won't be easy to find a true Christian in Nigeria who doesn't serve two masters.

Some will deny it, some don't even know it's wrong to believe in God and fiendish beliefs orchestrated by their forefathers.

I asked a boy from Edo state to step on my back so I could stretch it, he said where he came from men don't step on men... He's one of the top persons in my church at then.

Another will tell you he doesn't eat this and that because it's against the laws of his land.

I was told not to sweep at night in someplace in Nigeria that if I do then I will be sweeping away my riches... I didn't care because I was even broke at the time.

I can go forever on how such primitive laws have kept a good number of my people in mental slavery.

What is the uniqueness of Nigerian culture?

Majority of us blindly value culture and tradition far more than the religion we claim to register with.

We sometimes put our cultures and traditions first even in government.

And it doesn't take long to realize that this thinking has also contributed to out under development.

Related Links

What makes Nigeria so unique?

Nigeria: What is unique about Nigerian culture and what can the world learn from it?

What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?

What are two ways that make Nigerian's culture unique?

What makes the Nigerian culture unique; give 5 examples?

What is unique about Japanese culture and what can the world learn from it?

What are your thoughts on Nigerians moving en masse to Canada?

They are?

That's news to me and most Canadians.

There are 200 million Nigerians, somewhere in the range of 20,000 Nigerians who become permanent residents or study in Canada every year. That's 0.01% of the population - hardly en masse.

Related Links

What is life like for Nigerians living in Canada?

Do you regret moving to Canada?

Which is better for Nigerians to migrate, Canada or Australia?

How can you assist someone to move to Canada from Nigeria?

Why doesn't everyone just move to live in Canada?

How can I get a job in Canada from Nigeria?

How Can Nigeria Tackle Insecurity Challenges That's Affecting The Masses?

Mubarak Bashir Ahmadu Bello University from Nuhu Bamalli Polytechnic Zaria, Kaduna State (Expected 2026) August 12

Nigerians have been facing some insecurity challenges that usually lead to loss of lives, abductions in exchange of ransom and burning down properties worth millions.

The challenges include attacking different areas and communities, kidnappings, burning down of properties and killing the poor masses.

Insecurity has been in existence since the administration of former Nigeria President, Dr Goodluck Ebele Jonathan.

However, I would like to discuss some major facts and processes in which the Federal Republic of Nigeria would follow to solve the issue of insecurity.

The process includes.... click here (Federal Government Should Do This To End Insecurity Challenge In Nigeria - BookiNaija) to continue reading!

https://bookinaija.com.ng/2021/06/09/federal-government-should-do-this-to-end-insecurity-challenge-in-nigeria/

Related Links

How can I get help with my tuition please? The deadline is tomorrow and I've not paid□□?

If someone has a lower nasal brow ridge, is that an indication of East Asian or African ancestry?

How much does it cost to start affiliate marketing in Nigeria?

What do you think is that one idea that can change Africa for a better performance?

What is the toughest country border in Africa?

What are the ingredients of the African indigenous knowledge system?

Why is China currently colonizing Africa and the entire black diaspora (carribeans etc.)?

With over 3,000 Boko Haram terrorist surrendering in both Nigeria and Cameroon in the past weeks, what possible advice can you give both governments that this latest move by the sect could be a scheme to launch more attacks?

Why did the Quran not mention Chinese, African, Greek, Indian, or South American prophets?

How does Nigeria, a nation with over 200 million people, have had less than 3,000 deaths related to COVID?

Abuja NGO jobs for fresh graduates?

What is a white African person called?

Is the Chinese investment more likely to help end poverty in some African countries than charity-based aid provided by other actors?

Is Western Sahara inhabited?

Why is everyone talking about Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor

Story teller Updated February 9, 2020

It's almost impossible not to talk about Nigeria and Nigerians. You meet them any and everywhere.

The most populated black nation in the world. People talk about us for our ground breaking achievements and of course, our unpleasant deeds.

Here are some reasons!

It's only in Nigeria leaders will come out to say they have built a world class hospital only to fly to India or the UK for medical treatment, even to check blood sugar level. They never go close to the hospital after commissioning.

Nigerians have been heralded as one of the most educated citizens living in foreign countries.

A place where every weekend is a celebration; bars filled up, colourful marriage celebrations, clubs filled to the brim, religious services echoing to heaven and even burial's of aged relatives call for a party. A country where leaders continue to convince the youths that "they are the leaders of tomorrow" but the same leader has done all he can to remain in power in one way or another since I was born. Oga, which tomorrow are we talking about? Abi, is tomorrow a name of place?

A country that is still at the top of the jollof rice pyramid in West Africa despite our minister of information who's name is undoubtedly Lai Muhammed, claiming it was the Senegalese. Nigerian jollof rice is still the best!

A Country recently awarded the poverty capital of the world. And home of the fantastically corrupt leaders. But managed to remain the largest economy in Africa.

The church headquarters. Land of miracle workers. Home of rich pastors, poor members.

A country where leaders have successfully out maneuvered and enslaved citizens and has kept them begging for a drop of crumbs from their golden dinnings so the masses could continue fighting for their longevity.

A country who's citizens have given up on their government and has launched war on survival, battling against every odd, launching businesses to fight hunger and rewrite family histories.

A nation who's citizens have all become vigilante, guarding and protecting themselves because the majority of authorities have been bought over by rich political leaders to guard there empty houses, parked cars and sleeping wives and children.

A nation where citizens have realized Democracy as a demonstration of madness, a sick system that has giving the majority tribes and the ruling parties power to continue to determine our future in the worst possible way while making it look pretty

A nation where after graduating from tertiary institutions the first place graduates go to is to learn hand-work, instead of heading to companies or government offices for interviews.

A country where hundred thousand persons apply for hundred available positions in a company wanting to employ qualified personnel. The good news is, they are all qualified for the job. A tough choice for the company, and tough luck for applicants.

A country where people work tirelessly to turn stone to bread as a challenge to poverty... say poverty no reach, as a pure Naija blood.

A place where every Jane, Grace and mary from some fancy country claimed to have sent their hard earned savings to. And are now working tirelessly with the FBI to get them back after discovering it was a false promise... That's what the world call a romance scam.

The only country that could block a government road because of a marriage or a burial ceremony, thereby causing the most dreadful of traffic.

The only country in the world where you pay development fee before developing your own land, or constructing a road in a community. One practically pays to develop an undeveloped empty land. We are fast to blame the government but never our individual evil acts.
The only country people write “not for sale” and “beware of 419” on their properties. My English friends wouldn't stop making jokes about this at my previous job.

A country where a taxi driver carrying crate of eggs is more careful than the one carrying human beings. Life is a rollercoaster

A country where the most effective way to convince people to do a thing is to ask them never to do it... and vice versa.

A country where one could experience one of the closest relationships within and outside the family. What ever you own is also a property of your close relatives and friends except the person is unfriendly, and he will automatically qualify for the name "wicked man". Most women won't feel comfortable in her husbands house without the blessings of her husband's close relatives.

A country where activities like sport, music, marriage, burial and birthday celebrations could unite sworn enemies. No,...not religion, that's where enemity starts.

Oh! no, he didn't commit a*ny Crime, it's a marriage invitation. One of "Only in Nigeria" moments.
I can go on and on....

Why won't the world talk about such a country?

A country where everything is complete.

Our news stations have a big story to tell every day.

On a good day either a Nigerian has done something absolutely beautiful or terribly wrong.

Life is drama down here. A game of thrones!

Fact: Any country you can't find Nigerians is unsafe and not profitable!

What is it about countries like Ghana and Nigeria that helps them develop at a quicker rate than some other African countries?

Jeff September 27, 2018

There are many things I do love about Nigeria, having lived and gotten married there to a citizen, but it's not the best choice, even in West Africa, to argue as a model for development.

I'd argue policies and leadership are what make or break a nation, and while tradition and a good political organization can help prevent certain blunders, ultimately it does come down to who is head of state, as we in America are painfully experiencing.

Resources can be helpful, but can also be a two edged sword: oil has caused more turmoil and corruption in Nigeria than aid in development. Mind you, with the right leadership Nigeria's petroleum wealth could make it the powerhouse of the continent, but to date that remains a mirage.

Ghana has been quicker to focus on tourism and stability and has captured regional leadership of many foreign embassies, and is forging ahead in this new century. Nigeria's greatest strength is surely its people, but this too is a double bladed weapon: the nation has more than it can easily educate, employ, or utilize effectively.

In the end it comes down to who is at the helm, and how well they steer the ship of state.

Related Links

Why is Ghana so successful in comparison to majority of African countries?

What do other African countries think of Ghana?

What is the major problem of African countries, particularly the strong and developing ones like Nigeria and Ghana amongst others?

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

What does Nigeria do better than other countries?

Is South Africa the most developed country in Africa?

Is there any hope for Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor StorytellerUpdated February 9, 2020
Originally Answered: What's Nigeria's hope?

It won't be difficult to find a successful Nigerian in the US.

It would be easy to spot a rich Nigerian in the UK.

And it's very easy to spot successful Nigerians in Nigeria, you need just look through your neighborhood to spot them.

My street alone has numerous rich men who are not politicians, neither civil servants, they're in some sort of businesses.

But how difficult would it be to spot a group of successful Nigerians in Canada or in London?

It's almost impossible, not just in overseas but here in Nigeria.

We Nigerians are successful individually. We don't cooperate both in government and in business, neither in religion.

We're lone wolves.

We need unity if we must turn things around in Nigeria.

A group of Indians are mostly seen together.

You always see Lebanese living in foreign lands together, supporting one another.

Same thing for the Chinese. Once a brother comes into town what he does is to locate his countrymen.

And it's not just the whites, even Africans from other countries do so. Haven't you seen the boys from Togo, the Cotonou boys who did the plastering at your new house?

A Nigerian can't locate his countrymen for immediate, temporary help. He knows there is no much hope, he'll rather seek help from strangers.

This is seen both in Nigeria and abroad. We're a divided people.

You mostly here Nigerians coming together during festivals, religious meetings, unproductive political meetings. And this is true home and abroad.

Our hope as Nigerians is our unity.

Whether you like it or not, if we want to see meaningful progress, if we want to move forward we need to work together, we need to see a fellow Nigerian as a relative anywhere in the world.

Alone you can do little but together we can do great exploit. And when we work together the energy needed to get the job done is little compared to when you're to do it alone.

Look at our music industry, artists are divided. Every upcoming artist must have his record label because the existing ones will bill him too high.

The Nigerian man is always hard on fellow Nigerians, it's bad for meaningful development.

The more United we are as Nigerians the faster we shall achieve good success.

Why do most Nigerian males hate seeing Nigerian movies?

Hakeem Lawal Lives in Nigeria December 5, 2019

Main reasons are these.

1. It lacks substance

2. Content is too predictable.

3. Storyline is the same. Different movie, same storyline, different actors.

4. Using wrong people for roles due to discrimination or godfatherism. You see someone acting a hausa speaking role but he isn't hausa and in the movie, it will look so obvious from the way he speaks the hausa that he is not a northerner.

5. Editing problems and Many more

However as a guy, the likes of UP NORTH, KING OF BOYS, ROYAL HIBISCUS HOTEL, LION HEART, MERRY MEN etc are changing my mindset. The directors have gotten the problem and so far have done so well fixing it.

By the way, some foreign movies have dumb storyline too. I am also looking forward to Nigerian movies in series form..

Related Links

Why are Nigerians dark-skinned?

What could only happen in a Nigerian movie?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why is it difficult for Nigerians to see through the lies of the Nigerian Church?

Is there a must see Nigerian movie?

Only in Nigeria do people look down on Nigerians for schooling in Nigeria. Why?

Is it true that Nigerians won't scam other Nigerians?

Emeka Ochiabuto Lives in Nigeria (1990–present) February 22, 2020

Scam has no national barrier.
Nigeria is a country made of three sets of people

First: those who do not know (the Hausa's)

Second: those that think the know (the Igbo's)

Last: those who actually know (the Yoruba's)

The first group constitute 87% of poverty in the country and adhere strictly to hierarchical order or system. Hardly involved in scam. The belief in a simple life, they complain about poverty, but never think about leaving poverty. This group hardly scam fellow Nigerians, except when they live around the other groups. But hardly scam an Hausa person.

The last group similarly adheres to hierarchical order. Partially involved in scam when opportunity arises. The belief in the life of opportunity. This group can scam a fellow Nigerian (Yoruba inclusive) when opportunity arises.

The second group has a hierarchical system but pretends it doesn't exist. The wait is not for a scam opportunity, but creates a scam opportunity. This group can scam anybody.

Related Links

Do you find it easy to trust Nigerians especially because there have been many cases of Nigerian scams (especially the dating scams)? Why or why not?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why are there so many scammers in Nigeria? They're using American soldier's names so you can't know if they are real soldiers or a scammer.

How do Nigerian scammers find and decide which women to scam, is it true they all sit in one room while scamming women or is that just a theory?

How do I know if I might be getting scammed by a Nigerian?
Why are Nigerians seen as fraudulent and dubious people?

Why do most Nigerian males hate seeing Nigerian movies?

Hakeem Lawal Lives in Nigeria December 5, 2019

Main reasons are these.

1. It lacks substance

2. Content is too predictable.

3. Storyline is the same. Different movie, same storyline, different actors.

4. Using wrong people for roles due to discrimination or godfatherism. You see someone acting a hausa speaking role but he isn't hausa and in the movie, it will look so obvious from the way he speaks the hausa that he is not a northerner.

5. Editing problems and Many more

However as a guy, the likes of UP NORTH, KING OF BOYS, ROYAL HIBISCUS HOTEL, LION HEART, MERRY MEN etc are changing my mindset. The directors have gotten the problem and so far have done so well fixing it.

By the way, some foreign movies have dumb storyline too. I am also looking forward to Nigerian movies in series form..

Related Links

Why are Nigerians dark-skinned?

What could only happen in a Nigerian movie?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why is it difficult for Nigerians to see through the lies of the Nigerian Church?

Is there a must see Nigerian movie?

Only in Nigeria do people look down on Nigerians for schooling in Nigeria. Why?

I am looking for evil witches, especially from Africa/Nigeria. I have heard that they kill people in order to get magical energy. I want to interview them. Does anyone know them?

Kolawole Olashile Alabi Data Analyst Wed

By Interviewing them, you mean asking a series of questions about the "evil witches" aspect of their life? How did they got to be witches? Was it inherited from their old ones or they joined willingly or forced to join? Why do they choose to be evil and not the good ones? How killing people in order to get magical energy is a norm in their society?

And the part of killing people to get their magical energy. Pheew

Do you think they will entertain those questions from you or they are easy to identify or recognize? There's No one that does evil that will come out or tell someone else that they do it and we are even talking about witches here.

If by chance I get to know any, I don't think I'll let you know && believe me I don't wish or pray to know any.

Nigeria is hard already, why add evil witches to it??? 🥲

Related Links

Does Gram-free pay Nigerians at all? If no, why?

Why do Nigerians believe that their traditional methods or ways of treating ailments is no longer effective?

What is onyema?

What are similarities and differences in political approach of African States to the Vaccination processes against Covid-19 pandemic?

Can I sell local farm produce online in Nigeria?

Will I succeed if I create a question and answer website like Quora in Nigeria?

How much does it cost in US dollar terms to provide minimum vital support to feed, shelter and provide water for your family, yourself and three children in Cape Town, South Africa?

How is Bill Gates helping Africa?

Are the numbers of Christians and Muslims in Nigeria equal?

Could Nigeria's Muslim population be 100 million people, although the number of Christians in Nigeria is equal?

Is the number of Muslims in India twice as the number of Muslims in Nigeria, with 200 million Muslims in India, compared to 100 million Muslims in Nigeria?

How many agricultural engineering factories are there in Nigeria?

Which store is the best in Lagos?

What is the main reason for the under development of Africa?
What is the fate of Nigerians after the latest security breach of the Nigerian defence academy and the constant banditry and kidnappings?
What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why is Nigeria doing so poorly as a nation even though Nigerian immigrants excel when they live in other countries?

Why is Nigeria called the giant of Africa?

Is Africa poor because of colonization? If colonization never happened, how would Africa have been?

Why is Africa so poor?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?

Why is Nigeria called the giant of Africa when its among the African countries with the highest poverty rate?

Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?

Can Nigeria become the superpower of Africa?

Why is Africa rich but Africans are poor?

Why are Nigerians poor despite Nigeria being the giant of Africa?

Kelly Raymond Self Employed at Self-Employment May 3, 2020

Well, it's a complex situation. Nigeria has got itself into a fix and I know that is the reason why that question popped up. It's a problem of ideology and misunderstanding of the concept of governance.

Nigerians see elected public officials such as governors, presidents and the likes as leaders and not servants. This has a psychological effect on those elected to man those positions. It makes them behave in manners completely different from their counterparts abroad.

Nigerians or mostly Africans misuse power. They do so forgetting that power came from the people... oh wait, did it?

In Nigerias polity, party is supreme. As a political office holder you're just a representative of your party and not of the people.

As with other African countries elections in Nigeria have never been free or fair (forget what the media tells you)

The media is highly sensored, maybe more than the citizens actually realize. You know why most cases of corruption barely make it to your TV screens? The media is not like it was in the 60s and 70s

The citizens are extremely complacent. When the citizens refuse to kick against injustice or openly react to matters of that nature, they indirectly embrace it so it thrives.

The government and the people are not one and the same. Ever since Nigeria received independence from Britain and we chose democracy, there has been a divide between the people and the government. While democracy is the government of the people for the people and by the people, Nigeria carved out its own subliminal connotation being Nigeria's democracy is the government of the government, for the government and by the government. The people are not in that equation and any attempt to bring them in make you stick out like a sore thumb. The government decide who gets justice and who doesn't. Now can you expect that system to successfully prosecute itself? The people on the other hand are left to struggle to survive and survive. The government acts as referees just in case the fight for survival gets too bloody. Nothing more.

The people in government pilfer the treasury. They all do it. They do it so frequently that it has almost become normal. But it isn't.

None of the agencies/arms of the government operate autonomously. They get their orders and even funding from, you guessed correctly, the government. So, how do you think they would be fair? Nothing checks the government so they can misbehave unabated.

The people are no different from the government. Nigerians are opportunists and that can be attributed to their sharp and overactive survival instincts. They don't care if their decisions would affect someone else adversely. Small businesses would inflate the price of everyday items and goods whenever there is a holiday coming, end of the year or even when there is a minor or major disaster. Imagine food getting expensive just because there is a worldwide outbreak of SARS Covid-19. Prices of essential stuff that would normally cost $3.99 surged to $8. These are items the average household needs to survive the week. Yet the same small business owners would complain about politicians being corrupt.

This is why the cycle has continued and would likely continue until Nigerians sit up and realise that the greatest problem of Nigeria is Nigerians.

Related Links

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why is Nigeria doing so poorly as a nation even though Nigerian immigrants excel when they live in other countries?

Why is Nigeria called the giant of Africa?

Is Africa poor because of colonization? If colonization never happened, how would Africa have been?

Why is Africa so poor?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?

Why is Nigeria called the giant of Africa when it's among the African countries with the highest poverty rate?

Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?

Can Nigeria become the superpower of Africa?

Why is Africa rich but Africans are poor?

What is so special about Nigeria and why is the country so important?

Jeff February 12, 2018

Well now we could, and indeed others have, write a book on such a rich topic. Given Quora works better with shorter posts I'll mention the two most obvious points: people and oil.

Nigeria is home to almost one fifth of the African continent's human population. Roughly 1 in 6 Africans is a Nigerian. That's a tremendous potential for both good and, well, problems. Problems that are quite unlikely to remain in one nation: Nigerians can be found all over the globe. Nigeria is currently a youthful nation and the already large population is expected to double by 2050, to 400 million people, making Nigeria likely to move from the 7th most populous nation globally to to the third, behind only China and India.

Nigeria is OPEC's only sub-Saharan member. I've seen various ranks for Nigeria's oil production, ranging from 4th to 7th in export volume of crude. This makes Nigeria important in international politics as oil will remain a vital resource for the foreseeable future, as it is used not just for fuel for transportation and heating, but also fertilizer, plastics, paint, and other common commercial products. The wealth generated by oil exports also offers both hope for moving Nigeria forward, and concern that it lubricates corruption, hampering essential development, leading to a devastating feedback loop for both Nigerians living at home and contributing to emigration.

Honestly there is much more to the nation than these two topics, but they are the most obvious and important to non-Nigerians. I'll close with a few photos of my own on the land here for other perspectives of Naija:

Mighty Aso Rock, by the National Zoo in Abuja above. Aso's companion monolith, Zuma Rock is below. Zuma Rock is roughly 40 kilometers west of the capital, and offers a pleasant stroll.

Local handicrafts above, at Mama Africa's, on the outer ring road by Jabi, Abuja.

The country’s namesake river, one of the longest in the world, and the longest in West Africa, the Niger River, right where the Benue River joins it by Lokoja.

One of Nike’s art galleries, on Airport Road, near Abuja. And last but very much not least for me, a real Naija treasure, my wife:

So people, oil, landscapes, and personal relationships: all sorts of reasons Nigeria matters.

Related Links

What is Nigeria known for in your country?

What does Nigeria do better than other countries?

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

How is Nigeria as a country?

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

What is Nigeria famous for?

What is the uniqueness of Nigerian culture?

Victor Dirikebamor StorytellerUpdated February 8, 2020

Cultures and traditions are supreme here!

There is a tribe in south-south Nigeria, a woman can't “cheat” without dire repercussions.

If for any reason, a married woman seeks excitement outside her home the children are the first to fall sick, no, not only that, they die... One after the other.

When children die mysteriously in a family, the first person the family suspects is the wife.

They could invite her on a family meeting and ask her these silly questions:

Did any man other than your husband had sex with you?

Did any man touch you inappropriately by mistake? probably by holding your hand or putting his hand across your shoulders?

Did you take money or gifts from any man without telling your husband?

This is serious in such places.

Do you know the most frightening thing?

Even Christians, most Christians, about 80% of Christians Reverend and believe in this.

Married women from such places refuse to “cheat” not only because it is morally wrong, but because they don't want to wreak havoc in their family.

These tribes are not the only ones who put culture and tradition before religion, so many Nigerians do and as such it won't be easy to find a true Christian in Nigeria who doesn't serve two masters.

Some will deny it, some don't even know it's wrong to believe in God and fiendish beliefs orchestrated by their forefathers.

I asked a boy from Edo state to step on my back so I could stretch it, he said where he came from men don't step on men... He's one of the top persons in my church at then.

Another will tell you he doesn't eat this and that because it's against the laws of his land.

I was told not to sweep at night in someplace in Nigeria that if I do then I will be sweeping away my riches... I didn't care because I was even broke at the time.

I can go forever on how such primitive laws have kept a good number of my people in mental slavery.

What is the uniqueness of Nigerian culture?

Majority of us blindly value culture and tradition far more than the religion we claim to register with.

We sometimes put our cultures and traditions first even in government.

And it doesn't take long to realize that this thinking has also contributed to out under development.

Related Links

What makes Nigeria so unique?

Nigeria: What is unique about Nigerian culture and what can the world learn from it?

What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?

What are two ways that make Nigerian’s culture unique?

What makes the Nigerian culture unique; give 5 examples?

What is unique about Japanese culture and what can the world learn from it?

What are your thoughts on Nigerians moving en masse to Canada?

They are?

That's news to me and most Canadians.

There are 200 million Nigerians, somewhere in the range of 20,000 Nigerians who become permanent residents or study in Canada every year. That's 0.01% of the population - hardly en masse.

Related Links

What is life like for Nigerians living in Canada?

Do you regret moving to Canada?

Which is better for Nigerians to migrate, Canada or Australia?

How can you assist someone to move to Canada from Nigeria?

Why doesn't everyone just move to live in Canada?

How can I get a job in Canada from Nigeria?

How Can Nigeria Tackle Insecurity Challenges That's Affecting The Masses?

Mubarak Bashir Ahmadu Bello University from Nuhu Bamalli Polytechnic Zaria, Kaduna State (Expected 2026) August 12

Nigerians have been facing some insecurity challenges that usually lead to loss of lives, abductions in exchange of ransom and burning down properties worth millions.
The challenges include attacking different areas and communities, kidnappings, burning down of properties and killing the poor masses.

Insecurity has been in existence since the administration of former Nigeria President, Dr Goodluck Ebele Jonathan.

However, I would like to discuss some major facts and processes in which the Federal Republic of Nigeria would follow to solve the issue of insecurity.

The process includes.... click here (Federal Government Should Do This To End Insecurity Challenge In Nigeria - BookiNaija) to continue reading!

https://bookinaija.com.ng/2021/06/09/federal-government-should-do-this-to-end-insecurity-challenge-in-nigeria/

Related Links

How can I get help with my tuition please? The deadline is tomorrow and I've not paid😭😭?

If someone has a lower nasal brow ridge, is that an indication of East Asian or African ancestry?

How much does it cost to start affiliate marketing in Nigeria?

What do you think is that one idea that can change Africa for a better performance?

What is the toughest country border in Africa?

What are the ingredients of the African indigenous knowledge system?

Why is China currently colonizing Africa and the entire black diaspora (carribeans etc.)?

With over 3,000 Boko Haram terrorist surrendering in both Nigeria and Cameroon in the past weeks, what possible advice can you give both governments that this latest move by the sect could be a scheme to launch more attacks?

Why did the Quran not mention Chinese, African, Greek, Indian, or South American prophets?

How does Nigeria, a nation with over 200 million people, have had less than 3,000 deaths related to COVID?

Abuja NGO jobs for fresh graduates?

What is a white African person called?

Is the Chinese investment more likely to help end poverty in some African countries than charity-based aid provided by other actors?

Is Western Sahara inhabited?

Why is everyone talking about Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated February 9, 2020

It's almost impossible not to talk about Nigeria and Nigerians. You meet them any and everywhere. The most populated black nation in the world. People talk about us for our ground breaking achievements and of course, our unpleasant deeds.
Here are some reasons!

It's only in Nigeria leaders will come out to say they have built a world class hospital only to fly to India or the UK for medical treatment, even to check blood sugar level. They never go close to the hospital after commissioning.

Nigerians have been heralded as one of the most educated citizens living in foreign countries.

A place where every weekend is a celebration; bars filled up, colourful marriage celebrations, clubs filled to the brim, religious services echoing to heaven and even burial's of aged relatives call for a party.

A country where leaders continue to convince the youths that "they are the leaders of tomorrow" but the same leader has done all he can to remain in power in one way or another since I was born. Oga, which tomorrow are we talking about? Abi, is tomorrow a name of place?

A country that is still at the top of the jollof rice pyramid in West Africa despite our minister of information who's name is undoubtedly Lai Muhammed, claiming it was the Senegalese. Nigerian jollof rice is still the best!

A Country recently awarded the poverty capital of the world. And home of the fantastically corrupt leaders. But managed to remain the largest economy in Africa.

The church headquarters. Land of miracle workers. Home of rich pastors, poor members.

A country where leaders have successfully out maneuvered and enslaved citizens and has kept them begging for a drop of crumbs from their golden dinnings so the masses could continue fighting for their longevity.

A country who's citizens have given up on their government and has launched war on survival, battling against every odd, launching businesses to fight hunger and rewrite family histories.

A nation who's citizens have all become vigilante, guarding and protecting themselves because the majority of authorities have been bought over by rich political leaders to guard there empty houses, parked cars and sleeping wives and children.

A nation where citizens have realized Democracy as a demonstration of madness, a sick system that has giving the majority tribes and the ruling parties power to continue to determine our future in the worst possible way while making it look pretty

A nation where after graduating from tertiary institutions the first place graduates go to is to learn hand-work, instead of heading to companies or government offices for interviews.

A country where hundred thousand persons apply for hundred available positions in a company wanting to employ qualified personnel. The good news is, they are all qualified for the job. A tough choice for the company, and tough luck for applicants.

A country where people work tirelessly to turn stone to bread as a challenge to poverty... say poverty no reach, as a pure Naija blood.

A place where every Jane, Grace and mary from some fancy country claimed to have sent their hard earned savings to. And are now working tirelessly with the FBI to get them back after discovering it was a false promise... That's what the world call a romance scam.

The only country that could block a government road because of a marriage or a burial ceremony, thereby causing the most dreadful of traffic.

The only country in the world where you pay development fee before developing your own land, or constructing a road in a community. One practically pays to develop an undeveloped empty land. We are fast to blame the government but never our individual evil acts.

The only country people write “not for sale” and “beware of 419” on their properties. My English friends wouldn't stop making jokes about this at my previous job.

A country where a taxi driver carrying crate of eggs is more careful than the one carrying human beings. Life is a rollercoaster

A country where the most effective way to convince people to do a thing is to ask them never to do it... and vice versa.

A country where one could experience one of the closest relationships within and outside the family. What ever you own is also a property of your close relatives and friends except the person is unfriendly, and he will automatically qualify for the name "wicked man". Most women won't feel comfortable in her husbands house without the blessings of her husband's close relatives.

A country where activities like sport, music, marriage, burial and birthday celebrations could unite sworn enemies. No,...not religion, that's where enemity starts.

Oh! no, he didn't commit any Crime, it's a marriage invitation.* One of "Only in Nigeria" moments.

I can go on and on....

Why won't the world talk about such a country?

A country where everything is complete.

Our news stations have a big story to tell every day.

On a good day either a Nigerian has done something absolutely beautiful or terribly wrong.

Life is drama down here. A game of thrones!

Fact: Any country you can't find Nigerians is unsafe and not profitable!

What is it about countries like Ghana and Nigeria that helps them develop at a quicker rate than some other African countries?

Jeff September 27, 2018

There are many things I do love about Nigeria, having lived and gotten married there to a citizen, but it's not the best choice, even in West Africa, to argue as a model for development.
I'd argue policies and leadership are what make or break a nation, and while tradition and a good political organization can help prevent certain blunders, ultimately it does come down to who is head of state, as we in America are painfully experiencing.

Resources can be helpful, but can also be a two edged sword: oil has caused more turmoil and corruption in Nigeria than aid in development. Mind you, with the right leadership Nigeria's petroleum wealth could make it the powerhouse of the continent, but to date that remains a mirage.

Ghana has been quicker to focus on tourism and stability and has captured regional leadership of many foreign embassies, and is forging ahead in this new century. Nigeria's greatest strength is surely its people, but this too is a double bladed weapon: the nation has more than it can easily educate, employ, or utilize effectively.

In the end it comes down to who is at the helm, and how well they steer the ship of state.

Related Links

Why is Ghana so successful in comparison to majority of African countries?

What do other African countries think of Ghana?

What is the major problem of African countries, particularly the strong and developing ones like Nigeria and Ghana amongst others?

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

What does Nigeria do better than other countries?

Is South Africa the most developed country in Africa?

Is there any hope for Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor StorytellerUpdated February 9, 2020

Originally Answered: What's Nigeria's hope?

It won't be difficult to find a successful Nigerian in the US.
It would be easy to spot a rich Nigerian in the UK.

And it's very easy to spot successful Nigerians in Nigeria, you need just look through your neighborhood to spot them.

My street alone has numerous rich men who are not politicians, neither civil servants, they're in some sort of businesses.

But how difficult would it be to spot a group of successful Nigerians in Canada or in London?

It's almost impossible, not just in overseas but here in Nigeria.

We Nigerians are successful individually. We don't cooperate both in government and in business, neither in religion.

We're lone wolves.

We need unity if we must turn things around in Nigeria.

A group of Indians are mostly seen together.

You always see Lebanese living in foreign lands together, supporting one another.

Same thing for the Chinese. Once a brother comes into town what he does is to locate his countrymen.

And it's not just the whites, even Africans from other countries do so. Haven't you seen the boys from Togo, the Cotonou boys who did the plastering at your new house?

A Nigerian can't locate his countrymen for immediate, temporary help. He knows there is no much hope, he'll rather seek help from strangers.

This is seen both in Nigeria and abroad. We're a divided people.

You mostly here Nigerians coming together during festivals, religious meetings, unproductive political meetings. And this is true home and abroad.

Our hope as Nigerians is our unity.

Whether you like it or not, if we want to see meaningful progress, if we want to move forward we need to work together, we need to see a fellow Nigerian as a relative anywhere in the world.

Alone you can do little but together we can do great exploit. And when we work together the energy needed to get the job done is little compared to when you're to do it alone.

Look at our music industry, artists are divided. Every upcoming artist must have his record label because the existing ones will bill him too high.

The Nigerian man is always hard on fellow Nigerians, it's bad for meaningful development.

The more United we are as Nigerians the faster we shall achieve good success.

How did Britain colonize Nigeria without any form of resistance?

Ian Holloway

Lives in The United KingdomUpdated July 28
The premise is false. There was no country called Nigeria to colonise. The area of modern Nigeria was the place of many past empires- Hausa, Yoruba, Benin….. Nigeria is a British creation- a federation of previous smaller polities brought together under British rule.

Related Links

What would have happened to Africa if it hadn't been colonized?

Did being colonized actually help Nigeria?

How could India have prevented being colonized by Britain?

Why do so many people claim that the colonization of Africa made Europe rich, when Europe was already much more developed than the rest of the world by the 15th century?

Is colonization truly responsible for Africa's plight?

What was it that made Britain so successful at colonization?

Will Nigeria go the way of Afghanistan?

Ameh Sunday Fitumi

President (2021–present) Friday

Except something is done very fast, the Afghanisation of Nigeria is a legitimate fear. Like in Afghanistan, Nigeria has a version of Talibans called Boko Haram. They are determined, and are well equipped with weapons. They have radical Islamic ideology, and are willing and able to enforce it through violent means. The morale of the defending military is very low, and many soldiers may be feeling uncomfortable with the decision of the government to forgive captured terrorists, incorporate them into the military even when their loyalty is unknown and unproved. I hope it will not go the way of Afghanistan, but the victory of the Taliban is an inspiration for other terrorist groups all over the world. This includes Boko Haram and ISWAP.

Related Questions

What business can a guy start with N500,000 and recover 1m within the space of 1 year in Nigeria?

Why do Europeans call Africans black even their affairs when they know Africans have many times solved their problems?

Is redemption camp in Nigeria safe? Heard there was a terrorist attack.

How do we solve water treatment and distribution in Nigeria and whomever that solves it becomes the next Forbes richest? I have the formula but it needs funding.

What is the world's rating of President Muhammadu Buhari's performance as a democratic president?

How was the Benin kingdom and it's great wall like in that era?

Why do Nigerian military officers always use the derogatory word "bastard" when addressing civilians?

Why has African failed to develop as it should with the abundant and material resources at its disposal?

Who are the African feminists?

Who are the Igbo people in Nigeria?

Can a Nigerian study in Korea?

What are the best businesses in Nigeria?

Is there any Nigerian university that offers an online M.Sc programme?

Why do Western leaders support in other countries, especially African countries, what they will not accept in their own country?

What are the major causes of division in Nigeria?

Temi Olawoye BA in Global and International Studies, Carleton University (Expected 2023) Thu

I am approaching this question from the perspective of a Nigerian that lived in Nigeria and is now diaspora.
There is a huge cultural divide as well as financial divide in Nigeria.

cultural in the sense that we do not have to assimilate to western cultures in order to be validated as a strong nation. It is imperative that we stay connected to our individual cultural roots and not let western powers influence our perspective of stability. (This also has a lot to do with colonization and the way our leaders lead) financial also ties into culture because it is not hidden that there is unemployment and poverty. However I have noticed that people wishing that economic status hold culture values higher than individuals in the upper class/middle class. There is also a sense of pity that looms over the unemployed, the hawkers, scaffolders etc. Those are Nigerians. The division of economic status is detrimental to our identity and culture.

Related Links

What business can a guy start with N500,000 and recover 1m within the space of 1 year in Nigeria?

Why do Europeans call Africans black even their affairs when they know Africans have many times solved their problems?

Is redemption camp in Nigeria safe? Heard there was a terrorist attack.

How do we solve water treatment and distribution in Nigeria and whomever that solves it becomes the next Forbes richest? I have the formula but it needs funding.

What is the world's rating of President Muhammadu Buhari's performance as a democratic president?

How was the Benin kingdom and it's great wall like in that era?

Why do Nigerian military officers always use the derogatory word "bastard" when addressing civilians?

Why has African failed to develop as it should with the abundant and material resources at its disposal?

Who are the African feminists?

Who are the Igbo people in Nigeria?

Can a Nigerian study in Korea?

What are the best businesses in Nigeria?

Is there any Nigerian university that offers an online M.Sc programme?

Will Nigeria go the way of Afghanistan?

Why do Western leaders support in other countries, especially African countries, what they will not accept in their own country?

Who is the Nigerian prince right now in 2018?

Osazua Iruedo Manager (2017–present)December 7, 2018

Meet Micheal Neu, 67 . The “Nigerian Prince” who defrauded hundreds of Americans.

He is an advanced free fraudster posing as a Nigerian prince. He duped hundreds of people across America using emails. He is not a Nigerian or a Nigerian royalty.

The supposed Nigerian Prince ask his victims for personal banking details in order to speed up the transfer of his inheritance. The information given will then be used to withdraw funds from the victims account.

Meet 'Nigerian prince' who defrauded hundreds of Americans

Anyone can be a Nigerian prince. Anyone can claim to be a Nigerian soldier/army .

All they need to do is claim they are from Nigeria.

Related Links

Is Nigerian Juju real?
Do Nigerians dislike whites?
Does Nigeria have a prince?
Are Nigerians smart?

Who are the actual Nigerian princes? Did these positions and titles predate colonial rule or were they established by colonisers? How did their roles and status change under colonial rule and in postcolonial Nigeria?

Don't Nigerian men give gifts to their wives? I live in America, and

What are common scams in Nigeria?

OSAZUA Iruedo, Manager (2017 - present) updated October 25, 2018

Originally Answered: What are common scams in Nigeria?

This happened to me.

I went to the bank to pay in some cash. When I came out,I saw a taxi calling for passengers.i moved closer and since he was going my way I entered. A guy was sitting in front and a woman was sitting behind the driver when I got in.from nowhere, another guy entered. so I was forced to sit in the middle.

we have not gone far when the driver started scolding the guy in front that he will never support him stealing his boss money. The guy explained he has worked with him for almost 10 years and his boss has never been nice to him. He said he wants to be free and the money in the boot will help him find his feet. Immediately,the woman behind the driver started acting as if she was scared . She kept saying if the police stop the car and find the money in the boot we will all be in trouble. Money that she won't even share. She can't be In trouble for what she knows nothing about. Yet,she was not telling the driver to stop so she could get down. At that point I knew she was part of them. In my mind, I was like I saw these idiots. Let's see how this plays out.

The guy that entered after me asked the question I have been waiting for. He asked how much they were talking about. The guy in front answered and said 7 million. He replied by saying we will all have to share the money. He said we are all at risk. So he will take us to a place where we will all go and share the money. Where he mentioned was 3 bus stops from where I am going to alight. All the while this conversation was going on ,I was busy thinking of how I would get down from that vehicle without them knowing I was afraid. (the truth is I was very scared) a lot of questions were going through my mind.what if they are kidnappers and many more. But I tried my best not to show how scared I was . One of them asked me if I was not interested because I have not said anything since they started talking about the money. I smiled and said I was very much interested. At that moment we got to my bus stop. And I found my voice. I told the driver to wait, I pointed to a shop across the road and told them that's my shop. They should wait for me to go get a bag for my own share of the money. When the guy sitting close to me was trying to protest that I don't need a bag he will give me one, I told him I needed one because the bag I wanted to get from the shop is the bag I usually use anytime I want to carry a lot of money because no one will notice or suspect I have money in it . Moreover, it's just close by .Guess they believed me and also confirmed I was a greedy person like them. The driver stopped the car. As I was about to come down,I asked if there was anything they wanted me to bring for them from the shop since we are all friends now. The driver replied and said I should just make it snappy. I said it will only take me a few minutes . I came down, moved a bit away from them and gave them the Iya ee sign.they knew their plan didn't work with me. The guy beside the driver also returned my Iya ee sign and they zoomed off.

Till now I still wonder what they really wanted from me.

Related Links

Do you find it easy to trust Nigerians especially because there have been many cases of Nigerian scams (especially the dating scams)? Why or why not?

Why are there so many scammers in Nigeria? They're using American soldier's names so you can't know if they are real soldiers or a scammer.

Why are there so many continuous scams from the banks of Nigeria?

What is the Nigerian scam?

Why do so many email scams come from Nigeria?

Do you have any experience with the Nigerian scams?

To be honest, the best form of investment In Nigeria is investing in yourself.

Okonkwor Victor

Affiliate Marketer (2020–present)August 12
If you are just starting out or you have saved N50,000 in a bank account and you need to invest this money into something, here is my advice on how you can go about it. This is not professional advice and you can either take it or sieve it..

1. Invest in yourself.

This looks so simple and common sense but most people don't do it.

The most important investment you can ever make is the investment in yourself.

This is the only investment that can truly guarantee you 1000% returns.

Why's that?

The better you become, the more money you can make.

Every other can be stolen from you but the investment in self cannot be taken away.

Most people don’t know that more money follows competence, courage and consistency. The better you become, the more money you can make.

2. Learn a high income skill

There is a difference between a high income job (like shell), a high income profession (like Medicine) and a high income skill (like copywriting)

The first two requires longer time, training and resources. The last one can be learnt in months and the rewards are equal.

Believe it or not, there are programmers (high income skill) who earn a lot more than lawyers (high income profession)

My advice number is, learn a high income skill that can help you fetch more money.

Invest in courses and trainings.

3. Create daily streams of income.

Daily streams of income are businesses that bring in cash on a daily basis. Even if it is 1k a day, it is better than nothing or waiting at the end of the month.

The most common daily streams of income are selling digital products in the form of eBooks, courses and videos or training people online.

4. Start a supplementary business

Supplementary businesses are businesses you start by leveraging an already existing business or traffic.

For example and this is very basic, if someone is selling akara, partner with them so that they can sell bread on your behalf. That’s just the idea.

Look for where the traffic is and leverage on it.

It is a model I’ve used over and over to reap passive streams of income.

I’ve been into affiliate marketing for 7 months now, it not like the whole 7 months from the beginning was juicy but as time goes on it gets better.

One of the questions I get asked all the time is:“Is affiliate marketing easy or hard?”

And based on my personal experience so far with affiliate marketing (AM), my answer is both. Affiliate marketing is easy because;

If you follow a proven method, it'll be a walk in the park for you. More so, when you have an experienced person in the field providing guidance and support to you (Which I'll be sharing with you as time goes on)

On the other hand, Affiliate marketing is hard because...

"If anything is worth doing in life it's going to be hard, if it's easy then everybody would be doing the same thing."

In my experience, it becomes more easy than hard once you begin to learn the tricks of the trade. If you stick to it every day you will get better and better. If you give up, then there's no point starting in the first place.

Affiliate marketing for me started as a joke (as a result of anger at my financial state). And that's the thing, if you feel that you are already financially comfortable, therefore you don't need to worry about making more money,

Congratulations.

On the other hand, if you're like me...

Whose financial state was in a mess months ago, That is: If you're hungry and eager for more, starting affiliate marketing would be a good one to start with. You don't need a laptop to start it and I have a course that I'm confident in. It's a course that puts people(pure beginners with zero experience) through and holds them by hand in there affiliate journey. Go through the course here

You can WhatsApp me to know more about this course + I help people who enroll for the course from me to get a 2 months free mentor ship from a top affiliate marketer in Nigeria where you'll also be learning how to map out plans and strategies as a newbie in affiliate marketing.

This offer is for a limited time so NOW is the best moment in history to grab this offer or Never.

I hope this helps.

Related Questions

Who are the African feminists?

Who are the Igbo people in Nigeria?

Can a Nigerian study in Korea?

What are the best businesses in Nigeria?

Is there any Nigerian university that offers an online M.Sc programme?

Will Nigeria go the way of Afghanistan?

Why do Western leaders support in other countries, especially African countries, what they will not accept in their own country?

How do I redeploy to another state during the NYSC in Nigeria?

What does the African name Oforiwaa mean?

Is Nigeria a country that devours it's best?

Which other countries have toll gates working in West Africa and the rest of the world?

Which Nigerian musician can you watch their music video with your parents?

Will the Taliban victory embolden Boko Haram in Nigeria and some West African countries?

What is the role of Nigeria in the United Nations?

News Nigeria:
EVOLUTION OF THE NIGERIAN POLICE FORCE

Posted by
Aniekpeno Ekong

Evolution and the role of colonial police in the country established by the colonialists, Henry Austin Bruce, 1st Baron AberdareGCB PCJP DLFRS FRHistS, Sir George Dashwood Taubman GoldieKCMG FRS, in various parts of the country at different times between 1861 and 1960 were organized and deployed as occupation force to suppress the indigenous Nigerian peoples as the colonizers exploited their resources to develop their own countries.

The country known as Nigeria is made up of different ethnic nationalities (more than a hundred of them). These ethnic nationalities were conquered by the British at different times and over a long period of time (1861-1903).

The colonizers executed the colonial project employing violence and fraud or deceits. Nigeria's constituent nationalities were conquered at different periods. As a nationality is conquered, British colonial presence is established by establishing a police force for the territory. Second, violence and fraud were employed in the conquest of the nationalities. Consequently, the colonizer feared resistance and police forces under various names were established and employed as an instrument of violence and oppression against the indigenous population.

Given the character of colonial rule, police forces were the instrument used to sustain alien domination. The colonial police were not accountable to the colonized but to the colonizers.

At the inception, the NPF was formed to oppress the people and violate their rights. It was not formed to protect the people. Little wonder, the police as today find it difficult to protect the people.

During the colonial period, most police were associated with local governments (native authorities). In the 1960s, under the First Republic, these forces were first regionalized and then nationalized. The British merged Lagos colony and the southern and northern protectorates in 1913 and named the new colony Nigeria. The northern and southern regional police forces were later merged, in 1930, to form the colony's first national police – the Nigeria Police Force (NPF).

What are the major causes of division in Nigeria?

Temi Olawoye
BA in Global and International Studies, Carleton University (Expected 2023) Thu

I am approaching this question from the perspective of a Nigerian that lived in Nigeria and is now diaspora.

There is a huge cultural divide as well as financial divide in Nigeria.

cultural in the sense that we do not have to assimilate to western cultures in order to be validated as a strong nation. It is imperative that we stay connected to our individual cultural roots and not let western powers influence our perspective of stability. (This also has a lot to do with colonization and the way our leaders lead) financial also ties into culture because it is not hidden that there is unemployment and poverty. However I have noticed that people wishing that economic status hold culture values higher than individuals in the upper class/middle class. There is also a sense of pity that looms over the unemployed, the hawkers, scaffolders etc. Those are Nigerians. The division of economic status is detrimental to our identity and culture.

Related Links

Who are the African feminists?

Who are the Igbo people in Nigeria?

Can a Nigerian study in Korea?

What are the best businesses in Nigeria?

Is there any Nigerian university that offers an online M.Sc programme?

Will Nigeria go the way of Afghanistan?

Why do Western leaders support in other countries, especially African countries, what they will not accept in their own country?

How do I redeploy to another state during the NYSC in Nigeria?

What does the African name Oforiwaa mean?

Is Nigeria a country that devours it’s best?

Which other countries have toll gates working in West Africa and the rest of the world?

Which Nigerian musician can you watch their music video with your parents?

Will the Taliban victory embolden Boko Haram in Nigeria and some West African countries?

What is the role of Nigeria in the United Nations?

Is it a cultural norm for a Nigerian man living in the West with a Western bride and family to marry a second Nigerian wife to have kids and take care of his parents?

White the contrary. It's not a cultural norm and it is illegal in most jurisdictions to be married to more than one spouse at a time. Now, do some men practice this form of polygamy? Yes, but it is usually unbeknownst to the western bride and family.

There are other circumstances, however, where the so-called western bride is the "second wife." In this scenario, the husband may have been previously married to his Nigerian bride prior to arriving in the west. In his pursuit of securing residency and legitimacy, he may enter into a marital relationship (and even start a family) with a western spouse and May not disclose his pre-existing marital status to his western bride, family, or civil authorities.

Lastly, the discovery of any such pre-existing , undisclosed relationship will usually end in very expensive divorce, jail sentence, and/or deportation from the country.

Related Links

What does the African name Oforiwaa mean?

Is Nigeria a country that devours it's best?

What are the major causes of division in Nigeria?

Which other countries have toll gates working in West Africa and the rest of the world?

Which Nigerian musician can you watch their music video with your parents?

Will the Taliban victory embolden Boko Haram in Nigeria and some West African countries?

What is the role of Nigeria in the United Nations?

Did Obafemi Awolowo commit suicide?

Who do you think can win the Bbnaija Season 6 Shineyaeyes, and why?

Nigeria appears to be one of the most successful countries at battling COVID-19, what is their secret?

Why is the world silent about the killings in Nigeria? Are they tired of Nigeria's many problems?

What are the main causes of Naira devaluation?

What is the situation report of this heavy downpour in your area?

Is Africa really ruled by visionary men?

What is the recent, latest, current happenings in Nigeria?

Why does Igbo always blame Nigeria for their shortcoming?

OLUTADE Ogunsina

Sales at Globacom Limited (2011–present) Mon

Because much is expected from Her. They believe they are wiser and more creative. They are afraid of Igbos

Related Links

What is the situation report of this heavy downpour in your area?

Is Africa really ruled by visionary men?

What is the recent, latest, current happenings in Nigeria?

What are the major problems confronting development in Nigeria?

Is it a cultural norm for a Nigerian man living in the West with a Western bride and family to marry a second Nigerian wife to have kids and take care of his parents?

What do you do think Africa president can learn from the administration of Thomas Sankara?

What would have been the official language in Nigeria if she was not influenced by the British?

Where do you meet high-profiled clients interested in buying real estate properties in Nigeria?

How would you rank these South Africans based on who had the biggest impact on the world: Herbert Kretzmer, Paul Kruger, Jan Smuts, Trevor Noah, Nelson Mandela, and Elon Musk?

Should Africans sever all bonds with the west? Especially considering that the UN has ties to what may be Luciferian organisations such as the Lucis or Lucifer trust, and agendas which do not align with African spiritual and moral values?

What are the most recent lies Nigeria has told the world?

What do Africans think of China bugging the African Union headquarters?

How do I find someone in Africa who can court me around until I feel at home?

Aquaculture e-learning apps in Nigeria?

Learn a high income skill in 2021 in Nigeria.

Ieanyi Ekperi
Freelance Graphic & UI/UX Designer (2018–present) August 12

Making money in this new normal after the COVID-19 lockdown has opened the eyes of many Nigerians that we need to.lesrn skills that aren't location bound.

Today, not just learning any kind of skill would make the cut, learning a HIGH INCOME flexible skill is one way to go.

I'll be listing out all those skills in my next post, bit I am here to tell you about a HIGH INCOME skill every human should possess in order for any skill to be profitable — COPYWRITING.

Being able to sell in written words. Copywriting is both in-demand and in-demand.

This is one skill that qualifies every other skill — Call it the ad-skills of all other skills.

Without being able to sell your skills, it's useless and copywriting is that skill that make your skill profitable.

Prof Akpe said: WHAT COPYWRITING CANNOT SELL DOES NOT EXIT.

I'm giving you the opportunity to join the most corrosive copywriting course in the world, yes, in the world. You learn applied copywriting alongside other high income skills.

Over 6300+ certified graduands cannot be wrong, including myself.

The course is ₦20,000 — Early birds pay ₦5,000 flat for a limited time but because I am giving you this offer now.

If you pay ₦4,000 today, send me a message with proof of payment and I'll contact and pay the balance to Prof Emmanuel Akpe to allow you into the class.

All you have to do now is:

Pay ₦4,000 into the account on the flier

Send me a message Open WhatsApp with your payment proof

Get instant access into the course. Remember, early birds offer only. You have limited time. Pay today!

Because I want your success, I'll gift you something when you send me the message. Pay now. Details are on the attached flier.

Is Africa really ruled by visionary men?

Awele Merveille CEO at AweleWorld (2019–present)21h ago

Related Links

What is the situation report of this heavy downpour in your area?

Is Africa really ruled by visionary men?

What is the recent, latest, current happenings in Nigeria?

What are the major problems confronting development in Nigeria?

Is it a cultural norm for a Nigerian man living in the West with a Western bride and family to marry a second Nigerian wife to have kids and take care of his parents?

What do you do think Africa president can learn from the administration of Thomas Sankara?

What would have been the official language in Nigeria if she was not influenced by the British?

Where do you meet high-profiled clients interested in buying real estate properties in Nigeria?

How would you rank these South Africans based on who had the biggest impact on the world: Herbert Kretzmer, Paul Kruger, Jan Smuts, Trevor Noah, Nelson Mandela, and Elon Musk?

Should Africans sever all bonds with the west? Especially considering that the UN has ties to what may be Luciferian organisations such as the Lucis or Lucifer trust, and agendas which do not align with African spiritual and moral values?

What are the most recent lies Nigeria has told the world?

What do Africans think of China bugging the African Union headquarters?

How do I find someone in Africa who can court me around until I feel at home?

Aquaculture e-learning apps in Nigeria?

Why is Nigeria so associated with crime, and what's the real truth?

Nafiu Sani Lives in Nigeria Updated April 7

I want to answer this question as directly as possible. The rise of prevailing crimes in Nigeria may be related to several reasons or factors, it depends on one's perspective. Therefore, I want to mention in my own view just 7 but explain only 5 factors behind the increase occurrence of crimes in my country, Nigeria, and these are:

1. Poor attitude towards education
2. Injustice of constitutional authorities
3. Poverty and high cost of living
4. High rate of unemployment among the teaming youths
5. Very porous boarders and inadequate security structure.
6. High increase in drug abuse involvement by the youths
7. Breaking family (poor family upbringing)

Below is the explanation

A. Poor Attitude Towards Education: Every responsible government must give utmost priority to business of educating it's people. Nigeria as a country continue to give a very little percentage of it's annual budget (below the proposed and agreed ratio by UN or SDGs/MDGs) to education. Hence, inadequate quantity and poor quality of education is provided to the people.

We need to know that crimes have an inverse relationship with education. This is to say the higher the educated people are, the less the crimes they involved. So, unless Nigeria provide it's people with right quantity and quality education, it will continue to face criminal activities by it's own citizens.

B. Injustice of The Constitutional Authorities: What I want to establish here is this; when judicial system failed people, justice is served with fear or favour (or won by the highest bidder) then, people will be in a state of chaos or barbarism. In Nigeria, many people have lost confidence in the judicial system or in the constitutional authorities, due to one reason or the other e.g. one's parents or relatives have been murdered in a cold-blood and nothing has been done about that. Such situations may likely turn one heartless and merciless, hence, aggressive or violent.

C. Poverty and High Cost of Living: I want to believe this part does not require much explanation. But, it need to be established that poverty can lead people to become hopeless, also, poverty means people may not afford food to eat, as such they can do anything… I mean anything to get something to eat.

Remember the popular saying that said; "A hungry man is an angry man". This is to say that a hungry man is not only an angry man but also an aggressive person.

On the other hand, one of the consequences of high cost of living is; it makes people frustrated with government and hence discourages or results in loss of people's loyalty to the government of such a country.

D. High Rate of Unemployment: The higher portion affected by unemployment is Youths and most of them are not calm, they are full of energy that requires control, they are usually short of wisdom and patience compared to the elderly groups. Therefore, they can easily be used/ exploited by any enemy of the country (Nigerian or otherwise) to cause crimes that will satisfy his personal selfish gain.

We must remember the saying that said; "An idle mind is the devil's workshop"!

E. Very Porous Border: Nigeria has a very porous and difficult border to patrol with little resources and border security personnels (specifically, Immigration and Customs) it has.

So, terrorists can have their way into Nigeria from every angle and direction of our borderlines (neighbour countries). This has affected Nigeria so much. Nigeria has uncountable routes through which immigrants and smugglers come into the country without legal permission.

Lastly, the security structure of Nigeria is not adequately sufficient. I want to assume that there is no enough synergy between the security operatives. I want to believe that there are also some big loopholes or moles in the structure where some vital information used to leak or be mismanaged.

Related Links

What is the brutal truth about Nigeria?

Are the scam reports about Nigerians always true?

How dangerous is Nigeria?

Why is Nigeria on the dangerous country list?

What are things that are mostly said about Nigerians, but are not true?

What's the truth about South African crime? All I get everywhere are a pack of lies.

Does the Igbo tribe still exist?

Kenechukwu James Knows Igbo Sun

You are failed to ask this question, i am an Igbo fully igbo and World have try to wipe out the Igbo Language because that's the solution of all black people as a whole, Igbos are the real isreal jewish people in the world and can not wipe out of the eight, the first humanity in the world igbo people

Related Links

What is the situation report of this heavy downpour in your area?

Is Africa really ruled by visionary men?

What are the recent, latest, current happenings in Nigeria?

What are the major problems confronting development in Nigeria?

Why does Igbo always blame Nigeria for their shortcomings?

Is it a cultural norm for a Nigerian man living in the West with a Western bride and family to marry a second Nigerian wife to have kids and take care of his parents?

What do you think the African president can learn from the administration of Thomas Sankara?

What would have been the official language in Nigeria if she was not influenced by the British?

Where do you meet high-profile clients interested in buying real estate properties in Nigeria?

How would you rank these South Africans based on who had the biggest impact on the world: Herbert Kretzmer, Paul Kruger, Jan Smuts, Trevor Noah, Nelson Mandela, and Elon Musk?

Should Africans sever all bonds with the west? Especially considering that the UN has ties to what may be Luciferian organisations such as the Lucis or Lucifer trust, and agendas which do not align with African spiritual and moral values?

What are the most recent lies Nigeria has told the world?

What do Africans think of China bugging the African Union headquarters?

How do I find someone in Africa who can court me around until I feel at home?

Aquaculture e-learning apps in Nigeria?

What are the most recent lies Nigeria has told the world?

Adoh Danelle Lucado

STSO at Transportation Security Administration (2015–present)Sun

It's not the Nigerians that are telling lies, it's the corrupt government that's telling lies. The most recent lie, I would say, has to do with not wanting to prosecute or even arrest their police commissioner, after being arrested for wire fraud and the United States. They refused to extradite him and prosecute him for his fraudulent behavior. That's not Nigeria, that's the Nigerian government.

Why the cover-up? To spare Nigeria another embarrassment of another corrupt official. The most decorated officer ever, turns out to be a criminal. He's been extorting money, threatening witnesses, possibly killing people, we don't really know the depth of his crimes. All the complaining witnesses are now dead. That's the biggest lie that Nigerian government is telling now

Related Links

What is the situation report of this heavy downpour in your area?

Is Africa really ruled by visionary men?

What are the recent, latest, current happenings in Nigeria?

What are the major problems confronting development in Nigeria?

Why does Igbo always blame Nigeria for their shortcomings?

Is it a cultural norm for a Nigerian man living in the West with a Western bride and family to marry a second Nigerian wife to have kids and take care of his parents?

What do you think the African president can learn from the administration of Thomas Sankara?

What would have been the official language in Nigeria if she was not influenced by the British?

Where do you meet high-profile clients interested in buying real estate properties in Nigeria?

How would you rank these South Africans based on who had the biggest impact on the world: Herbert Kretzmer, Paul Kruger, Jan Smuts, Trevor Noah, Nelson Mandela, and Elon Musk?

Should Africans sever all bonds with the west? Especially considering that the UN has ties to what may be Luciferian organisations such as the Lucis or Lucifer trust, and agendas which do not align with African spiritual and moral values?

What do Africans think of China bugging the African Union headquarters?

How do I find someone in Africa who can court me around until I feel at home? Aquaculture e-learning apps in Nigeria?

Prime Minister Boris Johnson of Britain, on Thursday, pledged his country's preparedness to lend a helping hand to the government of Nigeria in its fight against terrorism.

According to a statement issued by President Muhammadu Buhari's spokesman, Femi Adesina, PM Johnson said "We are available to help," after listening to Buhari.

The two leaders also agreed that the judicial process should be allowed to run its course after appraising the war against different forms of terrorism in Nigeria.

The resolution was reached while holding bilateral talks at the sidelines of the Global Education Summit in London.

The two leaders said it was important that the judicial process runs without interference, no matter who was involved.

Buhari had briefed the Prime Minister on Nigeria's power needs and efforts being made, as well as initiatives geared at achieving food security.

The two leaders, the statement added, equally discussed how to increase trade between the two countries, develop solar and wind power, the leadership of the Commonwealth going forward and other matters of mutual interest.

[DailyTrust]

Why is it that protests don't work in Nigeria?

Adoh Danelle Lucado
STSO at Transportation Security Administration (2015–present) August 3

I agree with David. I will add a couple protests that failed and my thoughts on why. The university students protesting the raise of tuition. They weren't protesting. They were partying and the schools just shut down. Turns out, it was more important to the students to return to school to maintain proper credits for the semester. The university knew they had the upper hand to begin with. Other, nonspecific protests failed for one reason... violence. Once a splinter group branches off and starts vandalizing property or harassing citizens on the street, unfortunately the news story becomes "violence erupts in Lagos as several were arrested..." The entire protest and its cause lose not only credibility, but is overshadowed by the violent acts committed.

Why is it that protests don't work in Nigeria?

David lives in Nigeria (1996-present) Answered July 31

Protests do work to a certain extent in Nigeria. occupy Nigerian protest against the removal of fuel subsidy is a clear example of when protest works in Nigeria. Also, the recent Endsars movement which led to the dissolution of the Special anti-robbery squad (Sars) is another example.The success of the outcome of protest largely depends on two factors; the attitudes of protesters and the cunning wits of government officials. The attitude and behavior of some protesters to undermine peaceful protest and turn it to an avenue for looting and pillaging always take away the soul of the protest. The disapprovingly cunning attitude of government officials who appears on papers and broadcast to have consent to protesters demands only to ride on snail-speed in implementing the demands have all contributed to make protests a vain social tool in Nigeria.

Related Links

What do you think about the ongoing protest in Nigeria?

Why don't we have regular electricity in Nigeria?

Why can't Nigeria control Boko Haram?

Why have the ENDSARS protests in Nigeria not stopped despite the Nigerian government meeting the demands of the protesters?

Why has the Nigerian government failed to do what is right in Nigeria?

Can you share your opinion on End Sars Protest going on in Nigeria 🇳🇬?

What do you dislike about Nigerians?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller December 1, 2019

"What is it? I have shown him my papers, all my papers are complete so I don't know why he's still keeping me here," said the bus driver.

"Oga driver, you know what to do na, give the policeman what he wants so we can get out of here," a young lady at the back seat said.

"Give him what? How much have I made today? I will give no police man nothing, I owe him nothing, all my papers are complete."

An elderly man at the center seat yelled at the driver, "my friend you think I have all day? I'm a lecturer at the university and my students are waiting for me, my car broke down and that is why I'm in your rotten bus, will you give this men some money so we can get the hell out of here?"

The police men distanced themselves from the vehicle forcing and romancing other road users to part with their hard earned money.

I was angry, I stood by the bus driver's decision, but what surprised me was how everyone was mad at the driver for not bribing the police so they could go about their business.

Abnormality is becoming the very normal in my dear country and it saddens me.

When you're supposed to get a thing done but couldn't because you refused to bribe, many persons, even close, highly respected relatives blame you for not doing the needful instead of wasting your time.

Corruption is abnormal. What is wrong is wrong even though everyone is doing it, unfortunately we Nigerians are becoming blind by the day, some of us don't even know what is wrong or right anymore.

Despite me and the drivers protest we had to yield to majority of the passengers who were too much in a hurry to do the right thing and, so the driver settled the police man and we went about our business. Everyone was happy except us.

The abnormal things are gradually considered normal in our country and it bothers me but it doesn't make me hate my dear country!

Is the hottest country in the world an African country or a South American country?

Adoh Danelle Lucado STSO at Transportation Security Administration (2015–present) 7h ago

You have to look at the term “hottest country” in terms of “feels like”. I did my research on temperatures across the world, and they’re stating degrees that do not come close to what we have here in California. Because I know that Las Vegas gets to be about 110 and we’re not on the list for the hottest countries. The hottest countries listed at 97°. And while in Pakistan, it was 127°F. That countries not a list either so I won’t answer this question using my knowledge.

There’s something different about the heat in Nigeria than other countries in Africa and South America. The humidity is at a level that creates a feeling of being inside a sauna. This hot, wet air is the air you breathe in. While in Mexico and South America, the average high is 90° but only 80% humidity. That's a key factor for me. It should be ”What country feels the hottest”.

My first visit to Nigeria, I got pneumonia. My doctor agreed it was because of the amount of moisture I was breathing into my lungs. It’s only 89° but at 100% humidity, it makes for a hotter experience. In Pakistan, at 127°, it was a dry heat similar to Las Vegas Nevada. Yes it’s hot, yes you sweat, but you do not breathe in steamy hot air. I was able to tolerate Pakistan versus actually feeling uncomfortable in the air in Nigeria.

You can easily look up this question on Google. And it will tell you that none of the countries I talked about are on the top hottest countries in the world. So I wonder how Google measures the heat??

Francis Anja B.A in Sociology & Arts (open),
Madonna University Okija Anambra State (Graduated 2019) Answered Thu

Our client is a large consumer durable distribution conglomerate with more than 3000+ trade partners across the country. She is one of the largest producers of rigid plastics polymer / packaging in Nigeria with branches all across Nigeria. They are seeking full time employees for the role of Sales Executive.

Job Description

Responsible for Sales of all products and services of the company

Set all product offerings demonstrating professional sales ability, knowledge and skill across all product lines.

Maintains accurate records of all sales and prospecting activities including sales calls, presentations, closed sales and follow-up activities within his territory.

Review and adapt to information regarding products innovations, competitors and market conditions

Reconciliation of sales figures

Undertake after-sales follow up calls

Handle customer complaints and monitor level of satisfaction

Submission of invoice to customers after sales.

Advise customer on technical issues concerning the products.

Resolve problems and complaints through proper internal channels in a professional manner.

Continually learn new products and services and methods of presentation for these products.

Other duties that may be assigned from time to time by the Executive Directors.

Requirements

Bachelor's Degree in Business Admin, Marketing or any other Social Sciences or Equivalent.

5 years in Sales and Marketing of plastics/polymer

Good product Knowledge

Technical Skills

Analytical Skills

Knowledge of market dynamics

Good presentation skills.

Interested, send CVs.
francis@fadacoutsourcing.com

best Regards.

Related Links

What do Africans think of China bugging the African Union headquarters?

How do I find someone in Africa who can court me around until I feel at home?

Aquaculture e-learning apps in Nigeria?

What is the best selling website in Nigeria?

Why is the description the importance of transpiration in the regions of Africa control excessively loss of water from their leaves?

Who started Bokoharam in Nigeria?

Why is Africa a poor region, even though it has the best natural resources?

Why is Nigeria always getting wrong notwithstanding the abundance of mineral and human resources?

I was told I won $500k in the Nigerian lottery six months ago and all I had to do was send $2k in processing fees, which I did, but I haven't heard anything back and I am starting to worry. Who is the right person to contact about this?

Which other method has the World Bank and International Monetary Fund used to enforce loans to African countries apart from the structural adjustment programme?

Why was Nigeria suspended from Common Wealth of Nation in 1995?

What are good business idea with capital of 200k in Port Harcourt?

Hi please I need help, I will go straight to the point. so I'm a Nigerian living in Ghana, I'm working over here, but my job is quite risky, and I dont get paid well and I hate it too, so I save a million naira so im planing on going back to Nigeria?

Who is interested in getting a giveaway? I'm giving out a free Ebook about actionable steps to earn money working on the internet Email me nwaforiyke22@Gmail.com if you are interested.

What are some of the benefits of snail farming to the African economy?

Kaosiso Nwachukwu

Lived in Nigeria (1999–0)October 23, 2018

Why are you proud to be Nigerian?

That typical Igbo man from the east.

Am not happy about Nigeria but am proud to be among them. Seeing how my white friends who know nothing about Nigeria, some who haven't even seen a Nigerian answer questions about Nigeria here to mean trash.

I am proud because in vast tribes and we still find the humane part of us to tolerate diverse cultures even when fights erupt because some actions are misinterpreted.

Am proud because the irresponsible government has made me resilient with their actions and inactions.

Am proud because I see hope in the face of Nigerians even when doom is felt around the corner because of these tensions raised by separatist groups, terrorist groups, armed herdsmen and so on.

Am proud because it's only a few countries that have had similar situations and still stand tall.

Am proud even when I am labelled a bandit by persons who don't even know how I talk to talk more of how I act.

Am proud because its in my country that comedians are extremely rich because we patronize them to make us laugh even after the village near mine was raided not because I am happy but because I can't kill myself

Am proud because in my country, suicide is not a option despite everything that has happened to us.

Am proud because I am that Igbo boy living in Hausa land with friends from over a hundred ethnic groups.

Am proud because I believe that I can stand tall even in hell fire

Am really proud. Sometimes I think Nigerians should clap for one another for a moment for success achieved socially, academically and politically . It's not easy to come here.

Am that proud Nigerian, you may wish to know more about.

Related Links

Are Nigerians smart?
Why are Nigerians so religious?
What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?
What do you love about Nigerians?
Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Who is to blame for a lack of development in Africa?

Tom Kratman Former Regular Army Infantry Enlisted, NCO, and Officer at U.S. Army (1974–2006)July Originally Answered:

Africans. Oh, yes, it's easy to blame Europeans for dividing the place up without regard to tribes, leading to a good deal of post colonial civil war, but even in those places where this was not done, Ethiopia, for example, the place is still underdeveloped. Places where the existing tribal structure was undisturbed are still a mess, Rwanda and Burundi, for example. Places which were well developed - South Africa is the only example of this - are rapidly de-developing.

And, no, there's nothing to be done about it through aid. Something over fifty billion dollars in foreign aid flows into sub-Saharan Africa annually. Well over 90% of it is stolen by Africa's kleptocrats and deposited in foreign banks.

Related Links

What is the main reason causes the under development of Africa?

What is wrong with Africa that it can't develop?

What are the factors contributing to the lack of innovation in Africa, and could this lack of innovation (or sciences) threaten its development any further?

Who is to be blamed for the high level of poverty in Africa?

What are possible strategies for developing Africa?

What can be done to bring a lasting solution to the underdevelopment currently being experienced in most parts of Africa?

How can Nigeria having a GDP approx. 600 billion dollars become the world headquarters for extreme poverty?

Adoh Danelle Lucado STSO at Transportation Security Administration (2015–present) Wed

Simply? In my opinion, The only citizens who profit from the GDP are the government officials in charge of collection and distribution of profits. This money is not distributed to the citizens through any nonexistent government subsidies and / or financial aid. There's no system in place for tracking and qualifying those who should be receiving these monies.

There's no electronic list of who is in the country either. They have no social security number system, no DMV with drivers license system, and their identification cards aren't cataloged, pen to paper. They do not have a mailing address therefore can't receive mailed checks. In order for Nigeria to enjoy its profits at home, it is imperative to bring current the post office mailing system and electric database of their citizens.

Related Links

Can poverty be eliminated? If not, what are some reasonable measures we can take to reduce poverty on a national level?

Nigeria overtakes India as a nation with the poorest people and 44 Indians are coming out of extreme poverty every minute. Is this the Modi effect?

Nigeria has just been said to be the poverty capital of the world. Why is this so?

How does Nigeria have such a high GDP if it's undeveloped?

What if every individual person were given money equivalent to 1 billion dollars? Will it really end poverty?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?

News Nigeria

BREAKING: BAN PLACED ON TWITTER IN NIGERIA WILL BE LIFTED

Aniekpeno Ekong

The federal government has said that the ban placed on Twitter in Nigeria would soon be lifted. Lai Mohammed, the minister of information and culture, revealed the information on Wednesday, August 11. The microblogging platform was suspended following the deletion of President Buhari's tweet.

The ban imposed on the operation of Twitter in Nigeria would be lifted soon if the conditions set up by the federal government are met Alhaji Lai Mohammed, the minister of information and culture, disclosed this on Wednesday, August 11 The minister noted that everything would be sorted out with the management of Twitter within a few days or weeks.

The Nation reports that the minister of information and culture, Lai Mohammed, gave this update on Wednesday, August 11, after the week's virtual Federal Executive Council (FEC) meeting presided over by Vice President Yemi Osinbajo (SAN) at the Presidential Villa, Abuja. While providing updates on the government's negotiation with the micro-blogging site, Mohammed gave more details of the conditions given to the platform, saying most of them have been accepted. He said the areas still pending such as Twitter setting up an office and having a Twitter staff of management cadre that would serve as the country representative, were being discussed.

Leadership also reports that the minister revealed that in the area of a Nigerian office, even though Twitter has agreed to the condition, it, however, maintains that the earliest it can establish it is 2022. Mohammed expressed confidence that everything would be sorted out with Twitter within a few days or weeks, noting the anxiety shown by Nigerians. He said the federal government's committee negotiating with Twitter would meet on the agreement soon to make recommendations.

How do other non-Igbo Nigerians feel about Igbos?

Akinjide Motolola Agboola

A born and bred Nigerian, and a citizen of the world. Updated October 3, 2018

I can speak for myself as a Yoruba person. They are simply Africans, and we share probably more than 90% in similarities than differences. Igbo men like money, they like Women and so do the Yorubas, Hausas and almost every nationality in the world.

They are humans with two feet, two hands, red blood flowing through their veins. They also cry like everybody does.

I must say the difference in culture added more beauty to our diversity which is a positive thing for us and the world in general.

Related Links

Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?

As a Nigerian, what is your honest opinion about the Hausa-Fulani, Igbo and Yoruba people of Nigeria?

How can I distinguish various tribes in Africa (e.g. Igbo, Yoruba or Hausa in Nigeria)?

Are the Igbos actually the wealthiest ethnic group in Nigeria or is that just a misconception?

Why most of the time we see Sub Saharan African tribal villages in flat dry land with a few trees and mostly soil ground? Shouldn't they live in dense jungle conditions like Brazilian tribes when both are tropical people?

Matt Riggsby MA Archaeology, Boston University April 15

Most of the time we see that because that's what we've come to expect and that's what the media decides to show us. But it's not a particularly representative picture of Africa (nor is it a representative picture of Brazil, but I won't get into that). Africa is a huge and diverse place, and not all hot-weather environments are the same. Large parts of the Sahel, the large region just south of the Sahara, are semi-arid, and sizable chunks of southern Africa are either desert (like the Kalahari and the Namib, which you may remember from Fury Road), or relatively temperate. Parts of Africa do have dense jungle, like around the coast of West Africa, but there's a lot more to Africa than that.

Related Links

If South America and Africa have the same latitude, why do Native Americans from Brazil have lighter skin than Sub-Saharan Africans?

Why are there so many tribes in Africa? What is the main difference between them?

Why did most of pre-colonial Subsaharan Africans live in mud/grass huts while most contemporary Europeans and Chinese lived in brick/stone houses?

Could an African American join an African tribe?

Can you tell if someone is black and has sub-Saharan African ancestry just by looking at their faces? Is this normal?

Are Nilo-Saharans like the Dinka and Masai closely related to West Africans and the Bantu tribe? Or are they more closely rel

Why is the Chinese government still giving Nigeria loans?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Observer of Political Trends August 5

Let us start with a few things that provide the necessary context for your question.
First, Nigeria was never at the top of China's lending portfolio in Africa.

Second, China has never been Nigeria's largest source of debt. As of the first quarter of 2021, it was fourth. Ahead of it are the World Bank Group, the Eurobond market and the IMF.

Third, it is a cliche by now, but the Chinese were not following 'Market Principles' when they made those loans. As I understand it, they served two purposes.

The first was to diversify their commodities sources from the Americas and Australia.

The second was to help its companies achieve a foothold in ‘neutral markets’.

My understanding of China’s ‘Go Out’ era in the 2000s is that they targeted ‘First World’ markets as sources of technical know-how or status markers.

In contrast, ‘Third World’ markets were a proving ground for their technology exports. They were also a backup supply chain for their commodities imports.

Using that framework, Angola and Zambia received loans to aid the development of their mining operations.

Ethiopia, Kenya and Nigeria, in contrast, were demonstration grounds for Chinese construction and their indigenous rail and power generation technologies.

Fourth, many of the parameters that underpinned that lending boom has changed.

Increased American production cratered crude oil prices from their 2000s highs. That also made loans for resources swaps with crude oil producers unprofitable.

Also, domestic policy, foreign commitments and its economic interests have dampened China’s appetite for certain commodities. Beneficiaries of that shift are producers of minerals like copper, lithium or cobalt. Nigeria is not one of them.

China wants to reduce steel production. That means fewer iron imports. That, in turn, reduces the prospects that they make the necessary investment to develop Guinea’s Simandou reserves, for example.

There are roaring winds in the China Sea and plentiful sunshine in Xinjiang. They would rather build a green power generation supply chain locally than import expensive, polluting commodities from abroad.

It is often forgotten that China’s economically deprived northern and western regions are commodities powers. As China’s thirst for minerals dwindles, its decreasing share will go there and to the Middle East. Their producers are cheaper than African sources. Also, with the American drawdown in the region, there is a vacuum.

As mentioned, Africa was also a proving ground for Chinese technologies. The results are in.

In an admirable instance of rationality prevailing over hubris, Nigeria's Minister for Transportation remarked:

> We are not using our local contractors because they are not qualified. If you want to participate, build capacity. We can't give you a life-threatening contract if we don't trust your capacity.
>
> We said five years experience but a contractor in Nigeria will take a photograph of another man's job as his own.
>
> How many Nigerians have done project management in railway? Yet they are applying. I am not against them applying but we don't want them to go give the job to other contractors. show us you have the capacity and equipment and we will choose you.

The minister's comment reveals a fact about China across Africa, if not the world. The Chinese no longer need to add stew to get you to eat their rice. It is often superior to the alternatives. Man must wack.

Chinese contractors can now win projects even with an aloof government because they are often superior to their competition.

Their arms producers can do the same for countries sanctioned by the non-Russian alternatives.

'Made-in-China' products are unavoidable. Yet, many do not realise that they are now using Chinese brands or those with heavy Chinese investment.

A Nigerian may well be reading this on their Tecno phone. Paystack, our second 'unicorn' has Tencent as one of its investors. My router is a Huawei and my freezer is a Haier.

That is the good news. The bad news is that if it was a competition between Africa and South East Asia, Africa is losing.

The rise of South-East Asia will be the dominant economic phenomenon of this decade. It recently overtook Europe as China's largest trading partner. It did nearly $300bn of trade with China in 2019. Africa was no slouch at $192 billion, but considering the difference in population (Nigeria alone is about half of SEA), it is obvious where the greater bang for your buck is.

The Americans have noticed and are pouring in money, not only words, into the region. Second, despite COVID-19, BRI construction projects in the region are moving forward. In Africa, they are slowing or being abandoned.

The above should make the following charts from the interwebz easier to grasp.

The boys are going home or, I suppose from the East Asian perspective, coming home. The open chequebook era is over. It is very important to note that because the Chinese people are sensitive, their government is too. Loans abroad were never popular, and President Xi is a populist. Two + Two= Loans going forward will be primarily commercial. Those who want superior concessional bilateral terms must learn to butter up the Chinese people. With the necessary context completed, I can now directly answer your question (sorry for the delay).

The reality is that 'China' is not lending to Nigeria. Instead, all our loans are with the China Export-Import Bank for specific projects built by Chinese contractors.
My speculative analysis is that when the contractors win a project, they take the contract to their ExIm bank who flips it for cash. The contractors take their bundle and leave Nigeria with a commitment to repay the ExIm bank.

The full payment allows the contractors to complete the project on time and within budget. That project then serves as collateral between the ExIm bank and our government, in case of default. /Insert violation of 'our sovereignty' panic/.

The second reason is that Nigeria is more of a market for Chinese products than we are an exporter to China. In 2019, it was $2.52bn worth of exports versus $15.5bn of imports. It might be chicken-change in the grand scheme of things, but it likely isn't to the Guangzhou provincial government.

The Chinese government is very keen on maximising their exports. In the COVID-19 era, the emphasis on e-commerce has also gone into gear four. For example, you might have seen advertisements where three women try to convince you that your business needs Aliexpress.

That is part of a strategy where to use the phrasing of the Secretary-General of the Party's Central Committee, China's economy relies on its 'internal circulation' supported by its 'external circulation' for growth.

Take a moment to chuckle, but think of it as a commitment to encourage greater efficiency at home and a commitment to aid greater export penetration abroad.

For example, to reduce trade frictions, Chinese actors have invested in a series of free trade zones abroad. Their exporters set up overseas warehouses and customs zones there, benefiting their export machine.

We have two, at least to the best of my knowledge, at Lagos and Ogun State. A consortium of private and public interests on the Nigerian and Chinese sides own those free trade zones. That likely makes it another project that the China ExIm bank has lent against.

In both cases, you will see that the Chinese are lending based on the creditworthiness of their compatriots. That is beneficial to us. For example, while their interest rates are 2.5%, issuing a Eurobond based on our credit generates interest rates ranging from roughly 6 to 9 per cent. Even our diaspora are only willing to lend us at roughly 6%.

This answer is lengthy, and most of it is only indirectly related to your question. I apologise. I assure you that I truly believe that every bit of it is important.

The men in the picture were wrong about many things. The importance of 'Third World' countries breaking down the siloes of recent history was not one.

The comfort of a boiling pot aside, citizens of 'Third World' countries instinctively dislike each other because our cultures are so similar and our hatreds more ancient.

The picture above shows a Hindu, al-Sudani, Arab, Javanese and Slav beaming. My next statement will sound counter-intuitive. Those groups have a lengthier history of intimate relations and conflict than they do with the West.

The Bandung spirit was naive and correct. Even more so today. Asking for solidarity among non-Western people was probably always asking too much. Yet without understanding and cooperation, the alternative remains the same: Stay enthusiastic toys of the Occidental Powers.

They are annoying, racists, Pagans, Muslims and I'm 'off-shore balancing' is a fair approximation of what every non-Western power thought circa the 1500s to 1945. 'Once we are rid of those oppressive Aztecs, things will get bett…' were famous last words in some parts.

My point is that the discourse around China, on both sides, by sheer happenstance and, no doubt, slight design appeals to the baser instincts innate in all human beings. We need to think hard about the things that matter and the palatability of the status quo before deciding which path is superior.

In all fairness, those famous last words started with, 'we need to change the status quo'.

Many people said that when they encountered the West. Most did not survive. Only the Japanese and the Russians became the Japanese and the Russians. And even they got asterisked in the end.

My analysis might be wrong, but hopefully, I have, at least, motivated you to do more than accept lazy narratives. Let it not be said that we perished because we lacked knowledge.

Related Links

China has been lending a lot of money to Nigeria recently. And there have been this rumor that Nigeria may lose her sovereignty to China if she couldn't pay up her debts. Do you actually think Nigeria sovereignty could be lost to China?

What are the Chinese aiming for with the loans granted to the Nigerian government?

How is borrowing from China affecting Nigeria's politics and economy? Give it a second thought, is China's borrowing to Nigeria without an interest in influencing Nigeria's politics and economy?

What happens to you if you criticize the Chinese government (as a Chinese citizen)?

Why is the Chinese government giving loans and grabbing the land of poor countries? Why can't everyone see this scam?

Is the Chinese government worried about Chinese students in America becoming

Are the scam reports about Nigerians always true?

Ezechi Nnabugwu Audio Engineer, Sound Editing etc at SuperSport (2011–present) July 23, 2018

Even a citizen of the United States was caught earlier this year posing as a Nigerian to rip off a fellow countryman.

While Nigeria is popular with this sort of crime, fraudulent people live everywhere. The DNA of crime does not know any geographical boundary.

Related Links

What causes the Nigerian scamming culture?

As a Nigerian, how have you been affected by the infamy of the Nigerian Prince scam email?

Have you ever scammed a scammer?

Who do I report a Nigerian scammer that's pretending to be a scammer to?

How do I report a Nigerian who scammed me?

Why do the Nigerian scammers say they are from Nigeria?

Ibrahim Babaginda said the corruption in President Muhammadu Buhari's administration is worse than when he was in government.

Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008) Sat

Former Nigeria head of state Ibrahim Babaginda said the corruption in President Muhammadu Buhari's administration is worse than when he was in government.

He said this in an interview granted to ARISE TV on Friday.

Babangida, who served as head of state between 1985 and 1993, said his administration was a saint compared to what is happening now.

The former military leader said while he moved against a former military governor who embezzled N313,000, those who stole billions are walking freely.

Asked if he agrees with those who said his government was very corrupt, Babangida said: "But what's happening now is worse than when we were in power… we are saints when compared with that."

Babangida said he sacked a governor during his time for corruption involving money less than N300.

The former military head of state noted that Nigeria needs a leader that will talk to the people and not talk on top of the people.

"If you get a good leadership that links with the people and tries to talk with the people; not talking on top of the people, then we would be okay," Babangida said.

Ahead of the 2023 general elections, Babangida said he has "started visualizing a good Nigerian leader."

“That is, a person, who travels across the country and has a friend virtually everywhere he travels to and he knows at least one person that he can communicate with,” Babangida said.

“That is a person, who is very versed in economics and is also a good politician, who should be able to talk to Nigerians and so on. I have seen one, or two or three of such persons already in his sixties.”

Babangida, however, said he has a “very good” relationship with Buhari but stated that “the seemingly rift between us is caused by you, the

How come the coke in the USA does not taste the same with that of Nigeria but the ingredient is the same as supplied by the parent company?

Boris Ezomo Nigerian and proud of it.22h ago

This is true. Nigerian coca cola tastes thicker and sweeter than elsewhere, not only in the US.

Sometimes when returning from Nigeria, Nigerians ask me to buy some and bring it to the UK.

Some Nigerian owned shops in London do get a supply from time to time.

This is the legend why it is so. It was told to me as a child over four decades ago by an employee of the Nigerian bottling company.

When coke first entered into Nigerian market, they got the percentage of the imported concentrate to be diluted wrong. As a result the Coca cola concentrate was twice what it should be. Hence sweeter, thicker and richer tasting.

When the mistake was noticed, they corrected the percentage making it like everywhere else. To the Nigerian it tasted now watery.

No one cheats on the Nigerian!!

We stopped drinking.

So to maintain sales, they returned to the double concentrate formula.

I think there is some truth in it. Because over the years a “new" tasting coke keeps trying to pop up. Each time Nigerians reject it, and in a couple of months it is back to old coke.

It also became a benchmark. As even Pepsi and other Cola drinks are richer tasting in Nigeria too.

Thanks for this question, because when I tell the British, Americans and even Russians that in Nigeria the Coca cola tastes better. They look at each other and smile as if I am telling fibs.

Related Links

How does the Coke Zero soda not contain sugar and still taste sweet?

Why is there a difference in taste of Indian Coke and American Coke?

Why doesn't the USA Coca-Cola use real sugar to improve the taste?

What is better, Coke or Pepsi? Why?

Is Diet Coke (or other diet sodas) good or bad for dieting and weight loss? Does diet soda cause people to gain weight? If so, why?

Is there any difference between USA and US?

News Nigeria

Governor Zullum of Borno state, Nigeria, demolished Church building but he could not stop the faithful from going there to worship even on the stones and the rubble.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

The government demolished a church building belonging to the Local Church of Brethren, LCB, on Thursday last week under Ekkliziyan Yan'uwa a Nigeria (EYN), a.k.a Church of Brethren Maduganari.

Several Nigerians were outraged by the incident, including the Christian Association of Nigeria (CAN), which demanded that the governor immediately rebuild the destroyed structure.

Despite the demolition, worshippers gathered at the site for a regular church service on Sunday. Femi Kayode reacted by writing on his verified Facebook page on Monday that no one can stop the body of Christ from massively growing.

“No matter how hard ANYONE tries, knocking down Churches will not stop the massive expansion and growth of the Christian faith.

The Church was founded on the the blood of the martyrs and the crushed and broken bodies and bones of the saints.

Governor Zullum of Borno state bulldozed the Church building but he could not stop the faithful from going there to worship even on the stones and the rubble.

Kill us a thousand times and millions more will rise up and grow.

The gates of hell shall NOT prevail against the Church of Christ.

I am so proud of the Christians of Borno State. They must always remember that they are not alone: God is with them and we love them”.

Aniekpeno Ekong Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008) August 4 opposition party PDP in major crisis as at least seven national party officers resign… They include Deputy National Financial Secretary, Deputy National Auditor, Deputy Woman Leader, Deputy National Publicity Secretary, Deputy National Legal Adviser…

Tokyo 2020: Team Nigeria's Oborududu claims historic Olympic wrestling silver medal

Aniekpeno Ekong Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008) August 3

Commonwealth champion Blessing Oborududu on Tuesday won a silver medal in the women's 68kg freestyle wrestling event, losing to reigning world champion Tamyra Mensah-Stock of the United States 4-1 on points. Oborududu's loss, notwithstanding, she made…

Court Sentences PDP Leader to One-Year Imprisonment for Insulting President Buhari on Social Media- Aniekpeno Ekong Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008)August 3

A former PDP youth leader, Ikamu Kato, has been found guilty of insulting President Buhari on Facebook by a court in Adamawa. Yola, Adamawa state - A suspended youth leader of the Peoples Democratic Party (PDP) in Adamawa state, Ikamu Kato, has been s…

Ese Brume wins Nigeria's first medal at Tokyo Olympics

Aniekpeno Ekong Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008) August 3

Nigeria's Ese Brume competes in the women's long jump final during the Tokyo 2020 Olympic Games at the Olympic Stadium in Tokyo on August 3, 2021. (Photo by Andrej ISAKOVIC / AFP)

Nigeria has its first medal of the Tokyo 2020 Olympic Games after Ese Brume, in the early hours of Tuesday, claimed a bronze medal after finishing third in the women's long jump event.

Brume leapt 6.97 metres with her very first jump to claim bronze behind second-placed Brittany Reece of the United States and gold medallist Malaika Mihambo of Germany.

It is Nigeria's first track and field medal at the Olympics since 2008 when Okagbare won a silver medal in Beijing. It also makes the long jump the first individual event to give Nigeria three medals at the Olympics with Chioma Ajunwa's gold at the Atlanta '96 Olympics topping Okagbare's silver from 2008 and Brume's bronze.

Brume also joins Okagbare and Glory Alozie as the only Nigerians to win individual medals at both the Worlds and the Olympics.

On Tuesday, at the Olympic Stadium in Tokyo, Brume and Reese swapped top spot a number of times and both looked set to claim gold and silver until Mihambo, with her very last jump, leapt 7.00m to add the Olympic title to the world title she won in Doha two years ago.

Mihambo started well, taking the lead on her first attempt with a jump of 6.83m.

But she was instantly overtaken by Brume with a leading jump of 6.97m which set the standard in the first of six attempts.

Onto the second attempt and the medal contenders bunched up at the top with Mihambo moving to within 2cm of Brume's 6.97m and Serbia's Ivana Spanovic in third (6.91m).

USA's Reese took the top spot on the third attempt, in front of Brume's jump of 6.97m by virtue of having the second-longest effort, but the Nigerian's second-best jump of 6.88 on her fourth attempt put her back into the overall lead.

Reese's fourth attempt of 6.87m meant she trailed Brume by a single centimetre, but the 34-year-old continued to show her great consistency as she moved into the lead on her fifth attempt with a 6.95m jump.

Into the final round and it was a battle between Mihambo, Reese and Brume for the gold medal.

On Mihambo's last jump, she leapt 7.00m to move from bronze into gold position. Brume knew she would finish in bronze position with her final jump of 6.90m. Reese scored 6.84m to take silver.

Aniekpeno Ekong Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008)August 2

PRESS RELEASE IGP APPOINTS DCP TUNJI DISU AS HEAD, POLICE INTELLIGENCE RESPONSE TEAM Tunji Disu to replace DCP Abba Kyari at IRT Assures the IRT will remain focused in the discharge of its professional mandate The Inspector-General of Police, IGP Usman A...

Gunmen storm Orlu, behead community leader, destroy 20 shops, vehicles
Armed gunmen have unleashed violence in Okporo and neighbouring Communities in Orlu Local Government Area of Imo State. Vanguard gathered that the attacks which started on Sunday night continued till Monday morning. At the time of filling this report,...

Tokyo 2020: Nigeria Guaranteed Medal As Oborodudu Reaches Wrestling Final

Aniekpeno Ekong

Nigeria on Monday was guaranteed its first medal at the Tokyo Olympics after Blessing Oborodudu won her women's freestyle 68kg wrestling semi-final match. Oborududu beat Mongolia's Battsetseg Soronzonbold to reach the final. Although the final match is...

Aniekpeno Ekong Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008)August 2

Akwa United have been crowned champions of the 2020/2021 Nigeria Professional Football League season after producing a remarkable 5-2 victory over MFM FC in Uyo on matchday 37 in Uyo. Charles Atshimene capped a fine performance with a hat-trick and im…

Tokyo 2020: Adegoke Beats World's Fastest Man, Oduduru Disqualified

Aniekpeno Ekong Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008)August 1

Nigeria's fastest man, Enoch Adegoke chose the biggest stage in sports to shine and join the exclusive club of sub-10 seconds runners after finished first in 9.98 seconds in his first round heat to qualify for the 100m semifinal at the ongoing Tokyo…

The Athletic Integrity Unit, AIU, has suspended Nigeria's Blessing Okagbare

Aniekpeno Ekong Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008) July 31

The Athletic Integrity Unit, AIU, has suspended Nigeria's Blessing Okagbare with immediate effect. After a sample collected from the sprinter tested positive for human Growth Hormone, the Athletics Integrity Unit (AIU) has temporarily suspended Blessi…

"I am pleased to announce Nigeria's new commitment to progressively increase the Federal Government's annual domestic education expenditure by 50% over the next two years, and up to 100% by 2025, beyond the 20% global benchmark. We will build a more secure and prosperous future for our children”. President Bihari

How come the coke in the USA does not taste the same with that of Nigeria but the ingredient is the same as supplied by the parent company?

Boris Ezomo, Nigerian and proud of it. Answered 23h ago

This is true. Nigerian coca cola tastes thicker and sweeter then elsewhere, not only US.

Sometimes when returning from the Nigeria, Nigerians ask me to buy some and bring it to the UK.
Some Nigerian owned shops in London do get a supply from time to time.

This is the legend why it is so. It was told to me as a child over four decades ago by an employee of the Nigerian bottling company.

When coke first entered into Nigerian market, they got the percentage of the imported concentrate to be diluted wrong. As a result the Coca cola concentrate was twice what it should be. Hence sweeter, thicker and richer tasting.

When the mistake was noticed, they corrected the percentage making it like everywhere else. To the Nigerian it tasted now watery.

No one cheats on the Nigerian!!

We stopped drinking.

So to maintain sales, they returned to the double concentrate formula.

I think there is some truth in it. Because over the years a “new" tasting coke keeps trying to pop up. Each time Nigerians reject it, and in a couple of mouths it is back to old coke.

It also became a benchmark. As even Pepsi and other Cola drinks are richer tasting in Nigeria too.

Thanks for this question, because when I tell the British, Americans and even Russians that in Nigeria the Coca cola tastes better. They look at each other and smile as if I am telling fibs.

Related Links

How does the Coke Zero soda not contain sugar and still taste sweet?

Why is there a difference in taste of Indian Coke and American Coke?

Why doesn't the USA Coca-Cola use real sugar to improve the taste?

What is better, Coke or Pepsi? Why?

Is Diet Coke (or other diet sodas) good or bad for dieting and weight loss? Does diet soda cause people to gain weight? If so, why?

Is there any difference between USA and US?

OPERATION HADIN KAI: AGAIN MORE TERRORISTS SURRENDER AS TROOPS ESCALATE OPERATIONS ACROSS NE THEATRE - ...Relinquish Arms and Ammunition

Aniekpeno Ekong Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL) (Graduated 2008) August 5

More Boko Haram (BHT)/ Islamic State West African Province (ISWAP) terrorists are surrendering as troops of Operations HADIN KAI (OPHK), conducting Counter terrorism and counter Insurgency operations in north east Nigeria escalate ground and air offensive operations against the terrorists.

Sustained air and artillery bombardments on the enclaves of the terrorists in Sambisa forest and its environs have continued to yield positive results as 56 terrorists and their families laid down their arms abandoning the groups and their illicit course. Recently, the terrorists groups have suffered enormous set back and recorded several casualties as a result of ferocious offensives by gallant troops of OPHK. Eighteen male fighters of the terrorists groups on Wednesday 4 August 2021, came out to surrender to own troops with their arms and ammunition, along with their families including 18 adult females and 19 children from Chingori and other surrounding villages around the Sambisa forest.

The arms recovered from the surrendered terrorists include, 5 AK 47 rifles, 1 foreign AK 47 rifle with telescopic sight, 1 Fabrique Nationale rifle, 8 AK 47 rifle magazines, 1 FN rifle magazine, 1 Bandolier, 3 rounds of 7.62mm (special) ammunition and the sum of Seven Thousand, Seven Hundred naira (#7,700.00) only.

Similarly, a Boko Haram fighter from Abuja Asamau Village in Sambisa Forest also surrendered to own troops of with his AK 47 rifle, 2 magazines, 1 Magazine holder, 1 round of 7.62mm special and the sum of Five Thousand Naira (N5,000:00)

It will be recalled that in less than 2 weeks, over 100 BHTs/ISWAP terrorists and their families have succumbed to ferocious offensive operations of Nigerian troops by laying down their arms and giving up the fight as their enclaves are being bombarded by the combined efforts of the Air component and ground troops of Operation HADIN KAI.

The Chief of Army Staff (COAS) Lt Gen Faruk Yahaya has lauded the troops for their effort and charged them to remain dedicated and committed in the fight, until the terrorists are completely decimated.

ONYEMA NWACHUKWU Brigadier General Director Army Public Relations

Senate committee proposes 20 new states

Aniekpeno Ekong Works at Government of Nigeria Sun

The agitation for the creation of more states in the country is about to enter a new phase.

This follows the recommendation by the Senate Committee on Constitution Review that referendum be conducted for 20 new states by the Independent National Electoral Commission (INEC).

The Nation gathered yesterday that the committee's decision was reached after considering various factors including the ability of civilian administration to create states.

It recalled that the defunct Mid-Western Region was created in 1963 in the First Republic.

To check tax evasion, the Senate panel also approved the amendment of the 1999 Constitution to allow for the creation of Federal Revenue Court.

There will be about five revenue courts to deal with all tax issues nationwide, especially cases involving multinational firms.

A highly placed source said the Senate panel will soon meet with the House of Representatives Committee on Constitution Review for joint consultations on some of the approved amendments.

Creation of new states tops the list of amendments to the 1999 Constitution.

Although less than five of the current 36 states are economically viable, it was gathered that the Senate Committee was determined to respect what it termed "the genuine desire of Nigerians."

The list of requests for new states is quite long but sources said referendum may be conducted for no fewer than 20 states.

Some of the requests are ITAI State (fromAkwa Ibom State); State status for the FCT; Katagum State from Bauchi State; Okura State from Kogi East; Adada State from Enugu State; Gurara State from Kaduna South; and Ijebu State from Ogun State

Others are Ibadan State from Oyo State; Tiga State from Kano State; Ghari State from Kano State; Amana State from Adamawa; Gongola State from Adamawa; Mambilla State from Taraba State; Savannah State from Borno State; and Okun state from Kogi State.

Those on the list include Etiti State from the South East Zone; Orashi State from Imo and Anambra states; Njaba from the present Imo State or the excision of Aba State from Abia State; Anioma State from Delta State; Torogbene and Oil River States, from Bayelsa, Delta and Rivers states; and Bayajida State from parts of Katsina, Jigawa and Zamfara states.

The source said:"The Senate Committee on Constitution Review has seen the desirability of creating new states which may even solve the nation's present security challenges.

"What the Senate Committee has recommended is to amend the constitution to empower INEC to conduct the referendum on state creation.

" When INEC gets the constitutional mandate, we can then invoke Section in Part 1 of Chapter 1 of the 1999 Constitution.

"We are talking of referendum for less than or about 20 new states."

Responding to a question, the source added:

"The procedures for creating new states may be cumbersome but realizable.

"At the committee level, it was obvious that a civilian administration is better placed to create new states than any other form of government. In fact, the defunct Mid-Western Region was created in 1963 during the First Republic.

” In this Fifth Amendment to the 1999 Constitution, the National Assembly can create new states if the conditions are met.”

Section in Part 1 of Chapter 1 of the 1999 Constitution states the conditions as follows:

“An Act of the National Assembly for the purpose of creating a new state shall only be passed if –

(a) a request, supported by at least two-thirds majority of members (representing the area demanding the creation of the new state) in each if the following –

(i) the Senate and the House of Representatives

(ii) the House of Assembly in respect of the area, and

(iii) the local government councils in respect of the area, is received by the National Assembly.

“A proposal for the creation of the state is thereafter approved in a referendum by at least two-thirds majority of the people of the area where the demand for creation of the state originated.

” The result if the referendum is then approved by a simple majority of all the states of the Federation supported by a simple majority of members of the Houses of Assembly, and

” The proposal is approved by a resolution passed by two-thirds majority of members of each House of the National Assembly.”

It was also gathered that the Senate Committee on Constitution Review recommended the establishment of Federal Revenue Court, including five branches to adjudicate on tax-related issues.

Another source said:” The establishment of the court will accelerate cases involving tax defaulters, under-declaration of returns, and other abuses by local and multinational companies.

” The constitution will be amended to accommodatethis specialized court.”

Asked when the Senate and the House of Representatives Committees will meet, the source added: “Before the end of the month.”

The last state creation in Nigeria took place on October 1,1996 when the late military Head of State, General Sani Abacha, announced the emergence of Bayelsa, Ebonyi, Ekiti, Gombe, Nasarawa and Zamfara.

BOKO HARAM TERRORISTS/ISWAP SENIOR COMMANDERS, CHIEF BOMB EXPERT AND FAMILIES SURRENDER WITH FOLLOWERS

Aniekpeno Ekong Works at Government of NigeriaMon

...More arms and ammunition recovered

Following the recent escalation of offensive operations coupled with non kinetic efforts by troops of operation HADIN KAI (OPHK) which yielded massive surrendering of Boko Haram and Islamic State of West Africa Province Terrorists in the North East, the Chief Bomb Expert of the terrorists group known as Musa Adamu a.k.a Mala Musa Abuja and his second in command Usman Adamu a.k.a Abu Darda along with their families and followers have also finally surrendered to the troops of operation HADIN KAI in Bama Local Government Area of Borno State.

The acting General Officer Commanding (GOC) 7 Division and Commander Sector 1 OPHK Brigadier General Abdulwahab Adelokun Eyitayo was at Headquarters 21 Special Armoured Brigade Bama on Saturday, 7 August, 2021 to receive the set of the surrendered Boko Haram terrorists and their families.

During the visit, the GOC said their decision to drop their arms and come out is highly commendable, adding that they should also try and talk to their brothers and colleagues in the forest to come out and embrace the new life of peace and rehabilitation. General Eyitayo who spoke through an interpreter further disclosed that they will undergo some rehabilitation process at a Government facility before reintegration into the larger society.

While distributing new cloths and assorted food items, groceries and toiletries to the surrendered terrorists and their families totalling 335 fighters, 746 adult women and children including one of the abducted Chibok girls, it was observed that the reasons for such massive turn was basically due to the intensified Nigerian military campaign on their enclaves and environs and also with the overwhelming famine, discontent, internal skirmishes, health challenges as well as untold hardship.

The Nigerian military has resolved to intensify its both kinetic and non-kinentic approach towards the ongoing fight against insurgency in order to leverage on the knowledge of Musa Adamu and Usman Adamu and also with the current wave of turnout by terrorists to enable her achieve both short and long term counter-insurgency gains in the North East.

ONYEMA NWACHUKWU Brigadier General Director Army Public Relations

What are the circumstances which hindered the development of African nations in comparison to their European counterparts?

Kyune Israel Michael BSc in Industrial Chemistry, University of Jos, Nigeria (Graduated 2019) July 29
Self centered leaders. Greed!

Related Links

What does Nigeria need to do to develop?

Why has the Nigerian government not lifted the ban on Twitter?

What are the elements you look at when shopping on an online eg ecommerce website?

I'm a Nigerian that writes for Livingston research website. Their pay is not that great and I would like to increase my earnings, does anyone have suggestions on similar sites that pay fairly well?

Why is Lagos International Airport operating manually lately?

Why has Mark Zuckerberg educated Nigerian youth on Facebook codes?

Does Nigeria have any city aside from Benin City?

Does the government regulate operations of multivendor marketplace in Nigeria?

According to some predictions years ago, do you think water will submerged Lagos city in Nigeria in the future?

Which is a better city for everything in East Africa, Nairobi, Dar es Salaam, Mombasa, or Kampala?

Can the United Nations tell African leaders to create one United States of Africa?

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China of Nigerian citizens treatment in China?

What are the causes of human trafficking in Nigeria?

Related Links

What is human trafficking?

What are the four reasons for human trafficking in South Africa?

What is girl trafficking?

How bad is human trafficking?

What are the effects of human trafficking on victims?

How can we prevent human trafficking in Nigeria?

What was the most insane thing a non-Nigerian has said about Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor Lives in Lagos, Nigeria November 4, 2019

Nigeria is probably the go-to country to learn 'human nature' but Quora is the place to graduate and get certified.
Some persons have been said to go straight to the comment section without actually reading a post to vent their anger. I've seen it all.

I've been called a scammer simply because I write about Nigeria, simply because I'm a Nigerian : D Some won't even read your post, upvote, neither share if they perceive you're a Nigerian, except if you're a Nigerian with some foreign address.

Well, all thanks to this great platform, it has transformed me greatly. I can't even get mad anymore even when I'm supposed to. I guess it's the price one has to pay for trying to tell a balanced story about Nigeria.

Someone asked; If all Nigerians live in Hut?

Victor Dirikebamor's answer to Do all Nigerians live in huts?

This question broke me, not because I was encountering such questions on this platform for the first time but the manner the person asked the question made it impossible for me to find reasons to justify his pure ignorance or to forgive him of the sin of pride and prejudice.

I've learned that people will forget what you said, people will forget what you did, but people will never forget how you made them feel. Maya Angelou. My anger was coming to the realisation that people didn't know much about Nigeria, about Africa and that made me sad.

Related Links

What good things can you say about Nigeria?

What are 10 things to know about Nigeria?

What do you love about Nigeria?

What is something good that is happening in Nigeria right now?

What are things that are mostly said about Nigerians, but are not true?

As a Nigerian, what have you ever done for your country?

I chatted online with Derrick, 21, from Benin City. He has sent me pictures of himself, his home and area. Now he says his family is so broke the landlord may evict and they are practically starving. Can I learn if this is real? Can I help from the USA?

Related Links

Does the government regulate operations of multivendor marketplace in Nigeria?

According to some predictions years ago, do you think water will submerged Lagos city in Nigeria in the future?

Which is a better city for everything in East Africa, Nairobi, Dar es Salaam, Mombasa, or Kampala?

Can the United Nations tell African leaders to create one United States of Africa?

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China of Nigerian citizens treatment in China?

What are the similarities and dissimilarities between the 1979 and 1999 constitution of Nigeria?

Is Echia Dominic from Benue State?

With the current state of things in Africa, can any state in Africa or Nigeria become a world power?

Why are Nigerian men too jealous?

Can I use Ecopayz in Nigeria?

Is Paystack banned in Nigeria?

Who are the six Nigerian players who have won the Community Shield?

What is your advice for the Nigerian youth?

Noble Man Affiliate Marketer (2019–present) 15h ago

It is difficult because not everyone is doing very well financially and not everyone is stable enough to start a business. Starting a business requires hard work along with a vision that very few are willing to work one. Neither everyone is made for Entrepreneurship nor everyone is willing to pay the price.

Third world countries also lack proper infrastructure to support small Entrepreneurs who are capable enough of building big billion dollar companies.

The governments are also corrupt which makes starting a business more difficult.

I would like to advise you that don't give up on your idea yet, instead 1st get a job, educate yourself, hone your skills, learn more about business and entrepreneurship, earn and save some money, get a little financially stable enough to start a business and then go for your dream and idea.

All the very best wishes to you for your future.

I was also a struggling Entrepreneur who was busting his ass off by working 80–100 hours a week.

I am from Nigeria and nowadays we are also in a mess. The government is very corrupt and we are seeing massive protests lately.

There are struggles everywhere but that doesn't mean that we quit. Learn from Hong Kong. They protested for about a year.

Life is miserable but we have to fight with all our might.

Related Links

Does the government regulate operations of multivendor marketplace in Nigeria?

According to some predictions years ago, do you think water will submerged Lagos city in Nigeria in the future?

Which is a better city for everything in East Africa, Nairobi, Dar es Salaam, Mombasa, or Kampala?

Can the United Nations tell African leaders to create one United States of Africa?

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China of Nigerian citizens treatment in China?

What are the similarities and dissimilarities between the 1979 and 1999 constitution of Nigeria?

Is Echia Dominic from Benue State?

With the current state of things in Africa, can any state in Africa or Nigeria become a world power?

Why are Nigerian men too jealous?

Can I use Ecopayz in Nigeria?

Is Paystack banned in Nigeria?

Who are the six Nigerian players who have won the Community Shield?

Why did ShopRite have to leave Nigeria in spite of the Nigerian population?

Related Links

Is Nigeria really 170 million in population?

I have not seen many Nigerian women married to non-Nigerian African men. Yet many Nigerian men are married outside of Nigeria. Why is that?

What's the best way to get out of Nigeria?

Why exactly is Nigeria so populous and so densely populated relative to other African countries?

Nigeria is projected to have possibly as many as a billion people by the beginning of the next century. Will it be able to support such a large population?

Why is Nigeria the most populated country in Africa?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why are Nigerians fleeing Nigeria?

How is Nigeria able to sustain such a large population relative to the rest of Africa?

What are the advantages and disadvantages of Nigeria large population?

Why don't Nigerians fix Nigeria instead of flocking to other countries?

Why does the Nigerian population grow so fast?

What does it mean to be a Nigerian?

What are the causes of high population growth in Nigeria?

Why are you proud to be Nigerian?

I chat online with Derrick, 21, from Benin City. He has sent me pictures of himself, his home and area. Now he says his family is so broke the landlord may evict and they are practically starving. Can I learn if this is real? Can I help from the USA?

Lynette Semonich Garnishment Specialist (2013–present) July 28

How long have you been chatting him for? You do realize that just about 99 percent of Nigerians will ask you for help right? With that being said, many are struggling there. People have a difficult time finding work there. Hard Labor doesn't pay much. Do what you feel in your heart but know that if you help once he will probably continue to ask for help over and over again. Just an FYI…they pay their rent yearly there. I would be interested to know what he has said the cost of his rent is? As for photos, not the best way to know if someone is legit or not. Definitely video chat him and his family. See how they live. I don't claim to know all about Nigeria but I do know some. Just be smart with your decisions. There is nothing wrong with helping people in need, but be sure he is not scamming you. Also, he has money to buy data to chat you on line yet his family is nearly starving.

Related Links

Does the government regulate operations of multivendor marketplace in Nigeria?

According to some predictions years ago, do you think water will submerged Lagos city in Nigeria in the future?

Which is a better city for everything in East Africa, Nairobi, Dar es Salaam, Mombasa, or Kampala?

Can the United Nations tell African leaders to create one United States of Africa?

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China of Nigerian citizens treatment in China?

What are the similarities and dissimilarities between the 1979 and 1999 constitution of Nigeria?

Is Echia Dominic from Benue State?

With the current state of things in Africa, can any state in Africa or Nigeria become a world power?

Why are Nigerian men too jealous?

Can I use Ecopayz in Nigeria?

Is Paystack banned in Nigeria?

Who are the six Nigerian players who have won the Community Shield?

Why is the Nigerian government arresting freedom fighters?

Searo Job Content Creator (2019–present) 18h ago

Because that is what the average Nigerians will do to you when you try to draw their attention to something they are doing that is hurting others or can hurt others.
They will let you know it's none of your business and if you are telling them to stop it they will fight you and try to bring you down with any possible means even if they have to destroy you in the process.

An average nigerian only cares about themselves and nothing else so what do you expect when such kind of people have more power.

Do not be shocked that those protesting are also like that too, so they know each other and deal with each other accordingly.

I will always be giving answers that will hit you back because the truth no one wants to hear even Quora doesn’t like people who are forward thinkers.

Related Linkss

Does the government regulate operations of multivendor marketplace in Nigeria?

According to some predictions years ago, do you think water will submerged Lagos city in Nigeria in the future?

Which is a better city for everything in East Africa, Nairobi, Dar es Salaam, Mombasa, or Kampala?

Can the United Nations tell African leaders to create one United States of Africa?

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China of Nigerian citizens in China?

What are the similarities and dissimilarities between the 1979 and 1999 constitution of Nigeria?

Is Echia Dominic from Benue State?

With the current state of things in Africa, can any state in Africa or Nigeria become a world power?

Why are Nigerian men too jealous?

Can I use Ecopayz in Nigeria?

Is Paystack banned in Nigeria?

Who are the six Nigerian players who have won the Community Shield?

Is Echia Dominic from Benue State?

Submission accepted by
Aniekpeno Ekong

Related Links

Does the government regulate operations of multivendor marketplace in Nigeria?

According to some predictions years ago, do you think water will submerge Lagos city in Nigeria in the future?

Which is a better city for everything in East Africa, Nairobi, Dar es Salaam, Mombasa, or Kampala?

Can the United Nations tell African leaders to create one United States of Africa?

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China of Nigerian citizens treatment in China?

What are the similarities and dissimilarities between the 1979 and 1999 constitution of Nigeria?

With the current state of things in Africa, can any state in Africa or Nigeria become a world power?

Why are Nigerian men too jealous?

Can I use Ecopayz in Nigeria?

Is Paystack banned in Nigeria?

Who are the six Nigerian players who have won the Community Shield?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

Bruno Nlem Bachelor's of Philosophy from Pontifical Urban University Rome (Graduated 2019) 2h ago

Dear Visitor, You are welcome to Nigeria. I hope you have a safe trip. I don't know where you are coming from or what you mean by the obvious. It's therefore difficult to really inform you about Nigeria. However, Nigeria is one of the most diverse nations on Earth. Your experience in Abuja will be entirely different from your experience in Lagos or Owerri. The place you decide to visit therefore, gives you your impression of Nigeria. Lagos and Onicha are busy and business-focused, Abuja is classy and calm, Owerri is pleasure oriented. Whichever part of Nigeria you end up visiting, avoid lonely places at night especially in Lagos and Onicha.

Related Links

Does the government regulate operations of multivendor marketplace in Nigeria?

According to some predictions years ago, do you think water will submerged Lagos city in Nigeria in the future?

Which is a better city for everything in East Africa, Nairobi, Dar es Salaam, Mombasa, or Kampala?

Can the United Nations tell African leaders to create one United States of Africa?

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China of Nigerian citizens treatment in China?

What are the similarities and dissimilarities between the 1979 and 1999 constitution of Nigeria?

Is Echia Dominic from Benue State?

With the current state of things in Africa, can any state in Africa or Nigeria become a world power?

Why are Nigerian men too jealous?

Can I use Ecopayz in Nigeria?

Is Paystack banned in Nigeria?

Who are the six Nigerian players who have won the Community Shield?

What is the position of the South-South on the issue of Biafra in Nigeria? Are they in support?

Luka John Benjamin Clergy at Living Faith Church Worldwide (2013–present) August 2

The south South region of Nigeria have been more interested in seeking a better life for people living in the region whose lives and land have been ravaged by pollution from oil exploration over the years than agitating for an independent state.
Elder statesman, Edwin Clark, has said the Indigenous People of Biafra is dreaming with its inclusion of the South-South region in Biafra Republic.

IPOB, which has been proscribed by the Nigerian government, is agitating to break the South-East and South-South regions away from Nigeria to form Biafra Republic.

Both regions were part of the defunct Eastern Region which rebelled against Nigeria from 1967 to 1970.

Speaking in an interview with BBC Pidgin on IPOB, Clark said, "They are very unrealistic boys. To me, IPOB is not pursuing the right thing."

He continued, "I told him (IPOB leader, Nnamdi Kanu) that he has a good fight, that the people of the East are being neglected. They have only five states, whereas other regions have six. In fact, one has seven. Based on what? Nobody knows.

"For every appointment that is being made in this country, the Igbo are shortchanged. If Universities are being distributed per state, they will have five. Others will have six while North-West will have seven. This is despite the Igbo forming the third leg when this country was created

When asked if the South-South states are also part of the Biafra that IPOB is agitating for, Clark said, "How can Delta be part of Biafra? In what way? Is Biafra older or bigger than Delta?

"How can Rivers State or Akwa Ibom become part of Biafra? They are still dreaming about the Eastern Region of those days."

On Kanu's rearrest, Clark said, "'I hope the Federal Government will give him a fair, decent and open trial. Because, up till today, I do not understand how the Federal Government got him back into Nigeria.

"We remember the days of Umaru Dikko who was put in a big box and brought back to Nigeria. I don't know how this young man (Kanu) was brought back to Nigeria."

He said claims by Kanu that he was abducted in Kenya has to be addressed by the Kenyan government.

Related Links

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China of Nigerian citizens treatment in China?

What are the similarities and dissimilarities between the 1979 and 1999 constitution of Nigeria?

Is Echia Dominic from Benue State?

With the current state of things in Africa, can any state in Africa or Nigeria become a world power?

Why are Nigerian men too jealous?

Can I use Ecopayz in Nigeria?

Is Paystack banned in Nigeria?

Who are the six Nigerian players who have won the Community Shield?

What are the true sizes in the areas of Africa and Asia? Google is not giving consistent answers.

What part of Africa was not affected by slavery?

What are the best places or websites to buy hype sneakers and Jordans in South Africa (websites and stores)?

Is it still the case,as it was up to 2000,that if you see in the Third Mainland bridge,a 20 years old boy with a vehicle worthing more than half a million US$,means that he's from a well known family of Lagos and if not,his source of wealth is strange?

Why is Naira losing its value to the dollar?

Submission accepted by Frank Abah See parent question

Related Links

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China for the treatment of Nigerian citizens in China?

What are the similarities and dissimilarities between the 1979 and 1999 constitution of Nigeria?

Is Echia Dominic from Benue State?

With the current state of things in Africa, can any state in Africa or Nigeria become a world power?

Why are Nigerian men too jealous?

Can I use Ecopayz in Nigeria?

Is Paystack banned in Nigeria?

Who are the six Nigerian players who have won the Community Shield?

What are the true sizes in the areas of Africa and Asia? Google is not giving consistent answers.

What part of Africa was not affected by slavery?

What are the best places or websites to buy hype sneakers and Jordans in South Africa (websites and stores)?

Is it still the case,as it was up to 2000,that if you see in the Third Mainland bridge,a 20 years old boy with a vehicle worth more than half a million US$,means that he's from a well known family of Lagos and if not,his source of wealth is strange?

Hello, my name is Ashley Kasarachi Oluchi Obioma.

ASHLEY High School Student July 30

I am a 17 year old Nigerian Ibgo girl, and I love my country. I am proud to be a Nigerian. I am so happy to join this space, I hope I can find happiness. God bless you all, and Nigeria.

I
NIGERIA

Related Links

Does the government regulate operations of multivendor marketplace in Nigeria?

According to some predictions years ago, do you think water will submerged Lagos city in Nigeria in the future?

Which is a better city for everything in East Africa, Nairobi, Dar es Salaam, Mombasa, or Kampala?

Can the United Nations tell African leaders to create one United States of Africa?

What business can I start with $1,000 in Nigeria or any African country?

I'm meant to visit Nigeria in October. What should I expect apart from the obvious?

How entertaining is Big Brother Naija?

Why does Nigeria condemn Communist China of Nigerian citizens treatment in China?

What are the similarities and dissimilarities between the 1979 and 1999 constitution of Nigeria?

Is Echia Dominic from Benue State?

With the current state of things in Africa, can any state in Africa or Nigeria become a world power?

Why are Nigerian men too jealous?

Can I use Ecopayz in Nigeria?

Is Paystack banned in Nigeria?

Who are the six Nigerian players who have won the Community Shield?

How long does it take for a US citizen to bring his sibling from Nigeria to the USA?

Kathryn Berck Retired US consular officer, INTJ, PBK,writer,dog & horse lover June

There are annual numerical limits on many classes of immigrants to the US. At present, the F4 - sibling - immigrant visa category is oversubscribed by about 15 years for most nationalities, including Nigerians. A few other nationalities - mainland-born Chinese, India, Mexico and the Philippines - are separated out and have their own waits, because there are so many of them that essentially only they would ever even get immigrant visa

Related Links:

How many years should we live in the US to become a citizen?

As a US citizen, I found out I have a 33-year-old married daughter with my ex-girlfriend in Nigeria. She doesn't bear my name, and now I want her to come to the US. Can I file for her, and how long does it take?

As a US citizen, how long will it take to process permanent residency for my parents and sibling of 19 years old from Nigeria?

How long would it take my sibling to get a green card if I apply as a US citizen?

What is the easiest way to immigrate to the USA? My spouse is a citizen but we haven't met yet, and I'm from Nigeria.

Can a US citizen help Nigeria to get a visa in the USA?

Are you in Nigeria now?

Elaiho Ik A pure Nigerian. Born here and lives hereMarch 27, 2018
Originally Answered: Are you still in Nigeria? Let me go outside and check….

Yup..I still am. .....

OK let me check my GPS just in case.

Yup…I sure am……

But I might still be mistaken. Final check, last but not the least.

Am gonna flip the switch to the light in my room.

(Actual image)

DARKNESS!!!!!!!!!!

YES I am in Nigeria.

But I am curious why you ask?

What has been the long-term impact of the Biafra War on the subsequent development of Nigerian history?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian Updated June 10

The tragedy of the Nigerian civil war is that it should never have been fought. That fact makes the murder by mutineering Majors on January 15, 1966, of the Prime Minister and two regional premiers the more historically pivotal moment.

Wiping out and driving from power the civilian leadership of a very young country was a tragedy. It was compounded by the counter-coup, which did for the military leadership what the January murders had done for the civilian leadership. Those who held power on the eve of the civil war were inexperienced, arrogant and not used to compromise.

In the long-term, the most pivotal event of the war was the decision by the secessionist regime to expropriate Federal properties. This is important because what people imagine to be events driven by human actions alone tend to have an economic element to them.

In the specific case of Nigeria, the central economic fact looming over its history is that it is a very poor country whose export structure has always been reliant on volatile commodities. For more, see here:

Nigeria is a poor country. We have a lower GDP per capita than the other four leading African economies and Ghana, West Africa's second-largest economy. Unlike those countries, we have also seen no real growth in per capita levels since the 1980s.

Since 2016, annual GDP growth rate has not been higher than 3%, and the economy has twice been in recession.

Poor economic performance results in a multitude of social malaise consistently documented by the media and various research organisations. For example, we have one of the largest numbers of children globally who are stunted by malnutrition.

The Council of Foreign Relations has also been tracking violence in Nigeria and documents a marked increase in cumulative deaths over the past decade.

Graph 3: Total Deaths by Perpetrator

This graph reflects the cumulative deaths over time attributed to a particular perpetrator. These five perpetrators represent the vast majority of deaths documented by the NST. There are deaths included in the overall NST count, displayed in graph 1, that are not reflected here.

In the World Bank's 2020 Human Capital Index, with 0.88 the highest measured score, Nigeria scored 0.36. That was lower than every other country except the Central African Republic, Chad, South Sudan, Niger, Mali and Liberia.

Nigeria has always been poor.

In the first decade of the independence era, across West Africa, Cameroon, Chad, Ghana, Senegal and Togo were richer, on a per capita basis.

GDP per capita ($)

		1960-1964	1965-1969	1970-1974	1975-1979	1980-1984	1985-1989	1990-1994	1995-1999	2000-2004
WEST AFRICA	Benin		117	144	250	308	301	321	337	390
	Burkina Faso		89	106	202	248	294	284	259	293
	Cameroon		156	224	484	796	1024	889	632	702
	Chad		126	145	220	186	223	253	209	270
	Ghana		225	256	309	350	362	370	382	317
	Mali		62	83	173	197	215	259	237	285
	Nigeria		121	271	587	655	286	279	305	434
	Senegal		200	228	390	408	563	624	477	538
	Togo		122	162	290	294	322	342	307	280
	Studied countries		133	232	465	537	357	351	336	418
	Other countries		185	254	552	629	604	570	526	511
	All countries		139	235	476	550	392	383	364	432

The discovery of oil and its exports in commercial quantities was the equivalent to winning the lottery. It set us, seemingly, on a path to prosperity. In Economic Development in the Twenty-first Century: Lessons for Africa Throughout History, Matthew Kofi Ocran, Professor of Economics, University of the Western Cape, observes that between 1976 and 1978, we exported 42% of all exports that left Sub-Saharan Africa. So every dollar that came in, we got 42 cents. For the massive gap with other African countries, not named South Africa, see below.

WEST AFRICA	Benin	0.1	0.1	0.1	0.3	0.5	0.6	0.6
	Burkina Faso	0.0	0.1	0.1	0.2	0.2		0.2
	Cameroon		1.1	1.5	1.4	2.2	2.0
	Chad		0.1	0.1	0.2	0.2
	Ghana		1.1	1.1	1.0	1.2	2.0	2.6
	Mali		0.1	0.2	0.3	0.4	0.6	0.9
	Nigeria		13.9	16.3	8.7	12.3	13.9	22.4
	Senegal	0.5	0.7	0.9	1.0	1.2	1.4	1.5
	Togo	0.2	0.2	0.3	0.3	0.4	0.5	0.5
	Studied countries		17.3	20.6	13.3	18.5
	Other countries		3.1	4.6	5.0	5.0
	All countries		20.5	25.2	18.4	23.5
EAST AFRICA	Ethiopia		0.4	0.5	0.7	0.5	0.9	1.2
	Kenya		1.3	1.6	1.8	2.4	2.9	3.3
	Sudan		0.7	0.9	0.7	0.5	0.7	2.4
	Tanzania		0.6	0.6	0.4	0.6	1.2	1.7
	Uganda			0.4	0.3	0.3	0.7	0.8
	Studied countries			4.0	3.9	4.3	6.4	9.4
	Other countries				0.3	0.2	0.2	0.2
	All countries				4.2	4.5	6.6	9.6
SOUTHERN AFRICA	Madagascar	0.3	0.4	0.4	0.4	0.5	0.8	1.1
	Mozambique			0.3	0.2	0.3	0.5	1.2
	South Africa	6.0	13.1	22.2	22.2	27.4	33.4	40.3
	Zambia		1.2	1.1	1.0	1.0	1.1	0.8
	Zimbabwe		1.0	1.4	1.6	2.0
	Studied countries			25.5	25.4	31.2
	Other countries		0.2	0.3	0.3	0.4	0.5	0.5
	All countries			25.8	25.7	31.6
SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA	Studied countries			50.1	42.7	53.9
	Other countries				5.6	5.6
	All countries				48.3	59.6
RICA	Egypt		3.4	5.9	8.1	10.7	12.5	16.2
	Morocco		2.1	3.0	4.3	6.4	9.7	12.9

Previously, it had seemed that our problem was not money, just how to spend it. There was a massive public investment programme. Constructions boomed, universal primary education was free across the country, civil servants got wage increases, the currency appreciated and the profitability of non-oil exports dwindled. Meanwhile, the boom in public expenditure was characterised by scandals like the 'cement armada'. That was the start of the boo-hoo kwarapshun narrative.

The economic effects of such policies were inefficient. As we have seen, growth levels lagged. That was, in part, due to the commitment of the government to an import-substitution policy that the country lacked the resources, both monetary and human, to achieve.

The proliferation of White Elephant projects such as two uncompetitive State-owned steel mills constructed for $11 billion was also unhelpful. Government policies were indicative of an approach to policy-making focused more on expenditure than revenue.

The problems from our crude oil bounty, which rose from 57.5% of exports in 1970 to 93.3% in 1977, was soon self-evident when oil prices dropped in the 1980s. Oil export revenues dropped from $26 billion in 1980 to $10 billion in 1982. By early 1986, it had plummeted still further to $6 billion.

The immediate reaction of the government when the price of oil dropped, and with it the external windfall, was to resort to deficits financed by borrowing and money creation.

In 1984, when a long-overdue austerity effort was embarked on, its approach was haphazard. Rather than allowing the currency to depreciate, an artificial peg was retained. When the government proved unable to meet those financing obligations, the prices of imports soared, and the competitiveness of non-oil sectors suffered.

That was when the first attempt at macroeconomic reform was embarked on by the Nigerian government.

The Structural Adjustment Programme (SAP) era can be dated from 1986-1992. It marked a policy shift from the previous macroeconomic management methods of 'soft control'. Before the SAP, the government saw it as its duty to intervene directly in the pricing system and tried to manage the development of the country through fixed-term national plans of five years.

Reforms to the system of foreign exchange purchase were the kernel of the SAP. Between September 1986 and December 1992, the currency achieved a managed depreciation of 80 per cent.

The regulatory environment was rationalised, and curbs to foreign investment lifted. Corporate taxes were reduced, in a bid to kickstart the moribund private sector. The agricultural boards were abolished and the sales of agricultural products deregulated. 58 small State-owned enterprises (SOEs) were also privatised on the Nigerian Stock Exchange.

The jump in oil prices due to the crisis leading up to the Gulf War, its aftermath and the political crises that swept the country in the wake of the truncation of the Third Republic in 1993 ended reforms.

Regardless, the positive effects of the SAP programme were obvious and immediate.

The output of the agricultural sector returned to positive growth of 7.5% per annum from 1986-1996. The value of new securities issued on the capital market rose from N399.9 million in 1988 to N10 billion in 1997. That provided an alternate means of finance for the public and private sector. Whereas real GDP had declined by 2-3 per cent per annum between 1980 and 1986, it grew by 5 per cent per annum between 1986 and 1992. Look for the tiny bump in the first chart.

The dilatory nature of political reforms in the SAP era meant that true structural change in the Nigerian economy had to wait. The definitive end of the SAP era was the decision of the Abacha regime to peg the exchange rate at N22 to $1 in 1994. That marked a reversal from the earlier commitment to market-driven pricing.

The Gulf-War surplus papered over the cracks of a creaking, leaking ship. Over the long-term, from 1960 until 2000, real income per capita grew at only 0.43 per cent yearly. The transition to democracy and the Obasanjo years transformed the fortunes of the country. Real per capita income leapt, bounding along between 2001 and 2006 at 4.2 per cent annually.

The improved macroeconomic performance was the result of reforms aimed at the country's structural economic deficiencies and poor oil revenue management. The sum-total result of the reform process was that in 2006 the country had an inflation rate of ten per cent. External debt dropped from $35.9 billion in 2004 to $5 billion in 2006 on the back of successful debt renegotiations. Foreign direct investments leapt from $1.18 billion in 2001 to $4.4 billion in 2006.

Reforms in the Obasanjo years included the adoption of a fiscal rule. It sought to limit runaway government expenditure and save excess earnings. There was also improved monetary policy implementation by the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN). Trade liberalisation and SOE privatisation continued. Bank consolidation was mandated to further develop the country's capital markets. Corruption in public expenditure was tackled through the introduction of the Due Process mechanism in public procurement and commitment to the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI).

The positive efforts of the second reform era at broad macroeconomic reforms were helped by oil prices skyrocketing to their highest ever prices in Nigerian history. The boom time of the 2000s coincided with the value of trade also heading to stratospheric levels too. Ironically, that boom was driven by the increased demand for raw materials from China and India, countries which, like Nigeria, had been economic laggards.

Reform movements in both eras were primarily a Federal Government concern. Most of the constituent states of the Federation either played the role of spectators or were active spoilers. For example, the governors spearheaded the campaign for immediate use of funds from the Excess Crude Account.

The most important marker of the failed reform movement is continued reliance on crude oil. Then as now, it remains the dominant aspect of Nigeria’s exports.

Despite crude-oil production now being a smaller part of the overall Gross Domestic Production mix, it remains the key economic engine. According to the International Monetary Fund, in their 2020 Selected Issues paper on Nigeria, at least 30% of the economy is indirectly reliant on the oil sector. It also accounts for between 23% to 41% of revenue for listed companies. That leads to outsized economic pain when its exports crater.

The last four years have been a testament to such pain. Oil production in recent years has been challenged by cheap frackers in the United States of America (USA), the government's commitments to curbs on production instituted by the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) and the global pandemic that reduced economic activity globally and thus the demand for crude oil. On May 20, 2021, various news outlets reported that the country was struggling to find buyers for crude oil reports due to economic lockdowns in India, its largest export partner.

But of course, rather than devalue and get more bang for our buck, our leaders decided to make speculators rich.

Hopefully I have clarified certain things.

First, the historical underdevelopment of Nigeria's non-oil economy is a fact that must be emphasised. There was no prosperity before oil. The future after oil is for Nigerian policy-makers and Nigerians to decide. But again, there was no prosperity before oil. Anybody saying otherwise is gaslighting.

Second, macroeconomic reforms, although painful, can be effective. At present, Nigeria seems stuck in what Chinese policymakers, examining their country at the height of their 'opening and reform' programme, called a policy Bermuda triangle. Prices were set at non-market terms, which then required subsidies. Those subsidies were met by diverting revenues from investment to consumption. That revenue then disappeared without any notable economic improvement.

The current response to the economic malaise of the past four years has been to rely on deficits and increased debt. Multiple currency devaluations since the early 2000s and the expansion of the country's economy means that total debt stock is higher in 2021 than ever before. In its 2018 Annual Report, the Debt Management Office estimated that debt servicing would take up 61.1% of government revenue in 2020.

Table 6.2: Total FGN's Debt Sustainability in Percent (2018-2038)

Details	Threshold	2018	2019	2020	2021	2022	2023	2028	2038
Total Public Debt Stock
In percent of GDP	55	19.9	21.3	22.2	23.9	23.8	25.0	31.5	50.2
In Percent of Revenue		341.3	364.8	490.0	505.4	561.9	604.9	996.4	2,488.3
Total Public Debt Service
In Percent of Revenue	Nil	28.6	37.4	61.1	70.9	82.8	96.7	228.0	692.4

Source: 2018 DSA Report
Note: Under the Fiscal Sustainability analysis, the WB/IMF threshold is applicable only to the Total Public Debt-to-GDP ratio, which is set at 55 percent

The hope seems to be to await a rebound in prices. That will undoubtedly arrive.

Vaccination is ongoing and proving effective across the rich world.

Closed economies will reopen and with them the demand for crude oil.

However, in the long-term, the global economy seems set to transition away from fossil fuels. Although that does not mean that demand for crude oil exports will drop to zero in the foreseeable future, that means that lower prices will be the norm.

We have been fortunate to have been independent through an unprecedented period of high oil prices. Like the stereotypical third generation child of rich families, fortune has subsidised many bad decisions.

Public expenditure has been driven more by political redistribution concerns than viable investment.

Budgets have been seen as avenues for expenditure rather than revenue generation.

The supporting infrastructure––roads and electricity, in particular––for a thriving domestic economy have been ignored. Efforts at reform have, most of the time, been characterised by their timidity.

The times that we are in call for different choices and bolder reforms, at all levels of government. After all, fortune, they say, favours the bold.

TL;DR: Nigerians, we have had. Had real bad😭

1.3K views
37 upvotes
10 comments

Under the British, the barrier to mass political participation created the sort of lean, no-frills government that every poor country needs, political yarn about 'prestige' be damned. In the British era, you were either a lawyer, doctor, teacher or trader. Politics for the lucky enfranchised few was a part-time duty.

Independence brought professional politicians and patronage. When the British left, their jobs had to be redistributed. National 'developmental' Corporations and the ever-expanding civil service had to be filled. Now that the British Army and the Royal fleets no longer defended Nigerian sovereignty, an army worthy of the Giant of Africa had to be built. The question of job allocations helped entrench the notion of ethnic rivalries, of 'our jobs' being taken.

Since its acquisition by the British a century before independence, what used to be known as the Colony of Lagos was always a class apart from the rest of Nigeria. As a colony, its citizens were not just enfranchised subjects of the British crown, but as a whole, it was the island where the technological trappings of modernity first made landfall.

Adjacent to it was the Western region, long since the wealthiest part of Nigeria. Especially since its absorption of Lagos following the movement of the capital north to Abuja.

The Northern region was the region with the most developed local governance systems, a twinned legacy of the Sokoto Caliphate and their adeptness at the British system of Indirect Rule. That left the East.

On one hand, the East was many times the second-richest region in the country. But its primary source of wealth, palm kernel derivates, were the main bubble crop out of all of Nigeria's agricultural exports.

In the two decades leading to independence, it was the primary beneficiary of the increased demand due to the World Wars and the Japanese arc of destruction through more efficient producers in the East Indies. The North with a more diversified agricultural cash crop base and exportable Tin reserves seemed poised to surpass it.

The discovery of crude oil in commercial quantities was the game-changer.

This was before the oil crises. But even then everyone was already betting that petroleum would quickly become Nigeria's leading export by the 1970s. It would provide welcome economic relief. There was a general decline in global prices for export commodities. None were hit harder than those exported by the eastern region. The palm oil prices paid by the marketing board dropped by 13 pounds from 53 in 1950/51 to 40 in 1962/63. Palm kernels, 33 pounds in 1954/55, were 25 in 62/63.

It was amidst that general economic crisis of falling revenue, constrained consumer prices from a troubled economy and tax revolts that the mutineers struck, the political class failed and the military seized power with bloody results to follow.

When the Republic of Biafra went to war against the military-ruled Republic of Nigeria, her defeat was inevitable. She had a lower population. Her primary exports had been suffering. Her government revenues had been outstripped by those of the two regions. As a net-exporter of labour to the rest of Nigeria, her fleeing people had left valuable assets in Nigeria. Thus, they were poorer as Biafrans than they had been as Nigerians. A fact given visual definition by the images of kwashiorkor-ridden children that form the popular imagery of the war. Finally, and perhaps most importantly, Biafra lacked access to Lagos. Not just Nigeria's political capital, but her financial capital and thus the source of the financing, all 300 million Nigerian pounds of it, that fuelled the victorious Federal effort.

It was those financial constraints that drove the Biafran government to expropriate Federal assets, including Nigeria's oil wells. Hence, when the Federal troops reconquered those territories, they became war booty and the central government took advantage.

The previous fiscal arrangement in the First Republic had seen regions of origins split 50% of rents and royalties. An arrangement obviously beneficial to the Northern region which had, at the time, the country's most commercially valuable minerals. The victorious government now retained 90%.

Although the regions have never been the financial equals of the central government, ignorant claims to the contrary. The retention of the First Republic's political and fiscal structure would have meant that with the rise of petroleum income that the Eastern region would have run the central government much closer in terms of revenue generation. The losing war effort shut that door out permanently.

Table 1: SUMMARY OF FEDERAL AND REGIONAL/STATE FINANCES

1964/65 - 1970/71[1]

(In millions of £N)

	1964/65	1965/66	1966/67[2]	1967/68[2]	1968/69[2]	1969/70[2]	1970/71 Budget Estimates
Current revenues	174.5	186.0	186.6	157.9	166.6	229.4	310.7
Federal revenues	84.9	91.0	88.2	80.6	89.8	119.1	155.1
Collected by Federal government	145.6	156.5	156.8	142.0	142.8	210.1	270.4
Transferred to Regions/States	60.7	65.6	68.6	61.4	53.0	91.0	115.3
Regional/State revenues	89.6	95.0	98.4	77.3	76.8	110.3	155.6
Collected by Federal government	60.7	65.6	68.6	61.4	53.0	91.0	115.3
Collected directly	28.9	29.4	29.8	15.9	23.8	19.3	40.3

The creation of new states may have given more power brokers access to revenues to spend on themselves, but it meant that the new states were splitting ever smaller pieces of the pie than had their regional predecessors. A fact which conspired to make control of the central government seem more important and entrench ethnic rivalries.

Finally, while the West and North had gone to war as equal partners, by war's end that had shifted, in part due to economic struggles in the western region culminating in a tax revolt during the war. Most importantly, the war, and victory, had militarized governance in Nigeria and given the putschists, all the important ones Northern, who held real power a renewed confidence in their abilities.

The problem is that those putschists were often outside the aristocratic mainstream of the Northern establishment. They chose to purchase political acceptance/primacy in their region by lavishing Federal resources on what ultimately became White Elephant projects, to the detriment of all involved.

Meanwhile, nobody ever bothered to answer the economic question. Nigeria's political formation had been ensconced firmly within four commodities bubbles. What will happen the day the bubble bursts, never reflates and the music stops. After all, for all the delusions of grandeur among its elites, Nigeria remains a very, very, very poor country.

Related Links

Which part of Nigeria is the best to live?

How is life in Nigeria?

How did you make it in Nigeria?

How is Nigeria good for work?

Is Nigeria a terrible place to live?

What are the best things about living in Nigeria?

Why are the number of confirmed cases rising in Nigeria despite the lockdown for the covid-19 pandemic?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Answered April 10, 2020
Majority of Nigerians in the cities under lockdown is finding it difficult to stay at home.

Some say Nigerians have high energy that can not be contained in one place, they need to go about their hustle.

I think it's stark stupidity to disobey government orders, most especially when a deadly virus like COVID-19 is in play— a virus that has the capability to infect hundreds of thousands within a short time.

As at last night, there are 288 reported cases. There has being a significant growth of at least 14 cases a day. We all know this is how it got started in other countries before it became overblown.

Yet, some Nigerians, mostly Lagosians don't care as they boycott the securities and went about there businesses— exercising in the empty streets in groups, selling by the roadside and food markets are still crowded in most parts.

How would the virus not spread?

Why are Nigerians not afraid?

We do, but the average Nigerian doesn't trust the government.

Two days back, the office of the accountant general caught fire.

Just 9 hours before that incident, he was asked by the National assembly to show proof of how he shared two trillion Naira amongst Nigerians.

Whatever that was planned either worked or did not as the minster said no record was destroyed after Nigerians went on social media, telling them beforehand that there is no way records could be destroyed as things should be better stored these days.

I have not received any money from the government at this time, no member of my family has, none of my friends did either and not even neighbours, so how was 2 trillion Naira shared amongst Nigerians at this time?

To be honest, a few Nigerians said they received 10,000 Naira, around 26 dollars, but that is only a scratch of the whole pile.

You see, even in a pandemic, those in charge are being or wanting to be dishonest.

By the way, how do you expect people to stay at home when the only way they could eat is by daily hassle and hustle? Staying at home in hunger means one thing, dead by starvation.

The government knows what to do and Nigerians are watching.

But hunger is not an excuse in the face of death. There are dozens of other countries poorer than the poorest Nigerians keeping social distance and staying at home. You simply have no excuse!

My only message to Nigerians is to endure for just a few days or weeks as we fight and win this battle.

The virus is easier to spread here in our country than anywhere else.

And when it does, the poor and middle class would be the ones to suffer.

Either we suffer for a few weeks or watch our country ravaged by a coronavirus.

worldometer

COVID-19 CORONAVIRUS PANDEMIC

Last updated: April 10, 2020, 08:06 GMT

Graphs - Countries - Death Rate - Incubation - Age - Symptoms - News

Coronavirus Cases:

1,607,912

view by country

Deaths:

95,813

Recovered:

357,180

Don't say God forbid, it's reality. We have seen it happen in a dozen other countries.

I do my part, you do your part.

Stay home, stay safe or die together.

What is something good that is happening in Nigeria right now?

Nigerians are back to agriculture

Victor Dirikebamor Story teller Updated March 24, 2020

For the first time in Nigerian history politicians, civil servants, business men are returning to agriculture in large quantities. This was an abomination years back. Politicians as a rule never go to farm, civilians only do when they are retired, poor and sentenced by hardship to dwell and die in their communities. Now it's a hot cake. Nigerians now eat what they produce. Every disadvantage has an advantage, bad government has taught Nigerians that the government can't keep them from Hunger and Starvation, only agriculture will. Farming is our pride.

Gov. Dickson(left) at work in his farm

Self Employment

Many Nigerian youths have now realized that the certificate they obtained from the university is an ordinary paper since they may never use it due to lack of jobs. Graduates now settle for self employment by looking for problems to solve, and so far many has become successful and creating employment for thousands of Nigerians.

Jason Njoku founder, IROKOtv

Linda Ikeji, founder of the blog with the same name.

Uche Pedro, founder of Bella Naija

Online Shopping

Nigerians are shopping online. A development that could have killed my grandfather the second time if he were alive. Nigerians are naturally curious people, we don't trust easily and we never buy things we haven't seen with our korokoro eye, but that is changing very fast due to credible online shopping malls like; Jumia, Konga, Jiji, Olx ... just sell it, Nigerians will buy. Some go as far as buying from Amazon, eBay and Alibaba, despite the stress in payment and of delivery.

I personally buy my shoes, electronics, even this smartphone used in typing this post was bought from Jumia.

Innovations in the Music sector

Nigerian music is booming with flying colours, far beyond the shoes of Nigeria, down to the rest of Africa and the world. I think this is one area Nigerians have scored an A, as almost all Africans have come across or spoken to appreciate our music. Some of our Modern day music doesn't teach lessons like Nigerian music in the 90s, modern day music is all about beat and dance and we're loving it.... After all; there is nothing new under the face of the earth, knowledge is not a mans problem, using the knowledge appropriately is, and I believe we have being equipped enough to do something tangible already.

Davido and Chris brown... you blow my mind*

Wizkid and Beyonce

Innovations in the Educational sector

Back then wealthy Nigerians, I mean politicians usually sent their children abroad for quality education, now there are institutions equipped to serve this very purpose. The type of education you get abroad can be gotten in some private and a few government universities within Nigeria. Wetin you dey find for Sokoto dey for your shokoto.

It is said that just Okemesi, a town in Ekiti State, is responsible for giving the country more than 30 professors. You can only imagine how many more came from other cities across the state.

According to a ranking from the National Universities Commission, University of Ibadan has the highest number of professors with 230 professors, as well as 62 associated professors/readers, making it a total of 292 professors.

Federal University of Agriculture Abeokuta

Come writers and critics
Who prophesize with your pen

And keep your eyes wide
The chance won't come again
And don't speak too soon
For the wheel's still in spin
And there's no tellin' who
That it's namin'
For the loser now
Will be later to win
For the times they are a-changin'

Excerpts from Bob Dylan song (The Times They are A-Changin)

God bless the Federal Republic of Nigeria

Image source: the internet.

Related Links

What is something good that is happening in Namibia right now?

What is the most horrible thing happening in Nigeria right now?

What is something good that is happening in Senegal right now?

What is your best "only in Nigeria" moment?

Do you believe Nigeria should remain as one country?

Is there any hope for Nigeria?

Nah. Its time is out.

I believe the projection is 2% for this year. Next year will be the start of election campaigning, so I expect nothing better.

In real terms, this eight year stretch will be the worst for economic growth since the Junta era. The next administration will have a very low bar to clear. Although this administration is leaving them quite the Greek Gift.

Related Links

Will Nigerian economy get better soon?

What type of economy is Nigeria practicing?

What do Nigerians think of Nigerians who marry a foreigner?

How effective is the Nigerian government?

Nigeria is the country that has the capacity to make every African proud but the situation is not what we see. What is wrong with the Nigerian people and the government?

What are the disadvantages of all the sectors in the Nigerian economy?

What is Nigeria best known for?

Victor Dirikebamor

StorytellerUpdated January 29, 2020

I won't mention; oil, black population, religion, corruption, and the issues in the other room. Some other people have or will talk about them.

My view of Nigeria and Nigerians is very different.

I'm well vast on the daily atrocities that never fails to occur every now and then, but I feel there is a part about Nigeria we don't talk about very much and that is the idea of not giving up, our unequalled individual strength to endure dire hardship.

Some will say, "we know that already, besides it's not just Nigerians who endure the very hardship they brought upon themselves, we see that in our country too."

Well, you're right, a large part of the troubles plaguing Nigeria is self-induced. But how much do you really know about the tough challenges Nigerians face and still have the courage to be Human?

Like some say; it doesn't take long to turn a human into an animal. But we're not yet animals, some of us are even far more human than you.

But I tell you, if you were to face the challenges being faced by Nigerians on a daily basis you might do far worse, the scam would be the least.

Countries are talking about settling for only renewable energy, driving electric cars, and building space ships, but there are Nigerians who haven't seen the electricity they're paying for in their houses with their gas for weeks, or months now. No, not just in rural areas but in major cities.

The richest and most powerful people in Nigeria are politicians and big businessmen who have the authorities as puppets. You can't stand up to them without buying your coffin and signing your death warrant.

About ninety per cent of Nigerian graduates don't have a job. Not only that, they have no place to even drop their CV. Isn't that scary?

It doesn't matter how breathtaking your ideas or invention might be, no one will give you a loan to actualise that dream of yours. You must be very lucky and fatted to do otherwise.

Millions of adults in Nigeria are just jobless despite their skills. They simply have nothing meaningful to do to bring meat to the table, yet they're pressured to continue to provide for the family.

You may never make it in Nigeria, but if you can make it in Nigeria you can make it anywhere.

I don't play the blame game, it's the fault of no foreigner for the situation we find ourselves other than Nigerians.

But on a good day, I consider many Nigerians saints, we are some times forced by the government, by nature, by our families to do the unthinkable to survive, no matter how bad it may be, but the majority of us don't, we try to stay sane still.

When you have a course to deal with quite a good number of Nigerians you'll find some of the sweetest beings in the world.

It's only in Nigeria people could face all the challenges life has to offer simultaneously and still behave normally like every human being.

I'm no saint, there are things I've done that I'm less proud of but you might do worse if you were me, if you were to see and live what I've survived. And even now, you're still not more Catholic than I am.

This black, African strength is keeping me and other Nigerians going, with the hope that it might not be today but things are definitely going to be better.

This is what the common Nigerian should be known for:

That at this point, we have enough reasons to do anything to survive but the majority of us only do that which is good because we're good, happy and hopeful people who have it in us to separate that which is bad from the good.

Why would a typical Nigerian lady not appreciate flowers?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated 1 year ago

Flowers have never being a big part of our culture.

Showing love with pieces of flowers (grass) could be seen as unseriousness or even 'fake love' and 'fake' is easily spotted here.

Although, a few ladies now appreciate flowers but that is an imported lifestyle just like kissing.

There are distinctive ways Nigerians show love that only a few countries in the world could relate with us.

Beautiful roses that end up scruffy after a few days isn't enough to prove to the Nigerian woman you 'love her', it goes way deep.

A man has to prove himself highly to her and that of her family to buy her big-heart.

Involve the Nigerian lady in all you do, make her the centre of your life. And not just that, accept her family as your family from the start of the relationship.

Men, unfortunately, think more of their wives family than their own family, mostly in my tribe.

A woman's parents become his, automatically. Their health and wealth lie on the man's shoulders, and sometimes, her sibling's tuition fees if any becomes his obligation.

Not just that, some are coming to stay with their sister in her man's house after marriage.

Nigerian men don't necessarily complain about this lifestyle, most of us benefited greatly from this circle.

It won't be strange to see a man spend his last Naira on his in-laws while his parents wait for the next paycheck.

It has not crossed my mind to buy any lady flowers in Nigeria, but my woman should be cocksure that I will be present to tackle her and her family's challenges as a sign of my true love for her.

Responsibility is the flower Nigerian men present to their women and the ladies appreciate it more.

The Nigerian man is taught early, his life is but a sacrifice for his family, and some might complain but many do it with joy.

But things are fast changing as we now have a teaming number of educated, self-sufficient ladies holding up their end and that of their family even in marriage.

Read also: What is Nigeria's symbol of love? | Are Nigerians purely practical with love THE AFRICAN EAGLE

How do I apply for NIW US Visa without going through an agent, as a Nigerian, living in Nigeria seeing that we are excluded from Diversity Visa?

Kathryn Berck

Retired USconsular officer,INTJ,PBK,writer,dog & horse lover May 22

A national interest waiver is not a visa. It can make an appropriate visa available to a person who can and already does already hold a master's degree or exhibits exceptional ability" in a certain field.

The main requirement is three-part:

What you do must be of "substantial intrinsic merit"

The benefits of your work must be "national in scope" (as opposed to being purely local)

You must establish that your past record of achievement demonstrates that you can benefit the national interest to a "substantially greater degree than would an available U.S. worker having the same minimum qualifications."

As for how to apply, see the process here:

Related Links

How do I prepare for a US visa interview in Nigeria?

Why is it hard to get an American visa as a Nigerian?

Why do legitimate applicants in Nigeria get refused US visa by the CO during interviews? I've been refused three times with the same reason and this is totally unfair.

How do I get a US visa from Nigeria to have my baby in America?

How do I get a US visa from Nigeria?

If a Nigerian gets a K-1 or K-3 visa to enter and get married in the USA, how will he or she get a green card since Nigeria has been banned for

How do mainstream archaeologists explain the water erosion on sphinx?

Matt Riggsby MA Archaeology, Boston University Updated August 29, 2020

Nobody's disputing the presence of water-based weathering on and around the Sphinx. However, there are disagreements about interpretation. There's a famous but fringe interpretation that the weathering indicates that the Sphinx is much older than widely believed, but that interpretation has been widely criticized. One issue is the proposed amount of rainfall in the region. The amount of rainfall in historical times (and therefore the amount of weathering during that time) is believed underestimated in the older date interpretation. Moreover, the part of the Sphinx enclosure which shows the most weathering, and therefore suggests the greatest age, is in a location which water would be naturally channeled into, essentially greatly exaggerating the apparent age.

And there's some potential ambiguity. The Sphinx is a lightly shaped yardang, a rock outcropping shaped by wind-based erosion. Yardangs are famous for taking on suggestive shapes, like seeing pictures in the clouds. It's possible that the rock the Sphinx is made out of started out looking Sphinx-like and might have been lightly shaped during the Neolithic, providing some surfaces which show significant weathering, and then worked more intensively during the Bronze Age to become the Sphinx we know today.

Related Links

What would be the significance if the Sphinx water erosion hypothesis was correct?

Why is Egypt not allowing archeologists to examine the voids under the Sphinx and in the Great Pyramid, and have closed off access to many other sites?

Why do archaeologists refuse the theory that suggests that the Sphinx was Anubis?

How do you feel about Dr Robert schoch's theory on the Sphinx water erosion hypothesis and the possibility of a much older Egyptian civilization?

What are some things Nigerians consider rude or offensive?

Victor Dirikebamor

StorytellerMay 23, 2020

Women seem to keep their pregnancies a secret. Don't go romancing bellies or asking about due dates. Allow the owner to talk about it while you make just little contributions. We are highlyreligious people and no one knows your intentions for asking.
We raise kids as a community. When you see children fighting or doing something wrong, you caution them, and sometimes even beat the madness out of them. Parents would blame the elderly around for not disciplining the child appropriately. Although this culture is fast disappearing.

Rejecting gifts is frown at. "You must be a horrible person to reject gifts or is it because you can't do the same for others?"

You don't go around asking people even relatives about their salaries. It's either people are underpaid or overpaid in this country and only a few want you to know that secret. The top earners worry you might ask them for help and the low earners want to keep their poverty a secret and still derive some respect.

We usually don't discuss our difficulties, neither our achievements with strangers. We have to trust you first.

Not believing in God is disrespectful, you are either a Christian, Muslim or others— which could bring you instant dislike anyway. Saying "there is no God" is the fastest way to be hated and probably get killed if you're in the midst of religious fanatics.

If you are offered a meal while visiting, endeavour to finish your food or eat as much as you can, it's rude to say no, it's worse when you eat just a little, "is he insisting my wife doesn't know how to cook"?

It's disrespectful to sit when the elderly is standing close by, make a room or offer yours if it's the only seat available, let them be the one to reject.

We don't ask "how fa" or "how you dey" which is our version of "how are you" while walking away without caring about the reply. We ask you "how are you" because we care and we want to help if need be.

Married women are sacred unless you're a close relation. There are ways you can't hold nor look at them. In some parts of the North, you might not be allowed to lustfully stare at girls.

In some places, people don't like hearing "thank you" and "please" all the time. If you need something just ask, saying "thanks" and "please" make things seem huge and if a person considers a little favour huge it shows they can't do the same for others.

These are just my experiences and observations. And as with Nigeria, there is always more.

What do you think of Nigeria banning Twitter?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian June 10

Very nearly ambivalent. I dislike Twitter, the hyper-Americanisation it encourages and Mr Dorsey allowing pressures from domestic American politics to affect how he runs a global platform. As for the government's policies, at this point, I honestly can't think of any I like. Especially with the electricity supply getting worse!
That said, I lean towards the ban ultimately being correct.

The President should have shown thicker skin. But, we all know that there is a who born your papa, burn everything down because say I no get home training side to Nigerian society. I dislike it. But FFK is also a fellow citizen. That is something Mr Dorsey failed to understand before descending from up high. Nigerian Twitter is more Nigerian than 'Twitter'. What Nigerians say to each other is for Nigerians to resolve/address. It ultimately was none of his business.

The decision rubs me off the wrong way. And I will admit: Your platform; Your rules= Our Country; Our Rules makes a tonne of sense to me. Regardless of the reasoning behind the President's decision, even broken clocks toll rightly twice.

On the other hand, the counterarguments in favour of Twitter strikes me as confusing a platform for the internet. Not even Google is the internet. Everything you think Twitter does, there is an app that does it better. Ultimately, even Google is replaceable.

Once again, the President's aides have failed him. They should have opened an official Nairaland page or wheeled the Vice President on air to invite Nigerians to compete to develop an alternative with a cash prize up for grabs (they would puncture the angry tirades). Insert suitable paens to the innovative spirit of Nigerians etc.

After all, once upon a time, in the old, old days of West Life and Celine Dion, radio and TV stations used to play Western music every time and local music was suffering until the government tilted the space in their favour by mandating that local songs be played the majority of the time. No doubt if people had Twitter back then, they would have whined about the 'Free Market' and 'Tyranny', yet who can argue with the results today? Recall, OBJ was a tyrant too.

Personally, since matters have come to a head and the issue has been nationalised, we can't back down. Either Twitter localises or, it accepts its marginalisation. They have Ghana. What do they need us for?

OBJ nationalised British Petroleum. Common ban that the addicts are using VPNs to circumvent and pesin no fit hear word. In fact, until Jack Dorsey simps for us as hard as Mark Zuckerberg did for China, the damn site can stay shuttered.

Stay strong, Mr President. This isn't even your worst decision.

How can I distinguish various tribes in Africa (e.g. Igbo, Yoruba or Hausa in Nigeria)?

Victor Dirikebamor

StorytellerUpdated May 20, 2020

My tribe, known as Ijaw, is the fourth largest ethnic group in Nigeria, and it has its unique characteristics just like every other tribe in Nigeria.

My forefathers came to wisdom early to realize that without water, life can't be sustained. They quickly occupied most of the riverine parts of Nigeria.

This explains why I started swimming not in fancy pools but in a river with high water current at age four.

Learning to swim is mandatory for survival and when kids go missing the first place you check is by the river.

These are some of the ways we have fun but cultural traditions are dying very quickly.

They also realized early how cold it would be living around coastal areas and married as many women as possible.

My grandfather had six wives before he passed at age 80. That man had a different set of breasts every night. One can't say if that was a blessing or a curse, and some men had more, even to this day.

This also explains why I have many uncles and aunts with numerous cousins.

It's quite possible to take a girl home from a party and not realise you're related until, perhaps, after the third visit. We are that many.

Occasionally, you get phone calls from a stranger asking you for school fees only to realise you're family. Funny thing is, you probably don't even know their parents, but most times you'll have the same last name.

My people find it difficult to say words like 'fish'; they would rather call it 'fis' because we don't have 'S' and 'H' in our alphabet.

Our women dance by shaking their backside.

We have a high sense of dressing. Men and women dress elegantly like kings and queens.

My people like class and live just one day at a time. Beautiful cars and houses and women are ways in which one flaunts wealth.

They hate to manage, they hate to suffer and are ready to pay for anything to make life easier for them.

The Ijaws were major fishers and love to eat fish. They are also the tribe who loves foreigners more from my experience and observations.

A large portion of the oil wealth in Nigeria comes from this tribe. It was the first place crude oil was ever discovered in the country.

These are just characteristics from one tribe in Nigeria, and we have around 250 other tribes just like this one with varied populations and ideologies.

So, to answer your question:

How can I distinguish various tribes in Africa (e.g. Igbo, Yoruba or Hausa in Nigeria)?

We distinguish ourselves by our food, dress, language, the accent when we speak English, how and the number we marry and our ideologies about life.

You can't know these things if you don't travel.

I can tell you a lot about other Nigerian tribes because I've been to those places.

Image source: Google images.

Why is there a high level of social unrest among the Nigerian youths in recent times?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian June 30

I once wrote an answer here about how literally, and I mean that literally, nothing about Nigeria changes. Once in a while, I get an angry notification denouncing me because it is all so obvious how everything is worse now.
It is not.

The moment a frog realises he is destined for a Parisian dinner plate is not the moment the pot was set to boil.

For our purposes here, let us think of social unrest as acts of dissent against State authority.

There are essentially five different types that I can think of; one defunct and four long-running and extant.

First off, there are no more peasant revolts in Nigeria. There was a point between the introduction of direct taxes in 1918 and the Agbekoya uprisings during the civil war when there was one across southern Nigeria pretty much every other year.

Either they still happen, and I don’t hear about it, or the decline of farming as an occupation of choice for the young has reduced their combustibility. Alternatively, maybe farmers have mellowed because they are now net recipients of subsidies instead of being squeezed for national income.

Second, in the Muslim majority parts of Northern Nigeria, periodically, there emerges a charismatic preacher who leads their students in clashes with State authority.

The most successful example of the type was Sheikh Usman dan Fodio. The practice both preceded him and continues after him. The increased prominence of non-institutional forms of Christianity across Nigeria may well expand the map for those types of rebellions.

Third, are vigilante type groups mobilised both for intra-ethnic and inter-ethnic conflict. The latter attract more attention because there is more money in milking it.

Fourth are the urban youth. These deserve specific categorisation even though urban youth are interspersed among the other categories. This is because, on occasion, the university-educated spearhead what are usually branded as 'national protests'. In reality, outside the tier-one cities, their impact is muted.

Finally, there is crime. It ranges from the petty to the transnational with the occasionally macabre thrown in.

Social amnesia is a big problem in Nigeria. Therefore, regardless of what you've been told, read or think, nothing now is exceptional. To illustrate, consider the career of the current president.

The collapse of the First Republic, in which he played a key role in its concluding stages, came amid a university-led protest against British basing rights in Nigeria, intra-ethnic conflict among the Yoruba and, post-coup, a pogrom of the Igbo across Northern Nigeria.

The violence in both coups, by the way, was carried out by soldiers in their early 30s to late 20s.

As mentioned, during the civil war, western farmers rose in revolt. It is easy to assume that crude oil revenue, foreign aid or lending from abroad paid for the war. That is wrong. Domestic lending and the agricultural exports of the North and West paid for all military expenses. Measures to extract revenue from Western farmers for the war effort likely led to the already mentioned Agbekoya crisis.

The current president, as he never tires of reminding everyone, was a war veteran. After the war, he achieved a national reputation by spearheading the decimation of one of the north's periodic religious uprisings. This time by a sect called the Maitasine.

He soon became Head of State but was swiftly toppled in a palace coup by a former bosom pal. That pal then had to deal with his own series of social unrest. Students had one of their 'national' movements protesting the dashing of their many privileges on the altar of structurally adjusted austerity. Christians led a bunch of marches against the country joining the Organisation of Islamic Countries.

We are still proud members, by the way, so we're technically already 'Islamised'. Just in case some jobber feels the need to revive the issue as a whole, new, unprecedented situation.

Hausa Christians and Muslims spent most of that time creating a solid border in blood. Before his breakthrough in 2015, southern Kaduna used to be the impenetrable barrier for the current president's appeal to the Nigerian electorate.

He had spent his post-toppling time, mostly, as a political prisoner, though not of 'conscience'. I have no idea how that is determined by the powers that be.

He was sprung from the dungeons and placed at the head of a Petroleum Trust Fund by another wartime buddy, Nigeria's last dictator and a seemingly unending source of fees for Swiss bankers.

That dictator had to deal with massive unrest due to the usual: poverty and the political shenanigans of his predecessor. That was also when the first seeds of the now-familiar Niger-Delta insurgency were sown. That too has deeper, older roots.

Anyways, after the last dictator died, very happily, the junta stage of Nigerian history was given permanent closure, in part, in the wake of youth-led, internationally-feted, pro-democracy protests. Many of the leaders of that movement are in government now.

Okay, the Fourth Republic. Our guy became one of the main opposition figures. the Niger Delta militants were being pounded into submission by the army. That failed. Vigilante groups sprung up all over. A massive kidnapping wave began. Northern religious riots, again. Eastern secessionism. Boko Haram, of course.

Our guy's supporters also spent weeks after the 2011 elections upending the North because he cried after losing. I'm likely misremembering, but I'm Nigerian too.

Then in 2012, another 'national' protest. This time over the move by the foreigner coordinating minister, but we're all so proud of her now, to abolish fuel subsidies.

The, ohh so, original 'Occupy Nigeria' protests was the moment that sealed the political coalition that brought our guy to power in 2015. Since then, he has had to deal with all of the above and more faux-American protests.

That is all.

Nigeria has always had social unrest. The prominence of the youth is not some 'youth awakening'. It is just demographics. Even if everybody older than my 90s cohort were magically erased, we'd still have tens of millions of 18 to 21-year-olds to drive 'youth unrest'. Our political culture and social amnesia lend themselves to that. As the faux-American Nigerian song goes: 'This is Nigeria'. But for some weird reason, people keep insisting on it being otherwise.

A kid born on the publication date of that book would be in their early 20s today. House still standing, just irritated. No need to be overly dramatic.

P.S Business Week, we no longer say 'resilient'. It died with the Nigerians are too happy to be suicide bombers trope. I f I didn't distinctly remember the panic wave over kids being kidnapped and killed for 'get rich quick' rituals at the time, I'd almost be tempted to flip on my rose-tinted glasses.

Nigerians must knowingly and consciously refuse to subject themselves to illegality.

By Ahmed Zidan and Evelyn Okakwu/CPJ staff on July 28, 2021

More than a month after Nigeria's federal government suspended access to Twitter, CPJ's review of local accounts found at least some run by media outlets have gone silent.

Twitter was inaccessible when CPJ tried to visit it from Nigeria in mid-July. However, after the ban, Nigerian outlet The Guardian reported a huge spike in searches for virtual private network services, which help people access blocked websites. On June 6, two days after the government's announcement, VPN provider ExpressVPN told a local website the service had seen an increase of over 250% in visits from Nigeria.

Other news outlets – along with celebrities, the main opposition party, at least one state governor, and pastors – have continued to post.

Yet as CPJ has noted with concern, Nigerian officials have explicitly warned that journalists and news outlets may face prosecution if they continue to tweet, although none have been charged to date.

"Some news outlets may fear losing their government-issued licenses for continuing to use Twitter," Gbénga Ṣẹ̀san, the executive director of the Lagos-based digital rights organization Paradigm Initiative, told CPJ in a recent phone interview. "It's like Catch-22…If the outlets are not tweeting, no one is reading them, and if they do tweet, they would be worried."

CPJ interviewed two journalists about the impact of the ban on their work and on the climate for press freedom in Nigeria. QueenEsther Iroanusi is an Abuja-based senior political reporter for the privately owned Premium Times news website. David Hundeyin, an award-winning journalist focused on West and Central Africa, freelances for local news website NewswireNGR. The interviews, which were conducted via calls and digital messages, have been edited for length and clarity.

CPJ approached Lai Mohammed, Nigeria's minister of information and culture, by messaging app for comment on the ban and the journalists' remarks. His spokesperson Segun Adeyemi responded. "[A] ban is permanent. A suspension is temporary," he said. "This federal government will not do anything to stifle the press."

When CPJ requested comment from Twitter via email, a spokesperson for the company pointed to a tweet stating the company's willingness to meet with the Nigerian government to "address mutual concerns."

QueenEsther Iroanusi (Photo: QueenEsther Iroanusi)

QueenEsther Iroanusi:

The reason I continue to tweet is because the ban is one of the many attempts of the Nigerian government to gag the media, no matter how you want to see it. As an advocate for free press and freedom of speech, I can't just succumb to that – especially when we do not have a defined law backing the government's decision to just ban Twitter. The ban is meant to limit the way the people [share] their views.

For all I know, the government decided to impose this draconian order because its ego was pricked. I am saying this because [it happened] after the president's tweet was deleted for violating Twitter rules. Even though government officials have denied [it], I just feel that this is too much to call it a coincidence. [Editor's note: The government's ban on Twitter came days after it deleted a tweet from the account of Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari, according to news reports.]

This Tweet is no longer available because it violated the Twitter Rules. Learn more

A screenshot of the deleted tweet from the account of Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari. (Twitter)

The minister of information accused Jack [Dorsey, the CEO of Twitter] of helping Nigerians during the #EndSARS protests last year. This is a demonstration that went global. And it was basically Nigerians asking for something better: An end to police brutality, total police reform. Twitter was really one [of the things] that helped that demonstration go viral. You [would] hear people saying things like, "If you are not [present] physically, make sure you are tweeting."

[Editor's note: Segun Adeyemi, the government spokesperson, told CPJ that Twitter was not banned because Buhari's tweet was deleted, but said that "Twitter played an ignominious role during the EndSARS [protests]."]

Twitter has also been an amazing source of story ideas. The app helps you connect with millions of Nigerians who have always wanted to report something. When there is an issue, especially involving security agents, you will see people [reacting on Twitter]. You see reports like, "Police react after viral tweet."

Many great fact checks have been done by journalists [on Twitter], especially with regards to misinformation. Among other things, journalists have had to act as watchdogs for misinformation that has been shared on the app.

In Nigeria, Twitter has been the voice of the people, and the Nigerian media has been amplifying that voice. Nigerian youth use the app to share their opinions, call out the government, and hold them accountable.

Press freedom is the bedrock of a democracy, so once it is gone, you don't really have much left. They call us the Fourth Estate of the realm for a reason.

Since there is no defined law to back this ban, the government is trying to amend an act. There were previous bills, like the social media bill and the hate speech bill, which were intended to clamp down on the media. It is funny that this government that is trying now to regulate the media actually used it to come into power.

This is not just a threat to democracy. It affects everybody, even those who are agitating for this will one day be affected by it.

David Hundeyin (Photo: David Hundeyin)

David Hundeyin:

I kept tweeting because the ban is illegal and unconstitutional. Without an act of parliament, a law cannot be promulgated in Nigeria. Merely sending out a press release from the Attorney General or the Minister of Information does not establish a law. Nigerians must learn to push back against state-sanctioned illegalities or else they will continue and get worse.

Twitter is a very important distribution channel for journalism and news content. NewswireNGR for example, which I have a working relationship with, sees up to 60 percent of [social media traffic] coming from Twitter alone. In addition to distribution, it is also an extremely important resource for discovering, aggregating and communicating with story sources.

The government simply hates the absolute freedom of information that exists on Twitter. Unlike Facebook, Twitter allows for much wider and far-reaching social connections alongside a real-time stream-of-consciousness functionality which basically makes it the world's most powerful information sharing resource by a very wide margin. The Nigerian government of Muhammadu Buhari fancies Juche, [a] North Korean-style [ideological concept which underpins] Kim Jong-Un's level of control over information and public opinion. [Editor's note: Segun Adeyemi did not respond to CPJ's request to comment on this comparison or Hundeyin's other remarks about the government.]

It definitely worries me as a journalist because if successful, my entire existential basis as a professional will disappear overnight. Journalism is only useful where there is a marketplace for information.

I am one of four journalists and five civil society [organizations] who filed a lawsuit against the government demanding that it should be restrained from prosecuting Nigerians for using Twitter, and from any further such actions against any social media platforms in Nigeria. The main purpose of this suit is to establish some pushback against the [federal government's] aggressive campaign of civil rights violations and open illegalities. The suit is supposed to establish open and unapologetic opposition to the Buhari regime's anti-freedom antics.

What I would like to see next is an extensive public and judicial rebellion against this illegality. Every Nigerian who can access Twitter, perhaps using a VPN, should do so very pointedly. The judiciary and the national assembly also need to step in to ensure that the [federal government's] runaway campaign to recreate Nigeria in the image of North Korea is stopped dead in its tracks.

Nigerians must knowingly and consciously refuse to subject themselves to illegality.

Ahmed Zidan reported from New York; Evelyn Okakwu from Abuja. CPJ Senior Africa Researcher Jonathan Rozen contributed reporting from New York.

Are Nigerians smart?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller October 23, 2019
Originally Answered: Why are Nigerians so smart?

My friend Jo, never fails to tell me stories his dad used to tell him.

As a Kid, his Dad usually go for big-game hunting.

He most times drag this big animals to the community to slaughter, share to his family and sell the excess to have some money to pay for things they couldn't produce themselves.

The fun of hunting is not in the eating but the hunt.

In the afternoon his father usually goes deep into the woods to find animal tracks, where his only companion is the wind causing havoc on the tall, thick trees as they make several scary sounds.

He occasionally meet with dangerous reptiles, blurry but frightful images and the birds saying some dreadful things.

Then in the night, he would go back to the animal tracks he had marked in the day and began to trace that animal(s) all night as they usually take the same route at night.

In a community that believes so much in superstitions; every sound a bird makes is interpreted automatically to something dreadful. Ghosts are said to be seen frequently. Dead relatives are said to appear often. A thick forest the most dreadful of reptiles roam about.

It is never a play ground for the faint in heart neither a slow thinker.

It's a dreadful place to be alone in the night with a rickety Hunter gun that has to be loaded after every round.

This was how he fed his family, this job paid the bills. He couldn't even have a day off, and there was no break.

This is a man who could have been an engineer, a writer, doctor if the tables where turned but a Hunter who must be in this dreadful woods day and night, only coming home to have some food and a little rest.

As they say around here, a Hunter does not tell all he sees.

Others in fishing, farming, government or commerce are no better, they all have their frightening and tasking tales to tell.

Perhaps the movie producer who has it in mind to shoot the best movie but has to make do with makeshift gadgets, the doctor who has to improvise to do his job, the taxi driver who has to subconsciously memories the total number of potholes on his usual route in other to avoid mishap has been forced by hardship to use his brains or die.

Nigerians are not peculiar neither are we created with better brains, we are just used to handling simple tasks in the most difficult of ways and when we find ourselves in the right environment with the best of technology to do a job we can't help but to do great exploit.

The things you consider very difficult are simple to us because we have dealt with way more tougher things.

Many believe life is a test but I'm beginning to think the examiner lives somewhere close to Nigeria, because the test is just getting way more difficult.

The US navy seals are said to be the best due to their level of training and they could survive in any terrain.

A typical Nigerian is trained by nature and the unsupportive government just the same way to survive despite the odds.

We go the extra mile to accomplish things individually.

We push forward instead of giving up because sometimes there is just no option than to move ahead and we often come out stronger and better.

Nigeria is not a place for the weak neither a slow thinker. One has to improvise or die!

What are some annoying or disrespectful things tourists do in Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor StorytellerUpdated May 22, 2020

This is about most foreigners, I've experienced it several times and it's totally not their fault.
It was on a Friday when the banks are usually crowded.

You know, it's funny, everyone is complaining about money but our banks are always filled with people, sometimes one is tempted to ask if people go there to withdraw their sins.

I was in the queue for several minutes, perhaps an hour, glancing at the latest celebrity gossip on Linda Ikeji to kill time, I turned back and saw this Westerner behind me.

"Hello buddy," he said.

He gave me a friendly punch on the chest, he's aged but likes to play a lot and, I like the fact that he could quickly mix up with locals almost instantly.

"You look strong, very strong," the thick British accent drips from his tongue like Erin-Ijesha waterfall.

"I'm behaving myself today. The last time they insulted me."

Oh, you were, why was that?

"Yes, I bypassed the queue the last time but it wasn't my fault at all, it was the bankers who took me there, they asked me to leave the line, then the crowd shamed me for it. So I'm behaving myself today."

You see?

It's fellow Nigerians, our ignoramus bankers whom we trust with our money, thinking they are smart enough to understand rights and equality are the same people who will put a citizen down to impress a stranger.

We were lucky it's a bank, there was a convoy waiting for him outside, if those guys were to come in to see fellow Nigerians shaming their boss, or made to follow the line, it is quite possible that we would do some frog jump or possibly lie on the floor for some time.

White privilege is common even in my own country, we are second class citizens even in our own land.

Many foreigners feel they are better than us and wants to do things or get things done in their own way, but I don't blame them, I blame the system, I blame us, Nigerians.

BTW: This photo has nothing to do with the story, Buhari's expression is just so funny here.

The danger of challenging disorderly people, no matter the colour of their skin won't stop me from doing so next time.

I love being punished for doing the right thing.

You could also read: How safe is Nigeria for a visitor — How exactly do Nigerians treat Foreigners THE AFRICAN EAGLE

Why had those that stole artifacts from Nigeria, never been called thieves?

Boris Ezomo Africa is hot but I love it here.Updated Sun Originally Answered: Why have those that stole artifacts from Nigeria never called thieves?

Well they are thieves.
The British museum is the den of thieves and if they return the loot, it would be empty. In fact, there is nothing British about in that Museum.

However the British government keeps claiming that they are storing the artifacts for humanity. As they will get lost in their original countries. This I find hilarious. The Egyptians been demanding their artifacts back especially Rosetta Stone Egypt has the world best Egyptology museums in the world.

The Greeks are been treated like some backward banana republic when they demand their artifacts back. Especially the Parthenon marble also called Elgin Marbles

So what are the chances of us getting ours back to Nigeria?

Can we talk about the most famous of the Nigerian artifacts? Benin ivory mask a mask of Queen Idia.

Created in the early 16th Century. So our ancestors had no problems safeguarding it for centuries. Yet once stolen, they are safeguarding it for us because we are no longer able to?

The British stole it during the 1897 invasion of Benin, along with thousands of others.

The Binis recorded their history in art form, there was no written language. So the British stole our historical records and not only just artworks. Benin Bronzes for example

Is the historical record of the first arrival of the Portuguese to the Bini Kingdom. Also been “protected" in the British museum.

So the Fastac mask as it became known, now lives in the “British” museum. It became most famous when it became the symbol of FESTAC 77 . Nigerian government asked for it back. British refused. Nigeria asked for it to be loaned back for the festival. A bill of millions were presented by the British.

So we the Edos made a new identical one for the festival.

One day I got a phone call while in the UK. It seems that someone is gathering people from historical Edo families in the UK for an class action against Sotheby's auctioneers.

Sotheby’s to sell rare Benin ivory mask in London

It turns out that some private owner has their hands on another mask of Queen Idia. The private owners turned out to be the family of the same commander that attacked Benin City in 1897. So not only did he steal in the name of the British Empire, but stole from the British too by keeping some for himself.

We got lawyers and Sotheby's pulled the artifact from its listing. We contacted the Oba's (Kings) palace in Benin City, but they were slow to make an official demand for its return.

So the mask again vanished from public view. Bet their children will try selling it in a few decades again. Our children will be waiting. And this time we will be ready.

Saying that. Other descendants of soldiers that looted Benin are coming forward by themselves and doing the right thing. Returning what their grandfathers stole.

This British pensioner flew to Nigeria to return what his grandfather took. He presented it back to the Bini People with an apology. What a star!!

Unfortunately the UK does not have those morals, and will continue holding on to the loot claiming they are just looking after it for us.

To answer your question.

Everyone even the British people call them stolen, so indirectly calling those that did it thieves.

But that will not get your stuff back. They are holding onto it with both hands and feet. Even protecting the private thieves as not to set a precedence that may force them to empty their Museum.

Many yes ago, I was on a guided tour of the British museum. When someone asked were the Russian and German halls were. The guide said they did not have sufficient artifacts from those areas to make a hall for them. Some one from the back said. “Just say you could not conquer them, and steal their stuff"

Edit: for those claiming that the British are saving artifacts.

Please read up on the great walls of Benin.

What do we know about the walls of Benin?

Boris Ezomo Answered Sat

The Benin walls were actually a network of walls and moats in an interwoven mosaic Centred around the capital called Benin City today. It then encircled communities and settlement of the whole kingdom. A total length of 16000 Km in an area of 6500 sq km. It encased 500 settlements.

And how the British started their destruction after their 1897 invasion. All that they stole is nothing compared to what they destroyed.

Why do Nigerian people act so stuck up?

Osazua Iruedo Manager (2017–present) Updated July 28, 2019

When you say stuck up, you mean Nigerians are snobbish and act or think that they are better than others.

Now this makes me wonder how many Nigerians you've met or associated yourself with that made you get to that conclusion. Nigerians are not snobbish or full of themselves. They are infact the opposite.

Though Nigerians tend to stand out wherever they find themselves, they have a way of getting themselves noticed.They have this strong believe in themselves which makes it seem like they are so full of themselves.

But When you’re from a country where being strong and hopeful is all you’re taught,knowing how not to crack even when it's tough, knowing life can get better even when it's rough, when life experiences has taught you to be strong, then you feel like there is nothing you can't overcome, which may make you look like you're being “stuck up".

Get to know a lot more people from Nigeria, then you will understand who they really are.

What is your opinion in regards to the established para-military groups in Nigeria, Amotekun (backed by the South-West Governors) and ESN (formed by seditionist Nnamdi Kanu). How do you think it would affect the future stability of Nigeria?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Lives in Enugu, Nigeria February 5

Everybody and their grandmother knows that ethnic militias will not end well, but Nigerian political culture encourages the attitude that multiple wrongs make right, eventually.

The problem of insecurity in Nigeria is theoretically straightforward. We have a lot of criminals. However, because we do not solve crimes or at least because that perception is widespread, we have reverted to resolution by blood guilt. It is a problem across all of Nigeria.

Elders of Allah/Onungwa community in Anambra West Local Government Area of Anambra State have cried out to the state government, police, Department of State Services (DSS), the army and other security agencies to intervene in the crisis involving their community and its neighbour, Odekpe.

Both communities have been engaged in an age-long battle over a piece of land, which has resulted in loss of lives and property. The latest fight involving them took a more dangerous dimension recently as warlords invaded Allah/Onungwa and wreaked havoc.

A petition endorsed by Chief Paul Onubi and Chief Sunday Egwuemi, which was addressed to the state Commissioner of Police, John Abang, the elders lamented that they have fled their community to a neighbouring town in Kogi State where they are currently taking refuge.

In the complaint letter, the residents begged for the deployment of security personnel to their place so that their fleeing brethren could return home.

According to the petition, "Allah/Onugwa people are brutally murdered on daily basis. We live at the mercy of God without government's intervention."

They, therefore, asked the authorities to intervene as "we urgently need the presence of security and armed law enforcement agencies."

Land war: Elders cry out to Anambra govt, police, DSS – The Sun Nigeria
You can find variants of stories like that across the country. But it is too complicated and it runs the risk that Nigerians might actually realise that they have a common problem so instead it is being framed as a Fulani invasion from which our new ethnic defenders will defend us from.

Ironically, the Fulani are an example of why this is a bad idea. They are one of Nigeria's trans-national ethnic groups. In Mali, they were being massacred. Mali attack: More than 130 Fulani villagers killed So they organised militias for reprisals. When they also started getting attacked by rustlers and irate Hausa farmers (yes, the 'Hausa-Fulani' thing is a meme Nigeria clashes between Fulani herdsmen and vigilantes kill 72), they issued an SOS to their ethnic militias who got to Nigeria and went their merry looting, raping, kidnapping, cattle-rustling ways. It is obvious that their elders no longer control the boys and now they are essentially mistrusted everywhere across the region. The road to hell is paved with good intentions.

Nigerians claim we want good things. But there is a different between claims and actual action. The problems with groups like Amotekun and 'ESN' is that they are deliberately exclusionary and that they will be poorly funded. If outsiders start to feel targeted by them, they will retreat to their enclaves and treat their outsiders the same. Soon an eye for eye will have made us all blind. Second, we all already feel the impact of the police not being well paid and trained. Nobody knows who is funding ESN. When a state like Osun owes its Amotekun branch salaries as is its wont, where do you think those boys will make up the shortfall from? 20 states owe pensions, salaries – BudgIT Murder is wrong regardless of the identity of its perpetrator. Amotekun operatives have already started killing civilians. Oyo Amotekun operative kills another man as tally rises to 11 in three weeks The ESN will be no different.

If we want to be really secure. There is no substitute for the slow, unforgiving work of protecting innocence until irrefutable guilt has been established. Training people who can investigate, paying them well for their troubles and counter-surveilling them for subversion. Security short-cuts are no different from jungle justice: satisfying in the short-term, but damaging over time.

What does Nigeria do better than other countries?

Osazua Iruedo Manager (2017–present) October 25, 2019

God may have rested on the seventh day after so much work of creating the heavens and the earth, the snakes, the lions, the beast and all that were created. I guess that was the last day he enjoyed his rest because Nigerians call upon him 24/7, praying and pumping fist and begging him to pour down fire and brimstones on enemies that won't let us make headway.

Being optimistic.

The evidence of our optimistic spirit lies everywhere. In the way we hustle, the way we talk. We don't say negative things to ourselves at all. Instead of saying I am sick, we say I am strong. Why would I tell anyone I am poor when I should say I am rich. When a Nigerian tells you ''I will become the greatest by force'' please kindly understand he is not bragging. He is speaking his dreams into existence. There is no room for despair when we see ourselves, we are good at encouraging one another and saying it's well.

I was asking a vendor I usually patronise if he still has a particular item I always love to buy, he said it has finished. Then I said since your own has finished let me buy from another. He raised his hands to heaven and said his own will not finish in Jesus name. A typical Nigerian will reject every negative statement in any conversation.

For all it's political and economic troubles, Nigerians still remain optimistic and happy.

Opportunities doesn't come knocking on our doors, we chase it knowing God is always on our side.

Our optimistic spirit has created a lot of motivational speakers that encourages us to always aspire to acquire so that what we admire and desire will not expire but give way for us to inspire.

Or

Don't give up. You need to aspire, acquire,admire,perspire, require and desire so that you can retire in peace. Lol.

I love our optimistic spirit. I love my Nigeria.

What is Nigeria lacking?

Victor Dirikebamor StorytellerUpdated April 27, 2020

When you ask the average Nigerian what he thinks his country is lacking, they might say good governance, infrastructure, jobs, etc.
These are things that are sufficient in many other countries, even in countries poorer than Nigeria, but they are able to get these things right.

Why is it difficult for Nigerians to get anything done in unison?

Just yesterday, a man died of coronavirus at Ajah, Lagos. He was reported of being sick, before NCDC arrived to take him to the hospital, it was already too late and they asked to take the body to be buried appropriately, but the family and area boys refused that they want to bury their own dead.

While the NCDC guys were on PPE the family members and neighbours were not protected, dragging a man who had died of COVID.

A few days back, a patient ran away from a COVID-19 treatment centre in Abuja, he's still not found.

Just last week, the chief of staff to the president died of COVID and politicians went to bury him, a large crowd stood by as they dug a shallow grave to lay him to rest according to his religion.

Some persons had their nose masks on with hand gloves, some didn't, and even those with the hand gloves and masks used it wrongly--touching themselves after touching the body.

Which country gathers to bury a person killed by COVID?

Just yesterday, a bus supposedly said to be carrying goods to Delta state had human beings from Lagos on the inside, trying to outsmart the lockdown.

A few weeks back, despite the lockdown, birthday parties were celebrated, one actress and her husband were indicted and many Nigerians painted the court bad for that.

There are cars still moving about at Lagos Island, despite the lockdown. Suddenly, every high ranking government official is on official duty.

The streets of Lagos are filled with people.

And the last time I checked our cases now grow by an average of 100 a day.

It's not just about COVID, this is exactly how we do everything in this country.

What do we really lack?

Your answer is as good as mine.

Why is Nigeria importing petrol from other countries? Is it that our leaders cannot build refineries?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian December 9, 2020

You answered your question. Yes, it is because our leaders cannot build refineries. Even more importantly, they should not.

As of 2018, Nigeria spent $9.95bn importing refined petroleum. ~74% of imports were from the Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg and the United Kingdom. Those are all countries much richer than Nigeria. All of them rely on private sector operations for refined petroleum products, not the government.

That is because government follow different metrics than businesses whose sole focus is on their profitability. A government, for example, would choose a refinery site to maintain 'regional balance' whereas a company would not. Our country's richest man, for example, is not building his refinery in his home state. Compare that to all the Federal projects that have been lavished on Daura, Katsina. For Buhari's sake, so many projects go to Daura And it is not just a Buhari thing either.

The proper way to see the issue is that there is a $10bn market in refined petroleum here, how do we get companies to invest in that. The idea that 'our leaders should…' is throwing away money we do not have.

P.S We should also start getting used to the idea that if we do not pay Mr Dangote the price he will charge for his refined petrol, he will take it elsewhere. But that is also why Nigerians should resist when the 'Made in Nigeria' propaganda machine gins up for us to give him special advantages.

I have low expectations, though.

It's not just about COVID, this is exactly how we do everything in this country.

What do we really lack? Your answer is as good as mine.

What are the solutions to Nigeria's broken police system?

Boris Ezomo Nigerian and proud of it.November 12, 2020

Change the basic policeman. Some do not even speak English, and even more are totally illiterate. I have on several occasions been stopped and my car documents checked by a policeman that could not read them. Kept calling over his partners to check them. I mean, how stupid do you have to be to not be able to learn what to check in the documents they ask for a hundred times a day.

There is no police on earth that is not corrupt. They all are, what is different is their price. The Nigerian Police extorts pennies from traders and drivers. That is why it is so rampant and obvious.

So what do we do to change the basic cop? Remove everyone that is illiterate. They got the job illegally in the first place. Everyone else is given a fixed time to achieve the minimal educational level. This should be a bachelors degree. Eventually it would be specific criminology or allied course. With the rise in qualifications, A major pay rise should be instituted. When the risk of lossing a well paid job over pennies becomes too great a risk to take. They will not do it.

The Police should not be policing themselves. An independent tribunal should exist to investigate all complaints against the police. Their recommendations go directly to the state prosecution services for legal action.

There has to be total separation of the Police from the prosecution services. Police investigates and handles it over. But today we see the police directly trying to influence the court case.

An independent internal affairs unit that answers only to the IG office should be created. Whose job is to weed out dirty cops Proper training and equipping.

What will happen if he shoots that thing in public?

We have police that runs from bandits, shouting “How much are they paying me to die?”

We have police armed with assault rifles amongst civilians. The never ending stop of stray bullets killing innocent has to stop. Side arms and subs should be the standard weapon of the Police office. Assault rifles should be on special weapons teams. Why is a police man armed with a dagger?

Finally, tax payers should not be paying for just about everyone bodyguard services. If you feel you need one, hire a private firm.

Ah yes, stop giving monkeys the contract to design their uniforms.

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

Osazua Iruedo Manager (2017–present)Updated January 26, 2019

Nigerians are ambitious and unique. They are smart and highly intelligent. You have to be smart on the same level for you to be able to understand them. I read Mattio Blue's answer to this question and I realise his beef towards Nigerians is real.

He said, They like money to much. Oga, I personally like money and I work hard for it. Don't you like money? Show me anyone that hates money.

They exploit any situation they get. You see last week, a company needed someone to supply them some stuffs for their 10 years anniversary. I was there at the right time. I didn't even know where and how to supply such items. But I didn't let the opportunity go. I told them I will supply within a week. I went to work immediately to arrange and put everything together. Is this a crime? As I type this I am about to collect my cheque. I did a perfect job and they love it.

They make women pregnant and run. Well, I won't support that. But to date a Nigerian guy you need to be sure you are smart and intelligent enough to be by his side. You need to know what to believe and what not to. You need to be sure he loves you before you open your legs. And that does not mean all Nigerian men are like that. Majority of them love children so they won't abandon you when you need them the most.

They are Loud in supermarket. Lol. That's what we call "gangan aso". "money speaking".And again, we are loud. It's in us. How does that affect anyone. When you see a loud Nigerian and you don't want to hear him shout close your ears.

They are aggressive, ritualist and he added not all though. And he added other stuffs.

Leave Nigerians alone. We never told anyone we are perfect. We have issues, in fact a lot of it. We know we have issues. So reminding us won't put food on your table. We hope to find a solution to our problems one day.

It's not our fault that we're smart. Hate us all you like.

And again, you do not find what you do not seek. Wetin we gain if we no get money. Wetin we gain if we no buy Benz.

Why is Nigeria importing petrol from other countries? Is it that our leaders cannot build refineries?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian December 9, 2020

You answered your question. Yes, it is because our leaders cannot build refineries. Even more importantly, they should not.

As of 2018, Nigeria spent $9.95bn importing refined petroleum. ~74% of imports were from the Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg and the United Kingdom. Those are all countries much richer than Nigeria. All of them rely on private sector operations for refined petroleum products, not the government.

That is because government follow different metrics than businesses whose sole focus is on their profitability. A government, for example, would choose a refinery site to maintain 'regional balance' whereas a company would not. Our country's richest man, for example, is not building his refinery in his home state. Compare that to all the Federal projects that have been lavished on Daura, Katsina. For Buhari's sake, so many projects go to Daura And it is not just a Buhari thing either.

The proper way to see the issue is that there is a $10bn market in refined petroleum here, how do we get companies to invest in that. The idea that 'our leaders should…' is throwing away money we do not have.

P.S We should also start getting used to the idea that if we do not pay Mr Dangote the price he will charge for his refined petrol, he will take it elsewhere. But that is also why Nigerians should resist when the 'Made in Nigeria' propaganda machine gins up for us to give him special advantages.

I have low expectations, though.

Why do most people believe that Ghana is more better than Nigeria?

Afam Orji Lives in Nigeria September 3, 2018 Originally Answered: Is Ghana better than Nigeria?

There's no word i hate more than "Best" and "Better". That's because those are relative terms which depends on what exactly we're talking about. There are areas where Ghana is better than Nigeria and vice-versa.

Ghana has a higher standard of living and is generally cleaner and has lower levels of crime and unrest. it also has relatively better educational institutions.

Nigeria on the other hand is more economically viable which means that more money can be made in Nigeria and businesses do better in terms of volume. Nigeria also is better for enterainment. So, really, it depends on what you are referring to.

Related Links

How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?

Is Nigeria more beautiful and developed than Ghana?

Why is Nigeria mentally closer to Ghana than to Cameroon with whom we share a border, a language, and lots of history?

How can I emmigrate from Nigeria to Ghana, am tired of living in Nigeria?

Which is more developed, Lagos or Ghana?

Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?

Where's the fun place to be in Nigeria?

Osazua Iruedo Manager (2017–present) November 25, 2018

There are lots of fun places to visit in Nigeria. If you want to have a special bonding time with family or friends, or you're new in Nigeria, and you are looking to have some fun, I will recommend these beautiful places to you.

Obudu cattle ranch. Calabar

Tinapa business resort ,cross river

Idanre hills, Ondo state

Lekki leisure lake, lagos

Millennium park, Abuja

Funtopia water park,lekki lagos

Nike art gallery

Afi mountain wildlife sanctuary, cross river

Tarkwa bay, Lagos

Lekki conservative center, Lagos

Erin ijesha water fall, Osun state.

AFrika shrine

Kujuru castle kaduna

Agodi garden, ibadan

Why do so many scams originate in places like Nigeria?

Yinka Ayinla Managing Partner (2016–present) Updated June 18, 2020

I was gonna give a Nigerian defensive answer and demand why Nigeria is singled out in the question. Then I was gonna give the defensive black answer and blame economic factors. But I have read many introspective logical answers on Quora so it's best I reply in kind.
I have lived most my life in Nigeria, though briefly I have stayed in UK,France and Japan. As a Nigerian living in Nigeria my opinion is simply social acceptance.

Please note I said social acceptance not legal acceptance. Scams are illegal in Nigeria and law enforcement agents consistently go after scammers but beyond that it is generally acceptable which is quite unfortunate.

Scammers don't necessarily hide their occupation here in Nigeria. They are openly welcomed in night clubs and bars. They are sought after by many women due to the image of excess free money. Bloggers follow their exploits. Infact successful scammers could be considered local celebrities in some regions.

This is quite different from other countries I have lived where scammers have to be extremely cautious and hidden. Being known as a scammer generally means you are ostracized from society. People generally avoid all contact and relations with you.

This social acceptance in Nigeria leads to many youths been inspired by scammers thus further increasing the proliferation of scamming.

On a side note it is quite a similar situation with corruption as well. Also note however that not all scams are necessarily from Nigeria. Ghanians, and other non Nigerian groups also scam under the guise of being Nigerian. As the question says "places like Nigeria" it's possible the same social acceptance occurs in those places as well or the scammers readily identify with places where it occurs.

Edit: 1500 upvotes! Thanks so much to everyone. Also a lot of upvotes are from Nigerians showing lots of Nigerians are not happy with scamming/scammers.

What is something only Nigerian people would do?

Jeffrey Maigemu Born and raised as a Nigerian man July 10

Find humour/a bright side in any situation. When I say any, I mean it. Use the expressions "haba", "ah", "ehn", "ehn ehn", and many others. (Pidgin English: you can learn this language and other afrikan languages here African Languages Live here

Speak their mind openly, most times in a very confrontational way if they are upset

Use "next-tomorrow" to mean the day after tomorrow

Always clean their shoes before they step out the house

Always greet you and ask how you're doing. Doesn't matter if that's the 1000th time they've seen you that day

Use the term 419 to mean "scam"

Place an enormous value on family

Just a few off the top of my Nigerian head

What are the various causes of problems in Nigeria?

Jeffrey Maigemu

Born and raised as a Nigerian man July 10

I summarise the causes of the problems in Nigeria to one; Nigeria is not a nation. What does this mean?

Looking at the history of Nigeria, it is evident that what eventually became Nigeria was not a dream borne out of the desire of the people to live together. Nigeria was purely created to serve the colonialists. The amalgamation of the north and south would see them have a larger share of the resources in the land. The creation of Nigeria is really strategic. And till today, the decisions made decades ago still haunt the country.

Why is nationhood important? Because nationhood is what keeps a people working together towards the same goal regardless of their differences. The people understand that religious, ethnic, and other differences might exist, but the good and progress of the nation comes first. But, for a people to be a nation, they have to agree. Can two walk together unless they agree?

We have a situation in Nigeria where religion, ethnicity and other distinctions are used as tools to advance the pilfering of resources by the rulers, which I refer to as oppressors. This is evident in the constitution, our elections, our military, police, our National Assembly, and other facets of our existence. It is "All man for himself". The people do not feel the impact of the government in their lives. This has caused a disconnect between the oppressed and the oppressor(the oppressor won't have it any other way). The goal of getting into power is for enrichment rather than for the good of the people.

Nigerians need to, as a matter of urgency, decide if they want to live together, and under what terms. When this is done, a system that takes the well-being of the people into account must be set up. We need to ask ourselves, "what are the underlying principles of this nation? What do we stand for? What are our values?"

This, I believe, is the first step towards fixing our problems and addressing the root cause of all the problems we face as a people. One Nigeria is possible, only if we try.

What is something only Nigerian people would do?

Jeffrey Maigemu Born and raised as a Nigerian man July 10

Find humour/a bright side in any situation. When I say any, I mean it.
Use the expressions "haba", "ah", "ehn", "ehn ehn", and many others. (Pidgin English: you can learn this language and other afrikan languages here African Languages Live here

Speak their mind openly, most times in a very confrontational way if they are upset

Use "next-tomorrow" to mean the day after tomorrow

Always clean their shoes before they step out the house

Always greet you and ask how you're doing. Doesn't matter if that's the 1000th time they've seen you that day

Use the term 419 to mean "scam"

Place an enormous value on family

Just a few off the top of my Nigerian head

Why was West Africa the most Balkanized région of Africa during colonization?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam I am the West African History Guy May 22

Two things.
One. Are we looking at the same map?

Second,
West Africa was not ‘balkanised’ by the Europeans. You cannot 'balkanise' what was never united. The Europeans inherited the imperial structures of the empires they inherited. In some places, they extended it.

That said, I understand you. At least, I think I do.

Due to the long relationship between Western Africa and Western Europe, it drew the most European interest. Consequently, there was a greater concentration of trade forts there than anywhere else in Africa. Those trade forts were often the starting point for greater territorial claims in the 19th-century (and beyond). The splotches of Spanish and Portuguese territories in Western Africa are legacies of the Atlantic trade.

That legacy made the effort to prove ‘effective occupation’ in West Africa more of a scramble than in the rest of Africa.

However, the British were willing to barter territory in western Africa for French support in the east, where their greater interest lay. (After the World Wars, if you ran a line down the middle of the continent, it’d essentially be British east vs French west)

The French, meanwhile, ruled their equatorial territories as a single unit. The actual ‘Balkanisation' came with independence when the first-generation leaders of the richer provinces of French Africa choose the independence of their countries rather than continuing to subsidise poorer members of the union. That left countries like Senegal and the Central African Republic in limbo.

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

Boris Guiffot
A Cameroonian dude who likes technology and politics Updated July 10, 2019

I am Cameroonian and Nigeria is the country with whom we share the longest border. That has a huge impact on the way we see the country. There is a large Nigerian community in Cameroon. Many Cameroonians pursue their high education in Nigeria.

Nigerians are considered very smart but some of them are famous to use that smartness to do unglamorous activities. They contribute to the stereotypes.

We often compete against each other at football (both our male & female team)

We like to tease you guys about football but we don't want to mess up with you when it comes to political matters : Yes, I am talking about Bakassi! Because of that disputed peninsula, we went to the brink of war in 1981. We are so relieved that it has been resolved diplomatically. Thanks guys for avoiding a useless war with a neighbor that has 1/10 of your population. We appreciate it!

We relate well because our anglophone regions speak a similar Pidgin English. Even the French we speak on the street is full of Pidgin words.

Our northern regions are very similar to yours. Most of them belong to the same Fulfulde/Hausa ethnic group. They were even part of the same empire before they were separated by colonial borders:

We both complain about the extreme corruption of governments. We sometimes share the podium as the most corrupt countries on the continent. Does this have anything to do with the fact that we are both oil producers?

Thank you very much for saving us from Hollywood and Telenovelas. We really love your fashion, music and movies. Our own industry grew exponentially after we decided to follow suit.

For some reasons, many of us think that Nigeria is very developed except for those who have actually set foot in the country. Nollywood certainly has something to do with it.

Our rivalry is usually with Ivory Coast and we don't interfere with you guys trying to downplay Ghana. Nonetheless, we wonder why you guys make so much noise about jollof rice. We might not be loud about it but ours is the best:

I am from West Cameroon and we are often mistaken for Igbos so I guess we might be distant cousins

We wonder why such a powerful neighbour couldn't contain Boko Haram after so many years

I don't know if there is a country in this world without a Nigerian community

We admire you a lot for your sense of self-worth and self-confidence

Your pastors took all Africa by surprise. They are so famous that it is told that some pastors will go for training in Nigeria before returning to Cameroon

If Nigeria has so much oil, why are they so poor?

Ash Sab Updated July 5, 2019

Nigeria is the top oil and gas producer in Africa. The World Bank states that the oil-rich country is one of the world's fastest developing countries and Africa's biggest economy. The petroleum industry in Nigeria is booming, with an overall increase in oil export; amounting to 98% of the economical wealth of the country.

Yet, extreme poverty is still incredibly rampant. Actually, no… Not just rampant, it's institutional.

Nigeria has approximately 87 million people living in extreme poverty. That's 87 out of the 180 million populating the country.

It's paradoxically inconcievable how wealth and poverty have a stark contrast.

Poor resource and wealth distribution and management, political instability, greed and incompetence, corruption and economic inequalities are the prime source of poverty and famine in Nigeria.

Global Citizen reports that 80% of the energy revenue is only benefiting 1% of the population. This statistic speaks for itself.

Besides oil, Nigeria also has a large market in livestock, food and agricultural production.

Essentially, Nigeria; as a nation has a lot of potential and is clearly developing and growing exponentially according to their economics.

However until there is a political and economical overhaul to monitor and eliminate the disparities, it will always be a country whose people will suffer at the hands of their leaders.

Is it okay to invest in Bitcoin in Nigeria?

Maggie Hansen March 3

Nigeria — the world's second-largest Bitcoin market after the United States — has banned the trading of cryptocurrencies. It's triggered anger among Nigerians who see cryptos as a safe haven in a battered economy.

Cryptocurrencies eliminate the need for banks and other financial intermediaries in managing exchanges of currency and assets.

Despite the technology being decentralized — with no government, company or person controlling it — the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) is cracking down on the trade of cryptocurrencies.

Last Friday, the CBN instructed commercial banks and other financial institutions to close accounts involved in transactions with cryptocurrency exchanges.

Before the ban was introduced, Enogieru Osasenaga invested 100,000 nairas (€216, $263) in Bitcoin, the world's first decentralized digital currency. A week later, its value had doubled.

The CBN also asked banks to identify "persons and entities" operating cryptocurrencies within their systems.

Since July 2020, Nigerian banks have reduced the amount customers can spend abroad using debit cards.

Africa's giant economy faces dollar shortages due to the sharp fall in oil prices, Nigeria's main export.

Local banks now restrict transactions with hard currency — mostly limiting customers to withdraw less than $100.

That's why Osasenaga looked for a way to circumnavigate the restrictions set by financial institutions.

The CBN doesn't clearly state its reasons for the crackdown. Shuaibu Idris, the managing consultant at Time-Line Consult, suspects the CBN had foreseen a potential crisis in the digital currency trade.

He said there were about $4 billion of assets embedded in cryptocurrencies in Nigeria.

"If the owners of these assets reside in China, Singapore, India, US, or Kenya come and take this money, what will happen to the economy of Nigeria? There will be a systemic collapse," Idris told DW.

"Then there's a potential systemic collapse arising from the price sensitivity that is exceptionally high with Bitcoin," he added.

Estimates show that Nigerians have traded nearly $600 million in Bitcoin in the last five years, making it the second-largest Bitcoin market after the United States.

What went wrong to Nigeria today?

Osazua Iruedo Lives in Lagos, Nigeria October 23, 2020

As I type this, I am livid. I feel so down and have lost the will to get out of my bed. For the past two weeks, I participated in the #Endsars movement on line and on the streets. I didn't care about money or business because to me this was more important. It is when I am alive I will make money or run a business.

SARS means special anti robbery squad. They were formed to protect lives but they became the armed robbers. They bully and extort any young fresh looking guy/girl they see and even end up killing the unlucky ones.

We decided to speak out about the killings and police brutality. We asked that SARS should be disbanded totally and police should be reformed. But the government thought giving the unit a new name with the same armed robbers will be the best solution. And we decided to remain on the street till our demands where met. It was a peaceful protest until Nigerian government decided to play games with our lives. As I type this my hands are shaking. I am crying.

We were out there protesting because of police brutality, yet police still came at us. Shot at us and killed a lot of us. When they noticed that won't get us off the street, they sent hoodlums to disrupt the peaceful protest. Yet we kept going back until the lekki massacre happened 2 nights ago. Nigerian soldiers were sent to shoot at protesters and killed and wounded a lot of Nigerian youths. 😭. They were harmless. All they had were their Nigerian flags. When they were shooting at them they kept singing the national anthem. They stained our flag with blood

Before the killings, some guys were seen removing the IPR cameras at the toll gate

Then the street lights and bill board were switched off. The place was in total darkness when they carried out the evil act.

See the crowd at the toll gate before the shooting started.

I am sad because the government decided to lie about the shootings. No one is taking responsibility. It hurts , it's painful and my mental health is affected.

All we asked for is the right to live. We wanted to live and not be killed by the people that are suppose to protect us. We were not asking for good roads, food, light, water etc. We all just wanted to live.

To mske matters worse, our president gave a speech that killed our hope. He literally threatened us. And the question on my mind has been what happens next?

The trauma we have all experienced will be there for a long time. I can't remember the last time I slept properly in the last two weeks without waking up every hour to get updates on those sleeping at the protest ground. Worried sick about them. I don't know how I will get over the past few weeks.

I am tired

I am drained

I am livid

And I need a hug.

Please pray for Nigeria

Why is Nigeria so corrupt?

Olorunfemi Ajibulu A surprised Nigerian.March 18, 2018 Originally Answered: How corrupt is Nigeria?

I agree with most answers already.

There is a monster order called, 'The way'. If you do not know 'the way', you may not be able to climb many ladders of progress in Nigeria.

Bribery is predominant and is the language for getting things done in most sectors of the country. It's gone so bad that innocent citizens have to engage in this just to save the day and avoid trouble.

Take for instance: the numerous Nigerian army checkpoints that impose reception of up to ₦100 on inter-state routes. Or those crazy moments when you're driving jejeli and a Nigerian Police officer stops you and instruct you to pack all because you did not stretch out your hand with ₦50 as others before you did.

I'll focus on the Educational Sector today.

The University and other tertiary institutions have served as the headquarters for welding the act of bribery and corruption into young and innocent citizens.

/ Checkout Mrs Bisi: A restless mother who is so eager to get her low-performing son Dayo into university without him resitting for Jamb the following year. She can't imagine being ridiculed as all her friend's children got admission instantly. At this point, she would do anything to get Dayo admitted regardless of the cost or less importantly course of study.

She makes some enquiries and was linked with Mr Yusuf, a secretary to an Admission Officer. Hehe. Everything was solved with just about 100k. His state of origin was changed to match another state, certificate of origin was forged and Dayo was instructed to carry along this new mini-identity while being successfully admitted into a course he has no idea about.

Dayo struggled to read but soon formed relation with other school staffs like Mr Yusuf throughout his days and he graduated remarkably, satisfied the academic and moral requirements of the awarded certificate. A Built and refined corrupt citizen, plunge-able into the pool of the workforce or the political industry. ***/

Many other students are just leaving the surveillance of their godly families for the first time and hence given a goal to earn flying colours.

Most place effort to succeed from onset but things change when they hear they could get a B for as cheap as ₦4,000.

"Now that you've told the school to stop us from selling you our handouts, I'll henceforth be teaching you only one third of what I do before. You read the rest yourselves" A senior Chemistry lecturer was addressing hundreds of 100 Level students during a class in a Nigerian University. Most readers here can guess the recklessness of the next semester's result of these poor students. Such lecturers craftly open up means to receive monetary payments from students that knows 'the way'.

The last category of students are those that are hardworking but still engage in bribery. For example, they can earn a B by merit but they want straight 'A's. So they perfect their results by cajoling corrupt lecturers to give them the desired grade with money or with their body.

All these malpractices are made possible by staffs who are greedy, wicked and lust with the privilege to influence the results of thousands of students. They alone are responsible for building citizens that see life as a place where bribery must be offered to get things done hence corrupting them.

Though corruption is a contagious disease, It can as well be developed through frustration and hunger. The State and Federal governments have a big role to play in the prompt payment of salaries, pensions and gratuities for lecturers, Army, Police and all forms of civil servants. They've failed woefully in this because they do not prioritize the citizens first. Instead, their agenda are crafted around means that enable their embezzlement.

The young folks too (Student Union Government) have emulated skills that they exhibit by embezzling student dues and fees. They also know how to create mutual relationships with corrupt school staffs in order to enforce the payment of the dues by their fellow students.

Being different or standing out incorruptible isn't as easy as preaching, 'smokers are liable to die young'. It will definitely return some losses, setbacks, embarrassments and delays. If you remember "The Incorruptible Judge" by D. Olu Olagoke, you'll know it pays to remain solid.

For me, I have an inner peace whenever I deter myself from corrupt acts. I strive to excel purely despite the rough terrain and potential consequences. People think others that scaled really did. But their weakness is known to themselves within and they'll never stand except they continue their corrupt practices…. lasting until nemesis catches up.

I am a Nigerian and I represent Nigeria wherever I go. I am incorruptible and there are millions like me.

What's your favorite Nigerian Food?

Parashmita Chakraborty

love my country October 28, 2017

1. Pounded Yam and Egusi Soup

Pounded yam is incomplete without Egusi soup – melon soup. Pounded yam is made by boiling yam and pounding it. Nigerians abroad prepare alternative pounded yam using yam flour but it doesn't taste like the original pounded yam. Although, the Yoruba people are known to be fond of pounded yam, some other Nigerian tribes also love this delicious delicacy.

2. Tuwo Sinkafa

Tuwo Shinkafa is one of the most delicious foods in the Northern part of Nigeria. Tuwo is made by soft rice and spicy sauce. The Hausa tribes love this food and that is why most of them living abroad miss it so much.

3. Ewa Aganyin

Photo Source: [9jafoodie]

Every Nigerian beans lover are crazy about Ewa Aganyi. Ewa Aganyi is made up of cooked beans and pepper sauce. It is a delicious beans dish, well-known for its softness and tasty sauce.

4. Party Jollof Rice

Photo Source: [BuzzNigeria]

A Nigerian party without Jollof Rice is no party! There is a theory that party jollof rice are unique. Well, the food has a unique taste and aroma that is different from any type of jollof rice. Most Nigerians look forward to 'owanbe' parties, simply because of the delicious foods including jollof rice.

5. Amala and Ewedu Soup

Amala and Ewedu soup is classic Nigerian food, mostly eaten by the Yoruba tribes, especially people from Oyo State, but it is appreciated by other tribes.

6. Poundo-Cocoyam and Oha Soup

This mouth-watering delicacy is mostly eaten by people from the Eastern part of Nigeria, the Igbo tribes. Every Igbo family treasures this meal and that is why they miss it so much when they are abroad.

7. Adalu

Photo Source: [Vegannigeria]

Adalu is a combination of beans and corn, cooked together with flavourful seasoning and spices. Most Nigerians ate lots of this delicious meal when growing up, so they have deep love for it.

8. Moin Moin

Moin Moin is a Nigerian staple food which is very rich in protein. Moin Moin is a cooked bean pudding made from combination of grounded – pealed beans, pepper, and onions. It is very delicious and tasty.

9. Abacha and Ugba

Abacha and Ugba is known as 'African Salad' and it can be eaten as a meal or snack. Many people eat it as a meal because it is fills up your stomach just like any other meal. This meal is well-known in the Eastern part of Nigeria, among the Igbo tribes and they love it.

10. Semovita and Efo Riro

Semovita has become a popular food in Nigeria and it serves as an alternative for Pounded yam. People who do not want to go through the stress of pounding yam prefer eating Semovita. Semovita is usually taken with Efo Riro (Vegetable soup), which makes the meal more delicious and nutritious.

11. Akara and Pap

Photo Source: 9jafoodie

Nothing makes your Saturday morning better than waking up to the sweet aroma of Akara (beans cake) with freshly made pap. This meal is so delicious and tasty. Nigerians abroad will yearn for it whenever they wake up on Saturday morning.

12. Starch and Banga Soup

photo Source: 9jafoodie

Banga Soup is well-known in the Southern part of Nigeria. They soup can be taken with Starch and it is a very delicious Nigerian food. Who wouldn't miss it?

13. Ofada Rice

Photo Source: Dobbys Signature

Ofada Rice produced locally in Nigeria. What makes it special is its unique flavour and aroma. Most Nigerians abroad will jump with excitement at the sight of ofada rice.

14. Kilishi

Photo Source: fabdivawrites

Well, you may find many alternative dried meat wherever you are, but Kilishi is the only one that has that unique Nigerian taste, aroma and spice.

15. Suya

Suya has been called so many names, barbecued meat, kebab and many others. But Suya is Suya and you can only find it in Nigeria. There is no definition for the kind of feeling or sensation you get when you take hot Suya, especially when it is soaked in Yaji (Suya Spice). This delicacy is utterly delicious that it gives Nigerians multiple foodgasms.

16. Gala and Lacasera

Photo Source: ihypeihype

Gala and Lacasera – there is always a romantic relationship between these two, they are made for each other. Most Nigerians love Gala and Lacasera especially when they are tired and stuck in traffic for hours.

17. Agege Rocky Bread

There are different types of breads in Nigeria but Agege bread is unique. People call it perfect because it has the right amount of ingredient, not too soft and not too hard. Some Nigerians abroad has a weakness for Agege bread and they miss it a lot.

18. Boli and Groundnut

Boli – roasted plantain is very tasty when taken with groundnut, it is truly a delectable snack for Nigerians and that is why they miss it most when they travel abroad.

19. Asun Goat Meat

Photo Source: Afrolems

Asun is a popular Nigerian barbecued goat meat with pepper sauce. It serves as an appetizer and always classified as a finger food. Asun is well-known in the Western part of Nigeria, among the Yoruba tribes. When Nigerians abroad crave for Asun, they remember their family gatherings or pleasant memories from home.

20. Nkwobi

Nkwobi, a cooked spicy cow leg is a popular traditional desserts in Eastern Nigeria. Most Nigerian men visit Igbo restaurants on Friday nights to enjoy Nkwobi.

21. Nigerian-made Indomie Noodles

Photo Source: 9jafoodie

Indomie Noodles has become a household name in Nigeria. Every Nigerian has different ways of cooking and eating their noodles. Even though, there are other brands of noodles abroad, Indomie noodles has a unique taste and gives you a homey feeling.

22. Ijebu Garri and Groundnut

Nothing is as soothing as taking Garri and Groundnut with chilled water in the afternoon thanks for 100+views:)

THANKS FOR READING :)

What is the US Army doing in Nigeria now?

RICHARD COOPER Updated June 15

Nothing, the only group in Nigeria claiming to be the US Army, are members of the Nigerian Scamyourassoff unit. Members of this unit must be Nigerians and dedicated to working several hours a day to scam Westerners and non-Africans into thinking they are Americans military members who have fallen on hard times, this is in spite of the fact that a private in the American military is paid more than a Nigerian army colonel.

These guys will always need money and no matter how many times you ask them for their personal military email address that ends in .mil they won't provide one in spite of the fact that US military personnel are supported by the most sophisticated and secure computer systems in the world. Nor will they provide a military mailing address, an APO or FPO. The ability to provide either a valid military email and military mailing address would serve as confirmation that the person online claiming to be in the US military really is a military servicemember, failure to do so is confirmation that they aren't and contact broken off.

Keep in mind that when you look at the amounts paid to Nigerian military members at various ranks and then compare them to the amounts paid to members of foreign militaries like the United States you will understand why the United States will never station US troops in the country due to the danger that dissatisfaction with pay by Nigerian troops compared with that of US troops would spark a military upraising in the country. If Nigerian troops had to work along side troops making more money then themselves there would be jealousy and resentment that would probably arise and could undermine whatever stability the Nigerian military has and introducing an element that could cause jealousy and resentments like that could start over pay differences is not something the US Government or military would like to see and that's one of the reasons why you won't see American troops ever stationed in Nigeria.

Aside from Nigeria, which other African countries have the necessary population and natural resources to be a big economy in the next fifty years?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, RwandaUpdated May 25, 2020

Mate, population and natural resources do not contribute to prosperous economies. In Africa, all they have done is to create a big number of poor people in one country. Nigeria has surpassed India with that regards. Nigeria overtakes India in extreme poverty ranking

Who wants that for their country in the next 50 years? DRC and Ethiopia are also big populated countries.

Do you want to create a big economy? You need to the 6M of management theory. It is how South Korea, Taiwan, Singapore, Malaysia, and other Asian tigers have done it. These countries were as poor as our countries in the 60's. Look at them today.

What does Africa really need at this point in time?

If Nigeria wants to prosper, they need to invest in the following.

Man (people): a skilled and well-trained workforce.
Material: Infrastructure to facilitate economic growth (transportation, electricity, roads, railways, etc).
Money: Access to capital.
Markets: Access to global markets (Africa intra-trade).
Management: Leadership that is visionary and forward thinking.
Motivation: Hope and excitement for today and the future.

Anything else, Follow Africa is Home. With good visionary leadership, we can do it.

Related Links

Why exactly is Nigeria so populous and so densely populated relative to other African countries?

Why is Nigeria doing so well economically compared to other African countries?

Is Nigeria the most promising of the African countries?

Why is Nigeria being referred to as “The largest economy in Africa” and “The giant of Africa” when there are many African countries that are more developed?

What makes Nigeria a great nation to other African countries?

How is Nigeria able to sustain such a large population relative to the rest of Africa?

What is the main rival city of Lagos in Nigeria?

Onisolaime Garricks Classroom Teacher at Rivers State Senior Secondary Schools Board. (2013–present) January 3

Lagos does not have a rival city in Nigeria. It's population is more than double the next most populated city (Kano), It's commercial, industrial, GDP based is double that of it's closest competitors (Port Harcourt, Kano, Aba, Warri, Kaduna, Onitsha), It carries more than double the cargo of the ports in Port Harcourt, more than double the air traffic in Abuja airport. It's the hub of entertainment, business, religion, lesuire, home of all Forbes acclaimed billionaires in Nigeria etc. Abuja, Port Harcourt and Kano are the next most important cities in Nigeria after Lagos. Any city may rival Lagos in Nigeria but not now or in the near future. Note: I live, grew up and work in Port Harcourt.

Is Nigeria the most developed country in West Africa?

Sean Lana Studied History & German (language) at University of Hamburg
Updated January 13, 2019

Hmm Yes, I have been to many of those West African countries. The problem with countries like Ghana, Togo, Ivory coast etc is that they focused their development only on the capital cities.
Nigeria can still boast of development in comparison to her neighboring countries and west African countries.

If you go to Ivory coast the only top-notch city there is Abidjan, Partially Yamoussoukro.

Ghana focused its development only in Accra and partially cape coast and Eastern region.

Togo, its only Lome with a lovely beach. Every part of the country is still underdeveloped.

Benin republic development is majorly in Cotonou.

Liberia is only Monrovia

But Nigeria can still be proud of places like Abeokuta, Lagos, Ibadan, Port Harcourt, Kano, Kaduna,Abuja,Uyo,Calabar,Oshogbo etc

Abuja

Kano state

Countries like Niger, Burkina faso, Mali are still far from development.

Image source: google.

Thanks for your feedbacks through comments and upvotes. Some people made suggestions that Senegal might be more developed than Nigeria. This is a point with no proof because I have never been there and I doubt it.

We can only measure a country development with the following methods:
Main development points:
Employment
Poverty Health Education
Social Cohesion
Safety and Security
Good Governance

Aspects of Development that cannot be measured:
Freedom
Security
Sustainability conservation.

Considering Nigeria population, I think it is rude to put Senegal on a race with Nigeria. Senegal population is barely 16 million approximately,Lagos state population alone is over 20 million and Nigeria as a country is approximately 180 million with huge land mass, different culture, beliefs and languages!

Senegal is only matured when it comes to politics and the same thing with Nigeria. The opinion that senegalese have better living standard than Nigerians is something I don't want to agree.You can comment for counter arguments!

This is the map of West Africa, I have visited many except few.Based on experience, you cannot compare Nigeria with any of the above listed countries.

Why is Nigeria struggling to develop even though it has more resources than Dubai?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam
Developing does not mean static.September 22, 2020

The United Arab Emirates are not democracies. That restricts the decision-makers and the pool of people who have to get things right.

Nigeria is a democracy. Its is a much tougher proposition. Her leaders have to be every bit as knowledgeable as their non-democratic counterparts, and the masses, who after all provide the leaders, need to have an accurate estimation of their strengths and flaws. The Nigerian head and its body both fail in their duties.

In 2018, the UAE exported petroleum products worth $96.91bn. Her total exports were $242bn. Given its population of ~10m, that comes to $9,691 on a per capita basis for petroleum products alone. For total exports, the figure balloons to $24,200 per capita. They produce 3,106,077 barrels of oil per day.

Another source of wealth for the UAE is its favourable geography. It is next door to the most energy-hungry regions of the world. Also, it is in the Middle-East: the median point of three continents. It has been able to leverage that into a lucrative role as a transport hub. Its Mount Ali port is the busiest in the world outside of East Asia and Rotterdam. Dubai, specifically, is federated with other rich emirates.

As the other answers have mentioned, the UAE is also expatriate friendly. The above are the UAE's strengths. Now let us compare it to Nigeria.

Nigeria, in 2018, exported $54.35bn worth of petroleum products and $59.5bn in total exports. Given an estimated population of 190m, that comes out to $208 and $313 respectively. Nigeria produces 1,999,885 barrels of oil per day. That does not strike me as having more resources.

Nigeria is in the middle of Africa and the Americas. Not many pilgrims, investors or tourists make Africa their final destination. Very little shipping comes to Africa. Nigeria is also a federation of very poor states surrounded by even poorer countries.

Considering the security risk to oil workers and MTN's treatment, it is fair to say that expatriate friendliness will not be our advantage either.

It should go without saying that Nigeria is not rich. Its resources are meagre too. That fact needs to be reiterated, at length, until every Nigerian acknowledges it. Nigerians must stop expecting to be indulged like rentiers. That realisation must start from the ground up because democratic politics being what it is, no politician will be the bearer of bad news.

An advantage we share with the Emiratis is that we have the potential to be a logistics hub of note. At the moment, Benin Republic is outhustling us in that regard. If it is suggested that our ports be handed over to the Emiratis, jobbers will yell 'Islamisation'. Pivot to the Dutch and they will say 'colonisation'. Suggest the Beninese and they will accuse you of being unpatriotic. When a Nigerian is appointed they will then jostle for Federal Character, equity, and the dividends of democracy.

Nigeria has no 'developmental consensus' because of the general perception that there is hidden money. Politicians and unionists take advantage of that to claim that they are going to fight for 'our share'. The result is a constant jostle over previously scant and now rapidly diminishing resources. The more people are disappointed, the more they will be convinced that somebody or some people are hiding 'our money'. The solution is rather simple: 'know thyself' is sage advice for individuals and nations alike.

Nigerians must stop confusing the bling of development for its substance. Development is not skyscrapers and factories; it is a capacity for action in response to existing problems. We ignore our problems, overestimate our resources and project solutions developed by others for their problems onto ours. Hence the struggle.

Why is Suya sold at night in Nigeria?

Jeff November 5, 2018 Originally Answered: In Nigeria, why do people buy and sell suya only at night?

Suya isn't a breakfast food, true, but I've never had trouble getting some after work, or for an afternoon snack.
It's usually available by the time folks are getting off work in the early evenings.

Now in my old Abuja neighborhood of Jabi, the street stalls didn't get fired up until dusk, that is true. This was because the sidewalks are unshaded and hot until the sun starts to go down. Also bush bars typically rely on guys grabbing a beer or two after work, before heading home and Jabi food stalls were for neighborhood folks who'd already gotten home, which meant a slightly later crowd.

I'm guessing this may be a Lagos question, given how common I've seen suya served in the afternoon in both small towns and all around Abuja, along with times I was visiting friends in Jos and Lokoja. If so, I'd guess the notorious Lagos traffic means people get home later and hence the suya sellers plan for night time crowds. Plus Lagos is known for nightlife.

There is the magical hour of dusk and early nightfall, when the heat of the day is gone and it's not so late one worries about theft and other crimes occurring. It's always the most pleasant time of day for a stroll and many people are out and about then, which is perfect for selling spicy grilled meat.

Do Nigerians feel safe in Ghana, is it better or worse and what are the situations you can relate to?

Ibukunoluwa Michael

Studies Law at Ajayi Crowther University (Expected 2022) October 24, 2020

Ghana is no more safer or dangerous than any country you travel to. If you go to America today, and wander around unsavoury areas at night, you're quite likely to be harassed. The same applies just about everywhere. Every country has a criminal element. Ghana is a beautiful country, with friendly polite people and it is quite safe. However, as I've mentioned, if you go towards the more unsavoury areas, the likelihood of you being harassed is much higher.

I have been to Accra, and Kumasi and I've never had any issues. What I did have though, was loads of fun. Accra is so modernized and beautiful. In kumasi, I ate the biggest shawarma I've ever seen in my life. All in all, a wonderful experience, I highly recommend Ghana as a place to visit at least once in your lifetime.

AFRICA: Why can't the top 100 richest countries come together to fund an irrigation project in Africa (and maintain it)? Developing does not mean static

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam March 9

While I am inclined to say that you probably cannot have too many irrigation projects, agriculture in Africa has higher priorities, and there are greater challenges that make an Oprah-style irrigation giveaway a bad policy choice.

First, the priorities for African agriculture ought to be improved land rights, technology use, input quality, storage and transport infrastructure. For example, current irrigation technology tends to consume too much water…in a water-scarce continent.

(Image Source)

I also think that food security should be thought of in more holistic terms than just the undue focus on farmers, but that is another question.

Moving on, the primary problem is that the sort of crops that are most amenable to irrigation also tend to be highly subsidised and in protected markets.

Everybody talks a good game, but I don't see American or European farmers ever going off their subsidies to aid African competition. And as the map above shows, when it comes to the most in-demand food crops, whether wheat, rice or soy, the American, European and Asian countries have a comparative advantage.

Personally, I'd do the sign of the cross, trust the markets, stop using rural farmers as a captive supply source for urbanites (who are poorer than global buyers) and nudge them towards higher-margin, less demanding crops. Flowers, for example. African countries should not be in the wheat and rice planting business.

But food production is highly emotive stuff. The result is poor and uncompetitive African farmers. Who knows, perhaps with stronger land rights, some innovator would have pioneered less thirsty cultivation methods. Alas.

Finally, the Law of Unintended Consequences. Investments in irrigation are an economic choice with consequences. Because it is an investment, it must be profitable to be sustainable. Historically, that meant that irrigation projects—the Gezira scheme and the Office du Niger, for example—focused on mechanised, exportable crops. Food crops alone cannot justify the investment because African buyers are poor.

The whole raison d'etre of the Gezira project, for example, was to topple the American South's 'King Cotton' in British mills.

Today, it means selling parcels off to the Gulf States as extensions to maintain their food security and to clean energy companies to plant fuel crops.

Middle East's Investments in African Farmlands Are Rooted in Food Security Fears - Knowledge@Wharton

A growing world population, greater demands from an increasingly prosperous Asian middle class, and recent weather-related issues are all driving up global food costs. Attempting to buffer themselves against inflationary pressure, wealthy Gulf countries have become heavy investors in foreign farmlands, including huge swaths of Africa. As the Middle East experiences unrest over economic conditions, the purchases act as a potential source of relief against food shortages. But to ensure that these purchases deliver, Gulf countries will have to contend with a number of challenges, including the task of developing and exporting food from Sub-Saharan Africa.

https://knowledge.wharton.upenn.edu/article/middle-easts-investments-in-african-farmlands-are-rooted-in-food-security-fears/

Is ethanol starving Africa?

Sugarcane is harvested for conversion into ethanol at the Addax Bioenergy Project in Sierra Leone. (Image: Addax Bioenergy) The biofuel industry has enjoyed tremendous growth over the past decade,...

https://www.theverge.com/2013/9/19/4748986/are-biofuels-starving-africa-food-versus-fuel-debate

Dumb headline, but you get the idea.

The absence of strong land rights means that land sales often involve men in boots knocking on a door and informing a farmer their land has been requisitioned for developmental purposes. So farmers do not even benefit from sales.

The optics would be terrible for foreign governments involved. All that without getting into their citizens questioning why it isn't their accounts getting irrigated?

News AFRICA

Why was West Africa the most Balkanized région of Africa during colonization?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam
I am the West African History Guy May 22

Two things. One. Are we looking at the same map?

Second, West Africa was not ‘balkanised’ by the Europeans. You cannot 'balkanise' what was never united. The Europeans inherited the imperial structures of the empires they inherited. In some places, they extended it.

That said, I understand you. At least, I think I do.

Due to the long relationship between Western Africa and Western Europe, it drew the most European interest. Consequently, there was a greater concentration of trade forts there than anywhere else in Africa. Those trade forts were often the starting point for greater territorial claims in the 19th-century (and beyond). The splotches of Spanish and Portuguese territories in Western Africa are legacies of the Atlantic trade.

That legacy made the effort to prove ‘effective occupation’ in West Africa more of a scramble than in the rest of Africa.

However, the British were willing to barter territory in western Africa for French support in the east, where their greater interest lay. (After the World Wars, if you ran a line down the middle of the continent, it’d essentially be British east vs French west)

The French, meanwhile, ruled their equatorial territories as a single unit. The actual ‘Balkanisation' came with independence when the first-generation leaders of the richer provinces of French Africa choose the independence of their countries rather than continuing to subsidise poorer members of the union. That left countries like Senegal and the Central African Republic in limbo.

Freedom from colonial rule has not produced the right kind of development expectations which originally were strong motivation in the fight for self-government in African countries. What went wrong?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian with a history degree. April 16

Nothing went wrong. ‘the right kind of development expectations’ was not the primary motivation for self-government. Sovereignty, above all else, motivated them. ‘Seek ye first the political kingdom, and all other things shall be added unto you’ as Kwame Nkrumah put it. More evocatively, ‘Guinea prefers poverty in freedom to riches in slavery.’ in the fiery words of Sekou Toure.

The march to independence was not a political campaign with contrasting manifestoes. It was an emotive backlash to racial dominance and the narrow and narrowing opportunities available to the educated classes within the imperial system.

The primary objective of all the first-generation leaders in independent Africa was the development of national and racial consciousness. For many of them, constructing a political system in opposition to the West came second. Then there was the distribution of the opportunities at the top of the bureaucratic and economic hierarchy that became available when the Europeans and the Levantines left.

The idea of development for all but a few was subordinate to the above priorities. The resultant efforts were often more performative ‘modernisation’ than ‘modernising’.

Political priorities leavened by the Commodities boom, independent access to Capital Markets and the inflow of multiple, competing sources of foreign aid also postponed the compromises and hard choices necessary for economic engagement with the West. That is until the debt crises, SAP and the collapse of the Soviet Union.

Meanwhile, in the background, myriad events from the defeat of Libya in the Sahelian sands to the end of the Cold War broke down the disarmament dikes erected by the Europeans. That too would play its role.

Who has a better future, Mexico or Nigeria?

David Martinez Us/Mexico dual citizen/history nut. Yep, that Mexican Thing.October 4, 2020

While in California I have been fortunate to meet a lot of Nigerians. They tend to be great people.

But in the short and medium term, it continues to be Mexico's contest to lose, by a mile. Location, infrastructure, trade deals, government, interest by the world powers… as others have said, Mexico is economy #13–14 depending on who you ask, and they'll be 5–7 in 20 years as they continue industrializing. Mexico's exports are tremendously diversified, complex manufacturing and high margin. Nigeria is oddly located for being an export hub and has ways to go in export diversity and margins/complexity of what they export. They will make up for it with great people and the special relationship with Britain (and as they "Brexit" they even may get a boost), but it really doesn't compare.

Nigeria will likely benefit most as it's neighbors develop and may become the giant of Africa, which is great. But that means that they're on the timeline of the rest of Africa, and nothing beats industrializing and having tons of trade agreements while next to the US and Canada, and don't forget that for a short time, Mexico already was the center of world trade during the Spanish empire times. Mexico is in a tremendously privileged location to do transformation/manufacture of goods and delivery to the world's greatest markets (Panama, because of the Canal and the way it works, is much too "thin" and restricted to transform and build).

So it's really nothing against Nigeria, it's just the way the places are positioned.

What country do Nigerians admire most?

Debo Kayode Ogunranti Lived in NigeriaFebruary 16, 2019

This question is not as simple as it seems. Nigerians are in every country in the world including North Korea. But do we love those countries? I can't say yes to this because we always have a deep nostalgia for Naija and return home at the drop of a pin. As I speak some are in the country to vote in the general election. No Nigerian wants to be buried outside of his ancestral land.

So which country do Nigerians admire the most, let me give you an uneducated list.

- Nigeria
- The UK
- All of West Africa
- All of Africa

- The USA
- Canada
- All other countries

The list is based on our migratory patterns and its off the top of my head.
Like we say here if you find yourself in a town without a Nigerian, dialogue with your feet and flee!

What are the jails like in Nigeria?

Obinna Victor Lives in Nigeria (1990–present October 13, 2018

A good question, my first experience with the Nigerian jail was a nightmare not worth remembering. The Nigerian jails are not built for humans, money released by the government to keep it clean and for possible renovations are not actually meant to be used. There's no provision of sleeping materials or even a clean environment. The police here are more powerful than the justice system so nobody asks questions. The worst part is, respecting and keeping the law cannot keep you away from jail, it might even be your ticket to this hell. I was arrested on my way home at 8:13 pm GMT+1 and the police had no reason for my arrest, they took my phone and removed the battery, handcuffed me to the station and locked me up with others arrested on the road. I was in jail for two days without the right to call my family, it was when my family came to report a missing person's case that they knew I was in jail. I slept on a rough cracked dirty floor with a choking horrible smell and swarms of mosquitoes, cockroaches and ants in total darkness. To release me I had to pay NGN 28000 for 'fighting an officer on duty'. There was no fight, no argument, no misunderstanding. All I can remember was "stop, get down from the bike, you're a criminal, I know that face, he'll sleep with us today" But I am happy I was not accused of robbery where they'll place a gun on me, that's what they do everyday and the journalist will be displaying your images everywhere.

My dear, I hope I got close to answering your question, sorry for digressing to personal experiences, it's just to shed more light on the answer.

Why do African countries take long to develop?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Developing does not mean static. May 1

They do?

The implication is that you have some sort of definite timeline that countries have to meet, failing which, they have taken 'too long to develop'?

Rare is the African country which is outside of its sixties. I am aflame with anticipation for the list of countries that have developed in that timeframe. Somehow, I am sceptical that you will find any.

Capital accumulation or development is a marathon, not a sprint. In a way, it is rather like tradition: the steady accretion of what works. And like tradition, it is also, on occasion, subject to periods of rapid change.

Declaring a story finished in the middle of a book does not make any sense. Although, that has never stopped people from trying.

Will the citizens' agitation in Nigeria make history, or become just a thing of history?

Orji Obinna Chetachi Lives in Nigeria October 22, 2020

I think it will become history, yes apart from some little structural reforms. My reason for saying this is that Nigeria is divided along ethnic and religious lines.

Considering the #endsars protests, it only takes a united front for anything significant to come out of it.

And then there is a complex interplay of regional self centred interests.

The North and the south west want a united nigeria , the South east don't want Nigeria they want secession. The Niger delta are kind of indifferent apart from a handful of protests. The south west need SARS to end , but the North doesn't . The south east wants SARS to end, but not to the point of risking their lives. They are like- well we want police reforms but there is hardly anything interesting about Nigeria. The Niger delta want resource control.

Throughout the history of Nigeria , each time an uprising goes too far, at the very zenith of it the different factions withdraw along ethnic lines. From Isaac Boro's revolution of the sixties, to the Biafran struggle of the late sixties , to Awolowo's Oduduwa republic , to the June 12 crisis in western Nigeria the different groups were eventually isolated and dealt with collectively by the rest even though they were not alone at the very beginning.

So apart from some structural reforms in the police I don't see much change taking place. Divide and rule friends, divide and rule. Developing does not mean static. May 1

What do you think about the ongoing protest in Nigeria? Ngozi Stanley-Obi

Updated October 20, 2020

200 million would have probably been in detention or dead if they had ever met with the Special Anti Robbery Squad (SARS) Officials on the street because they are young and dress like the teeming Nigerian youth population.

I didn’t know much about SARS until in 2014 when l was transferred to head the Southeast Region of my former employers’ Operations.

What is happening everywhere in the country now, was already happening in the SouthEast region of the country then.

One of our Head of Operations was arrested and accused of sponsoring a kidnapping gang.

After some months in detention with everyone doing all they could to get him out, he was finally released.

He was traumatized as he narrated to me, how on his last day, in a face to face with the supposed kidnappers, they said they did not know him?

Who was the Complainant? So how come he got arrested and detained for several months?

It was from him that l heard about the horrors of the Awkuzu detention camps.

He had wanted to take them to court then, l pleaded with him to let it go, as l felt they might kill him.

I regret that decision now, maybe if we had started shouting earlier, many more innocent Nigerians would not have died in SARS detention camps...I support the movement.

The ongoing protest is more than just an #EndSAS protest, it is a a protest against a society that has all it takes to be better than it is; and the youth population suddenly have realized the amazing power of social media.

The change we all want in our society must start from all of us.

This is clearly a movement that might go beyond what those who started it conceived…

The 2 Nigerian founders in the picture below, who just sold their start up Paystack for $

What are some of the most common Yoruba values?

Lives in Lagos, NigeriaUpdated August 11, 2020 Speaking about Yoruba values,

Meet this guy,

That is 28 year old Debo Adebayo, popularly known as Mr. Macaroni. He is a Nigerian comedian, he is very well known for his sugar daddy jokes. He has a typical story line, in which he pose like a rich Yoruba man in his 50s, wearing his agbada and walking on the street, most of the time making calls with other billionaires, or talking to some business colleagues. And then suddenly a beautiful girl mostly around 20 or 30 will walk by and catch Mr. Macaroni's attention. Mr. Macaroni will immediately quit what ever he his doing to try and get the lady's attention, while attempting to propose a nice time with the lady. The lady whom out of respect for him and despair of the situation will try to kneel down(in Yoruba culture a lady is supposed to kneel or at least bend her kneels to greet the elders, while men are expected to prostrate) to greet the elderly rich man giving her such attention, and then Mr. Macaroni will pull her up saying "Aye ikunle mo" meaning people don't kneel down to greet anymore, and she shouldn't worry about kneeling….

This joke became very famous that many of us young people start using some of his slangs on social media. Somehow, somehow this caught the attention of the Ooni of Ife, one of the most powerful monarchs in Yorubaland.

He surely wasn't pleased by the fact that Mr. Macaroni keep saying that people don't kneel down to greet anymore, that he had to invite Mr. Macaroni to his palace and feature in a skit with him, where he told everyone that kneeling down or prostrating to greet is not a culture that can be over looked in the Yoruba race! He also take the opportunity to charge us youths to work hard.

Speaking about Yoruba values,

Also the more you get to learn about our culture you will understand that our ancestors were masters of philosophy, with great thoughts and understanding of the society at large, most of these philosophy were made into ideologies that exists till date.

One of these ideologies is the concept of "Omoluwabi" an Omoluwabi is someone with high moral values, he try to be honest in all his dealings, humble, peaceful, respectful etc. This ideology is very important that when I was in my secondary school one of our teachers by the name Mrs Olowe(may her soul rest in peace), whenever she came to address us on the assembly ground every morning doesn't have any other thing to talk about than the Omoluwabi of a thing, if left alone she can explain morality through Omoluwabi all day long, that we start calling her Omo Noah bi (the child that Noah gave birth to) based on the two words sounding similar. Omoluwabi to my understanding can be broken down to Omo oni iwa ti bi, that is a child with a behavior that is acceptable here.

When I was younger anytime I and my friends do something wrong some where, maybe at school or where ever, most especially if we walk by an elderly person and we didn't greet, if the person has our time and ready to correct us, the first thing he will ask is if we are Yoruba, trust me this isn't tribalism, just that a lot of elderly people here have an high expectation for the kind of behavior you can see from any Yoruba person. In such a situation I don't always hesitate to identify as not Yoruba, that way I can escape all the derisive remarks that would have followed if I had identified as Yoruba.

So in short if you are in the midst of core Yorubas, make sure you are honest, respectful and then greet and greet again! There is a saying that if you want to amount to something in Ede greet them, if you don't greet them you won't be bigger than a needle to them. (Ede is a Yoruba town)

Also hard work, it yoruba people don't like laziness, it is a popular belief that if you can't work there is no other way for you to survive than to steal, so a lazy person is equivalent to a thief in Yoruba culture.

"What is the news in Nigeria as we approach midnight 10/19?"

Boris Ezomo Nigerian and proud of it. October 21, 2020

Ah Nigeria. A unique country and people in everything we do.
Full of corrupt politicians, and incompetent leaders that had transformed the world's 30th richest country, and the top economy in Africa into a land where 70% live below the poverty line, amongst highest infant and maternal mortality rates. Where Police are not only incompetent but brutal and corrupt.

Recently the government removed fuel subsidy resulting in inflation. Electricity also went up and that is if there is a supply anyway. Now add Covid 19 lockdown and total lack of any aid from the government, and you have over 70% of hungry and angry people.

We have what amount to police death squads that harass and murder at will, and get away with it. The Special anti robbery Squads or SARS spend more time abusing citizens than actually preventing robbery.

This girl was arrested by them, raped and murdered in custody.

No justice was seen. It became an every day thing for the murderers in uniform. Stealing, robbing raping and killing

So the EndSARS protests started. Eventually the government in effect fired a handful of them, I think just about 37 of thousands. The rest they renamed as SWAT. Funny right? Same predators under another name.

So the protests continued. In no time it because political and calls for the price rises on fuel and electricity to be rolled back, now leading for calls for the president to resign.

Typical for Nigeria, protests always result in riots as hoodlums infiltrate for personal gains.

To be honest, In Benin City where the most devastation had been, the police was totally absent from the streets while the peaceful protest took place. Even when they blocked highways to cook launch for everyone

A whole bull was cooked in Ijebu. Ogun state.

However when violence and car burning started, they appeared. Aggregating the mob more.

End result, two prisons were broken into, and all inmates set free. That's right, go ahead and free all the murderers, bandits and rapist to spite the government.

As well as three police stations burnt. There were shootings by the police.

The Edo state government placed a 24 hour curfew on the City. It seems it had quietened down.

However the next day, Lagos was burning. Again police stations

So a 24 hour curfew is now in place there. There had been deaths.

In the Capital Abuja. Not only was there rioting, but it also kicked off ethnic tensions as the Hausas, and the Igbos started fighting each other. This two ethnic groups have a thing about each other.

The Army was place on the streets. Again shootings and casualties.

So that is the situation so far.

I predict that as usual, protests do not amount to anything in Nigeria

Edit: As of 21/10, rioting in epicenters continue.

On Lekki tollgate in Lagos, The Army opened fire on protesters. Killing at least 4 and many injured. Everyone denies responsible, even the army.

A private hospital was set on fire, because they refused to admit a casualty from police shooting. The Lagoon hospital in Lagos. The hospital has good reasons and not just financial. Gunshots have to be reported before treatment, or transferred to Government hospital. The rioters instead burnt the hospital and left the victim to bleed to death in front of it. Amazing.

Deaths reported in many cities.

Remember the prison breaks in Benin? Crime shot up from areas of the two prisons, and spread out.

Indefinite 24 hour curfew in place in many cities.

Why is nothing good ever said about the Nigerian government?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian June 9

I will not say that good things are never said about the government. However, it is fair to say that the general long-term emotion felt by Nigerians towards the government is dissatisfaction.

Why?

I'd say that it does many things badly and quite a few things terribly. The good things that it does are taken for granted. They are treated as rights compensating for its many, many failures.

What makes the situation worse is the nature of the relationship between Nigerians and the government. There isn't a sense of ownership. Talk to any Nigerian, and it quickly emerges that we tend to conceive of 'government' as an alien construct of immense power. All 'Theys' never 'We'.

When foreigners talk about politics in Africa, the figure of the 'big man' is never far away. I don't think that is quite accurate. The 'big man' is not worshipped because of their wealth. The adulation they receive is because of the perception that they control the government. Something more like the high priests of a capricious god.

Vote for me; I will create 30 million jobs, bring free electricity, destroy Boko Haram, make $1 one Naira, give the unemployed N5,000 monthly etc is the new 'bring a white chicken and I will propitiate the spirits'.

I think that the paradigm shift occasioned by the entrance into the interior of the Europeans is underestimated.

A young boy may have heard rumours of cannibal white men on iron boats down on the coast. As an old man, he would see them, those aliens. If you spoke to them, they could not understand you and vice versa. If you killed them, no matter how well you hid the body, they would return and bring death and destruction: guns that shot farther and faster than normal, iron boats and flying birds that rained destruction inland.

Now when those aliens formed a government, it would obviously not be yours, but theirs. A situation made clearer by how they held themselves apart, to be approached only through priests: the translator, the court messenger, the police, the native authority, the house boy and the mistress.

Fast forward to today, has that basic situation changed? Sure the faces in the portrait are different, but other than that, what else? To their shame and our gloom, Nigerian politicians tasted the British fruit and found that it was good.

Then as now, all Nigerians can do is express gratitude or complain, fear and be resentful. The idea that change is something that we can effect in our government sounds positively blasphemous.

Is it?

At the risk of being a broken bell, I think that Nigeria is the way it is because of decisions that Nigerians make. Our system of government requires that we deliberate and understand our choices. Without taking on that responsibility, nothing will change.

How are the innocent Nigerians affected by the stigma of "cyber scammers"?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller October 9, 2020

As I write this, Nigerians, mostly youths, are on the streets, telling whoever that cares to listen that they have had enough, that it can't be business as usual.

The constant killings, humiliation, and outright lawlessness by the police are beyond what we can manage.

Like in the case of Tiyamiyu, a young prospective footballer was shot dead by SARS, an arm of the Nigerian police force. His crime? Because he has a car and an iPhone, which automatically qualifies you as a Yahoo boy (Internet fraudster) in Nigeria.

There have been inquiries about what the Nigerian authorities are doing about cybercrime, as many delusionally think all or most cybercrimes emanate from Nigeria. Well, I'm here to tell you that our leaders are doing a great job and have performed beyond our imaginations, they could kill, or jail both the innocent and the guilty, and they do so without morals.

As young men, we are forced to monitor how we dress and the kind of places we hang out. Our hairstyle or dressing could easily attract the police, which almost always ends in humiliation and bribery.

The size of my phone is a dead give away; they would grab your phone without a warrant and search for stuff to incriminate you, and when they can't find anything, they go ahead, asking how you could have the money to buy a smartphone because, to them, a smartphone is so luxurious that it should be out of the reach of the Nigerian youth... Talk about systematic racism, Africans do it best.

Owning a car might be the ultimate end of your freedom. You would be stripped of all fundamental rights know to man, as they accuse you of what you did and never did. God forbid if your source of income is from the Internet, legally or not, you are likely going to have zero chance in defending yourself.

I can't dress up the way I want. I can't have a particular hairstyle or draw a tattoo on my body. I can't own a car as I would be considered a scammer by the same police who swore to serve and protect me. I'm expected to be poor and look poor at all times because I'm a Nigerian.

If I do otherwise, I could be killed, extorted regularly, or be humiliated in public constantly as I will be on the SARS watch list. I'm expected of all of this simply because I'm a youth and a Nigerian living in Nigeria.

We are a democratic government, but about the only thing democratic about Nigeria is the word 'Democracy,' nothing more. But it can't be business as usual; this lawlessness must stop, which is why the Nigerians youths are out there, protesting peacefully despite being killed, shot at, and tear-gassed by theso-calledd authorities.

SARS, the arm of the Nigerian police in charge of robbery, is so clueless that they have no idea on how to go about investigating crimes ethically; they go about their questionable patrols to please their Superiors, and the International community that they are fighting crime, but no, about the only person they are fighting for is themselves, they enrich themselves with bribes from actual scammers and to also satisfy their quest for Sadomasochism.

And the most promising manner to end.
such brutality against the innocent is total exposure. #EndSars

What are interesting things you know about Nigeria?

Colleen Farrelly Data Scientist/Poet/Social Scientist/Topologist (2009–present) October 1, 2020

It's one of the hottest scenes for EDM these days. DJs are creating very interesting blends of traditional EDM genres and more traditional African beats. Music out of Nigeria has even heralded specific radio stations in Western countries dedicated to Afrobeats (mostly out of Nigeria). There's even a billboard of top artists and songs in the UK for Afrobeats. Art, movies, and music are things Nigeria does quite well and markets quite well around the world.

There's also a huge diaspora of Nigerians in the West, particularly those with higher education. I wouldn't be surprised if most of us worked with someone from Nigeria or whose parents came from Nigeria in the next few decades. There's a very young population being educated and presented with a lot of opportunities abroad in areas that already have some Nigerian neighborhoods.

Do you think the current tension in Nigeria, where some regions are agitating for independence, may/will lead to civil war?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian March 28

I will either be Norman Angell or Napoleon after this.

The last civil war was only possible because of the existence of powerful regional structures that could take over the structures of governance after they rebelled. The current states structure precludes that.

Contrary to your assertion, no Nigerian region is agitating for independence. Catalonia and Scotland are not in Nigeria. People with dramatic opinions are not representatives, only the constituted government.

Second, the demographics no longer work. Back in 1967, Nigeria was, broadly-speaking, still a rural country with its ethnic groups within clearly defined territories. Those days are gone. Today most Nigerians are in three areas: Lagos, Onitsha-Port Harcourt and Kano/Kaduna.

Those groupings bring together families, business partners, students and service workers. What wealth they have and their basic functioning is reliant on Nigerians.

No Nigerian region can create an alternative without collapsing in on itself. You can see an example with the farcical attempt to try and blockade food products flowing southwards. It lasted what, three days?

Third, there are no international sponsors. That means the best that secessionists can hope for is to wage insurgencies. They simply will not have the resources to raise equivalent armies nor would they have the international stature necessary to be seen as sovereign.

Civil war talk, in my view, is due to the clash of three different, unrelated trends.

The first is the old-style means of political negotiation for intra-party factions. Because political contest in Nigeria is not meritocratic, factions rely on inflammatory statements to win positions. That is why talk of secession is always the loudest the closer to the election season it gets.

Expect groups claiming to speak for northerners to join south-southern and south-eastern groups to threaten secession under the likely southwestern Presidency.

Second, Nigerian politics lacks a vocabulary of governance. It is just an unending cycle of promises. Their non-fulfillment is intrinsic to the system.

Apparently having exhausted the British, 10-per centers, military and corruption as excuses, we are, once more, at the point where things will be better if secession happens.

Third, the internet creates weird identities. Especially in a place like Nigeria that offers no positive alternatives. Secessionist feeling is particularly strong among second-generation diaspora Nigerians. It is the same sense of alienation that makes second-generation European Muslims join ISIS or have certain Nigerians cosplaying as Democrats and Republicans.

It is just fantasy. The material conditions for a new Islamic Caliphate or a Nigerian civil war do not exist anymore.

There are greater odds of Nigeria becoming an American state, atheism being declared the national religion or of Africa becoming a country.

There will not be another civil war. Rest easy.

That said, the various armed robbers, kidnappers, terrorists and insurgents are still armed and ready, so you know wahala boku.

How Seven Nigerians Were Killed In the UK In Four Months

This didn't cause Nigerians to hate every being from that region.

Nigerian students in India.

Nigerians are seen as fraudulent and dubious, unfortunately, that is the exact way many Nigerians see the rest of the world too.

Either way, cheating is inherent in every human, and it's not just in money.

Some people just don't do it because they have a "conscience," Nigerians have this too.

You were duped by a Nigerian? So sorry, that wasn't me, it's not all Nigerians who cheat.

I won't do that, because I wouldn't want anyone to do that to me.

Some Nigerians know their field inside out, locking them out based on rumours you've heard or read in some fancy literature is only going to be disadvantageous to us all.

I am a Nigerian, not a scammer!

Why are Nigerian youths under so much stress and fearful for their future?

Osazua Iruedo Manager (2017–present)November 13, 2020

I am a Nigerian youth. Why will I be under so much stress and fearful for my future?

I live in a country where I am not recognised or valued because I'm a youth. I am seen as a lazy Nigerian youth even though I have to find a way to survive, I have to keep looking for a way to put food on my table, I have to have hope because I can't and not even supposed to give up.

I am under stress and fearful for my future because when I was young I joyfully sang a song that constantly reminded me I am the leader of tomorrow. My tomorrow is here, yet our past still leads.

I am stressed and fearful of my future because I don't know what the future holds for me here. Our leaders have taken everything and will be leaving us empty and dry. They steal and keep the money in foreign banks to yield interest for their kids.

I live in a country where I can't even fight for my rights. They will rather kill us than give us what we want.

I am scared because we were told “what goes up must surely come down”. But here, what goes up never comes down.in fact it sticks up there with the most potent glue.

I also worry because a reality TV show star is recognized more than a graduate with excellent results.

I live in a country where people are hungry, yet our leaders will rather keep paliatives in a storehouse and let it rot

I am under a lot of stress because I am scared. Even though I crave a system that works, I might not see it happen.

I am fearful because I only have Nigeria. Nigeria is my father's land and no matter where I go Nigeria is my home. That's why I can’t be at peace until things become better. Wanting a bright future is not too much to ask right?

Being a Nigerian youth is stressful mentally, spiritually and even financially. I want a chance to say it got better in my time.

I want to walk into the future without fear. I just want to live.

Why are Nigerians seen as fraudulent and dubious people?

Victor Dirikebamor StorytellerUpdated January 29, 2020

Hafa?

How do you die?

These seem to be the first things many foreigners say while interacting with me for the first time.

According to them, In saying this the Nigerian wouldn't think of scamming them because they're sounding like a local.

I think some got this from scam watch sites, travel agencies, and their government.

I really don't care where they got that from because such familiar parlance won't stop me from scamming you if I wanted to.

You contacted me because you want to get some information, you're testing me in the process if i have scamming tendencies, we are not even talking money for christ sake.

For some time now, Nigerians studying abroad only come back home as a corpse, the ones alive have nothing good to tell.

The government of the host countries have no good explanation to give, nor the Nigerian government, as usual.

India, Ukraine, North Cyprus, Russia, Malaysia, even our own brothers South Africa, top the list on the dishonourable treatment of some Nigerians.

Some of these Nigerians are not innocent, but the majority of them are but general hate is spread on them all.

Some of these acts are purely racist but in most cases, it's due to the news, the rumours they have heard about Nigerians:

Internet scammer.

Drug pushers.

Pimp, etc.

These are susceptible youths, mostly from rich homes, hoping to get a good and affordable education from these countries but are met with hate and untimely death all because of generalization, a single story.

How Seven Nigerians Were Killed In UK In Four Months
This didn't cause Nigerians to hate every being from that region.

Nigerian students in India.

Why does the Nigerian government feel that it does not owe its citizens anything?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Observer of Political TrendsOctober 23, 2020

I don't think that they don't. They try.

The problem, as I see it, is twofold. Nigerians tend to forget that nobody can do more than the resources they possess. Second, they forget that no government can act beyond the actual competence of its society. That is why cutting your coat according to your size is sound advice.

Nigeria is poor. Worse, it is a poor country with rich country aspirations. That leads to a lot of waste. Ironically, most of that waste is due to the government trying to 'provide'. For example:

I have heard of the new solar panel company, but it is not my concern. It is not helping me like the textile industries used to. What I am concerned about is the textile industry. The current government bragged a lot about reviving the textile mills in Kakuri before the election, but there is nothing to show for it. I was born and bred here in Kakuri and I grew up knowing the textile mills as the economic hub of this area. I used to buy textile materials from the mills and take them into town to sell. If these industries were working, my business of meat selling would have boosted too. I could have been supplying the canteens with meat. They do not have any canteen for my meat in the solar panel company. Everything is at a standstill.

Manchester in ruins: The demise of northern Nigeria's industrial hub | African Arguments

The long story short version of the collapse of Nigeria's textile industry is that it was reliant on subsidies the country could not afford. Most problems in Nigeria are due to the expenses on overspending coming due. Because of how Nigerians receive our information, that is framed as a government problem. It is not; it is a societal failure.

Nigeria is possibly one of the worst countries in the world; it is also a country with many high-achieving individuals. I reject the idea that it is paradoxical. Nobody thinks it is shocking that Messi will never win a Nobel Science Prize. It is just who Messi is.

Just as Nigerian society is geared towards a certain outcome, the Nigerian government privileges insiders at the expense of the rest. The tragedy of Nigeria is that many average Bobos and Sisis fail to realise that our society is structured to make them miserable. If you are not charismatic, talented or connected, forget it!

That tragedy is compounded when educated Nigerians demand Danish standards of government without acknowledging that it might entail changing Nigerian society.

What we have is a classic mismatch of expectations and capability. It is worse than a cargo cult.

We have armed forces that cannot defend us. A police force that cannot police.

We have civil servants that aren't civil, and a steel mill that, despite billions of dollars, has never produced a drop of steel.

We have oil in its crude form and, supposedly, refineries, yet we must import refined crude products and plastics.

We have thousands of universities and yet fewer scientific citations than Tunisia.

Nigerian citizens and second-generation descendants from Nigerian ethnic groups are some of the best athletes in the world; however, we lack an organised youth sports system.

We build roads that fall apart in the rains, and rail networks used only to ferry civil servants. Benin Republic, often confused for a Nigerian state, has a better ports system than we do.

I could go on….

When confronted with the inevitable results of our mismatch, we should question the foundations of our expectations, and evaluate our capacity for the task. Instead, we persist in our errors.

The Nigerian government does feel that it owes us something. It tries to act that way too.

That is why we spend billions of dollars yearly on institutions claiming to work for us.

That is why we have written into law and are signatories to many fine words proclaiming the rights of citizens.

In my opinion, Nigerians, when discussing politics, act like if they found themselves caught in an artillery barrage, they would respond by writing 'thou shalt not kill'. That attitude maybe explains the well-documented problems with our military. It might not be fancy, but surely, the only sensible thing to do in an artillery barrage is dog and duck.

All those words we inherited and copied are not the essence of governance. They reflect norms extant within those societies. Transported to a society without them, they as effective as 'End Police Brutality' signs meeting the bullets of brutal security forces. A society that refuses to adapt its government to its governance will always flounder. If Nigerians want things to change, then there is no substitute for understanding first who we are, finding out what we must do to change and then doing it. It is a journey where it is impossible to skip any steps.

Literal cargo cultists hanging around, peacefully, waiting for their engine-less tin plane to take off.

Nigerians would have accused the guy in the head-dress of looting the money for the extra wheel that would have made the plane fly.

He, in turn, would accuse the white wrapper tribe of arrogance. Just look at that suspicious fellow, standing when everybody else is sitting. Blame him!

Tut tut tut, @Joke-dis-is tweets; obviously, the problem is that there are no women among the cargo cultists. The women are being forced to do all the work (#demolishthepatriarchy). If the women were in charge, they'd make the plane fly because they can naturally intuit that planes need turbines.

The mysterious blogger, Fountainhead, points out that the Wright brothers were entrepreneurs. Government and its dead hand is the problem. 'Business is not government's business'.

The Control Tower nation are clearly about to secede. If you zoom in, you will see their youths talking about how they will make the plane fly when they leave the rest of the cargo cultists. As everybody knows, during that one skirmish they had with the rest, they alone made paper planes fly!

Why do Nigerians think they're the giants of Africa?

Luke Pretorius Lives in South Africa July 3, 2020

I don't know if they do or not but if they do, there are a few valid reasons for why they may feel that way:

ECONOMY - Nigeria has Africa's largest economy with a GDP of about 400 billion USD. South Africa is second with about 370 billion USD.

POPULATION - Nigeria is the most populace country on the continent (by quite a large margin) with a pop. of 201 million people. Ethiopia is second with 112 million people.

CULTURE EXPORTS - Nigeria's film industry (Nollywood) is the world's second largest film producer and therefore has a large impact on the industry across Africa, particularly in west Africa. Nigeria is also home to the continent's largest music industry.

What is the possibility of the next president of Nigeria working for the greater good of The People/Nation?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

Observer of Political Trends Nov 16

Less than zero. Let us stop doing this.

The cult of the president is a legacy of autocratic Governor-Generals and Dictators. It is not how things should work. That the Americans are now contributing to the cult changes nothing. They are also wrong.

A president is one man. In our case, the limelight is on him because of contracts and appointments. That is because so much of the Nigerian economy is government-related: FOREX access, Civil Service jobs, project contracts etc. Therefore, people with things to lose want you obsessing over who the president or governor will be. But as our voting turnout shows, despite the flood of propaganda, most Nigerians don't care about those people. Without connections or blood relationships, their effect on you is limited.

Nigerians have the right instincts. The brown envelopes are trying to cloud reality.

The people who truly matter are the legislators and your council executives. Councillors and LGA chairmen matter because they are supposed to be in charge of our immediate environments. Every time you suffer bad roads from your street up to the main thoroughfare, don't blame Aso Rock. Every month, billions of Naira are released to LGAs. Because they are usually appointees of governors, not representatives of an engaged electorate, they allow governors to control the funds. Money that should go to your community gets funnelled elsewhere.

Second, legislators are the people who set the laws that guide us. If your problem is borrowing, they can fix it. If you want Presidents that can't guarantee security to be impeached. Na dem too. If you want politicians to earn less money. All join. They are the only ones that can work for 'the greater good'. That is by creating proper laws to regulate our society.

Focus more on who they are and what they can do. The current Senate President of Nigeria is in office with 92,000 votes. Far too few voters for so much power.

Put the Presidency in its rightful place. Presidents are executors of the people's will, as determined by their legislative representatives. They are not miracle-workers or father figures like propaganda would have us believe.

Diminishing the presidency is only a start. But it is better than the status quo.

Related Links

Why has the Nigerian president not been impeached? Why is the process so hard (I realise that the process is unique to Nigeria so I'd be grateful if a Nigerian can explain thoroughly)?

What would you do if you were the president of Nigeria?

How is life in Nigeria?

How is the president of Nigeria?

How is Buhari better than Jonathan as Nigerian President?

Should a woman be the next Nigerian president?

Who is likely to be Nigeria's president in 2019?

What can you say if Mayor Rodrigo Duterte will be the next president of the Philippines?

How good is Nigeria's President Buhari?

What are the best things about living in Nigeria?

Can Nigeria achieve good governance?

Will Nigeria ever get better?

Why is somebody like Buhari the president of Nigeria in a country of more competent hands?

How do Nigerians feel about Chinese people working in Nigeria?

Is Nigeria a failed state?

The artifact returned to Nigeria by the British government, was it not supposed to come alongside with a compensation?

Ian Holloway Lives in The United KingdomUpdated Nov 19

The artefact was a cock.

It was not the only one judging by the question.
The artefact was not delivered by the British Government but Jesus College, Cambridge University

Sonita Alleyne, the master of Jesus College at the University of Cambridge, with Professor Abba Isa Tijani, the director general of the National Commission for Museums and Monuments of Nigeria, with the bronze cockerel Okukor
Image: courtesy of Jesus College, Cambridge

Professor Tijani commended the college as a "great example to other institutions and other countries" and expressed optimism that Nigeria's National Commission of Museums and Monuments will return to Cambridge in future to receive further Benin bronzes from the university's Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology.

He anticipated future co-operation with international institutions to show and research the returning Benin bronzes. "I believe we will partner with the international community, with museums all over the world, so we will be able to [share] collections for collaborations in exhibitions, in research. We look forward to that."

Tijani also called on the British Museum, which holds around 900 pieces from the kingdom of Benin, the world's largest single collection, to "take a cue from what Jesus College have done and what Aberdeen will do". The Nigerian government this month submitted a formal letter to the British Museum requesting the repatriation of Nigerian antiquities in its collection.

The British Museum is prohibited from permanently removing items from its collection under a 1963 UK law. It is, however, in talks with the Nigerian authorities to lend Benin objects to the planned Edo Museum of West African Art in Benin City, as part of a wider coalition of European institutions known as the Benin Dialogue Group.
It is good to be kind to people and it is very likely that the cock in question us of more value to the descendants of the kingdom of Benin who created it.

So, I am pleased it is being given to Nigeria. Nowadays it should be feasible to make a facsimile to be shown in Cambridge.

However, I think that there is a lot of humbug written about this topic.

As far as we know the Bronzes were originally taken as compensation from the Kingdom of Benin after their killing of some unarmed British people in 1897. (The British people may have had arms in their baggage but they were not armed when killed).

In the 19th century if you the king of a country kidnapped or killed any British people, you were likely to have your palace burned down and treasures taken back to UK and sold off to pay for the military expedition. This happened in Abyssinia and China for example (and again there are understandable campaigns for "looted" artefacts to be returned).

That's right, the British would carry out a punitive expedition and would expect the punished country to pay for the ammunition and other expenses, and this was normally done by selling off spoils of war.

Nowadays we would see this as unjust and disproportionate, but then it was standard policy, and not just by the British.

"Ways of thinking change, and what seemed perfectly normal two centuries ago is literally unthinkable. War and conquest used to be a quite standard way of shifting boundaries about. If you lost a war, you could expect to give up money, art treasures, territory, weapons and anything else the victor demanded." Professor Magaret MacMillan The Uses and Abuses of History Palgrave p101. [Some of you recall Chinua Achebe's Things Fall Apart where the village of Abame is burned down and many shot after the villagers kill an missionary and hang his "iron horse" (bicycle) from a tree. The local elders of nearby villages think the men of

Abame were fools as they can't have thought that that there could have been no consequences from their actions.]
Note that Benin carried out extensive military operations in its long history for example of Lagos.

There are no records of Benin handing over "looted" items let alone compensating the victims.

Had Benin captured London, you can bet they would have taken the crown jewels home.

Sauce for the goose is apparently not sauce for the gander!

Of course this does not mean that the Benin Bronzes belong in their current home, but needs to be included when people rail against British "looting".

The Benin Factor In The History Of Lagos

(Written by R.O. AJETUMOBI Ph.D) (Last Update June 18, 2021)
Historical Origin Lagos is an essential part of Lagos State which lies between longitude 20 420 and 30220 E and latitude 60220N and 60420N respectively. The land area extends into the interior of the state with district ecological zones. The geographical environment has been conducive to human habitation for as far back oral traditions can remember. The possibility of satisfying the physiological and biogenic needs, such as food, water, made Lagos to be attractive to may immigrants. The Yoruba sub-groups such as the Awori .and coastal Ijebu constitute the bulk of the indigenous inhabitant. these groups could be distinguished from other ethnic groups in the area on the basis of their language with variations of dialects, traditions of migrations whether directly or indirectly from Ife; traditions amongst most of their rulers of descent from Oduduwa (the eponymous hero of Yoruba), affinal relation with Benin, and existence of Yoruba cultural feature such as regal paraphernalia, facial makings, as well as physical outlook. The various practices and socio-political organization. The wide0spread nature of these features is in-part a product of diffusion, and ancestral connection, but largely the result of common imperial experience f groups of Edo invader from Benin. Though, the power of the Benin kingdom was impressive as early as the second half of the fifteenth century during the reign of Oba Ewuare, Benin occupation and subjugation of Lagos and its neighbourhood did not start until the sixteenth century when Benin troops and trades took effective control of the coastal region from the Niger Delta in the East to Porto Novo in the West. Ewuare ascendancy to the throne of Benin in the early fifteenth century put the kingdom into a splendid period of successful and rapid expansion. With a formidable military arsenal, strong, well equipped and battle-ready army, Benin became a terror and lord ;of her neighbouring settlements. She successfully laid the tradition of imperial annexation of coastal Yorubaland. This interest was reinforced in the 1550 as a result of the relative peace at home and the growing European trade on the coast which Benin wanted to control. The need for areas of economic control, security, free flow of coastal trade, as a result of the need to secure the base for harnessing goods from the inland made the control of Lagos a necessity for Benin. By the opening of the sixteenth century a large section of eastern Yoruba land had come under Benin influence and the Ilaje territory on modern Ondo state served a passage to the far western coast in the area of modern Lagos. Thus, the areas beteen Lagos and Porto Novo became the focus of Benin military activities till the seventeenth century. In this century, Mahin, an Ilaje communities founded by immigrants from the neighbourhood of Itsekiri and were sdestroyed, while Isheri Olofin, Lagos, Ido, Ebute Metta, Oto-Olofin and other

http://www.edoworld.net/THE_BENIN_FACTOR_IN_THE_HISTORY_OF_LAGOS.html

[It is undoubtable true the British did have design on Benin at the time their subjects were slain were not innocently selling toys etc but you can't just choose to kill people who are unarmed because you don't like their policy and then expect there to be no comeback.

I have heard it argued that the British people killed in Benin were invading the country but this is feeble; it is plain that had the British been invading that they would have won insofar that when the did invade, they did, er…and took the bronzes artworks we are discussing!

I have also often heard the counter that "it was the British who were there, if they hadn't been there there would have been no problem" but this is also feeble, in my view . The British didn't hang Luftwaffe aircrew from lampposts during the Blitz when the Germans were trying to bomb the place flat! In an earlier age, Spanish ships crews from the Armada were often killed when they were shipwrecked in Ireland in 1588, and most people agree these actions were crimes against the Spanish sailors.

Summary

It is good that the artefact is given to a place where it originated and is highly valued.

However, the notion that when the British took the item that they were behaving in an egregious manner judged by contemporary standards is a selective and wrong-headed example of presentism.

Other views are, of course, available, but I hope that helped.

Related Links

Why can't our (Nigeria) colonial masters (Britain) rescue us from all the problems Nigeria is going through right now?

Why doesn't the British museum return the artifacts stolen during colonisation?

Why did the British colonize Nigeria?

Oxford University recently announced the return of a Nigerian artifact stolen during British imperialism in Africa. Did Europeans finally decide to accept their satanic past and embrace historical truth?

Why are the most developed African countries (Kenya, South Africa, Nigeria, etc.) former British colonies? Doesn't it show that the British Empire was the most benevolent European colonial power?

Why had those that stole artifacts from Nigeria, never been called thieves?

How true is this? Did the British relinquish power to Northern Nigeria?

How did Britain colonize Nigeria without any form of resistance?

What does the British Government benefit from the unity of Nigeria?

Will the British Museum ever return the artifacts that they stole from other nations?

Is it possible for the British to come back and recolonize Nigeria?

Under what terms would Great Britain agree to legally recolonize Nigeria and deal with corruption?

Why did the British destroy Nigeria?

Why are the United Kingdom universities returning the Nigerian artifacts to their original owners?

How was Nigeria sold for $1.1 million to the British?

Why are illiteracy rates higher in Pakistan, Ethiopia, Egypt, and Nigeria than in Brazil, Mexico, Colombia, and Argentina despite having almost similar populations?

Leopoldo Fernandez Suarez Operations Director 2y

Q: Why are illiteracy rates higher in Pakistan, Ethiopia, Egypt, and Nigeria than in Brazil, Mexico, Colombia, and Argentina despite having almost similar populations?

A: Good attempt, Mr. Anonymous, any possible response will only anger the people of Pakistan, Ethiopia, Egypt and Nigeria, which we (Latin Americans) respect the same way as any other nation in the world. Best.

Related Links

Why, despite having large Arab populations, do Argentina, Brazil, and Chile have a very low percentages of Muslims?

How do you see India, the USA, China, the EU, Nigeria, Mexico and Egypt being by the year 2030?

Why doesn't Argentina increase its population like Brazil (210M) and Mexico (123M) and instead have just much less (44M)?

Where do you see these countries wrt economy in 2030 - England, USA, China, Mexico, Indonesia, Russia, India, Saudi Arabia, Nigeria, Germany and Japan? Please rank them 1 through 11...

Which country (Mexico, Chile, Argentina, Brazil) is the best?

Which country has the most promising future on the Muslim world among Egypt, Iran, Indonesia, Pakistan, and Nigeria?

If Romania is a poor country, then why does it not have a high birth rate as other poor countries like Pakistan and Nigeria do?

Which country is more dangerous, Mexico or Colombia?

Why are there few cases of citizens from Cyprus, Greece, Spain, & Italy who migrate illegally but there are many cases from Honduras, Pakistan, Mexico & Vietnam that migrate illegally despite these countries having an unemployment rate less than 8%?

How mutually intelligible is the Spanish spoken in Spain with that spoken in Mexico, Chile, Argentina, Colombia, etc.?

Why is the fertility rate of Brazil and Chile so low, compared with that of Mexico and Argentina?

Russia is a developing country much like Nigeria and Kenya. So why doesn't it have a high birth rate and a low literacy rate? Why does Russia seem much more socially developed than economically developed?

Do the wealthy in Brazil, Argentina, Colombia, and Mexico live better than most people in Spain and Portugal?

Why does Africa have such a high population (Many countries with 100 million + like Nigeria, Ethiopia, Congo, Egypt)?

Why does China have a lower GDP per capita than countries like Mexico, Brazil, Turkey, Argentina, and Chile, despite having better technology and broader coverage of various technologies?

Answered by Khalifa I. A. Nov 14

If you consider the fact that he owns no mansions around the country or abroad, has no known company to his name, no foreign account or investments. You can give him that credit for now but this can only become true if it remains so after he leaves office. As his true value can only become known when he leaves office and the opposition gains access to information concerning his wealth.

Related Links

Is it a good idea for a young foreign professional to move to Bauchi, Nigeria?

Why is PayPal not available in some African countries?

Is it a good idea for a young foreign professional to move to Katsina, Nigeria?

Who is preventing Africa from uniting ?

Why is poverty major in Nigeria?

Are there natural risks in Nnewi, Nigeria?

Why does Nigeria keep producing mind-blowing artists every year?

How is it possible to get paid from AppNana Benn in Africa?

In Nigeria, how do I get a loan?

Do you think 100% implementation of the better policies in Africa can or will boost her development like that of the developed countries?

How is it possible to keep faith while you need to work and poverty is around the corner in Africa?

Is there any advice for Africans on COVID 19?

Do African countries have a good education system? What are the strengths and weaknesses?

How do I get on an effective method of birth control for free or at a very low cost? I'm 18 and I live in Kaduna, Nigeria. Do I need health insurance for it if I go to a private hospital?

I am from Nigeria. My country banned buying of cryptocurrencies through banks. How do I buy and where?

Why do African countries have a lot of natural resources but they still have a poor standard of living?

Answered by Gabriel Undie Nov 17

This is because the cost of exploration, production and refinement is very high. The technologies involved in production are not made in Africa, and they are not easy to purchase. This is why over 70% of your crude products are taken overseas for production. Again, another overwhelming drawback is stealing and corruption among the leaders who were supposed to have utilized these resources maximally to ease out poverty from the Land.

Related Links

Why has Nigeria remained the poverty capital of the world according to FDC regardless of her enormous human and natural resources?

Why is it so difficult to make money in Nigeria without illegal means?

Why must Africa suffer from the South?

What are the major causes that resulted to the problems of Nigeria, do to the rise of crises, terrorisms, insurgencies, and banditories?

What is the difference between culture and traditions?

Is it really hard for people in Nigeria to get money for a US visa?

Is South Africa safe to visit in 2022?

Will the current President of Nigeria, Muhammed Buhari be seen as a good President if he eventually leaves office? Giving his antecedents

South Africa is pin-pointed as a source of the extremely dangerous COVID-19 Omicron Variant, but why are COVID-19 cases and deaths well-controlled in South Africa? Does it mean the variant is not deadly?

Which African country does not have mosquitoes?

How can I join a football team in Nigeria?

How can I shop with my Nigeria debit card without an OTP because I'm not with my card registered number here? Can I get a site to shop without OTP?

Do you know you can get quality polished gem accessories from gem_welry in Lagos, Nigeria and it can be delivered to any part of Nigeria, or it can be delivered to any part of the globe with a shipping company of your choice?

What is wrong with giving someone something or receiving from someone with left hand in some African countries?

How do I minimize agribusiness (poultry, etc.) cost of production in Nigeria?

What are 5 things Nigeria has done first in Africa?

NIGERIA. Answered by Asadu Joseph Fri

First African Nation to win gold medal in Olympic Football tournament (Atlanta 96)

Firstst woman, globally and the first African to serve as Director-General of WTO (Ngozi Okonjo-Iweala)

Wole Soyinka of Nigeria become the first African to win Nobel Prize for literature

Nigeria was the first country in Africa to own TV station (NTA)

Nigeria model Agbani Darego was the first African woman to win the miss world pageant

Related Links

Why has Nigeria remained the poverty capital of the world according to FDC regardless of her enormous human and natural resources?

Why is it so difficult to make money in Nigeria without illegal means?

Why must Africa suffer from the South?

What are the major causes that resulted to the problems of Nigeria, do to the rise of crises, terrorisms, insurgencies, and banditories?

What is the difference between culture and traditions?

Is it really hard for people in Nigeria to get money for a US visa?

Is South Africa safe to visit in 2022?

Will the current President of Nigeria, Muhammed Buhari be seen as a good President if he eventually leaves office? Giving his antecedents

South Africa is pin-pointed as a source of the extremely dangerous COVID-19 Omicron Variant, but why are COVID-19 cases and deaths well-controlled in South Africa? Does it mean the variant is not deadly?

Which African country does not have mosquitoes?

How can I join a football team in Nigeria?

How can I shop with my Nigeria debit card without an OTP because I'm not with my card registered number here? Can I get a site to shop without OTP?

Do you know you can get quality polished gem accessories from gem_welry in Lagos, Nigeria and it can be delivered to any part of Nigeria, or it can be delivered to any part of the globe with a shipping company of your choice?

What is wrong with giving someone something or receiving from someone with left hand in some African countries?

How do I minimize agribusiness (poultry, etc.) cost of production in Nigeria?

Why is it that other Africans are blacks while northern Africans like Moroccans are white in colour?

Françoise Marie Master's Degree in Public Administration, Syracuse UniversityUpdated Oct 30

White North Africa is a myth. As someone said : the whiteness of North Africa is the biggest joke of the universe. The average North African is dark skinned with visible and well documented black ancestry dating back to prehistoric times. The racist concept of “nigrescence” was equally applied to North Africans.

North Africa is not a “ black free” region of Africa. North African Blacks are hardly talked about, seen on TV or portrayed in movies. They are an invisible, silent and discriminated community as there is a color line (the paler, the better) in all North African countries. Some of the blackest Africans are found among the Nubians of Egypt. Nubians are not “Sub-Saharan” people.

Moroccans are not white people, except for the descendants of Eurasian invaders and slaves. They are not the original inhabitants. They are not the aboriginal populations. Morocco was called Mauretania, the Land of the Mauri (Moors in English). Vikings raided Mauretania in the 9–10th and described its populations as black people. The Mauri were so black that their land was called Mauretania by the Romans. The Latin Mauri (plural of Maurus) is the equivalent of the Greek Mavro for Black. Google Translate translates Mavro into Black.

Abiola Adewoyin Knows English Commented Thu

Love is Natural Blacks are generally cool and loving until they destroy the peace.

1-The Wall of Benin at over 16,000km long, in Edo State, is the longest ancient earthwork in the world. It is four times longer than TheGreatWallOfChina. The Wall of Benin was destroyed by the British in 1897 during the named Punitive expedition. Disjointed pieces of the wall remain in Edo, with a large proportion of them being used by the residents for construction purposes. This wall can make a typical Nigerian man go angry.

1-

2- Virginia’s Central LUNATIC ASYLUM for COLORED INSANE in 1870, patient Georgiana Page is described as a “USELESS OLD HARLOT” which was the FIRST hospital of its kind in the world, the first mental institution founded solely for the care of BLACK women who watch their children taken and sold!!! Like any woman would, a slave would become severely depressed, suicidal and mentally insane after her baby was snatched from her arms and sold to another plantation owner or murdered, and/or watching her father, mother, brother, sister, grandparents be hung from a tree, burned to ashes, whipped to death, dragged by horse and carriage ; yet still, no apology, no reparations, no nothing. Want to talk about torture, neglect, poverty and horrid conditions? Slavery did not end with the Emancipation Proclamation, and neither did the suffering. Slavery syndrome and cultural trauma did not end there, it had only begun.

3- These are the Muse Brothers. Their biological names are George and Willie Muse. They were two albino brothers;

In 1899 they were kidnapped as boys in Truevine, Virginia by bounty hunters and were forced into the circus, labeled as “freak show” performers.

Their owners showcased the brothers in circuses where they were exploited for profit in so-called freak shows. The Muse Brothers became famous across the United States as “Eko and Iko”, the “White Ecuadorian Cannibals”, the “Sheep Headed Men”, the “Sheep Headed Cannibals”, the “Ministers from Dahomey” and “Ambassadors from Mars”. George and Willie were forced to grow their hair into massive “dreadlocks“ which together with their white skin and bluish eyes were exhibited as rarities. They were also billed as “Darwin’s Missing Links” and “Nature’s Greatest Mistakes”. The boys were not permitted to go to school, neither were they paid for their work. They were literally kept in slavery.

One of their owners had found that George and Willie harboured the ability to play any song on almost any instrument, from the xylophone to the saxophone and mandolin, and that made them even more famous and more valuable ‘assets’ to owners of travelling circuses. However, after all this time, their illiterate mother had not ceased looking for her boys.

In the fall of 1927, the brothers were on a tour with Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus to Roanoke, little did the boys know they were coming home from which they had disappeared nearly three decades back.

It came to their mother’s attention that the The Greatest Show On Earth was in town and she was determined to find them. It was a tough decision to confront the Ringling Brothers who were powerful multimillionaires who also had the attention of the heavyweight politicians and law enforcement.

Their mother tracked them down and eventually found the boys working for the Ringling Brothers circus and surprised them while they were on stage and their family reunited, 28 years later since they had gone missing in the very same town. The poor and powerless black woman stood up to police and big shot circus owners and successfully took her sons home.

Answered by A.D.A 20h

Colonialism, because it birthed the country to begin with, without the consent of the people(here comes the reason for the civil war and ethnic divides), solely to satisfy the greed of the white man, who abandoned the country prematurely, to cater for herself in the name of independence. How on earth didn't they expect a premature baby like Nigeria to cope, without all the required guidance and care. So colonialism birthed those other factors.

Related Links

How do I make it to the WWE from Nigeria?

What are the similarities between the Chaaga tribe from Tanzania and the Zulu tribe from South Africa?

What do you think about the governor inviting Mrmacaroni, Faz, and Seun Kuti for a peace walk? I think they should go for the walk.

Why does the country of "Niger" have a racist name?

Can someone who knows say if Idi Amin expelled the Indians because he was a Muslim?

Will Nigeria overcome current challenges?

How did 'agbero' (guys that stand on the road collecting money from commercial vehicles after loading and other stuff) start in Nigeria?

What happens to those that have purchased tickets already if any country bans travellers from Nigeria

How will the omicron variant affect the economic activity in Africa?

If Egypt were to have a drought, would Ethiopia be forced to open the dam?

Is Cush Ethiopia or Sudan? When I read in some websites it refers to ancient Ethiopia and another websites it referring to Sudan.

Why are African borders porous?

What steps can be taken to increase the prosperity of the people of West Africa?

How do we encourage a good quality of life in West Africa?

Why do African countries have a lot of natural resources but they still have a poor standard of living?

Answered by Gabriel Undie Nov 17

This is because the cost of exploration, production and refinement is very high. The technologies involved in production are not made in Africa, and they are not easy to purchase. This is why over 70% of your crude products are taken overseas for production. Again, another overwhelming drawback is stealing and corruption among the leaders who were supposed to have utilized these resources maximally to ease out poverty from the Land.

Related Links

Why has Nigeria remained the poverty capital of the world according to FDC regardless of her enormous human and natural resources?

Why is it so difficult to make money in Nigeria without illegal means?

Why must Africa suffer from the South?

What are the major causes that resulted to the problems of Nigeria, do to the rise of crises, terrorisms, insurgencies, and banditories?

What is the difference between culture and traditions?

Is it really hard for people in Nigeria to get money for a US visa?

Is South Africa safe to visit in 2022?

Will the current President of Nigeria, Muhammed Buhari be seen as a good President if he eventually leaves office? Giving his antecedents

South Africa is pin-pointed as a source of the extremely dangerous COVID-19 Omicron Variant, but why are COVID-19 cases and deaths well-controlled in South Africa? Does it mean the variant is not deadly?

Which African country does not have mosquitoes?

How can I join a football team in Nigeria?

How can I shop with my Nigeria debit card without an OTP because I'm not with my card registered number here? Can I get a site to shop without OTP?

Do you know you can get quality polished gem accessories from gem_welry in Lagos, Nigeria and it can be delivered to any part of Nigeria, or it can be delivered to any part of the globe with a shipping company of your choice?

What is wrong with giving someone something or receiving from someone with left hand in some African countries?

How do I minimize agribusiness (poultry, etc.) cost of production in Nigeria?

What is really responsible for the poverty in African countries?

Answered by Marcus Chukwunwike a Nigerian 7h

At the core of African poverty is colonialism and it's afterbirth, neocolonialism.

Before colonialism most African societies were progressing at their own pace. The sense of community in such societies made it practically impossible for the kind of poverty we see today to occur. That's because no matter how bad things got for anybody, they could depend on members of their community and extended families to help cushion their hardship. It was in that era that, the now popular proverb, had meaning: “It takes a whole village to raise a child.”

Colonialism broke that sense of oneness among the people. That's because the most significant gifts that colonialism bequeathed to Africa, are the twin maladies of the West: self-centredness and megalomania. Suddenly, African societies became exposed to rulers who did not owe the people any alliegance. All the colonial powers did was amass as much wealth as they could and send them off to their home countries, while their representatives in Africa lived in huge mansions with expansive lawns and gardens that were not cultivated for food. They had ‘house boys' and other domestic servants doing their every bidding. Their children didn't appear to have a care in the world. They had drivers chauffer them about and nannies to care for them. Most wives of the colonialists spent their time showing off their flower gardens, competing for who would host the grandest parties and who was the first to wear the latest fashion from Europe.

They imported canned foods and wines from Europe, and in the event that they became sick; went to Europe for treatment.

Of course Africans and the emerging African elite were watching them and taking copious notes. In fact, the more Western education the natives had, the more likely their chances of being welcomed into the circle of the colonizers. This became something to aim for among the natives — their own utopia.

By the time the clamour for independence came around and the West decided to ‘hand over' power to Africans, it was only natural that they would anoint those natives they had indoctrinated into their own ways of thinking. That is why those we have as leaders across Africa today are nothing but ‘white men in black skin', to borrow from Franz Fanon.

They display the same expropriating tendencies of the colonialists. They live in Africa, but have more alliegance to and properties in the West. They enrich themselves at the expense of the people, live in secluded quarters far from the people they are leading; take regular holidays and sick leaves to their palaces in Europe, send their children to the most prestigious European schools, while their wives throw lavish parties among themselves and compare European designer clothes, bags and shoes. All these, while millions of those they are supposed to be leading wallow in abject poverty. It can be argued that the richer African rulers become, the poorer their people.

Until Africans find a way to reengineer their societies and make them more inclusive, rather than exclusive, poverty will only get worse — even while the continent is blessed with so much.

The irony of it all is that the West has managed to put social welfare schemes in place to take care of their own poor. While Africa that had such a scheme as part of her culture, has lost it completely.

Related Links

What is the total West African landmass?

Is it true that in Nigeria, you cannot walk the streets safe if you have hair extensions?

As good leader, what are the major challenge's of our nation?

I have a student lodge of 11 rooms (single) to sell in Nasarawa State University, Kefi, Nigeria. How do I go about it?

Can Lyme disease be treated in Nigeria?

What is your favorite African music?

Are people from Lagos Nigeria Scammers

Which country colonized Bahrain?

How would you rate the response of the Nigerian government with regards to the recent entry ban due to covid-19 by the UK?

How can I find a job in Nigeria and Africa as a PR and HR expert?

Do social networks bridge the cultural divide between countries?

What is a country without selfless and competent leaders?

Will African re-colonization solve African problems?

Due to high increasing poverty rate, can the world put a state of emergency on some African countries?

What is the most impressive place in the Sahara desert?

What separates Nigeria from other African countries (both good and bad)?
Updated 4y

Nigeria is the most densely populated country in Africa by far: Lagos has double Cairo's population, the next largest city in the continent. Roughly 1 in 6 Africans is a Nigerian, and 1 out of 4 sub-Saharan Africans claim the country as their homeland.

In the mid 1970s Lagos legendary traffic jams led then president Murtala Muhammad to propose a new capital in the center of the country. In a twist of irony president Muhammad was assassinated in a traffic jam shortly afterwards. His widow lives still and owns the Palmateum, a luxurious garden housing hundreds of species of palms in the new capital's Maitama neighborhood. It's a favorite place for elite wedding parties and those looking to escape from the traffic and urban hassles of Abuja today.

In spite of projections that will put Nigeria only behind China and India as the world's third most populated country on the planet within the next 30 or so years, the actual country is only 1/6 of the size of the USA.

Geographically Nigeria is roughly square and most of the land is arable. It's a green country (hence the flag, which has three broad sections, a vertical green/white/green with a central seal), with giant granite monoliths rising hundreds and sometimes thousands of feet above the fields at their bases. Gentle rivers course throughout much of the land, with Africa's third longest river, the Niger, winding through its center and ending in a two hundred mile wide delta. Much of Nigeria's oil (the country is the world's fourth largest petroleum exporter) comes from the Niger delta.

Two thousand years ago the Nok people in what is today Kaduna state an hour north of the capital Abuja independently discovered how to smelt iron and spread this knowledge across Africa and all the way down to South Africa in one of humanity's more remarkable journeys, the Bantu migration.

Nigeria is home to over 500 distinct languages, compared to roughly three dozen in all of Europe, and almost as many tribes, although three main people, the Hausa, Yoruba, and Igbo serve as a repository of many of these tribes.

In spite of rampant poverty (7 out of 10 Nigerians live on little more than a dollar a day) Nigerians are the most educated group of American immigrants, holding more advanced degrees per capita than Asians or Europeans:

Dirichi Umunna , Nigeria is Home. Answered Aug 7, 2017

You see that green patch of land, that is Nigeria. You see the outer lines that highlight the green patch? That's exactly what separates Nigeria from other African countries.

It Isn't Just Asian Immigrants Who Thrive

It’s a nation of stark contrasts, great beauty, and unparalleled human talent. It’s also my home.

Related Links

Putting Nigeria side by side with South Africa, which of the two countries has the potential of leading the African continent out of the neo-colonial state they are in, considering both economic and military strength of both countries?

Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?

What made the Nigerian music industry popular across Africa? How did they do it?

Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?

Which African country produces the best music, Nigeria, Congo or South Africa?

Why is it that outsiders hate Nigeria?

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?

How do South Africans feel about Nigerians?

Do non-Nigerians listen to and like Nigerian music?

Why are Nigerians hated so much around the world?

Is there any hope for Nigeria?

Why does Nigeria have such a bad reputation in the world?

What is something most people don't know about Nigeria?

Scott Wood B.S.C. from McGill University (Graduated 2005) Dec 3

Nigeria will soon be the third most populated country on earth, and home to the most populated city on the planet. Nigeria has a surging population. By 2100, Nigeria will have more people than The USA, and every other country, except China and India. Furthermore, Greater Lagos will have 70 million people, or more. It will have twice the population of the current most populated metropolis, greater Tokyo. The increasing population will be caused by high birth rates, decreasing infant mortality and longer life expectancy. Move aside, Shanghai and NYC!

Related Links

Why is freelancing not popular in Nigeria or even Africa?

Has the UN recognized Biafra?

Now that the Canada border is closed from Nigeria, is there any hope of opening next year?

What can be done to stop corruption and poverty in Africa?

What could Nigeria's population be not considering census figures and the UN estimate since they are claims of inflation of census figures in the country?

Why do Nigerians see art students as dull or average learners, while science students are seen as brilliant or intelligent students?

How easy is it for an African to study in the UK?

How many African countries earn directly from the Quora partnership program?

Can we really say Buhari's 6 years of ruling Nigeria affected the nation this poorly or is it just an evidence of the inability of past governments to grow the Nigerian economy?

How well can someone run a tutorial class for secondary school students profitably in Lagos?

Why are African and Asian countries known to be poor?

What is really responsible for the poverty in African countries?

In what ways are people's rights being violated across Nigeria? What are your suggestions to curtail these absurdities?

What is the best way to start the urbanization process of my rural community in Nigeria?

What is the best way to start the urbanization process of my rural community in Nigeria?

What is the craziest military tactic ever used?

Ossai Ceejay Content Writer/Blogger Updated 11mo

Despite the fact that Nigeria is a very horrible place, any nigerian would agree with me that there's one thing we never lack, and that is drama, especially from our government.

Reading through some of the other answers, I saw different brilliant tactics like advanced recons, drone attacks, etc.

Today (1st December, 2020) our police was caught using a very silly tactic which would make the word "unconventional" seem like an understatement.

Our police force are now using PHOTOSHOP!

The nigerian police force is one of the most incompetent police force in the entire world.

To give you a glimpse into their incompetence, Nigerians have a popular joke about just how useless they are, let me just tell you already;

“if an American policeman wants to catch a tiger, he'll lure in the tiger with some meat and while it's eating it, he'll sneak up and capture it.”

“If a Russian policeman wants to catch a tiger, he'll kidnap the tiger's wife, which would then lure the tiger out of hiding"

“But if a Nigerian policeman wants to catch a tiger, all he has to do is catch a stray cat, beat it up severely until it admits it's a tiger and then lock it up"

That may just be a joke but it's actually what they're known for. They don't care about standard procedure, they just arrest because it's much easier to do so than to conduct an investigation. Take a look at this;

Did you see the pictures? This is exactly how the prison service is in Nigeria. You know what's even more shocking?

Our police force is so incompetent that 70% of people in prison are SUSPECTS! Let me put that into perspective; statistically speaking, if there are a hundred people in each of the pictures I just showed you, 70 of them are not supposed to be there.

A suspect is not supposed to be held for more than 24hrs if there's no real evidence. However, there are some suspects that end up dying in prison without even being sentenced.

I'm really digressing big time, I'm sorry, I just get carried away anytime I talk about Nigeria.

Okay, the original answer said photoshop and photoshop you shall see;

Since our police force is to incompetent to ever get anything right, they resorted into photoshopping pictures of criminals they managed to catch and combining them with a lot of live ammunitions so that it'll look like they caught top level terrorists. Take a look at the pictures;

Check this one they did a while back

Can you see what we're dealing with here in Nigeria? I can do a more convincing work with a calculator than what those Bozos did.

The police force was torn to pieces by Nigerians on Twitter and as I write this, it's trending on Twitter.

Nigeria we hail thee!

-Ossai Ceejay ~

Related Links

What do you think was the most ingenious military tactic ever executed?

What was the most brutal military tactic in history?

What are the (seemingly) dumbest military tactics used that actually worked?

Who was the most cowardly military leader in history?

What is the most extraordinary psychological war tactic that has been used on a battlefield in world history so far?

What was the craziest military tactic ever used in the Soviet Union?

China - World Leader

China has been lending a lot of money to Nigeria recently. And there has been this rumor that Nigeria may lose her sovereignty to China if she couldn't pay up her debts. Do you actually think Nigeria sovereignty could be lost to China?

Answered by Jamie Wang Jul 29

Originally Answered: China has been borrowing a lot of money to Nigeria recently. And there have been this rumor that Nigeria may lose her sovereignty to China if she couldn't pay up her debts. Do you actually think Nigeria sovereignty could be lost to China?

Say Nigeria decided to not payback China's loan, what would happen?

Would China go over to Africa and take over Nigeria? No likely. Even if China was the evil empire as western media described, it should start from somewhere close.

Starting from Nigeria is not a smart move.

Especially when you realize that this is how Chinese navy should move that it's even worse of an idea.

So without military threat, what would happen if Nigeria decided to not payback China's loan? Besides the national credit of Nigeria, nothing really.

Plus, Nigeria could always pay with natural resouces or operating rights of certain infrastructures, such as ports or railways.

Numbers in thousand TEUs, Ranks for 2018, data from Eurostat[1][2]

Rank in Europe	Port	City	Country	Sea	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	2017	2018	% Change 2011/2018
1	Port of Rotterdam	Rotterdam	Netherlands	North Sea	11,340	11,418	11,021	11,634	11,577	11,675	12,892	13,598	+19.9
2	Port of Antwerp	Antwerp	Belgium	North Sea	8,317	8,174	8,256	8,812	9,370	9,891	10,032	10,830	+30.2
3	Port of Hamburg	Hamburg	Germany	North Sea	9,035	8,891	9,302	9,775	8,848	8,929	8,860	8,741	-3.3
4	Port of Bremen-Bremerhaven	Bremerhaven	Germany	North Sea	5,911	6,111	5,822	5,731	5,467	5,510	5,458	5,442	-7.9
5	Port of Valencia	Valencia	Spain	West Med	4,332	4,471	4,328	4,407	4,609	4,693	4,814	5,169	+19.3
6	Port of Piraeus	Athens	Greece	East Med	1,681	2,815	3,199	3,493	3,360	3,736	4,120	4,910	+190.7
7	Port of Algeciras	Algeciras	Spain	West Med	3,593	4,113	3,988	4,555	4,516	4,762	4,381	4,773	+32.8
8	Port of Gioia Tauro	Gioia Tauro	Italy	West Med	3,307	3,725	3,652	3,708	3,030	3,796	3,391	4,005	+21.1
9	Port of Felixstowe	Felixstowe	United Kingdom	North Sea	3,249	3,368	3,434	4,072	4,043	4,016	4,160	3,781	+16.4

As you can see from the statistics that the port of Piraeus has been rapidly developing under the management of coscoshipping.

A busy freight port brings business and job positions, which is always a good thing for local and even national economy.

Related Links

Is Zhang Gaoli'张高丽' Korean since his name gaoli'高丽' literately mean Korea in the Chinese language?

Did Sun Tzu help his king conquer all of China?

Why did Korean and Vietnamese languages give up the Chinese characters? In contrast, why do the Japanese keep them?

Could Putin stop supporting the rebels in Eastern Ukraine or sending its troops right after the Ukrainian Rada declare and recognize that Crimea will be legally territory of Russia?

Why does criticism of China on Quora result in the critics being called uneducated or unintelligent?

How should I apply for an MBA in China having a petroleum engineering background?

If someone goes to China will last seen feature of WhatsApp appear disabled to his contacts remaining in the country the person left?

Which university is better for Chinese culture, Hong Kong Polytechnic or HKBU?

Why has the Chinese currency risen more than 8% in 2021 against the USD?

Is China polluting itself into ruin, and will they do the same to the ocean if they take over islands in the Pacific?

What are the rationales behind the Chinese being good at maths?

How will Chinese property giant evergrande bankruptcy affect China's economy and global market?

What country is the scientific center of the world now? Germany, USA, UK, China, Japan?

Why is China jealous of the USA?

How is CPEC beneficial to the business world?

NIGERIA by CKD

Why is freelancing not popular in Nigeria or even Africa?

It is so because more often than not a freelancer is seen as one without plans or future prospects and most Nigerians like structure and pattern/order for their lives so they would rather stick to a 'comfortable' job that gives 'security'. I think the idea of freelancing might become popular with the millennials and 'Westernised youth' but for now, with the involvement of elders and in order to not bring shame on one's ancestors it's in no rush to be popularised.

Wouter Eelen Degree in mediocrity from School of Life

Answered Sep 14

Yes. First thing to be aware of is that we had been hunter-gatherers for a long time so we were really good at it. People were a lot more in sync with nature Their diet was based on a lot more different things than agriculturalists, so they had more variety. They probably were more healthy too. You live, more or less, day by day. Everybody in the tribe (more a big family) had a simple function that was not that hard to accomplish, getting food. You needed a big area for a small amount of people. Population stayed under control, as it is not easy to have a lot of babies when moving around constantly. The hierarchy would be more or less equal, as the group is relatively small (20–50 people). There is no real concept of possession, as the only valuable thing is food. But since we did it for a very long time, it must have been a fullfilling life somehow, in sync with nature, living with your little tribe only. We didn't care about possession, there was only value in food. We also didn't really needed to think into the future as we didn't need to. Life is a lot less complex.

We became agriculturalists because people started to think ahead in time. If you want to have a tomato, you need think about it way up front and do a lot of actions in the future to reach your goal. When we became sedentary, we also lost all the knowledge we gathered in the forest. Life on the 'farm' was hard. Farmers did not have the proper animals at that time so they could not be used to plow something. We did not have the proper material nor knowledge to make tools to help us efficiently. Nor did we have the proper crops we have nowadays, so it was a lot harder to grow something. It also required a massive amount of human physical strenght, which is a lot more negative for your health. As it is hard to grow something, you don't grow that many different things so the variety in your diet is much more limited. But you stay in one place so you can grow the population.

Slowly growing, cross breeding crops and learn to make tools of different materials seem to have taken a long time as life for farmers was really hard for a lot of our history. When you are a hunter-gatherers tribe, everybody does their job and the forest is everybodys property. When you settle down, and the population grows, sooner or later the concept of possession and inequality is introduced. When people have, some have more and few have a lot more. Those who have a lot, have always looked for ways to control those who don't have. That is how the system works, maybe the only reason why it all still works.

But overall, health and happiness (and wealth if any) were more equally divided for hunter-gatherers than for agriculturalists. With agriculuralists, few are very happy, but most needed to work very hard until they died in horrible conditions, for a long time.

We became agriculuralists because we started to think in the future and saw that there was a lot more wealth and happiness in this way, when you can stay in one place, growing population, spending a smaller amount of time into gathering food and more in developing other skills and technology. Again, because we saw a better future. In the forest we could not see. And then you have to look at the evolution of humans to see the size of our brain growing to see why we suddenly started to think in the future after so many years of not doing it.

Related Links

What is the total West African landmass?

Is it true that in Nigeria, you cannot walk the streets safe if you have hair extensions?

As good leader, what are the major challenge's of our nation?

I have a student lodge of 11 rooms (single) to sell in Nasarawa State University, Kefi, Nigeria. How do I go about it?

Can Lyme disease be treated in Nigeria?

What is your favorite African music?

Are people from Lagos Nigeria Scammers

Which country colonized Bahrain?

How would you rate the response of the Nigerian government with regards to the recent entry ban due to covid-19 by the UK?

How can I find a job in Nigeria and Africa as a PR and HR expert?

Do social networks bridge the cultural divide between countries?

What is a country without selfless and competent leaders?

Will African re-colonization solve African problems?

Due to high increasing poverty rate, can the world put a state of emergency on some African countries?

What is the most impressive place in the Sahara desert?

Quelle est la tactique militaire la plus folle jamais utilisée ? (What is the craziest military tactic ever used?)

Hamid Sam Étudiant en droit et à la quête de connaissancesTraducteur · 3 janv.

Ossai Ceejay Content Writer/Blogger

Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Ossai Ceejay dans Quora en anglais :

Malgré le fait que le Nigéria est un endroit très horrible, n'importe quel Nigérian conviendrait avec moi qu'il y a une chose qui ne nous manque jamais, et c'est le drame, en particulier de la part de notre gouvernement.

En lisant certaines des autres réponses, j'ai vu différentes tactiques brillantes telles que les reconstitutions avancées, les attaques de drones, etc.

Aujourd'hui (1er décembre 2020), notre police a été surprise en train d'utiliser une tactique très idiote qui ferait passer le mot «non conventionnel» comme un euphémisme.

Notre force de police utilise maintenant PHOTOSHOP!

La police nigériane est l'une des forces de police les plus incompétentes au monde.

Pour vous donner un aperçu de leur incompétence, les Nigérians ont une blague populaire sur combien ils sont inutiles, laissez-moi vous dire déjà;

«Si un policier américain veut attraper un tigre, il l'attire avec de la viande et pendant qu'il le mange, il se faufile et le capture.

«Si un policier russe veut attraper un tigre, il kidnappera la femme du tigre, ce qui attirerait le tigre hors de sa cachette»

"Mais si un policier nigérian veut attraper un tigre, tout ce qu'il a à faire est d'attraper un chat errant, de le battre sévèrement jusqu'à ce qu'il admette que c'est un tigre et de l'enfermer"

C'est peut-être juste une blague, mais c'est en fait ce pour quoi ils sont connus. Ils ne se soucient pas de la procédure standard, ils arrêtent simplement parce que c'est beaucoup plus facile de le faire que de mener une enquête. Regarde ça;

Avez-vous vu les photos? C'est exactement comme ça que le service pénitentiaire est au Nigéria. Vous savez ce qui est encore plus choquant?

Notre police est tellement incompétente que 70% des personnes incarcérées sont SUSPECTS! Permettez-moi de mettre cela en perspective; statistiquement parlant, s'il y a cent personnes sur chacune des photos que je viens de vous montrer, 70 d'entre elles ne sont pas censées être là.

Un suspect n'est pas censé être détenu plus de 24 heures s'il n'y a pas de preuves réelles. Cependant, certains suspects finissent par mourir en prison sans même être condamnés.

Je m'égare vraiment, je suis désolé, je me laisse emporter chaque fois que je parle du Nigeria.

D'accord, la réponse originale disait que vous allez voir Photoshop et Photoshop;

Étant donné que notre force de police est trop incompétente pour jamais rien faire de bien, ils ont eu recours à des photos de photoshopping de criminels qu'ils ont réussi à attraper et à les combiner avec beaucoup de balles réelles pour donner l'impression d'avoir attrapé des terroristes de haut niveau. Jetez un œil aux photos

Vérifiez celui-ci qu'ils ont fait il y a quelque temps

Pouvez-vous voir à quoi nous avons affaire ici au Nigéria? Je peux faire un travail plus convaincant avec une calculatrice que ce que ces Bozos ont fait.

La police a été mise en pièces par les Nigérians sur Twitter et au moment où j'écris ceci, c'est tendance sur Twitter.

Nigeria, nous te saluons!

News Nigeria

Dangote Doesn't Give Tithe Yet He's The Richest Man In Africa - Dr. Abel Damina

Aniekpeno Ekong

The Nigerian Televangelist and General Overseer of the Power City International Ministry, Dr. Abel Damina said Dangote doesn't give tithe yet he's the richest man in Africa and giving in the Church doesn't have any reward on earth.

The host of the regular TV and radio program, Righteous Invasion Of Truth [R.I.O.T.] said, if Dangote who doesn't give tithe and offering is the richest man in Africa, then being rich is not as a result of giving tithe and offering in Church. "God is not going to bless you for giving in Church. How much are you going to give to God to bless you? God does not react to your giving. He blessed you before you knew about giving. God is the first giver and the best giver. We don't give for multiplication. If we give to God for multiplication, then Dangote is better than our God, because Dangote is not born again, doesn't give tithe and he's the richest man in Africa. With all the offerings people have been giving, why hasn't God multiplied them to be richer than Dangote? Something is wrong with that Gospel. It's fraudulent," Dr. Damina said.

He said the concept of giving to God for multiplication, is scripturally wrong and fraudulent. "The so called prosperity preachers will tell you to give and your money will multiply. God is not MMM. Stop giving to God to multiply your money, it's fraud. There is no such thing. If you want your money to increase, get more jobs, get more businesses and you will increase your money, but where God is concerned, when you give, it doesn't multiply, rather your giving translates into salvation of souls for eternal reward. There is no earthly reward for giving to God. So, stop expecting anything here. The scripture says, lay your treasures in heaven where no thief will steal from because that is where the reward will be. So, don't let anybody deceive you. God is not going to bless you for giving in Church," Dr. Damina said.

He further added that, the reason why he's committed to exposing teachings which have no scriptural basis is because he was once a victim. "I'm telling you this because I preached it, that's what they taught me. I thought it was the truth until I sat down and looked at God again, and I understood God's character and I looked at the word of God. I saw that the teaching is not correct. God gives to those who give and also to those who don't give, because he caused the rain to fall on the good and the bad. He set the sunshine on the evil and the good, that's God. There is no variables nor a shadow of turning

What are the causes of high population growth in Nigeria

Joseph Adamu

Knows a thing or two about ships and seafaring at Oil and Gas Industry (1988–present)4yLack of planning, unbridled sex drive and superstitions!!

First I'm happy that this question is being asked as most of us Nigerians bury our heads in the sand and have never considered that we have a population time bomb in our hands. During the 80s, the then junta of Ibrahim Babangida made a verbal pronouncement to limit childbirth to one per woman and there was furore everywhere especially from his northern constituent as he was being seen as the devil re-incarnate!! Population growth rate - Country Comparison

What does this portend for us? Our population is presently growing at 2.47% annually while our economy just coming out of recession grew at about 0.55% last quarter. Unemploment rate has increased to 14.2% from 13.9% last year with youth unemployment at 25.2%, yet our government has not seen or maybe not understand the impact of unbridled procreation in the face of declining income on our country.

“Currently, among the ten largest countries in the world, one is in Africa (Nigeria), five are in Asia (Bangladesh, China, India, Indonesia, and Pakistan), two are in Latin America (Brazil and Mexico), one is in Northern America (USA), and one is in Europe (Russian Federation). Of these, Of these, Nigeria’s population, currently the seventh largest in the world, is growing the most rapidly. Consequently, the population of Nigeria is projected to surpass that of the United States by about 2050, at which point it would become the third largest country in the worldNigeria’s population, currently the seventh largest in the world, is growing the most rapidly. Consequently, the population of Nigeria is projected to surpass that of the United States by about 2050, at which point it would become the third largest country in the world. By 2050, six countries are expected to exceed 300 million: China, India, Indonesia, Nigeria, Pakistan, and the USA.” - UN

Nigeria Unemployment Rate | 2006-2017 | Data | Chart | Calendar | Forecast

Wake Up Africa
Is it true that in Nigeria, you cannot walk the streets safe if you have hair extensions?

Answered by Sharon Imouks Wed

This is not true. It's really funny the way the world sees this country called Nigeria like the people live under caves.

In Nigeria you can wear your wigs, expensive or cheap weaves, and even be a drag queen (for a city like Lagos). However, in certain parts of the Northern region, they might consider an overly flashy appearance as a violation of their Sharia laws, so in such places a moderate appearance is adviced.

Also, kindly ignore the TikTok videos of wig snatching, they're majorly pranks.

Sharon Imouks Lives in Nigeria (2012–present) Wed

This is not true. It's really funny the way the world sees this country called Nigeria like the people live under caves. In Nigeria you can wear your wigs, expensive or cheap weaves, and even consider an overly flashy appearance as a violation of their Sharia laws, so in such places a moderate appearance is adviced. Also, kindly ignore the TikTok videos of wig snatching, they're majorly pranks.be a drag queen (for a city like Lagos). However, in certain parts of the Northern region, they might

Related Links

Why do dusty roads exist in cities in Asia and Africa?

How many African languages and dialects are there?

Why do people usually speak of Africa as if it were one big nation when it's really a gigantic continent comprised of many individual nations?

Most African native names are designed to either praise God or acknowledge His supremacy. Mine is "Chukwuemeka" it means "God has done so much". What is yours?

How well do Kenyans, Ugandans, Zimbabweans, and Zambians understand Nigerian pidgin, most especially in movies and songs?

Why are the Igbos dominant in trading in Nigeria?

Why do most European countries get loans with little or no interest rate while the reverse is the case for African countries?

Is it true that Ethiopia and Liberia were never colonized by the Europeans?

What are the effects of the indigenous people of Biafra in Nigeria's government?

The northern part of Nigeria consist of diverse language and culture but majority don't express or communicate with their language in public given the impression all northerners are hausa or is there a reason for it?

Why is it difficult to obtain a Nigerian passport?

Why do some governmental policies in some nations of the world, especially Africans, make policies and constitutions that impoverish the three-fourth of its population?

Do you agree the Amalgamation of Nigeria North and South protectorate in 1914 was for the selfish interest of the British empire?

Why is Lake Pidong the only crater lake in West Africa?

Why isn't there any watermelon juice manufacturer in Africa?

Wake Up Africa
Which Nigeria's civilian president since the inception of civilian rule can you consider as the best so far?

Related Links

Why do dusty roads exist in cities in Asia and Africa?

How many African languages and dialects are there?

Why do people usually speak of Africa as if it were one big nation when it's really a gigantic continent comprised of many individual nations?

Most African native names are designed to either praise God or acknowledge His supremacy. Mine is "Chukwuemeka" it means "God has done so much". What is yours?

How well do Kenyans, Ugandans, Zimbabweans, and Zambians understand Nigerian pidgin, most especially in movies and songs?

Why are the Igbos dominant in trading in Nigeria?

Why do most European countries get loans with little or no interest rate while the reverse is the case for African countries?

Is it true that Ethiopia and Liberia were never colonized by the Europeans?

What are the effects of the indigenous people of Biafra in Nigeria's government?

The northern part of Nigeria consist of diverse language and culture but majority don't express or communicate with their language in public given the impression all northerners are hausa or is there a reason for it?

Why is it difficult to obtain a Nigerian passport?

Why do some governmental policies in some nations of the world, especially Africans, make policies and constitutions that impoverish the three-fourth of its population?

Do you agree the Amalgamation of Nigeria North and South protectorate in 1914 was for the selfish interest of the British empire?

Why is Lake Pidong the only crater lake in West Africa?

Why isn't there any watermelon juice manufacturer in Africa?

Wake Up Africa!

What was life like in Nigeria under Yakubu Gowon?

Answered by Boris Ezomo Updated Jul 5

It was the golden age of Nigeria.
Not because Gowon and his administration were good, but because the country was young, and the corruption and mismanagement was at its minimum (yet)

Development everywhere.

Everything functioning

The Nigerian Naira was about one to one with the British pound and everyone was heading to Nigeria to make money.

Not only did we have a National Airline that had since folded and never recovered.

But everyone flew to Nigeria. Like Balkan (Bulgarian) LOT(Polish) Aeroflot (Soviet) and many others. None but a very few ever bothered returning to Nigeria.

We had Visa on arrival to the UK. We were so full of ourselves that few people know that it was Nigeria that first kept a Visa requirements on the British, and they reciprocated.

You did not ever need to travel, everything was in the supermarket near to you. There were chains in Nigeria. Leventis, Kingsway, Queensway, KeyCee etc. All vanished.

The middle class actually travelled abroad on holidays. And actually returned.

If you were a famous music star and did not have a tour in Nigeria. Well you are not that famous.

Sports events. International tennis events, even American pro wrestlers toured Nigeria.

International festivals were common. Like FESTAC 77.

So as we Nigerians say “Life was sweet"

But no credit to him. They just stole first before the house of cards started falling apart. So was not very noticeable.

Maltina Drinkuh , humanist polymath with special interests incl. popular tech Jul 6

Nigeria was in a mess under Yakubu Gowon. He had some ideas, but he was a career soldier with no knowledge of politics or governance at all. It was a military dictatorship, and poorly-educated soldiers were in charge and violent about it. The officers at the top of the tree, e.g. the state governors and Gowon’s cronies gained millions through the ridiculous levels of bribery and corruption while Gowon turned a blind eye.

Politics was restricted at the time as there was no democracy and the military had all the power. It was dominated by men from the North of Nigeria. Gowon's Vice-President was the arrogant, autocratic and juju-obsessed General Olusegun Obasanjo, who was to have a very long influence on Nigerian politics. Civilian politicians like Awolowo and Azikiwe were still active, although they had to be very careful not to upset the military officers who ruled the nation.

Soldiers were visible in day-to-day life then, violently enforcing 'public discipline', and manning roadblocks for security purposes. A small bribe was normal for a driver to pass through without unnecessary delays. Buses and taxis paid more as the cost of doing business.

Money was flowing due to the high oil price for Nigerian high quality, low-sulphur 'Bonny Light' crude oil. Despite this, the problems of Nigeria were exactly the same: poor or non-existent infrastructure, There were some very basic development projects, houses and especially new roads, but quality was poor because half of the money was drained away by corruption. No sooner was a road built than it began to deteriorate due to lack of maintenance. Old roads were just a series of joined potholes. Bad roads were often impassable during the rainy season. Other projects took much much longer than they should have done, and some e.g. public transport schemes were never effectively finished.

Gowon was more often blamed for mismanagement of Nigeria than for personal corruption, but his mismanagement led to several economic disasters for Nigeria. He is quoted to have said 'Nigeria's only problem is how to spend its riches'. It was a time when many Nigerians abroad returned home to put their education to use developing the country. For a while, jobs were available. Middle-class Nigerians could afford to fly to the UK to spend a couple of weeks shopping, returning with excess baggage containing goods that were not available at home.

The Naira was worth around 80p in those days, but locally plenty of people used to walk around with bare feet in the dust,, and men bare-chested, even in town. It was still controversial for women to wear jeans. Muslim men would beat or even strip a woman who wore tight trousers in the middle of Ibadan. Ibadan was the biggest city in the huge Western State, which is now Ogun, Ondo, Osun, Ekiti and Oyo States. During this time there were only 12 states in Nigeria, including the massive, wild North-Eastern State covering one-third of Nigeria. That area is now divided into Borno, Bauchi, Yobe, Gombe, Adamawa and Taraba states, all still large states. In the 1960s and 1970s, there were still undeveloped patches of land to be found in and around the major cities.

Everyday life was very tough if you didn't have money. Generators were relatively expensive, and there was the same desperate electricity situation as now. Every year it actually got worse. Sometimes you got low power - enough to light bulbs dimly, but not run anything else. Water supply was similarly a problem - normally nothing came out of the taps, you had to buy water from tankers or go collect it in buckets from public water points. For a couple of years the taps ran in Lagos, but it was salt water from the lagoon. In those days you could buy small items with 50 kobo and receive change, even 10 kobo could buy a packet of sweets. Supply and demand was very unstable, in the country as Gowon's regime allowed the erratic import of anything and everything, wasting incomprehensible amounts of Nigeria's foreign reserves. One month stockfish might be widely available after a cargo ship had unloaded a huge shipment at Apapa; a few weeks later stockfish would be impossible to get, or the price out of reach, but tinned fish or corned beef would be everywhere.

One of the toughest visible jobs men did was 'omo lanke', manually carting goods on the road in big carts seemingly too big and heavy for one man to handle. Yet despite the massive loads, single men did move market loads this way along roads even in towns like Ibadan that had several hills. The career of omo lanke was not too long, as eventually the extreme strain on joints and cartilage in even a young man's body became too much. Naturally, pay did not match the heavy physical labour involved at all. By the end of the Gowon era or soon after, the classic road 'omo lanke' ceased to be in most towns, as the state governments banned them for causing too much traffic disruption. Market women and others turned to freelancing pickup truck drivers for moving loads.

There were the first department stores during the period such as Kingsway, Leventis and UTC, but stock was very limited in them, and they tended to have many empty shelves. Imported novels were very popular, especially Mills & Boons romance novels. There was less choice in everything than now - less choice of clothes, food, drinks, electronics.

TV was terrible, there were no private stations, and most areas had only one local station. The few imported programmes were repeated endlessly. Combat (Audie Murphy) was the constant topic of conversation for some, the more sophisticated preferred Petrocelli (US lawyer show). The most popular local shows in Western Nigeria were 'Village Headmaster' and 'Masquerade' (pidgin English comedy that went on too long and lost its way).

The most popular sport was local football, with famous sponsored teams such as IICC Shooting Stars and Mighty Jets of Jos. There was no knowledge of foreign leagues and teams because there was no way to watch the matches. Strangely though, many people were enticed by newspaper adverts into betting on all kinds of obscure football leagues, even though they relied on the betting service to even tell them the match results.

Communications were very poor - only rich households had telephones, and if you had a phone, most likely the person you wanted to reach had no telephone, or the line was down. International business messages were sent by telex. Ordinary people managed by word of mouth and the very slow postal service which relied on PO boxes, not addresses. Word-of-mouth was surprisingly effective. If you visited someone and they were not at home, and you couldn't wait for them to get home, then you told a neighbour when you would come again, and when was a good time for your friend to visit you. The neighbour would definitely pass on the message.

Only about half of children attended school, there wasn't even school capacity for much more, and many of those only primary school. As it was, the municipal schools had two shifts, pupils attended morning classes or afternoon classes. More than half of all private cars on the road were Peugeots - 404s and then the legendary 504s - they were assembled in Nigeria. Vehicles, especially taxis were commonly seen moving on their last legs - with body panels missing, even no door or holes in the floor so passengers had to spread their legs in order not to lose them. Okada didn't yet exist, talk less of keke napep, and in villages and small towns you saw men cycling on Raleigh or Hercules roadster bikes, and bare-breasted women going about their daily business.

In the cities there was so much traffic, and the road system was so poorly planned that 'go-slow' was a constant problem. At peak times it was impossible to reach anywhere by road without spending hours creeping along in heavy traffic. In Lagos a system was invented by which cars were only allowed on the central roads on 'odd' and 'even' days according to the car registration plate. It was only mildly successful because in those days middle-class families were able to afford a second car (maybe a smaller Japanese car) to register with a second plate so that a car was available for use at all times. Eventually, the traffic situation in Lagos was deemed so hopeless and so impossible that the hunt began for another capital, and it was decided to design and build a new capital, Abuja in a Federal Capital Territory in the heartland of Nigeria.

Driving standards were awful, with poorly-educated drivers, badly maintained vehicles and reckless speeding. Accidents were frequent and gory, especially on the open road. Seatbelts were not used then, and in Western Nigeria a passenger attempting to fasten a dusty, filthy seatbelt would be accused of insulting the driver's skill by expecting an accident. To many Yoruba, 'expecting' and 'hoping for' an accident are basically the same thing. Road travel was important, as in addition to family events, all business was conducted face-to-face. It was during the later time of Gowon's era that Nigeria took the major step of switching from the colonial British system of driving on the left side of the road, to driving on the right, in line with other Afrian countries and the majority of countries in the world. However many older vehicles with the steering on the right side of the vehicles persisted on the roads for many years, including large freight vehicles and tankers. They were a menace.

The national anthem was 'Nigeria, We Hail Thee', which has a better tune than the current anthem, but very simplistic lyrics. Singers like Sunny Ade, Salawa Abeni and Sunny Okosun were current, the Yoruba performers specialised in sponsored 'praise songs' that bigged up rich people. Fela was in a different category to all the others. Everything he released in the period was a smash hit (e.g. Yellow Fever, Water No Get Enemy), and everybody soon learnt the full lyrics. He changed his name from Ransome-Kuti to the more fearsome Anikulapo-Kuti (We have death in our pocket).

Socially, there was a lot of insecurity due to the numbers of armed robbers. They raided banks, attacked private houses, and stopped and stole cars. Ruthlessness was the rule in these villainous activities, it was quite normal for the victims to be shot dead by the robbers. Several became infamous celebrities, such as 'Dr Oyenusi'. He, his gang and many others ended their days by public execution by firing squad on Bar Beach, Lagos. These occasions where heavily attended by Lagosians looking for an unusual outing.

Gowon presided over the period of the deadly Nigerian Civil war, which ended in a decisive defeat for the Igbo 'Biafrans' of Eastern Nigeria. It was an unequal struggle, and the Federal forces committed many dreadful atrocities and war crimes. It is estimated that over a million Eastern civilians died during the blockade imposed by the Federal forces - mainly by starvation. Gowon made efforts towards reconciliation after his victory, but his steps were clumsy and poorly-planned. The civil war was regarded as such a sensitive subject that it was not taught in schools even decades later.

I'm quite aware that this answer may be somewhat different from other answers!

Related Links

How well do Kenyans, Ugandans, Zimbabweans, and Zambians understand Nigerian pidgin, most especially in movies and songs?

Why do people usually speak of Africa as if it were one big nation when it's really a gigantic continent comprised of many individual nations?

How many African languages and dialects are there?

The northern part of Nigeria consist of diverse language and culture but majority don't express or communicate with their language in public given the impression all northerners are hausa or is there a reason for it?

Why do most European countries get loans with little or no interest rate while the reverse is the case for African countries?

On this website I have experience three types of racism. There are those that hate white people, black people, and Mexican people. Has anyone else noticed this trend? And has anyone else been a victim of racism on this website?

What are the best marketing strategies for retail stores in Africa?

What is the best country to sell rough or uncut gemstones from West Africa?

Of what reasons did the Europeans take away some of the African arts to their medium?

Why did 500 Africans protest on the Red Square in 1963?

Will there ever be an African world power?

As a white man, why must we be the ones to learn your (white language) before you can communicate with us ? As a black man, how many times have a white man naturally communicated with you in your language?

As technology grows faster every day, what's the fate of Nigeria and other African countries?

What psychological imbalance created the concept of racism and if there is, how can such be cured?

What is your opinion about an African state best qualified to become the new giant of Africa?

Nigeria's representative, Mariestella Okpala at the Miss Universe pageant in Israel showcased a southeastern Nigerian culture, the Mmanwa masquerade on the international stage

Aniekpeno Ekong

She won the costume of the competition.

How did western/sub-Saharan Africa go from producing wealthy and powerful kings such as Mansa Musa to being weak enough for Europeans to exploit, enslave, and colonize?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian4y

Mansa Musa is a meme. He controlled a valuable resource. An apt comparison would be the Sauds. If King Salman were to tomorrow declare all of Saudi Arabia's oil his sole property, he'd be the richest man ever. But surely we'd agree that is a stupid way to measure wealth. He ranks below the likes of Mari Djata, founder of the Mali Empire and Askiya Muhammad of the Songhai. Mansa Musa's legacy was related to his being the last respected ruler of Mali, soon after him, it was shattered by rebellions and regressed to its core. There was still a Mansa up to the 1600s, he was just irrelevant. He also introduced a Middle-Eastern inspired architectural style to the region.
Like this.

He was, however, the Ruler of levy-based Feudal empire, any 19th-century African state would trounce his state, well perhaps not the Zulu, and that's only because I'm giving Calvary its due respect. Samori Toure's Tofas would wipe the floor with his armies.

West Africa didn't stop producing powerful rulers, in fact, its rulers got progressively stronger. The Europeans were, however, beneficiaries of a set of factors that combined to make them unbeatable in the long run.

Due to ports now being out of the way and what used to be national Marines now flying flags of convenience, we often discount the importance of the Sea. It accounts for over 90% of global trade. OVER 90%! This has pretty much held since the classical era, moving products by sea is both cheaper, faster and safer.

Few more zeroes, and it'd have been perfect!

By the era of colonisation, the Europeans ruled the waves having defeated competing fleets. Their logistical capabilities were off the chain. They had access to global resources, and could assemble it in larger quantities, faster and cheaper than anyone else. They could move their troops anywhere in the world with impunity.

No other state system in that era could defeat the combination of the European military-fiscal state and the joint-stock company. Its effect is paradoxical, it divides risk and centralises effect. The Europeans were defeated multiple times in their bid to conquer the continent, but they could always shake off defeats because they drew their financing from a larger pool. Financially, colonisation was the outcome of a pissing contest between a horse and an ant. Wars cost money and the Europeans could burn more cash.

Interestingly, such an asymmetrical power difference once affected the Europeans in their face-off with the Ottomans. The Ottomans were better financed and seemingly unbeatable on the battlefield. Then Columbus stumbled on America, and the Gold extracted from there gave Charles V of Spain the financial wherewithal to protect Christendom while the Europeans explored the world and invented the JSC.

The Europeans were also lucky enough that Ottoman attentions were diverted by the Safavids and the Mamlukes. The key difference between Ottoman expansion and the European conquest is that whereas the Ottoman Empire was a singular state that could the Europeans could play off, after Berlin, the Africans were denied that card.

The role of the Berlin conference was that it expressly forbade the formation of alliances with locals against fellow Europeans. The ability to temper diplomacy with war and forge coalitions has been the secret sauce behind every underdog victory in History.

Mantineia, Arcadia, Philia , Athens, Corinth and 70 other Greek city states. P.S No. Greece is an archipelago, Africa a Continent.

Related Links

Why have the sub-Saharan countries been economically and technologically inferior to European countries throughout the course of history?

Since the wheels were not in existence in sub-Saharan Africa until the Europeans came ashore, how did Mansa Musa I of Mali make it from West Africa to Egypt? Did he not need carriages to carry his stuff for his pilgrimage?

Why did Sub-Saharan Africa, in its history, never give birth to an empire that explored far outside Africa?

Why wasn't Sub-Saharan Africa discovered until after the colonial age? Why didn't the Roman/European powers sail along the African Coast?

When did Europeans first go to sub-Saharan Africa? What was the standard of living and technology like there?

Why was there no written language in sub-Saharan Africa?

Why didn't the Arabs colonize sub Saharan Africa?

What did Africa look like the day the first European colonizers arrived? I have no understanding of the various states that existed in Africa prior to the Europeans arriving. Was much of it tribal?

Why has sub Saharan Africa historically been so behind the rest of the world?

Where did Mansa Musa's fortune go? Was his Kingdom Mali a rich/powerful country prior to European colonialism, or were its fortunes were wiped through the years?

What were pre-colonial sub-Saharan kingdoms like? I'd like to know more about the wealth and grandeur of what Africa used to be like prior to colonization.

Why did sub-Saharan African kingdoms not build trade fleets similar to Europeans?

What are some of the greatest contributions of Sub-Saharan Africa to human development?

Unlike other continents, why hasn't there been any big and powerful civilization in sub-Saharan Africa?

Why is it that great empires did not often arise in sub-Saharan Africa even before the era of European imperialism?

What baffles you in your country?

Osorhor Oghenevwegba Michael

Mind blowing fact Dec 15

90-Year-Old Emir Of Daura Marries Pretty 20-Year-Old Aisha

The Emir of Daura, Faruk Umar Faruk, has married a 20-year-old bride, Aisha Iro Maikano, on Saturday.

Born in 1921, the nonagenarian manther tied the knot in a low key marriage ceremony in Katsina with the nubile young lady after a brief courtship. Continue reading visit link

90-Year-Old Emir Of Daura Marries Pretty 20-Year-Old Aisha

90-Year-Old Emir Of Daura Marries Pretty 20-Year-Old Aisha

The Emir of Daura, Faruk Umar Faruk, has married a 20-year-old bride, Aisha Iro Maikano, on Saturday.

Born in 1921, the nonagenarian manther tied the knot in a low key marriage ceremony in Katsina with the nubile young lady after a brief courtship.

It was gathered that the monarch paid N1million naira dowry to the bride, who is the daughter of Fagacin Katsina, Iro Maikano.

Sources said the serial polygamist has married not less than four young wives in the last six years.

In a short video sent to DAILY NIGERIAN, the jubilant bride was seen dancing to the tune of a traditional music.

Another short video shows how Magajin Garin Daura, Musa Umar, representing the emir at the Wedding Fatiha.

The love-struck couple enjoying a bite from the wedding cake

Sources close to the royal family said the emir divorced all his three wives recently, to pick a new four set of wives. "The plan was that the emir wanted to marry at least three wives at one go," said a family source.

Instead of blackwashing white historical figures, why aren't there more movies about actual significant black historical figures such as Mansa Musa?

By Françoise Marie Follow Master's Degree in Public Administration, Syracuse University Dec 19

Accusations of blackwashing are rooted in the constant denial about the racial identity of the First Europeans, the First "Middle Easterners", ancient Egyptians (Nilean Kemites) and ancient Berbers (African Moors). None of them were white people and yet, they are whitewashed historically and in Hollywood movies.

The First Europeans were not white people but black skinned OoA migrants. Some of them survived in the British Isles as late as the 17th. They mysteriously disappeared after that.

The face of the first European | Face, Reconstruction, European

Nov 12, 2013 - A reconstruction of the face of the first European has been revealed. The face was recreated from bone fragments discovered in a cave in the south west of the Carpathian Mountains in Romania. https://www.pinterest.co.uk/pin/288793394826537278/

A Description of the Western Islands of Scotland Circa 1695: A Voyage to St Kilda

A Description of the Western Islands of Scotland Circa 1695: A Voyage to St Kilda https://www.amazon.co.uk/Description-Western-Islands-Scotland-Circa/dp/1841580201

A Description of the Western Islands of Scotland (CIRCA 1695) By Martin Martin, Gent.

Including A Voyage to St. Kilda by the same author and A Description of the western isles oF Scotland by Sir Donald Monro:

The Complexion of the Islanders of the Isle of Skye: "The inhabitants of this isle are generally well proportioned, and their complexion is for the most part black." The Complexion of the Islanders of the Isle of Arran: "The inhabitants of this isle are well proportioned, generally brown, and some of a black complexion." The Complexion of the Islanders of the Isle of Jura: "The natives here are very well proportioned, being generally black of complexion and free from bodily imperfections. They speak the Irish language, and wear the plaid, bonnet, etc., as other islanders."The Complexion of the Islanders of the Isle of Colonsay: "The inhabitants are generally well proportioned, and of a black complexion; they speak only the Irish tongue, and use the habit, diet etc., that is used in the Western Isles: they are all Protestants, and observe the festivals of Christmas, Easter, and Good Friday.

The First "Middle Easterners" were not white people. They were black skinned OoA migrants known as Eastern Ethiopians or the Ethiopians of Asia. The most famous of them is the real Santa Claus, Saint Nicholas of Myra who lived in 3–4th Turkey. Saint Nicholas was a Lycian. He was not a white man.

https://svotssynaxis.com/2011/12/05/saint-nicholas/

https://medium.com%2F@medium.com/@PacoTaylor/secret-santa-the-hidden-history-of-jolly-old-st-nicholas-and-his-elves-3b3d40d99da5

Statue in the Cathedral of Santa Maria Assunta in Giovinazzo (Apulia), Italy • Privately owned 19th century Russian icon • 17th-18th century painting in the Basilica of St. Nicolas of Bari (Puglia), Italy • 14th century statue in a chapel at the Norman castle in Sannicandro, Ancient Egyptians, Nilean Kemites, were not white people and yet, they are whitewashed in Hollywood movies as white actors are cast to play ancient Egyptians.

This quote from 1867 by a founding father of Egyptology Champollion-Figeac – "The first tribes that inhabited Egypt that is, the Nile Valley between the Syene cataracts and the sea, came from Abyssinia to Sennar. The ancient Egyptians belonged to a race quite similar to the Kennous or Barabras, present inhabitants of Nubia. In the Copts of Egypt, we do not find any of the characteristic features of the ancient Egyptian population. The Copts are the result of crossbreeding with all the nations that have successively dominated Egypt. It is wrong to seek in them the principal features of the old race." From Letters published by Champollion-Figeac (Founding Egyptologist)……. To sum up, Nubia is Egypt's African ancestor. What linked Ancient Egypt to the rest of the North African cultures is this strong tie with the Nubian pastoral nomadic lifestyle, the same pastoral background commonly shared by most of the ancient Saharan and modern sub-Saharan societies. Thus, not only did Nubia have a prominent role in the origin of Ancient Egypt, it was also a key area for the origin of the entire African pastoral tradition."

The Nubian Pastoral Culture as Link between Egypt and Africa: A View from the Archaeological Record--Maria Carmela Gatto. Yale University

Ancient Egypt: A Brief History

Ancient Egypt in North Africa was one of the most powerful and influential civilizations in the region for over 3,000 years.
https://www.livescience.com/55578-egyptian-civilization.html By Owen Jarus

Egyptian civilization has flourished continuously since prehistoric times. While the civilization's rulers, writing, natural climate, religion and borders have changed many times over the millennia, Egypt still exists as a modern-day country.

The civilization has always been strongly connected with other parts of the world, bringing in and exporting goods, religions, food, people and ideas. At times ancient Egypt ruled territory outside the modern-day country's border, controlling territory in what is now Sudan, Cyprus, Lebanon, Syria, Israel and Palestine.

The country was also occupied by other powers — the Persians, Nubians, Greeks and Romans all conquered the country at different points in time

Ancient Berbers, African Moors were not white people. They looked like their prime ancestors from the Horn of Africa : elongated faces, sharp features, curly/frizzy hair but black skin.

(L'Afrique Mystérieuse).

58. Types Maures.

Collection-jfm.fr

A Classical Dictionary (Classic Reprint)

John Lempiere was an English classical scholar, a theologian, a teacher, a headmaster, and a lexicographer. A Classical Dictionary thoroughly explores the classical world of the Greeks and Romans, and by so doing, Lempiere hopes to bring his knowledge on this topic to the masses so that they too, may enjoy a better understanding of the ancients. The book begins with several prefaces by the author, each one from a different edition of the book. The book then goes into a chronological table which defines a long series of events from the classical world. This is established to help the reader get a better understanding of the events that occurred in the classical world prior to exploring the dictionary, with the intent of granting the reader a more complete understanding of the state of the world in which Lempiere is interpreting. To retain authenticity, Lempiere strives to use all the proper names mentioned by ancient authors along with the correct value of coins, weights, and measures used among the Greeks and Romans in his dictionary. A Classical Dictionary is a compendium of ancient Greek and Roman knowledge. Lempiere removes any shroud of mystery veiling these ancient people and their times via his comprehensive exploration of all aspects of the classical world. This book is an interesting read for individuals who want to explore history, especially world history and ancient history. It is also interesting for lexicographers as Lempiere's own skill as a lexicographer is displayed to incredible effect in this book. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work. Forgotten Books uses state-of-the-art technology to digitally reconstruct the work, preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy. In rare cases, an imperfection in the original, such as a blemish or missing page, may be replicated in our edition. We do, however, repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully; any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works.

https://books.google.td/books?id=JyxMswEACAAJ&hl=fr&source=gbs_navlinks_s

MAURI, the inhabitants of Mauritania. This name is derived from their black complexion (μαυροι.) Every thing among them grew in greater abundance and greater perfection than in other countries. Strab. 17.—Martial. 5, ep. 29, l. 12, ep. 67.—Sil. Ital. 4, v. 569, l. 10, v. 402.—Mela, 1, c. 5, l. 3, c. 10.—Justin. 19, c. 2.—Sallust. Jug.—Virg. Æn. 4, v. 206.

MAURITĀNIA, a country on the western part of Africa, which forms the modern kingdom of Fez and Morocco. It was bounded on the west by the Atlantic, south by Gætulia, and north by the Mediterranean, and is sometimes called Maurusia. It became a Roman province in the reign of the emperor Claudius. Vid. Mauri.

Related Links

Why are 'whites' so fast to disclaim 'blacks' from ancient Egypt?

Why are blacks obsessed with Egypt?

Why do Egyptians identify themselves as Arabs and forget all of their ancient traditions? What did Egyptians know about their glorious history before modern archeologists and historians wrote down history books on Egypt?

Why do people say that Egyptian Queen Tiye was black when her artwork depicted her white?

Why do Afro Centrist feel the need to call Egyptians Black and cant leave it at Africans, do they feel they need to find a way to attach to Egyptian history? Ancient Paintings were detailed and none painted their selves black skin but did for Nuba

Are dark-skinned people in Egypt considered black or not, even if they are not Nubians? (I don't mean ancient Egyptians)

Why do people refuse to believe that Egyptians were originally black?

How do modern Egyptians feel about Afrocentrists claiming ancient Egypt as a part of black culture?

Why do some people of West African origin claim connection to Ancient Egyptians?

The face of the ancient Egyptian Sphinx is clearly Caucasian, either with or without its proportionate features, intact. Why then do "Afrocentrics" continually try to refute this, or claim the face belongs to an indigenous "black" African?

Why is the hieroglyph for human face a Black African if the ancient Egyptians were not Black Africans?

Why was ancient Egypt whitewashed? I'm talking about the very beginning, before Rome and many others conquered and mixed with them.

Why were Afro combs found in ancient Egyptians tombs?

Why do ancient Egyptians look more like African Americans than modern-day Egyptians?

What is the meaning of the term 'Kemet' and why did some ancient Egyptians call their country by this name?

Resign, don't plunge nation into war, labour leader tells Buhari

News Nigeria Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 4h

former Chairman of Trade Union Congress (TUC), Oyo State chapter, and National Coordinator of All Workers Convergence (AWC), Andrew Emelieze, yesterday, called on President Muhammadu Buhari to resign, warning that his government's alleged woeful performance could plunge the nation into chaos.

In a letter seen by The Guardian in Ibadan, the Oyo State capital, Emelieze said: "Our country is in deep crisis under your (Buhari) care. It has been a reign of torture, trauma and terror everywhere. On daily basis, it has been bad news, massive mindless killings, hunger, penury and unbelievable waste of human resources."

On the economic front, he said: "Our currency is being daily devaluated by your government to suit impositions of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. Thus, there is unbearable daily increase in the cost of living and monumental hardship in the land."

He accused the President of "obvious one-sidedness", saying this "has led to suspicion and mutual distrust among people. Funnily, at your ascendency, it was as if your ethnic group was empowered to wage a war against the rest of us. Hardly will a day pass that Nigerians are not massacred. Yet, you refused to see this as terrorism. You will rather justify the killings by providing reasons for the daily butchering of Nigerians."

THIS came as a chieftain of the Peoples Democratic Party (PDP) in the South West, Rasheed Teslim Balogun, expressed confidence that his party will defeat the ruling All Progressives Congress (APC) in the region in the 2023 polls.

Balogun, a governorship aspirant in Lagos, stated this, yesterday, during a courtesy visit to some South West PDP leaders, Taofeek Arapaja and Soji Adagunodo, in Ibadan.

Pledging his loyalty to the party, Balogun said he would work with the leaders to ensure PDP reclaims states in the region.

According to him, "Our party will reclaim the South West and trounce APC in Lagos in the next elections. The most important thing for us is to work in harmony and forget any rancour. I pledge to make sure that peace reigns supreme in the PDP family in Lagos."

Responding, Arapaja, who is Deputy National Chairman of the PDP, commended Balogun for demonstrating qualities expected of a grassroots politician. On his part, Adagunodo said party leaders would ensure all aspirants have free and fair primaries.

Biafra : Malami Reveals What Will Make Buhari Release Nnamdi Kanu

News Nigeria Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 5h

The Minister of Justice and Attorney-General of the Federation, Abubakar Malami, on Tuesday revealed what will make President Muhammadu Buhari release the leader of the Indigenous People of Biafra, Nnamdi Kanu.

Malami said President Buhari will consider the interest of over 200 million Nigerians before he can grant the request to release Kanu.

The minister stated this while speaking on NTA's Good Morning Nigeria Show.

This is coming after a former Minister of Aviation, Mbazulike Amaechi led some Igbo leaders to visit the President for the unconditional release of the IPOB leader.

Buhari during the visit told them he would not want to interfere in the running of the judiciary but said he would consider their demand.

Malami when asked on Tuesday about the request of the Igbo leaders said Buhari would consider the interest of Nigerians before he takes any decision.

He said, "By way of general statements to the two issues presented: the issue relating to electoral bill and the issue relating to Kanu and by extension, IPOB, what I can tell you for certain is that the decision of the President is based fundamentally and at all times on public interest consideration.

"In the art of governance and what I have come to learn about the mind and heart of the President, Muhammadu Buhari, is to consider the 200 million as against the limited people.

"By extension, the issue of Kanu, what would as well govern the decision of the President in terms of whatever request is presented is the public interest as the gainst limited sectional interest of it."

News Nigeria
Police rescue 97 persons from Zamfara forest

Following Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

Mr El-Kana said the rescue was the outcome of the extensive pressure mounted on bandits as a result of the ongoing military operation.

Police in Zamfara have secured the freedom of 97 persons from captivity in Shinkafi and Tsafe forest of the state.

The Commissioner of Police, Ayuba El-Kana made the disclosure at a news conference in Gusau on Tuesday.

Mr El-Kana said the rescue was the outcome of the extensive pressure mounted on bandits as a result of the ongoing military operation around the camp of a notorious bandit, known as Bello Turji that covered Shinkafi, Zurmi, and Birnin Magaji Local Government Areas.

The News agency of Nigeria (NAN) recalls that on January 3, Police Tactical Operatives deployed at Shinkafi axis, received an intelligence report that some kidnapped victims were seen stranded in the bush.

The police operatives, in collaboration with genuine repentant bandits and vigilantes, swung into action and rescued 68 victims from the forest.

The commissioner added that the victims were in captivity for over three months and they included; 33 male adults, seven male children, three female children, and 25 women comprising of pregnant and nursing mothers.

The rescued victims were held from Magarya, Maradun, Gusau local government areas of Zamfara , and Sabon Birni LGA in Sokoto State.

Mr El-Kana also disclosed that on the same Monday, January 3, Police Tactical operatives deployed in Tsafe axis, acted on intelligence report and stormed Kunchin Kalgo forest in Tsafe LGA, and rescued 29 kidnapped victims unconditionally.

He said that the victims were in captivity for over 60 days and were captured from three villages.

How is Nigeria the Giant of Africa?

Dave Ebi Snr Manager (2013–present) Updated 2y

There are 3 reasons for this

The 1st is population. You may have heard that 1 in 4 Africans is a Nigerian. That may no longer be factually correct. Current (2017/2018) estimates are Africa = 1.27bn, Nigeria = 195m. Ratio is 1.27bn/195m = 6:1. Roughly 1 in 6 Africans is Nigerian.

2nd reason is wealth. Given a population that is hardworking, fantastic agriculture, unbridled drive to succeed and strong GDP, Nigeria was an economic superpower. In the 1970s and up to 1985, the currency was much stronger than the US dollar at an average of N0.65 kobo to N0.90k for USD 1. In 1986, Nigeria implemented the Structural Adjustment programme which required a reformation of the foreign exchange system as required by the IMF/World Bank et al, and things went downhill from then. In 1986 the FX rate declined to over N2 to USD1. In 1987 the decline doubled as the FX rate fell further to N4 to USD 1. Guess who benefited from this and who lost overall.

The discovery of crude oil made Nigeria very rich and we were able to build strong infrastructure, Universities, Telecoms, TV, Arts (Nigeria hosted FESTAC 77), Music, Poetry and other literary works, national airline (Nigeria Airways) that was the best in Africa, sports (Nigeria dominated the All Africa Games for years) military, etc. We helped other countries in terms of food aid to famine ridden countries, resolution of internal conflicts and award of scholarships to Africans. Not so much now! Gone are the glory days of Nigeria. Corruption has brought the country to its knees today. Shame!!

3rd reason was and still is political influence. This is tied to 2 above as the wealth made it possible for Nigeria to exert political influence in the world and at the UN, particularly independence for the rest of Africa through the OAU (now called AU). This enabled Nigeria to engage actively with the pan Africanism movement that swept across the continent. Nigeria was also very directly active in campaigns for the proscription of racism and apartheid in South Africa.

Related Links

How powerful is Nigeria in Africa?
Can Nigeria defeat South Africa in a military war?
Why is Nigeria becoming more prosperous than South Africa?
Does Nigeria have the capacity to be the largest economy in Africa without oil?
How many countries accepted Nigeria as the Giant of Africa?
Does Nigeria have the qualities to be called the "giant of Africa"?
Why is Nigeria a rich country, meanwhile the rest of Africa suffers?
Why is Nigeria being referred to as “The largest economy in Africa” and “The giant of Africa” when there are many African countries that are more developed?
Is Nigeria truly the giant of Africa?
What characteristics qualify Nigeria as the giant of Africa?
Why has Nigeria not yet emerged as the giant of Africa?
How is Nigeria able to sustain such a large population relative to the rest of Africa?
Which is the biggest city in Nigeria?
What is Nigeria lacking?
Why is Nigeria still part of the developing country and yet we are termed the Giant of Africa?

Why is the name of the prophet Muhammad translated to other words in the Bible?

Shayn McCallum

I once studied to become a rabbi. I quit. I know my way around Tanach though. Dec 22

It isn’t. Muhammad was born long after all the books of the Bible and all of the New Testament had been written.

The reason some Muslims may claim his name has been “translated” is because they believe certain Biblical verses apply to him. This is not an argument anyone else can usually see, however because it is generally far from obvious and requires quite elaborate argumentation to make it plausible.

İn fact, most of the interpretations people try to impose on Biblical prophecy, especially those taken to apply to modern times, are eye-rollingly forced and unconvincing.

Related Links

Why do you say that Muhammad is a false prophet when more than 160 of his prophecies happens/happening today, and when they are more explicit and less vague than those of the Bible?

Can you explain the supposed predictions of the prophet Muhammad? I'm an atheist in a discussion and haven't heard of these before.
Why didn't Jesus ever prophesies about Muhammad if it is true that Muhammad was Going to be the last known prophet of his father (God)? Why didn't Jesus tell us about another prophet to come who was Muhammad?
If Jesus Christ (PBUH) mentions prophet Muhammad (PBUH) in the Bible then why don't the Christians believe in him? And why do most of them eat pork? The Bible clearly mentions in several places not to have pork.
How did Muhammad know the Quran if he could not read? When was it written (before paper), and how come it doesn't refer to other prophets as much?
Islam claims there were 124,000 prophets.Why are all the mentioned prophets in Islamic tradition BIBLICAL? Why hasn't Allah told Muhammad about other 1,000 or 2,000 prophets? Or maybe Muhammad just heard the names from his Jew/Christians neighbors?
Why don't Christians believe in Prophet Muhammad as the messenger of God?
Does the Bible really say Muhammad was a false prophet? If so, where does it say that, or if not, why not?
What are some prophecies of Muhammad that have come true?
Why was the Quran not compiled at the time of the Prophet Muhammad?
Does the song of Solomon 5:16 predict the coming of Muhammad?
How is the story of Adam and Eve in Christianity different from that of Islam?
If Muhammad was illiterate and the Bible was first translated into Arabic in 867 AD, how did Muhammad know about all the stories found in the Bible? How could you say that the Quran is copied from the Bible?
Is Prophet Muhammad prophesied in the Bible?
Is it possible that the Bible was plagiarized to form the Quran by Prophet Muhammad?

Biafra : Declare war on All IPOB Members So That We Can Have Peace - Sen. Ndume tells Buhari

News Nigeria Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

Senator Ali Ndume has charged President Muhammadu Buhari's Government to kill all the members of the Indigenous People Of Biafra, IPOB so that the country can experience peace.

Senator Ndume made this known in an interview with Channels Television monitored by IgbereTV.

He, however, accused the Federal Government of covering the sponsors of Boko Haram terrorists.

Senator Ndume further charged the Federal to declare war on IPOB members, bandits and Boko Haram terrorists.

Why was Nigeria chosen as the country to use in the Nigerian Prince scam? Was there a historical reason Nigeria was chosen over other countries?

Kevin Richardson PhD in History, The University of Texas at Austin15h

So, the Nigerian Prince scam is a type of advance-fee scam.

This type of scam goes back a very long time. In the late 1800s and early 1900s, a common and famous example of this type of scam was the "Spanish Prisoner scam", where the scammer wrote letters to the mark, making the claim that a distant and unknown relative of the mark was quite wealthy, and was unjustly imprisoned in Spain. If the mark would just remit money for some fees, the distant relative would be sure to provide ample reward. Here is a story from the Minneapolis tribune from 1910 warning about the scam.

Now, why is the Nigerian Prince scam known as the Nigerian Prince scam?

The answer is pretty simple. This specific style of scam began in the 1980s, when scammers from Nigeria would send official-looking letters overseas to potential marks overseas. Reportedly, these earliest letters often made the claim that the sender was a government official in the national petroleum department, or other government departments. These letters claimed that said the Nigerian government department had unspent budget funds, and the official wished to divert these funds abroad (for corrupt purposes). They simply needed some money to pay for customs fees, bribes to other officials, etc.

A possible reason that these letters may have seemed legitimate to Western marks is that in the late 1980s and early 1990s, Nigeria was ruled by the military dictatorships of Ibrahim Badamasi Babangida (1985-93) and Sani Abacha (1993-98).

IBB with Abacha.

Babangida and Abacha were both notoriously corrupt, and credible claims have accused each of stealing billions of dollars from the Nigerian treasury and sending it overseas. It might be that the marks knew of this reputation for corruption, and were thus convinced that this opportunity to profit from corruption was genuine. On the other hand, as a general rule, Americans are not terribly aware of news in Africa, so we should not necessarily presume that knowledge. However, for the scammers, the fact that corruption was happening in their country probably provided some inspiration for the stories they told in their scams.

As time and technology progressed, the vector for this communication shifted from letters to email.

In Nigeria, there continue to be a class of customary chiefs/princes/emirs like the Emir of Kano, the Oba of Benin, the Shehu of Bornu. They continue to have prominent places in their community, and sometimes can mobilize that social prominence to lead political parties or serve in important positions in government. So, for a Nigerian scammer, making the claim "I am a Nigerian prince" would have a meaning and explain the source of wealth, in a way that Western marks probably would not understand. I'd wager most Americans do not realize that a "Nigerian prince" is an actual thing, outside of email scams.

As you seem to indicate in your question, over the years, this type of scam has become quite popular by scammers all around the world. Now, it is likely a majority of scammers claiming to be Nigerian Princes actually come from the United States, Europe, or other countries that are not Nigeria.

Related Links

Is it true that the reason there are so many Nigerian scammers is because the government is corrupt and they have a hard life and this is what they have to resort to at times in order to survive?

Do you find it easy to trust Nigerians especially because there have been many cases of Nigerian scams (especially the dating scams)? Why or why not?

Why are Nigerians seen as fraudulent and dubious people?

Is the Nigerian Prince scam still popular and working?

Where did the Nigerian Prince scam originate, and how did it become so popular?

How did the Rich Prince in Nigeria scam originate?

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

What are common scams in Nigeria?

As a Nigerian, how have you been affected by the infamy of the Nigerian Prince scam email?

Why do the Nigerian scammers say they are from Nigeria?

News Nigeria
British Crownprince says Africa's population is a danger to wildlife

Following Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Sun

Prince of the ex-colonial British empire, Prince William, reiterated his racist remarks that Africa's population is destroying the continent's wildlife. The 39-year-old first blamed Africa's population for destroying wildlife in 2017.

However, critics and social media commentators have described the remarks as racist embedded in the Prince's own colonial disposition.

Meet Jaja Wachuku; Nigeria's first Ambassador to the United Nations. He became famous after he "slept" during a UN meeting in 1960.

News Nigeria Following Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 3h

But here's the catch:

He wasn't sleeping, he was denied the opportunity to express his displeasure over a racist comment and he in return pretended to be sleeping, ignoring the entire conversation.

He also helped save Nelson Mandela from being hanged by the apartheid South African government.

When was the 1st TV Station in Africa founded?

Aniekpeno Ekong Professional Environmentalist and Politician

The first terrestrial television broadcast signals in Africa occurred on Saturday October 31, 1959 and belonged to the Western Nigeria Television Service (WNTS). This was a critical milestone in Television history and today Africa boasts of over 600 television stations (excluding repeater stations).

Related Links

How much Elon Musk's Lloyd Ostertag is linked to his South Africa being?

Is it true that Uganda is going to lose its international airport due to Chinese debt?

In South Africa do people respect old buildings (gothic, classical, baroque, Japanese, half-timbered etc.) or do South Africans prefer contemporary buildings?

What is the most brutal political crises ever recorded in Africa?

Can your boss restrict what you wear to work in South Africa?

What is the smallest African country by population?

How do you judge the people in this interview?https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=m4HaDUk9GdI

Should Africa's (or any undeveloped country) Africa as a whole is undeveloped) development start at home with care givers and spread into society?

Was South Africa the test country for Molnupiravir?

What are the profreading jobs for an undergraduate in Nigeria?

Are there Asian people living in African countries? If so, how do they live and where else are there Asian people in Africa?

What makes me feel bad about my country Uganda?

Can Nigeria step up to host the Olympic games in 2040?

Why do Africans take a lot of pride in the shape of the continent when it's actually man-made Suez canal by Egyptians otherwise it would border Asia?

Will restricting international travel to and from South Africa help end the threat of the South African COVID-19 variant, or will it only delay its onset?

News Nigeria

Identity Of Boko Haram Teenage Bomber Who Killed '10 Nigerian Soldiers' In Borno Revealed

News Nigeria Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

The terror group in a post added that it razed down the facility, while armoured tank and military operational vehicles were captured.

The Islamic State-backed faction of Boko Haram, the Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP), formerly known as Jamā'at Ahl as-Sunnah lid-Da'wah wa'l-Jihād in Borno State, has named a teenager, Abu Sulayman al-Ansari, as the suicide bomber who rammed an explosives-laden pick-up truck into a military post in Borno State. SaharaReporters had earlier reported how a Jihadist fighter targeted the military post in Marte, located near the shores of Lake Chad, killing about soldiers.

The insurgents also engaged the Nigerian troops in a gun battle. The terror group in a post added that it razed down the facility, while armoured tank and military operational vehicles were captured.

ISWAP, which split from the mainstream Boko Haram in 2016, has become a dominant group, focusing on military targets and high-profile attacks, including against aid workers. Since the death of JAS leader, Abubakar Shekau, the group has been consolidating its grip in locations around Lake Chad.

Just recently, it appointed Wali Sani Shuwaram, a 45-year-old as the new Leader (Wali) of ISWAP in Lake Chad. The sect's membership has swollen with the defection of hundreds of Boko Haram fighters under Shekau.

In 2021, at least 33 soldiers were killed when two explosive-laden vehicles rammed into a military convoy in Wulgo. The suicide bombers were identified as Abu Bakr al-Siddiq and Bana Jundullah. The group also claimed four military vehicles were destroyed.

Boko Haram Attacks Nigerian Army Base In Borno, Says 10 Soldiers Killed, Military Vehicles Captured

Following Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 22h

SaharaReporters gathered that the insurgents had on Tuesday engaged the Nigerian troops at the military post in the community in a gun battle.

The Islamic State-backed faction of Boko Haram, the Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP), formerly known as Jamā'at Ahl as-Sunnah lid-Da'wah wa'l-Jihād, has claimed that its fighters killed 10 Nigerian soldiers in Borno State.

According to ISWAP in a post on Wednesday, the soldiers were killed when an explosives-laden vehicle rammed into a military post in Marte, located near the shores of Lake Chad, Borno State. SaharaReporters gathered that the insurgents had on Tuesday engaged the Nigerian troops at the military post in the community in a gun battle.

The terror group added that it razed down the facility, while armoured tank and military operational vehicles were captured. ISWAP in the post said 10 people were killed including soldiers and children during the attack. The terror group added that it razed down many military operational vehicles.

Since the death of JAS leader, Abubakar Shekau, ISWAP has been consolidating its grip in locations around Lake Chad. Just recently, it appointed Wali Sani Shuwaram, a 45-year-old as the new Leader (Wali) of ISWAP in Lake Chad.

The sect's membership has swollen with the defection of hundreds of Boko Haram fighters under Shekau. The Nigerian Army has repeatedly claimed that insurgency had been largely defeated and frequently underplays any losses.

The terror group has caused over 100,000 deaths and displaced millions of individuals mainly in Adamawa, Borno, and Yobe states.

News Nigeria:

(END OF AN ERA): Olubadan of Ibadanland laid to rest according to Islamic rites at his Popoyemoja palace

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Jan 2

The remains of the Olubadan of Ibadanland, Oba Saliu Adetunji, were laid to rest at his Poop Yemoja place shortly after the burial service held at the Mapo Hall in Ibadan.

The body was lowered into the grave on Sunday evening amid wailings and eulogies from family members and other sympathizers and thereafter, the body was eventually initially covered with planks.

News Nigeria

President Muhammadu Buhari on his favourite Presidential aspirant for 2023....

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Wed

"My favourite may be eliminated before the time if I mention his name. I will keep it a secret"- PMB.

"My favourite may be eliminated before the time if I mention his name. I will keep it a secret"- PMB.

Why was Nigeria deemed to be among the least desirable post during the British colonial era? Didn't the UK profit from the colonization of Nigeria, as widely proclaimed by Nigerian politicians?

John Bartram Lives in The United Kingdom Dec 13

I worked from a building in Lagos that had, in colonial days, been known as 'The Rabbit Warren' because of its many small rooms used to accommodate young, British men sent to work there. It was said that by the time the next shipload of men arrived, the earlier had already died; this was because of the numerous, usually-fatal diseases found there.

Not just malaria, but also Yellow Fever and various others (such as typhus).

Managing an empire requires sending many officials to work there and in West Africa, that meant sending them to their early death.

Yes, British trade with Nigeria was good and this nation developed well, although with independence, many of these benefits disappeared with indigenisation.

Being posted to Nigeria was seen, at best, as a demotion and at its worst, a death sentence.

Related Links

Is Nigeria a failed state?
Why was Liberia never colonized?
Why did the British colonize Nigeria?
Would Nigeria have developed if there was no colonialism?
Why is the blatantly imperialistic song "Rule Britannia" not considered oppressive and racist, like "Dixie" in the United States?
Why is Nigeria so poor even though it was colonized by the British (like the US, Canada, Australia, Hong Kong, etc)?
Why did Nigeria and other African nations fight colonialism? What made the indigenous Africans make the whites leave Africa? Is life better now than it was at the period of colonialism?
Why has Nigeria not been able to colonize any country despite her status as 'Giant of Africa'?
Which colonies were among the least profitable or even loss-making ones to the British Empire?
What do British people think of their imperial/colonial past?

Why was Nigeria deemed to be among the least desirable post during the British colonial era? Didn't the UK profit from the colonization of Nigeria, as widely proclaimed by Nigerian politicians?

John Bartram Lives in The United Kingdom Dec 13

I worked from a building in Lagos that had, in colonial days, been known as 'The Rabbit Warren' because of its many small rooms used to accommodate young, British men sent to work there. It was said that by the time the next shipload of men arrived, the earlier had already died; this was because of the numerous, usually-fatal diseases found there. Not just malaria, but also Yellow Fever and various others (such as typhus).

Managing an empire requires sending many officials to work there and in West Africa, that meant sending them to their early death.

Yes, British trade with Nigeria was good and this nation developed well, although with independence, many of these benefits disappeared with indigenisation.

Being posted to Nigeria was seen, at best, as a demotion and at its worst, a death sentence.

Related Links

Is Nigeria a failed state?

Why was Liberia never colonized?

Why did the British colonize Nigeria?

Would Nigeria have developed if there was no colonialism?

Why is the blatantly imperialistic song "Rule Britannia" not considered oppressive and racist, like "Dixie" in the United States?

Why is Nigeria so poor even though it was colonized by the British (like the US, Canada, Australia, Hong Kong, etc)?

Why did Nigeria and other African nations fight colonialism? What made the indigenous Africans make the whites leave Africa? Is life better now than it was at the period of colonialism?

Why has Nigeria not been able to colonize any country despite her status as 'Giant of Africa'?

Which colonies were among the least profitable or even loss-making ones to the British Empire?

What do British people think of their imperial/colonial past?

News Nigeria

JUST IN: OLUBADAN OF IBADAN, OBA SALIU ADETUNJI, JOINS HIS ANCESTORS AT 93

Photostory: Final Resting Place Of Olubadan Of Ibadan

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 15h

The Olubadan of Ibadan, Oba Saliu Adetunji, has passed on.

It was gathered that the 93-year-old monarch joined his ancestors in the early hours of Sunday, January 2, 2022 at the University College Hospital (UCH) in Ibadan.

Oba Adetunji ascended the throne in March 2016 following the demise of his predecessor Samuel Odulana Odungade.

However, we await confirmation from both UCH and the Popoyemoja, Ibadan Palace of the monarch.

This is the grave of the Olubadan of Ibadan, Oba Saliu Adetunji, who died on Sunday aged 93.

The remains of the were buried at his Popoyemoja palace shortly after the funeral service held at Mapo Hall in Ibadan.

The body was lowered into the grave amid wailings and eulogies from family members and other sympathisers. Thereafter, some marked planks were laid over it.

News Nigeria

Wike Faults Signing Of 2022 Budget, Says Nigeria Made A Mistake Choosing Buhari

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 5h

Governor Nyesom Wike of Rivers State has faulted the signing of the 2022 budget of N17.127 trillion into law, saying Nigerians made a mistake choosing Muhammadu Buhari as president in 2015.

According to Wike, Buhari had no business signing the budget when he was well aware that the bill was riddled with a plethora of unimplementable projects.

The governor, who stated this in Bauchi on Saturday when he visited his counterpart, Bala Mohammed, on a 'special new year visit', said Buhari, who he claimed knew the importance of the document, should have returned it to the National Assembly for corrections before assenting to the bill.

Wike expressed worry over the state of leadership recruitment in the country and asserted that the Peoples Democratic Party (PDP) must take responsibility to provide the kind of leadership that Nigeria needs.

"You saw a President [Buhari] yesterday that said this budget is unimplementable, yet he went ahead and signed something he knows would not help the country.

"For the Electoral Act, he faulted errors, saying direct primary will be too expensive and will affect security. But he signed something that he knows would affect the economic survival of the country negatively," he stated.

Wike further slammed the Buhari-led administration for a biased fight against corruption. According to him, the antigraft agencies only went after members of the opposition.

"But if you go over to the All Progressives Congress (APC), you are no longer a criminal. What kind of system is that? Is that the kind of leadership you want?" the governor asked.

"As we speak today, there is no judicial autonomy in Nigeria. Go and see the nature of the federal courts. I'm surprised that Mr. President could not make a pronouncement when he heard that the house of Justice of the Supreme Court was invaded.

"I'm sure if Justice Odili was killed, he would have issued a statement. In a country, when you see the abomination, like an invasion of Supreme Court justice's house, it is not just an invasion; it is a threat to the judiciary. And the president could not say, 'I will not accept this!'," Wike buttressed.

The Rivers State governor emphasized that the nation is in dire need of leadership that cuts through the barriers of region and religion.

History Ville
Whos Chukwuemeka Odumegwu Ojukwu ?

On May 30, 1967, the military governor of Eastern Nigeria, Lieutenant-Colonel Chukwuemeka Odumegwu Ojukwu proclaimed that “the territory and Region known as Eastern Nigeria, together with her continental shelves and territorial waters, shall henceforth be an independent sovereign state of the name and title, The Republic of Biafra." Ojukwu had four days before, on May 26, 1967, addressed the East’s Consultative Assembly consisting of some 300 delegates from all provinces in the East. He had declared that “there is no power in this country or in all Black Africa that would be able to subdue us by force”. It was left to the Assembly, Ojukwu continued, to choose one of the three alternatives:

Accepting the terms of the North and Gowon and thereby submitting to the domination from the North, continuing the present stalemate and drift, or Ensuring the survival of our people by asserting our autonomy. The assembly got the message.

For whatever it was worth, it gave Ojukwu the powers and urged him to declare at an early practicable date Eastern Nigeria as a free, sovereign, and independent state by the name and title of the Republic of Biafra, which he did on May 30, 1967. #HistoryVille #Biafra #Ojukwu #Gowon
Support us on Patreon: https://www.patreon.com/thehistoryville
Subscribe to HistoryVille: https://www.youtube.com/HistoryVille?...
Follow us on Social Media: Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/thehistoryville Instagram: https://www.instagram.com/historyville Twitter: https://www.twitter.com/HistoryVille LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/company/hist...
For interesting historical articles visit: https://www.thehistoryville.com
Video Credits: Reuters News via Adeyinka Makinde

Qu'est-ce qui fait bouillir votre sang ?
What makes your blood boil?

Rachad Alabi Adekambi Suivre Développeur webTraducteur · 16 juin

Ossai Ceejay Content Writer/Blogger

Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Ossai Ceejay dans Quora en anglais :

Ce gouvernement, ce pays. Je déteste être né ici, je préfère être un arbre en Norvège qu'une personne dans ce pays de m*.

Je suis extrêmement en colère au moment où j'écris ceci et si vous êtes nigérian et que vous venez dans la section des commentaires pour défendre ce pays, Ossai Ceejay est là pour vous dire que vous êtes le plus grand imbécile du monde, vous devriez avoir honte de votre misérable moi et je n'hésiterai pas à supprimer votre commentaire inutile et à bloquer votre pitié😤.

Je sais que nous sommes tous seuls dans ce pays, la grande Amérique que nous regardons pour nous aider nous a seulement montré à quel point ils sont égoïstes. Le Nigeria peut brûler pour tout ce qu'il veut, tant qu'il obtient son pétrole, plus rien ne le concerne. Je suis bien conscient que poster ceci ici ne sera peut-être d'aucune aide, mais au moins cela me permettra de conclure et de me sentir en paix, sachant que j'ai fait de mon mieux pour diffuser cela dans le monde.

Le Nigeria se transforme lentement en une dictature à part entière, il se transforme lentement en Corée du Nord. Alors que les pays développés pensent à coloniser Mars et à préserver la planète, nous, les Nigérians, ne demandons même plus de bonnes routes, une électricité stable, des emplois, une éducation et des hôpitaux, nous demandons simplement de VIVRE.

Des gens meurent tous les jours au Nigeria, des milliers de gens meurent chaque jour, tout le monde a peur, j'ai peur, ce n'est pas une question de si, c'est seulement une question de quand. Les survivants d'aujourd'hui sont les victimes de demain.

Nous avons le président le plus INUTILE de l'histoire. Je regardais Biden s'adresser aux États-Unis au sujet du nombre d'emplois créés en mai, et je me sentais tellement mal que j'ai regardé le mannequin que nous avons au pouvoir et j'ai pleuré. Notre président n'est JAMAIS venu nous adresser la parole en pleine crise, pendant toute la période du Covid, il n'est JAMAIS sorti pour nous faire savoir que tout ira bien, jusqu'à présent, je n'ai reçu aucun palliatif de secours covid-19 , rien! Zéro!! Néant!!! rien!!!! nada !!!!!

Il y a eu un massacre dans l'un de nos États, près d'une centaine de personnes ont été brutalement assassinées, et des centaines se sont déplacées vers des camps. Notre président n'est jamais sorti pour nous adresser la parole. En fait, le lendemain, il a pris un avion pour le Mali pour les aider dans leur propre crise. Tu ne peux pas inventer ce truc.

Nous vivons dans un régime dictatorial où quiconque critique le gouvernement risque de perdre la vie, il n'y a qu'un seul endroit où nous pouvons critiquer notre gouvernement en toute sécurité, et c'est Twitter.

Le gouvernement nigérian n'a jamais aimé Twitter, il déteste Twitter depuis longtemps jusqu'à ce qu'il finisse par interdire Twitter aujourd'hui. C'est vrai, twitter est maintenant interdit au Nigeria, si vous allez utiliser twitter, vous allez devoir utiliser un vpn.

Notre gouvernement avait auparavant interdit la crypto-monnaie au Nigeria, maintenant qu'il a interdit Twitter ce n'est plus qu'une question de temps avant qu'il n'interdisse les réseaux sociaux.

NewAfrica

With the second highest death-toll of all African conflicts, the Nigerian Civil war (also known as the Biafran war) is perhaps the single most significant event in Nigerian history. This video is our attempt to shed light on this 3 year conflict, which claimed the lives of over 100,000 soldiers and an estimated 2 million civilians as the Nigerian government led by General Yakubu Gowon fought to prevent the secession of the self-proclaimed Republic of Biafra which was led by Colonel Chuckwuemeka Odumegwu Ojukwu.

Please help support our growth by subscribing to our Patreon: https://www.patreon.com/NewAfrica You can also support us by making a donation here: https://paypal.me/SupportNewAfrica?lo... Follow us on Twitter: https://twitter.com/WeAreNewAfrica #Nigeria #Biafra #History

Cet homme est une personnalité publique très influente (d'où la vérification) donc s'il dit quelque chose comme ça, alors vous savez que c'est du sérieux. Ils sont sur le point de faire de l'utilisation des réseaux sociaux une infraction pénale.

Je ne sais pas combien de temps il me reste ici, mais avec le temps qu'il me reste, je veux faire savoir au monde que le Nigeria se transforme lentement en Corée du Nord, notre gouvernement nous ramène lentement à l'âge de pierre et je ne compte pas abandonner sans me battre. Suivre Rachad Alabi Adekambi

Related Links

Quel incident a fait bouillir votre sang ?
Quelle image a fait bouillir votre sang ?
Si quelqu'un perd beaucoup de sang et qu'il boit au fur et à mesure son sang, est-ce que celui-ci revient à la normale dans le corps ?
Peut on boire du sang ?
L'eau doit-elle bouillir avant d'y mettre des pâtes ?
Une personne qui meurt en perdant tout son sang souffre-t-elle énormément ?
Qu'est ce qui vous fait jouir ?
Le sang peut-il bouillir ?
Pourquoi parfois après un effort physique, j'ai le goût du sang surtout en buvant ?
Pourquoi le sang avec un rhésus nul est-il si précieux ?

News Nigeria
NDDC FORENSIC AUDIT: PRESIDENT BUHARI SAYS

‘EVERY KOBO’ WILL BE RECOVERED, CULPRITS TO FACE THE LAW

Following Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 14h

President Muhammadu Buhari GCFR today Dec.30th, 2021 in Abuja said the concluded forensic audit of the Niger Delta Development Commission (NDDC) was being reviewed, with a view to recovering every kobo that is recoverable, while those found culpable will face the law. Speaking on zoom commissioning of the NDDC Prototype Hostel at the University of Uyo, Akwa Ibom, the President said it was regrettable that the special development fund of the entire region was squandered by a few for more than 20 years, leaving many in penury.

“The Niger Delta Development Commission needs to demonstrate that it can achieve the objectives it was conceived for and make its impact felt all over the Niger Delta Region. The lives of the people of the Niger Delta could be so much better, if the funding received by this commission since its inception, in billions of naira over the last 20 years, have been judiciously deployed in service of the people.

“The serial abuse, lack of delivery and what had become an entrenched institutional decay, was the reason why I called for the forensic audit.

“Therefore, going forward we shall ensure every recoverable kobo, is recovered for use in service of the people of this region and those found culpable shall face the Law.

“Consequently, I want to use the opportunity of this commissioning to direct all statutory contributors to the NDDC to remit all outstanding funds to the Commission, and to ensure this is done transparently and according to laid down procedure and process,” he said. President Buhari directed that all abandoned projects that directly impact the livelihood of the people should be revived and completed.

“When I directed the Minister of Niger Delta Affairs to institute a forensic audit of the Commission, after many representations by major stakeholders in the Niger Delta, I had also directed that all viable projects which had been abandoned, but which would impact positively on the lives and livelihoods of the people, be immediately revived and completed.”

President Buhari noted that the contract for the building of 1,050 capacity hostel for male and female students was awarded in 2004, and like many others, it was abandoned.

“This prototype university hostel consists of 1,050 bed spaces, 525 each for males and females, and is furnished to meet the needs of a university student. The complex also boasts of significant hard and soft infrastructure to ensure its sustainability and durability.

"The completion of this structure is equally in recognition of the importance government attaches to providing quality housing and improved education for all Nigerians.

"It is therefore another important proof that this administration is committed to satisfying the needs of the people, throughout Nigeria, and fulfilling their expectations. Government must continue in its efforts to serve the people, by providing amenities, as well as the enabling environment for scholarships, investments across all sectors, for sustenance of the environment, and overall growth of the economy.

"Significant part of this success story is that it could easily not have happened. The contract for this hostel was awarded as far back as 2004. It was one of many projects abandoned across the Niger Delta region, but which I directed the Minister of Niger Delta Affairs, Sen. Godswill Akpabio, to expeditiously complete and put to use,'' the President added.

President Buhari said across many public universities and institutions of higher learning children face accommodation challenges, while private investors were taking advantage of the gap to provide accommodation, unfortunately tasking the resources of parents and guardians.

"Many of them are located far away from school premises and come with their own peculiar challenges. It is good that such an infrastructure gap is being addressed, by providing accommodation for students that would be affordable, well built, and in a secure environment,'' he said.

The President noted that the Vice- President, Prof. Yemi Osinbajo, on his behalf, commissioned the Special Protections Unit Base 6 Barracks in Omagwa, Rivers State, which was built and donated by the Niger Delta Development Commission to the Nigeria Police Force.

"Firstly, and as stated at that occasion, the complex is part of a crucial component of the major reform we are undertaking with the Nigerian Police Force. While we are working to increase the number of police personnel, within set yearly targets, and re-equip personnel, both in personal gear and hardware, accommodation remains an important feature of that reform. Indeed, it showed that we can alleviate the accommodation challenges of senior security personnel in order to enhance security in the region.

"Secondly, this singular intervention demonstrates that NDDC understands the importance of government's effort at improving the lives and livelihoods of our police officers, in line with my directive that building of barracks for men and women of the police force should be done in collaboration with the Special Housing effort of the Family Home funds.''

In his remarks, Sen. Akpabio said the completion of the NDDC headquarters complex and other projects clearly showed the President's commitment to improving the livelihood of people in the Niger Delta.

"President Buhari is focused on development of Nigeria and the Niger Delta.

"The President wants to ensure that by the time he leaves office, the NDDC is repositioned to live up to the expectations of the founding fathers,'' he added.

The Sole Administrator of NDDC, Mr Effiong Akwa, thanked the President for always honouring the institution by commissioning three projects in a year.

"The three projects have one thing in common, they were all abandoned before the forensic audit,'' he added.

The Vice Chancellor of the University of Uyo, Prof. Nyaudoh Ukpabio Ndaeyo and the Student Union also appreciated the President for the intervention, with presentation of awards.

Femi Adesina Special Advisor to the President
(Media & Publicity) December 30, 2021

Qu'est-ce qui fait bouillir votre sang ?

Rachad Alabi Adekambi Développeur webTraducteur · 16 juin

Ossai Ceejay Content Writer/Blogger
Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Ossai Ceejay dans Quora en anglais : What makes your blood boil?

Ce gouvernement, ce pays. Je déteste être né ici, je préfère être un arbre en Norvège qu'une personne dans ce pays de m*.

Je suis extrêmement en colère au moment où j'écris ceci et si vous êtes nigérian et que vous venez dans la section des commentaires pour défendre ce pays, Ossai Ceejay est là pour vous dire que vous êtes le plus grand imbécile du monde, vous devriez avoir honte de votre misérable moi et je n'hésiterai pas à supprimer votre commentaire inutile et à bloquer votre pitié .

Je sais que nous sommes tous seuls dans ce pays, la grande Amérique que nous regardons pour nous aider nous a seulement montré à quel point ils sont égoïstes. Le Nigeria peut brûler pour tout ce qu'il veut, tant qu'il obtient son pétrole, plus rien ne le concerne. Je suis bien conscient que poster ceci ici ne sera peut-être d'aucune aide, mais au moins cela me permettra de conclure et de me sentir en paix, sachant que j'ai fait de mon mieux pour diffuser cela dans le monde.

Le Nigeria se transforme lentement en une dictature à part entière, il se transforme lentement en Corée du Nord. Alors que les pays développés pensent à coloniser Mars et à préserver la planète, nous, les Nigérians, ne demandons même plus de bonnes routes, une électricité stable, des emplois, une éducation et des hôpitaux, nous demandons simplement de VIVRE.

Des gens meurent tous les jours au Nigeria, des milliers de gens meurent chaque jour, tout le monde a peur, j'ai peur, ce n'est pas une question de si, c'est seulement une question de quand. Les survivants d'aujourd'hui sont les victimes de demain.

Nous avons le président le plus INUTILE de l'histoire. Je regardais Biden s'adresser aux États-Unis au sujet du nombre d'emplois créés en mai, et je me sentais tellement mal que j'ai regardé le mannequin que nous avons au pouvoir et j'ai pleuré. Notre président n'est JAMAIS venu nous adresser la parole en pleine crise, pendant toute la période du Covid, il n'est JAMAIS sorti pour nous faire savoir que tout ira bien, jusqu'à présent, je n'ai reçu aucun palliatif de secours covid-19 , rien! Zéro!! Néant!!! rien!!!! nada !!!!!

Il y a eu un massacre dans l'un de nos États, près d'une centaine de personnes ont été brutalement assassinées, et des centaines se sont déplacées vers des camps. Notre président n'est jamais sorti pour nous adresser la parole. En fait, le lendemain, il a pris un avion pour le Mali pour les aider dans leur propre crise. Tu ne peux pas inventer ce truc.

Nous vivons dans un régime dictatorial où quiconque critique le gouvernement risque de perdre la vie, il n'y a qu'un seul endroit où nous pouvons critiquer notre gouvernement en toute sécurité, et c'est Twitter.

Le gouvernement nigérian n'a jamais aimé Twitter, il déteste Twitter depuis longtemps jusqu'à ce qu'il finisse par interdire Twitter aujourd'hui. C'est vrai, twitter est maintenant interdit au Nigeria, si vous allez utiliser twitter, vous allez devoir utiliser un vpn.

Notre gouvernement avait auparavant interdit la crypto-monnaie au Nigeria, maintenant qu'il a interdit Twitter ce n'est plus qu'une question de temps avant qu'il n'interdisse les réseaux sociaux.

Cet homme est une personnalité publique très influente (d'où la vérification) donc s'il dit quelque chose comme ça, alors vous savez que c'est du sérieux.

Ils sont sur le point de faire de l'utilisation des réseaux sociaux une infraction pénale.

Je ne sais pas combien de temps il me reste ici, mais avec le temps qu'il me reste, je veux faire savoir au monde que le Nigeria se transforme lentement en Corée du Nord, notre gouvernement nous ramène lentement à l'âge de pierre et je ne compte pas abandonner sans me battre. Suivre Rachad Alabi Adekambi

Related Links

Quel incident a fait bouillir votre sang ?
Quelle image a fait bouillir votre sang ?
Si quelqu'un perd beaucoup de sang et qu'il boit au fur et à mesure son sang, est-ce que celui-ci revient à la normale dans le corps ?
Peut on boire du sang ?
L'eau doit-elle bouillir avant d'y mettre des pâtes ?
Une personne qui meurt en perdant tout son sang souffre-t-elle énormément ?
Qu'est ce qui vous fait jouir ?
Le sang peut-il bouillir ?
Pourquoi parfois après un effort physique, j'ai le goût du sang surtout en buvant ?
Pourquoi le sang avec un rhésus nul est-il si précieux ?

News Nigeria
NDDC FORENSIC AUDIT: PRESIDENT BUHARI SAYS 'EVERY KOBO' WILL BE RECOVERED, CULPRITS TO FACE THE LAW

Following Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 14h

President Muhammadu Buhari GCFR today Dec.30th, 2021 in Abuja said the concluded forensic audit of the Niger Delta Development Commission (NDDC) was being reviewed, with a view to recovering every kobo that is recoverable, while those found culpable will face the law.

Speaking on zoom commissioning of the NDDC Prototype Hostel at the University of Uyo, Akwa Ibom, the President said it was regrettable that the special development fund of the entire region was squandered by a few for more than 20 years, leaving many in penury.

"The Niger Delta Development Commission needs to demonstrate that it can achieve the objectives it was conceived for and make its impact felt all over the Niger Delta Region. The lives of the people of the Niger Delta could be so much better, if the funding received by this commission since its inception, in billions of naira over the last 20 years, have been judiciously deployed in service of the people.

“The serial abuse, lack of delivery and what had become an entrenched institutional decay, was the reason why I called for the forensic audit.

“Therefore, going forward we shall ensure every recoverable kobo, is recovered for use in service of the people of this region and those found culpable shall face the Law.

“Consequently, I want to use the opportunity of this commissioning to direct all statutory contributors to the NDDC to remit all outstanding funds to the Commission, and to ensure this is done transparently and according to laid down procedure and process,” he said.

President Buhari directed that all abandoned projects that directly impact the livelihood of the people should be revived and completed.

“When I directed the Minister of Niger Delta Affairs to institute a forensic audit of the Commission, after many representations by major stakeholders in the Niger Delta, I had also directed that all viable projects which had been abandoned, but which would impact positively on the lives and livelihoods of the people, be immediately revived and completed.”

President Buhari noted that the contract for the building of 1,050 capacity hostel for male and female students was awarded in 2004, and like many others, it was abandoned.

“This prototype university hostel consists of 1,050 bed spaces, 525 each for males and females, and is furnished to meet the needs of a university student. The complex also boasts of significant hard and soft infrastructure to ensure its sustainability and durability.

“The completion of this structure is equally in recognition of the importance government attaches to providing quality housing and improved education for all Nigerians.

“It is therefore another important proof that this administration is committed to satisfying the needs of the people, throughout Nigeria, and fulfilling their expectations. Government must continue in its efforts to serve the people, by providing amenities, as well as the enabling environment for scholarships, investments across all sectors, for sustenance of the environment, and overall growth of the economy.

“Significant part of this success story is that it could easily not have happened. The contract for this hostel was awarded as far back as 2004. It was one of many projects abandoned across the Niger Delta region, but which I directed the Minister of Niger Delta Affairs, Sen. Godswill Akpabio, to expeditiously complete and put to use,’’ the President added.

President Buhari said across many public universities and institutions of higher learning children face accommodation challenges, while private investors were taking advantage of the gap to provide accommodation, unfortunately tasking the resources of parents and guardians.

“Many of them are located far away from school premises and come with their own peculiar challenges. It is good that such an infrastructure gap is being addressed, by providing accommodation for students that would be affordable, well built, and in a secure environment,’’ he said.

The President noted that the Vice- President, Prof. Yemi Osinbajo, on his behalf, commissioned the Special Protections Unit Base 6 Barracks in Omagwa, Rivers State, which was built and donated by the Niger Delta Development Commission to the Nigeria Police Force.

“Firstly, and as stated at that occasion, the complex is part of a crucial component of the major reform we are undertaking with the Nigerian Police Force. While we are working to increase the number of police personnel, within set yearly targets, and re-equip personnel, both in personal gear and hardware, accommodation remains an important feature of that reform. Indeed, it showed that we can alleviate the accommodation challenges of senior security personnel in order to enhance security in the region.

“Secondly, this singular intervention demonstrates that NDDC understands the importance of government’s effort at improving the lives and livelihoods of our police officers, in line with my directive that building of barracks for men and women of the police force should be done in collaboration with the Special Housing effort of the Family Home funds.’’

In his remarks, Sen. Akpabio said the completion of the NDDC headquarters complex and other projects clearly showed the President’s commitment to improving the livelihood of people in the Niger Delta.

“President Buhari is focused on development of Nigeria and the Niger Delta.

“The President wants to ensure that by the time he leaves office, the NDDC is repositioned to live up to the expectations of the founding fathers,’’ he added.

The Sole Administrator of NDDC, Mr Effiong Akwa, thanked the President for always honouring the institution by commissioning three projects in a year.

“The three projects have one thing in common, they were all abandoned before the forensic audit,’’ he added.

The Vice Chancellor of the University of Uyo, Prof. Nyaudoh Ukpabio Ndaeyo and the Student Union also appreciated the President for the intervention, with presentation of awards.
Femi Adesina Special Adviser to the President (Media & Publicity)
December 30, 2021

HistoryVille
How Johnson Aguiyi-Ironsi Was Overthrown as Nigeria's Head of State in 1966

Major-General Johnson Thomas Umunakwe Aguiyi-Ironsi was 41 years, 10 months, and 13 days old when he became Nigeria's First Military Head of State on January 16, 1966, having been born on March 3, 1924, in Umuahia, the capital city of present-day Abia State. Ironsi attended school in Umuahia, Calabar, and Kano. In addition to English and Igbo, Aguiyi-Ironsi could also speak Hausa and Yoruba. He enlisted into the then colonial army at the age of 18 and rose to the rank of a company sergeant-major by 1946. In 1964, Ironsi became the commander of the entire United Nations Force in Congo, the first African to do so.

In 1965, he became a Major-General and Head of the Nigerian army. The first Nigerian to ever attain the rank and the post.

On January 16, 1966, Major-General Johnson Aguiyi-Ironsi became Nigeria's First Military Head of State after a military coup d'état had toppled the First Republic a day before.

Of all military Heads of State, Ironsi ruled Nigeria the shortest, a mere 194 days before he was overthrown and killed by his subordinates on July 29, 1966. #HistoryVille #AguiyiIronsi
Support us on Patreon: https://www.patreon.com/thehistoryville
Subscribe to HistoryVille: https://www.youtube.com/HistoryVille?...
Follow us on Social Media: Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/thehistoryville Instagram: https://www.instagram.com/historyville
Twitter: https://www.twitter.com/HistoryVille
LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/company/hist...
For interesting historical articles visit: https://www.thehistoryville.com

How did Benin City look like before its destruction in 1897? Where there any oral or written accounts of how it looked?

Mary Lawlor Follow Lived in Lagos, Nigeria (1961–1963) Sat

I found a drawing of the original Walls of Benin, but vintage photos are much less impressive—and less fanciful. I did find photos (taken before the battle) of a portion of the town, as well as the beautiful wooden doors of the Oba’s palacee. The Walls of Benin and the Palace of Benin were made of mud, but quite large.

Questions similaires

Qu'est-ce que les Français pensent au sujet des migrants en France ?

Face aux accusations fréquentes de pillages et de déstabilisations de l'Afrique dont fait l'objet la France, êtes-vous pour un retrait des troupes françaises de l'Afrique afin de laisser les Africains se débrouiller tout seul ?
Les maliens affirment chaque fois que la France vise ses intérêts, qu'elle exploite ses ressources. Quelles entreprises françaises sont présentes au Mali ? Quelles matières premières exploitent-elles ?
Qu'est-ce qui manque à la France pour qu'elle devienne une superpuissance ?
Que serait la France d'aujourd'hui sans l'Afrique ?
Pourquoi le fils du président Denis Sassou Nguesso est mis en examen en France ? Et pourquoi les politiques/PDG français qui ont des biens mal acquis ne sont pas jugés en Afrique ? Est-ce que la France est un pays impérialiste ?
Est-ce qu'il neige en Afrique ?
Quelles seront les conséquences directes et indirectes, si la France laisse tomber de manière brusque et définitive la plupart des pays africain qu'elle contrôle encore ?
La France est le plus grand prédateur en Afrique et a longtemps été vu à travers. La France n'a longtemps été qu'une puissance régionale moyenne en Europe. Pourquoi sont-ils encore si influents en Afrique ?
Puisque les coûts de main-d'œuvre sont de loin moins chers en Afrique de l'Ouest,

HistoryVille

Brigadier General Murtala Muhammed: Did the General Deserve to Die?

Murtala Muhammed was born Murtala Rufai Mohammed in Kano, Northern Nigeria on November 8, 1938. However, he changed his name to Murtala Ramat Muhammed when he became Nigeria's military Head of State on July 30, 1975.

In the early morning hours of February 13, 1976, General Murtala Muhammed was assassinated. General Murtala Ramat Muhammed's colorful and somewhat controversial life thus came to a tragic end at the tender age of 37 years, 3 months, and 5 days, when on Friday, February 13, 1976, a group of soldiers would-be assassins led by Lieutenant-Colonel Buba S. Dimka rushed over to his car and sporadically sprayed a plethora of gunshots which killed him, his ADC, Lieutenant Akintunde Akinsehinwa and his driver, Sergeant Adamu Minchika. Murtala Muhammed remains the youngest Nigerian Head-of-State to die in office, and the only one to die before the age of 40. Many monuments in the country are dedicated to his memory, chief of which is the Murtala Muhammed International Airport in Lagos. His portrait also adorns the 20 naira note. The only naira note to feature a military man. #HistoryVille #MurtalaMuhammed You can also check out 50 interesting facts about Murtala Muhammed on our website:

https://www.thehistoryville.com/murta...
Murtala Muhammed's maiden speech(11:33): @Adeyinka Makinde Link: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=OGK8W... Subscribe to HistoryVille:

Follow us on Social Media:
Facebook: https://www.youtube.com/HistoryVille?...
https://www.facebook.com/thehistoryville Instagram:
https://www.instagram.com/historyville Twitter:
https://www.twitter.com/HistoryVille LinkedIn:
https://www.linkedin.com/company/hist...
For interesting historical articles visit:https://www.thehistoryville.com

News Nigeria

How Benue State Governor Arrested and Dethroned Ali Obaje the then Atta of IgalaNews Nigeria

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 17h

On 8th August, 1977, at the peak of the crisis arising from insubordination to Atta of Igala by Ankpa elites, the government of Benue State invited Aliyu Obaje to Makurdi for a meeting. Upon arrival, Atta was immediately arrested and detained in an undisclosed facility.

Later that evening, news broke of the possible arrest of Atta in faraway Makurdi. Idah was tensed, but the actors from Ankpa were not taken unaware as it was apparently a script being played out by them.

By 7:00pm on that day, the fears were confirmed even beyond expectation. The NBC News at 7 did not just report that Atta had been arrested, it was also revealed that he had been deposed and confined to an undisclosed location in Makurdi for constituting a threat to peaceful coexistence. Because of slim access to television at the time, this unbelievable story was confirmed by only few who had access to television.

On 9th August, 1977, the news of the arrest and deposition was all over the mainstream newspapers. Precisely, the Nigerian Herald Newspaper reported it on its front page.

Igala sons and daughters, young and old swung into action—protesting the action of the state government headed by Colonel Abdullahi Shelleng to be unjust.

Of course, some persons; even within the Atta dynasty were happy with the development. A son of a previous Atta Atabo Ijomi was one of those who welcomed the development. He quickly; but tacitly declared himself as next Atta. That evening, he moved from Ogbogbo to Idah in full royal regalia amidst cheers of supporters. Eyewitnesses say he wore a brown robe and white turban with several well wishes trooping to his Opata home to "congratulate" him. Royal Odechi drummers were also present at his home, chanting praises of the "new king".

However, the firework to reinstate Ali Obaje geared up with several protest letters sent from different relevant institutions.

The most inspiring of the protest was that from the Igala Students Association, penned from Ahmadu Bello University, Samaru Zaria. In their swift letter dated 9th August, 1977, signed by Paul S. Emeje as president, Victor N. Enape, Abdul Okai, Paul I. Idachaba and Momoh Okpanachi as members, addressed to the Head of State, Lt. General Olusegun Obasanjo, at Dodan Barracks in Lagos. They did not mince words in demanding for the immediate release and reinstatement of Ali Obaje in that letter. Parts of it read

"...it is no gain-saying that the Attah of Igala has attained a long clean reputation in this country which he would never like to tarnish, or run away for anything any time. That is why it would have been more honourable, if he were restricted or confined to the royal palace at Idah rather than the unknown destination in Makurdi. We regard the action of the Benue state government as a dirty slap in the face of Igalas and as a people and law abiding citizens, we demand an apology from Benue state government"

The letter reads further

"We therefore call on the Head of State to use his good offices to intervene before the situation goes out of hand"

"We also call on the Sultan of Sokoto and all traditional rulers in this country to intervene in this issue, which we regard not only an insult to the Igalas but to the African traditional stools."

In few days, the federal government intervened, Sultan of Sokoto was also at the forefront and in the end, Ali Obaje was not just released, he was reinstated and several accords were reached.

After the whole crisis, Atta and Abdullahi Shelleng visited each other without further rancour. But, Paul Odi, the legendary Igala musician will not leave them in peace. He went to studio to wax a song titled "Ule mi Makurudi" meaning, my (ill fated) Makurdi trip. In the song, Odi reechoed that "when you see your old enemy, you remember your old fight" and this was to warn Ali Obaje against feeling relaxed with the government of Shelleng.

This was not the first time Ali Obaje will suffer similar fate in the hands of state executives. You will recall that in the build up to the 2003 general election, Abubakar Audu as governor of Kogi State detained Ali Obaje in Lokoja for 2 days, while the latter was on his way to Abuja to attend the National Council of Traditional Rulers of Nigeria.

Photo shows Col Abdullahi Shelleng in military uniform and Ali Obaje in black robe and white turban, walk hand in hand.

News Nigeria
Is there any hope for Nigeria? There is hope for Nigeria.

Uche Metuh Wonder (Nigerian) Woman 4y

I have seen many Nigerian youths who are conquering great frontiers on their social media profiles alone. That gives me hope. Many of these Nigerian youths seem to be quite passionate, empathetic and solution-driven to our plight. That gives me hope.

Some Nigerian youths have actually taken it upon themselves to actually discuss what matters and ask the right questions. That gives me hope!

I have discussed with many Nigerians in diaspora who want to import change (overseas lifestyle experiences) into the country. That gives me hope.

I see many Nigerian entrepreneurs venturing into businesses not just for profit but because they want to impact lives and improve our standard of living. That gives me hope.

I see the excellent academic performances of Nigerians, both home and abroad. That gives me hope.

Augusta Uwamanzu-Nna (L) and Anthony Joshua (R)

I see many Nigerians questioning their religious ideals. That gives me hope.

The fact that we have only given the bare minimum for the welfare of Nigeria(ns) because of corruption and poor quality leaders, and knowing that if we just try by even just 30%, we'd achieve incredible feats. That gives me hope.

Unlike African countries like Zimbabwe, Burundi, Angola etc, Nigeria does not operate a dictatorship government. Anyone can freely promote change by opposing our under-performing government. That gives me hope!

There's hope for Nigerian when we all finally remember and start honouring our own national pledge: I pledge to Nigeria my country, to be faithful, loyal and honest. To serve Nigeria will all my strength, to defend her unity, uphold her honour and glory, so help me God.

I see this question on Quora. That in itself, gives me hope.

Thank you for keeping this hope alive!

Related Links

How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Is Nigeria a failed state?
Do you believe Nigeria should remain as one country?
Will Nigeria ever get better?
Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?
How do I make Nigeria better?
Putting Nigeria side by side with South Africa, which of the two countries has the potential of leading the African continent out of the neo-colonial state they are in, considering both economic and military strength of both countries?
Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?
Will Nigeria break apart into smaller countries?

Arise News:
IBRAHIM BABANGIDA, FORMER NIGERIAN MILITARY

HEAD OF STATE

#IBB #ibrahimbabangida #babangida #TheMorningShow #ReubenAbati #RufaiOseni #adesuaomoruan #sotn #stateofthenation #atiku #tinubu #nigeria #nigerians #dailynews #news #globalnews #NIGERIANNEWS #TRENDING #trendingvideo #politics

Subscribe to our Channel for high profile interviews.
Follow us on Twitter at https://twitter.com/ARISEtv | and Instagram: https://www.instagram.com/arisenewsof...
and Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/AriseTVNews
Check out our website www.arise.tv

News Nigeria
BREAKING: I Will Contest For 2023 Presidency – Tinubu

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

Informs Buhari about ambition * Says he has capacity to turn things around

National Leader of the ruling All Progressives Congress (APC), Asiwaju Bola Tinubu, has confirmed his intention to contest the office of the president in 2023. Tinubu also disclosed that he has informed President Muhammadu Buhari about his presidential ambition.

He disclosed this to State House correspondents on Monday after meeting with President Buhari at the Presidential Villa, Abuja. According to him, contesting the presidency is a life-long ambition. Tinubu said he has the capacity to turn things around in the country.

What was Nigeria like before the British came and colonised her?

Nigeriana Answered by Danelle Lucado Sun

Due to worldwide insufficiency of world knowledge, the size and abilities of Africa as a continent was majorly undermined and oversimplified. Before colonisation, Africa was characterised by widespread flexibility in terms of movement, governance, and daily lifestyles. The continent consisted not of closed reproducing entities, equipped with unique unchanging cultures, but of more fluid units that would readily incorporate outsiders into the community with the condition that they accepted its customs, and where the sense of obligation and solidarity went beyond that of the nuclear family.
Pre- colonial societies were highly varied, where they were either stateless, run by the state or run by kingdoms. The notion of communalism was accepted and practiced widely; land was held commonly and could not be bought or sold, although other things, such as cattle, were owned individually. In those societies that were not stateless, the chiefs ran the daily affairs of the tribe together with one or more councils.

The colonisation of Africa through Europe brought about many forms of government that are still visible today. Before colonisation, however, there were many forms of government in Africa, ranging from powerful empires to decentralised groups of pastoralists and hunters.

Africa before European colonialism [Image source]

The use of iron tools marks a significant turning point in African civilization. Iron tools enhanced weaponry, allowed groups to manage and clear dense and thick forests, plough fields for farming, and making everyday life more convenient. Because the iron tools allowed Africans to flourish in their natural environment, they could live in larger communities which led to the formation of kingdoms and states. With this creation came the formation of modern civilizations, common languages, belief and value systems, art, religion, lifestyle and culture.

Another unique characteristic of pre- European Africa was the favouring of oral tradition within these societies. Stories were told and handed down generations in verbal form. This poses a threat to the survival of these stories because certain aspects could be forgotten or told in a different way.

National borders were also not much of a concern before colonization. European countries fought over African countries mainly for their natural resources. Lines were drawn through African communities which had existed for many years, and these lines can presently be seen as national boarders.

Europe saw the colonization of Africa as an opportunity to acquire a surplus population, thus settler colonies were created. With this invasion, many European countries saw Africa as being available to their disposal. However, several disputes took place regarding which European country would colonise a specific African country. Thus, in 1884, Portugal proposed a conference in which 14 European countrieswould meet in Berlin regarding the division of Africa, without the presence of Africa.

The first meeting at the Berlin Conference, 1884 Image source

The initial task of the conference was to agree that the Congo River and Niger River mouths and basins would be considered neutral and open to trade. Despite its neutrality, part of the Kongo Basin became a personal Kingdom (private property) for Belgium's King Leopold II and under his rule, over half of the region's population died.

At the time of the conference, only the coastal areas of Africa were colonized by the European powers. At the Berlin Conference the European colonial powers scrambled to gain control over the Interior of the Continent. The conference lasted until February 26, 1885 – a three month period where colonial powers haggled over geometric boundaries in the interior of the continent, disregarding the cultural and linguistic boundaries already established by the Native Indigenous African population. What ultimately resulted was a hodgepodge of geometric boundaries that divided Africa into fifty irregular countries.

The reasons for African colonisation were mainly economic, political and religious. During this time of colonisation, an economic depression was occurring in Europe, and powerful countries such as Germany, France, and Great Britain, were losing money. Africa seemed to be out of harm's way and had an abundance of raw materials from which Europe could make money from.

Due to cheap labor of Africans, Europeans easily acquired products like oil, ivory, rubber, palm oil, wood, cotton and gum. These products became of greater significance due to the emergence of the Industrial Revolution. Africa's colonisation was also as a result of European rivalries, where Britain and France had beenin a dispute since the Hundred Year's War. These countries became involved in a race to acquire more territory on the African continent, but this race was open to all European countries. Britain had had some success in halting the slave trade around the shores of Africa. But inland the story was different -- Muslim traders from north of the Sahara and on the East Coast still traded inland, and many local chiefs were reluctant to give up the use of slaves.

During the nineteenth century barely a year went by without a European expedition into Africa. The boom in exploration was triggered to a great extent by the creation of the African Association by wealthy Englishmen in 1788, and as they travelled, they started to record details of markets, goods, and resources for the wealthy philanthropists who financed their trips.

With the beginning of colonisation in Africa, morality became an increasing issue. The Europeans could not comprehend the existence of the Muslim Swahili trade which made them want to implement the Three C's: Christianity, Commerce, and Civilization. First, Europe experienced a Christian revival in the 19th century.

Missionaries began to focus on the large working class with the goal of bringing spiritual salvation to the workers and their families. The bible was made available to workers. Due to their large successes, missionaries began to look beyond Europe. Missions were established all over Africa. Missionaries did not serve as direct agents of European imperialism, yet they drew European governments deeper into Africa. In their efforts to preach Christianity, to bring western-style education to Africa and to ingrain monogamy in African societies, missionaries often felt threatened by warfare within Africa.

Hence, missionaries called on European governments for protection and intervention. Second, for centuries, European explorers have travelled throughout the African continent in their attempts to discover new things and to chart the African continent.

Trade would be well instantiated; the work of the Suez Canal Company at the north-eastern tip of Africa had been completed in 1869. Lastly, Livingstone believed that civilisation could be achieved through goodgovernment andeducation. The combination of these three elements, Livingstone believed, would end human suffering in Africa, and the ultimate level of civilisation would be achieved within the continent.

Christianity would therefore provide the moral principles that would guide Africans, while education and commerce would encourage Africans to produce their own goods to trade with Europeans. For this to work a functioning and legitimate governing system was needed to ensure the civil rights of the people.

By 1900 a significant part of Africa had been colonized by mainly seven European powers—Britain, France, Germany, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, and Italy. After the conquest of African decentralized and centralized states, the European powers set about establishing colonial state systems.

The colonial state was the machinery of administrative domination established to facilitate effective control and exploitation of the colonized societies. Colonial states were authoritarian, bureaucratic systems, partly due to their origins in military conquest and the racist ideology of the imperialist enterprise. The French directed their attention to the active economies of the Niger Delta, the Lagos Hinterland and the Gold Coast.

The European countries were able to colonise African countries rapidly because there were rivalries between African leaders. These kings and chiefs were competing with each other to be the richest and most powerful within their tribes. During these rivalries, European leaders would take advantage of the situation and persuaded some leaders to be on their side to fight against other leaders.

Natural disasters also played a big role in the rapid and easy colonisation of Africa. In 1895, a serious drought reached many regions in Africa which was caused by a sudden decline in rainfall. Hardly any crops were produced, and the food shortage which followed caused the death of many people and animals.

The little crops that were produced were destroyed by a plague of locusts. In addition to this plague, the cattle plague broke out during the 1890’s which killed cattle, sheep and goats. This led to even more deaths of animals and people, and due to their physical and mental weakness, they were unable to fight against European powers.

European powers could easily take control of any source of land by using force and violence. They accomplished this by using more powerful weapons, and had the advantage of the newly invented machine gun called the Maxim gun which was invented in the 1880’s. This gun could fire eleven bullets per second, and outdid the weapons that the African forces had.

African armies did not manage to get hold of European weapons because it was not sold to them. Thus Africans were at a military disadvantage. An outbreak of new diseases made an appearance during the late 1890’s and the first one was a range of smallpox epidemics. The Europeans who were already in Africa had developed immunity to these diseases due to past experiences of these outbreaks in Europe.

The indigenous African population had no immunity or resistance to these diseases and thus weakened the African population. A large number of the African population thus died out, or became too weak to fight back.

The impact that colonisation had on Africa can be described as both good and bad. In terms of European political practice in Africa, all colonising countries share similar attributes. Colonial political systems were un-democratic; Law and Order, as well as Peace, was a primary objective of colonial governments; Colonial governments lacked capacity and Colonial governments practiced "divide and rule."

Firstly, colonial governments did not allow popular participation, and all political decisions were made by the small political elite with no or little input from the African population. Secondly, the African population was not satisfied with the way that Europeans imposed on their governing system without any proper representation, thus the maintenance of peace under the African population was made an important priority for the colonial government. Thirdly, seeing as most colonial governments were not rich, they did not fund the governing of their colonies fully.

Although they were responsible for raising the money for their own colonies, they still lacked the incometo properly develop and maintain a successful governing system. This meant that colonial governments were not able to provide basic infrastructure, such as roads and communication networks, nor were they able to provide basic social services such as education, health care, and housing. Lastly, the principle of “divide and rule” meant that policies that intentionally weakened indigenous power networks and institutions were implemented.

Due to the lack of revenue within the colonies, little attention was given to promoting social change or development. Although all the colonies did not experience the same extent of social change, these colonies share the same characteristics in terms of social change.

Firstly, colonial and political practices caused a large scale movement of people. In some areas, migrations were primarily from one rural area to another. In other places, the migration was from rural areas to urban areas. These movements resulted in dislocation of peoples that impacted society and culture. Social and cultural beliefs and practices were challenged by these migrations. Long-held practices had to be adapted, and at times were completed abandoned, to fit the new colonial circumstances. Secondly, and partly due to the first consequence, the dislocation of families also occurred.

Men mainly left the household to work in mines and on plantations, leaving their wives and children behind. As a result, women and adolescents were forced to take on new roles and to cope in absence of their husbands and fathers. Due to colonialism, the African family structure had been severely changed.

Prior to colonialism, the extended family structure (family that extends beyond the immediate family) was the norm in most African societies, but by the end of colonial era, the nuclear family (family consisting of a pair of adults/ parents and their children) was becoming the norm in many African countries. Thirdly, urbanization emerged as colonization was imposed.

During colonialism, urbanization occurred fairly rapidly in many African colonies. A number of pre-colonial African societies had towns and small cities. However, even in these societies, most people were engaged in agriculture in rural villages or homesteads.

Urban living resulted in changes in economic activities and occupation, and in changes in the way people lived. These changes often challenged existing values, beliefs, and social practices. Fourthly, the religious beliefs of Africans were adapted or changed. A small percentage of the African population regarded themselves as Christians, and today more than half of the African population is Christians.

Colonial rule provided an environment in which Christianity, in many forms, spread in many parts of Africa. While Islam was widespread in Africa prior to the coming of colonialism, it also benefited from colonialism. British and French colonial officials actively discouraged Christian mission work in Muslim areas.

Lastly, the public education system of African was also changed. The majority of colonial governments did little to support schools. Most formal schooling African colonies were a result of the work of missionaries. Missionaries felt that education and schools were essential to their mission.

Their primary concern was the conversion of people to Christianity. Missionaries believed that the ability of African peoples to read the Bible in their own language was important to the conversion process. However, most mission societies were not wealthy, and they could not support the number of schools that they really wanted.

Consequently, with limited government support, most African children did not go to school during the colonial era. In fact at the end of colonial rule, no colony could state that more than half of their children finished elementary school, and far fewer attended secondary school.

The city of Elmina, located in the Gold Coast West Africa, in the late 19th century. Image source

As Britain increasingly colonised more and more African countries, the British had become the dominant power along the coast, and they began annexing and laying claim to territory gradually. The expansion of the Asante kingdom towards the coast was the major cause of this, as the British began to fear that the Asante would come to monopolise coastal trade in their place.

The British placed the Governor of neighboring Sierra Leone, which was already annexed, in charge of British forts and settlements along the coast. He formed an unfavorable opinion of the Asante, and began the long process of attempting to bring them under British control. However, disputes over jurisdiction of the area known as Ashanti led to war between the British and the Asante, and in 1824, the Asante succeeded in killing the Governor as well as seven of his men.

In retaliation, the British (with the help of tribes oppressed by the Asante, including the Fante and the Ga) beat the Asante back in 1826, and successfully ended their dominance of coastal regions. The establishment of British law and jurisdiction in the colony was a gradual process, but the 1844 Bond with the Fante is popularly considered to be its true beginning. This recognised the power of British officials and British common law in the Gold Coast and over the Fante people. In 1850, a Governor was appointed to Gold Coast who was not also Governor of Sierra Leone, and this is how the colony of Gold Coast was born. A supreme court was established in 1853, and led to British common law becoming enforced.

However, all of this brought financial challenges, and saw the policy of making the colonies pay come in to force in the Gold Coast for the first time.

European troops entering Kumane during the second Anglo-Ashanti War.
Image source

The British fought against the Ashanti four times in the 19th century and suppressed a final uprising in 1900 before claiming the region as a colony. The first Anglo-Ashanti War began in 1823 after the Ashanti defeated a small British force under Sir Charles McCarthy and converted his skull into a drinking cup. It ended with a standoff after the British beat an Ashanti army near the coast in 1826.

After two generations of relative peace, more violence occurred in 1863 when the Ashanti invaded the British "protectorate" along the coast in retaliation for the refusal of Fanti leaders to return a fugitive slave. The result was another stand-off, but the British took casualties and public opinion at home started to view the Gold Coast as a quagmire.

In 1873, the Second Ashanti War began after the British took possession of the remaining Dutch trading posts along the coast, giving British firms a regional monopoly on the trade between Africans and Europe. The Ashanti had long viewed the Dutch as allies, so they invaded the British protectorate along the coast.

A British army led by General Wolseley waged a successful campaign against the Ashanti that led to a brief occupation of Kumasi and a "treaty of protection" signed by the Ashantehene (leader) of Ashanti, ending the war in July 1874. This war was covered by a number of news correspondents (including H. M. Stanley) and the "victory" excited the imagination of the European public.

In 1894, the Third Anglo-Ashanti War began following British press reports that a new Ashantehene named Prempeh committed acts of cruelty and barbarism. Strategically, the British used the war to insure their control over the gold fields before the French, who were advancing on all sides, could claim them. In 1896, the British government formally annexed the territories of the Ashanti and the Fanti.

In 1900, a final uprising took place when the British governor of Gold Coast (Hodgson) unilaterally attempted to depose the Ashantehene by seizing the symbol of his authority, the Golden Stool. The British were victorious and reoccupied Kumasi permanently. On September 26, 1901 the British created the Crown Colony of Gold Coast. The change in the Gold Coast's status from "protectorate" to "crown colony" meant that relations with the inhabitants of the region were handled by the Colonial Office, rather than the Foreign Office. That implied that the British no longer recognized the Ashanti or the Fanti as having independent governments.

In December 1895, Sir Francis Scott left Cape Coast with an expedition force. It arrived in Kumasi in January 1896. The Asantehene directed the Ashanti to not resist. Shortly thereafter, Governor William Maxwell arrived in Kumasi as well. Asantehene Agyeman Prempeh was deposed and arrested. Britain annexed the territories of the Ashanti and the Fanti in 1896, and Ashanti leaders were sent into exile in the Seychelles. The Asante Union was dissolved. Robert Baden-Powell led the British in this campaign. The British formally declared the coastal regions to be the Gold Coast colony. A British Resident was permanently placed in the city, and soon after a British fort.

As a final measure of resistance, the remaining Asante court not exiled to the Seychelles mounted an offensive against the British Residents at the Kumasi Fort. The resistance was led by Yaa Asantewaa, the Queen-Mother of Ejisu. From March 28 to late-September 1900, the Asante and British were engaged in what would become known as the War of the Golden Stool.

On March 28, 1900 Governor Frederick Hodgson met with the chiefs at Kumasi and demanded that the Asante hand over the sacred Golden Stool to him. On April 25 the telegraph wires were cut, and Kumasi was surrounded. Thirty British were dying per day in June. On June 23 three officers and 150 made a sortie and managed to escape. Governor Hodgson reached Cape Coast on July 10. The British sent 1,400 troops from other parts of Africa, and the Asante's nine-month struggle for independence failed.

In March 1901 Governor Matthew Nathan visited Kumasi, and he deported 16 Ashanti leaders and imprisoned 31 at Elmina. The people were disarmed, and only licensed hunters could carry guns. The British annexed the Asante confederacy as a Crown Colony and did not allow chiefs to rule in Kumasi until Prempeh became Kumasihene in 1926. In the end, Asantewaa and other Ashanti leaders were also sent to Seychelles to join Prempeh I. In January 1902, Britain finally added Asante to its protectorates on the Gold Coast.

Thank you to the following sites for contributions.

Related Links

Does the monolithic representation of Africa by a huge chunk of the Western media have any positives?

Is it common for Yoruba people in Lagos to invite elders of their ancestral village to a reception or formal instance?

What was World War II like in Affica?

How to buy goods form China?

Are the governors of states in Nigeria addressed as "Your Excellency"?

The northern part of Nigeria consist of diverse language and culture but majority don't express or communicate with their language in public given the impression all northerners are hausa or is there a reason for it?

How does one escape poverty in Nigeria?

What is your favorite African music?

What is the meaning of "ciyawa" in Hausa?

What is the difference between a passport book number and a passport/travel document number, and where does one find it in a Nigerian passport?

In what ways are people's rights being violated across Nigeria? What are your suggestions to curtail these absurdities?

What will be real justice for the murderers of 12 years old Bowen student, Sylvester? Their parents have flown them out to avoid the law.

What will be real justice for the murderers of 12 years old Bowen student, Sylvester? Their parents have flown them out to avoid the law.

Will the electronic age come in Nigeria?

NIGERIA

Leadership History Archive: A Documentary: 50 Years After the Biafran Civil War

Gen. Yakubu Gowon

www.IgboConference.com The 6th Annual International Igbo Conference Themed "Legacies of Biafra" . The sons of two key actors in the Nigeria-Biafra war have a conversation about the key actors in the war. Timothy Modu II in Conversation with Philip Effiong II. Major Gen Phillip Efiong was the 1st Vice President and the last President of Biafra. Mazi (Colonel) Timothy C. Modu was the Military Ambassador and international negotiator for the Govt of Biafra 1967-1970. Gen. Gowon is interviewed by professor Robert Rotberg on becoming the third president of Nigeria and also one of Africa's youngest heads of state at age 32.

HistoryVille

This is the story of how Major-General Ibrahim Badamasi Babangida shortly known as IBB, Nigeria's Chief of Army Staff and the third-ranking member of the Supreme Military Council (SMC), overthrew the Head of State and Commander-in-Chief, Major-General Muhammadu Buhari on August 27, 1985. #HistoryVille #Babangida #Buhari Join this channel to become a member: https://www.youtube.com/HistoryVille/... Get Ayomide Akinbode's latest historical novels on Amazon: https://www.amazon.com/Ayomide-Akinbo... and Okadabooks: https://okadabooks.com/user/AyoAkinbode Subscribe to HistoryVille: https://www.youtube.com HistoryVille?... Follow us on Social Media: Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/thehistoryville Instagram: https://www.instagram.com/historyville Twitter: https://www.twitter.com/HistoryVille LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/company/hist... For interesting historical articles visit: https://www.thehistoryville.com Article Source: https://dawodu.com/omoigui16.htm

Channels Television

Don't forget to subscribe: https://bit.ly/2Hb8hjx Watch more interesting videos: https://bit.ly/34ogCaw Follow Channels Television On: Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/channelsforum/
Twitter: https://twitter.com/channelstv

Instagram: https://www.instagram.com/channelstel...
Get more news on our website: https://www.channelstv.com/
#ChannelsTv #Biafra #CivilWar

News Nigeria

Understanding the Kuti Legacy.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 8m

Israel Oludotun Ransome-Kuti (1891-1955) Eminent Nigerian churchman, educationist and administrator, he was the founding president of the Nigeria Union of Teachers (NUT), Africa's largest professional group. He was born on 30 April 1891, to an Egba family in Abeokuta.

In 1928 while passing through the then colonial military settlement within Abeokuta, he was asked to remove his hat as he walked past the British Flag. He bluntly refused, and in the process of removing his hat under the threat of a bayonet by a solider, Rev Kuti almost lost an eye. He created a massive uproar after this incident, which compelled the authorities to relocate the military barracks from the main town to Lafenwa, on the outskirts of Abeokuta, where it remains till date.

News Nigeria

In 1960, This 27-Year-Old Man Campaigned That Yorubaland Should Be Separated From Nigeria

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 7m

If you think that the current secessionists that are agitating that Yoruba should be separated from Nigeria are the first to come up with such motives, then I guess you should read about this man.

He is Mr. Modiyu Adeniyi Osinowo, a Headmaster who was 27-year-old during the time, he led a campaign that Yorubaland should separate from Nigeria.

In year 1960, during the celebration of Nigeria's independence, Mr Osinowo was provoked by the kind of treatment that was given to Chief Obafemi Awolowo, he then led a one-person campaign that Yoruba should be given its own sovereignty and separate from Nigeria like Pakistan separated from India.

In his words, he said " Let's have our own Pakistan, if they could rubbish Awo like this, they will start defecating on us sooner or later, let's have our own sovereignty".

5 years later, Mr. Modiyu Adeniyi was assassinated.

How would you solve Nigeria's economic problems, if given the opportunity?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian Dec 12

Stop expecting a messiah. That is the primary problem of Nigerian politics. The Nigerian economy does not have problems. It produces to the exact extent possible from our inputs of Capital and Labour. In other words, Nigeria is as it is because it has Nigerians.
Increasing our production involves sacrifices.

Are more of us willing to pitch in our taxes?

Will the arms of government slash their expenditures or persist in posturing as giants?

Will we accept that foreign investments are not our property but theirs?

Will we accept higher educational standards at the expense of mass certification?

Will we learn to treat our traders as important economic pillars to be supported?

Will we stop paying ransoms to militants, jihadists, kidnappers and sundry criminals and, instead, fight them to finish?

Will civil servants accept that most of them are superfluous?

Will the unions be constructive; if they are not, are we willing to crush them?

Are we willing to reduce the armed forces to warfighters alone rather than moonlighting as landlords too?

Will we stop certain billionaires from using us as a captive market or continue to redistribute upwards in the name of national pride?

Will we realise that our economic destiny is linked to our neighbours and act accordingly?

The Nigerian economy is typical of a poor country enriched by an influx of unearned cash. We were on our own. Foreigners came and paid us money for our dirt. Everybody thought we had arrived when we, in fact, had not.

Changing that mindset is a national project. Waiting for an individual saviour is an excuse to reject the discomfort of uncertainty. Beneficiaries from the status quo use it to justify their privilege; non-beneficiaries use it as a crutch to stop them from moving on.

Nigerians must secure our lands. All the pie in the sky projects are fantasies as long as no Nigerian, not even the president, can traverse the length of our territory without their heart in their mouth.

We must learn to sell. Oil has allowed far too many of us to become local champions. Starting from our biggest billionaires to our schools that can't attract students from Ghana. The only true guarantor of quality is not a thousand screaming local voices; it is when people with other choices confirm it.

It is not something an individual can do. But if enough Nigerians that want better decide to better ourselves, we might stand a chance. But as old Bongos said: 'Nothing good comes easy'. Only scammers say otherwise. As we enter campaigning season, evaluate properly.

Related Links

What are problems that could be lucrative to solve in Nigeria?

What is preventing the economic takeoff of Nigeria? Nigeria has access to the coastline, a huge youthful population, decent reserves of natural resources, a good work ethic, rich and expansive agricultural land, etc?

What are the likely solutions to Nigeria's problems?

What are the problems facing businesses in Nigeria?

What is an "economic problem"?

What is applied economics, and how can we use it to solve economic problems?

What is the solution to poverty in Nigeria?

What are some ways Nigeria can develop its economy?

What is the major problem of African countries, particularly the strong and developing ones like Nigeria and Ghana amongst others?

What type of economy is Nigeria practicing?

What are some interesting or surprising facts about Nigeria?

Silas O. Abayomi 35 years of practicing journalist, editor, and proofreader. Updated 1y

There are many interesting things about Nigeria, which makes it a unique country on the continent of Africa.

Nigeria is the most populous black country on the earth. With a population of about 200 million people, one or two out of every five black people is or [are] Nigerians.

Two, Nigeria president is the most powerful president in the world; with a military-imposed constitution without citizens participation, a constitution in a military style top-to-bottom control was foisted on Nigerians, making the occupant of the highest seat being the most powerful. He controls executive, he has much influence over judiciary, and he teleguide legislature, especially, where his party has majority. He controls all the three arms of the military: Army, Air Force, and Navy. He has Police Force under his grip control; all intelligence community comes under his control through the Office of National Security Adviser. He is the overseer of Nigeria economy through the principal agencies, he has unlimited control over through appointment of the principal heads: the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN); the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC); Nigeria Maritimes Authority (NMA); Nigeria Ports Authority (NPA). With or without appropriations, Nigeria president, sometimes or unilaterally release funds or money.

Nigeria has the highest number of constitutions ever written in Africa. Since 1922, Nigeria has had more than ten different constitutions; unfortunately, most of these documents remain unworkable pieces of rules. In 1922, Nigeria had one Constitution; then in 1946; 1951 constitution, 1954 constitution, 1957/58 constitutional conference; 1960 constitution; the 1963 constitution; 1979 constitution; 1989 constitution; 1991 constitution; 1996 constitution; and the 1999 constitution, the worst political document in the history of Nigeria, which stole everything from owners, place the booty in the hands of elite and their proxies.

In Nigeria, you may have an army officer of a General rank or equivalent in Air Force or Navy, but has never gone to war. Rank received on ethic, tribal, religious platforms.

Nigeria has one of the best geographical features in Africa. It parades all vegetation from coastal, rainforest, mangrove, savannah, semi arid and arid; this unique feature makes the production of cash and food crops continous year round.

Nigeria is a home to world religions. It has no Vatican, no Mecca or Medina; no Jerusalem; still, carry religion upon itself than nations or people that introduced these tools of divisions and mind control measures. Fraternize with religions, but far from basic, common, and demands of real or true religion. About 90% are Christians and Muslims; still, Nigeria has one of the African worst sectarian violence. Distrust between the major religions has been the drawback to its greatness.

Nigeria has one of the brightest people around the world. Her citizens living in North America, Europe, Asia and Australia are among the best in their careers and professions.

Nigeria has the highest number of ethnic nationalities in Africa; between 1000 and 1500 ethnic nationalities are in Nigeria; however, the largest are: Yoruba in the West; Hausa, Fulani, Kanuri in the North; Igbo in the East. Other ethnic nationalities are: Ijaw, Edo, Itshekiri, Urhobo, Ibibio, Efik, Anang, Ikwerre in the south. In the north are Ebira, Beron, Tiv, Jukun, Gbayi, and many more. These are unknown nationalities, because the main ethnic groups dwarf them.

Nigeria is the largest oil producing country in Africa, and eleventh in the world. It has 37.2 billion barrels of proven oil reserves, this supply may last another forty-five years. Her proven gas reserve is 202 trillion cubic feet, plus about 600 trillion cubic feet of unproven gas reserve.

Two great rivers-Niger and Benue complement Nigeria landscape; and these two rivers meet at Lokoja, the Kogi State capital.

Nigerians are very resilient, strong, tough, hardy, and quick to recover; in fact, these qualities have continuously made Nigeria political elite shortchanged their own, Nigerians won’t ask questions; rather struggle to sustain life for themselves. People care less about social responsibility; and government continues to use the social and political loopholes to hold their own down. Where government fails, it never accept responsibility; where government should be held accountable, it gives reasons, why it shouldn't be. Where government lack moral, social and political control, it goes ahead.

Nigerians are kind and benevolent at heart. Warm-hearted, tolerant, benign.

Another thing about Nigeria is the preeminent place of football. Nothing promotes unity and friendship in Nigeria than football. In fact, most Nigerians believe that the only god left in Nigeria is that of football.

The place of Pigin English. Pigin English is the less standardized English without rigors or rules, which both educated and non educated Nigerians speak with clear understanding. At times, Pigin English may be an amalgam of English Language with regional languages or/and dialects or a recalibrated English; very simple, easy to say, easy to understand. Everyone speaks it; everyone understands it; everyone enjoys it. Even foreigners who live in Nigeria speak it and communicate with it.

Nigeria has over one thousand languages and dialects spoken between few thousand to millions.

Another interesting thing about Nigeria is, an average Nigeria speak more than one language. Nigeria Language structure follows three different categories: the national language (which is English Language); the regional languages which are (Yoruba, Igbo, and Hausa); then, community dialects. A lot of Nigerians speak all of these languages, while majority may speak two or more.

bantu
photos

ToLet.com.ng

BellaNaija
BellaNaija

Related Links

What are the top 10 mind blowing facts about Nigeria?

What are remarkable facts about Nigeria?

What facts are unique from Nigeria?
What are the biggest misconceptions about Nigeria?

What are some mind blowing facts about Nigeria/Nigerians?

What is it that surprised you about Africa?

What are interesting things you know about Nigeria?

What are 10 things to know about Nigeria?

What happened to Nigeria?

What do you love about Nigeria

What is weird in Nigeria but normal in the rest of the world?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated 1y

There are a dozen things the average Nigerian considers weird that are absolutely normal in many other countries.

Here are four of those:

Why visit a psychiatrists?

People who study psychology in college mostly end up working in other departments in the government, there are not many jobs for them in Nigeria.

In fact, I haven't seen a Nigerian who says "I'm going to see a psychologist."

Majority of Nigerians don't feel safe sharing their burden with a total stranger, neither will they take advice from such people. They would rather talk to friends.

About the only people, the average Nigerian listen to are banks, pastors and native doctors.

I'm of the opinion that more than half of Nigerians have serious psychological issues but chose to ignore them. Thank God serial killings are rare here.

Why does anyone need a Dentist?

You will have a hard time explaining to my grandpa why you went to study only the teeth instead of the whole body.

These people only wait for serious surgery, that's the only time most Nigerians remember them.

They consider these folks doctor but not doctor.

They are not real to us. Real Doctors treat every part of the body, hence in Nigeria, even a dentist does abortion, treats eyes and other ailments to support his ministry(family).

Why safety officers?

This is being embraced in large companies now, but back then who cares about safety?

I worked in a company where the safety boss had to constantly encourage, warn and threaten workers to keep their hard hats on their head only for them to take it off and hold it in their hand immediately after he leaves.

"I'm not blind, I won't hit my head intentionally at any hard surface, what does this man take me for, a fool?"

Nigerians believe in prayers more than safety. After powerful prayers—it's powerful because people shout and sweat while praying, they are ready to face the world without worry thereafter.

Come and see James Bond drivers in Lagos, alone—only to scream Jesus before an accident.

Praying in total silence:

How do you pray without making a sound?

Your neighbours don't even know you as a prayer warrior?

The witches in your family/village have to beware of you before God even sends them fire.

The average Nigerian prays with blood and sweat.

The Bible said talk to God but the average Nigerian shouts to God.

You're considered a weak Christian if you don't pray that way.

In fact, no Nigerian, living in a Christian dominated state will say he hasn't overheard a neighbour praying. You could learn more about Nigerians here.

Related Links

Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

If Nigeria is so corrupt, why are Nigerians still a proud people?

Why is it that outsiders hate Nigeria?

Are Nigerians racist?

Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?

Nigeria is one of the strongest countries in Africa, in terms of military and economy. Why are they not invading neighboring countries, or going to war with them upon all the uncertainties they experienced with neighboring countries?

Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?

What's something unique about living in Nigeria that is unlike anywhere else in the world?

Does Nigeria have a royal family?

News Nigeria

EFCC Arrests Fake Army General Who Claimed Buhari Nominated Him As COAS for Alleged N270m Fraud

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Thu

Operatives of the Lagos Zonal Command of the EFCC, have arrested one Bolarinwa Oluwasegun, a fake Army General, for an alleged N270m fraud.

The suspect, who posed as a General in the Nigerian Army, allegedly made false representations to the complainant, Kodef Clearing Resources, that the President, Muhammadu Buhari, had shortlisted him and one other to be appointed as the Chief of Army Staff, COAS, and that he needed a short grant “to press and process the appointment.”

NIGERIAN ARMY
MA BOLARINW

He also allegedly forged a letter of appointment as COAS purportedly signed by the President and showed the same to the victim to further prove his claim.

News Nigeria

How Benue State Governor Arrested And Dethroned Ali Obaje The Atta of Igala

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 20h

On 8th August, 1977, at the peak of the crisis arising from insubordination to Atta of Igala by Ankpa elites, the government of Benue State invited Aliyu Obaje to Makurdi for a meeting. Upon arrival, Atta was immediately arrested and detained in an undisclosed facility.

Later that evening, news broke of the possible arrest of Atta in faraway Makurdi. Idah was tensed, but the actors from Ankpa were not taken unaware as it was apparently a script being played out by them.

By 7:00pm on that day, the fears were confirmed even beyond expectation. The NBC News at 7 did not just report that Atta had been arrested, it was also revealed that he had been deposed and confined to an undisclosed location in Makurdi for constituting a threat to peaceful coexistence. Because of slim access to television at the time, this unbelievable story was confirmed by only few who had access to television.

On 9th August, 1977, the news of the arrest and deposition was all over the mainstream newspapers. Precisely, the Nigerian Herald Newspaper reported it on its front page.

Igala sons and daughters, young and old swung into action—protesting the action of the state government headed by Colonel Abdullahi Shelleng to be unjust.

Of course, some persons; even within the Atta dynasty were happy with the development. A son of a previous Atta Atabo Ijomi was one of those who welcomed the development. He quickly; but tacitly declared himself as next Atta. That evening, he moved from Ogbogbo to Idah in full royal regalia amidst cheers of supporters. Eyewitnesses say he wore a brown robe and white turban with several well wishes trooping to his Opata home to "congratulate" him. Royal Odechi drummers were also present at his home, chanting praises of the "new king".

However, the firework to reinstate Ali Obaje geared up with several protest letters sent from different relevant institutions.

The most inspiring of the protest was that from the Igala Students Association, penned from Ahmadu Bello University, Samaru Zaria. In their swift letter dated 9th August, 1977, signed by Paul S. Emeje as president, Victor N. Enape, Abdul Okai, Paul I. Idachaba and Momoh Okpanachi as members, addressed to the Head of State, Lt. General Olusegun Obasanjo, at Dodan Barracks in Lagos. They did not mince words in demanding for the immediate release and reinstatement of Ali Obaje in that letter. Parts of it read

"...it is no gain-saying that the Attah of Igala has attained a long clean reputation in this country which he would never like to tarnish, or run away for anything any time. That is why it would have been more honourable, if he were restricted or confined to the royal palace at Idah rather than the unknown destination in Makurdi. We regard the action of the Benue state government as a dirty slap in the face of Igalas and as a people and law abiding citizens, we demand an apology from Benue state government"

The letter reads further

"We therefore call on the Head of State to use his good offices to intervene before the situation goes out of hand"

"We also call on the Sultan of Sokoto and all traditional rulers in this country to intervene in this issue, which we regard not only an insult to the Igalas but to the African traditional stools."

In few days, the federal government intervened, Sultan of Sokoto was also at the forefront and in the end, Ali Obaje was not just released, he was reinstated and several accords were reached.

After the whole crisis, Atta and Abdullahi Shelleng visited each other without further rancour. But, Paul Odi, the legendary Igala musician will not leave them in peace. He went to studio to wax a song titled "Ule mi Makurudi" meaning, my (ill fated) Makurdi trip. In the song, Odi reechoed that "when you see your old enemy, you remember your old fight" and this was to warn Ali Obaje against feeling relaxed with the government of Shelleng.

This was not the first time Ali Obaje will suffer similar fate in the hands of state executives. You will recall that in the build up to the 2003 general election, Abubakar Audu as governor of Kogi State detained Ali Obaje in Lokoja for 2 days, while the latter was on his way to Abuja to attend the National Council of Traditional Rulers of Nigeria.

Photo shows Col Abdullahi Shelleng in military uniform and Ali Obaje in black robe and white turban, walk hand in hand.

News Nigeria

Presidential hopeful and All Progressives Congress national leader, Bola Tinubu, is optimistic that Nigeria will win the fight against insecurity, even as he called on Nigerians to report suspicious movements to relevant authorities.

Posted by 35m Aniekpeno Ekong

Tinubu, while in Katsina State, yesterday, also called on Nigerians to be vigilant by paying attention to their surroundings, and to “preach peace to those determined to bring terrorism.”

The APC leader was in the state to sympathise with the state government over the murder of Rabe Nasir, a Commissioner for Science, Technology and Innovation, who was killed on December 10, 2021.

Why are the igbos of Nigeria found in most countries of the world?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam I am a Nigerian. Nov 16

'Most countries' is an exaggeration.
That said, there are between 30–50 million Igbo Nigerians. Throw in people of Igbo descent, and well.... We are likely one of the largest human groupings in the world. It is a question of sheer numbers. Same reason you also find Arabs, Chinese, Indians and (other) Nigerians in 'most' countries. The tacked-on propaganda is mostly cope. I am of the 'better to be a duck than a squawking chicken school'. We are few, but we shall prevail.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria the most hated country in the world?
Why are the igbos of Nigeria found in over "150" countries of the world?
How do other non-Igbo Nigerians feel about Igbos?
Why are the Igbos much hated in Nigeria?
Are the Igbos of Nigeria Bantu?
Where did the Igbo people of Nigeria come from?
Who are the Igbos in Nigeria?
How can we unite the Igbos & Yorubas in Nigeria?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
Are Igbos in Nigeria mixed race?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Is there any tribe or ethnic group in Nigeria called Delta Igbo? If yes, what's their history or origin? If no, why do certain people call themselves Delta Igbo?
If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer most?
Why is Nigeria a poor country?
What's the difference between the Etche people of Rivers state and Igbos? Why do they speak Igbo and bear Igbo names, and yet claim they aren't IGBOS?

News Nigeria

PRESIDENT BUHARI SETS THE BALL ROLLING FOR A BIG MILITARY OPERATION IN NIGER STATE

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Sun

President Muhammadu Buhari as Commander-in-Chief of the nation's armed forces has set the ball rolling for a major military operation in Niger State which has faced continued attacks on its communities by bandits and remnants of Boko Haram terrorists fleeing theaters of war in the Northwestern and Northeastern parts of the country.

In a directive to the Defence Headquarters a few days ago, the President asked the military to respond robustly to the cases of killings and kidnappings in the State and to give effect to the strategic objectives through the use of force.

In his message to the government and people of Niger State, President Buhari said, "I would like to express sincere sympathies to the government and people of the State following recent security incidents."

The President reiterated that security is a responsibility of every member of the community and only through solidarity and cooperation with law enforcement agencies can we defeat the problems finally.

"The Federal Government is willing to strengthen support and cooperation with all the states. I believe that with the full cooperation of the citizens, we will surely overcome this problem," said the President.

Garba Shehu, Senior Special Assistant to the President (Media & Publicity)

January 16, 2022

PHOTO NEWS NIGERIA:
Former President Olusegun Obasanjo (a retired General) decorates his son, Adeboye, with the rank of Brigadier General of the Nigerian Army.

Aniekpeno Ekong 4h

Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria

What do you have to say about Nigeria's President Buhari?

Chidera Akigwe Shocked over the Lekki toll gate incident Updated Wed

I do hate president Muhammadu Buhari,so my answer may be bias! Buhari's regime not administration please has done both good and bad

1,I sincerely thank General Muhammadu Buhari for strengthening the Nigerian armed force, however I disagree with how he's using the military… none of us have forgotten Lekki tollgate massacre!

2, I am quite happy that agriculture has been giving a new lease under his regime, howbeit the deplorable state of our economy is shocking! Buhari actually doesn't know how to manage the economy, this can be seen when he was military head of state (1983–1985) and currently now. His vice professor Yemi Osibanjo when he was in charge of the country for 59 days reduced inflation and revalued our Naira by 30%

3, Buhari must be applauded for maintaining one Nigeria despite the worsening situation of terrorism, banditry, secession, kidnapping and robbery. However his abuse of our civil rights is not tolerable nor encouraging. Nigeria is a free nation and a democratic nation, his government was elected by the people, therefore he should not use SSS and DSS to terrorize them.

4, Buhari encourages Nepotism, and tribalism in the federal government; a case where the three heads of the three arms of government are Northerners and Muslims sends a strong message to the South and Christians— you are not needed in the governance of our nation.

Buhari registered Nigeria as a Muslim country despite the fact that all Constitutions of Nigeria recognize that Nigeria is a secular nation!

In conclusion Buhari did not perform well as expected but he tried for a retired general in his Seventies. I can only hope and pray that Nigeria gets a better president 2023, someone who has the qualities of all our former Civilian leaders: the pragmatism of Michael Okpara, the coolness and oratory of Abubakar Tafewa Balewa, the charismatic nature of Nnamdi Azikiwe, the wisdom of Obafemi Awolowo, the politics of Ahmadu Bello, the simpleness of Shehu Shagari, the courage of Olusegun Obasanjo, the love of Musa Yard adua, the democratic nature of Goodluck Johnathan and the resilience of Muhammadu Buhari.

Long live the people of the federal republic of Nigeria, long live Nigerians and long live democracy. May GOD bless us all!

Related Links

How good is Nigeria's President Buhari?
Why do Nigerians hate President Buhari?
Has Buhari been a good president for Nigeria? What are his major accomplishments?

How bad is Nigeria's President Buhari?
What are your suggestions to the UN over the recent state of Nigeria under the government of President Muhammadu Buhari?
How is Buhari better than Jonathan as Nigerian President?
How popular is President Buhari of Nigeria? Could he run for a second term?
Can we really say Buhari's 6 years of ruling Nigeria affected the nation this poorly or is it just an evidence of the inability of past governments to grow the Nigerian economy?
If you are to be the replacement of President Muhammadu Buhari for 6 months, what will you change in Nigeria?
Is Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari truly cloned?

What is the danger between Nigeria and China's relationship?

Peter Elliott B.Arch in Architecture (college major), Victoria University of Wellington - Architecture and Design (Graduated 1997)11mo

Chinese will flood the country, take over all the businesses and CCP will take over the government. Organs will be taken.

Naaa just kidding lol. A lot of people will be thinking that though - hate China etc. Nigeria will develop more quickly and the middle class will grow. They'll buy stuff from China and both countries will benefit.

Related Links

How can I start importing goods from China to Nigeria when I don't know or have any agent to help me?

Can Nigeria be the China of Africa?
Is China becoming dangerous for the world?
Is it dangerous to be pro-American in China, is it dangerous to be Pro-China in the USA?
How would you compare Nigeria and China?

China has been lending a lot of money to Nigeria recently. And there have been this rumor that Nigeria may lose her sovereignty to China if she couldn't pay up her debts. Do you actually think Nigeria sovereignty could be lost to China?

How dangerous is Nigeria?
What do you think of the relationship between China and Vietnam?
What is the relationship like between China and Iran?
Why do China and Pakistan have such a good relationship?
Which country is a closer ally to Nigeria: China or USA?
What is the relationship like between Australia and China?
What is the relationship like between China and Singapore?
How can I import goods from China to Nigeria without travelling to China at the lowest rate?
What is the relationship between Serbia and China?

Why is it taking the Nigerian government so much time to eliminate the Boko Haram insurgency in Sambisa forest?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam · Follow Nigerian Jan 12

Boko Haram is history. It has been eliminated. There are still Islamic State in West African cells lurking in the Northeast, but their leadership has been decapitated. The latest problems are bandits and kidnapping gangs in the Northwest, Northcentral and parts of the South. Our newspapers exist for a reason.

Related Links

What short and long term measures can be taken to end the threat of Boko Haram in Nigeria?

Which group is worse: Boko Haram or ISIS?

If Boko Haram is just 7,000 people and the Nigerian Army is over 200,000 strong, with support from the US, China, Israel, etc. in the fight against Boko Haram, then how is Boko Haram able to survive in a nation of 180 million people for 10 years?

Why can't Nigeria control Boko Haram?

Nigerians, what's the deal with Boko Haram? You have a military that once contained a breakaway territory of Biafra, how can you not finish Boko Haram?

What does Boko Haram aim to achieve by killing civilians in Nigeria?

Why is the Nigerian army and its Allies seemingly finding it difficult to defeat Boko Haram?

Do you think Boko Haram and ISWAP will take over the Nigerian government if left unchecked?

Why did America refuse Nigeria assistance to deal with its insurgency (Boko Haram)?

How are ISIS and Boko Haram connected?

Why did the IRA terrorists in Northern Ireland not have as much influence as Al Qaeda, the Taliban, ISIS, Boko Haram in the current era? Even though the IRA also made many terrorist acts that killed Louis Mountbatten.

Is it true that the Nigerian government is supporting Boko Haram?

If Boko Haram were given the northern sector of Nigeria to form their own country, would the group end its campaign of terror?

How are Boko Haram so much better armed and supplied than the Nigerian military?

What needs to be done to end the Boko Haram insurgency?

What do you think about President Muhammadu Buhari, the President of Nigeria, and his policies?

Chidera Akigwe Shocked over the Lekki tollgate incidentWed

President Muhammad Buhari: our current president Muhammadu Buhari who came into power on 2óth may 2015, is one of the major economic problems of our nation Nigeria. He has certainly showed future leaders how not to lead. His administration has performed so well in keeping or making Nigerian economy remain in shambles. His economic policies and political decisions have retarded our country's growth – seriously he filled all important posts with fools like him, who cannot do any other thing than to embezzle and misappropriate funds. He has closed our borders, cutting off effective trade between our neighbours, he removed subsidy and allowed the fuel price to skyrocket. Under his benevolent gaze the Fulani herdsmen grazed the entire middle belt, under his benevolent rule the Boko Haram grew extremely stronger, under his capable leadership Naira is now currently devalued to the rate of Naira 411.50 =$1. Buhari also spent lots of money to host his son's wedding (The most extravagant in Nigeria's history). Buhari provoked the (Niger delta militants to anger, renewing a war that the late president Umaru Musa Yaradua ended. Buhari simply filled the armed forces with his friends and cronies, he has no plan of advancing our great nation economically.

He's speeches show that his brain is not functioning as well as it used, he is old and senile and therefore not fit to be president of our nation. Twice under his reign Nigeria has entered recession. First on 2016, when the G.D.P. declined for more than three quarters of the fiscal year and declined by 0.36% -2,06%. The second recession was caused by the serious insecurity and covid-19

How Buhari Destroyed Nigeria's economy?

By the testimony of CNN money he inherited to the third fastest growing economy in the world, only China and Qatar grew faster. By the testimony of the British government, he inherited the fourth fastest growing economy

Also on may 29th he inherited the number one destination in Africa for foreign direct investment in Africa

And finally on this score, he inherited an economy with a stable currency of 199 Naira to $1 in which Nigeria had a single digit rate.

This is in addition to over $30 billion in foreign reserves, $5.6 billion NLNG dividends and a 2015 budget of over 4 trillion

"These are all facts of history and can be verified by a cursory Google" In conclusion the speech he gave on October 1st 2021, is best described as 'Satanic verses, hate speech, terrorist manifesto, incantations of a cow cult leader, ramblings of a homicidal illiterate and certificate forger. Thank you.

Related Links

What do you have to say about Nigeria's President Buhari?
Has Buhari been a good president for Nigeria? What are his major accomplishments?
What do Nigerians think of Muhammadu Buhari?
How good is Nigeria's President Buhari?
Why do Nigerians hate President Buhari?
How bad is Nigeria's President Buhari?
Is Muhammadu Buhari a bad president?
Is Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari truly cloned?
What are the pros and cons of President Muhammadu Buhari re-contesting the 2019 election in Nigeria?

What would you do if you were the president of Nigeria?
Is Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari worthy of a second term?
Has Buhari failed Nigeria?

What are your suggestions to the UN over the recent state of Nigeria under the government of President Muhammadu Buhari?

Why do Eastern Nigerians have irrational hatred for Muhammadu Buhari?
Who is considered the best head of state that Nigeria ever had?

What do you think about President Muhammadu Buhari, the President of Nigeria, and his policies?

Chidera Akigwe Shocked over the Lekki tollgate incident Wed

President Muhammad Buhari: our current president Muhammadu Buhari who came into power on 2óth may 2015, is one of the major economic problems of our nation Nigeria. He has certainly showed future leaders how not to lead. His administration has performed so well in keeping or making Nigerian economy remain in shambles. His economic policies and political decisions have retarded our country's growth – seriously he filled all important posts with fools like him, who cannot do any other thing than to embezzle and misappropriate funds. He has closed our borders, cutting off effective trade between our neighbours, he removed subsidy and allowed the fuel price to skyrocket. Under his benevolent gaze the Fulani herdsmen grazed the entire middle belt, under his benevolent rule the Boko Haram grew extremely stronger, under his capable leadership Naira is now currently devalued to the rate of Naira 411.50 =$1. Buhari also spent lots of money to host his son's wedding (The most extravagant in Nigeria's history). Buhari provoked the (Niger delta militants to anger, renewing a war that the late president Umaru Musa Yaradua ended. Buhari simply filled the armed forces with his friends and cronies, he has no plan of advancing our great nation economically.

He's speeches show that his brain is not functioning as well as it used, he is old and senile and therefore not fit to be president of our nation. Twice under his reign Nigeria has entered recession. First on 2016, when the G.D.P. declined for more than three quarters of the fiscal year and declined by 0.36% -2,06%. The second recession was caused by the serious insecurity and covid-19

How Buhari Destroyed Nigeria's economy?

By the testimony of CNN money he inherited to the third fastest growing economy in the world, only China and Qatar grew faster. By the testimony of the British government, he inherited the fourth fastest growing economy

Also on may 29th he inherited the number one destination in Africa for foreign direct investment in Africa

And finally on this score, he inherited an economy with a stable currency of 199 Naira to $1 in which Nigeria had a single digit rate.

This is in addition to over $30 billion in foreign reserves, $5.6 billion NLNG dividends and a 2015 budget of over 4 trillion

"These are all facts of history and can be verified by a cursory Google'' In conclusion the speech he gave on October 1st 2021, is best described as 'Satanic verses, hate speech, terrorist manifesto, incantations of a cow cult leader, ramblings of a homicidal illiterate and certificate forger. Thank you.

Related Links

What do you have to say about Nigeria's President Buhari?
Has Buhari been a good president for Nigeria? What are his major accomplishments?

What do Nigerians think of Muhammadu Buhari?
How good is Nigeria's President Buhari?
Why do Nigerians hate President Buhari?
How bad is Nigeria's President Buhari?
Is Muhammadu Buhari a bad president?
Is Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari truly cloned?
What are the pros and cons of President Muhammadu Buhari re-contesting the 2019 election in Nigeria?

What would you do if you were the president of Nigeria?
Is Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari worthy of a second term?
Has Buhari failed Nigeria?

What are your suggestions to the UN over the recent state of Nigeria under the government of President Muhammadu Buhari?

Why do Eastern Nigerians have irrational hatred for Muhammadu Buhari?
Who is considered the best head of state that Nigeria ever had?

What do you think about President Muhammadu Buhari, the President of Nigeria, and his policies?

Chidera Akigwe Shocked over the Lekki tollgate incident Wed

President Muhammad Buhari: our current president Muhammadu Buhari who came into power on 2óth may 2015, is one of the major economic problems of our nation Nigeria. He has certainly showed future leaders how not to lead. His administration has performed so well in keeping or making Nigerian economy remain in shambles. His economic policies and political decisions have retarded our country's growth – seriously he filled all important posts with fools like him, who cannot do any other thing than to embezzle and misappropriate funds. He has closed our borders, cutting off effective trade between our neighbours, he removed subsidy and allowed the fuel price to skyrocket. Under his benevolent gaze the Fulani herdsmen grazed the entire middle belt, under his benevolent rule the Boko Haram grew extremely stronger, under his capable leadership Naira is now currently devalued to the rate of Naira 411.50 =$1. Buhari also spent lots of money to host his son's wedding (The most extravagant in Nigeria's history). Buhari provoked the (Niger delta militants to anger, renewing a war that the late president Umaru Musa Yaradua ended. Buhari simply filled the armed forces with his friends and cronies, he has no plan of advancing our great nation economically.

He's speeches show that his brain is not functioning as well as it used, he is old and senile and therefore not fit to be president of our nation. Twice under his reign Nigeria has entered recession. First on 2016, when the G.D.P. declined for more than three quarters of the fiscal year and declined by 0.36% -2,06%. The second recession was caused by the serious insecurity and covid-19

How Buhari Destroyed Nigeria's economy

By the testimony of CNN money he inherited to the third fastest growing economy in the world, only China and Qatar grew faster. By the testimony of the British government, he inherited the fourth fastest growing economy

Also on may 29th he inherited the number one destination in Africa for foreign direct investment in Africa

And finally on this score, he inherited an economy with a stable currency of 199 Naira to $1 in which Nigeria had a single digit rate.

This is in addition to over $30 billion in foreign reserves, $5.6 billion NLNG dividends and a 2015 budget of over 4 trillion

"These are all facts of history and can be verified by a cursory Google" In conclusion the speech he gave on October 1st 2021, is best described as 'Satanic verses, hate speech, terrorist manifesto, incantations of a cow cult leader, ramblings of a homicidal illiterate and certificate forger. Thank you.

Related Links

What do you have to say about Nigeria's President Buhari?
Has Buhari been a good president for Nigeria? What are his major accomplishments?
What do Nigerians think of Muhammadu Buhari?
How good is Nigeria's President Buhari?
Why do Nigerians hate President Buhari?
How bad is Nigeria's President Buhari?
Is Muhammadu Buhari a bad president?
Is Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari truly cloned?
What are the pros and cons of President Muhammadu Buhari re-contesting the 2019 election in Nigeria?
What would you do if you were the president of Nigeria?
Is Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari worthy of a second term?
Has Buhari failed Nigeria?
What are your suggestions to the UN over the recent state of Nigeria under the government of President Muhammadu Buhari?
Why do Eastern Nigerians have irrational hatred for Muhammadu Buhari?
Who is considered the best head of state that Nigeria ever had?

News Nigeria

Eight Great Events That Led To The Nigerian Civil War

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Jan 17

The Nigerian Civil War, also known as the Biafran War was a war fought to counter the secession of Biafra (then Eastern part of Nigeria consisting mainly of the Igbo people) from Nigeria.

It lasted for 30 months (6 July 1967 – 15 January 1970) with millions of casualties on both sides. The war did not happen overnight but certain events led to it.

Below are the events that led to the unfortunate war where thousands (both military and civilian) lost their lives.

1. Almagamation of 1914

In 1914, Southern Nigeria was joined with Northern Nigeria Protectorate to form the single colony of Nigeria. The unification was done for economic reasons rather than political—Northern Nigeria Protectorate had a budget deficit; and the colonial administration sought to use the budget surpluses in Southern Nigeria to offset this deficit.

This "marriage" was made without the consent of the people, without a referendum but in the interest of the colonialists. A system which would in the long run bring about greed, hate, nepotism and tribalism amongst the people of Nigeria.

2. 1946 Richards Constitution

The year 1946 saw the adoption of the Arthur Richard Constitution which defined Nigeria, for the first time, in terms of regions – thus dividing the still colonized country into three main regions: the Northern, Western and Eastern regions.

This is Nigeria's "funniest" constitution which made a centre weak but granting strength to the regions-in the same country? This would have been the best time of creating three independent countries instead of three dependent ones.

3. 1962 Western Region's State of Emergency and Obafemi Awolowo's incarceration

The blatant support of Akintola's unpopular government in the West by the Balewa-led Federal Government was a time bomb in the making. Declaring a state of emergency in a whole Region when the imbroglio was only in the House of Assembly was also a political gaffe by Balewa.

Awolowo's imprisonment made the Federal Government itself hated among the peoples of the Western Region, who they believed was imprisoned on trumped-up charges.

4. The Violent 1965 Western Regional Elections

The crisis over the struggle for political power during the Western Regional elections of October 11, 1965 was the last straw that broke the camel's back which really convinced the January boys of their military putsch on the morning of January 15, 1966. Balewa's reluctance to step-in and declare a state of emergency when he should have, spiraled the events of January, 1966. As Emperor Nero watched as Rome burned, the Prime Minister fidgeted as the West descended to an incendiary state. And the rest as they say, is history.

5. January 15, 1966 Revolutionary Coup

Five majors led by Kaduna Nzeogwu (1937-1967) had concluded their plans for the revolutionary coup as at August, 1965, which was the mass annihilation of top politicians and senior military officers in the country, due to the loss of control of certain part of the country and widespread corruption.

Whether the coup was Eastern favoured or not, it brought into fore a united Northern Region in the Army, regardless of tribe or religion.

Of the five majors, four were Easterners, while one, Adewale Ademoyega (1933-2007), was a Westerner. The new Head of State having dissolved the civilian government was an Easterner.

To install Awolowo, who was charged with corruption, as Prime Minister and to create fourteen states for the country was a confusion theory by the coup plotters.

Unfortunately for them, Ifeajuna due to unforeseen circumstances thwarted their original plan and fled to Ghana. No action was taken in the East and not a single shot was fired. This convinced the Northern elements that the Igbos were behind the killing of their leaders and officers. Hence, the plan to get even began.

How could one survive in Nigeria without one possessing some elements of insanity?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian Jan 14

Survival is easy: exist and do your best to avoid risk.
Many people don't just stop at survival; instead, they thrive. Their method is simple in theory but hard to execute.

Nigeria is no country for the average and easygoing. Only the exceptionally talented, beautiful and charismatic can go it alone.

Everyone else needs a network. You are either born into one, work your way into one or luck into one. Networks are how to thrive. The reality is that our economy does not generate enough comfortable positions for us to rely on blind tests of merit everywhere. Everything from who gets to become president to which 5,000 candidates out of 1.5 million get selected for a government job depends on who you know.

Nigerians without a useful network or none at all either rail against fate, get resigned to it or take things one day at a time. Who knows what tomorrow will bring?

But, please, Nigeria is not a place where the insane are invisible. It is easy to observe that only a tiny minority of Nigerians are mad.

Mad and sane, we survive all the same. As my people say, God chases away flies for a tailless cow.

Drink cold water first next time, ehn. o:

Related Links

Can a human survive without ever eating vegetables?
How long can someone survive without consuming any sugar?
How do I survive without high school diploma?
What's the most insane thing a human has survived?

How do I get out of survival mode? No day feels like a good day, I'm easily reactive, I zone out often, always tired, etc. How can I fix this so I can live a happy and healthier life?
How do you survive in this world?
How long can one survive without any proteins?
What is the best way to stop drinking without going to AA?
How does one become insane, and is it reversible?
How long can an astronaut survive in space without a spacesuit?

What is the strangest trend in Nigeria?

Uche Metuh Wonder (Nigerian) Woman 3y

You're born.
Your parents (& society) raise you.

You go to school & church.

Some of us do exceptionally well at school.

All we get for that is applause from our schools, peers, family & immediate society.

We have no Research & Development agencies to utilize those exceptional academic talents.

Maybe…just maybe you get lucky to be hired by some big organization where your talent is reduced to company revenues.

Oh! He works with Shell or Standard IBTC bank!

But you don't actually create anything. You'd be lucky if you're allowed to still think outside the box or flex your intellectual muscles.

We have no one seeking for those talents to utilize for some greater good of the country.

But we have people hunting for beauty & power.

Then what happens?

We tell them to get married!

We tell everyone to just strive to provide for their (future) families!

Fuck the society! Just get married!

Father & aunt are dying of cancer. The potential for cancer cure is in you but all everyone worries about is marrying you off. They just don't know any better.

The entire society, both the young & old haunts/scorns your very existence until you get married.

In all our lives, we're taught our duties to our parents, elders, priests/pastors, church/God but none about our society/country.

I've never seen any sane society which only admires intellectual talent like it's a tolerable pet but does nothing with it.

Nigeria does it, every day!!

When those gifted Nigerians become frustrated with the system & walk out, we open our borders wide & help them leave.

Then ready our mouths to claim them,

"Chiwetel Ejiofor, Chimamanda Adichie, Sade, Asa, Nas etc. are Nigerians"

How we love finished products?!

Just like we consume the Gucci & Fendi……

Don't we just love not putting in the work but getting all the benefits?

Nigeria!!!

It is the strangest trend in Nigeria.

Related questions

Are there ATMs in Nigeria?
Are Nigerians racist?
What are the strangest things about Nigerian churches?
What situations do you not like in Nigeria, and do you consider them strange?
What is the strangest teen trend you have seen?
What's trending in Nigeria?
What is the strangest thing you have seen while visiting Nigeria?
What are the biggest culture shocks people face when coming to Lagos, Nigeria?
What is trending among Nigerian youths?
What are some strange things we do in Africa in the name of "it's our culture"?
What is today all about in Nigeria?
What is it like in Nigeria today?
What is the most trendy neighborhood in Lagos, Nigeria?
Which song is trending now in Nigeria?

What was Nigeria called before Nigeria?

Originally Answered: Who is the best president Nigeria ever had and why?

Debo Kayode Ogunranti , lived in Nigeria Answered Oct 28, 2017

Chukwudi Okoro Politics for development Answered Aug 10, 2019

Originally Answered: Who is the best president in the history of Nigeria and why is he the best?

Yes, truth be told Olusegun Obasanjo is the best president of Nigeria among others.

He ensured equal distribution of armory among all regions against the present situation under Buhari that used boko haram as an excuse for moving most armory and military arsenal back to northern region. We never heard under Obasanjo that only people from a particular region was mobilized to fight against the insurrection in their areas or neighborhood unlike what happened under Buhari where at Enugu only Easterners were listed to fight the militant groups in south south. A way of saying, you people should go and kill yourselves.

He opened up the telecommunications industry though he was accused of earning illegal royalties and contract which was used against him while he bid for 3rd term.

He gave equal representation to all parts of the country in his cabinet and security cabinet.

Boko haram was afraid of Obasanjo because he never allowed the northern warlocks to have absolute control of Nigeria military as they're now under Buhari. So they were non violent until he left office. This I believe is because of what Obasanjo did at Odi villages when the locals were protesting over oil rights.

He helped a minority group in South of Nigeria to step up the president sit. Even though some said he intended to be using Goodluck to accomplished his 3rd term wishes, which explained why he wanted to remain as BOT chairman of PDP while Goodluck reign. This did not go well for him.

He introduced privatisation of government moribund industrial investment, a measure to reduce corruption and wastes by government paying for things that are not being productive.

He never took side with the Afenifere of the west on many issues while in government. Even though he is from the region. Unlike Buhari that have refused to accept that his kinsmen "Fulani" is terrorising other tribes in Nigeria with the tag 'killer herdsmen' even when the world have listed "Fulani herdsmen as the fourth most deadly terrorist group in the world.

I would like to say had the Senate allowed Obasanjo to go for his third term wishes, we may not have the two most dangerous terrorist groups in the world today operating in Nigeria(Fulani herdsmen and Boko haram). The Economic progress would have been sustained as we saw that under Goodluck Ebele Jonathan, the Obasanjo boy, Nigeria was listed in 2014 among the fastest growing economy.

I don't know for sure, I love most things about Abubaka Tafawa Balewa but he was a prime minister and not a president.

Murtala Mohammed was the most respected Head of State Nigeria had. Then we had a powerful afrocentric foreign policy, we controlled Africa and when his foreign affairs minister, Joe Garba spoke, the whole world listened. But he was not real president and was their for a brief beautiful period.

On Olusegun Obasanjo, I won't say much but he will be abused and ridiculed till he dies.

But when President Olusegun Obasanjo departs, we will wail in the streets and deify him and compare him to Mandela.

Like Fela sang in BBC, 'In the country of the blind, na one eye man be king'!

Up Naija!

Originally Answered: "Who is the best president in the history of Nigeria and why is he the best?"

Chukwudi Okoro , Politics for development Answered Aug 10, 2019

Yes, truth be told Olusegun Obasanjo is the best president of Nigeria among others.

He ensured equal distribution of armory among all regions against the present situation under Buhari that used boko haram as an excuse for moving most armory and military arsenal back to northern region. We never heard under Obasanjo that only people from a particular region was mobilized to fight against the insurrection in their areas or neighborhood unlike what happened under Buhari where at Enugu only Easterners were listed to fight the militant groups in south south. A way of saying, you people should go and kill yourselves.

He opened up the telecommunications industry though he was accused of earning illegal royalties and contract which was used against him while he bid for 3rd term.

He gave equal representation to all parts of the country in his cabinet and security cabinet.

Boko haram was afraid of Obasanjo because he never allowed the northern warlocks to have absolute control of Nigeria military as they're now under Buhari. So they were non violent until he left office. This I believe is because of what Obasanjo did at Odi villages when the locals were protesting over oil rights.

He helped a minority group in South of Nigeria to step up the president sit. Even though some said he intended to be using Goodluck to accomplished his 3rd term wishes, which explained why he wanted to remain as BOT chairman of PDP while Goodluck reign. This did not go well for him.

He introduced privatisation of government moribund industrial investment, a measure to reduce corruption and wastes by government paying for things that are not being productive.

He never took side with the Afenifere of the west on many issues while in government. Even though he is from the region. Unlike Buhari that have refused to accept that his kinsmen "Fulani" is terrorising other tribes in Nigeria with the tag 'killer herdsmen' even when the world have listed "Fulani herdsmen as the fourth most deadly terrorist group in the world.

I would like to say had the Senate allowed Obasanjo to go for his third term wishes, we may not have the two most dangerous terrorist groups in the world today operating in Nigeria(Fulani herdsmen and Boko haram). The Economic progress would have been sustained as we saw that under Goodluck Ebele Jonathan, the Obasanjo boy, Nigeria was listed in 2014 among the fastest growing economy.

Related Links

Who is the worst president Nigeria ever had?
Who is Nigeria's best performing president since 1999?

Who is the worst president in Africa right now and why?
What would you do if you were the president of Nigeria?

Is it possible to have a nice, upright, and righteous person as a leader in Nigeria, or does Nigeria need to be recolonized and start all over again because Nigeria is actually a failed state?

Who was the first military head of state in Nigeria?
Who is the best military president in Nigeria?
Who was the first Nigerian president?
Why is Nigeria becoming more prosperous than South Africa?
Why is Nigeria so corrupt?

News Nigeria

TOP 60 NIGERIA TOURISTS ATTRACTIONS

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Jan 10

Nigeria is a beautiful country with beautiful people, culture, food and tourists centres. She is blessed with rich mineral resources divinely spread across the country.

There are more than 2000 of such places and sites in Nigeria but these 60 were carefully selected. It doesn't signify that those not enlisted are not as important as the ones here. The numbering does not depict there importance.

1. Ibeno Beach

A blissful destination for tourists stretched over 245km on a sand bank in Ibeno lies the Ibeno Beach, a little haven for leisure seekers

•Location: Ibeno, Akwa Ibom State

2. Obudu Mountain Resort

Above the sea level on the Oshie Ridge of the famous Sankwala Mountains sits majestically the Obudu Mountain Resort. The temperate climate, breathtaking views, idyllic tranquility and beautiful scenery has made this resort one of the famous tourists' sites in Nigeria.

•Location: Obudu, Cross River State.

3. Awhum Waterfall

Awhum boasts of numerous immaculate lakes, waterfall and a monastery. The waterfall forms beautiful scenery where water cascades over its top forming a stream, which has become a religious tourist site. It is close to the Awhum Monastery.

•Location: Awhum, Enugu State

4. Arochukwu Long Juju Slave Route

The sacred altar, a six foot gully that takes people to the temple and the waterfall in Arochukwu Long Juju Slave route, beg tourists to explore the shrine of Ibn Ukpabi and the cult momument of Kamula.

•Location: Arochukwu, Abia State

5. The Giant Footprint of Ukhuse Oke

In a sacred grove where prehistory meets the modern, between a village called Ukhuse-oke and Ukhuseosi lies this distinct footprints of a prehistoric giant that are embedded permanently on flat granite rocks.

•Location: Owan, Edo State

6. Port Harcourt Tourist Beach

If you are looking for a destination where you can run away from the bustling life of a city; one that is built on an artificial sand beach, Port Harcourt Tourist Beach is where you should be. It is a leisure hub along Kolabi Creek.

•Location: Port Harcourt, Rivers State

7. Gashaki-Gumpti National Park

A national park that offers a fascinating insight into life in medieval times in Nigeria is the Gashaki-Gumpti National Park. It is located within the Chappal Wadi, Mountain, Chappal Hendu and the Mountain of Wind. It is Nigeria's largest and most diverse National Park.

•Location: Gashaki-Gumpti, Taraba State

8. Alok Ikom Monoliths

300 carved stones standing upright in circles, facing each others in groups with images and texts inscribed on the monoliths are how you would see Alok Ikom Monoliths (UNESCO World Heritage Site) that are in form of a phallus.

•Location: Ikom, Cross River state

9. Isaac Boro Garden Park

Isaac Boro Garden Park is situated opposite the Mile One Bridge along the Old GRA in Port Harcourt. Today, it has become a tourist location where baseball and softball are played and a center for trade fairs and live entertainment. The tomb of Major Isaac Boro, a soldier killed in the Nigeria Civil War lies here.

•Location Port Harcourt, Rivers State

10. The Tinapa Free Zone & Resort

The charm of Calabar mingled with the taste of its rich culture gives Tinapa Free Zone & Resort that magnificent scenario that mesmerizes tourists. It has 860,000 sq ft lettable retail space, an entertainment strip that houses a digital cinema, restaurants, a mini amphitheater, casino, and children's arcade, a Studio Tinapa.

•Location: Calabar, Cross River State

11. Osun-Osogbo Grove

This is the only tourist destination in Nigeria that has sacred shrines, sanctuaries, sculptures and art works that are created in the honour of the goddess of fertility, Osun. It is a UNESCO World Heritage Site situated along the Oshun River.

•Location: Osogbo, Osun State

12. The Emotan Statue

Located opposite the Oba market in Benin City. Emotan Statue stands majestically, clad in her traditional wrapper and a headgear that is associated with royalty in the Benin Kingdom.

•Location: Benin, Edo State

13. The Royal Palace Of Oba Of Benin

The royal palace of the Oba of Benin is a UNESCO listed heritage site, centrally located near the King's Square. It holds a huge collection of sculptural pieces of a lot of Benin Obas in bronze, ancestral shrines and ivory.

•Location: Benin, Edo State

14. Sukur Cultural Landscape

Madageli- is the home of the Sukur cultural landscape is populated with traditional cemeteries and ritual terraced areas. Blessed with lush avifauna and situated on top of the Mandara Mountains. It is a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

•Location: Madageli, Adamawa State

15. Queen Amina's Wall

In the city of Zazzau (Zaria) was built well-fortified walls to protect the ancient city by Queen Amina of Zaria, who is renowned for her wise military exploits and strategies so many years. This wall still stands majestically in the modern city of Zaria.

•Location: Zaria, Kaduna State

16.. Surame Cultural Landscape

When it comes to the wonders of human creativity, ingenuity and civilization, Surame cultural landscape makes that possible. This is a UNESCO World Heritage Site that has walls made of huge stones and a palace for the village chief; Hidi.

•Location: Surame, Sokoto State

17. Oban Hills

Korup National Park of Cameroon shares a border with the Oban Hills. Home to a lot of wildlife and plants; and this is one of the few places on earth you can find the Xavier's Green Bull the Cassin's Hawk eagle, Crested Guinea fowl, Bat Hawk and over 400 Chimpanzees lives here.

•Location: Oban,Cross River State

18. Oke-Idanre Hill

A visit to the Oke-Idanre Hill gives a tourist access to a lot of spectacular valleys that are interspersed with inselbelgs and high plain about the sea level. It is a UNESCO World Heritage Site that has Omi Aopara; the thunder water, Agbooogun foot print, burial grounds, shrines and the Owa's palace.

•Location: Oke-Idanre, Ondo State

19. Ogbunike Caves

Ogbunike Caves make an idea tourists destination. These caves are closely associated with historical and spiritual significance. There are 317 steps that need to be used to descend down to the caves. It is a UNESCO Heritage Site.

•Location: Ogbunike, Anambra State

20. Ancient Kano City Walls

There are much more to the beautiful medieval city of Kano when you see the impressive ancient Kano walls (listed on the UNESCO World Heritage Sites' tentative list) . This 14km radius earth monument has a spiritual, cultural and historical significance. It is associated with the Emir's Palace.

•Location: Kano, Kano State

21. Coconut Beach

No place tells the story of tourism fused with history like Badagry. It has breathtaking and beautiful ocean views, a perfect place for relaxation. 20 miles before you get to the Republic of Benin lies Coconut beach, and it is surrounded by a lot of coconut trees.

•Location: Badagry, Lagos State

22. Nana Living History Museum

The magnificent national monument of the Nana Living History Museum is situated in Koko in Warri, a museum that was built by a powerful 19th century business man, Chief Nana Olomu Ebrohimi.

•Location: Warri, Delta State

23. Yankari National Park

It is the 2,244 km2 landspace. Yankari National Park; a home to wildlife in the state's South-Central part. It houses a lot of natural warm water springs and I am told it is the one of West Africa's eco-destinations.

•Location: Bauchi State

24. Slave Point of "No Return"

It is the historic Island on the sea from where slaves were transported to Europe.

•Location: Badagry, Lagos State

25. Aso Villa

The nation's seat power built by the Ibrahim Babangida administration is one of the most sought after places tourists want to visit. It sits on a highland and named after the popular Aso Rock.

•Location: FCT, Abuja

26. Ikogosi Warm Springs

It is a tourist attraction located at Ikogosi, a town in Ekiti State , Southwestern Nigeria. Flowing abreast the warm spring is another cold spring which meets the warm spring at a confluence, each maintaining its thermal properties.These attributes make the spring a tourist attraction in Nigeria. Research suggested that the warm spring has a temperature of about 70°C at the source and 37°C at the confluence

•Location: Ikogosi, Ekiti State

27. Dodan Barracks

Dodan Barracks is a military barracks located in Ikoyi ,

Lagos, Nigeria . The barracks was the Supreme Military Headquarters during the Nigerian Civil War and from 1966 to 1979 and 1983 to 1985 . Dodan Barracks was the official residence of the military heads of state of the Nigerian military juntas of 1966–79 and 1983–99 , and also the Supreme Military Headquarters from 1966 until the move to Abuja in 1991.

•Location : Lagos State

28. Nike Lake Resort

Nike Lake Resort is situated on the banks of the Nike Lake in Enugu. A short 15 minutes drive from the local airport and only 10 minutes from the city centre. It offers breathtaking views in a very secure and tranquil environment. You will find at this beautiful serene resort everything you need to make your stay a memorable one!

29. National War Museum

The Nigerian National War Museum in Umuahia showcases the military history of Nigeria with relics form the Biafra-Nigerian Civil War . it has a collection of tanks, AFLs, (clarification needed) ships and aircraft all from Nigeria or Biafra . Almost all tanks and AFLs are Biafran and all aircraft are Nigerian.

•Location: Umuahia, Abia State

30. Olumo Rock

It is a mountain in south-western Nigeria . It is located in the ancient city of Abeokuta , Ogun State , and was normally used during inter-tribal warfare in the 19th century. Its patron spirit is venerated in the Yoruba religion as an orisha .

It is a major tourists centre in Nigeria

•Location : Abeokuta, Ogun State

31. Gangirwal

Gangirwal is Nigeria's highest mountain, Gangirwal, stands at 7,963 ft (2,419 m) and is found in the Adamawa mountains in a remote corner of Gashaka-Gumti National Park (GGNP).

•Location : Gashaka, Adamawa State

32. Bagega Gold Field

This is one of the major deposits sites of gold....and mining has been taking place here. It is already attracting tourists despite the fact that much has not been done to fully commercialize mining.

•Location : Bagega, Zamfara State.

33. Oloibiri Oil Field

Olobiri is a community in Ogbia LGA located in Bayelsa State, in the eastern Niger Delta region of Nigeria. It houses oil field. This is the first place Oil was first discovered in Nigeria. Oloibiri is a historic town to the oil and gas industry in Nigeria.

•Location : Olobiri, Bayelsa State

34. National Theatre

National Theatre, Lagos

This architectural spectacle was built in 1976 as a national monument for the presentation, preservation and promotion of Nigerian culture and arts.

Location : Iganmu, Lagos State..

35. lgbo-Ukwu

lgbo-Ukwu, an ancient town in Anambra State has a historic significance. Tourist has continued to pour in to observe its bronze artifacts. The bronze excavated in 1938 by an English archaeologist was first produced around the 19th century and are treasured because they have great historical importance

•Location: Igboukwu, Anambra State

36. Benue Hills

The hills of Benue are among the top best destinations in the nation. It has a hilly topography which is a major tourist's attraction, among them are:

Ushogbo Hills, Bassa Hills, Ikyogen Hills and Swern Hills

•Location : Makurdi, Benue State

37. Oguta Lake Holiday Complex

Oguta Lake contains fresh water and is the largest natural Lake in Nigeria after lake Chad. There are a lot of recreational activities at the lake like swimming etc. also the Oguta Lake complex has Golf course of international standard, Cruise boat services, mini children recreational park, Relic of Nigerian civil war- a mini bunker, Golf Club Bar House and natural confluence of Urashi River and Oguta Lake. Oguta Lake is location: Oguta, Imo State.

38. NOK Village

The Nok Village showcases the full splendor of the world famous NOK culture. The culture has been in existence for over 2,500 years and visitors have the opportunity to appraise the excavations made by diverse scholars and researchers at the NOK village located in Kaduna State.

•Location : Kaduna, Kaduna State

39. Agbokim Waterfalls

Agbokim waterfalls is an enchanting sight and a tourists favorite picnic spot

•Location: Ikom, Cross River State

40. Lake Chad

Lake Chad which is strategically located on the borders of four countries; Nigeria, Niger, Chad and Cameroon. It is a tourists' magnet. Fishing villages and boating is the favourite tourists' activitirs

Location: Borno State

41. Sillicon Hill

The silicon Hill is above 300 metres above sea level about half kilometre long and is made of silica a raw material used in the manufacture of glass. The hills and its surroundings is such a natural splendor and perfect spot for sightseeing.

•Location : Nkpologu Enugu State.

42. The Agia Tree/First Storey Building

Christianity was first preached in Nigeria under the Agia Tree at Market Street, in the ancient city of Badagry. Though, the tree has now fallen, that spot is a tourist's magnate. Also the first ever storey building in Nigeria, which was erected in Marina Badagry in 1845 by Rev Henry Townsend.

•Location: Badagry, Lagos State

43. Confluence Point

River Niger and River Benue are the two largest Rivers in West Africa. The confluence of the two rivers is in Lokoja forming Y-shape when view from the top and flowing together to the Atlantic Ocean. River Benue has a light green colour while River Niger has a light brown colour. There boat and ferry services at the confluence of the two Rivers.

•Location: Lokoja, Kogi State

44. Zuma Rock

The Zuma Rock is believed to possess some mystical powers. A human face is engraved on the side rock facing the road. The rock exudes natural splendor and is a perfect spot for picnic.

•Location : Kaduna Abuja Highway, Abuja

45. Gurara Waterfalls

it a very beautiful sight to behold. The Gurara river is a huge arm of the famous River Niger and during rainy season, the river is full to the beam. Visitors can swim in the river during the dry season around January when the water is clear.

•Location: Minna Suleja road, Niger State

46. Jos Wildlife Park

This Nigeria's best man-made wildlife park is home to buffalos, lions, hippos, pythons, pigmy, horses, crocodiles, birds and many more wildlife. It has a hilly landscape with diverse plant life and lots of picnic sites. Facilities at the park includes picnic pine forest, children's play ground, video viewing centre, wildlife museum and restaurant.

•Location: Jos, Plateau State

47. Wase Rock

Wase rock is a dome shaped rock that is a breeding site to Pelican birds. It rises up to 350 metres above sea level making it a favourite attraction for geologists, bird watchers, geographers and mountaineers.

•Location : Jos, Plateau State

48. The Mambilla Plateau

The plateau has an undulating setting with temperate climate and is roughly 1,830 metres above sea level.

•Location: Gembu, Taraba State

49.. Biu Plateau

Located in Yobe State that has an average hot weather condition all year round, Biu plateau is a haven to locals and tourists alike, because of its temperate weather condition. There other side attractions on the plateau

•Location: Biu, Yobe State

50. Slave Masters Lodge, Okopedi, Itu

Itu River located in Itu a small town close to Uyo was famous for slave trade route. The relics of ware houses, more like detention center where slaves were held before shipment through the Itu River. The white slave merchants' lodge is a charming one deck edifice.

•Location: Itu, Akwa Ibom State

51. Amalgamation House

It was in this iconic facility that the Former Colonial governor, Lord Luggard, amalgamated the southern and Northern Nigeria in 1914 thus giving birth to the nation Nigeria. The cease fire that ended the Nigerian civil war was declared here. Opposite the Amalgamation house is the building that was Lord Luggard residence during the time of amalgamation..

52. Kainji Lake National Park

This is closely linked with the famous Kainji lake oil hydroelectric complex. It lies between Borgu and Zugurma sectors of Kwara State. It can be reached through Lokoja, from Lagos through Ibadan, Ilorin and Jebba. The park is full of diverse wildlife, a variety of ethno-historical and cultural sites amongst which are Kobs, antelopes, hippopotamus, lions etc

•Location: Borgu, Kwara State

53. Abakaliki Green Lake

The Abakaliki Green Lake was a favorite spot for relaxation and leisure for the colonial administrators. In recent times modern recreation facilities has been introduce to enhance the tourism potential of this Lake.

•Location : Abakaliki, Ebonyi State

54. Amanchore Cave

This Cave has 3 metres height and has several narrow tunnels that lead to different directions.

•Location : Afikpo, Ebonyi State.

55. Eggon Hills and Caves

Egon Hills and Caves are a range of hills which are overs 300 metres at some of the peaks and have appearance of Inserbergs and kopjes •Location : Eggon, Nasarawa State.

56. lgbo-Ukwu

lgbo-Ukwu, an ancient town in Anambra State has a historic significance. Tourist has continued to pour in to observe its bronze artifacts. The bronze excavated in 1938 by an English archaeologist was first produced around the 19th century and are treasured because they have great historical importance.

•Location: Igbo-Ukwu, Anambra State

57. Agbokim Waterfalls

Agbokim Waterfalls is an enchanting sight and a tourists favorite picnic spot. It is located very close to Cameroon Nigeria border, Cross River State. It is very close to Ikom.

•Location: Ikom, Akwa Ibom

58. Slave Trade Relics, Badagry

Relics of the slave trade consist of locks and shackles are preserved by Mobee family at Marina Badagry, it is still in the custody of the family and is on exhibition in the family house.

•Location : Badagry, Lagos State

59. Owu Waterfalls

The waterfalls from a height of 120 metres to an chilled pool below with an evergreen vegetation surrounding the water falls.

•Location: Owa Kajola, Kwara State.

60. Wiki Warm Springs The Wiki Warm Spring which is situated inside the Yankari National park is 10 metres wide and 200metres long with crystal clear warm water. Wikki Warm Springs is one of the top attractions of the Yankari National Park. It warm water make it unique and visitors enjoy swimming in its waters night and day alike.

•Location : Yankari, Bauchi State

News Nigeria

Major Bulama Biu (1934-1998) The First Academy Regimental Sergeant Major

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 1h

Maj Bulama Biu was born on the 15 March 1934 at Biu, now Borno State. After his formal Elementary School education, he went through the middle school education.

His military career began on the 5 February, 1952 when he was enlisted into the army. He was trained in Kaduna and served in the Royal West African Frontier Force (RWAFF).

When Queen Elizabeth II visited Nigeria, she promoted him to the rank of Corporal because he was the best dressed young soldier at the parade.

Bulama was a corporal at 44 Battalion Kaduna during the battalion field exercise (range, infiltration and intuition). He became the overall best soldier of the exercise. This had earned him a promotion to the rank of Sergeant.

His successful mission to Congo to rescue a British officer earned him a promotion to the rank of Staff Sergeant.

His hard work and dedication to duties were so obvious that he was appointed, in 1964 as the first Regimental Sergeant Major (RSM) of the Nigerian Defence Academy.

He trained Regular Courses 1 to 21 Cadet Officers of distinguished character.

For his hard work and dedication to duty at the Academy, he was commissioned to the rank of Captain and posted to Depot Nigeria Army Training School Zaria in 1977. He became the Officer-in-Charge of the Nigerian Drill School.

In recognition of his loyalty and dedicated service to the nation, Captain Bulama Biu was honoured with the national award of Member of the Order of Niger (MON) in 1982 by then Nigerian president Alhaji Shehu Shagari.

He was promoted to the rank of Major and posted to current Nigerian Army School of Infantry (NASI) Jaji as Commanding Officer-in-charge of Drill.

He earned many Military Decorations/Awards amongst which are Nigerian Independence Medal, Congo Medal, Civil War Medal, Long Service and Good Conduct by Queen Elizabeth II and Member of the Order of Niger (MON)

Maj Biu retired from the army in 1987 at the rank of Major after Serving for thirty-eight (38) years.

His last deployment was Nigeria Army School of Infantry Jaji were he was the Commanding Officer (Chief instructor) Drill Wing.

He passed away at Maiduguri Teaching Hospital on 16 March 1998 after a protracted illness.

Related Links

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

Why is Nigeria becoming more prosperous than South Africa?
Why is Nigeria such a famous country in Africa when most other countries we never hear about?

What is Africa famous for?
What made the Nigerian music industry popular across Africa? How did they do it?
Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?
How does the world view Nigeria?
Is Nigeria the best country in Africa?
What is the difference between Nigeria and South Africa?
Why is Nigeria a poor country?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
What do Italians think of Nigerians?
What is Nigeria best known for?
Why do South Africans hate other Africans?
Modernist.com : Are Nigerians really bad people?

What is the wealthiest city in Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated 1y

Imagine being so rich that you're the first to own a Rolls-Royce in the whole country.

In fact, when the queen visited in 1956, it was your Rolls-Royce she was chauffeured around with.

This man was 'Louis Odumegwu Ojukwu', the first black billionaire, founding president of the Nigerian Stock Exchange and, was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II. The royal honor came after he helped the British during World War II with his fleet of trucks.

Profiled in September 1965 by TIME magazine, Ojukwu made his money by importing dried fish for resale, and diversifying into textiles, cement and transport. When he died a year later, his wealth was an estimated $4 billion in today's economic value.

His son, Chukwuemeka, who also ended up a billionaire, returned from Oxford University at 22 with a master's degree in history and led his fellow Igbos into the Nigerian civil war as head of the secessionist state of Biafra in 1967.

Their hometown Nnewi, in the southeastern state of Anambra, either by good fortune or hard work, has bred more naira billionaires than any other town in Nigeria, and possibly Africa.

Source: (Forbes, The Small Town Of The Super Rich)

Do you know that after a controversial policy left all Igbo's with 20 pounds each, regardless of their bank balance, at the end of the Nigerian civil war in 1970?

They are amongst the richest people in africa presently.

Their high regard for money and the extend they go to grab it disgusts me sometimes but their tenacity in business is admirable.

Nicknamed the Japan of Africa, Nnewi is famous as a hub for automobile spare part dealers, and most recently, Innoson, Nigeria’s first indigenous car assembly plant. The town is also known for its factories that manufacture household goods and is home to the biggest road transport companies in the country.

Edit: My answer is based on the total number of billionaires from a single town in Nigeria.

Saheed Olayinka Shittu Managing Director (1996-present)
Answered Nov 14

LAGOS.

By no small means the city of Lagos is the wealthiest in Nigeria, it is estimated to be the fifth to seventh African economy if it were to be rated as a sovereign state. The GDP of Lagos alone is bigger than that of 42 African countries (out of a possible 53!).

In Africa Lagos is fourth home of the richest after Johannesburg, Capetown and Cairo.

Lagos still has a greater future than the other cities because of the fastest growing population and fastest expanding megalopolis.

Related Links

What is the richest tribe in Nigeria?
If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer most?
How much money do you need to be wealthy in Nigeria?
What's the difference between a rich man in Nigeria and in the United States?
Which is the most hated tribe in Nigeria?
What is the yoruba tribe most credited for in Nigeria?
Which is the oldest tribe in Nigeria?
Which tribe is the poorest in Nigeria?
Which tribe is the dirtiest in Nigeria?
What is the most difficult tribe to marry within, in Nigeria?

News Nigeria

AFCON 2ND ROUND: PRESIDENT BUHARI IN VIDEO CONFERENCE WITH SUPER EAGLES, CHARGES THEM TO FLY

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Sun

President Muhammadu Buhari Sunday morning gave a pep talk to the Super Eagles, ahead of their second round match against Tunisia tonight in the ongoing African Cup of Nations (AFCON) tournament.

Speaking via video conference from the Presidential Villa, Abuja, the President spoke with Coach Augustine Eguavoen, , Captain Ahmed Musa , Amaju Pinnick, President of Nigerian Football Federation (NFF), and Nigerian Ambassador to Cameroon, Gen Abayomi Olonisakin (retd).

Mentioning two of the players, Kelechi Iheanacho and Moses Simon, by name, President Buhari urged the Super Eagles to continue making Nigerians happy, not only by winning the second round match, but to eventually lift the trophy.

Said the President: “You’ve been doing Nigeria proud. You’ve been winning. Please keep on winning. The Federal Government is supporting you, and I say thank you to all the technical crew and the players.. Please keep doing the country proud.”

The President applauded the good work being done by the Hon Minister of Sports and Youth Development, Sunday Dare, saying the country appreciates it.

Responding, Coach Eguavoen said; “We are so excited that His Excellency, President Buhari, has come to speak with us this morning. On behalf of the players and the technical crew, I want to say thank you very much sir.

“The group stage has passed, and your speaking to us is a morale booster. Thank you for your support, Mr President, we also thank the Hon. Minister, and the NFF President. We are so privileged, and want to promise that you should just relax, we’ll come out victorious. We won’t let the nation down.”

Ambassador Olonisakin said the over 4 million Nigerians living in Cameroon have been giving robust support to the Super Eagles since they arrived Garoua, Cameroon, on January 5, “and they will continue to do so.”

Ahmed Musa, on behalf of the players, appreciated Mr President, noting that it is not easy to speak with the leader of a country, and they count themselves privileged.

“We will make Nigeria proud, now that we have the blessings of the father of the nation,” Musa said.

NFF President, Asaju Pinnick described the video conference as “a priceless privilege,” and thanked President Buhari and the nation at large for their prayers and support.

He said under the current dispensation, Nigeria has won the Under 17 football tournament twice, “and we want to win the African Cup of Nations too.”

Why do Nigerians have such long names?

Daniel Oduma-Jato Lives in Lagos, Nigeria7mo

We'd need samples for what a 'long name’ looks like (lol). But I guess, these things are subjective and cultural context often introduces bias anyway.

So, to be blunt, Nigerian names are a variety of length and some, ofcourse, are longer than others. Nigerian names are mostly tribal names and these must have meanings; usually reminiscent of tribal root, family history, in honour of the bearers religion etc

For the latter, depending on the tribe, there's always going to be a term for God in it (one reason the names look long)

For Yorubas, Oluwa is a term for God. A name could be oluwaniyi, oluwademilade, oluwapamelilerin, oluwatosin, fehintoluwa etc. All of these names can be shortened and mostly are in everyday conversations.

For Igbos, Chukwu or Chi is a term for God. And so it goes, a person could bear the name Chukwudebelu, Chukwudi, Chukwunonyerem, Chukwubudikem, Chukwuechetagom, Chimamanda, Chukwuyenren, Chimeoruogwu, Chiwetel, Chidindu, Chimezie, e.t.c

This principle is nebulous in most Nigerian tribes.The South Southerners also have their term for God that is almost a constant in all names, Tamuno (Ijaw) Oghene (, Ose (Esan) Oritse (itsekiri) etc

In summary, the religious factor among Nigerians is one strong reason why the names seem long.

Family history also is another. Where a person comes from could be attached to the name they bear. As usually a prefix to the actual name

There's also the cultural practice of honorifics being given as borne names to children. This practice is quite popular.

Related Links

What do Nigerians think of Nigerians who marry a foreigner?
How do Nigerian names work?

Some Nigerian names sound like Japanese names. Is there a shared (linguistic) history of some sort?

Can you tell what Nigerian tribe someone is from by the last name?
Why do most Nigerians put their surname before their first name?
When did Nigerians begin using surnames, and how did people receive them?
Why do Nigerian names start with Ola?
Are any Nigerians white?
What do whites think of Nigeria and Nigerians?
What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?

What are some common Nigerian surnames?
Are Nigerians smart?

Why are Nigerian last names similar to Japanese last names for example oji is a nigeran and Japanese last name?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

In Nigeria, what are the most common first names - male and female - for different groups? (Hausa, Yuroba, Igbo, Fulani, etc)

What is the richest tribe in Nigeria?

Augustine Elioku Making profit good enough online as a teen.
Originally Answered: 4y

I have to say this no tribe is Richest but we all have our flaws and strenghts but all in all i'll choose the richest after giving out facts.

The IGBO'S way of getting rich is mostly by business

The YORUBA's way is by going to school and most times getting a white collar job.

And the HAUSA's love POWER, they want to rule us forever and they still are the poorest.

Now The igbo's have a way of doing things since am from that tribe i know a lot about it.

A typical igbo family train's their children from Primary level to secondary school (Although some of them do finish in Primary six), Then they send them for apprenticeship in Lagos.

Four to Seven years after serving his/her master (Usually his master because they send to send their male kids more often than the female ones), He would be given a shop of his own so he would start his own business.

Let's see some examples of those that went through this process and came out super sucessful at the end.

COSMOS MADUKA:

Founder of Coscharis group of companies.

He served his master for seven years and his master settled him with only 700naira that is $2.

Now he is a multimillionare today.

Thats just an example but my point is this the igbos are very industrous they are entreprenuer's by nature they love business and seriously speaking we the igbos value wealth than formal college/University Education.

But that doesn't mean we don't go to college, an example of an igbo Macarthur Genius Grant winner from the igbo tribe is Chimamanda Adichie.

Now moving onto the Tribe I envy most

THE YORUBA's

One thimg i love about the Yoruba's is the way they love education.

They love it their parents strive to make sure their children enters University.

Even when they don't have they borrow.

Most philantropist we have in nigeria are mostly from the Yoruba tribe including a nobel prizein literature winner.

In the year 1986 he won the prize first ever in Nigeria.

He was born in Abeokuta to an Anglican priest father and a store owner mother but that didn't stop him from staying in nigeria he furthered his studies abroad.

There are many more yoruba's that are rich but i just want to mention one.

Every tribe is rich in their own way.

Now to the tribe most Nigerians dont like (excluding me though).

THE HAUSA's

They have the highest number of both rich and Largest number of the poorest this is how their poor masses look like.

These children don't take their bath once a day or week, Some can't even remember when they did.

Their parents are tempted to join the \boko haram group so they can feed but they don't know its worse (I can't blame them they've experienced hell already)

All this children are Malnourished.

Now while they suffer some of their so called leaders are up-there embezzling the money of their suffering masses.

The northerners produces the highest number of billionaires in Nigeria.

That's Mohammed indimi with networth over $500 million.(His networth droped due to the drop in oil prices. From $670 million to $500 million)

In fact the richest man in Africa is an Hausa man so I'll say.

THE HAUSA's ARE THE POOREST HAS THE HIGHEST BILLIONAIRES.

BUT THEY ARE NOT THE RICHEST ALL TRIBES ARE IN ITS OWN SPECIAL WAY.

BONUS the Yoruba's has the richest african woman, and also the unseated Oprah winfrey as the richest woman with black skin.

Her name is Folorunsho Alakija.

Folorunsho was born in 1951 to the family of Chief L. A. Ogbara in Ikorodu, Lagos State. At age seven, she travelled to the United Kingdom to begin a four-year primary education at Dinorben School for Girls in Hafodunos Hall in Llangernyw, Wales. After returning to Nigeria, she attended Muslim High School Sagamu Ogun State, Nigeria. Afterwards, she returned abroad for her secretarial studies at Pitman's Central College, London. She also studied fashion design at the American College, London and the Central School of Fashion

Folorunsho started her career in 1974 as an executive secretary at Sijuade Enterprises, Lagos, Nigeria. She moved on to the former First National Bank of Chicago, now FinBank now acquired by FCMB (First City Monument Bank) where she worked for some years before establishing a tailoring company called Supreme Stitches. It rose to prominence and fame within a few years, and as Rose of Sharon House of Fashion, became a household name.

As national president and lifelong trustee of the Fashion Designers Association of Nigeria (FADAN), she left an indelible mark, promoting Nigerian culture through fashion and style.

In May 1993, Folorunsho applied for the allocation of an oil prospecting license (OPL).

The license to explore for oil on a 617,000-acre block—now referred to as OPL 216—was granted to Alakija's company, Famfa Limited. The block is located approximately 220 miles south east of Lagos and 70 miles offshore of Nigeria in the Agbami Field of the central Niger Delta. In September 1996, she entered into a joint venture agreement with Star Deep Water Petroleum Limited (a wholly owned subsidiary of Texaco) and appointed the company as a technical adviser for the exploration of the license, transferring 40 percent of her 100 percent stake to Star Deep.

Subsequently, Star Deep sold off 8 percent of its stake in OPL 216 to Petrobras, a Brazilian company. On 9 March 2016 she became the first female Chancellor (Osun State University) in Nigeria.
source: Folorunsho Alakija - Wikipedia

Follow me and Upvote my answer if you find it interesting.

Agboola Sodiq , Chief Strategist at DRS Digital (2018-present)
Answered Jun 30, 2020

Igbo Tribe

This tribe has one of the largest populations in Nigeria. The Igbo people, natively called Ndi Igbo and also spelled as IBO or Eboe, are the third-largest ethnic group in Nigeria and lives chiefly in the southeastern part of Nigeria.

The principal occupation of Igbos is trading. The Igbos are well known for their business acumen all over Nigeria.

They are into Agriculture as well as local crafts such as blacksmith, wood carving, pottery, cloth weaving, carpentry, mask making, etc.

The Igbo's are well known for making/producing their own goods popularly known by Nigerians as"Aba made".

In every major market in Nigeria, you are sure to find ten or more Igbo. To mention but a few markets such as Alaba Market where electronics are sold, Idumota spare part Market, Katangowa, Abulegba where they sell majorly second-hand clothes popularly known as "Okirika" etc. These are three major markets in Lagos and 90% of the traders are Ndi Igbo.

When it comes to Agriculture and manufacturing, Coscharis Maduka has the biggest rice farm in Nigeria while Innocent Chukwuma has the first indigenous car assembly plant in Nigeria.

Despite the fact that the Igbos lost their landed properties and couldn't claim their bank accounts and lost their businesses as a result of the Biafra war which lasted for three years. However, innovation and helping each other out made them rise to become one of the richest tribes in Nigeria within the space of forty years.

They encourage hard work, entrepreneurship, and love among themselves thus, they have the fewest number of people living in abject poverty.

Who are the 10 top richest Nigerians?

Bothers Concept , CEO at Joff Hardy (2016-present) Answered Jun 1, 2019

Aliko Dangote (Worth – $16.6 Billion)

When Dangote's uncle lent him the sum of 500, 000 naira in 1977, little did he know that he was furniture a seed that will germinate and produce the world's richest colored man.

Dangote is from Kano State, Northern Nigeria.

Born into splendor and plenty, Dangote didn't go all complacent with the pool of wealth that was keeping his temperature mild but scrabbled his way like a pauper into becoming the richest man in Africa and the 67th richest man on the planet.

The 61-year-old billionaire attended the Al-Azhar University, Cairo, Egypt where he obtained a degree in Business Studies and Administration.

In 1977, he took a loan from his maternal grand-uncle Alhaji Dantata and promised to pay back in 12 weeks which he actually did. With the loan, Dangote began trading in cement.

He would later relocate to Lagos and expand his business into a conglomerate with the inclusion of sugar, flour, salt, noodles, and most recently into oil and telecoms.

Today, the Dangote group is about the biggest business conglomerate in West Africa with its subsidiaries in major African nations like Benin, Togo, South Africa, Ethiopia, Ghana, and Zambia.

Dangote is a huge employer of labor in Nigeria with over 11,000 people on his payroll.

With the launch of his refinery in sight, Dangote hopes to employ more 30,000 Nigerians into the largest refinery in Africa.

He is a philanthropist and a concerned Nigeria which manifested in his huge financial inputs in curbing the spread of the deadly Ebola virus when it did hit Nigeria.

With Dangotes' recent investment in oil, his net worth is expected to have a turbo speed increase and create a gigantic overlap between him and his cohorts.

It will further solidify his position as the richest black man in the world with little room for any opposition.

Mike Adenuga (Worth – $9.3 Billion)

Adenuga is well renowned for his telecom investment as he pioneered Nigeria's maiden indigenous telecommunications company, Globalcom Nig. Ltd.

He is a Nigerian business magnate, investor, and philanthropist from Ogun State, Nigeria.

Adenuga who was once a chauffeur and security guard in London while trying to see himself through school is Nigeria's second richest man.

He bagged a degree in Business Administration from Northwestern Alva Oklahoma State University and also a degree in Pace University, New York.

On returning from the United States at age 26, he joined his mother in her sawmill business where he began his rise to fame and wealth.

Adenuga's company–Consolidated Oil Company in 1990 received an operating license by the Nigerian Government to begin the drilling of oil in Nigeria's upstream petroleum sector.

He rode on that license to success and became the first indigenous contractor to achieve the feat.

His oil company has been renamed to Conoil where he seats as chairman of the board.

He then obtained another license surrounded by conditions and policies in 1999 to float his telecommunication company.

The license was repealed but was later granted back to him in 2003, hence the arrival of Globacom which later became the second largest telecommunication industry in Nigeria based on subscriber density and equity.

He is a very reserved billionaire and usually stays away from the prying eyes of the media.

Adenuga has also invested a whole in charity, sports, and entertainment in Nigeria.

Femi Otedola (Worth – $1.8 Billion)

Born in 1962, Ibadan, Nigeria, Otedola came into a wealthy family where his father, Sir Michael Otedola was the former Lagos State Governor in the military regime.

Femi Otedola is a stylish Nigerian billionaire, oil magnate, and philanthropist.

He’s the Chairman of Forte Oil formerly known as African Petroleum.

Forte Oil is one the largest distributor of petroleum products in Nigeria.

He is also the owner of Zenon oil – a petroleum products marketing and distribution company founded in 2003.

He is an investor mogul with a number of companies under him.

Otedola was a one-time chairman of Transcorp Hilton Hotel Abuja which is a member of the famous Transcorp conglomerate with interests in real estates and banking.

He is also the president and CEO of Seaforce Shipping Company Ltd – a leading company in the shipment of petroleum products into the country.

He is the founder and chief executive of swift insurance which is his investment in the corporate finance world.

Otedola is a huge giver.

This has reflected in his numerous financial contributions around the country via his Michael Otedola Foundation.

He awards scholarships to less privileged students in the Lagos States annually through this foundation.

Abdul Samad Isyaku Rabiu (Worth – $1.6 Billion)

Born in the ancient city of Kano, 1960, Rabiu is a Nigerian business mogul, chairman, and founder of the BUA group – a very influential business conglomerate in Nigeria with the second largest sugar refinery in sub-Saharan Africa.

Rabiu is an alumnus of Capital University Columbus, Ohio, United States.

On returning from Ohio, he joined his father's business which was also the family business with the name Isyaku Rabiu & sons.

The family's business conglomerate had interests in banking, real estate, insurance, and manufacturing.

In 1988, Rabiu went solo on the family's business and founded the BUA group which at the time was meant for commodity trading alone.

The BUA group would later acquire Nigerian Oil Mills Limited, which at the time was the largest palm oil manufacturing company in Nigeria.

His company began expanding tremendously starting with the establishing of flour mills in Lagos and Kano.

It later got involved in cement manufacturing after purchasing some stocks in the cement company of northern Nigeria.

Also, the group diversified into real estates, manufacturing, textiles and auto parts.

Rabiu who was once the board executive director of Nigeria's Bank of Industry is a philanthropist and gives to the society via the BUA foundation.

Theophilus Yakubu Danjuma (Worth – $750 Million)

Danjuma is a retired General in the Nigerian army.

He hails from Taraba State, Northern Nigeria.

After leaving the Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria to enroll the Nigerian army, T.Y. Danjuma as he is popularly known became a bigwig in the army and later ascended to become Nigeria's Chief of Defence staff in 1975 and Nigeria's Minister of Defence in 1999.

In the midst of his military streak and endeavors, he took interests in the petroleum industry and became a key player in the Nigerian petroleum downstream sector.

After retiring from the Nigerian army in 1979, Danjuma began his own shipping company known as the Nigeria America Line which was involved in the shipping and marketing of petroleum products.

He then doubled his shipping business with the launch of another shipping company in 1985 called NAL-COMET Shipping Nig. Ltd.

Through his pedigree and influence in the country, he was awarded some oil blocks by the federal government of Nigeria when he founded his oil exploration and production company known as South Atlantic Petroleum (SAPETRO).

He is a philanthropist and gives through the T.Y Danjuma Foundation.

Tony Elumelu (Worth – $700 Million)

Elumelu is a Nigerian banker, investor, billionaire, and philanthropist.

He is renowned as the Chairman of the United Bank of Africa (UBA) – one of the most prestigious banks on the African continent.

He is from Delta State, southern Nigeria.

Elumelu is also an economist having obtained double degrees from both the University of Lagos and Ambrose Ali University, Ekpoma.

He also attended the famed Harvard Business School.

Tony Elumelu is also the chairman of the transnational corporation simply known as Transcorp – famous for the ownership of the luxury 5 stars Transcorp Hilton Hotel in the nation's capital Abuja.

In 2010 Elumelu quit as chairman of UBA and founded Heir holdings a conglomerate with interests in banking, real estate, insurance, healthcare, energy, hospitality, and agribusiness.

He is also highly revered for his philanthropic activities under the Tony Elumelu Foundation where he empowers young entrepreneurs who are armed with great business and innovative ideas but lack funding to start up.

The scheme has been more than successful and each year thousands of entrepreneurs across the country are empowered to carry out their dreams.

Tunde Folawiyo (Worth – $650 Million)

Barr. Tunde Folawiyo is a Nigerian lawyer, entrepreneur and business mogul.

He is the managing director of Yinka Folawiyo Group, a conglomerate conceived and birthed by his father.

He inherited the group in 2008 following the demise of his father Wahab Folawiyo.

Tunde, prior to the inheritance of his father's business, graduated from the London School of Economics with a degree in Economics in 1980 and went further to study law at the University College London where he bagged a degree in law (LLM) in 1985.

He was immediately called to a bar while in London. Barr. Tunde would later quit his law profession in 1989 after establishing his own law firm in Nigeria and only practicing for four years.

The Yinka Folawiyo group is into shipping, real estate, agriculture and energy.

Tunde in a bid to expand his father's conglomerate founded Folawiyo Energy Ltd as a subsidiary of the Folawiyo business empire.

Tunde amongst other numerous positions is a director at MTN NIGERIA – the largest telecommunication industry in Nigeria.

Tunde's financial portfolio is quite a brilliant one.

Having obtained two degrees in London, he decided to use the first one which was in Economics and rode to success on its back ditching that of Law.

Jim Ovia (Worth – $550 Million)

Widely acclaimed around the country as the founder and chairman of Zenith bank – one of the leading banks with the greatest assets in Nigeria.

Jim Ovia who hails from Delta State, Nigeria is a foremost banker, businessman and investor.

He attended the southern university, baton, Louisiana, the United States in 1979 where he got a degree in Business Administration and decided to enrich his profile further by attending the Harvard Business School.

Jim is also the owner of Visafone, a mobile telecommunication company which was acquired by telecom giants MTN.

He is the chairman of Cyberspace Network Limited and chairman of the Nigerian software development initiative.

Mohammed Indimi (Worth – $500 Million)

Mohammed Indimi is a Nigerian business magnate, investor, and philanthropist. Indimi hails from Borno State, Northern Nigeria.

He is the founder and chairman of Oriental Energy Resources.

He founded Oriental Energy – an oil and gas company in 1990 and have through it made his fortunes.

Indimi is an In-law to the president of Nigeria, Gen Muhammad Buhari and former in-law to ex-military President Gen Ibrahim Babaginda.

Orji Uzor Kalu (Worth – $330 Million)

Orji Kalu is a Nigerian politician, business mogul, and investor.

Prior to politics where he served as governor of Abia state for two terms, Orji Kalu was a serious businessman who eyed politics incredibly.

From his days at the University of Maiduguri where he was studying political science, Kalu demonstrated a strong passion for student unionism and that would cost him his education as he was suspended and never returned back to the school.

He chooses to rather start up his business by trading in palm oil produced in his home state.

He subsequently founded SLOK holdings, a business empire with interests in furnitures, airline, paper manufacturing, edible oil, banking, and newspaper publishing.

SLOK holdings also have the presence in some major countries in Africa, the United States, South Korea, and the United Kingdom.

Kalu is the founder of two famous Nigerian dailies "Daily Sun and New Telegraph".

Related Links

Which is the most hated tribe in Nigeria?

As a Nigerian, what is your honest opinion about the Hausa-Fulani, Igbo and Yoruba people of Nigeria?

Which tribe in Nigeria has the most beautiful ladies?
What is the yoruba tribe most credited for in Nigeria?

Are the Igbos actually the wealthiest ethnic group in Nigeria or is that just a misconception?

If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer most?

What is the wealthiest city in Nigeria?
What tribe parties the most in Nigeria?
Nigeria: Why is it so rare to come across a person from the Hausa tribe in America?
How can we unite the Igbos & Yorubas in Nigeria?
Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?
How many states in Nigeria have an Igbo tribe?
How do other non-Igbo Nigerians feel about Igbos?
Which tribe is the best cook in Nigeria?
Are Yoruba men truly the most caring tribe in Nigeria?

If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer most?

Chukwuemeka Ikoro IT Professional, Freelance Tech Writer, Geoscientist and Climate Change Champion Updated 5y

Originally Answered: If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer more?

I am sure that you are aware that there are over 250 ethnic groups in the country. The three groups you mentioned might not be enough to form a nation.

That being said, let's assume that what you mean is Hausa representing the whole northern Nigeria, Yoruba the western region of Nigeria, and Igbo comprising of the eastern and south-south regions. The country that will be least prosperous (suffer as you called it) is the one that repeats the same mistakes of Nigeria. By not recognizing that the strength of a nation is not what it has inside the ground or the size, the strength of a nation is in her people united by a common purpose. To build a prosperous nation you must make sure that every person feel welcomed and a part of the country. In so doing, in whatever position that they find themselves, they will do all it takes to move the country forward. They will fight for the nation!

You therefore cannot say literally who will "suffer" or not, it depends on the one that will organize themselves well, lead an inclusive government that will uplift her people.

My point is on the "people" because as you are aware, every region and even state in Nigeria have natural resources, but the natural resources alone does not make a nation rich (as Nigeria have proven) nor does population (as some other smaller countries have proven). That a country like Nigeria with abundant human and natural resources is wallowing in poverty is a big shame!

Related Links

As a Nigerian, what is your honest opinion about the Hausa-Fulani, Igbo and Yoruba people of Nigeria?

Are the Igbos actually the wealthiest ethnic group in Nigeria or is that just a misconception?

Nigeria: Why is it so rare to come across a person from the Hausa tribe in America?
How can we unite the Igbos & Yorubas in Nigeria?
Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?
How do other non-Igbo Nigerians feel about Igbos?
Why do most Igbos passionately dislike Buhari?

Is it true that Nigerians can differentiate people from different tribes by their facial/body traits (I'm not talking about cultural costumes/clothes)? If yes, what are those differences?

In Nigeria, is there any discrimination or jealousy against the Igbo because of their disproportionate intellectual and business achievements?

What tribe parties the most in Nigeria?
What do Yoruba people think of Edo people?
What does the future look like for the Hausa, Yoruba and Igbo languages in Nigeria?
What is the richest tribe in Nigeria?
Is it 'Igbo' or 'Ibo'? Is the 'g' silent?
How can I distinguish various tribes in Africa (e.g. Igbo, Yoruba or Hausa in Nigeria)?

What is the yoruba tribe most credited for in Nigeria?

Funsho Agbalu Social Analysis & Other Stuff 4y

Originally Answered: What are the yourba tribe most credit for in Nigeria?

I could list a thousand things the Yoruba community has contributed to Nigeria but above all would be liberalism but before we get to that, I'll like to start from an historical perspective;

Putting an end to the Fulani Jihad bent on forcefully converting the entire region into Islam. Thanks to the victors of the Battle of Osogbo, we have both Christian and Muslims living peacefully in Nigeria today. Ok maybe the peaceful part is arguable but at least religious conflicts have never gone past the occasional communal conflict.

While you cannot credit Yoruba people specifically for Western education in Nigeria, you could credit them for making education mainstream. All Nigerians, regardless of ethnicity benefited from the old Western region's free education policy.

A Yoruba guy championed the translation of the English bible into Yoruba and Igbo language.

Cultural dominance. The "oo" suffix on the typical Nigerian tongue is of Yoruba origin. Some times Nigerian music sounds better in Yoruba. I mean that in the most open minded way possible.

Most of the awesome Nigerian weddings you see are either Yoruba weddings or heavily influenced by Yoruba wedding culture. Aso-Ebi is Yoruba language for extended family uniform.

The Yoruba community serves as a buffer between the endemic hatred Igbos and Hausas have for each other. You can always trust the average Igbo guy to hate (as in really hate) the average Hausa guys and vice versa. In fact both tribes would rather enter an agreement with the Yoruba community than with each other; an Igbo guy would rather enter an agreement with a Yoruba guy than an Hausa-Fulani guy, an Hausa-Fulani guy would rather enter an agreement with a Yoruba guy than with an Igbo guy. Thanks to Yoruba people, we haven't had a second Biafra war.

Religious freedom. Igbos are either Catholic, Methodist or Pentecostal, rarely Muslim (I've met Igbo Muslims in Abuja). Hausa-Fulanis are always Muslim no matter what, Yorubas are split in between Christian, Muslim, and traditional worship. The average Yoruba guy is lot less ethnocentric and or religiously dogmatic than any other Nigerian you'll meet.

Liberalism, the Yoruba people are at the forefront of the fight for the freedom and liberties of most minority communities in Nigeria. Yorubas backed the establishment of the Mid-Western region for example and also seem to be the most outspoken in LGBT community in Nigeria.

Related Links

What is the richest tribe in Nigeria?

As a Nigerian, what is your honest opinion about the Hausa-Fulani, Igbo and Yoruba people of Nigeria?

If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer most?

Which is the most hated tribe in Nigeria?

Are the Igbos actually the wealthiest ethnic group in Nigeria or is that just a misconception?

What tribe parties the most in Nigeria?
Are Yoruba men truly the most caring tribe in Nigeria?
What tribe is the most educated in Nigeria?

Nigeria: Why is it so rare to come across a person from the Hausa tribe in America?
Which tribe in Nigeria has the most beautiful ladies?
How do other non-Igbo Nigerians feel about Igbos?
What is the best tribe in Nigeria?
How can we unite the Igbos & Yorubas in Nigeria?
Why are Yoruba men called "Yoruba demons"?

Which tribe has the largest population in Nigeria between Hausa and Yoruba? Fulani is a minority group, there is nothing called Housa-Fulani.

Which is the oldest tribe in Nigeria?

Nurudeen Lawal Lead Consultant (2005–present) 2y

After researching deeply, I have concluded that the Igbo Ethnic Nationality in Nigeria is the oldest Ethnic Nationality or Group in Nigeria having existed since 1450BC (around 3500 years) and since 1187BC when it crowned its pioneer kings in Nri and Eri-Aka (now Agulueri) all located now in present day Anambra State.

Igbo Ethnicity was originally founded by Eri, a possible migration from Middle East (Israel through Egypt); who later settled at the confluence point of "Ezu and Omambala Rivers", called "Agbanabo". His first place of settlement is called "Eri-Aka" (now Agulueri) located in present Anambra East Local Government of Anambra State. The name "Anambra" or Anambra State is a corrupt spelling for "Omambala River".

The second oldest Ethnic Nationality in Nigeria can expressly be traced to the doorsteps of Agbon (now called Agbor) and Bini (Benin) dynasties in present Edo and Delta States. The Peoples of the two named dynasties may most likely have existed for 2,917yrs or since 900BC. It is important to inform further that the Agbon or Agbor People and their kingship dynasty were not originally Igbo People, but Ominije People, who later in 701BC established their "Ogele Kingship dynasties", which reigned till 1260AD with Ogele XIV Okwakpor as its last Ogele.The Igbo-Agbor Kingship dynasty was established in 1270AD with Ebonka as its first Igbo Dein of Agbor. The Bini Kingdom was much later established in 1180AD.

Hausa Ethnic Nationality is the third oldest tribe in Nigeria and has existed for 1,217yrs or since 800AD. Hausa Nation-State or Ethnic Nationality was founded by a Baghdadi (Iraq) Prince, named Bayajidda around 800AD; about two centuries before the ancient Kano was founded by one of his grandsons, named Bagauda who later became its first king or Sarkin Kano in 999AD.

According to the Kano Chronicle, ancient Kingdom of Kano recorded a total of 38 Sarkin Kano or Kings of Kano between 999AD and 1743AD before the invasion of the Fulani Islamic Jihadists led by Usman dan Fodio at the beginning of the 19th Century AD or early 1800s. Prince Bayajidda originally founded Daura (the oldest of the seven original Hausa States which is now in Katsina State). The seven original Hausa States are called Hausa bokwoi (original Hausa) or Hausa bakwai (seven true Hausa States founded by Bayajidda). Others including Fulani Ethnic Nationality, Nupe, Gwari and other settlements in Hausa Land areas or northern Nigeria are called Hausa banza (adopted Hausa people).

On the other hand, the Yoruba Nation State or Ethnic Nationality is the forth oldest Ethnic Nationality in Nigeria and has existed for 917yrs or since 1100AD having been founded by Oduduwa; a migrant who was said to have migrated from Middle East. He later sent his last son, Oranmiyan to Benin in about 1170AD as the first interim Oba of Benin and was later succeeded by Oba Eweka 1 in 1180AD as the first substantive Oba or King of Benin Empire.

Fulani Ethnic Nationality is the newest in Nigeria. It has only existed in Nigeria for 213yrs, having been founded by Usman dan Fodio; an Islamic scholar and urbanized Fulani Jihadist in 1804 during which it imposed till date Islamic Emperors in all its conquered communities including Ilorin and Bida Emirates with the exeption of the Borno Emirate, ruled till date by descendants of the rulers of Bornu Empire (1380AD-1893AD).

In all, there are 386 tribes in Nigeria and among them, Igbo Ethnic Nationality is the oldest, dating back to 1450BC when Eri was migrated and settled in Nigeria across the River Niger or 3,467yrs today.

Source: Emeka Umeagbalasi: 2017

Related Links

What tribe parties the most in Nigeria?
What is the richest tribe in Nigeria?

As a Nigerian, what is your honest opinion about the Hausa-Fulani, Igbo and Yoruba people of Nigeria?

How do other non-Igbo Nigerians feel about Igbos?
Which ethinic group in Nigeria, are the most intelligent, educated and successful?

If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer most?

Nigeria: Why is it so rare to come across a person from the Hausa tribe in America?
How can we unite the Igbos & Yorubas in Nigeria?
What is the most difficult tribe to marry within, in Nigeria?
Which tribe is the best cook in Nigeria?

Which tribe is the poorest in Nigeria?

Ariyo Akinlosotu Lives in Lagos, Nigeria 2y

I doubt there are statistics for the poorest tribes in the country but one can deduce using some simple facts:

It is most likely a Northern tribe, the Hausas in particular. The reason why is because they are Muslim and they have a serious disdain for western education. They are therefore mostly illiterate. Sokoto state which is majority Hausa has a literacy rate of just 10%. This is even more shocking when you consider that it has a small Christian tribe that values education. Western education is vital for advancement in today's world. Also, it improves the Human Development Index of its people

Nigeria was voted the poverty capital of the world. It has the largest number of desperately poor people. 80% of that number comes from the North.

The third reason probably identifies the poorest tribe. There is presently a war in the North East and it has affects 3 states. The 2 most affected states are Bornu and Yobe. Adamawa, the third state is affected to a lesser degree now. What is interesting about Yobe and Bornu is that they are home to the Kanuri people, who like their co-religionist Hausas, disdain Western education. They have now been ravaged by war with many now living in Internal Displace Person camps housing millions of refugees dependent on food handouts to survive.

The Kanuris should be the poorest tribe in Nigeria,

Related Links

What is the richest tribe in Nigeria?
Which is the most hated tribe in Nigeria?

As a Nigerian, what is your honest opinion about the Hausa-Fulani, Igbo and Yoruba people of Nigeria?

What is the best tribe in Nigeria?
Which tribe in Nigeria has the most beautiful ladies?
What is the most difficult tribe to marry within, in Nigeria?

If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer most?

Which is the most peaceful tribe in Nigeria?
Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?
What tribe parties the most in Nigeria?

Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?

Jamie Oglethorpe Grew up on the Zambian Copperbelt 3y

Nigeria is the most populous country in Africa by far, which gives it a large GDP. It is far more important to look at the GDP (or GNI) per capita. This is a much more meaningful measure of wealth from the individual resident's point of view.

Here is the Gross Domestic Product for 2017, and Nigeria is on top[1] :

2017 Rank	Country	Nominal GDP ($ billions)	Nominal GDP per capita (US$)	Notes
1	Nigeria	376.284	1,994.235
2	South Africa	349.299	6,179.870
3	Egypt	237.037	2,500.772
4	Algeria	178.287	4,292.272
5	Angola	124.209	4,407.657
6	Morocco	109.824	3,151.145

On the other hand, the GDP per person is dominated by small countries[2] :

African rank (2017)	World rank (2017)	GDP (PPP) per capita (2017)[1]	Nation
1	37	34,865	Equatorial Guinea
2	47	28,712	Seychelles
3	61	21,628	Mauritius
4	67	19,266	Gabon
5	71	18,146	Botswana
6	84	15,150	Algeria
7	89	13,403	South Africa
8	92	12,994	Egypt

13	115	8,612	Morocco
14	124	6,942	Cape Verde
16	127	6,707	Republic of the Congo
17	129	5,927	Nigeria
18	137	4,605	Ghana
19	138	4,580	Sudan

 I looked for coampatible figures. The Nominal figures are at the dollar exchange rate. The PPP is adjusted for the cost of living[3]

Footnotes

[1] List of African countries by GDP (nominal) - Wikipedia
[2] List of African countries by GDP (PPP) per capita - Wikipedia
[3] The Big Mac index

Related Links

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

Putting Nigeria side by side with South Africa, which of the two countries has the potential of leading the African continent out of the neo-colonial state they are in, considering both economic and military strength of both countries?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?
Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?
What separates Nigeria from other African countries (both good and bad)?

Why aren't there as many South Africans going to Nigeria for greener pastures as there are Nigerians going to SA?

Is Nigeria the poorest country all over Africa?
Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

How is it possible that Rwanda is developing at a faster rate than Nigeria when Nigeria has

What are the best cities to do business in Nigeria?

Tomilade Adesola Of course I was born in Nigeria! 5y

Lagos: Lagos is easily the best of the pack. It is situated along the ocean and it is the first port of entry by sea. It is the commercial capital of the country, and the largest commercial hum in Africa. It's largely because of Lagos that Nigeria was able to overcome South Africa as the largest economy in Africa. Here is how http://wikipedia puts it:

Lagos is Nigeria's economic focal point, generating a significant portion of the country's GDP. Most commercial and financial business is carried out in the central business district situated on the island. This is also where most of the country's commercial banks, financial institutions, and major corporations are headquartered. Lagos is also the major Information Communications and Telecommunications (ICT) hub of West Africa and potentially, the biggest ICT market in the continent. Lagos has one of the highest standards of living in Nigeria and in Africa.

The Port of Lagos is Nigeria's leading port and one of the largest and busiest in Africa. It is administered by the Nigerian Ports Authority and it is split into three main sections: Lagos port, in the main channel next to Lagos Island, Apapa Port (site of the container terminal) and Tin Can Port, both located in Badagry Creek, which flows into Lagos Harbour from the west. The port features a railhead.

Abuja: The only reason why Abuja comes in second is simply because it is the Administrative capital of Nigeria. And because of this fact alone, the city is experiencing a massive influx of human labor. It is presently the fastest growing city in Africa, and one of the fastest in the world. The Central District is the city's principal Business Zone, where practically all parastatals and multinational corporations have their offices and headquarters. Couple with this is the fact that all the politicians are based there. So as it is the political hub of Nigeria, the resources are simply there for profitable business.

Port harcourt: The city of Port Harcourt is a major business hub because of its abundant crude. The biggest international oil companies are situated there. Oil servicing companies abound in this city, the city's development through the benefits of the Petroleum industry has made it a choice of different lucrative commercial activities. Thus in terms of Gross Domestic Product and foreign exchange revenue from the oil industry, the city is one of the wealthiest states in Nigeria.

Kano: kano should have taken second place after Lagos, but for obvious reasons. The city is the second largest industrial center in Nigeria, and the largest in Northern Nigeria. Commercial trading in this city spans as far back as the 16th century, and by the 19th century kano was boasting an annual turnover of about $30 million. A lot as at that time. Kano is also one of the most populous cities in Nigeria. Thus you are sure to have enough manpower and vast market for your business.

Jos: Jos has the distinction of being one of the most cosmopolitan cities in Nigeria. And this has made it an important commercial and tourist center for any related business enterprise. Because of its temperate climate (Jos has the distinction of being the coldest area in the country with even reports of snow falling during the rainy season), the city attracts many Europeans who settled there and establish businesses. This influx of foreigners makes Jos a choice destination for Business and one of the best places in Nigeria for commerce.

Related questions

What are the best businesses in Nigeria?
What is the best medical business to do in Nigeria?
What business can I do in Warri, Nigeria?
Which part of Nigeria is the best to live?
What kind of business can I start with $50k in Nigeria?
What business can I start with #1million in Nigeria?
How do I start a business in Nigeria?
What are the cities in Nigeria?
Which business can I start with N500,000 in Nigeria, and what steps should I take?
What is the wealthiest city in Nigeria?
What's the easiest business to start and run in Nigeria?
What are the business opportunities that are available in Nigeria?
What kind of business can I start with 30 K in Nigeria?
What are the best cities and metropolitan areas in Nigeria?
What is the smartest thing to do before starting up a business in Nigeria?

Is Nigeria the poorest country all over Africa?

Cindy Adem Proud African 3y

Actually, it's the richest with a GDP of $594.257 Billion followed by South Africa and then Egypt. It derives most of its wealth from natural resources, especially oil and its human resources (available cheap labour and wide market). Its movie industry, Nollywood, is the second largest in the world, only second to Hollywood.

The main reason why people may think Nigeria is poorer than it actually is, is that the wealth gap between the rich and the poor is so darn wide; great infrastructure is only mostly found in urban areas and like plenty of African countries, corruption is rife. It is also tinkering on the edge of overpopulation.

Most of Africa's brightest, most ambitious talent is found in Nigeria. Which can be a good and a bad thing (i.e scamming people online requires some level of smarts and ambition)

Africa's most romantic men are also known to be Nigerian. Nigerian women are known to have an incredibly fascinating fashion sense; kick ass make-up artists as well. I particularly love how Nigerians fully support their own industries, especially the fashion and entertainment industry. Their weddings are occasions that warrant being included in your bucket list. Its tech industry that's growing only rivals Nairobi's (Kenya) and South Africa's.

There are plenty of reasons why Nigerians should be proud of their heritage. If not for anything else, for the legendary jollof rice.

If I wasn't a Kenyan, I would have loved to be born a Nigerian.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria a poor country?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Why is Nigeria a rich country, meanwhile the rest of Africa suffers?
Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?
Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?
Is Nigeria a failed state?

Why do Nigeria produce the most successful people in Africa despite rated the country with the most poorest people in it?

Are Nigerians racist?

How is it possible that Rwanda is developing at a faster rate than Nigeria when Nigeria has access to the coast, youthful population, and natural resources?

Why don't the leaders of Nigeria replicate the model of the leaders of Rwanda?
Why is Nigeria still a third world country?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
Why is Nigeria on the dangerous country list?
How do other African countries view Cameroon?
What is Nigeria lacking?
If Nigeria is so corrupt, why are Nigerians still a proud people?

Wake Up Africa!

Will Northern Nigeria ever regain its former state after the devastations of the Boko Haram, bandits, and other terror groups?

Oliver Ojobor CEO/Managing Director (2019–present) Wed

Yes, with my one million farm force project, it is high much visible.
1. Your past political or leadership experiences that can help us sell your candidacy in the midst of the above listed names.

ANSWER: My name is Hon. Ojobor Oliver E. 2023 Presidential Aspirant. First, the heavyweights are heavy disappointments to Nigerians and the Nigerian economy. In this answer to your interesting questions I will show you the meaning of political or leadership experience in relation to our common goal for better leadership, Nigerian economic development and prosperity. My political and leadership experience is based on how I will go about making the Nigerian economy better than the heavyweights you mentioned. The role of macroeconomics made it clear that political and economic prosperity of any nation is based on this role that says, for example, it is a taboo, killing, crime against United States economy, citizens and its residence to any United States citizens to own asset abroad, patronize products and services obtainable in United States. So in Nigeria heavyweights, who among them are not guilty of these primary leadership experiences, so where is their experience? Have you ever heard this secret of economic prosperity in any seminar, conference, and forum ever conducted by any public office holders in Nigeria? Today, Oliver is telling you that any day you hold assets, buy any products and services obtainable in Nigeria abroad you are committing a punishable offense against Nigerian people, and the economy. More details will be given in future interviews and chat.

https://www.linkedin.com/in/oliver-ojobor-43898963/

Related Links

Who are the Uli people of Nigeria?
Why did Africans convert to Christianity during the colonial era?

We want Diverse perspectives on what actions on climate change might work in your country or region? #ClimateChange

Has there ever been any benefit of organised religion to Africa and Africans?

What measures are being taken to assist developing and underdeveloped countries and the world at large to salvage the consequences of environmental pollution on plants, animals, and humans generally?

Which country is the highest oil-generated country in Africa?
What is the inspiration behind Africa's poverty?
Which European countries offer graduate assistantships for master's students?

Is North Africa more developed than the rest of the continent because it's geographically closer to Europe and is more connected to this area?

What is the future of Nigeria in the next four years?
Why does every country not have its own company to produce money?

What is the best approach to democracy in Africa? Your answer should not be a Western model.

I'm a second year student at Addis Ababa Science and Technology University and I wish to apply for Miss University of Africa's pagent. What is the criteria and the procedures for the application?

Why do African currencies have less values than European currencies? Can this inequality be reduced?

Does it not amount to intimidation and interference for the militry junta of Guinea to demand a refund of budget spent by its national team because it crashed out of the tournament. Why is FFIFA silent in such clear infrignment and injustice?

Are most black Americans from Nigeria originally?

Jimmy Clipper · Follow Former Administrative Assistant at U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (2007–2010) Jan 27

Yes I know 98% of African Americans are Native Americans that are owed millions we were already here. Simon called Niger(ian) in the Bible. N*r ie anajah literally the dust of the earth and source of all creation. Even Indians were called the Nword.

NIGER

STRONGS GREEK LEXICON - G3526 ORIGIN LATIN "NEGRO"

ORIGINAL PRONUNCIATION - "NIGGER"

MEANING - "BLACK" RECIPIENTS - "JEWS"

ACTS 13:1

"Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain PROPHETS and TEACHERS, as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called NIGER..."

Stop believing in the white supremacists exaggerated African slave stories & inferiority history. also, Negro & Indian are the same people, the name was applied to the aboriginal american people of a dark hue.

BLACK NEW TESTAMENT MINISTERS

Acts 13:1 Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers: as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger. (NEEGER) (in Latin) and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.

"Nigger" (Niger) in the Bible

- Anajah
- British pronounce "Niger"
- Anglo-American pronounce "Nigger"
- Child pronounce "Naya"
- Rasta pronounce "Naya"
- Literal Meaning (LM): The Ground and Dust of the Earth; The Source of The Creation

Nigger:	Israelite
Latin Word For Niger Which Means Black	The People Who Were Called Niger In Acts 13:1

Latin Dictionary:	Strong's Concordance
Niger: Translation: "Black, Dark"	Original Word: Niyep, ê Transliteration: Niger Phonetic Spelling: (neeg'-er) Word Origin of Latin origin (dark in color)

ISRAELITE = NIGGER = NIGER = BLACK PEOPLE

98% Of African Americans Are In Fact Native Indians And Are Owed Millions

www.imjustheretomakeyouthink.com By D. Calloway The tens of millions of Black Americans, or rather Indians, who 'disappeared' after 1492 did not all die in the ‘holocaust’ inflicted within America. Hundreds of thousands were shipped to Europe and Africa as Indian slaves. The whole slave trade story was given to all of us in reverse. A mass colony of Africans were not shipped from Africa to America. The truth is that Black Indians were shipped from America to Europe! They were then shipped from Spain to Africa as commodity for African resources. These Black Indians, now mistaken as African Americans, were shipped back to America and classified as “African Slaves.” This part of our history is what the school systems fail to mention in history programs. Every European nation that colonized North America utilized Indian slaves for construction, plantations and mining on the North American continent but more frequently in their outposts in the Caribbean and in the metropolis of Europe. All historians note that nowhere is there more authentic documentation than in South Carolina, also known as the original English colony of Carolina, established in 1670. It is estimated that between 1650 and 1730 at least 50,000 Indians (and likely more due to transactions hidden to avoid paying government tariffs and taxes) were exported by the English alone to their Caribbean outposts. Between 1670 and 1717 far more Indians were exported than Africans were imported. In southern coastal regions entire tribes were exterminated through slavery compared to disease or war. In a law passed in 1704, Indian slaves were conscripted to fight in wars for the colony long before the American Revolution. Brief Indian Slavery Complexity Indians found themselves caught in between colonial strategies for power and economic control. The fur trade in the Northeast, the English plantation system in the south and the Spanish mission system in Florida collided with major disruptions to Indian communities. Indians displaced from the fur trade in the north migrated south where plantation owners armed them to hunt for slaves living in the Spanish mission communities. The French, the English and Spanish often capitalized on the slave trade in other ways; for example they garnered diplomatic favor when they negotiated the freedom of slaves in exchange for peace, friendship and military alliance. In another instance of Indian and colonial complicity in the slave trade, the British had established ties with the Chickasaw who were surrounded by enemies on all sides in Georgia. They conducted extensive slave raids in the lower Mississippi Valley where the French had a foothold, which they sold to the English as a way to reduce Indian populations and keep the French from arming them first. Ironically, the English also saw it as a more effective way to “civilize” them compared to the efforts of the French missionaries. The Extent of the Indian Slave Trade The Indian slave trade covered an area from http://theoklahomaeagle.net/2019/07/02/98-of-african-americans-are-in-fact-native-indians-and-are-owed-millions/

IN SUMMARY, IT SEEMS CLEAR THAT MANY PEOPLE OF NATIVE AMERICAN ANCESTRY
@THE_RA_SMITH
TO BE SOLD on board the NEGROES,
PG. 91 AFRICANS AND NATIVE AMERICANS BY JACK D. FORBES
1000gohead
,IN WHOLE OR PART, HAVE BEEN RECLASSIFIED AS "NEGROES" OR "BLACKS" !!
BLACK INDIANS
"Indians" are Moors
IN DEN MOORIAN
Let My People Know.net
free lecture series presents
"The Americas: Lands of the Shemitic Negroes" Where:
Wilson Co. Main Library
Dates:
Saturday, June 18, 2016
12:30p - 3:00p
Assembly room
Monday, June 20. 2016
6:30p - 9:
conference ro
registration appreciated, but not necessary
PALEOINDIAN/PALEOAMERICAN = The original Black settlers of the Americas
Note: Paleoamerican is a classification term given to the first peoples who entered, and subsequently inhabited, the American continents during the final glacial episodes of the late Pleistocene period....
The original people of the Americas are the Black Paleoamericans; these are the first Human inhabitants of the Hemisphere...
These people are believed to have come from Australia and the Pacific Islands as early as 50,000 years ago

Moors In America | Moorish Americans

Olmec (Negroid)
Asian (Mongoloid
Negro
Native American
3/4th Negro Blood
Native American
3/4th Asian Blood
Mongoloid
Native American

THE CURSES PUT ON THE JEWS
DEUTERONOMY 28:25

ROMANS 9:4

Deuteronomy - Chapter 28 15-68

THE SOUTHERN KINGDOM

JUDAH- American Blacks BENJAMIN- West IndianBlacks
LEVI- Haitians

JEREMIAH 50:33

THE NORTHERN KINGDOM

SIMEON- Dominicans ZEBULON- Guatemala to Panama (Mayans) EPHRAIM- Puerto Ricans MANASSEH- Cubans
GAD- Native-American Indians REUBEN- Seminole Indians ASHER- Columbia to Uruguay (Incas)
ISSACHAR- Mexicans (Aztecs) NAPTHALI- Argentina/Chile

THUS SAITH THE LORD OF HOSTS; THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL AND THE CHILDREN OF JUDAH WERE OPPRESSED TOGETHER: AND ALL THAT TOOK THEM CAPTIVES HELD THEM FAST; THEY REFUSED TO LET THEM GO...

AMURIKA
The ancient Berber word for Morocco is "Amerika/Amurika"
It means Land in the West
The Aboriginal Peoples of the Americas are Americans, Amurikans, Amerikans, Amurikans, Al Maur'kans,
Al Mere'cans, Mori'cans, Maure, Mure, Moore, Mure, Moure
Remember that America was NEVER called India,
It was not named after Amerigo Vespucci and that America TRULY is the Land in the West.
Thus historically and geographically, the original peoples of America are
Al'mori'cans/Mure • Al Mori'cans/Mors • Al Maur'kans/ Moure
The Government of the United States is in no sense founded on the Christian religion.
SANFORD AND SON
HOW AMERICA ORIGINAL NAME AMERIQUE GOT HER NAME ?
AMERICA WAS NOT NAMED AFTER A CAUCASIAN ITALIAN MAN, AMERICA WAS NAMED AFTER AN INDIGENOUS NATIVE WOMAN OF COLOR NAMED AMERIQUE, AND BLESSED THE FEMALE THAT IS NAMED AFTER HER. THE NAME (ERIQUE) ERICA ERIC ERICKKA IS ANCIENT SACRET AND POWERFUL !!!
Amérique
Moor,
African American
or Indian?
YOU ARE THE SECRET
WAKE UP MOORS

A general description of the Indian tells us that the aboriginal of America is tall, straight of stature, and muscular, having coarse black hair, well-formed limbs, deep chests, brown or copper colored complexion, head a little flat, prominent nose, compressed lips, dark eyes and possessed of a great power of endurance.

In regard to the complexion of the American Indian, Father Charlevoix says: "The colour of the Savages does not prove a third Species between the White and the Black, as some People have imagined. They are very swarthy, and of dirty dark Red which appears more in Florida, of which Louisiana is a Part: But this is not their natural Complexion. The frequent Frictions they use, gives them this Red; and it is surprising that they are not blacker, being continually exposed to the Smoke in Winter, to the great Heats of the Sun in Summer, and in all Seasons to all the Inclemencies of the Air."

ARSARETH-NewFoundLand

THE 10 LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL

2 Esdras 13:40-45

Hebrew Israelites
Tribe of Gad

In 1877 the respected leader of the Nez Perce tribe

Assyrian Tablet

Chief Joseph said the tablet had been passed down in his family for many Assyrian Captivity 740B.C.

2 Esdras 13:40

This book was removed by protestants in the 1880's to hide the identity of the Northern Kingdom of Israel (Lost Tribes) Columbus used this book to find the Americas

"Those are the ten tribes, which were carried away prisoners out of their own land in the time of Osea the king,whom Salmanasar the king of Assyria led away captive, and he carried them over the waters, and so came they into another land."

The free Masonic, Jesuit Order established the U.S.A and colonized the Americas to hide the Identity of the Northern Kingdom

AMER'ICAN, noun A native of America; originally applied to the aboriginals, or copper-colored races, found here by the Europeans; but now applied to the descendants of Europeans (Pretenda-Indians) born in America.

What are the challenge in Nigeria?

Answered by Isaac 3h

One of the biggest challenges in Nigeria that has been greatly overlooked is Housing. Insecurity is the number 1 challenge and that has rendered lots of nigerians homeless across the nation forcing majority of the Nigerian population relocating or migrating to Lagos which is already overpopulated with over 21million Nigerians causing a hike in the cost of Accomodation in the country while also making so much money the smart investors.

Housing challenge has however turned into an investment venture for the big real estate players. To resolve it, I propose we all take a look at this post on IG

Related Links

Who should we blame for the get rich quick mentality and reported rituals amongst Nigerian teenagers, society, social media, parents, Nollywood, or the government?

What are the differences between French and British colonial administration in West Africa?

Why is Nigeria one of the poorest country in the world with all the resources that can make her the one of the richest country in world?

What is the origin of pidgin in Nigeria
Why is the Islamic Jihad spreading quickly in West Africa than other regions?
Can the ECOWAS standby force secure the region?

Why did the young Africans refuse to promote the good part of their traditional religious beliefs?

What are the likely solutions of illiteracy in the northern part of Nigeria?
Why do Africans still practice borrowed culture?

Why is the get rich quick syndrome very rampant in our society today, most especially in Nigeria?

Which app can I link to my bank account in Nigeria?
What will become of clothing in Nigeria without Aba designers?
Why do Nigerians speak pidgin?
Should we blame parents for the ritual killings among youths in Nigeria?

News Nigeria

2023 Presidency: Atiku Reportedly Set To Dump Peter Obi, Pick Wike As Running Mate

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 17h

Former Vice President of Nigeria, Atiku Abubakar is reportedly considering dropping former Anambra State Governor, Peter Obi in favour of another person as his running mate for the 2023 presidency.

According to reports, Atiku wants to choose Rivers State Governor, Nyesom Wike as his running mate should he clinch the Peoples Democratic Party (PDP) ticket for the 2023 presidency.

NIGERIA: Is Yoruba a State?

Answered by Trevor Zylstra Jan 19

No. Yoruba is a tribe, or if you prefer to say that another way, they are an ethnic group.

The Yoruba are one of the three primary tribes in Nigeria (the other two being the Ibo and the Hausa). The Yoruba are dominant in lower central and western Nigeria, including in Nigeria's largest city Lagos.

Depending on whose numbers you believe, the Yoruba constitute between 15% and 21% of the population of Nigeria.

They tend to be great artists, artisans, craftsmen, and their lost-wax bronze casting is world famous. They make excellent farmers, but also do well in urban situations. There are a lot of amazing Yoruba musicians too.

Seal’s mother is Yoruba.

John Boyega is fully Yoruba on both sides, although he was born in London, England.

Related Links

What are the challenge in Nigeria?
Why do Africans still practice borrowed culture?

Why is the get rich quick syndrome very rampant in our society today, most especially in Nigeria?

Which app can I link to my bank account in Nigeria?
What will become of clothing in Nigeria without Aba designers?
Why do Nigerians speak pidgin?
Should we blame parents for the ritual killings among youths in Nigeria?
What is the funniest thing that strangers said about your country?
Does any African country have a chance in winning the World Cup in Qatar?

Why is it that the 8000-year-old Dufuna canoe of Nigeria is not celebrated as an archaeological achievement of the sub-Saharan Africa?

Why were the colonial masters desperate to colonize Africans?

In Europe, young Vibrant youth are more in power than the old, while in Africa, More of Old men are in power than the young, why that Claus?

Which country is the highest oil-generated country in Africa?
How can I become a popular blogger in Nigeria?

Why do people celebrate overnight untraceable success especially in most part of African countries?

Without sentiment or biased judgement, should the Biafrans get the freedom they want in Nigeria?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian Jan 26

Everyone has sentiment and everybody is biased. To make things clear, I will vote no if there is ever a referendum on the question of secession. Nigerians tend to know what we want but not care to learn how to get it.

Neither maps, agitation, violence, online campaigns nor petitions to the UN will change the fact that the constitution has no mechanisms for organising a referendum that sanctions secession.

Changing the constitution requires that the majority of representatives and chief executives of Nigeria agree. Only Nigeria can agree to abolish itself. Not even the Americans can come and partition the country for us.

I don't see other Nigerians supporting that agenda since Biafran activists chose a strategy that mobilises local opinion by bragging about our innate superiority and insulting everybody else. But I could be wrong.

Let’s assume that other Nigerians agree. How would the question of the referendum be phrased? Who would vote? If Nigerians win, how would we deal with shouts of rigging? If Biafrans win, how would they deal with questions of assets division, border delineation, or the rights of Nigerians within Biafra?

Am I the only Nigerian from a polygamous extended family? Because I struggle to understand how people who have seen up close how bitter property division can be will be so blithe about ‘dividing the country’.

That brings us full circle back to the issue of conflict. I have many problems with the allure of Biafra, but none more so than the pretence that success will be easy and free of violence. And I mean a full-scale war, not potshots by ‘unknown gunmen’.

This isn’t the 60s.

The army isn’t the 12,000 strong policing component the British left behind.

The Southeast isn’t as economically strong as the old Eastern region.

The five governors don’t have the power that Ojukwu did over the Eastern region and the armed forces within it.

I see low odds of victory.

Most importantly, who is going to fund reconstruction? The Southeast can’t mobilise assets to upgrade itself now. Nigeria is panting under the burdens of recurrent expenditure and debt servicing. So after the high expenses and sacrifices of war, where will the money for reconstruction come from? Or are we to be like free and impoverished South Sudanese?

I have never felt as strongly about Biafra as the militants in the north feel about Allah. That makes me even more unwilling to turn the eye of the army here.

It is typically Nigerian to prattle on about ‘political solutions’. That just allows people in the know to trade favours.

The real problem is the army. Their actions will keep inflaming tensions. Keep them cooped up in their barracks, and IPOB will fade away. Every Nigerian has a pipe full of their favourite brand of copium. Aspirations to jand, the grind to blow, high hopes for the next president, Daddy GO-ism, Sharia Law, dreams of Biafra, restructuring-ism etc. It’s all the same thing. They can be inconvenient, but they're essentially harmless. They are weird hang-ups. Nod and move on.

I understand my stance pleases nobody.

There wouldn't be agitations for Biafra if we solved problems. So I expect this song and dance to persist. Biafrans will take every year that Nigeria endures as evidence of oppression rather than a failure of their strategy. The defence budget will keep rising. Things will persist as they are.

Wake Up Africa!

In the history of football, these two nations Nigeria and Tunisia have met 20 times. Nigeria has won Tunisia 6 times and Tunisia has won Nigeria 6 times. Both have drawn drawn 8 times

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Jan 23

So with this little history here before us, fans who do you think will extend the head to head lead and make it 7 wins today between Nigeria vs Tunisia?

Why can't the world support a homogeneous Biafra who has been agitating for independence from Nigeria due to hatred genocide, marginalization, and oppression from Nigeria since 1960?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian Aug 25

Biafra was not homogeneous because the Eastern region was not. 'The world' did not support the bid for secession then because it was not a Cold War battlefield and thus was irrelevant. They were more focused on events in the Middle East and Vietnam.
Now, the problem is twofold.

First, Biafran activists seem confused over where sovereignty lies. Activists for Nigerian independence went to Britain because, until October 1, 1963, Nigerian sovereignty was vested in the British crown.

Since that time, the locus of sovereignty rests in Nigeria. All these letters to the world this and petition to the united that is noisemaking. Only Nigeria can abolish itself.

Second, having failed to win concessions within the constitutional order of Nigeria, Biafran activists skipped straight to terrorism. That is a big mistake. A frog at the bottom of a well thinks that is all the world is. It is also easy to assume your views are unique. Reality is different.

Every government in the world has eccentrics who want 'freedom'. They are humoured, as long as they play by the rules. Once they become violent, countries band together and deny them recognition rather than set a bad precedent.

By the way, that is why Biafra found recognition nearly impossible even in Africa. Lt Col Ojukwu should have known that. After all, his murdered commanding officer had led the UN force that helped restore peace after the suppression of an attempted secession in the Congo's Katanga province. Why would African governments then lend their support to secessionism?

We are in the Fourth Republic. Your claims of hatred, genocide, marginalisation and oppression is a lie. It is the sort of big lie that cults want their adherents to swallow because once you believe something so ludicrous, every other thing is acceptable.

Most people, sensibly, do not accept it. It isn't their fault. It is yours for not moderating your rhetoric.

The Nigerian Civil War was a mistake. It was an all-around failure of not just statesmanship but all the societies in Nigeria. We should all be ashamed that things devolved thus. The fact that we learned all the wrong lessons from that catastrophe explains everything bad about this country.

The January 15, 1966 coup was mutinous and treasonous. After its suppression, all its participants should have been pumped for their collaborators. Then tried by the judiciary and, if found guilty, sentenced and executed. Posthumously, the executed should have been stripped of all military and civilian honours, their corpses cremated and their ashes dumped in the middle of the Atlantic.

General JTU Aguiyi-Ironsi's usurpation of civilian authority was treason. Until he accepted Mr Orizu's transfer of civilian authority, he was the greatest Nigerian in history. Accepting (or coercing) it was worse than Eve biting the apple. Every civilian bureaucrat that helped legitimate his power grab (and all the others since) was equally treasonous.

There are no words for how evil the July 1966 coup was. They did not just murder their superiors; they also murdered their colleagues and friends in their sleep. Then they organised a pogrom of people by their neighbours.

A) Thou shalt not kill. Broken!
B) Respect your elders. Smashed!
C) Basic norms of hospitality. Destroyed!

It says everything about Nigeria that nobody honours those that tried to stop that madness or helped the targets escaped. In contrast, anytime one of the surviving putschists emerges to dangle their blood money, we go weak at the knees and kiss their ring.

Every day, we are told to pray for Nigeria. Every other year, we organise deliverance prayers for Nigeria. Once in a while, a Nigerian ascends the podium and wonders if we are cursed. And yet, nobody wants to mention why the blood of our family cries from the ground.

Lt Col Ojukwu had righteousness and justice on his side when he called for all Igbos to return and huddle under the wings of their homeland. At that moment, if Igbos had taken all we owned and left Nigeria, nobody could complain.

The problem started at Aburi.

All I have are opinions. But, it strikes me as ridiculous that after the mass pogroms of Igbos, the Igbo representatives at Aburi neither demanded restitution nor that the participants be named and punished.

Instead, they were arguing over how to split military powers. That implicitly legitimated the July coup. Would the Jews have been negotiating 'confederation' with Hitler after the Holocaust?

Aburi threw away the moral foundations of separatism.

All the military regimes were and are illegal.

Without punishing the participants in the pogrom, the Nigerian government forfeited its claims to allegiance from the Igbo.
The opening salvo of the civil war compounded that grave error.

Lt Col Ojukwu did not move to reestablish civilian authority.

Was the war to maintain another dictatorship?

Claiming the entire Eastern region made accusations that everything was about Igbo domination legitimate.

At a strategic level, I understand. Oil is valuable. But logically, you cannot claim to be an imprisoned minority and then immediately imprison other minorities. Imagine if he had granted the Niger Delta its independence in exchange for an alliance.

Once the war started, the overriding strategy should have been protecting Igbo land. I dislike armchair generalling, but the fact that the first move on the Biafran side was invading Lagos ruined the point of everything. I am willing to bet that had the Biafran war effort not been a dictatorship, wiser heads would have prevailed to point out the ridiculousness of invading the south.

Many Igbos still lived there. An invasion would immediately bring back the spectre of 'Igbo domination' and make them targets.

If the war was about vengeance, then the killings happened in the north. Striking for the capital made the war effort grubby. Just two juntas fighting over oil wells.

I did not experience the war, and my family was not one of those in the camps. Other than my grandmother miscarrying during a bombing run, the general flight and my mother and her siblings losing years of schooling, we didn't suffer much. Or at least, the suffering was not visible by the time I came along. Like many Igbo, I was born in the North. Honestly, the war doesn't phase me. I am disappointed that it happened and that agitators continue to pull the scab for petty reasons.

It was egregious that some governments encouraged the expropriation of abandoned properties. But what is done is done. There is only what can be fixed. Since then, has there been a legislative push to strengthen property rights? Not even in the Igbo states where the power to make that change is vested in state authorities.

In fact, my village is still bitter that Sen. Jim Nwobodo, a Second Republic Governor, seized our lands and built the premises of a failed newspaper press on it. But it gets funnier.

As an 'elder-statesman', he has now come out to condemn his children for doing what he taught them.

'Everybody' remembers what was stolen from 'us' because it is easier than trying to stop us from stealing from each other. Is there any Igbo person that does not know of land grabs by powerful Igbos to build out their property portfolios?

The problem then and now is weak land rights. Solving it is a question of laws. We choose not to do it.

Yes, Nigeria is terrible. Nigerians like it that way, and Biafrans have done nothing to distinguish themselves from we hapless Nigerians.

If you're going to agitate, then fight for the right thing and not the tyranny of demagogues.

But, hey, bored foreigners love their causes. Who knows who in 'the world' you might get to come save you.

Related Links

What is the chance that the Eastern States of Nigeria (Biafra) will survive, if they break away from Nigeria?

What makes up BIAFRA? Can Biafra become a separate entity from Nigeria?
Why can't Biafra be allowed to become an independent state?
How likely is it for Igbos to secede from Nigeria and recreate Biafra?

If Biafra succeeded in seceding from Nigeria in 1967, which country would have been richer, more influential and the more dominant power?

How can a country like Nigeria be split (divided) without bloodshed?
What will happen if Biafra breaks away from Nigeria?
What is the real issue with the Biafra struggle in Nigeria?
What is the best solution against the agitation for Biafra in Nigeria?
What do you think of Biafra separating from Nigeria? Will it result in chaos?
Why is the British government against Biafra secession from Nigeria?
NIGERIA: How MARGINALIZED are the IGBOS?
Why is it that Britain don't support Biafra to actualize its self rule from Nigeria?

Whatever became of Nigeria's Biafra secession movement?

In Nigeria, a group of people predominantly from the eastern part are demanding for self determination under a country to be known as Biafra, can this demand for independence be achieved without war?

Why was the Nigerian diplomat manhandled in Indonesia?

Viral Diplomat Nigeria Teriak 'I Can't Breathe'

https://news.detik.com/berita/d-5677577/viral-diplomat-nigeria-teriak-i-cant-breathe-imigrasi-ri-ungkap-faktanya.

Narpati Wisjnu Ari Pradana Born in Indonesia, Speak formal Indonesia and rarely use any slang. Updated Aug 12

Based on Indonesian immigration answer to Indonesian pers, the diplomat resisted check. Indonesian immigration had report of foreigner who have been overstayed in Jakarta. When they checked the location, the diplomat resisted the officer.

The Indonesian answer in Indonesian language:

However, I saw the video and it seemed the officer had overreacted even if their story was correct. There is no reason for pushing the head.

In Javanese culture and other Indonesian cultures, head is sacred. You should not touch your opponent head unless you want to dishonor him.

The officers have been in upper hand. They have restrained the diplomat, secured his hand from resisting, secured his body. There is no reason for handling the head.

Yes, people of Nigeria. You have right to demand apology from Indonesian government. No matter the case was, it didn't justify the officer's act of touching your diplomat head.

Update in August 12, 2021

Indonesian government had apologized to Nigerian government through the Indonesian Ambassador in Nigeria,

Viral Diplomat Nigeria Teriak 'I Can't Breathe', Imigrasi RI Ungkap Faktanya

Baca artikel detiknews, "Viral Diplomat Nigeria Teriak 'I Can't Breathe', Imigrasi RI Ungkap Faktanya"
selengkapnya https://news.detik.com/berita/d-5677577/viral-diplomat-nigeria-teriak-i-cant-breathe-imigrasi-ri-ungkap-faktanya.

Download Apps Detikcom Sekarang https://apps.detik.com/detik/

Jakarta - Sebuah potongan video dengan narasi pria Nigeria dianiaya sejumlah orang Indonesia viral di media sosial. Namun ternyata, faktanya tak seperti digambarkan narasi yang mengiringi potongan video itu. Dalam video viral, tampak seorang pria berkulit gelap sedang dipegangi sejumlah orang yang berkomunikasi menggunakan bahasa Indonesia. Tangan dan kepala pria itu dipegangi tiga orang.

Baca artikel detiknews, "Viral Diplomat Nigeria Teriak 'I Can't Breathe', Imigrasi RI Ungkap Faktanya"

selengkapnya https://news.detik.com/berita/d-5677577/viral-diplomat-nigeria-teriak-i-cant-breathe-imigrasi-ri-ungkap-faktanya.

Download Apps Detikcom Sekarang https://apps.detik.com/detik/

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Chioma Onyia 5y

20 THINGS YOU DO NOT KNOW ABOUT NIGERIA. You may already know that Nigeria is the largest black nation in the world and the most populous nation in Africa.

You may already know that Nigeria has great dependency on crude oil, plus all the other opinions of David Cameron. Here are 20 unpopular facts about Nigeria.

1. Are you aware that all over the world Nigerians are setting the pace and becoming the standard by which others measure themselves? Do you know??

2. In the US, Nigerians are the most educated immigrant community. Type it into Google and you'll see it. Not one of the most educated, the most educated.

3. 60% of Nigerians in the US have college degrees. This is far above the American national average of 30%.

4. Nigerians in US are one of the highest earners, typically earning 25% more than the median US income of $53k.

5. In Ivy League schools in Europe and America, Nigerians routinely outperform their peers from other nations.

6. A Nigerian family, The Imafidon family, have officially been named the smartest family in the UK.

7. The designer of the famous car, Chevrolet Volt, Jelani Aliyu, is a super talented Nigerian from Sokoto State.

8. The World's fastest supercomputer was designed by a world renowned inventor and scientist, Philip Emeagwali, a full-blown Nigerian whose patency was awarded in 2015. This means Nigeria has the patency to the world's fastest computer: a Black Nigerian.

9. The wealthiest Black man and woman on earth are Nigerians, Aliko Dangote and Mrs. Folorunsho Alakija. Both have no trace of criminal record of any kind.

10. South Africa couldn't have ended apartheid & achieved Black rule if not for the leadership role Nigeria played.

11. Of the 3 South African Presidents who ruled after apartheid, two of them once lived in Nigeria under asylum. Both Nelson Mandela (60s) and Thabo Mbeki (70s) lived in Nigeria before becoming President of South Africa. We gave financial support, human support, boycotted an Olympics and our politicians, musicians and activists campaigned relentlessly.

12. Nigeria spent over $3 Billion and lost hundreds of soldiers to end the wars in both Liberia and Sierra Leone which the world ignored because they have no oil.

13. When there was a coup in São Tomé and Príncipe in 2003, Nigeria restored the elected President back to power.

14. Before there were street lights in European cities, ancient Benin kingdom had street lights fueled by palm oil.

15. 500 years ago, Benin casted metal alloys to create magnificent art including the world famous Queen Ida Mask.

16. Amina was a warrior queen who ruled Zaria Emirate in Kaduna state, Northwestern Nigeria 400 years ago in 1610. Google and see what she means to Africa.

17. We gave monetary gifts to Ireland during our oil boom and built a statue for France free of charge. We are not poor blacks. Nigeria is rich and don't be lied to.

18. The first television station in Africa was NTA Ibadan (1960) long before Ireland has their RTE station.

Wherever you look in this great country, Nigeria, heroes abound both now and in our recent and ancient past.

If all you do is listen to mainstream Western media, you'll not get the full picture of your Nigerian heritage.

Do not listen to any leader who says Nigerians are criminals, no matter who he is, or his height and position.

We're not a nation of scammers, drugs & corruption, but a people with a verifiable track record of greatness.

Here is what CNN, BBC, Aljezeera and western media will not tell you about Nigerians:

19. On the 7th May, 2016 at Howard University in Washington D.C history was made. Out of 96 graduating Doctor of Pharmacy candidates, 43 of them were Nigerians and out of 27 awards given, 16 went to Nigerians.

They will only tell you how Nigerians are scammers and cheats, how Nigerians are into drugs overseas et al.

If you don't blow your trumpet, no one will blow it for you. VIVA NAIJA!!!

20. There are over 180,000,000 Nigerians world over and only less than 250,000 of this figure have traceable criminal records. This is about 0.14% of our entire national population in the last 20 years: nothing close to 1%. Shame on global media!

Listen GREAT Nigerian; DON'T let anybody woo you into believing that you are a criminal just because you are a Nigerian. Nigerians are NOT criminals. You are NOT a criminal. You are topnotch; second to none around the world. Be proud of Nigeria wherever you go. Take out your Passport with pride. Be proud of our GREEN HERITAGE. Be enthusiastic of our FUTURE GREATNESS #Celebrate Your Nigerianness!

NIGERIA: GREAT NATION, GOOD PEOPLE!!!!

How do Nigerian names work?

Stephen Boyo Educator 1y

They're usually based on ethno-cultural naming systems. There are three ethno-cultural groups in Nigeria,.the largest being speakers of Volta-Niger languages which include Yoruba, Igbo, Edo, Itsekiri, Urhobo-Isoko, Igala, Idoma, Ebirra, Fọn, Nupe, Gwari and for convenience

Ijaw. Names among these people often take on a meaning and reflect a blessing or familial circumstances, or the name of a grandparent or parent. In Yorubaland Twins are generally considered a blessing and are often called Taiwo or T'aiye (meaning first to arrive) and Kehinde (meaning last to arrive). The children born after the twins might be called Ìdòwú and Alábá. Other Volta-Niger erhncities did not however favour twins who were seen as a bad omen and sometimes killed until the British missionaries halted the practice. Nevertheless it is a known fact that most twins are born in Nigeria.

In the heavily Catholic regions of South Eastern Nigeria many Igbos have Greco-Roman first names such as Paulinus, Josephus, Romanus etc or they'll have English Catholic names such as Angela, Theresa, Paula etc. Generally Yoruba take African names and until independence many Delta ethnic groups favoured Anglo-Saxon names. After Nigeria's independence many reverted to giving African first names and biblical middle names to their Children.

The other Ethno-Cultural group are the Afro Asiatic Hausa and West Atlantic speaking Fulani and the Nilotic Kanuri peoples of North East

Nigeria. They are muslims and will often have Islamsh iic first names followed by the name of a person's place of birth as surname. This isn't always the case but is common practice among the Hausa. Christian Hausa might take a biblical name.

The third ethno-cultural group are the Bantu and Semi Bantu ethnic groups including the Tiv, Jukun, peoples of Adamawa and Mambila and the Effik-Ibibios and Ekois of South easter Nigeria. Most these groups follow similar naming patterns as the Volta-Niger ethnicities as they are a related but separate ethno-cultural group.

Related Links

Why do Nigerians have such long names?

In Nigeria, what are the most common first names - male and female - for different groups? (Hausa, Yuroba, Igbo, Fulani, etc)

When did Nigerians begin using surnames, and how did people receive them?
Are Nigerians racist?

Some Nigerian names sound like Japanese names. Is there a shared (linguistic) history of some sort?

Are any Nigerians white?
Are Nigerians smart?
Do Nigerians dislike whites?
What do you love about Nigerians?
Why do most Nigerians put their surname before their first name?
What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?
Why do Nigerian names start with Ola?
What do whites think of Nigeria and Nigerians?
Why do Nigerian names start with Oluwa?
What percentage of black people are Nigerians?

CPJ welcomes Nigerian journalist Luka Binniyat's release on bail, calls for end to prosecution

Authorities in Nigeria's Kaduna state recently released journalist Luka Binniyat on bail. (Eli Dangana)

Abuj

a, February 4, 2022 — In response to the release on bail Thursday of Luka Binniyat, a Nigerian freelance reporter for the U.S.-based news outlet The Epoch Times, the Committee to Protect Journalists issued the following statement calling for the charges against him to be dropped:

“While Nigerian journalist Luka Binniyat’s release on bail is a welcome development, he never should have been detained in the first place, and the charges against him should be dropped without delay,” said Angela Quintal, CPJ’s Africa program coordinator, in New York. “His ongoing prosecution on cybercrime charges and the stringent requirements for his bail are stark examples of how journalism continues to be criminalized in Nigeria.”

Authorities detained Binniyat on November 4, 2021, as CPJ documented at the time. He is facing charges under Nigeria’s Cybercrimes Act for allegedly distributing false information.

For his bail, Binniyat was required to provide a bond of 1 million naira (US$2,402) and two sureties by people who live in and own land in Kaduna state, which were approved by the prosecutor’s office, according to the journalist and his lawyer, Ehizogie Imadojemu, both of whom spoke to CPJ via messaging app and in phone interviews.

If convicted, Binniyat could face up to three years in prison and a fine of 7 million naira (US$17,049), Imadojemu said.

Which is more developed in South Africa and Nigeria?

Adeife Obalouwa , lives in Arepo, Ogun State (2013-present) Answered Sep 3, 2020

Originally Answered: Which country is richer, Nigeria or South Africa?
While south africa is more advanced when it comes to infrastructure , Nigeria is richer. This is because it has the biggest population in africa and it is the main secret to its economic progress. South africa only has 50 million people while nigeria is 195.9 million people . As such south africa cannot compete with nigeria economically. This could also explain their hate for Nigerians.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria becoming more prosperous than South Africa?

Why is South Africa very different and highly developed compared to other nations in Africa?

Can Nigeria be developed like South Africa?
What is the difference between Nigeria and South Africa?
Is South Africa more developed than Nigeria because there are a lot of white people?
Why is South Africa the most developed and the most advanced country in Africa?

Can Nigeria defeat South Africa in a military war?
Why isn't Nigeria as developed as South Africa?
Is South Africa really dangerous?
What does Nigeria need to do to develop?

Why does South Africa seem more developed than Nigeria, in spite of Nigeria's economy being substantially larger?

Why is South Africa more economically successful than other African countries?
Which African country is likely to become the first developed country on the continent?
Is South Africa the most developed country in Africa?
Is Nigeria the most developed country in West Africa?

News Nigeria

PRESIDENT BUHARI ARRIVES ADDIS ABABA FOR THE 35TH ORDINARY SESSION OF THE ASSEMBLY OF AU HEADS OF STATE AND GOVERNMENT. FEB 3RD 2022

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 19h

AA. President Muhammadu Buhari received by Ethiopian Minister of Education, Prof Berhanu Nega on arrival for the 35th Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the Africa Union Heads of State and Government in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. PHOTO; SUNDAY AGHAEZE. FEBRUARY 3RD 2022

Why did the British colonial master join the southern and northern protectorate to become one country called "Nigeria"?

Answered by Topscore 19h

The ill-conceived connubial resolution that brought Southern Nigeria and Northern Nigeria together in 1914 is up till today being debated to be the basis of the problems we are facing as a Nation.

The union which ought to serve as a unifying factor turned out to create an endless animosity between the two protectorates because none of them was prepared for it.

In retrospect, Southern Nigeria and Northern Nigeria were coalesced together in 1914 to form a single colony of Nigeria. The unification was consummated purely for economic reasons rather than political. It was a union marshaled and carried out without any form of consultation between the South and the North.

History has it that, Northern Nigeria Protectorate had a budget deficit; and the colonial administration sought to use the budget surpluses in Southern Nigeria to offset the deficit of the Northern Nigeria.

The Governor-General Frederick Lugard who took office in 1914 was responsible for overseeing the unification. He was said to have established several central institutions to anchor the evolving unified structure. A Central Secretariat was instituted in Lagos, which was the seat of government, and the Nigerian Council (later the Legislative Council), was founded to provide a forum for representatives drawn from the provinces. Certain services were integrated across the Northern and Southern Provinces because of their national significance-military, treasury, audit, posts and telegraphs, railways, survey, medical services, judicial and legal departments-were brought under the control of the Central Secretariat in Lagos.

Despite the fact that the unification process developed embryonic problems and was greatly undermined by the persistence of different regional perspectives on governance between the Northern and Southern Provinces; the colonial masters never deemed it fit to put up ameliorative process that could have made the forced marriage work.

While Southern colonial administrators welcomed amalgamation as an opportunity for imperial expansion, their counterparts in the Northern Province believed that it was injurious to the interests of the areas they administered because of their relative backwardness and that it was their duty to resist the advance of southern influences and culture into the north.

Southerners, on the other hand, were not eager to embrace the extension of legislation originally meant for the north to the south.

Unfortunately as a nation, we have not found unity in diversity as we tend to deceive ourselves. The only thing that unites us as a nation today is corruption. After that, we go back to champion our causes as tribalists rather than nationalists we ought to be.

Related Links

What are some shocking cultures in your country?

Why are banks in the UAE refusing to open cooperate accounts for companies having Nigerians as partners?

What are the most bizarre things you have experienced in Lagos, Nigeria?

How can I set up and run a civil engineering construction company of international repute in Nigeria with only intellectual capital, experience, ability to deliver and integrity But no connection or fund?

How will the proposed biennial world cup be of benefit to Africa?

As an African child, what are the books I need to read to renew my mind from this poverty mentality that has distorted the mindset of many Africans? And what are the online jobs that any African youth can do in order to reduce the rate of poverty?

Is there a whole continent that banned all visitors and travelers from bringing dogs to the continent?

What was the name of the first aeroplane that crashed in Nigeria, and which year and location did it happen?

Is the 1999 constitution of Nigeria autochthonous?
Who's all time best player in west Africa?

Do women in USA want their husband to register their properties under their name? I recently discovered some mother's in Africa tell their daughters to make sure their husband registers all his properties under their name.

Why is India more populated than Africa and ten times less big in terms of area?
What channel on TV is the Africa Cup of Nations Final?
How is Africa the heart of the world with the highest rate of world problems?

Did any other precolonial Sub-Saharan African country have Electricity and Telegraph? (Ethiopia, Somalia, and Dahomey did.)

How do Nigerians feel about the act of flogging students in basic and intermediate Nigerian schools?

Olorunfemi Davis A surprised Nigerian 4y

I personally have a library of memories of this horrific act.
Case 1: A notable one happened in 1998 when I was excessively flogged for speaking my native Yoruba language (which they considered as vernacular) to my sister.

Note:

This happened in my hometown and not on a foreign land.
This happened in Elementary school. I was just a 4 yrs old kid.

Case 2: I also remember being flogged twelve hot lashes on the very first day at Primary School by the Head Master. I was just 6 years old.

Note:

I just paid the school fees after being newly admitted and only decided to take a look at the school.

I was in normal house cloths and not in uniforms which identify as their student.

I tried to explain but I was forced to shut my mouth because it'll only attract more strokes.
———————————————————————————————————-

Millions of Nigerians passed through worse over the past decades.

I utterly consider these acts as a form of child abuse.

Apart from schools, kids are also beaten like animals in various religious centers which being forced to assimilate recitations /verses of books. This is predominant in Muslim centers but also very common in children churches.

Yoruba says "ile ni a tin k'eso rode" Meaning what we learnt and do from the family is portrayed/replicated outside. Many adults now too can tell tales of excessive parental beatings. Some good parents flog their kids minimally with intentions to correct errors while some others brutally lash their kids to punish them for wrong-doings.

This latter kind of parents constitutes to those school or religious teachers that indulge in this act to kids from other families.

I feel bad because I know this insane act is being reported even in the Universities.

Motivation:

I experienced the 'No Yoruba speaking' treatment too in Secondary School and there was an heroic day. The Son of the Vice Principal came around to visit his Dad and got a chance to address the whole school during one of the assemblies. He had observed and noted a number of prevalent un-humane acts including flogging students in the school. Not even his father knew he was going to deliver a speech against those things. He finished the speech by saying, "I would never allow anyone to prevent me from speaking my mother tongue". The whole student cheered and the atmosphere was high. But It didn't last for long.

Apart from students being flogged for Vernacular Speaking, here is a list of other crimes accused of students:

1. Lateness to school.
2. Noise Making.
3. Failure in tests.
4. Absence in Assemblies and other meetings.
5. Dirty cloths / untidy nails.
6. Non-payment of dues/ fees.
7. Absence of Parent in Parent and Teachers Meeting (PTA).
8. Failure to execute allocated labor like sweeping, grass cutting, etc.
9. Failure to do assignments (homework)/ tests.
10. Failure to attend school without a medical report.

While some of these are valid, some doesn't deserve being punished for actually.

Here is a short list of brutal punishments and activities common in Secondary and Primary School level.

1. Kneeing on Cemented flour, Stones or hot tarmac.
2. Lying down on dirty sand.
3. Fetching water or moving heavy blocks over long distances.
4. Cutting grass spanning tens of square meters under the sun/rain (mostly without equipping with sharp tools).

5. Cutting trees.
6. Mixing and loading cement/stones for construction.
7. Farming in bush.
8. Digging Toilet Soakaways. I did this once at age 11 (not a punishment).
9. Washing vehicles of staffs.
10. Doing domestic work at staff houses. m

The parent has a great role to play in this. Only a few parents responds to their kid's complaints of physical abuse and brutality by teachers and even senior students by prosecuting/ arresting such people or suing such schools.

Lastly, an act that should also be eliminated in the Nigerian Schooling system is using students as laborers for building construction and grass /tree cutting.

This act is very common to Oyemekun Grammer School, Akure, Ondo State where students have to un-avoidably cut a wide area of land before results can be collected. Believe me there is enough grass for EVERY student.

You'll also see students forced to bring cutlass (males) and hoes (females) in some mixed sex schools to school which is even more prioritized than bringing essential books.

Students are also used like slaves in farming and also taken to teacher's house to do domestic works.

My Conclusion:

I feel bad about all of these. So many students are still being brutalized in schools and some carry marks which remark the excruciating moments.

Stop them if you are in position of power.

Related Links

As a Nigerian or African do you support the use of corporal punishment in schools?
What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?
Are Nigerians racist?
What do you love about Nigerians?
How are teachers to be blamed for indiscipline in Nigerian schools?
Is flogging allowed in Nigerian schools?
What's something that sucks about being Nigerian?
What do foreigners think about Nigerians?

What will Nigerian students think when they see a white person attend their school in their country?

Why are Nigerians fleeing Nigeria?
When is Nigerian school resuming?

Why do people mock names, especially those of black Americans, in the US?

It surprises me, especially when there's a prominent US politician named "Newt." Why is having the name "Diamond" or "Deja" considered weird but "Mitt" or "Tanner" is not?

Are Batak people the elite of Indonesia?
Why are Nigerians seen as fraudulent and dubious people?
What are some things Nigerians consider rude or offensive?

News Nigeria

HISTORY OF MAMMY MARKET* (MRS MAMMY OCHEFU)

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 7h

It was in 1959. Mammy Ode, a young girl from Jericho-Ugboju in the present Otukpo Local Government Area of Benue State, was married to Anthony Aboki Ochefu, a young Non-Commissioned military officer, who had just been posted to Enugu from Abeokuta.

They were quartered at the Army Barracks, Abakpa, Enugu. To beat idleness and perhaps earn some money to support her young family, Mrs. Mammy Ochefu established a soft drinks business. She prepared gruel, which is called umu or enyi in Idoma, or kunu in Hausa, for sale to soldiers. She soon became popular with her stuff as soldiers trooped to her house to buy enyi. Some of her best customers were officers, who always sent their batmen to buy some of the gruel for them, Monday through Friday.

Somehow, one of the Non-Commissioned Officers, the RSM, did not flow with the enthusiasm, which Mammy's gruel generated among other military men in the barracks. He complained that the stuff was attracting flies into the barracks and ordered Mrs. Mammy Ochefu to stop its production and sale.

Though surprised and disappointed at the order of the RSM, she stopped the production and sale of enyi. Her husband, not being an officer at the time, could not challenge the order of the RSM.

For weeks, Mrs. Mammy Ochefu agonized over the fate of her business, just as officers and men of the Nigerian Army who enjoyed her enyi because of its freshness and nutritional value lamented the situation.

From several quarters, pressure mounted on the RSM for a reversal of the order. After a while, he succumbed to the pressures and directed that a section of the barracks be reserved for Mrs. Mammy Ochefu to produce and sell her enyi. Her joy knew no bounds.

Few days after, a section of the barracks was given to her. She built a small shop and soon, her business began to boom. Most of her customers booked for their shares in advance. Before noon, she would have finished selling the available enyi for the day.

Soon, other women in the barracks tapped into her fortune and started selling other items. It was not long before that portion of the barracks became known as Mammy Market. It also became a policy to establish markets inside or near military barracks in the country, initially for the exclusive use of officers and men.

Today, no visit to Abuja, the Federal Capital City, is complete without a taste of fresh fish in one of the Mammy Markets, especially the one attached to Abacha Barracks. Similar markets attached to paramilitary barracks are also called Mammy Markets.

After the coup that overthrew General Yakubu Gowon, Anthony Aboki Ochefu, then a Colonel, was posted to East Central State as Military Governor.

So Mrs. Mammy Ochefu and her husband returned to Enugu as the First Family; she sometimes visited the site where Mammy Market started about sixteen years earlier It must be stressed too that in retirement, Colonel Anthony Aboki Ochefu and his wife incorporated a company, Mammy Markets, which was into haulage and trading. Mrs. Mammy Ochefu is alive and lives at Otukpo as one of the prized legends of our time."

News Nigeria

Exterior of the Oldest Christian Church in Northern Nigeria, St. Bartholomew's Church in Wusasa

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 4m

Wusasa is a town just outside the major city of Zaria . Activities of the colonial missionaries in the ancient city of Zaria forced the royal dynasty of Zaria to request them to move outside the city's ancient walls

This church was established by the C.M.S. (Church Missionary Society) or Anglicans, and built in 1929 with local building materials and in the traditional Hausa architecture, which is still standing in good shape

Former Military Head of State, General Yakubu Gowon's father was once a catechist in the church.

News Nigeria

Jacob Odulate, The Man Who Invented Alabukun Powder Over 100 Years Ago

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 2h

Alabukun, is one of the oldest drugs in Nigeria and even is still very relevant and popular today. However, not many know Jacob Odulate aka Blessed Jacob, a Nigerian pharmacist, inventor, and entrepreneur and the brain behind the brand that has remained relevant selling in all parts of Nigeria, Benin Republic, Cameroon, Ghana, and some parts of Europe.

1. Jacob Sogboyega Odulate aka Blessed Jacob was born into a polygamous family in 1884.

2. He was originally from Ikorodu in Lagos State but later moved to the neighboring Ogun State.

3. At age 14, he trekked for three months from Ikorodu before reaching Abeokuta to establish himself.

4. Blessed Jacob managed to create a brand from what served as his consulting room and workshop in Abeokuta. His modest headquarters was at the Sapon Area, not far from where he later built his famous three-story building in Ijemo Agbadu.

5. In 1918, he invented the legendary Alabukun powder which is now a hit in the world's most populous nation and other West African nations.

6. He sent his children to study at some of the best universities in Durham, Newcastle, United States of America, and London. e.g Mrs. Folake Odulate (later to become Chief. Mrs. Folake Solanke) who is the first female lawyer in Nigeria to wear the silk and she also became the first female Senior Advocate of Nigeria (SAN). In 1966, she established the first law firm by a Nigerian female at Ibadan, Oyo State, and named it Alabukun Chambers in honor of her great father.

7. Apart from making the drugs, the energetic Blessed Jacob also produced other brands like Alabukun mentholine, other preparations, and an annual journal called Alabukun Almanac which was widely distributed in Abeokuta and eventually all over Nigeria between the 1920s and 1950s.

8. He died in 1962 at age 78.

News Nigeria

I have spoken with President Umaro Sissoco Embalo of Guinea Bissau: -PRESIDENT BUHARI

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 1h

"I was very pleased to hear from him that the situation has been brought under control and that all is well; normalcy has been fully restored in the country.

I congratulated him on surviving the coup attempt, and commended the country's loyal troops for the show of patriotism which led to their spectacular victory over disloyal military elements.

The attempt to subvert the established constitutional order in Guinea Bissau is totally condemnable. Guinea-Bissauans and the Embalo administration will comtinue to enjoy the goodwill and support of the government and people of Nigeria.

I look forward to working with President Embalo to strengthen the existing bilateral ties between our sisterly nations, and the defence and promotion of democracy and its values throughout the sub-region, and the entire continent."

Are Nigerians the strongest people in Africa?

Ayodele Pearce Upwork FreeLancer (2021–present)1y

Nigerians are great people and it's greatness as a nation in Africa is unparalleled. However, I wouldnt use the term "strongest people" to describe nigerians because I believe that if you are African then you are the 'strongest' and you live in Africa then you are the 'strongest'.
I mean an average African regardless of race have to put up with racism, social injustice and back in their country they face corruption, high levels of social inequalities and so on.

Nigerians are strong but do not deserve to be called strongest, I would rather say that every african is the 'strongest'.

P.S- this is not downplay the gait of people of other races, this is just a laser focus on the African people.

Related Links

Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
Why do Nigerians find it easy to talk bad about Nigerians and other Nigerians?
What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?
Why don't Nigerians fix Nigeria instead of flocking to other countries?
What percentage of black people are Nigerians?

Why is it racist to say America is a white country but not racist to say Africa is a black country? (hence the term African American)

Why do African countries like Ghana, Cameroon, and South Africa hate Nigeria so much?
What is the difference between blacks and Africans? I am a Nigerian. Does that make me a black?

Modernist.com : Are Nigerians really bad people?
Are Nigerians racist?
How is life like for Nigerians living in South Africa?
Why are Nigerians hated so much around the world?
Do Nigerians hate South Africans?
How are relatively Westernized Nigerians treated in Nigeria?

Why do so many white South Africans have so much respect for Desmond Tutu? Why do most seem to dislike Mandela, and how are they different?

News Nigeria

Speech by Dr. Akinwumi A. Adesina, President, African Development Bank Group. Mobilizing Financing for Africa's Accelerated Economic Recovery, Development and Integration

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 12h

at the Thirty-Fifth Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the African Union Addis Ababa, 5-6 February 2022

♣Your Excellency Macky Sall, President of the Republic of Senegal and Chairperson of the African Union

♣Your Excellency Abiy Ahmed, Prime Minister of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia, Our Gracious Host

♣Your Excellencies Heads of State and Government

♣Your Excellency Moussa Faki Mahamat, Chairperson of the Africa Union Commission

♣Your Excellency Amina Mohammed, Deputy Secretary General of the United Nations, Representing the Secretary General of the United Nations

Your Excellency Monique Nsanzabaganwa, Deputy Chairperson of the African Union Commission

♣Honorable Ministers

♣Honourable Commissioners of the African Union Commission

♣The Executive Secretary of the UN Economic Commission for Africa

♣The Secretary General, the African Continental Free Trade Area Secretariat

♣Heads of African Union Organs and Institutions

♣Chief Executives and Heads of Regional Economic Communities

♣Permanent Representatives to the African Union

♣Members of the Diplomatic Corps

♣Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen

I deeply appreciate this honour and opportunity offered me by the Chairperson of the African Union Commission, the Deputy Chairperson, Commissioners, and the Permanent Representatives Committee.

I wish to congratulate His Excellency, President Macky Sall upon his election as the Chairperson of the African Union. Your Excellency, President Macky Sall, you have taken on the baton from His Excellency, President Felix Antoine Tshisekedi, with whom we have had the distinguished pleasure of working closely during his tenure as Chairperson.

Thank you, President Tshisekedi, for your remarkable leadership and outstanding service at the helm of our Union.

Your Excellencies, I will be speaking to you today on “Mobilizing Financing for Africa’s Accelerated Economic Recovery, Development and Integration”.

This is a very important and timely discussion, given that the African Development Bank has been given the mandate by a decision of the African Union to lead the mobilization of resources for Africa, to achieve Agenda 2063.

As this is the first time that I have had the opportunity to address you since my re-election, Your Excellencies, I wish to express to you, individually and collectively, my deep appreciation for your strong and unanimous support, and those of your Ministers of Finance and Foreign Affairs, for my re-election as President of the African Development Bank in August 2020. I thank H.E. President Muhammadu Buhari, my President, especially, for his trust, confidence, and unflinching support during this assignment which he sent me on to accomplish for Africa. I also wish to thank all our former heads of state for their steadfast support.

As always, I will continue to serve our beloved continent, and work with you to relentlessly accelerate the achievement of Agenda 2063: the Africa we want.

Your Excellencies, meeting today, physically, is itself an important milestone; a welcome relief following two years of the COVID-19 pandemic that has upended the world in an unprecedented manner.

It has been a global economic cyclone. Africa witnessed a decline in GDP growth of 2.1% in 2020, its lowest in twenty years. Africa's GDP fell by $165 billion. Over 30 million jobs were lost and over 26 million people fell into extreme poverty.

I wish to commend the leadership efforts of the African Union, and our Heads of State and Government, for the critical roles you have played in dealing with the pandemic and the socio-economic challenges in its wake. Today, thanks to these efforts 11% of the population has been fully vaccinated, and another 16% has been partially vaccinated.

However, while developed countries have moved to booster shots, Africa is still struggling with basic shots.

Your Excellencies, we must learn from this experience. Africa can no longer outsource the security of the lives of its 1.4 billion people to the benevolence of others.

We must secure African lives!

It is time your Excellencies, to build Africa's healthcare defense system.

This must be based on three strategic priorities.

First, building Africa's quality healthcare infrastructure.

Second, building Africa's pharmaceutical industry and

Third, building Africa's vaccine manufacturing capacity.

Africa needs $600 million to $1.3 billion to meet its goal of attaining 60% vaccine production by 2040. Investing in health is investing in national security.

The African Development Bank plans to invest $3 billion to support pharmaceutical and vaccines manufacturing capacity for Africa.

To address the socio-economic impacts of the pandemic and support economic recovery, Africa will need some $484 billion over the next 3 years. To eliminate extreme poverty by 2030, the continent will need $414 - $784 billion per year. Africa will need $7-$15 billion a year to deal with climate change. The continent will also need between $68 - $108 billion per year to fix the infrastructure financing gap.

Your Excellencies, we must drastically mobilize a lot more resources!

The African Development Bank, as the premier development financing institution in Africa, has been mobilizing resources to meet this challenge. Thanks to your support, the general capital of the Bank was increased in 2019 by 125%, rising from $93 billion to $208 billion, the highest since its establishment in 1964.

These resources have allowed the African Development Bank to scale up support to African economies to tackle the pandemic. The Board of Directors of the Bank approved a Crisis Response Facility of up to $10 Billion. The Bank also launched a $3 Billion Fight COVID-19 Social Bond on the international capital markets, which was the largest ever US-dollar denominated social bond in world history. The Bank provided $ 27 million as grants to the African Centers for Disease Control.

Your Excellencies, over the past six years, the African Development Bank has provided about $39 billion in financing to the continent in support of its High5 priorities to: light up and power Africa; feed Africa; integrate Africa; industrialize Africa; and improve the quality of life of the people of Africa.

These High5s are the accelerators for achieving Agenda 2063.

An assessment of these High5s by the United Nations Development Program indicated that the High5s would lead to the achievement of 90% of the Agenda 2063 goals and 90% of the Sustainable Development Goals targets.

Your Excellencies, so much has been achieved on the High5s. In the past five years, the work of the African Development Bank Group has impacted the lives of 335 million people – fast tracking the move towards achieving the Agenda 2063 goals. Close to 21 million people have gained access to electricity. Nearly 76 million people have benefitted from agricultural technologies for food security. More than 12 million people have gained access to finance through private sector investee companies. Over 69 million people have been provided with improved transport. And 50 million people have gained access to improved water and sanitation.

Your Excellencies, Feeding Africa remains a top priority. Our Technologies for African Agricultural Transformation which we call TAAT, has provided drought tolerant technologies for 12 million farmers across Africa. The Bank is supporting the creation of special agro-industrial processing zones in 18 countries to help drive the transformation of agriculture as a major source of wealth and jobs.

Your Excellencies, the African Development Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and the African Union Commission launched the Facility for African Food Security and Nutrition at the UN Food Systems Summit. Now dubbed Mission 1 for 200, this financing facility will help to mobilize $1 billion, provide climate resilient and nutrition-rich technologies for 40 million farmers, produce 100 million metric tons of food, and feed 200 million people. This will help to reduce food insecurity in Africa by 80%.

This is particularly crucial in 2022, the Year of Nutrition in Africa.

Your Excellencies, the Bank is investing heavily in renewable energy. This includes the world's largest concentrated solar power system in Morocco and the Lake Turkana energy project, the largest windfarm in Africa. Together with Africa50, we have co-financed the 3,000 MW Ben Ban solar power project in Egypt. The Bank is also implementing a $20 billion Desert-to-Power initiative to develop 10,000 MW of solar power for the Sahelian zone of Africa, in order to provide electricity for 250 million people. This will become the largest solar zone in the world.

Your Excellencies, Africa faces a huge challenge with energy transition, and with climate change. The Bank is working to establish an African Just Energy Transition Facility that will support transition from coal and heavy fuel oil into clean energy. However, Africa will need an energy mix that includes natural gas, to ensure stability of its energy systems, power industries, and ensure competitiveness.

Your Excellencies, we must go beyond "a just energy transition" to "a just energy system."

Africa cannot be poor in an environmentally sustainable manner.

To support Africa's adaption to climate change, the African Development Bank and the Global Centre for Adaptation have launched the African Adaptation Acceleration Program (AAA-P) with the goal of mobilizing $25 billion for climate adaptation for Africa.

We must revive the Lake Chad Basin!

We must save the Sahel from desertification!

We must complete the Great Green Wall!

The African Development Bank has committed $6.5 billion towards the Great Green Wall. I would like to thank UN secretary General, Antonio Guterres, and my dear sister, Amina Mohammed, Deputy UN Secretary General, for their exceptional support for this initiative.

As we move from COP26 in Glasgow to COP27 in Sharm El Sheikh, to be hosted by President El Sisi, developed countries need to meet their $100 billion commitment on climate finance to support developing countries. This will help Africa.

Promises made must be promises kept.

The issuance of Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) of $650 billion by the International Monetary Fund has helped substantially, but Africa only received $33 billion worth of SDRs. African Heads of State at the Paris Summit on African Economies, with the strong support of President Emmanuel Macron, called for a re-allocation of $100 billion to Africa. You also asked that the re-allocated SDRs pass through the African Development Bank, as a prescribed holder of SDRs.

Your Excellencies, I will appreciate your continued strong support for this. Passing the re-allocated SDRs for Africa through the African Development Bank will serve Africa very well.

First, as a AAA-rated financial institution, the African Development Bank will be able to leverage the SDRs by 3-4 times. For example, a $50 billion re-allocation through the African Development Bank will be leveraged to deliver $200 billion to African economies.

Second, the African Development Bank will help to recapitalize other African financial institutions, many of which the Bank helped to establish, including the Afreximbank Bank, West Africa Development Bank, East Africa Development Bank, Central Africa Development Bank, the Africa Guarantee Fund, Africa-Reinsurance Company, Shelter Afrique, Trade and Development Bank, Africa50, as well as the Development Bank of Southern Africa.

I wish to also use this platform to advocate for additional shareholder funding for these institutions to play their mandated roles.

Your Excellencies, to protect Africa from future economic shocks, it is now critical to establish an African Financial Stability Mechanism. Africa is the only region of the world that has no liquidity buffers to protect the continent against shocks. Europe has … Asia has … Latin America has … The Middle East has. These regions had more protection from the economic effects of the pandemic.

Africa did not.

This has led to widespread regional spill-over contagion effects, and instability.

African economies must be protected. The African Financial Stability Mechanism will protect African economies.

Your Excellencies, we need more resources to finance Africa's low-income countries, especially those facing fragility. The African Development Fund, the concessional institution of the African Development Bank Group, has helped to support these countries with $8.5 billion in the past five years.

The African Development Fund has delivered impressive results.

The Fund financed the landmark Senegambia bridge.

It financed the Rosso bridge between Mauritania and Senegal.

It financed Corridor 13 road between Central African Republic and the Republic of Congo.

It financed the road network rehabilitation project for Comoros.

It financed the Revenue Authority project for Togo.

It financed the Bas Mangoky rice irrigation project for Madagascar.

The Fund is also financing the Kandadji multipurpose dam project for Niger.

However, more resources are needed to meet the rising needs of low-income countries. I wish to request the strong support of Your Excellencies, African Heads of State and Government, and of the African Union Commission, for the 16th Replenishment of the African Development Fund later this year.

Your Excellencies, with its $25 billion in equity, the African Development Fund can leverage up to $33 billion of additional financing for low-income countries. To achieve this, we need your support to change the article in the charter of the African Development Fund that does not allow it to go to market to leverage resources. This is top priority.

We are also leveraging private investments into Africa, in innovative ways.

Your Excellencies, the Africa Investment Forum, established by the African Development Bank and its partners, has helped to secure investment interests worth more than $78 billion. This spectacular level of interest includes a $24 billion transaction for the liquefied natural gas project in Mozambique. We are proud that that this project will make Mozambique the third-largest producer of liquified natural gas in the world.

The project experienced challenges from insecurity, but thanks to your collective leadership, all is now back on track.

Your Excellencies, we must now link security, investment, growth, and development closely together. To enhance the security of Africa, the African Development Bank is currently developing Security Indexed Investment Bonds. Proceeds from these bonds, when developed, will support countries and regional economic communities to do four things. First, to upgrade security architecture. Second, to repair damaged infrastructure in conflict-affected zones. Third, to rebuild social infrastructure. And fourth, to protect zones with strategic investments.

Your Excellencies, we must build a better future for our youth. It is time to create youth-based wealth all across Africa. To boost financial support for the businesses of our youth, the African Development Bank Group is exploring with countries the establishment of Youth Entrepreneurship Investment Banks. They will be first rate financial institutions run by the youth for the youth.

Your Excellencies, to unleash the business potential of women, the Bank's Affirmative Finance Action for Women in Africa (AFAWA) is mobilizing $5 billion for women businesses.

AFAWA is now working at scale. Over $425 million was disbursed in 2021 to banks for lending to women businesses. This year, we will disburse $500 million for women businesses.

Our vision is clear: When women win, Africa wins!

Your Excellencies, the African Continental Free Trade Area offers the continent incredible opportunities to accelerate Africa's development. To achieve this goal, the African Development Bank has invested massively in infrastructure, from roads, transport corridors, airports, seaports, railways, and digital infrastructure. Over the past 10 years, we have invested over $40 billion in infrastructure. We are connecting nations, connecting businesses, connecting people.

Your Excellencies, with Agenda 2063, Africa's glorious future beckons !

Politically, we are ready.

Financially, we are strong and prepared.

Last year, the African Development Bank was ranked the Best Multilateral Financial Institution in the world by Global Finance, the leading US Financial Magazine.

The sun is shining!

Now let us surge forward, overcoming challenges in our way, with our eyes firmly focused on the goal: the Africa we want.

An Africa prosperous, peaceful, and stable.

An Africa where the youth thrive and prosper.

An Africa where our women can reach their full potential.

An Africa supported by strong financial institutions.

An Africa that develops with pride, looking inwards to mobilize domestic resources, and ending illicit capital flows.

Your Excellencies, with your bold and visionary leadership, a new Africa is emerging.

Just as the eagle soars above the storms, so will Africa soar and achieve its destiny.

Africa is destined for greatness!

Thank you very much Your Excellencies.

Was the amalgamation of Southern and Northern Nigeria by the British a costly mistake that should have been avoided?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam · Follow Nigerian Feb 2

Ahh, the original cope.

Nearly 1,000,000 slaves were embarked from various ports in southern Nigeria during the height of the Trans-Atlantic trade. Millions more died en-route to the coast, in slave raids and internecine conflict.

All that before Lord Lugard was even born.

Our problems predate the amalgamation. The costly mistake is being uninterested in solving them.

It might have been an unequal yoke but should have turned around as a blessing in diversity if the leaders are visionaries . Unfortunately neither the founding fathers nor the present leaders have any great vision for a great nation that should have emerged by now .

The contest and the strive between the North and the South should stop and since the founding fathers and the fathers could not creat a country where there is equal right and Justice , chances and opportunities should be given to Nigerian youths to create a country they can call their own where there is equity Justice love and respect for each other .

A country where a Northerner will come to the South irrespective of his or her religion and feel at home and feel wanted and loved and likewise a Southerner wlll go to the North and feel at home loved and wanted irrespective of his or her religion .

Why are the leaders making us hate each other ? Why ? Why ? Why ? Why ? Why ? This is really not fair !

Related Links

Why did the British colonize Nigeria?

Why was Nigeria deemed to be among the least desirable post during the British colonial era? Didn't the UK profit from the colonization of Nigeria, as widely proclaimed by Nigerian politicians?

What was Nigeria called before amalgamation?
Did you agree that the 1914 amalgamation of Nigeria was amalgamation without unity?
Was the amalgamation of 1914 for the good of all Nigerians?

How apt is it to say that the amalgamation of the country in 1914 did not bring about the unification of the peoples of Nigeria?

What is the real reason the British Amalgamated Southern and Northern Nigeria?
Why is it that the British failed to give Nigeria economic independence?

When the amalgamation of 1914 between the Northern and Southern protectorates of Nigeria took place, do both regions share the same common interest or are they compelled to do so?

Why did Nigeria and other African nations fight colonialism? What made the indigenous Africans make the whites leave Africa? Is life better now than it was at the period of colonialism?

Why is Southern Nigeria more affluent and much more developed than Northern Nigeria?

Why did the indirect rule work in Northern Nigeria and not in Southern Nigeria?

Who is really the cause of the poor leadership in Africa? Using Nigeria as a case study, would it have been better if Nigeria was left in the hands of the British?

How was the 1914 amalgamation of Nigeria signed?
How possible is this? Can Nigeria be colonized again by the British?

News Nigeria
Speech by Dr. Akinwumi A. Adesina, President, African Development Bank Group. Mobilizing Financing for Africa's Accelerated Economic Recovery, Development and Integration

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 12h

News Nigeria
Speech by Dr. Akinwumi A. Adesina, President, African Development Bank Group. Mobilizing Financing for Africa's Accelerated Economic Recovery, Development and Integration

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 12h

at the Twenty-Fifth Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the African Union Addis Ababa,

5-6 February 2022

♣Your Excellency Macky Sall, President of the Republic of Senegal and Chairperson of the African Union

♣Your Excellency Abiy Ahmed, Prime Minister of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia, Our Gracious Host

♣Your Excellencies Heads of State and Government

♣Your Excellency Moussa Faki Mahamat, Chairperson of the Africa Union Commission

♣Your Excellency Amina Mohammed, Deputy Secretary General of the United Nations, Representing the Secretary General of the United Nations

▪. Your Excellency Monique Nsanzabaganwa, Deputy Chairperson of the African Union Commission

♣Honorable Ministers

♣Honourable Commissioners of the African Union Commission

♣The Executive Secretary of the UN Economic Commission for Africa

♣The Secretary General, the African Continental Free Trade Area Secretariat

♣Heads of African Union Organs and Institutions

♣Chief Executives and Heads of Regional Economic Communities

♣Permanent Representatives to the African Union

♣Members of the Diplomatic Corps

♣Distinguished Ladies and Gentlemen

I deeply appreciate this honour and opportunity offered me by the Chairperson of the African Union Commission, the Deputy Chairperson, Commissioners, and the Permanent Representatives Committee.

I wish to congratulate His Excellency, President Macky Sall upon his election as the Chairperson of the African Union. Your Excellency, President Macky Sall, you have taken on the baton from His Excellency, President Felix Antoine Tshisekedi, with whom we have had the distinguished pleasure of working closely during his tenure as Chairperson.

Thank you, President Tshisekedi, for your remarkable leadership and outstanding service at the helm of our Union.

Your Excellencies, I will be speaking to you today on "Mobilizing Financing for Africa's Accelerated Economic Recovery, Development and Integration".

This is a very important and timely discussion, given that the African Development Bank has been given the mandate by a decision of the African Union to lead the mobilization of resources for Africa, to achieve Agenda 2063.

As this is the first time that I have had the opportunity to address you since my re-election, Your Excellencies, I wish to express to you, individually and collectively, my deep appreciation for your strong and unanimous support, and those of your Ministers of Finance and Foreign Affairs, for my re-election as President of the African Development Bank in August 2020. I thank H.E. President Muhammadu Buhari, my President, especially, for his trust, confidence, and unflinching support during this assignment which he sent me on to accomplish for Africa. I also wish to thank all our former heads of state for their steadfast support.

As always, I will continue to serve our beloved continent, and work with you to relentlessly accelerate the achievement of Agenda 2063: the Africa we want.

Your Excellencies, meeting today, physically, is itself an important milestone; a welcome relief following two years of the COVID-19 pandemic that has upended the world in an unprecedented manner.

It has been a global economic cyclone. Africa witnessed a decline in GDP growth of 2.1% in 2020, its lowest in twenty years. Africa's GDP fell by $165 billion. Over 30 million jobs were lost and over 26 million people fell into extreme poverty.

I wish to commend the leadership efforts of the African Union, and our Heads of State and Government, for the critical roles you have played in dealing with the pandemic and the socio-economic challenges in its wake. Today, thanks to these efforts 11% of the population has been fully vaccinated, and another 16% has been partially vaccinated.

However, while developed countries have moved to booster shots, Africa is still struggling with basic shots.

Your Excellencies, we must learn from this experience. Africa can no longer outsource the security of the lives of its 1.4 billion people to the benevolence of others.

We must secure African lives!

It is time your Excellencies, to build Africa's healthcare defense system.

This must be based on three strategic priorities.

First, building Africa's quality healthcare infrastructure.

Second, building Africa's pharmaceutical industry and

Third, building Africa's vaccine manufacturing capacity.

Africa needs $600 million to $1.3 billion to meet its goal of attaining 60% vaccine production by 2040. Investing in health is investing in national security.

The African Development Bank plans to invest $3 billion to support pharmaceutical and vaccines manufacturing capacity for Africa.

To address the socio-economic impacts of the pandemic and support economic recovery, Africa will need some $484 billion over the next 3 years. To eliminate extreme poverty by 2030, the continent will need $414 - $784 billion per year. Africa will need $7-$15 billion a year to deal with climate change. The continent will also need between $68 - $108 billion per year to fix the infrastructure financing gap.

Your Excellencies, we must drastically mobilize a lot more resources!

The African Development Bank, as the premier development financing institution in Africa, has been mobilizing resources to meet this challenge. Thanks to your support, the general capital of the Bank was increased in 2019 by 125%, rising from $93 billion to $208 billion, the highest since its establishment in 1964.

These resources have allowed the African Development Bank to scale up support to African economies to tackle the pandemic. The Board of Directors of the Bank approved a Crisis Response Facility of up to $10 Billion. The Bank also launched a $3 Billion Fight COVID-19 Social Bond on the international capital markets, which was the largest ever US-dollar denominated social bond in world history. The Bank provided $ 27 million as grants to the African Centers for Disease Control.

Your Excellencies, over the past six years, the African Development Bank has provided about $39 billion in financing to the continent in support of its High5 priorities to: light up and power Africa; feed Africa; integrate Africa; industrialize Africa; and improve the quality of life of the people of Africa.

These High5s are the accelerators for achieving Agenda 2063.

An assessment of these High5s by the United Nations Development Program indicated that the High5s would lead to the achievement of 90% of the Agenda 2063 goals and 90% of the Sustainable Development Goals targets.

Your Excellencies, so much has been achieved on the High5s. In the past five years, the work of the African Development Bank Group has impacted the lives of 335 million people – fast tracking the move towards achieving the Agenda 2063 goals. Close to 21 million people have gained access to electricity. Nearly 76 million people have benefitted from agricultural technologies for food security. More than 12 million people have gained access to finance through private sector investee companies. Over 69 million people have been provided with improved transport. And 50 million people have gained access to improved water and sanitation.

Your Excellencies, Feeding Africa remains a top priority. Our Technologies for African Agricultural Transformation which we call TAAT, has provided drought tolerant technologies for 12 million farmers across Africa. The Bank is supporting the creation of special agro-industrial processing zones in 18 countries to help drive the transformation of agriculture as a major source of wealth and jobs.

Your Excellencies, the African Development Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and the African Union Commission launched the Facility for African Food Security and Nutrition at the UN Food Systems Summit. Now dubbed Mission 1 for 200, this financing facility will help to mobilize $1 billion, provide climate resilient and nutrition-rich technologies for 40 million farmers, produce 100 million metric tons of food, and feed 200 million people. This will help to reduce food insecurity in Africa by 80%.

This is particularly crucial in 2022, the Year of Nutrition in Africa.

Your Excellencies, the Bank is investing heavily in renewable energy. This includes the world's largest concentrated solar power system in Morocco and the Lake Turkana energy project, the largest windfarm in Africa. Together with Africa50, we have co-financed the 3,000 MW Ben Ban solar power project in Egypt. The Bank is also implementing a $20 billion Desert-to-Power initiative to develop 10,000 MW of solar power for the Sahelian zone of Africa, in order to provide electricity for 250 million people. This will become the largest solar zone in the world.

Your Excellencies, Africa faces a huge challenge with energy transition, and with climate change. The Bank is working to establish an African Just Energy Transition Facility that will support transition from coal and heavy fuel oil into clean energy. However, Africa will need an energy mix that includes natural gas, to ensure stability of its energy systems, power industries, and ensure competitiveness.

Your Excellencies, we must go beyond “a just energy transition” to “a just energy system.”

Africa cannot be poor in an environmentally sustainable manner.

To support Africa's adaption to climate change, the African Development Bank and the Global Centre for Adaptation have launched the African Adaptation Acceleration Program (AAA-P) with the goal of mobilizing $25 billion for climate adaptation for Africa.

We must revive the Lake Chad Basin!

We must save the Sahel from desertification!

We must complete the Great Green Wall!

The African Development Bank has committed $6.5 billion towards the Great Green Wall. I would like to thank UN secretary General, Antonio Guterres, and my dear sister, Amina Mohammed, Deputy UN Secretary General, for their exceptional support for this initiative.

As we move from COP26 in Glasgow to COP27 in Sharm El Sheikh, to be hosted by President El Sisi, developed countries need to meet their $100 billion commitment on climate finance to support developing countries. This will help Africa.

Promises made must be promises kept.

The issuance of Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) of $650 billion by the International Monetary Fund has helped substantially, but Africa only received $33 billion worth of SDRs. African Heads of State at the Paris Summit on African Economies, with the strong support of President Emmanuel Macron, called for a re-allocation of $100 billion to Africa. You also asked that the re-allocated SDRs pass through the African Development Bank, as a prescribed holder of SDRs.

Your Excellencies, I will appreciate your continued strong support for this. Passing the re-allocated SDRs for Africa through the African Development Bank will serve Africa very well.

First, as a AAA-rated financial institution, the African Development Bank will be able to leverage the SDRs by 3-4 times. For example, a $50 billion re-allocation through the African Development Bank will be leveraged to deliver $200 billion to African economies.

Second, the African Development Bank will help to recapitalize other African financial institutions, many of which the Bank helped to establish, including the Afreximbank Bank, West Africa Development Bank, East Africa Development Bank, Central Africa Development Bank, the Africa Guarantee Fund, Africa-Reinsurance Company, Shelter Afrique, Trade and Development Bank, Africa50, as well as the Development Bank of Southern Africa.

I wish to also use this platform to advocate for additional shareholder funding for these institutions to play their mandated roles.

Your Excellencies, to protect Africa from future economic shocks, it is now critical to establish an African Financial Stability Mechanism. Africa is the only region of the world that has no liquidity buffers to protect the continent against shocks. Europe has … Asia has … Latin America has … The Middle East has. These regions had more protection from the economic effects of the pandemic.

Africa did not.

This has led to widespread regional spill-over contagion effects, and instability.

African economies must be protected. The African Financial Stability Mechanism will protect African economies.

Your Excellencies, we need more resources to finance Africa's low-income countries, especially those facing fragility. The African Development Fund, the concessional institution of the African Development Bank Group, has helped to support these countries with $8.5 billion in the past five years.

The African Development Fund has delivered impressive results.

The Fund financed the landmark Senegambia bridge.

It financed the Rosso bridge between Mauritania and Senegal.

It financed Corridor 13 road between Central African Republic and the Republic of Congo.

It financed the road network rehabilitation project for Comoros.

It financed the Revenue Authority project for Togo.

It financed the Bas Mangoky rice irrigation project for Madagascar.

The Fund is also financing the Kandadji multipurpose dam project for Niger.

However, more resources are needed to meet the rising needs of low-income countries. I wish to request the strong support of Your Excellencies, African Heads of State and Government, and of the African Union Commission, for the 16th Replenishment of the African Development Fund later this year.

Your Excellencies, with its $25 billion in equity, the African Development Fund can leverage up to $33 billion of additional financing for low-income countries. To achieve this, we need your support to change the article in the charter of the African Development Fund that does not allow it to go to market to leverage resources. This is top priority.

We are also leveraging private investments into Africa, in innovative ways.

Your Excellencies, the Africa Investment Forum, established by the African Development Bank and its partners, has helped to secure investment interests worth more than $78 billion. This spectacular level of interest includes a $24 billion transaction for the liquefied natural gas project in Mozambique. We are proud that that this project will make Mozambique the third-largest producer of liquified natural gas in the world.

The project experienced challenges from insecurity, but thanks to your collective leadership, all is now back on track.

Your Excellencies, we must now link security, investment, growth, and development closely together. To enhance the security of Africa, the African Development Bank is currently developing Security Indexed Investment Bonds. Proceeds from these bonds, when developed, will support countries and regional economic communities to do four things. First, to upgrade security architecture. Second, to repair damaged infrastructure in conflict-affected zones. Third, to rebuild social infrastructure. And fourth, to protect zones with strategic investments.

Your Excellencies, we must build a better future for our youth. It is time to create youth-based wealth all across Africa. To boost financial support for the businesses of our youth, the African Development Bank Group is exploring with countries the establishment of Youth Entrepreneurship Investment Banks. They will be first rate financial institutions run by the youth for the youth.

Your Excellencies, to unleash the business potential of women, the Bank's Affirmative Finance Action for Women in Africa (AFAWA) is mobilizing $5 billion for women businesses.

AFAWA is now working at scale. Over $425 million was disbursed in 2021 to banks for lending to women businesses. This year, we will disburse $500 million for women businesses.

Our vision is clear: When women win, Africa wins!

Your Excellencies, the African Continental Free Trade Area offers the continent incredible opportunities to accelerate Africa's development. To achieve this goal, the African Development Bank has invested massively in infrastructure, from roads, transport corridors, airports, seaports, railways, and digital infrastructure. Over the past 10 years, we have invested over $40 billion in infrastructure. We are connecting nations, connecting businesses, connecting people.

Your Excellencies, with Agenda 2063, Africa's glorious future beckons !

Politically, we are ready.

Financially, we are strong and prepared.

Last year, the African Development Bank was ranked the Best Multilateral Financial Institution in the world by Global Finance, the leading US Financial Magazine.

The sun is shining!

Now let us surge forward, overcoming challenges in our way, with our eyes firmly focused on the goal: the Africa we want.

An Africa prosperous, peaceful, and stable.

An Africa where the youth thrive and prosper.

An Africa where our women can reach their full potential.

An Africa supported by strong financial institutions.

An Africa that develops with pride, looking inwards to mobilize domestic resources, and ending illicit capital flows.

Your Excellencies, with your bold and visionary leadership, a new Africa is emerging.

Just as the eagle soars above the storms, so will Africa soar and achieve its destiny.

Africa is destined for greatness!

Thank you very much Your Excellencies.

Are Nigerians racist?

Oyeniyi Steven Mayowa , INTP

Nigeria is viewed as a country of lousy and arrogant people who are strictly bounded by rigid traditions and customs by countries both in and out of Africa. I, as a Nigerian, say that there's still some level of controversy on the subject of Nigerians being racist. For example, here is a picture of Nigerians exhibiting racism

This is a good definition of what intra-continental racism is like in Africa and this doesn't just happen in Nigeria, it happens in other countries as well like South Africa (xenophobia) as well as many other nationalities. To be honest, racism is something that happens everywhere and uhm, let's just say it varies from country to country depending on the object of racism and frequency. There is a low level of racism in Nigeria so much so that i can say Nigerians are "xenophilic" hehe.

Emmanuel Ukoha Web Developer (2019-present)

On a general note, Nigerians are not racist as they connect well when they meet at social gatherings, in the diaspora or any place they come in contact with people.

Externally:

BUT those you meet determines what version of a Nigerian will be pulled out of the basket.

A Nigerian has a sense of Pride about where he comes from, his tradition and way of life and that pride would bring out a drop of racism/prejudice if you start to compare and attack those core values he holds dear.

Internally: Nigeria has tribal racial issues that will be a topic of another day!!!!!!

Obiezidi Chukwubuikem, lives in Nigeria

There are millions of Nigerians, and this answer cannot be generalized. It depends on the individual. What are they racist against? I do not know. But if a person is racist, then there are characteristics that they do not appreciate. It is very likely that some Nigerians are racist to themselves and to non Nigerians, but I cannot generalized it.

News Nigeria

PHOTO NEWS: Members of the All Progressives Congress (APC) besiege national headquarters of the party as 36 state chairmen of APC are inaugurated in Abuja, on Thursday.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Feb 3

Credit: Dele Omokagbo

Where was the Kingdom of Benin located?

Chris Young knows a bit about history 1y

In what is now southern Nigeria, on the lower Niger:

The modern Republic of Benin (formerly Dahomey) is well to the west of the old kingdom and is named for its situation on the Bight of Benin, not after the kingdom.

Related Links

What are some mind-blowing facts about the Kingdom of Benin?
Are there still visible parts of the ancient "Walls of Benin"?

The historic kingdom of Benin was in Nigeria. Why did the modern country of Benin decide to take on the name “Benin”? I realize that it was once more accurately called Dahomey, but why the name change?

Did Islam have any existence (or presence) in the Benin Kingdom (a pre-colonial kingdom in what is now southern Nigeria) during the Early Modern period?

How big was the kingdom of Benin?
What is the relationship between Benin, the country and Benin City in Nigeria?
Was there a Great Benin Wall? Did it protect the Kingdom of Benin?
How old is the Benin Kingdom?

Which came before the other, Benin City in Edo State of Nigeria or Benin Republic? If it is Benin city in the Edo state, why did the francophone Republic choose "Benin" as its name?

Where did Benin Republic get its name from, is it related to Benin on Nigeria?
Why won't Benin change its name back to Dahomey?
Were the Kingdom of Kongo and the Kingdom of Benin in any type of trade or contact?
When did Benin get its name?

Why is the Republic of Benin called Benin if it succeeded the Kingdom of Dahomey, whereas the former Kingdom of Benin was in modern day Nigeria?

Who is the founder of the Benin Kingdom?

News Nigeria - Arimoro

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Fri

Farotimi Okunade was a Yoruba prince of the Egbedi Quarters and a direct descendant of Owa Ofokutu (27th ruler of Ilesha).... His drummers sang of his military feats and sang in his praise saying : a re omo ro L'ese oke.'... (one who takes off his enemy's head at the foot of the sacred hill)....the cognomen got him his name "Arimoro.'

He was a sworn enemy of Ibadan... reason being that during previous campaigns including Ijebu Ere and Ara expeditions, Ilesha always fought against Ibadan.... twice in the past, Ilesha was on the losing start and Ibadan wariors raided Ijesha in reprisal.... In these two raids, all his possessions and family were carted away to Ibadan as booty of war. With the painful loss, he swore to avenge the humiliation and resist Ibadan till his last breadth. To better prepare himself for future engagements, he formed a band of warriors and built a private militia.

His first opportunity came at the Igbajo war. Igbajo was a cosmopolitan city of many Yoruba factions (hence the name Igbajo, meaning community of different people). Ijesha wanted to annex Igbajo in a campaign to absorb all lesser kingdoms in the region as well as reduce Ibadan's influence in the region.... the Bale of Ibadan sent Balogun Akere to reinforce Igbajo. The Balogun showed the legendary battle skills of Ibadan and totally subjugated the Ijesha warriors. Many of the generals of Ijesha perished in the battle, including Lejoka, Risinkin and Lejofi. Arimoro managed to escape but he had to go underground for a while to rebuild his militia.

Three years later, Ibadan launched a full scale war on Ijesha. Once again, Arimoro played a great role in the war and for the first time, Ibadan warriors noticed him as a potential problem. After series of combats with which Ibadan closed in dangerously on Ijesha, Arimoro escaped to Akure to avoid being caught and executed. A siege was laid by Ibadan on Ijesha to cut it off from the outside world and push to people of Ijesha to near starvation. This forced Ijesha to surrender and submit to the sovereignty of Ibadan.

While in Akure, Arimoro received constant sad news of how Ibadan totally subjugated his ancestral home into a tributary vassal of Ibadan and the imposed Ajeles. For few years after, he waited for another opportunity to defend his ancestral home from exile. During his campaigns at Akure, he met Fabunmi of Oke Mesi and identified with the rising momentum to rebel against Ibadan in the region. when events finally led to a full scale revolt against Ibadan Ajeles, Arimoro took part in the riots. After the massacre of the Ajeles at Ekiti, he went back home with his militia and took the front row place in a similar full scale revolt against ajeles in the region leading with example by killing the Ajeles at Ilesha. In a short while, all the Ajeles of the region would be massacred as was the case at Ekiti.

He joined the Ekiti Parapo army and fought alongside folk heroes like Ogedengbe and Fabunmi. After the end of the war, he came back to Ilesha in 1887 as a war hero. In 1896, he was offered the throne of Ilesha but he refused, as he had all political interests and chieftancy offers prior, claiming that his motivation for his ancestral home was nothing but love. He stepped down for his brother Haastrup to take the throne.

Arimoro died in 1898 at a very old age.

News Nigeria

Revealed: N10.9Bn Properties Seized From Military Officer

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

Justice N.E. Maha of the Federal High Court on Monday February 14, ordered the final forfeiture of 24 properties held by fronts and proxies to a top military officer, to the Federal Government of Nigeria. The Order was pursuant to a forfeiture application by the Economic and Financial Crimes Commission, EFCC, which had in May 2020 secured the forfeiture of the properties on interim basis.

The court had ordered the publication of notices in national newspapers, inviting persons with interest in the properties to show cause why they should not be finally forfeited to the Federal Government of Nigeria.

With no such interest shown by any entity, Justice Maha on Monday, February 14, 2022, ordered the final forfeiture of the properties to the Federal Government of Nigeria.

The 24 properties scattered across Kano, Kaduna, Borno and Cross River States, comprise land, shopping complex, gas station and fuel stations cumulatively valued at N10, 935,000,000.00. (Ten Billion, Nine Hundred and Thirty-Five Million Naira)

The properties are:

1. A 16 Pump filling Station located at Rijiyar Lemo, Kano.
2. A Filling Station with 41 pumps located opposite Federal Secretariat, Kano.
3. A Filling Station with 39 pumps located along BUK Road, Kano.
4. A Filling Station with 31 pumps located along Zaria Bypass, Kano.

5. A Filling Station with 31 pumps located along Maiduguri Bypass, Kano.
6. A Filling Station with 29 pumps located along Maiduguri Bypass, Kano.
7. A Filling Station with 23 pumps located along Naibawa , Kano.
8. A Filling Station with 39 pumps located along Bachirawa, Kano.
9. A Filling Station with 51 pumps and a one-storey building with 35 shops attached to the Filling Station located along Shiek Ja'afar Road Dorayi, Kano.
10. An LPG plant with 30 shops attached to it located along Zaria Road, Kano.
11. Marhaba Event Centre, Guda Abdullahi Road, Farm Centre, Kano.
12. A three storey building (Plaza) With 28 shops located on Hadeja Road, next to Sheshe Supermarket , Kano.
13. A three-storey building (Plaza) with 126 shops located on Audu Bako Way, Opposite Nation Plaza, Kano.

14. Classic Block Industry at Maiduguri Road, Kano.
15. Atlasfield Corporate Headquarters, No. L6 Ahmadu Bello Way, Kaduna.
16. Undeveloped plot located at Sharada, Adjacent A.A. Rano Filling Station, Kano.
17. Undeveloped plot located at Yan Rake, Adjacent Dala Orthopedic Hospital, Kano.
18. Undeveloped plot located along Kano-Gwarzo Road, Adjacent Kedco Regional Office, Kano North/Opposite Silver Spoon Restaurant, Kano.
19. Undeveloped plot located along Kano-Gwarzo Road, opposite Markaz Mosque, Kano.
20. Undeveloped plot located on Sani Marshal Road, Opposite Nissan Automobile, Kano.

21. 11.7 hectares located Adjacent TINAPA Resort, Adiabo, Calabar. 22. Truck Assembly Plant, Easter Bypass, Kano.

23. Event Center located in Calabar, Cross River State.
24. Aflac Plastics Limited located behind National Eye Center, Kaduna.

v Find attached photographs of some of the properties.

What do you love about Nigerians?

Ke'Aun · Follow African-American Cosmopolitan Sat

One thing that impresses me about Nigerians is their willingness to move around the world in search of opportunities.

The Nigeiran diaspora is massive and everywhere. No one knows how large it is exactly, but this map certainly understates it. Wikipedia tells me that there are hundreds of thousands of Nigerians in Malaysia alone.

I know that many Nigerians are abroad because there's not enough opportunities for all of them at home, which is unfortunate. But, I respect their willingness to travel across Africa and the seven seas to build a better life.

Abigail Abby Abok , I live in a heterogeneous Nigerian city Answered Nov 4, 2017

Originally Answered: What do you like about Nigerians?

With our myriad of issues, there's so many things to like about Nigerians and I'm not saying this because I'm a Nigerian. Here are few out of the many things I like about Nigerians

Their Resilience; Nigerians are some of the most resilient people on earth. The average Nigerians suffers daily but never resigns.

Nigerians are hard worker and that's why they excel anywhere in the world where the system rewards hard work.

Their Creativity; Nigerians are highly creative. I mean creativity is in our blood. Have you heard our folklore? Have you listened to our comedians? Seen our dances?

Their meals; Nigerians cook the tastiest mouth watering meals. From simple breakfast like Akara and pap to lunches like ofada rice with palm oil stew to our world famous jollof rice and hudreds of other dishes, Nigerians do know how to cook sumptuous meals.

Nigerians know how to have a good time. Ever attended a Nigerian wedding or any Nigerian occasion? No? Please try to then you'd get what I mean

Related Links

What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?
Are Nigerians smart?
What do you love about Nigeria?
What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?
What do you think of Nigerians?
When Nigerian men say that they love you, do they mean it?
Why are you proud to be Nigerian?
How do Nigerian names work?
Do Nigerians dislike whites?
Are Nigerians racist?
Is it true that South African females love Nigerian males?
Why are Nigerians hated so much around the world?
What do Nigerians love about Nigeria?
Why are Nigerians so religious?
Are any Nigerians white?

Why is Nigeria one of the poorest country in the world with all the resources that can make her the one of the richest country in world?

Nigeriana · Follow Answered by Harry Fri

First, yourself like many others, believe the false reality that Nigeria is resource rich. You need to understand that Nigeria is poor in more ways than one. I do understand that line of thinking considering the fact that the meagre resources we have are being grossly mismanaged by our leaders as have been the case for a long time. Nigeria's potential lies in the people, the land; not the natural resources that are in no way sufficient for half of our population.

OPEC CRUDE PRODUCTION OUTPUT (mbpd) - JAN 2022

🇸🇦Saudi Arabia: 10.1
🇮🇶Iraq: 4.2
🇦🇪UAE: 2.92
🇰🇼Kuwait: 2.58
🇮🇷Iran: 2.48
🇳🇬Nigeria: 1.46
🇦🇴Angola: 1.1
🇱🇾Libya: 0.99
🇩🇿Algeria: 0.98
🇻🇪Venezuela: 0.66
🇨🇬Congo: 0.26
🇬🇦Gabon: 0.19
🇬🇶Equatorial Guinea: 0.09

#StatiSense
(Reuters)

From the image, you'd notice that Saudi Arabia, whose major natural resource is petroleum like Nigeria, produces way more oil by a wide margin. It's not even close. Crude oil accounts for over 90% of Nigeria's earnings.

What is the population of Saudi Arabia? 35 million.

Nigeria has over 200million people. After financing recurrent expenditure with the money gotten from crude oil sales, what do you think will be left?

I think Nigeria has some options to explore to increase earnings and productivity which include:

More efficient tax collection.

Attracting foreign investment (‘cause they've got money we don't have)

More private sector inclusiveness in the public sector.
There are other methods to be sure —I’m not an expert by any means.

Related Links

How lucrative is agricultural business, like crop production in Nigeria? What's the average startup capital for a large scale farming?

What are the measures that have been put in place by African leaders to curtail immigrants using the Sahara desert as a route to Europe?

What is 73.5 in Yoruba?

How are you surviving as a Nigerian in Nigeria in this harsh economy? Especially if you're in Lagos and you have to commute to work Monday to Friday.

Why do most African inlwas torture their widows?

If China and Russia are colonizing Africa, how is it different than Europe colonizing the rest of the world historically?

Why are the prices of books in Nigeria usually cheaper than the book's original tagline price?

What are some of the best feature films or TV series totally or partially filmed in Wolof, Hausa, Tsonga, Bambara, Kirundi, Sesotho, Kikongo, Lingala, Fula or Shona languages?

Why is the get rich quick syndrome very rampant in our society today, most especially in Nigeria?

What is a university for Nigerians without the IELTS?
Why is it that the 8000-year-old Dufuna canoe of Nigeria is not celebrated as an archaeological achievement of the sub-Saharan Africa?
How can you become a citizen of Nigeria by naturalization?
Should we blame parents for the ritual killings among youths in Nigeria?
Are the African parenting techniques really right?
Where is the rail track for the Lagos State train service?

EFCC

2
1
NO SMOKING

What I love about Nigerians (and of course, why I love Nigeria).

Steve Ogbujah Updated Jun 13, 2017

What I love about Nigerians (and of course, why I love Nigeria).

1. I love Nigeria because she is arguably one of the few nations on earth who have survived what she has suffered.

Despite the gross abuse of leadership which has undermined her potentials for far too long, the resilience and faith, and the wonderful adaptive skills of her people, rate her — maybe not as the most powerful, but — as one of the strongest nations on earth.

2. I love Nigeria because most Nigerian marriages inspire me.

We naturally hold marriage in its deserving, high regard, such that right from the glitz and glam that usually happen on our wedding days — to a lifetime, we work as hard as to give our marriages a happy and long life — without looking back.

That's why the word "divorce" often sounds awkward to the average Nigerian. And that always makes me proud.

3. I love Nigerians because of the endowment of a unique intuitive cleverness in the average Nigerian.

That's why, in many parts of the world, they almost always become suspects at first sight, until proven otherwise.

Sadly, the ones who happen to abuse that rare disposition often do so in a bid to survive, due to the tough survival "tug of war" largely between our middle and lower classes, pushing them into fraud (aka 419), drugging, and other messy stuff they unfortunately find themselves having to do to make ends meet.

Otherwise, when they catch the right chances, they never cease to amaze the world*.

(Read: The Smartest Family In Britain Today, Is A Nigerian Family.)

4. I love Nigeria because of our Pidgin English, and our accent in general.

It'll likely be a must-know language, if you intend to tour and enjoy your stay in Nigeria.

Fun fact: The Nigerian accent once ranked as the fifth sexiest accent in the world, below Italian, French, Spanish and Czech, respectively.

Google it. In Nigerian accent ;)

So for all you homeboys trying to Americanize or Britishize yourselves, this is a be-yourself reminder.

5. I love Nigeria because of the power of our culture.

Especially our family culture — which positively influences us for a long length of our lives, due to the beautifully sensitive ways the average Nigerian parent endeavors to raise their kids, especially in Nigeria.

The commonly strong family ties, and the values we only grow up to appreciate — respect for our elders, manners, industry, modesty, etc. — rarely exit our lives.

6. And last but not least, I love Nigerians because you can remove Nigerians from Nigeria, but you cannot remove Nigeria from Nigerians.

We never change.

Home, away, wherever we are – Nigeria remains our fingerprint.

Otherwise, when they catch the right chances, they never cease to amaze the world.

Nigeria, retaining the wealthiest black man and woman — in spite of all her current struggles, proves to be the most promising nation on earth.

Sean Lana, studied History & German at University of Hamburg Answered Sep 22, 2019

Nigerians love to support each other at least, Nigerians are not individualistic people rather we practise in-group collectivism.

Nigerians have different varieties of dishes and they love cooking. KFC, Dominos will never become popular than Jollof rice, Moi-Moi etc Nigerians are very optimistic people which means that they are risk-takers. You can always perceive this positive attitude in many Nigerians.

Nigerians are mentally strong, many westerners cannot really survive what Nigerians go through every day most especially in cities like Kano, Lagos, Port-Harcourt and Abuja.

Nigerians are very creative unfortunately creativity lack support of fund in Nigeria.

This is why I love and believe in Nigeria.

How do I make Nigeria better?

Steve Ogbujah ·

Last month, I read of this student who organized with friends, mobilized their networks, and raised around a hundred and fifty thousand naira, which paid the tuition fees of five students for them to write the semester exams.

None of us needs to have so much, neither do all of us have to become the Minister of XYZ to impact society. Such collaborations are sure ways to do a little and a lot.

One of my mentors ensures his community and their neighbors are in touch with him. From here in America, he consults for them, and regularly travels to help.

He shares about a young doctor who had patients incessantly dying in his care because of his demands which were not met as he wanted. He warned him over and again to stop screwing people's lives because of money. Getting worse, he threatened to sue the guy if he didn't leave that place. You guess, he fled.

He tells me of a neurosurgeon, a close friend, who proceeded with a delicate brain surgery he warned him to avoid, as it would most likely result in the patient's death. The patient died, and he fought hard until the 1.2 million naira bill was refunded to the family from the greedy guy. It cost him a lifelong friendship with the neurosurgeon, but restored sanity to the system.

So our brethren abroad, it's a glocalized world today. It's never been easier to get involved and make a difference from anywhere you are.

During the 2015 elections, I watched some youths peddle between their homes and our town hall where the polls held, with their pockets filled with money. It really offended me but I couldn't help it.

Their deserved social securities are hoarded by these politicians until the elections, who spree it up for them to lavish in one weekend, compromising the chances at change.

Ironically, only the leaders suffer the blame.

Character and change begin with us.

They begin when we start to cultivate this question into our consciousness, and seek ways to be an answer.

We can only pretend for so long - before Nigeria flows out through our veins.

No matter where they find themselves, in Pluto, Jupiter, Milky way, wherever — it only takes a moment for them to spot one another, and connect as family — irrespective of their tribe or religion — from where they hustle together to survive.

And this family spirit, coupled with their uncommon ingenuity, are the soft keys that help them to trace a door — anywhere on earth — in a matter of days.

That is why it's often quipped that "any place you don't find a Nigerian is not conducive for human life."

Nigeria, retaining the wealthiest black man and woman — in spite of all her current struggles, proves to be the most promising nation on earth.

This is why I love and believe in Nigeria.

Image sources: Google.

Why do Ghanaians hate Nigerians?

Steve Ogbujah

Ghana is easily the African nation we collaborate the most with.

Talk about our movie and music industries. Talk of the many bilateral investments we share.

Here in diaspora, I spent four semesters with six Ghanaians and eight fellow Nigerians in a class. It was only beautiful. In our school and other universities I know around, we share apartments and almost everything else every time.

So far, I know we only fight in the field (Nigeria-Ghana friendly matches), and of course in the kitchen!

It's so cool the natives rarely identify who is from where until they ask.

Re: Why do Ghanaians hate Nigerians?

Sean Lana , studied History & German at University of Hamburg Updated Mar 7, 2020

I keep seeing this question popping up on my feed and I now have something to write about the topic. I have lived in Ghana before and I do not think Ghanaians hate Nigerians. The problem is this If we should run statistics on foreigners living or visiting in Ghana, Nigerians would be number one. The main reason why many Nigerians would prefer to live in Ghana over many of those West African countries is because of its proximity and language.

Based on the fact that so many Nigerians live in Ghana shows that the local people would be so much exposed to the Nigeria experience and this also would depend on locations, since many foreigners would always look out for their comfort zones, a lot of Nigerians can be found in places like Kasua, New town also known as Lagos town, Nima, Kanda, Kotobabi, Circle, Caprice, Kumasi etc..

The next question is why do so many Ghanaians hate Nigerians, If you look at some of the above-listed locations, you can see that its either they are suburb towns or ghetto where so many bad activities occur! Example of these bad activities includes drug, rape, pimping, scamming or sakawa. So yes Ghanaians living in these environs will be much exposed to the negative activities that Nigerians are perpetrating than the positive ones and that makes people generalize. Circle, for example, is a central place where many Nigerians just start operating their businesses without proper registration thereby threatening the local trades. Not only Nigerians but Liberians and some other African nationalities can be found here.

I personally went to school in Ghana and cannot agree that Ghanaians hate Nigerians because even today I still have tons of Ghanian friends and I had a normal life in Ghana and felt at home. This assumption would only depend on the purpose of your stay in Ghana and your location.

One thing I know for sure is that much Ghanian businesses make Nigerian consumers pay twice for the price of a commodity because they assume Nigerians got so much money to blow away. I think you shouldn't have any problem in Ghana if you are in the country legally doing the right thing and stay out of trouble. Ghanaians would always love you.

Related Links

Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
What do Nigerians think of Ghana and Ghanaians?

In 1982/83, when Nigerians asked all Ghanaians living in Nigeria to leave their country, what did Olusegun Obasanjo say to Ghanaians?

Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?

Which are the most preferred education countries for Nigerians and Ghanaians?
Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?

Why do most people in Africa, especially Nigerians and Ghanaians, scam Europeans on worthless things?

Would a Nigerian man ever marry a Ghanaian woman?
What are ghanaian men like?
Why do Nigerians hate President Buhari?
How do Nigerians feel about Ghanaians?
What do you love about Nigerians?
Are Nigerians smart?
What is the best jollof rice, Ghanaian or Nigerian?
What do Ghanaians dislike about other Ghanaians and/or Ghana in general?

What are the beauties of Nigerian diversity?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Observer of Political Trends 6mo

I honestly have no idea. The paeans to Nigerian diversity or our supposed strengths/potential have always struck me either as delusional or half-digested Americanisms, as the mood takes. As our laureaute once said, a tiger pounces. It does not proclaim its tigritude. We either are the things we say are, in which case let's pounce, or we are Simba trying to roar like Mufasa.

I am a simple man with simple loves. Me country be one of 'em. For richer or poorer, until death.

I neither have to justify nor can I explain my feelings. My actions will suffice. The irrational spontaneity of love should defy reason.

Whether my answer qualifies as a beauty of Nigerian diversity, I leave it to your judgement.

Why are Nigerians fleeing Nigeria?

Uche Metuh Lives in Canada (2012–present) 4y

I can't speak for others but I know why I left. Apart from some personal reasons, I wanted to get my Masters degree.I wasn't going to go back to my undergraduate school. What else would they teach me?

I also wasn't going to grovel to get other Nigerian universities to accept me.

So I up & left the country **:(.

I didn't plan to flee the country. I kept an open mind about either countries. I still do.

Related Links

Do Nigerians living in America want to go back to Nigeria?

Why is Nigeria doing so poorly as a nation even though Nigerian immigrants excel when they live in other countries?

Are Nigerians smart?
What do you love about Nigerians?
What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?
Why are you proud to be Nigerian?

Why don't most Nigerian families back home understand that Nigerians in the diaspora also struggle too and can't always be sending money back home?

Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
Only in Nigeria do people look down on Nigerians for schooling in Nigeria. Why?
Why is the Nigerian dream to leave Nigeria?
Why don't Nigerians fix Nigeria instead of flocking to other countries?

Nigeria: What are things indigenous Nigerians know that Nigerians in the diaspora don't know?

Are there cars in Nigeria?
What advice can Nigerians in diaspora offer indigenous Nigerians?
What is the Nigerian dream?

News Nigeria

Africa's first floating Basketball court has been unveiled at Lekki-Ikoyi Bridge in Lagos State, Nigeria.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Feb 4

THE SPIRIT OF THE NBA
Hennessy
Hennessy
THE SPIRIT OF THE NBA

Hennessy
Hennessy
THE SPIRIT OF THE NBA
• Hennessy

The project was unveiled by NBA Africa and Hennessy.

Can Abba Kyari be compared to Sani Abacha in terms of looting and stealings in Nigeria?

Related Links

What screenshot deserves 5 million views?
How can Nigeria avoid walking into a debt trap set by the CCP?

Do Nigerians believe that Buhari is a dictator and the worst president of FRN?
Why do 90 percent of Nigerians want to travel abroad?

What are academic staffs of universities in Nigeria (ASUU) going through that made striking a frequent occurrence?

How has the fuel scarcity affected you as a worker in Nigeria?

What other nicknames do you know for Nigerian cities? Names like Lasgidi, The Buj, Waffi, JTown...

Why don't developed countries want to liberate colonized Africans to have their independence?

Have COVID exposed African scientists and political leaders?
Why is it that no country on the continent is not able to produce their own vaccine yet?
How best can Nigeria curb high rate of inflation?
How do I get a product that I can introduce into the Lagos Nigeria market?
Who is the largest farm sector, Nigeria or Botswana?

Has there ever been evidence of New World (the Americas) indigenous people setting sail eastward and making landfall in the Old World (Europe and Africa)? Just like a "reverse discovery"?

Don't you think colonization made Africa what it is today?
What is the difference between centralised and non-centralised states in Nigeria?

What are the causes of high population growth in Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller1y

Photo by Joshua Oluwagbemiga on Unsplash

The average Nigerian believes in Quantity. The rich amongst us have a fleet of cars and dozens of houses all over only to prove that they are rich. Unfortunately, that's exactly how people who give birth to a lot of kids see themselves too... I'm super fertile.

We are a religious people, folks don't necessarily worry about how a child would be fed or educated, our almighty formula for such mundane worries is ''God is in control or God will provide for us.''

Our hospitals are trying but i won't bet my last Naira on them to keep me safe when need be without spending a fortune. it's how most Nigerians think, even the politicians and that is why they would rather go to India or the UK for medical check-ups. The average Nigerian would say ''let me give birth to several kids so if some were to return to the gods sooner than expected the rest would carry on the family name.''

The majority of us believe so much in Destiny; that every kid has this special talent that came with them and if discovered and properly utilized it would bring the kid good fortune in their lifetime. I have seen instances where kids were taken to a chief priest to change their destinies for a better one. Not only that, even our Pastors do so. Indeed, human stupidity knows no bounds.

Nigerians consume so much sweet, we like sweet things like good sex. come on, it's no news we hate condoms, we like it raw, flesh to flesh. Like that last time a co-worker who already had two kids told me ''it doesn't hit the brain, that's why my husband and I don't use it.'' I almost died of shock, because she was a college professor, imagine what the illiterates would say.

The Nigerian government is yet to see overpopulation as a problem. Presently the Nigerian government survives mainly on oil...a diminishing asset. Forget about all those stories of diversifying the economy, at the present, they are not bringing much and it's the oil money being used to service them all. With such a mono-economy, any country would be conscious of her population except the Nigerian government. Nigeria, the Big-Heart doesn't worry about such mundane stuff...Allah dey.
Also read:

What do you think about the population of Nigeria | THE AFRICAN EAGLE

Yosef MacGruber, pro-life advocate, pro-big families, reject birth control
Answered Jan 6, 2018

Originally Answered: What are the factors responsible for rapid population growth in Nigeria?

Well Nigerians still believe that children are gifts from God, so quite many Nigerians want as many children as they can produce.

As a pro-lifer, of course I agree with that.

Nigerians believe that their large and growing population will be an asset for a stronger economy. Yes, I think so as well.

Related Links

What caused the rapid population growth in Africa in the last 60 years?
What can cause population growth in Africa?

Why exactly is Nigeria so populous and so densely populated relative to other African countries?

What are the five factors responsible for the high population density of Nigeria?
Why does the Nigerian population grow so fast?
Is global population growth a problem?
What are the factors affecting population growth in Nigeria?
Why is Nigeria doing nothing about its overpopulation?
Is Nigeria actually overpopulated?

What are the factors responsible for rapid population growth in Africa and the ways in which the problem can be controlled?

Is Nigeria really 170 million in population?

Why are high population growth countries typically poorer relative to countries with lower population growth?

What are the causes of population growth increase and decrease in Nigeria?
What are the disadvantages of the rising population of Nigeria?
Why is Africa's population growing so fast?

Victor Dirikebamor

.

Follow
StorytellerMon

What language do people in Nigeria speak?

Over 525 native languages are spoken daily in Nigeria, with English being our official Language.

The most spoken language out of all is possibly Pidgin, a broken version of the English language, with words borrowed from local languages like Urhobo, Yoruba, Igbo, and a few others.

How well one speaks Pidgin could be a determining factor of how much of a Nigerian one is.

Languages here are linked to Tribes, that is, every Major or Subtribe has their language, every Subtribe has their dialects.

The most popular local languages are Hausa in the North, Yoruba in the West, and Ibo in the East. The most popular language in the South is Izon (Ijaw).

Sadly, the Southern part of Nigeria rarely speaks their local languages.

With a population of a little over 200 million, Nigeria is undoubtedly the most populated black nation on earth.

We are also amongst the most diverse nations on earth.

For instance, the difference in culture and tradition between the Hausa and the Igbo is as wide as the Sahara desert.

One could have nothing in common with a fellow Nigerian from a different part of Nigeria.

The way of life, food, and clothing, of a person from the tribe of Fulani could be a total shock to a person from the tribe of Ijaw and vice versa.

Nigeria is like a conglomerate of countries within a Country.

Our diversity is supposed to bring an inflow of tourists from within and outside the country to observe and celebrate our Individual cultures, just as we celebrate the Calabar Carnival with people from that part of the country.

We are supposed to be united in diversity and our diversity is supposed to make us a powerful Nation.

Sadly, many, including me believe that the challenges plaguing Nigeria are largely due to our diversity.

Deep down, we do not desire to be together and this has caused the very zenith of chauvinistic tribalism that Nigerians are all too familiar with.

Yet, the ultimate beauty of Nigeria lies in the diversity of its people.

Ifeanyi Maduka , former Senior Network Engineer at Airtel Nigeria (2015-2017)
Answered Mar 9, 2018 · Upvoted by Mike Adoga , lives in Lagos, Nigeria (1992-present)

English Language is the official language of Business, Governance and Learning, this is basically due to the fact that Nigeria was a part of British colony which started in 1904 when Lord Luggard amalgamated Northern and Southern Protectorates. The Union got its Independence on 1st October 1960.

Unofficially, most Nigerians speak Pidgin English. Pidgin English is a blend of English and ethnic Nigerian languages. It operates now as a kind of lingua franca across Nigeria. Pidgin was seen as the native language of approximately 3 to 5 million people mainly concentrated in the Niger Delta region but has become more popular and fashionable than English across the nation. example: Wetin dey? This means what is happening? in English.

Native Languages:

1. Hausa is often associated with Islamic culture in Nigeria and West Africa. It is one of the most spoken Nigerian languages. 18.5 million native speakers are found in Sokoto, Kaduna, Katsina, Kano, Bauchi, Jigawa, Zamfara, Kebbi, and Gombe states. Hausa is also the second language of 15 million more people in Nigeria. It has prompted international radio stations like the BBC, China Radio International and Voice of Russia to broadcast in it.

2. Igbo is the main language spoken by about 24 million people (primarily of Igbo descent) in Abia, Anambra, Ebonyi, Enugu and Imo states. Igbo is also spoken in some parts of Delta, Rivers, Kogi, Benue and Akwa Ibom states. Significant Igbo speakers are also found in Cameroun while in Equatorial Guinea, it is recognized as a minority language. In 2009, US Army recruited people who could speak Igbo into its fold which means automatic US Citizenship to the new recruits after 6 months, there are so many arguments as regards why only Igbo out of all Nigerian languages?

3. Yoruba is the native tongue of the Yoruba people and is spoken by about 18.9 million people living in Oyo, Ogun, Ondo, Osun, Kwara, and Lagos states and parts of Kogi State. Outside Nigeria, Yoruba is also spoken by Nigerian immigrants in the UK and the USA what makes it one of the top most spoken Nigerian languages worldwide.

4. Fulfulde is now spoken by cattle pastoralists across the Sahel and largely in Northern Nigeria by the Fulani diaspora. In Nigeria, 1.7 million Fulfude speakers are found in Kano, Katsina, Zaria, Jos plateau, Bororo, Maiduguri and Sokoto.

5. Kanuri is one of the most spoken languages in the country. 3 million native speakers are mainly located in Borno, Yobe and Jigawa States. In addition, about 500,000 people use it as a second language in Nigeria.

6. Ijaw is spoken by almost 2 million people in Bayelsa, Delta, Ondo and Ekiti states. A number of dialects exist including Arogbo, Egbema, Ikibiri and West Tarairi with about 30 of them being inherently intelligible.

7. Tiv is spoken by about 2 million people in Nigeria concentrated mainly in Benue State. But it is also widely spoken in Plateau and Taraba states.

8. Ibibio has some 1.5 million native speakers concentrated in Akwa Ibom State. Ibibio is taught in primary and secondary schools with radio and television programmes available.

9. Edo is mainly spoken by at least 1 million people in Edo State. Interestingly, in November 2013 there was a raising alarm over the 'likely extinction of the Bini language'. This is possibly due to the lack of a common language in Edo State, gradual decline of speaking Edo in homes and the more pronounced use of English and Pidgin English.

Finally, there are about 300 other native languages spoken by other Nigerias cut across the nation.

Read more: https://www.naija.ng/383776-top-10-most-popular-languages-in-nigeria.html#383776

Victor Dirikebamor, Storyteller Answered Mon

Over 525 native languages are spoken daily in Nigeria, with English being our official Language.

The most spoken language out of all is possibly Pidgin, a broken version of the English language, with words borrowed from local languages like Urhobo, Yoruba, Igbo, and a few others.

How well one speaks Pidgin could be a determining factor of how much of a Nigerian one is.

Languages here are linked to Tribes, that is, every Major or Subtribe has their language, every Subtribe has their dialects.

The most popular local languages are Hausa in the North, Yoruba in the West, and Ibo in the East. The most popular language in the South is Izon (Ijaw).

Sadly, the Southern part of Nigeria rarely speaks their local languages.

With a population of a little over 200 million, Nigeria is undoubtedly the most populated black nation on earth.

We are also amongst the most diverse nations on earth.

For instance, the difference in culture and tradition between the Hausa and the Igbo is as wide as the Sahara desert.

One could have nothing in common with a fellow Nigerian from a different part of Nigeria.

The way of life, food, and clothing, of a person from the tribe of Fulani could be a total shock to a person from the tribe of Ijaw and vice versa.

Nigeria is like a conglomerate of countries within a Country.

Our diversity is supposed to bring an inflow of tourists from within and outside the country to observe and celebrate our Individual cultures, just as we celebrate the Calabar Carnival with people from that part of the country.

We are supposed to be united in diversity and our diversity is supposed to make us a powerful Nation.

Sadly, many, including me believe that the challenges plaguing Nigeria are largely due to our diversity.

Deep down, we do not desire to be together and this has caused the very zenith of chauvinistic tribalism that Nigerians are all too familiar with.

Yet, the ultimate beauty of Nigeria lies in the diversity of its people.

Related Links

How do Nigerians feel when asked by Westerners, "How do you speak English so well?"
How many languages are there in Nigeria?
Are Nigeria's native people considered to be native English speakers?
Why do Nigerians speak bad English when it's their official language?
Do Nigerians speak English as their first language?
Why is English chosen as Nigeria's official language?
Is Swahili spoken in Nigeria?

What language do people in Lagos speak? I mean at home and on the streets. Is it English or Yoruba?

How many people speak English in Nigeria?
Why can't Americans understand Nigerians' way of speaking English?
What is the sweetest language in Nigeria?

How can someone learn to speak Nigerian Pidgin, when it is not even recognized as a language?

Do Nigerians speak fluent English?
How do you speak Nigerian pidgin English?
Is Nigeria an English speaking country?

Why is the Nigerian government still going to other countries requesting for a loan with natural resources they have already?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

Nigerian Nov 19

The straightforward answer to your question is that there is a gap between when the Federation Account gets credited for our sold 'resources' and our immediate needs. We are borrowing on our permanent ability to get money. Whether oil or people do the paying, there will always be money for our creditors.

But things are a tad more complicated. That is why we pay people to manage our debts strategically.

Debts are an asset for our banks, insurers and pension funds. Most of our debt is to them. Borrowing in foreign currencies, especially before a devaluation, can allow the government to pay off its domestic debts while retaining more Naira to spend on salaries and so on.

Because of our centralised management of FOREX, there are often well-publicised dollar shortages. Borrowing in dollars abroad allows the CBN to manage demand better. That is why since the Eurobond markets and IMF lent us dollars, the decline of the Naira's value against the dollar, even at the parallel market, has slowed. It isn't quite rocket science. The CBN now has more dollars to sell at the official market while retaining enough reserves to deter broader speculative attacks.

Sometimes, borrowing to pay off debts is wise. At the moment, because the developed countries have opened their spigots to keep their asset values afloat, lending conditions are pretty lax. It will not always be so. Better to borrow now and invest than then and pay higher interest rates.

Related Links

If Nigeria is endowed with natural resources, why is it one of the poorest nations in the world?

Why does the Nigerian government, despite being blessed with numerous natural resources, still get loans from China?

Why is the rate of poverty too high in Nigeria despite being the country with several natural resources?

Why is Nigeria so blessed with natural resources but the capital of poverty in the world?
Why is Nigeria in debt despite their abundant natural resources?

Why is Nigeria, that is blessed with so much natural resources, still having so many poor people?

Why do African countries with abundance of natural resources still find it difficult to develop with all these natural wealths?

Why are Nigerians one of the poorest in the world while the country is superbly rich in petroleum and other natural resources?

Why does the Nigerian government borrow from countries with less resources than Nigeria?

Aside from Nigeria, which other African countries have the necessary population and natural resources to be a big economy in the next fifty years?

Why do most African countries borrow despite their huge natural resources? Who is to be blamed?

Why is Nigeria so poor despite the natural resources available in it?
Why is Africa so poor, especially Nigeria, despite huge natural resources?

Why can't African countries survive without borrowing huge loans despite having good natural resources?

How can African countries utilize their natural resources to develop their country without going for loans from the West?

If you are stuck in Nigeria, can the US embassy get you home to the US?

Kathryn Berck Updated 7mo

Originally Answered: If your stuck in Nigeria can the embassy get you home to USA?

If a person is 'stuck' in Nigeria, that is usually either because s/he spent all his/her money, or because s/he is in jail.

The US government (and thus US taxpayers) is not in the business of subsidizing careless citizens' travel. The US embassy can re-issue your passport if it has expired, and can help you contact family and/or friends in the US to send you the money you need to pay your local bills and buy your ticket home.

Far more rarely, an American can fall into a genuine emergency: unexpected medical crisis, traffic crash, mugging, etc. The embassy is available 24/7 for such events, and a consular officer will offer whatever is appropriate to the situation, without offering a magic carpet. Also, sadly, almost every US consular officer has had to handle more than enough unexpected deaths of US citizens in their district.

Emergency Financial Assistance for U.S. Citizens Abroad

Kathryn Berck Updated Jun 6, 2021 Originally Answered: If your stuck in Nigeria can the embassy get you home to USA?

If a person is 'stuck' in Nigeria, that is usually either because s/he spent all his/her money, or because s/he is in jail.

The US government (and thus US taxpayers) is not in the business of subsidizing careless citizens' travel. The US embassy can re-issue your passport if it has expired, and can help you contact family and/or friends in the US to send you the money you need to pay your local bills and buy your ticket home.

Far more rarely, an American can fall into a genuine emergency: unexpected medical crisis, traffic crash, mugging, etc. The embassy is available 24/7 for such events, and a consular officer will offer whatever is appropriate to the situation, without offering a magic carpet. Also, sadly, almost every US consular officer has had to handle more than enough unexpected deaths of US citizens in their district.

Emergency Financial Assistance for U.S. Citizens Abroad

As for being stuck in Nigeria or anywhere else due to being arrested, see

Kathryn Berck's answer to Has any American been to jail in a foreign country, and the US embassy hardly helped?

PS: Added - If you're stuck in Nigeria due to a Covid-related travel ban, take advantage of your stay to eat as many different Nigerian dishes as possible. they are all wonderful.

And go shopping at the Lekke Market, where the handsomest, sexiest men on earth work.

Related Links

If I want to travel to Nigeria from the US, which embassy should grant me Visa, US embassy or the Nigerian embassy in the US? If the US embassy, then where exactly is it located in the U.S.?

Why does the US embassy look for a travel history of an applicant in Nigeria to decide whether the applicant can be granted a visa or not?

Where is the Nigerian Embassy?

What can I do if NVC said US embassy in Nigeria is not accepting new Visa Applications as of March 22, 2021?

Is the US embassy in Nigeria working now? Can I apply for a US visa now?

Can a student whose immigrant case is still in administrative processing in the US embassy in Nigeria get a student visa?

When will US embassy in Nigeria open for 2021?
Is the US embassy in Nigeria currently open or closed?

Why does the US embassy deny Nigerians that have had kids in the US previously renewal visa?

Master's Degree in Public Administration, Syracuse University Oct 30
What would happen if a U.S. embassy was attacked in another country?

Is Africa poor because it is corrupt or corrupt because it is poor?

Paul Denlinger Africa is poor because of colonialism.

Colonialism exploited Africa for its natural resources, exported them, process them into finished products sold all over, and built western multinational corporations. Please note that these western colonialists never gave Africans the means and technology to move up the value chain by setting up factories in African nations so that the people could benefit from their own native commodities being turned into finished products. The real money was made outside Africa in the UK, France and other developed nations.

The colonials and then multinationals justified this policy by arguing that Africans are dumb and lazy.

The native Africans were left at the very bottom of the value chain, and had no way to climb out. The few Africans who made money were those who collaborated with the western colonialists in managing their fellow Africans and keeping them at the bottom of the value chain.

After the African nations became independent, many of these former colonial collaborators became political leaders, and they continued to promote the view that Africans were dumb and lazy, while they squirreled their private fortunes in Swiss, British and French banks, and spent their summers in Europe staying in luxury hotels. In order to stay in power and protect their wealth, they continued to promote the view that they were the only people who knew how to manage their fellow Africans, who were dumb and lazy.

This is gradually beginning to change with Chinese investment in Africa, which is not based on colonial-style exploitation. It is based on the simple trade model which the Chinese have practiced for centuries: "If you give us this amount of your commodity, we will build a stadium, road, hospital, schools for you". The Chinese believe that everyone wants development, and that this can only be achieved when basic infrastructure is built in the country. The Chinese are applying in Africa the lessons they have learned from China's development over the past 40+ years.

Colonialism was built on extracting value from Africa, not on investing in infrastructure.

The narrative that Africa is poor because of corruption is a story put out by western developed countries and their African lackeys as an excuse for their refusal to invest in developing Africa's infrastructure for Africans. Ultimately, it is a racist argument used to justify White superiority.

Related Links

Why do we have so many resources in Africa yet the people wallow in poverty?
Is Africa poor because it is corrupt or corrupt because it is poor?

If Africa is poor and backward because of colonialism, why is Ethiopia also poor and backward although it was never colonised?

Are the African people actually poor?

Why are Africans the only ones who never recovered from colonization?

Is Africa poor because of colonization? If colonization never happened, how would Africa have been?

Why are African countries that are mineral rich still poor?

Africans often claim that European colonialism made Africa poor, does that mean that Africans were well off before European colonialism?

Which is the poorest African country?
Why is Africa a poor region, even though it has the best natural resources?

Why did Sub Saharan Africa excluding the Horn of Africa not have any major civilizations or structures?

Françoise Marie

For a very good reason : anti-black racism.

The Horn of Africa is geostrategically located opposite the Arabian Peninsula.

Ancient civilizations in the Horn of Africa can be attributed to the descendants of Eurasian settlers who mixed with the locals. It means that no Blacks can ever achieve greatness without having Eurasian ancestry or tutellage.

Truth be told, greatness can emerge anywhere in the world.

The DRC, my country, was specifically targeted during the Scramble for African Art in Central Africa.

There were huge Collection Travels and Expeditions in the Upper Nile Region along the Congo-Nile Divide in the Great Lakes Region where the basins of the Nile and Congo intersect. None of them are covered in history textbooks books in the West on African history.

https://www.researchgate.net/publication/273440032_Ivories_in_the_Uele_Region_Tradition_and_Innovation

There were also international teams of archeologists, anthropologists, botanists who organized expeditions like the American Museum Congo Expedition. The expedition spent 7 years (1909–1915) collecting specimens, and ethnological objects. Who knows about all these expeditions? What was their ultimate purpose?

Institution: Multiple institutions Subjects: BHL Collections: By: Allen, J. A. (Joel Asaph), - American Museum Congo Expedition (1909-1915) - Chapin, James P. (James Paul), - Lang, Herbert, Edition: Publication info: 1922 Volume: Series: Holding Institution: American Museum of Natural History Library Subjects: BHL Collections: By: American Museum Congo Expedition (1909-1915) - Shoemaker, Clarence R., Edition: Publication info: 1920 Volume: Series: Holding Institution: American Museum of Natural History Library Subjects: BHL Collections: By: American Museum Congo Expedition (1909-1915) - Bailey, Irving W. (Irving Widmer), Edition: Publication info: 1922 Volume: Series: Holding Institution: American Museum of Natural History Library Subjects: BHL Collections: By: American Museum Congo Expedition (1909-1915) - American Museum of Natural History. Department of Mammalogy. - Chapin, James P. (James Paul), - Lang, Herbert, - O'Leary, Ruth, Edition: Publication info: 2003 Volume: Series: Holding Institution: American Museum of Natural History Library Subjects: BHL Collections: By: American Museum Congo Expedition (1909-1915) - Chapin, James P. (James Paul), - Hatt, Robert T. (Robert Torrens), - Lang, Herbert, Edition: Publication info: 1933 Volume: Series: Holding Institution: American Museum of Natural History Library Subjects: BH

A Belgian archeologist, Professor Heinzelin, made an incredible “discovery” in the DRC at the border between the DRC and Uganda at the Ishango village, a fishermen settlement near Lake Edward. The Congolese Ishango Bone is the oldest table of prime numbers dated between 20 000 and 28 000 years old. Ishango Bone Alison S. Brooks, David M. Helgren, et al, "Dating and Context of Three Middle Stone Age Sites with Bone Points in the Upper Semliki Valley, Zaire," Science, New Series, vol. 268, no. 5210 (Apr. 28, 1995), pp. 548-553. Index to Mathematical Treasures Frank J. Swetz (The Pennsylvania State University), "Mathematical Treasure: Ishango Bone," Convergence (March 2014)

Historical deception has been used once again. What were they all really doing along the Congo-Nile Divide?

Who or what inspired them all in order to look for answers about early human history along the Congo-Nile Divide?

Who or what guided Professor Heinzelin to this particular village along the Congo-Nile Divide?

Africa was never the Dark Continent.

Europeans went to Africa in order to fill the holes on ancient maps.

Africa was a puzzle and they already had a lot of pieces of the puzzle from the Romans, the Greeks, the 15–17th Portuguese and the Dutch explorers and more importantly, the Arabs. Arabs had mapped Central Africa as deep as Central DRC (Kasai and Equateur) and Southern Africa as far as the Comoros.

European historians knew more about Africa than we have been taught. They must have gathered information about the Upper Nile Region during the pillage of libraries in Egypt.

Not only ancient and modern Egyptians, but also their own African acenstors. There are striking similarities between several African languages and European languages, particularly Latin languages and Latin itself.Books have been written about all these similarities. The Roman Empire must have attracted countless Africans from afar who had a major cultural impact, Hence, a shared lexicon.

In addition, the Romans and the Greeks had trading partners in Africa south of the Sahara, including the Zanj (Bantu Blacks) as far as Rhapta in Tanzania. Rhapta was a Roman trading post. The Western Indian Ocean was once called the Azanian Sea, the Sea of Zanj.

Ancient Egyptians wrote that they migrated from inner Africa at the source of the Nile. Where is the source of the Nile? In the Great Lakes Region. There are several ethnic groups, Bantu speakers, in the region who call their God Muntu. Ancient Egyptians also prayed to a Montu God.

Sub-Saharan Africans, except Horners, never carved or built in stone. This is no surprise. It is a negrophobic statement.

Before Rome, there was Nok. The Nok culture in Nigeria predates Rome. The Nok culture is famous for its terra-cottas. Some of them are over 1 meter high.

Before London, there was Djenne. Djenne in Mali is one of the oldest cities on earth. Actually, West Africa can boast about the earliest walled cities in the 4th.

Niger River Valley civilizations of West Africa are purposely omitted from history textbooks in the West. The same applies to the Djado Castle Complex in Niger or the Great Walls of Benin in Edo state (Nigeria).

Central Africa is the darkest place in Africa where time stopped and nothing remarkable ever happened.

Not a word on the Sao Civilization in Cameroon and Chad.
Not a word on the Mandara stone fortresses in Cameroon.
Not a word on the Bouar megalithic civilization in the Central African Republic.
Southern Africa is well known for the great Zulu warriors.

The Monomotapa Empire and its Zimbabwe complex of 300 stone walled cities as far as South Africa, are not well known in the West. Yet, the Portuguese and the Dutch visited the Great Mutapa, the Great Lord of the Mines, in the 16th.

It is still a mystery why the oldest gold mining town in Australia is named Sofala. Sofala was the main seaport of the Golden Monomotapa Empire in present day Mozambique. Toponymics reveal key information about ancient contacts, migrations and trade networks.

Related Links

Why wasn't Sub Saharan Africa able to build advanced civilisations like many other parts of the world even despite humans living there longer than anywhere else?

Unlike other continents, why hasn't there been any big and powerful civilization in sub-Saharan Africa?

Why did Ethiopia develop into an advanced civilization while most of sub Saharan Africa didn't?

Why wasn't Sub Saharan Africa able to build advanced civilisations like many other parts of the world even despite humans living there longer than anywhere else?

Why did Sub-Saharan Africa, in its history, never give birth to an empire that explored far outside Africa?

Why did Africa fail to develop a sophisticated civilization that could compete with Asian and European civilizations?

Why do black African countries have so little history and cultural heritage compared to other parts of the world? Why don't they have their old cities, temples, cathedrals and mosques? Why doesn't Africa have a rich literary and cultural heritage?

Why didn't sub Saharan Africans build any grand structures. I know about great Zimbabwe I know about the Malian mosques and all but neither are speacial the main. The exception being Ethiopia with the cave churches?

Did "primitive" Sub-Saharan African tribes use the wheel before Europeans showed them how to use it? Why were there no ancient

BREAKING!!! Boko Haram Terrorists Fire Rockets At Borno Airport As President Buhari Visits Maiduguri

News Nigeria · Follow Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Thu

Boko Haram terrorists have fired rockets at Ngomari Airport area in Maiduguri as President Muhammadu visits the city today, Igbere TV has learnt.

According to DAILY NIGERIAN, one of the missiles landed at Ajilari Cross area, also near Maiduguri airport where there is a military base.

Sources said one person died at Ngomari, while others sustained injuries at Ajilari area.

Does Nigeria have a major lingua franca besides pidgin?

Peter Josefsson

Son of a mother who taught German, English and Swedish Updated 2y

My ex girlfriend was from Nigeria and I'm a google-maniac, so when, two years after we broke up, I got an African customer (he hadn't specified nationality), the following transpired when he showed the sketches for the site he wanted:

Me: Ah, it's Nigeria, and your thought is to assign each state one of the recognized minority languages (Yoruba, Igbo, Hausa) and let the subscribers pick that or English for their ads. Correct?

Customer (one eyebrow raised): Correct.

Me: So that's 37 states to track, no problem.

Customer: 36.

Me: Yes, of course, but the system will treat the FCT as a state, same but different.

Me again: By the way, out of curiosity, which language will you assign to Abuja, sorry, the FCT? Yoruba?

Customer (now both eyebrows raised): No, Hausa.

Me: Yes OF COURSE, I'm stupid. President Buhari is a northener, so obviously it's Hausa now that he's the new president.

Customer: WHY DO YOU KNOW THIS? YOU'RE A SWEDE!

Lots of laughs and beers later, the customer is not only a customer but a good friend. He's Yoruba (born close to the Edo border - my ex girlfriend is Edo) and lives in Gothenburg, Sweden, but the company has staff in Lagos.

To the point:

The official language in Nigeria is English, and with few exceptions (far north and far south), kids learn it well in school.

There are about 200 traditional languages spoken as well. Kids think those are uncool, and mostly stick to English except when talking to grandma (in most but not all regions).

Three of the traditional languages - Hausa in the north, Yoruba in the southwest, Igbo in the east - are “recognized”.

Everybody knows “Brokin'”, which is NOT pidgin. It's a CREOLE language (you may google that). WRONG - see edit 3.

Brokin' (Nigerian creole) is used between people who don't know English (i.e. old or poor) and don't have the same traditional language. EDIT 2: Or who feel like it. As a commenter noted, it can give a conversation another feeling than English.

I tried to get my then girlfriend to teach me Brokin' but she refused - even though she grew up poor, she felt that Brokin' was for losers. Sadly, she felt the same about Edo.

She taught me some cool stuff in Nigerian English, though:

On and off can be verbs. “On it!” is a lot better than “turn it on!”, for example.

It's quite OK to say that something is “more better”. Even senators do.

There's a gas in the kitchen. In most cases, it's an electric gas, but it may be a gas gas.

Also, both my ex (Edo) and my customer/friend (Yoruba) tend to drop consonants. I suspect that's because their traditional languages stress vowels and use tones. I once spent an hour trying to figure out who my ex' enemy (foe) was. Turned out to be her phone.

My mom is a retired English-teacher. One of the first things they told her was “there is no English; there are the Englishes.” True.

EDIT: Why I think it's sad that my ex scorns Edo? Edo is also known as Bini, and it's the language of the ancient Kingdom of Benin, who, among other things, erected one of the largest structures known to man - the Walls of Benin (parts still visible in Benin City). So in a way, I feel that she should be a proud daughter of the Oba (the king). Then again, nationalism and progress have never been friends, so perhaps it's best as is. Maybe national pride works best in history books.

EDIT 3: This is wrong, my information was old or incorrect. Now, Wikipedia says (in a complicated way) that it's either but mostly pidgin, and Nigerian commentators say pidgin. My bad.

Related Links

Should Nigeria standardize its pidgin English and make it its official language?

Are there any cities in Nigeria (100k+) where the dominant spoken language and/or lingua franca, among all generations, is still the native language and not Nigerian Pidgin? Obviously excluding Northern states where Hausa serves as the lingua franca.

What are the benefits of giving a pidgin language like Nigerian Pidgin English an official status?

Why is English used as a lingua franca in Nigeria?
Does the Yoruba language have more speakers than other native languages in Nigeria?
Do you love the Nigerian Pidgin?

What local language in Nigeria (except English) has been gaining ground in the last 3 decades? Is it Hausa, Yoruba, or other?

Before English, what language was the lingua franca?
How well does English play the role of lingua franca in Nigeria?
What should be the lingua franca of India?
What is the importance of the English language? Is it a lingua-franca in Nigeria?
What hinders Nigerian languages to select one as a lingua franca?
Is Nigerian English or Nigerian Pidgin the common lingua franca of Nigeria?

Why isn't English the universal lingua franca when it's the best language? Other languages don't even sound good.

Is English the ideal lingua franca?

Is Lagos, Nigeria a safe place for work?

Ganiya · Follow Lives in Lagos, Nigeria (1998–present) Wed

Lagos City is just like New York City. The only difference is that the former is developing and the latter is developed. Lagos is for the strong minded. Lagos is a city for hustlers. If you have a big dream and you want to fulfill it big time, Lagos is the best place to do that.

Contrary to what people think, that Lagos is dangerous or unsafe. Well, I think we need to understand that every city full of dream chasers is dangerous. Lagos is a mega city, a place to hustle and fufill your dreams. And it's expensive too. ☐

Related Links

What is a good salary for expats working in Lagos, Nigeria?
Is Lagos, Nigeria a safe place for expats to live in? Why?
Where can someone purchase unlimited Wi-Fi in Lagos, Nigeria?
Is it better to live in Lagos or Abuja?
What is the most dangerous neighborhood in Lagos, Nigeria?
What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?
Where is the best place to stay in Lagos, Nigeria?
What if I take only $300 to Lagos Nigeria? Can I live off this?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
How safe is it to work in Nigeria?

Recently, I got a job in Lagos, Nigeria, yet people are frustrating me saying that it is not safe. Is it true?

What should I know before coming to Lagos, Nigeria?
How is life in Nigeria?
I'm relocating to Nigeria how do I prepare to live in lagos?

How can I find out for sure if there is a military base in Lagos, Nigeria? How do I find a soldier and do a background check?

News Nigeria

Blessing Okagbare has been banned for 10 years for multiple doping violations by the Athletics Integrity Unit (AIU).

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 58m

She was handed a 5 year ban for the presence and use of prohibited substances and another 5 year ban for her refusal to co-operate with the investigation.

Disciplinary Tribunal hands Blessing Okagbare a 10-year ban for multiple breaches of the Anti-Doping Rules

18 FEBRUARY 2022, MONACO: The Disciplinary Tribunal has banned Nigerian sprinter Blessing Okagbare for a total of 10 years, five years for the presence and use of multiple prohibited substances and five years for her refusal to co-operate with the AIU's investigation into her case.

The sole arbitrator adjudicating the case concluded that the athlete's use of multiple prohibited substances as part of an organised doping regimen in the lead up to the Tokyo Olympic Games was egregious conduct that amounted to aggravating circumstances under the Rules thereby warranting an additional period of ineligibility on top of the standard four-year sanction.

The sole arbitrator also recognised the AIU's right to carry out investigations, including the imaging of electronic devices, and to impose sanctions when an athlete refuses to co-operate with an investigation and thereby frustrates the AIU's ability to fulfil its mandate to protect the integrity of the sport of athletics. In this instance, the sole arbitrator concluded that the athlete's refusal to cooperate had denied the AIU the opportunity to discover evidence of possible further rule violations by her as well possible violations of the rules by others, for which he imposed an additional sanction of five years.

"We welcome the decision of the Disciplinary Tribunal; a ban of 10-year is a strong message against intentional and co-ordinated attempts to cheat at the very highest level of our sport. This is an outcome that was driven by our intelligence-led target testing as well as our commitment to investigate the circumstances behind a positive test," said Brett Clothier, Head of the AIU.

On 07 October 2021, the Athletics Integrity Unit (AIU) had pressed charges against Ms Okagbare in relation to separate disciplinary matters. First, for the presence and use of multiple (two) prohibited substances (human Growth Hormone (hGH) and recombinant erythropoietin (EPO)) for which Ms Okagbare had been provisionally suspended on 31 July 2021, the day on which she had been scheduled to participate in the semi-finals of the Tokyo 2020 women's 100m. Subsequently, in accordance with Rule 12 of the World Athletics Anti-Doping Rules, she was charged with a refusal to co-operate with the AIU's investigation into her case.

The athlete has the right to appeal against the Disciplinary Tribunal's decision at the Court of Arbitration for Sport (CAS) within 30-days. The reasoned decision can be accessed here.

NOTE

On 12 January 2022, the US Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York announced the unsealing of a first criminal charge under the Rodchenkov Anti-Doping Act against Eric Lira, a US based "naturopathic" therapist, who is alleged to have supplied performance enhancing drugs to athletes before the Tokyo Olympic Games. The sole arbitrator concluded that Athlete 1 named in the criminal complaint is Blessing Okagbare. The criminal investigation in the United States is ongoing and the AIU is working closely with USADA to follow developments in the matter. The AIU is thankful to USADA, the FBI and the US Attorney's Office for their contribution to the integrity of our sport.

- ENDS -

About the Athletics Integrity Unit

The Athletics Integrity Unit (AIU) is the independent body created by the World Athletics that manages all integrity issues - both doping and non-doping - for the sport of athletics. The remit of the AIU includes anti-doping, the pursuit of individuals engaged in age or competition results manipulation, investigating fraudulent behaviour with regards to transfers of allegiance, and detecting other misconduct including bribery and breaches of betting rules. It is the AIU's role to drive cheats out of our sport, and to do everything within its power to support honest athletes around the world who dedicate their lives to reaching their sporting goals through dedication and hard work.

Athletics Integrity Unit

Media Contact: Aditya Kumar, Head of Communications

M: +33 (0) 6 40 61 97 26

media@athleticsintegrity.org www.athleticsintegrity.org

- @aiu_athletics
- @aiu.athletics
- @aiu_athletics

How can we end corruption in Africa, especially in Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor, Storyteller Answered Thu

Nigeria's economy at present runs on corruption. And those who are hugely invested are making sure things remain as it is or deteriorate below this level. The way Nigerians complain about their leaders, one would wonder if we're being governed by Aliens.

The leaders we're complaining about today were once youths and they did exactly what the youths are doing today, complaining and promising to do better when elected, but that rarely happens.

Someone once said Nigeria is a classless society. That what corrupt politicians do at the top is what you're going to experience from ordinary Nigerians on the streets.

For people to end a thing, they would have to hate it. Corruption has become a way of life here.

Nigerians have a history of electing vagabonds as leaders only to fast and pray for God to touch their hearts to govern right.

Then we learn our lessons by voting the same corrupt man for a second term, after which they become political godfathers, single-handedly presenting the next lapdog to take over from him.

Sometimes one wonders if Nigerians have suffered enough at all as we end up making the same mistakes decade after decade.

The average Nigerian only hates corruption when he's not benefiting from it.

We don't like waiting. We want to achieve all we want right now and it doesn't matter whose head we step on, and which laws we break to get there.

With this lifestyle, it would be difficult to turn back the hands on this sinking ship.

Related Links

How do you reduce or stop corruption in Nigeria?
Why is corruption so rife in Africa?

Why do we have so much corruption? How can it be dealt with and stopped in most parts of Africa?

If you were the Nigerian president what would you do to end corruption in Nigeria?

How can we end corruption in third world countries especially Nigeria? Is it even possible?

What are the names of people who stop the corruption in Nigeria?
How do we rate corruption in Africa?

How can the corruption in Nigeria be fixed when the people have no clue on how to fix it?

Apart from corruption, what are your major concerns about Nigeria, as a Nigerian?

What can we do to stop corruption in Nigeria? Especially the scam that spoils Nigerian names.

Why are almost all African governments so corrupt even though they have more resources than some of the developed countries in the world?

What will happen if for a whole month there was no corruption in Nigeria?
How much corruption is in the Nigerian government?
Will Africa ever be free from corruption?
Why are African leaders so corrupt?

Wake Up Africa!

Two top Nigerian president Buhari's ministers were caught engaging in gruesome crimes of importing fake petroleum & international drug trafficking.

Posted by Chibueze R. Nath 2h

Two top Nigerian president Buhari's ministers were caught engaging in gruesome crimes of importing fake petroleum & international drug trafficking. Any society that allows the voice of those been chosen to speak out for vulnerable people to shut down, that society hardly progresses or amounts to something good. Check the history, any nation that killed people for disagreeing with the government or for campaigning the best for a certain section of the nation doesn't excel. And such a nation will either struggle to stand or its people are engaged in various crimes acts.

The illegal holding of Sunday Igboho & Nnamdi Kanu by Nigeria department of secret service means looting of public funds, injustice, tribalism & criminal activities to flourished & go unchecked in Nigeria.

Recently DCP Abba Kyari the second-in-command of Nigerian police force was caught dealing with illegal drug trafficking. Whereas the Nigeria minister of petroleum Chief Timipre Sylva conspired with other distributing patrol companies in Nigeria to import fake patrol from Belgium. He is yet to be charged too.

In fact, Nigeria's parliament is begging Buhari's lead government to somehow punish them...

This is a big shame & disgrace to the highest for all Nigerians & lovers of freedom.

Now can you imagine why many ethnic groups are calling for Nigeria's total restructure of the constitution or call for a referendum? Nigeria's system has already exceeded damage control & maximum points for a corrupt & lawless nation to stand.

The solution now is either Nigeria is disintegrated immediately or referendum to amend or separate the nation peacefully.

If not, criminal activities, killings, corruption, negligence, illegal drug trafficking &, etc will continue to increase than reduce because the system from top to the lowest is dysfunctional and delusion.

If the majority of Nigeria claimed a genuine Muslim Or Christians, they will voice out for these two solutions stated here. Do you think Nigeria deserved to stay as one nation?

LET'S DISCUSS!

Wake Up Africa!
THE COUNTRY CALLED NIGERIA

Posted by Chibueze R. Nath

God Does Not Author Confusion

Imagine A 14 year-old cannot be admitted into university to study, but a 13 year-old can be married.

A primary school certificate holder cannot become a director in the civil service, but a primary school certificate holder can become president and commander-in-chief of the entire country.

The country is among the major oil producing countries in the world, but it imports the fuel it consume.

The country has the highest number of foreign doctors in the UK and America, but its leaders travel abroad for their medical needs.

The country shoots harmless protesters, but hold peace parleys with bandits.

The country rehabilitates terrorists, but their victims lavish in refugee camps.

God did not create any country.

He located human beings in different territories and gave them all empowerments to survive.

Whatever they turn out to be is entirely their choices and decisions.

UAE and Qatar are deserts converted to paradise.
Nigeria is paradise converted to hell.
Nigeria is an epitome of confusion, and God is not the author of its confusion.

Have you lived in Nigeria your whole life, or know someone who has? If so, how has life been being chased by lions and wild animals, do you even get scared to go outside?

Osazua Iruedo

I have lived in Nigeria for 30 years now and I can proudly tell you it’s so much fun to be chased by lions and wild animals on our streets. They don’t chase us because they want to eat us, they only chase us when we are playing the hide and seek game with them.

Do we get scared of going out?

No.

We love animals. Why should we be scared to go out when tigers and lions are not seen as wild animals but family. They are our family .

Lions come to say Hi when they are bored

Communication is sweet too except they are in a bad mood

We stroll to the mall to buy biscuit and ice cream sometimes

In this decade someone still believes wild animals roam the streets of Nigeria and Africa. God will help us.

News Nigeria

NIGERIA WILL FURTHER RESEARCH ON ENERGY SUPPLY

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 12h

The Minister of Science, Technology and Innovation, Dr. Ogbonnaya Onu has said that Nigeria will join other countries of the world to exploit atomic materials for more energy supply.

The Minister made this known at the validation workshop of the draft revised national energy policy and its related master plan in Abuja at the beginning of the week.

Dr. Onu said Nigeria is watching with keen interest, the research ongoing in many countries on nuclear fusion technology for energy use. In his words, “The progress made in this research may appear small, but it is very significant and important in energy generation. The countries involved in this research in nuclear fusion, are planning to achieve energy sufficiency in the future”

According to the minister, a national energy policy and master plan are imperative to guide energy development in a coordinated manner. He added that the policy is important as it is actively sought after by investors, development partners and scholars who intend to use it for the development of this sector.

He said “While the National Energy Policy (NEP) provided policies for long term coordinated energy development for our energy security in an environmentally sustainable manner and with active participation of the private sector, the energy master plan provides the roadmap for achieving the policy objectives through activities and programmes with timelines”

Energy, according to Dr. Onu, affects development in all sectors of the economy, such as transportation, health, agriculture, industry, education, security etc.

The Minister of state for Science, Technology and Innovation, Barrister Mohammed Abdullahi said that the National Energy Policy is a policy, which articulates the way and manner the government intends to develop its energy sector, adding that it provides the general roadmap for the achievement of the policy objectives with timelines.

He further said with this development in the energy and its related sectors, local and international energy commissions will draft out policies to help reduce the impact of Covid-19 on renewable energy and also provide a roadmap for sustainable energy solutions in Nigeria against future domestic and global challenges.

Back to the business of the day, the major stakeholders invited at the workshop having gone through the document and made thorough revisions of the document with contributions from professionals in the energy sector, the document was finally accepted by the participants at the workshop for onward approval by the Federal Executive Council.

Afonja Ajibola

DD Press and Pr

FMSTI

21ST February 2022.

PIX-6138, Hon. Minister of Science, Technology and Innovation Dr. Ogbonnaya Onu (3rd left), Hon. Minister of State for Science, Technology and Innovation, Barr. Mohammed H. Abdullahi (4th right), Permanent Secretary Federal Ministry of Science, Technology and Innovation Mr. Edet Sunday Akpan (2nd left), representative of Hon. Minister of FCT Engr. Shehu Hadi Ahmad (left), representative of Chairman House Committee on Science and Technology, Barr. Sam Nwogbodo (3rd right), Director-General Energy Commission of Nigeria Prof. Eli Jidere Bala (2nd right), and others At a One-Day Validation Workshop on the Draft Revised National Energy Policy and Its Related National Energy Master Plan in Abuja.

News Nigeria

Do you think Africa might have forgotten the sins of colonialism?

Related Links

In the following research assignment, what does the colon mean? "recent development in the sugar subsector in Nigeria: implications for sugarcane value chain development".

How can terrorism be tackled in Nigeria?

Americans don't beat their children but African do so to educate them, apart from environmental factors, how does that affect the moral compass of an African child?

Why have we not started raising girl-children who can become independent thinkers and contributors in most of Africa?

Is it really true that banks can't trace or track transaction that are defrauded from POS transaction. Alot of losses with POS transaction and bank account and yet bank or financial bodies don't do anything about it.. you hardly see anyone who has gotten a refund or charge back with bank helping out

What is the reason why most online jobs do not workout in Africa especially Google survey?

What is the name of the best forex broker for beginners in Nigeria, and why?

Why are there a lot of separatists in Africa? Can I say they are backed by foreign democracy?

How can one survive in a country like Nigeria with high insecurity, unemployment, and hyperinflation?

What do you like about Nigerian Nollywood movies?

What do you think the Nigerian Nollywood industry should implement to improve the quality of their movies?

What is the meaning of killing innocent people in Northern Nigeria?
Is a NIN slip the same as a national ID card?

How do I encourage people in Nigeria or any other countries to send their used laptop batteries and other battery packs to reclaim the 18650 cells for second life recycling?

Black History & Politics

A British- born Nigerian Computer Scientist Designed the First General Purpose multi-core CPU

Posted by Cheryl Brown 14h

" Meet Kunle Olukotun. Kunle is often called “the father of the multi-core processor.” He designed the first general-purpose multi-core CPU and pioneered huge multithreading breakthroughs, transactional memory technology, and parallel programming. He is a professor of Electrical Engineering and Computer Science at Stanford University and the director of the Stanford Pervasive Parallelism Lab. According to Google Scholar his research papers have been cited over 22,000 times! In the early 2000s he sold his company Afara Web Systems to Sun Microsystems. In 2017 he cofounded a new venture, SambaNova Systems which has raised 1.1 billion dollars (not a typo) including a 676 million dollar series D round with big names such as Softbank, Google Ventures and BlackRock valuing the company at over 5 billion."

Source: Jonathan Davis-LinKedIn

Cheryl Brown Content Strategist/Seo Copywriter Sun

Tom Brady played until he was 44. Satchel Paige almost played at 60. September 25, 1965: At age 59, Satchel Paige relaxes in a rocking chair in the bullpen, preparing for the final game of his career by having a nurse rub liniment on his pitching arm. Satchel would go on to toss 3 scoreless innings in his final appearance.
Source: Just Us - Up From Slavery

Why do militants and bandits continue to increase in Nigeria despite a huge amount being spent on security?

Victor Dirikebamor · Follow Storyteller Feb 15

The money spent on security is treating the symptoms and not the disease itself.
It's common knowledge that one can't maintain law and order in a place where survival, by all means, is the order of the day.

Nigeria is proudly the poverty capital of the world. The government hasn't done anything meaningful to pass this symbol of shame to some other country. We're holding on to it with our lives.

It's also common knowledge that the countries with the highest per capita income are also the most peaceful on the planet.

Dangerous crimes are almost nonexistent in such countries.

As such, it’s not surprising that Nigeria is the third most terrorized country on the planet.

Even here in Nigeria, the neighborhoods of the well-to-do are also the most peaceful while one can't even take a walk with expensive gadgets in the poorest areas without being robbed.

It's a fact then that poverty correlates with dangerous crimes.

Nigeria ranks very high on unemployment. With about 70 million Nigerians that should be in the workforce right now, around 23 million are said to be unemployed, which is about the entire population of Australia.

That's where it gets even scarier, that right about now, there are 23 million Nigerians who should be working that are not working, making themselves available to make a living through any means.

That is a security risk for any country but Nigeria.

Just as you can't tax poor, jobless people, the same way you can't expect them to obey the law. They would do anything to survive.

We have also heard of terrorists giving out loans in Northern Nigeria, recruiting vulnerable Nigerians to be part of their clique.

While there are cases of farmers paying bandits to protect them and their farms.

Terrorists are even doing what the government Is finding difficult to do.

Spending monies to strengthen the military is good, although we know what happens to the majority of those funds, but creating wealth and elevating the standard of living should be the government's top priority if we hope to win the war against banditry and militancy.

Engage Nigerians with gainful employment and see insecurity disappear into thin air.

An idle mind, they say, is the devil's workshop.

Related Links

Why would anyone in Nigeria buy dollars for 240 naira each on the black market?

What are the roles of a citizens in maintaining national security in Nigeria?

How can the corruption in Nigeria be fixed when the people have no clue on how to fix it?

How do the Uber-rich global elite guard themselves and family from outside dangers and threats? Are their security guards and defense systems, more potent and capable than a military special squad, if they were to repel an attack by extremists?

Why does an individual in the military want to send a civilian $15,000 because they don't have access to their money over in Nigeria?

Is it really possible to hack into surveillance cameras like they do in every movie?

Why does Nigeria have a problem with gunmen, bandits, and herdsmen killing, kidnapping, and causing a nuisance everywhere? Is the government powerless to control their country or are there other problems behind the scenes?

Why is Nigeria so corrupt?

Is the fight against banditry and kidnappings in Northern Nigeria still persist despite the huge amount of money voted into it? Why?

How do you reduce or stop corruption in Nigeria?
Why is the Nigerian government not naming the sponsors of bandits?
How do I buy a CCTV security system in Nigeria?
Why is it rocket science for Nigeria to have stable electricity?
What can 100 dollars American can buy me in Nigeria?
Why is the Nigerian government calling terrorists bandits?

How hard is life in Nigeria at the moment?

Victor Dirikebamor · Follow Storyteller Fri

Some of us deserve an award for surviving in Nigeria.

Before now it was the pandemic, causing the worst form of hardship in recent years.

Although lives were not seriously lost and the rate of infection was unimaginably low compared to many other countries but the other challenges that came with the pandemic like the "LockDowns" were seriously felt.

Many businesses in major cities closed down with no hope of reopening. A friend of mine lost his fashion business because he couldn't keep up with the rent while sitting at home.

Many lost their jobs. Businesses couldn't keep employees as they couldn't pay. Neither did they receive the required support from the government.

Then inflation sets in. This is quite common in Nigeria, taking advantage of scarcity to inflate prices of goods and keeping it up there even when goods become more available and the government seems to be clueless in tackling this challenge every single time.

For instance, you bought bread for N350 yesterday, today it could be N400.

There was this restaurant I frequent at Admiralty road. I ordered for my usual, I had not visited in a couple of weeks. When the bill came, I was to pay double what I usually pay. To add to that, I was to also pay a 7.5% value added tax to the governement.

Good thing I had the money. But that didn't stop me from expressing my frustration to the waitress, and the security on my way out. Assuring them they'll never see me there again. Well, I still went, with a friend this time around and ended up with a much bigger bill--docile Nigerian.

As if the hardship caused by insecurity, the pandemic, and inflation was not enough, fuel scarcity has also come to town. Hurray!

I saw car owners exchanging blows at the filling station just to get some petrol to drive on a road that could make for a death trap.

Some folks were bribing the security and the attendant who helped them jump the queue so they could get attended to quickly.

Petrol, the one thing Nigeria should have in excess is also scarce. Make it make sense!

The last time I filled my tank, I visited well over seven stations. They were all closed except one but the queue was as long as the third-mainland-bridge. And on top of that, the prices have gone way up and the meters have been adjusted and the quality of the petrol is at the bare minimum.

At a time Nigerians expect NEPA (the power authorities) to supply power more frequently as fuel is hard to come by to power auxiliary generators, but Nepa would just not supply power, and if they did, they won't let you enjoy it, as they never let go of the switch at their end—"ON, Off, ON again, Off. Alright, that's enough, it will calm them down for the next three days."

And to round it up for Nigerians, ASSU, the association of University professors has gone on strike to hamstring the government to allocate more funds to public Universities.

This means college students would have to sit at home until this is resolved. In the past, such strikes could take up to eight months before an understanding is met.

The Nigerian government allocating more funds to the University body is usually not part of their plans.

The government wants monies coming to them, not going out, so the strike is expected to linger.

Some Nigerians are hoping on the 2023 general elections to vote for a competent leader that would stair the ship of state to prosperity just like we voted in 2015 which never happened.

Others are in serious fasting and prayers, so the good Lord would touch the hearts of the leaders to act right by it's people. But that's only the second part of the prayer, the first part is for the good Lord, as a matter of urgency, send down riches from above like manner in bible times.

Whichever one that comes first, is fine by me. Although, I foresee an interesting few months to watch.

Related Links

How is life in Nigeria?
Why is life hard in Nigeria?
What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?
What are the best things about living in Nigeria?
Which part of Nigeria is the best to live?
What is life like in Northern Nigeria?
What is it like to live in Nigeria as an expat?
What is your best "only in Nigeria" moment?

What is life like in Nigeria? I'm South African and I've considered moving to Nigeria several times.

What are the pros and cons of living in Nigeria?
How do I get a job in the UK from Nigeria?
How is life like for Nigerians living in South Africa?

What's something unique about living in Nigeria that is unlike anywhere else in the world?

Why is life so hard in Nigeria right now and no one is saying or doing anything about it?

As a Nigerian, what does the most Nigerian thing ever look like?

What are the culture shocks for foreigners in Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor · Follow Lives in Lagos, NigeriaSat

Originally Answered: What are some of the biggest culture shock you have faced in Nigeria?

Child marriage.

Informed Nigerians know bits and pieces of what happens in other parts of the country but then, there is nothing compared to living amongst the people.

The first time I had cause to travel to the North was during my National Service. I got interested in martial arts and started taking classes in Karate.

My Karate Shihan, Garba, was a very simple Muslim with great integrity. I considered him smart as he could hold discussions on most topics.

Religion never came into play during our classes. That's how emotionally intelligent he was. I never really felt uncomfortable around him.

But my not being married at 26 was a topic of discussion now and then. The way he talked about it then sounded a bit like how my Mom talks about it now, a failure.

"No wonder you people marry older women."

My coach made that comment one day, and it changed how I used to think about him.

To him, girls in their twenties and thirties were old.

"We marry ladies very young. You enjoy women better in that age when her features are still developing."

I was shocked that this man, whom I considered learned, considered 12-year-olds a perfect age for marriage.

I realized how powerful indoctrination could be. Even those considered educated were not left out.

In attending Karate championships and training, I traveled to various Northern states that were predominantly Muslim, and this marry-them-young culture was quite common.

My thoughts were, how could these little kids even arouse interest in men?

It had not occurred to me to think of young girls at that age in any other way but kids, neither was such practice celebrated in my part of the country.

The average Nigerian seems nice until you question their religion or culture. One has to be emotionally intelligent to deal with many.

I consider life to be a learning process, hence I constantly re-evaluate my actions and beliefs and make changes if need be.

I wished the norm in every part of Nigeria would be to celebrate young people actualizing their dreams instead of being cajoled into early marriage.

Related Links

What is your biggest cultural shock from visiting America?
As a foreigner what culture shock did you experience in Nigeria?
What culture shocks can foreigners coming to Ireland expect?
What are the biggest culture shocks people face when coming to Lagos, Nigeria?
What are some cultural shocks that foreigners have experienced in South Korea?
What are some culture shocks you have ever experienced while in Africa?
What is the biggest culture shock you have faced in your own country?
Why do so many foreigners go to Nigeria and think Nigeria is good?
What is it like to work in Nigeria as a foreigner?
What are some good questions for foreigners about culture shock?
What culture shocks do you face coming to China for the first time?
What are the culture shocks foreigners experience in Central Europe?
Will the situation in Nigeria ever become stable and safe for foreigners?
What are cultural shocks for foreigners coming to Colombia?
What are the biggest culture shocks people face when coming to Brazil?

Where do the richest people live in Lagos, Nigeria?

Cornelius Pitor Lives in Lagos, Nigeria (1978–present) 3y

Lagos, Nigeria is divided into two sections known as the mainland and the island. There are quite a number of Rich people who live on the mainland in places like Magodo, GRA (Government Residential Area) on the mainland.

According to the demographic statics of areas where celebrities and famous people live, there are more celebrities and famous people who live on the island, in places like Lekki, VGC (Victoria Garden City), Victoria island, Banana island, Ikoyi etc. Most of them build or buy their houses in these places, the cost of living and renting apartments on the island is quite higher than the mainland. So imagine what it cost to own a house or houses there.

It's on this basis that I draw my conclusion that the Richest people in Lagos, Nigeria live on the island.

Related Links

How is life in Nigeria and Ghana for expats? Is it true that it is not safe to work there?
Is it a dangerous place to work at? Especially a city like Lagos?
How can I get laid in a country like Nigeria, Lagos as I am new here?
Is Lagos, Nigeria a safe place for expats to live in? Why?
What is the most dangerous neighborhood in Lagos, Nigeria?

What are some rules of living in Lagos, Nigeria?
How much salary would you need to live comfortably in Lagos, Nigeria?
Which area of Lagos, Nigeria has the best supply of electricity?
I'm relocating to Nigeria how do I prepare to live in lagos?
What should I know before coming to Lagos, Nigeria?
What advice would you give to a 'white man' going to Nigeria, Lagos for the first time and will be staying there for 3 months?
How dangerous is Lagos for Americans or other Westerners to visit?
How did you become successful in Lagos, Nigeria against all odds?
What is it like to work in Nigeria as a foreigner?
What is a good salary for expats working in Lagos, Nigeria?
Where can I get to play lawn tennis in Lagos, Nigeria?

News Nigeria
The First Lady Who Served As Police Officer Throughout Her Tenure

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 20h

Madam Clara Ogbemudia was a serving police officer throughout her period as first lady of Mid West state.

On the 20th of August 1975, Assistant Suprintendent of Police Mrs Clara Ogbemudia and 94 other officers of the Nigerian Police were prematurely retired

They were victims of the civil service purge of the Murtala regime.

One other retired officer was the terror of "danfo and molue" drivers, Mrs M. Oyebade, popularly known as Mama Toyin.

Over 10,000 civil servants lost their jobs during the purge.

Note:

In July 1975, when Brig. Gen. Murthala Mohammed became Head of State, he retired the twelve military Governors who had served under Major Gen. Yakubu Gowon amongst who was husband to Clara Ogbemudia and Military Governor of the Mid-Western State, Brigadier Samuel Aigbovo Ogbemudia.

Samuel Ogbemudia died on the 9th of March 2017 at aged 84 years old having been born in 1932.

Now you know more

News Nigeria
TROOPS RECORDS MORE SUCCESSES AGAINST ISWAP/BOKO HARAM TERRORISTS

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 19h

In continuation of NA clearance operations & dominating the battlefield, troops of 402 SF Brigade yesterday 21 Feb 2022 neutralized several ISWAP/BHT terrorists at Timbuktu Triangle in Borno State. Troops recovered large cache of Weapons, Bombs, 1 Mowag APC, 1 TCV amongst others.

Infinix NOTE 8

Infinix NOTE 8

Similarly, troops 26 Task Force brigade conducted clearance operation & aggressive patrol to Fadagwe village and adjoining settlements in Borno State. The terrorists withdrew in disarray due to troops superior firepower. Several operational vehicles of the terrorists were recovered

News Nigeria

PRESIDENT BUHARI: LEADERS WHO SWEAR BY THE HOLY BOOK MUST NOT ABUSE PUBLIC OFFICE

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Answered Apr 25, 2021

President Muhammadu Buhari on Thursday in Lafia said leaders who take the oath of office, swearing with the Holy Book, must be careful not to abuse the trust of leadership placed on them by the people and God. Speaking at a courtesy visit to the palace of Emir of Lafia, retired Justice Sidi Bage Muhammad 1 , the President reaffirmed that he has no intention whatsoever to stay beyond the constitutionally recognised two terms of office as leader of Nigeria.

''The traditional ruler is on a terminal appointment. Constitutionally, we (elected public office holders) are not. I cannot go beyond two terms and I have sworn by the Holy Quran that I will uphold the Constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria.

''Politics apart, whenever we are made to swear by the Holy Quran, we have to be very careful. We must make sure that we do not abuse the trust God has given us as leaders.

''I have seen former Governors here and I am looking forward to also becoming a former President,'' he said.

President Buhari thanked the people of Nasarawa State for a rousing welcome, expressing delight that the North-Central State was wearing a new look since his last visit in 2019.

He congratulated the immediate past Governor and Senator representing Nasarawa South Senatorial District, Umaru Tanko Al-Makura and the incumbent, Governor Abdullahi Sule for the laudable initiatives and accomplishments in the State.

Welcoming the President to the over 200-year old palace, the Emir of Lafia thanked him for ending the problem of insufficient power to Nasarawa State with the provision of 330kVA sub-station.

The Emir, who is also the Chairman, Nasarawa State Council of Chiefs, told the President that the provision of the electricity plant ''has taken out 80 percent of our problem.''

''Our people have never had it so good. Our people are back to their normal life as entrepreneurs, '' he said, adding that the Federal Government projects that were ''standing as ghosts'' in the state in the past have now become a reality.

The retired jurist listed the newly inaugurated CBN Building in Lafia, the Federal Secretariat, UBEC Smart School and completed Ecological projects, just to mention but a few.

On arrival in the capital for his 2-day State Visit to Nasarawa, President Buhari inaugurated the Lafia Airport, Vocational and Skills Acquisition Centre, Modern Bus Terminal and the Shinge-Barkini Abdullahi-Kilema road, executed by the State Government.

He also inaugurated CBN Lafia Branch building and a 330kva Akurba Transmission Substation executed by the Federal Government through the Niger Delta Power Holding Company (NDPHC) to boost power supply in the state and its environs.

Femi Adesina

Special Adviser to the President

(Media & Publicity)

February 24, 2022

What is China's intention of giving a loan to most African countries?

Thomas Lee

Multinational Senior Executive Jan 27

China and the western world have very different mentality.

China believes in trade. The more countries of the world get richer, the more China can trade with them and get richer together. Therefore, China is trying to get rich together with as many countries as possible.

The West on the other hand believes it must keep as many countries and peoples of the world weak and poor, and many even dead, so the West can continue their domination of the world ideologically, politically, and militarily.

USAF CENTRAL COMMAND COMBINED AIR OPERATIONS CENTER
2020 AIRPOWER-SUMMARIES, INSTITUTE FOR POLICY STUDIES

US vs China

DROPPED
70,000 BOMBS
IN 5 COUNTRIES

DROPPED
100,000 BOMBS
IN 7 COUNTRIES

DROPPED MORE THAN
73,000 BOMBS
IN 5 COUNTRIES

DROPPED
2+ BILLIONS VACCINES
IN 60+ COUNTRIES

PRESIDENT OBAMA HOLDS THE WORLD
RECORD FOR THE MOST CHILDREN KILLED BY A NOBEL PEACE PRIZE WINNER.

www.politico.com

U.S. won't share vaccine before all Americans receive shots, officials say 18 Feb 2021 — Poor countries and global health advocates have been pushing wealthy nations to share some of their supply, warning that the inequitable...

https://www.ft.com › content

US will not send vaccines to developing countries until supply improves

18 Feb 2021 — The US will not donate any coronavirus vaccine doses to developing countries until there is a plentiful supply of jabs in the US, ...

https://www.nbcnews.com › us-news

15 million Covid vaccine doses thrown away in the US since March - NBC News

1 Sept 2021 — Walgreens reported the most waste of any pharmacy, state or other vaccine provider, with nearly 2.6 million wasted...

https://www.nbcnews.com › us-news

The U.S. is discarding millions of Covid vaccines. One cause: Multi-dose vials.

23 Sept 2021 — The CDC's data doesn't include vaccines wasted by several states...

https://www.theguardian.com › oct

US throws out millions of doses of Covid vaccine as world goes wanting 16 Oct 2021 — One study based on CDC ...

“Despite its claim to be a global leader on COVID-19, the US is hoarding nearly 500 million excess COVID-19 vaccine doses—more than any other country,” said Dr. Carrie Teicher, director of programs at MSF-USA. 11 Oct 2021 https://www.doctorswithoutborders.org › ...

US must stop hoarding excess COVID-19 vaccine doses - Doctors Without Borders

About featured snippets Feedback

Politics

Canada has ordered more than 400 million COVID-19 vaccine shots: Here's the progress report

Six months into vaccination campaign, some companies have delivered while others are a work in progress

John Paul Tasker - CBC News

Posted: May 21, 2021
Last Updated: May 26, 2021

MENU CBCNEWS

Politics

Canada to take COVAX vaccines, won't share doses until every Canadian is inoculated: Anand

Despite getting 2M more doses in first quarter than planned, vaccine schedule not being moved up

Peter Zimonjic, Catherine Cullen - CBC News

Posted: March 05, 2021

Last Updated: March 05, 2021

Related Links

China loans to African countries. Is it for the benefit of China or Africa?

How is it that China can lend huge amounts of money to countries in Africa, for instance, but the US can't do it? The US is a much richer country.

In what ways are African countries benefiting from investments by China?

How is China able to lend so much money to African and Asian countries?
What happens to African countries when they can't repay their debt to China?
Why is China controlling the economy of most African countries?

Instead of criticising African nations for accepting Chinese loans, why doesn't the USA and its allies start lending money to Africans to outcompete Chinese money-lenders?

Why do they give African countries loans that they cannot pay?
What is China doing right that an African country can't do?

Why has Africa preferred to collect loans and development deals from China instead of the US and Europe?

What can we say China is up to as they keep investing in African countries?
Why countries take loan from China even though China's debt trap is known to all?

What is the point of China investing in Africa? Do they expect African countries to pay them back?

Why is China giving loans to African countries?
Are the investments by China in Africa beneficial to the African populace (or not)?

Wake Up Africa!
.
Following
Posted by

Chibueze Royal N.

Wed
BREAKING NEWS: Nigeria's President Muhammadu Buhari has once more postponed the signing into law of the country's electoral bill to Friday. It is seven years since he refused to sign the draft law that paves the way for much-needed electoral reforms to Nigeria. Buhari had been widely expected to finally sign the bill today. Do the laws of your country do enough to prevent election fraud?

News Nigeria

Air Peace Must Apologise to Kano Emir On National Newspaper & Come In Person To Apologise Within 72hours. - Isa Bayero

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

I called Air Peace Chairman, Allen Onyema, requesting him to delay the airline's morning flight and flatly refused and said that he would not do that.

I personally took this as an insult and a flagrant show of disrespect to His Highness and the Kano people at large," Mr Bayero added.

"I personally requested the offer from Air Peace to allow the emir to join their flight to Abuja; from there we would be transiting to Kano but they said that also was fully booked.

Air Peace disrespected the Emir by refusing to delay the taxiing flight.

Isa added that, it is totally wrong and unacceptable because, if Air Peace truly respect the emir, they should understand the aircraft was not complete without 10 passengers, including the VIP.

"We booked our tickets on that aircraft and anybody that is familiar with international flight understands what is on-transit passengers and that passenger has priority more than any other passenger on board.

"I am giving an ultimatum of 72 hours for Air Peace to tender an apology to the emir, first in a national daily and secondly to come down in person to the emir. We would not hesitate to go extra miles to correct the 'misnormal'.

"The action of Air Peace is sentimental and unprofessional and we can go any length to defend and protect any act of insensitivity against our prestigious traditional institution.

"That insult is not heaped on the emir alone but on the good people of Kano and folding our hands on this could trigger something worse and more ridiculous.

News Nigeria

HOW MIDWEST REGION REFERENDUM WAS CONDUCTED IN 1963

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Wed

Nigeria's self-government was solidified in 1963 with a new constitution and new political structure. The first restructuring of Nigeria by Nigerians occurred with the Midwest referendum to pull out of the Western Region and own their own region.

Hinging its agitation on the same complaints of majority ethnic group domination expressed during the Willink Commission of Inquiry, the people of the Midwest collated enough signatures and applied for a referendum (to the Tafawa-Balawe led Parliament) to leave the Western Region it had been part of since the late 1940s.

Dr. Omoigui recounts the happenings culminating in the creation of the first and only democratically establish state or region in Nigeria's history:

The title of my essay today is the story of "Benin and the Midwest referendum".

Why Benin? After all, two provinces (Benin and Delta), and many divisions (including the Benin division) in what became the "Mid-West" were involved in the "War" to create the Midwest region in 1963.

There are two reasons. First, the history of the Midwest referendum and events leading to it is exceedingly vast and cannot in all honesty be addressed in a single lecture without losing focus. Secondly, I found a curious excerpt in the report of the Henry Willink Commission:

"In general, it is our view that desire for the State is strong in Benin City and Benin division, the heart of the old Benin Kingdom, and that the idea has progressively less appeal as one moves outwards from this centre." [Colonial Office: Nigeria – Report of the Commission appointed to enquire into the fears of Minorities and the means of allaying them. July 30th, 1958. Chapter 4, page 31]

This prompted me to know more about why Benin came to be considered by the Minorities Commission as the epicenter of the Midwest State Movement and how she mobilized herself and others to join hands to prosecute the "war for the Midwest".

I shall conclude with two take-home messages:

a). Political parties come and go, but nationalities remain.

b). Organized and united across traditional and contemporary forms of leadership, nothing can stand in the way of the peoples of the Midwest.

PREAMBLE

On March 29th, 1963 the Federal Ministry of Internal Affairs of Nigeria was given the responsibility for the organization of a referendum to decide whether a new Region should be created out of the Western region in a sub-region called "the Mid-West", comprised of the Benin and Delta provinces.

Preliminary guidelines were contained in an official letter signed by Mr. F.B.O. Williams on behalf of the Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Internal Affairs.

In accordance with the Constitutional Referendum Regulations, 1963, Mr. Gabriel Esezobor Edward Longe, Barrister-at-Law was earlier appointed on January 21st as the Supervisor and empowered to appoint other referendum officials. It was projected that about 71 officials, all Nigerians of Midwest origin, drawn from the Federal Public Service, Corporations in the Federal territory and from other suitable institutions, working full time for about three months, would be required.

On the day of the referendum, about 9,300 additional officials were anticipated to be required for operations. The Command Center for the Referendum was designated as No. 2 King's Square, Benin City. It was to that office that all referendum officials reported on Saturday, April 6, 1963 to begin their historic assignment.

The appointed Referendum and Assistant Referendum Officers for the various districts of the Mid-West are listed in Appendix One (1). See comment box

On the 24th of June 1963, by order of the Federation of Nigeria Extraordinary Official Gazette No. 43, Volume 50, the Supervisor of the Mid-West referendum issued Government Notice No. 1265.

It declared that voting at the Constitutional referendum for the creation of the Mid-Western Region would proceed on Saturday, the 13th day of July 1963.

The referendum question was as follows:

"Do you agree that the Midwestern Region Act, 1962, shall have effect so as to secure that Benin Province including Akoko Edo District in the Afenmai Division and Delta Province including Warri Division and Warri Urban Township area shall be included in the proposed Mid-Western Region?"

Hours of voting at designated Polling Stations extended from seven o'clock in the forenoon until six o'clock in the evening. It is important to note that a new Voters registration List was not compiled for the purposes of the Mid-West referendum.

Only those listed four years earlier in the Federal Electoral Register of 1959 were entitled to vote. Those who wished to vote "yes" were to place their ballot papers in the "white box". Those who wished to vote "no" were to place their ballot papers in the "black box".

The results of the Referendum were as follows [GE Longe: Results of the Midwest Referendum, 1963. July 18, 1963. From D.A. Omoigui archives.]

See comment box...

The total number of eligible voters, being persons whose names appeared in the Federal Electoral register of 1959 was 654,130.

Of this number the percentage that voted in the affirmative was 89.07%, well in excess of the required 60% (or 392,478) for the creation of the Mid-West region.

The region that was born on August 9, 1963 as a result of the July 13th plebiscite remains the only major administrative unit of Nigeria created by due constitutional process.

Consequently, the structure of Nigeria's administrative units became four units instead of the three it had been since Richard's constitution.

WHY MIDWESTERN REGION PULLED OUT OF THE WESTERN REGION

TESTIMONY AT THE WILLINK COMMISSION

It has been said that the Midwest State Movement flew the two expatriate counsels that led the testimony of the pro-Midwest witnesses at the Willink Commission, into the country. In point of fact Chief Omo-Osagie paid for their round trip fares and expenses out of his own pocket. Money was not forthcoming from the NCNC. The more senior of the pair was George G. Baker.

Three major sets of opinion were canvassed. The Midwest State movement was only interested in the creation of the Midwest (meaning Benin and Warri provinces en bloc) – to which it wanted the Edo-speaking Sobe and Ijagba areas of Ondo province appended.

The Action Group, represented by its lawyer, Fani Kayode, conceded that the Midwest might, as a last resort, be allowed to go (after all the legislative hurdles) but that Warri division and Akoko-Edo should join Ondo province, while the western Ibo should join the Eastern region and the western Ijaw should join eastern Ijaw. He even went further to suggest that Ishan division should be excluded from the "residual Midwest" for no other reason than because Ishan had a significant number of Action Group supporters.

The government of the Western region, represented by Rotimi Williams, differed slightly from Fani-Kayode, by accepting that Afemai and Ishan divisions could join the proposed "residual Midwest", implying the Benin and Urhobo divisions, if they wished. [Willink Commission report. Cmnd. 505. London: HMSO, 1958]

The position of the MSM was based on fear of colonization by the Yoruba. Detailed testimony was heard from a broad range of witnesses, including Chiefs Ezomo, Oliha, Ineh and Osula. Other witnesses included the Chairmen of the Iyekovia, Uhunmwode and Benin City councils, namely Messrs Adonrin, Atohengbe and Ogbebor. Edo women made a submission through Madam Eweka. Complaints included lack of rubber markets and processing facilities, excessive local taxation, including "head taxes" which would then be remitted to Ibadan, poor infrastructure, and discrimination in the award of scholarships and opportunities for Edo women traders at Ibadan.

More recently, Mr. Isaac Asemota recalled that, "While Benin- City stayed in the dark with no electricity, running water, good roads, separate and unequal schools and grossly inadequate health clinics, there in Ibadan, Edo tax monies were being squandered in the construction of Cocoa House, Mapo Hall and Commercial Broadcasting Service Radio Station whose frequency we couldn't even pick up in Benin-City. The best we could hope for was Redifussion radio which had a very low frequency and could not be heard more than two miles away from the broadcasting booth. " (Isaac Asemota: "The last Edo Political Titan: Chief Humphrey Omo-Osagie" unpublished manuscript, Edo-Nation Egroup, July 2, 2002.)

The most powerful and emotional testimony from Benin came from Chief H Omo-Osagie. He lamented the insidious cultural role of Ifa divination and Ogboni activities in inserting Yoruba values and ways into Benin society. He explained that Ifa divination required knowledge of Yoruba, while the Yoruba derived Ogboni society, was, according to him, "more dangerous than freemasonry." In fact he openly stated that after independence, laws would likely be passed, making membership of the ROF compulsory.

He went on to criticize the Western region Chiefs Law No. 20 of 1957 which was being used with effect to intimidate traditional rulers and influence the selection of chiefs and Dukes inside the Midwest. The Chief also went into additional detail about perceptions of Yoruba domination of the Police, government boards, the public service, and the use of scholarships as a tool for punishing separatist divisions. The Benin division, for example, had not, under the period of review, received any scholarships, while the Ijebu province (home to Chief Awolowo) had secured 17 such awards.

Another complaint was that Rubber was being developed in the Ijebu province when investment in the promised Ikpoba Rubber processing factory for already established rubber plantations of the Midwest was being held up.

A similar shenanigan affected the Koko port. He went on to use examples of the decision by the Action Group government to dissolve the Benin Divisional Council in 1955 as an example of arbitrary misuse of power. In conclusion, Chief Omo-Osagie opposed the new "Welsh-type" arrangement implemented by the Action Group through the establishment of the "Ministry of Midwest Affairs" and the Midwest Advisory Council, and demanded either the creation of a Midwest region or a return to a unitary government at the center with provinces at the periphery.

Supporting testimony from the Ishan division, where the Action Group had deposed the Onogies of Idoa and Ubiaja was also heard from G. Ebea, A. Ibhazo, Prince Shaka Momodu, and His Royal Highness, Enosegbe II, Enogie of Ewohimi.

Similarly, the Commission heard from the Oba of Agbede who bluntly stated that the Oba of Benin, and not any of the Yoruba Obas, was his Oba. On their part, Messrs Utomi, Onyia and Odiakosa provided the views of the Asaba division. Interestingly, while scholarship complaints were commonplace in the Benin division, the Asaba division was doing very well with scholarships under the guidance of its representative, Dennis Osadebay, who was then the Chairman of the Regional Scholarships Board.

In Warri, there was a split among the Itsekiri. While Chiefs Arthur Prest and Festus Okotie-Eboh were in support, at this stage, of creation of a Midwest region, O.N. Rewane and the Olu of Warri were against it.

In response to testimony of pro-Midwest witnesses, a shadowy organization called the "Anti-Midwest State Movement" was put forward by the Action Group. It asserted that Edos had more to fear from Igbo than Yoruba domination, and that creation of a Midwest region would expose Edos to Igbo domination.

Among its observations, the commission noted that actual expenditure on road development in the Midwest area up to March 31, 1957, was only 15% of the estimates, compared with 50% in the Yoruba West. It also made the following observation:

"What is feared is a permanent Action Group majority in the Western House of Assembly. The Action Group drawing its inspiration from a Yoruba society, the Egbe Omo Oduduwa expressing itself….through the Ogboni Fraternity, controlling Boards, Corporations and Commissions, eventually even the Magistracy and Judiciary, aiming at the obliteration of all that is not Yoruba. That is what is meant by Yoruba domination."

But in its recommendations, the Willink Commission advised that short of a new state, the "Midwest area" for which the Ministry of Midwest Affairs of the Western region was being established be reduced to a "Council for Edo Affairs" with responsibility for development, welfare and culture preservation, covering the Edo-speaking divisions of Benin, Urhobo, Afenmai and Ishan. In addition to a similarly proposed "Calabar Council" in Eastern Nigeria, the commission felt that "these two are the areas in which it seems to us, there is the strongest and most united local sentiment and the most clearly distinguishable culture." (see Willink Report, Chapter 14, Section 4, Item 36, page 97.)

In reaction, the MSM rejected the Willink report, insisted on creation of the Midwest region, but left open the possibility of a "Provincial Commissioner for Benin and Delta provinces" at the federal level – an option the Action Group rejected outright.

1958 – 1960

While the Constitutional Conference and Willink Commission were finalizing their activities, the Western region passed what was known as "amendment No. 4" to the local government law of 1957, which gave it new powers by which it could manipulate the control of local councils. The combination of the local government and chieftaincy laws, control of customary courts and heavy handed use of tax assessments was then exploited in an aggressive drive by the Action Group to take control of the Benin and Delta provinces [Sklar – Benin: A Study in the Mechanics of Chieftaincy Control. P238-42, In: Sklar, Nigerian Political Parties.].

During the Lancaster House conference in London which took place in September and October 1958, the concept of a minority area inclusive of Benin and Delta provinces, except Warri division and Akoko-Edo district was discussed and vaguely agreed to, pending further consultation, without plans for a Special Ijaw Area Board. [Report by the Resumed Nigeria Constitutional Conference Held in London, September and October 1958, Cmnd. 569, London: HMSO, 1958]

In the meantime, the rising political profile of key Midwesterners who would come to play critical roles in the creation of the Midwest was unmistakable.

A national government was formed based on the 1957 constitution, in preparation for independence. In this government Chief Festus Okotie-Eboh of Warri emerged as the Minister for Labor and Welfare (NCNC), a position which gave him direct access to northern leaders with whom he consolidated strong personal relationships which would be used by the Midwest movement with devastating effect after independence.

The Action Group was represented by Chief SL Akintola (Communications and Aviation) and Mr. Ayo Rosiji (Health). Other Midwesterners like H. Omo-Osagie, James Otobo, V. I. Amadasun, Oputa-Otutu, Shaka Momodu, FH Utomi and others also became more prominent in party and legislative affairs at regional and national levels.

It was in May 1958 that initial talks to enter into a post-independence government coalition were held between the NCNC and the NPC [Enahoro, Fugitive Offender, Op. Cit.].

Back in Benin, the battle to undermine Chief Omo-Osagie's power base was continuing – on all fronts. Local government elections took place in Benin on May 17th, 1958 [Oronsaye, Op. Cit.]. The manipulation of post-election council nominations made it possible for the Action group to dominate the council although the party did not win the elections.

On November 25th, Action group stalwart S. Y. Eke, moved a motion to ban Owegbe "juju" (also known as Isigidi, Aimuekpensulele or Iselogha) from the Benin division. The motion was carried and confirmed on March 19th, 1959 by an order of the Western region Governor-in-Council – with the support of Oba Akenzua II [West Regional Gazette, No. 14 of 19 March, 1959].

The Oba, who was then a Minister in the government, had commented in a letter on January 23rd, 1959, that Owegbe was an imported juju and that its existence in Benin was a threat to peace.

Chief Omo-Osagie demanded a formal judicial inquiry, saying the ban was politically motivated, and explained that that there was no "juju" or "cult" as such, but that there was indeed an "Owegbe society" which was the "youth wing" of the Otu-Edo party. The existence of youth wings was by no means a new phenomenon in Nigeria. The Zikist National Vanguard and Awo National Brigade were examples, according to the Chief, who also directed attention to the violations of fundamental human rights and freedom of association which the ban implied [Debates of the Western House of Assembly, May 27, 1959; col. 863].

When however, Chief Omo-Osagie asserted that the Oba would testify that there was no such thing as "Owegbe juju" known in the Benin division, the Oba, in a letter dated July 22nd, 1959 stated that there was such a "juju" which, in his opinion at that time, as a Minister in the Action group government, was dangerous.

In what seemed to reflect the underlying political fear, the Oba said the danger was not with claims of powers to kill or save but in the ability of intelligent citizens based in Benin, having convinced less sophisticated rural based folk to take oaths, could then by order, cause disturbances anytime they wished – a veiled reference to the disturbances of 1951. Using this cover, the western region government moved to emasculate the Owegbe society, which was actually originally created to provide sanctuary for those who wanted a way to fortify themselves from Ogboni recruitment drives.

To illustrate the political nature of this development, the Oba reversed himself when he wrote a letter in 1962 (having since left the Action group) to the government saying he no longer had any concerns about Owegbe (see below).

At the same time, the national wing of the NCNC was seeking to wean itself from its dependence on the Otu-Edo.

It accused Otu-Edo of restricting choices for candidates in elections to Benin indigenes, to the detriment of resident Igbos who wanted to contest in Benin and represent the party at the center. This complaint was curious, considering that Chike Ekwuyasi, an Ibo speaking Midwesterner from Ogwashi-Uku was actually elected on Otu-Edo platform to represent Benin back in 1951 – and no Benin indigene had ever been elected from any Igbo district. Nevertheless, the party established the Orizu and Onyia Commissions of inquiry to probe Otu-Edo – resulting in a recommendation by J.I.G. Onyia of Asaba to dissolve Otu-Edo and replace it with straight party membership of the NCNC, also known as "NCNC simplicita." The report also pointed out that Omo-Osagie had not held elections for the position of President-General of Otu-Edo since 1950. This aspect of the report was attractive to Omo-Osagie's critics within Otu-Edo – like GI Oviasu, DEY Aghahowa etc, who then formed a faction called "NCNC pure." Nevertheless, Omo-Osagie, leery of non-Edo based political parties, insisted that Otu-Edo would not be swallowed by any national party but would remain independent. [Oronsaye, Op. cit.]

Other noteworthy developments in 1959 include the decision of the NCNC to establish a Midwest secretariat in Benin and the emergence of the States creation issue in the campaigns for federal elections in December 1959.

In that election, the Action Group – which said it would also support the creation of the Midwest, but only if it occurred simultaneously with states creation in other regions – won three out of fifteen seats in the Midwest, two of which were in Ishan (A. Enahoro and P.D. Oboh) and one in Afenmai (M. Obi). The other twelve federal legislators from the Midwest were all members of the NCNC, including A. Opia, U.O. Ayeni, E. A. Mordi, J.B. Eboigbodi, Jereton Mariere, J.K. Deomonadia, O. Oweh, Festus Okotie-Eboh, and N. A. Ezenbodor. In the Benin division, H.O. Osagie, D.N. Oronsaye and D.E.Y. Aghahowa secured the federal seats. (Daily Times, December 14, 1959, pp5-6). These legislators would all play crucial roles in the fight for the Midwest after independence.

For example, Jereton Mariere, a distinguished member of the Urhobo Progress Union, and businessman who had managed the late Mukoro Mowoe's business at Agbor, would later emerge the first Governor of the Midwestern region. [personal communication, Professor PP Ekeh]

1960

As was the case in previous years, 1960 was full of action, for and against the creation of the Midwest, including false and real hopes and intrigue. [Isuman JU. Facts about the Midwest State. Amalgamated Press, Lagos, 1960]

On July 7th, the Oni of Ife, Oba Adesoji Aderemi, became the Governor of the Western region while the Alake of Abeokuta became the President of the House of Chiefs. Chief Omo-Osagie wasted no time in making a public statement about the development.

Oba Akenzua II, who had been generally snubbed and cut off from many day to day decisions in the Ministry of Midwest Affairs except his approval was important to some Machiavellian scheme or the other, finally had enough. Independence was approaching and the Midwest region had still not been created. The post-independence federal government was going to be formed by the NCNC and the NPC. The vast majority of the federal legislators from the Midwest belonged to the NCNC.

Therefore, the Oba decided to abandon the Action group, resigning his position as a Minister without portfolio. By so doing, he realigned the traditional establishment with the "new elite" for the final push to secure the Midwest.

But shortly after he did so, the Action Group won 15 out of 30 seats from the Midwest in the Western House elections of August 8, 1960, even barely beating an Otu-Edo candidate in Benin as well Prince Shaka Momodu in Irrua, in what was regarded as an upset, perhaps influenced by manipulation of the 1959 voter's register.

This outcome emboldened Awolowo and Akintola to publicly declare that they would not support the creation of the Midwest until after the 1964 federal elections when they would be in power at the center – although they kept up pressure for creation of the Calabar-Ogoja-Rivers and Middle Belt States in other regions. Meanwhile, Barrister SO Ighodaro had taken over the Ministry of Midwest Affairs from Anthony Enahoro, when the latter elected to go federal, having lost out to SLA Akintola who returned to the West to succeed Awolowo as the Premier. ...

To be continued

Henry Omoregie

News Nigeria
BUHARI'S KIND OF KINDNESS

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

A man with empathy for the poor, the weak and the vulnerable. He loves them deeply, and they also love him to bits. That is President Muhammadu Buhari for you.

It is often said that the man already has at least 12 million votes waiting for him in different parts of the country before the first ballot is cast in general elections. The poor and the vulnerable constitute this large army of voters. They swarm round him, as bees do to the honeypot.

"The poor you will always have with you," the Good Book tells us in Matthew 26:11. And further in Galatians 2: 10, it says "Don't forget the poor." All major religions have this admonition, and it is something President Buhari takes very serious.

In 2019, having put on his thinking cap on how he could further be of help to the poor, the weak and vulnerable, the President established the Ministry of Humanitarian Affairs, Disaster Management, and Social Development. He appointed Sadiya Umar Farouq as the Minister.

Last week, Minister Farouq was guest at the 30th edition of the weekly State House Press Briefing. And there, she unfolded Buhari's kind of kindness, his compassion for the hapless and the disadvantaged.

President Buhari won't give you sack-loads of cash to compromise you, or curry your favor. He would rather deploy same to do good deeds, showing kindness to the weak and deprived, the aching and hurting.

The Ministry headed by Umar Farouq came into being as result of desire by the President to coordinate implementation of all humanitarian affairs, disaster management, and social development activities in the country.

And what a yeoman's job is being quietly done round the land, without flourish or fanfare, no ballyhoo or peal of trumpets. The Ministry is even constant object of fake news, hate speech, but no matter. The quietly effective work continues.

What did Hajiya Farouq unfold to the media?

The Ministry has oversight over the welfare and rehabilitation of Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) who number about 1.8 million in the country. It swings into action in cases of natural disasters, armed conflicts, terrorism, floods, epidemics, fire disasters, and other man-made crises. In fact, about 7.1 million people are in need of humanitarian assistance in the North East region alone, not to talk of nationwide.

Policies already formulated, enunciated and running include Policy on Internally Displaced Persons, National Social Protection, Cash and Voucher Assistance, Mass Housing, in which over 1,000 houses have been constructed and handed over to the Borno State government, while 500 units each are being built for each of the other five North East States.

There is distribution of food and non-food items to the poor and vulnerable across the country, collaboration with States to return and resettle IDPs in their communities of origin, and cooperation with National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (NAPTIP) on routine repatriation of Nigerians stranded abroad. About 17,242 of such cases have been handled.

Farouq was not done. The Ministry is interpreting the dream of President Buhari for the deprived through the National Social Investment Programme (NSIP). This has components like job creation (N-Power), National Home-Grown School Feeding Programme, Government Enterprises and Empowerment Programme (GEEP), and Conditional Cash Transfer (CCT).

There is a National Social Register, which had over 46 million Nigerians on enrollment as at January 2022. Under CCT, the sum of N5,000 is paid to the poor and vulnerable monthly. Over 1,632,480 households are benefiting from that already.

Just N5,000 only, some people may say in derision, with their noses turned skyward. But for a person who possibly has not owned half of that amount, to now receive it monthly, it is sheer bliss. That is why they are called poor and vulnerable. President Buhari loves them, and cares for them.

There is a grant of N20,000 for 320,000 rural women, while the Home-Grown School Feeding Programme is already in 35 States, with 54,796 schools involved, 9,976,654 pupils being fed, and 112,453 cooks engaged.

Under GEEP, there is TraderMoni, which has taken care of 1,962,383 and 382,368 people in two phases, MarketMoni, 425,362 and 412,388 people, respectively, and FarmerMoni, 36,508 and 348,027 people.

The poor you will always have with you, the Good Book says. That explains the vision to take at least 100 million people out of poverty in 10 years. But apart from that big picture, one after the other, in tens, hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands, the vulnerable are being taken care of through the Ministry of Humanitarian Affairs, Disaster Management, and Social Development. He who feels it knows it. Leaders must be kind to those they lead. It has reward both here, and in the hereafter.

Now you know why President Buhari always has that standby 12 million votes. He cares for the poor and lowly. Whence comest another? They don't seem to make them like this anymore.

*Adesina is Special Adviser to President Buhari on Media and Publicity

NDLEA raids Lagos Island drug den, arrests kingpin, 6 others; recovers 5,862kg drugs

Aniekpeno Ekong Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria 4h

A major drug kingpin operating the notorious Patey Lagos Island drug haven, in Lagos state, Mrs. Sherifat Kehinde Lawal has been arrested along with six other suspects by operatives of the National Drug Law Enforcement Agency, NDLEA, who also recovered 5,862 kilograms of assorted illicit drugs including Loud and Codeine in a raid on Saturday 26th February 2022.

Following credible intelligence and follow up surveillance on illicit drug dealing in Osho, Gambari, and Beecroft Streets, Patey Area of Lagos Island, anti-narcotic officers stormed the Gambari street base of the drug kingpin where they arrested her and six of her accomplices at 9:30am Saturday 26th Feb. Other members of the cartel operating in the axis however mobilised hoodlums who attacked the operatives with stones, bottles and guns in a bid to prevent the officers from arresting other kingpins marked for arrest as well as taking the suspects already nabbed and drug exhibits away.

The operatives were able to tactically defend themselves, took the suspects and exhibits away. Other suspects in custody with Mrs. Lawal include: Ahmed Yisau; Solomon Alape; Olayemi Akinola; Salami Qudus; Bakare Rafiu; Rose Samson; Yusuf Rofiat, and Chukwudi Egon.

In his reaction to the development, Chairman/Chief Executive of NDLEA, Brig. Gen. Mohamed Buba Marwa (Retd) commended the officers and men of the Lagos Command of the Agency for the successful operation. He warned those being used by drug cartels to obstruct or attack anti-narcotic officers in the course of doing their work to desist or face dire consequences.

Femi Babafemi: Director, Media & Advocacy

NDLEA Headquarters, Abuja

Saturday 26th February 2022

Emir of Kano Asked Us To Delay Fully Boarded Aircraft for One Hour, Air Peace Denies Disrespect

Aniekpeno Ekong

Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria 21h

The airline said, contrary to the claim by the Emir's cousin, Air Peace did everything to protect the Emir's image.

The management of Air Peace has rejected claims that the airline treated the Emir of Kano, Alhaji Aminu Ado Bayero, with disrespect.

The carrier, in a statement signed by its Chief Operating Officer, Toyin Olajide, claimed that the company protected the emir's image by refusing to delay the flight he was scheduled to board.

The Emir’s cousin, Prince Isa Bayero, had written a letter to the Nigerian Civil Aviation Authority (NCAA) demanding punitive measures be taken against Air Peace over what he described as “disrespect” to the Emir and people of Kano.

The Emir’s cousin was reported to have placed a call to the Chairman of Air Peace, Allen Onyema, pleading for the delay of the airline's morning flight to Kano.

Bayero explained that the Emir's flight from Banjul, the Gambia, was delayed which prevented him from arriving in time for his local flight.

However, the Emir's cousin's pleas fell on deaf ears as the airline proceeded with the flight at the scheduled time.

It appears this didn't go down well with the Emir's entourage which prompted the demand to the NCAA.

Reacting to the allegation made by the Emir's cousin, Olajide said she was shocked by what she called a deliberate falsehood against Air Peace while maintaining that the airline held the Emir in the highest regard.

She explained that "Rather than disrespect the revered Emir of Kano, Air Peace did everything to protect the name and image of the Emir from ridicule by not succumbing to what Isa Bayero wanted us to do.

"If we had agreed to stop and delay an aircraft, already set to take-off, for another one hour only for the doors to be opened and the Emir to walk in, there would have been a very serious uproar in the media nationwide against both the airline and the Emir. This we pleaded with Isa Bayero to understand but he refused to accept.

"How could Isa Bayero want the Management of Air Peace to stop and delay a fully boarded plane with doors already shut and aircraft already moving while our respected Emir and eight others in his entourage, including Isa Bayero, were still at the international wing of the Murtala Muhammed Airport, Lagos after arriving from Banjul?"

The COO added that the Emir's cousin rang the phone of the Air Peace Chairman at about 5:52 am, while he was still asleep, and dialed back again at 5:59 am which eventually woke him up.

Olajide said after his call with Bayero, Onyema reached out to her to inquire about the status of the morning's flight, adding that the Chairman was willing to help.

"On seeing that it was Isa Bayero calling, he took the call. Isa told our Chairman that he and the Emir of Kano had just landed at the Murtala Muhammed International Airport Lagos from Banjul, Gambia and would be proceeding to Kano the same morning.

"He told the Chairman to delay our first flight of the day, the 6:15 am Lagos-Kano flight for him and the Emir with another eight persons. It was not true that our Chairman refused flatly. He rather told Mr. Isa Bayero to give him a few minutes to call the airport to find out the status of the flight. I was the one he called. To show his desire to help, he called me immediately and intimated me with the request.

"I am the Chief Operating Officer (COO) of Air Peace. I quickly called the local airport from where we carry on our day-to-day domestic flight operations and was told that the aircraft had since finished boarding and was almost taxiing out," Olajide added.

Nigerian authorities have announced a special flight operation to evacuate their citizens from Ukraine, following the Russian invasion Thursday.

Aniekpeno Ekong Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria Sat

Thursday's announcement by Nigerian authorities followed distress calls made by Nigerian nationals in Ukraine, including students.

Nigeria's foreign affairs ministry said it "has been reassured by the Nigerian Embassy in Ukraine of the safety of Nigerians in that country," and said measures were "being undertaken to keep them safe and facilitate the evacuation of those who wish to leave."

Why has Nigeria not yet emerged as the giant of Africa?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian 4y

Nigeria does not make anything the world wants.
Fin.

Thought I'd try out a short sentence answers. I'll admit it feels good, but it's not for me.

Let us start with the word "giant", it implies power. Among states are two variants of power: soft and hard, sorta like…Brexit. While soft power speaks to cultural and diplomatic influence, hard power is:

Disguised phallic worship?

But not just militarily, in the modern world, economic dominance is being increasingly deployed as a vanguard of hard power.

Nigerian soft power is miles ahead of its hard power, but neither is at the level which a "giant", a hegemon should aim for.

Nigeria dominates the continent's major cultural exports: music, film and food (a tie with Moroccan?) it is not really close.

One Example

Nigeria is however not the continent's cultural giant because its perception differs from its truth.

Kenya and South Africa are perceived as lands of pristine beaches, and gleaming savannahs. Nigeria, on the other hand, is perceived as a land of scamming Princes and Boko Haram. While perception approaches truth, it is not truth. Perception is shifted by image management, something Nigeria has been terrible at. The problem I believe is that Nigeria has been lax in viewing its image as a vital part of its power. Image matters!

The second variant of power hinges on the strength of the economy. Armies cost money, the economy makes money. Simple equation. Nigeria has a large economy, the continent's largest. Largest, not strongest.

Nigeria thinks it

Actually it is

I'll admit, my opening sentence is inaccurate, we make some things the world wants. Musicians and Pastors are likely our most "popular" (note, not most valuable) exports. But those do not lend themselves to Power. South Korea and Taiwan tried regime-change by music. It failed*.*

Sort'a necessary

The question then is, Why do some exports lend themselves to power, while others don't?

I want you to picture a slab of meat, what do you need next? A knife!

Now in your head, think of a knife, its handle: plastic or wood. The blade.

Now you're likely to imagine your blade made of steel, in truth, it could be made of anything, stone, bronze, even plastic. Trial and error over generations have brought us to the perfect tool for a knife, steel.

Such is the state, a tool, one made of different resources. The economy, her citizens, geography, resources, all combine to make it, and they are what determines its power.

An economy capable of fostering innovation, generating employment, and hence revenue for the government, a citizenry capable of competing in global markets, ideal geography: size, easily defended and access to the sea, well harnessed resources. That is how you get to "steel".

The state is the unit of interaction in the international system, the government its domestic interface. As stated before, states possess power, but power is in itself finite. To be succinct, power expended on domestic affairs is power not brought to bear in the International System. Hence why domestic stability is vital to external power.

So how does Nigeria measure up?

Economy: Most prominent exports do not generate value across a broad stream. High unemployment and underemployment rates.

Citizens: 59.6% Literacy Rate[1] .

Geography: Good size, access to the Atlantic, close to the Indian and Pacific. Unstable neighbours.

Resources: Few, three of value (arable land, Fossil fuels, human). None properly harnessed.

Domestic stability: Poor.
Hard Power Status: Nonexistent.

In concluding, I should point out that the International System abhors a vacuum, the absence of a hegemon does not lead to cooperation but anarchy, jostling states pursuing differing interests. Compare say NAFTA and the EU to the AU and the UN.

Footnotes
[1] Nigeria Literacy

Related Links

Can Nigeria remain the giant of Africa forever?

Why is Nigeria being referred to as "The largest economy in Africa" and "The giant of Africa" when there are many African countries that are more developed?

Why is Nigeria becoming more prosperous than South Africa?
Can Nigeria be developed like South Africa?
How powerful is Nigeria in Africa?
Can Nigeria defeat South Africa in a military war?
Who is the real giant of Africa?
Does Nigeria have the capacity to be the largest economy in Africa without oil?
Why was South Africa included in BRICS and not Nigeria?
What is the fate of Nigeria as the giant of Africa?
What is the difference between Nigeria and South Africa?
What have you benefited from Nigeria as a citizen, the giant of Africa?
Will Nigeria eventually become African superpower?
Can Nigeria defeat South Africa in a full fledged war?
Is Nigeria truly the giant of Africa?

Wake Up Africa!

Posted by Chibueze Royal N. ·

Nigeria's former president Olusegun Obasanjo has called on his generation of older politicians to retire to make way for younger Nigerians. In remarks at the 2022 annual lecture of the Murtala Muhammed Foundation on Monday, the octogenarian politician said young Nigerians are able to build a prosperous nation. Is Olusegun Obansanjo right?

Why exactly is Nigeria so populous and so densely populated relative to other African countries?

Farook Ajose Lives in Lagos, Nigeria 4y

Take a look at the map of Population Density in Africa.

[1] Do you see anything in common amongst the purple countries?

Well, how about now?

[2]

Now?

[3]

If you haven't figured out yet, the answer to your question is three. No, not that three, there are three answers to your question.

Geography:
"Nigeria is covered by three types of vegetation: forests (where there is significant tree cover), savannahs (insignificant tree cover, with grasses and flowers located between trees), and montane land. (The latter is the least common, and is mainly found in the mountains near the Cameroon border.)"[4] This kind of vegetation is optimal for food production and once people migrated into the region, it was kind of hard to get them out of it. This coupled with high birth rates and very high fertility increased the population of ancient nigeria. And who could ignore the climate that made this sort of vegetation possible?

"The southern region of Nigeria experiences a double rainfall maxima characterised by two high rainfall peaks, with a short dry season and a longer dry season falling between and after each peaks. The first rainy season begins around March and last to the end of July with a peak in June, this rainy season is followed by a short dry break in August known as the August break which is a short dry season lasting for two to three weeks in August. This break is broken by the Short rainy season starting around early September and lasting to Mid October with a peak period at the end of September. The ending of the short rainy season in October is followed by Long Dry Season. This period starts from late October and lasts till early March with peak dry conditions between early December and late February. The Sahel Climate or Tropical dry climate*, is the predominant climate type in the northern part of Nigeria. Annual rainfall totals are lower compared to the southern and central part of Nigeria.*

Rainy season in the northern part of Nigeria last for only three to four months (June–September). The rest of the year is hot and dry with temperatures climbing as high as 40 °C (104.0 °F) ."[5] The southern region was perfect for agriculture while the northern region was livestock rearing. This had an influence on our culture which is still present today.

[6]

There existed kingdoms and states all around the region and pretty close to one another they were. This brings about the next thing on my list, trade.

Trade:
With so many different tribes and kingdoms in the region, one thing was certain, trade. West Africa and the Gold coast was rich in gold and had little value in comparison with salt to west Africans, hence, gold became one of the largest exports of the region and salt, the largest import. Amongst west african states, salt, leather, horses, kola nuts, ivory, cloth and slaves were major themes in the domestic trade. The existence of the trans-saharan trade allowed immigration into these communities, while domestic trade created wealth for the masses who in turn kept increasing the population.

Deltas:
The abundance of water in these regions helped flourish and keep the natality high. It makes sense we build our civilisations around water since water is such an essential part of life. The same applies to all high density countries in Africa, the things they have in common are the rivers. Below is a map of Nigeria with emphasis on the rivers and the major cities. This same pattern is observed and areas closed to water sources have high population densities.

[7]

Footnotes
[1] https://www.google.com.ng/url?sa=i&rct=j&q=&esrc=s&source=imgres&cd=&cad=rja&uact=8&ved=0ahUKEwiPqoy1nYzWAhWKaVAKHdwlDX0QjRwIBw&url=https%3A%2

F%2Fen.wikipedia.org%2Fwiki%2FList_of_African_countries_by_population_density&psig=AFQjCNFv3H6okPghwD1Lqnwc52TOlzR_dA&ust=1504638518708125
[2] Image on pinimg.com
[3] Image on lizardpoint.com
[4] Geography of Nigeria - Wikipedia
[5] Geography of Nigeria - Wikipedia
[6] http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/2/21/African-civilizations-map-imperial.png
[7] https://www.google.com.ng/url?sa=i&rct=j&q=&esrc=s&source=images&cd=&cad=rja&uact=8&ved=0ahUKEwi98OKL14zWAhXDY1AKHU7RAK0QjRwIBw&url=https%3A%2F%2Fen.wikipedia.org%2Fwiki%2FTalk%253ANigeria%252FArchive1&psig=AFQjCNHdNbGK7ir-lMcmnbgbrPO2bVC5Qg&ust=1504653852824541

Why are Nigerians discriminated against in Ukraine?

Victor Dirikebamor · Follow Storyteller Mon

Nigerians and other Africans in Ukraine cried out a couple of days ago about how they're racially discriminated against as they try to leave the country to Neighbouring Poland.

Around 12,000 Nigerians were studying in various Universities in Ukraine before the war. There are also thousands of Nigerians who work and run businesses in the country.

Some said they're not allowed to board trains.

Others complained of being stuck at the Ukraine-Polish border after walking several hours as the priority is a ‘Ukrainian first’.

It's tragic that even at times of war, the color of some victims could place them at a deeper disadvantage than their contemporaries.

No doubt the tuition fees from these students were a huge boost to their economy. Let it not be that only their money is good and not the color of their skin.

As the Urhobos say "If you won't eat it, don't taste it either."
Ukraine is in between a rock and a hard place and, although we understand that their primary concern is the wellbeing of their citizens, they should, nonetheless know that those who discriminate are as insane as those who invade.

None is acceptable. None should be happening.

My typical African mentality would be to help and protect foreigners in my land at all costs in times like this as they would be expected to be at a higher disadvantage.

This news obviously got Nigerians angry as they made it trend on Twitter, where our powers start and most times ends but on this day it produced some results as it incited the sleepy Nigerian authorities to act.

As the world extends a helping hand to Ukrainians at these dire times, may Ukraine not hold back its hand from the stranded foreigners who depend on their goodwill to survive this war.

The Ukrainian government should understand that we all have flesh and blood and should not be fooled by the tough, melanin-rich black skin, I can assure you it's not made of bulletproof.

Neither is the black man immune to thirst and hunger as it's all too common in war.

As you thrive to bring comfort to your citizens, may you not take pride in the discomfort of the colored man.

It's no news that the Nigerian government cares less about Nigerians in Nigeria and Nigerians abroad, but that should not be seen as an opportunity to exercise the inhuman traits of mankind.

If there is one thing this war has taught humanity is that the world needs more love.

Brotherly love is what the world has and is showing you, brotherly love is what the world expects from you.

Please stop reporting this answer, it's not some hate speech. People are suffering and we want their voices heard.

Related Answer

Why are Nigerians treated differently online?

Brai Malik, My home country; I am passionate about her. Updated Jan 25

Nigerians are treated differently online because few bad guys from Nigeria are internet fraudsters. These guys are mostly young Nigerians and have devoured so many gullible and unsmart individuals, particularly from developed climes, of their hard-earned money. To the above extent, even for honest Nigerians, when found online, in any chat room, they are badly labelled or outrightly snubbed. The country's image has been badly battered by the nefarious activities of a few criminals.

Indeed, it is a bad development for the country because the perception of Nigerians by the world is nothing to write home about. This is inspite of the noble, notable and laudable achievements of Nigerians world over.

But then, Nigerians have always been known to be a very active set of people who usually turn out to be achievers wherever they go to. They are smart, witty and work hard and they love to set trends and lead the pace. See below:

The Smartest Family in the UK: Imafidons, are Nigerians

1986 Nobel Prize in Literatue: Wole Soyinka, is a Nigerian

Richest Man in Africa: Aliko Dangote, is a Nigerian

Doctor who successfully led a medical team that operated on a foetus, winning US and global acclaim for the feat: Professor Oluyinka O. Olutoye, is a Nigerian

East London School with the Best 2018 'A' Level Result headed by - Dr Dayo Olukoshi, is a Nigerian

World Best Mathematics Student - Faith Odunsi, is a Nigerian

Doctor opens emergency room in Texas - Dr. Foyekemi Ikyaator, is a Nigerian

1989 Gordon Bell Prize for price-performance in high-performance computing applications, in an oil reservoir modeling calculation using a novel mathematical formulation and implementation: Philip Emeagwali, is a Nigerian

Nigerians In The US Are The Most Educated

Yes, Nigerians can be treated differently online, the fact remains that Nigerians are one of the most hospitable and warmest people on the face of plannet earth. They are great achievers, as encapsulated above, a soccer loving nation that cannot be ignored when it comes to sports.

The country is working on these bad guys i.e. the scammers and bringing them to book. Once reported and they are arrested, they are tried in the law courts, and if found guilty, government is putting them behind bars. Sooner than later, our image as a country will be redeemed.

However, the fact remains that the country's positive achievements as a nation, as enumerated above, are far greater than the negatives.

Related Answer
How do you see Nigeria as a country and Nigerians?

Justin Afrika, Paramedic, ex state and pvt EMS training director Updated Aug 5, 2018

How do I see Nigeria as a country and Nigerians? I have not seen Nigeria. Judging by Richard Munrow's horrific experiences and discussions with acquaintances who have worked in Nigeria, I would rather not.

However, I am able to answer the second part of the question "How do you see ... Nigerians?" My approach is literal and I relate objective observations, with other words what I have seen. With zero value judgement, in any way. I have travelled widely and I could write about all sorts of weird and wonderful experiences and observations related to those travels, or of my own fellow citizens (of whom I could write mad-crazy events). But that is not what is asked here.

In many years of owning various business entities and then socialising in or near the CBD, this is what I have personally observed of citizens from that country:

I had the pleasure of being lectured by an engaging and excellent Nigerian academic in a post-grad course which soon became an all-time favourite course for me (okay this is a value judgement as I'm trying to express how awesome this lecturer was).

Pastor Tim Omotoso is currently on trial for the sexual trafficking of more than 30 teenagers, some as young as 13. I knew one girl who this happened to and we had warned her family about this church. Three years after escaping she and her family are still in hiding after continual harassment and death threats.

I walked into an incident in which the head pastor of a church was one of the citizens of that country who was arrested red-handed in the commission of an armed robbery.

A staff member from that church was arrested (in possession of her phone and purse) immediately after mugging a young mother and her two young children by aiming a handgun at them.

We were daytime socialising in a friend's restaurant when a locally well-known Nigerian pastor and his companion arrived to sit at the next table. A while later he leaned over to me and quietly said, "hi big guy, if there's anything you need, anything you want, just ask". Unsure if he was offering perhaps a bible or a drink I asked what he meant. Immediately he fired back "my guy can bring, you know, pills, powder, big H?"

The Nigerian restaurant across the road from my mate's restaurant fences stolen goods almost continuously. Employees observably sell illegal substances. The restaurant is also a point of contact for any foreigner to have their traffic fines quashed, helped by 3 traffic officers who lunch there every day (the restaurant owner as much as stated that that was what they were doing).

Every single time that we walked to the corner shop (or almost any corner in the CBD) I and my colleagues and students would have no less than 4 or 5 Nigerians (with characteristic attention-getting sounds and patois) trying to sell us street drugs (sometimes aggressively). This would continue daily for a long time until they realised that the person was not interested.

Across the road from my college, we observed a raid on an apartment from which a 17 year old girl escaped after being abducted from a sidewalk and repeatedly raped and drugged for two weeks. Police were hiding in the apartment and arrested two Nigerians, aged 36 and 39, when they returned.

I have been seated at a bar with my mates when a large thug seated next to us banged on the counter and shouted at the overworked barperson “Bitch! Beer!”

Two (not-so) gentlemen from that country were seen pushing an 18 year old young woman to her death from a fifth floor balcony. Neighbours had heard her shouting her refusal to be prostituted. I observed the post-mortem autopsy exam with my students.

I started befriending a Nigerian professional pilot. He was later convicted of trafficking drugs.

These are a few of the events I have observed. I have chosen a factual and literal approach to the question.

Edit: I have taken note of comments and with hindsight can see how these experiences seem skewed, they are skewed. I have no hesitation in humbly acknowledging that. They are skewed by the fact these observations were made in the most notorious area of the city which is known for being populated with drug dealers and users and various criminals, whether locals or people from many different nationalities. It so happens that this is where my college is situated in a gorgeous old building, and where two of my favourite restaurants and bars are located. It is simply an account of outrageously crazy events. My answer was never intended to be representative and should mostdef NOT be seen as a reflection of the “ordinary Joe” from that nation. Am I to apologise for what I have seen?

Related Answer
Why do I have to be Nigerian?

Michael Fitzjohn, proud liberal Answered Jan 18, 2018

Primate ayodele: five nations will come out of nigeria; two will be greater than three (Youtube) You’re a Nigerian because I assume you were born in Nigeria. Never feel ashamed or concerned what country you were born in. You must feel proud to be part of Nigeria. I’ve watched videos and read about your country.

I see many similarities in America.

If you want to see positive changes in Nigeria , join friends of yours and fight for change.

Never assume life will be better anywhere. Stay and help make Nigeria the country you want it to be.

People in America live on two planets. Most American’s can't even agree on if we have a problem let alone how to fix a problem.

Never listen to someone predicting events will happen in a certain year: no one's that smart.

Don't ask why you have to be a Nigerian. Make Nigeria a country where you can be proud to call yourself a Nigerian.

Related Links

Are East Asians discriminated against in Ukraine?
Are there black people in Ukraine?
Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
Only in Nigeria do people look down on Nigerians for schooling in Nigeria. Why?
How can I cope as a Nigerian medical student in Ukraine?
Which countries discriminate against Muslims?
As a non-Nigerian, what confuses you about Nigerians?
What is your reaction when you see a black person in Ukraine?
How can I connect to Nigerians living in Ukraine?
Why are Nigerians hated so much around the world?
What are some things Nigerians consider rude or offensive?
Why don't Nigerians fix Nigeria instead of flocking to other countries?
What is life like for Nigerians living in Ukraine?
How are black people treated in Ukraine?
What are the experiences of Nigerians studying in Ukraine like?

Why exactly is Nigeria so populous and so densely populated relative to other African countries?

Farook Ajose Lives in Lagos, Nigeria 4y

Take a look at the map of Population Density in Africa.

[1]

Do you see anything in common amongst the purple countries?

Well, how about now?

[2]

Now?

[3]

If you haven't figured out yet, the answer to your question is three. No, not that three, there are three answers to your question.

Geography:

"Nigeria is covered by three types of vegetation: forests (where there is significant tree cover), savannahs (insignificant tree cover, with grasses and flowers located between trees), and montane land. (The latter is the least common, and is mainly found in the mountains near the Cameroon border.)"[4] This kind of vegetation is optimal for food production and once people migrated into the region, it was kind of hard to get them out of it. This coupled with high birth rates and very high fertility increased the population of ancient nigeria. And who could ignore the climate that made this sort of vegetation possible?

"The southern region of Nigeria experiences a double rainfall maxima characterised by two high rainfall peaks, with a short dry season and a longer dry season falling between and after each peaks. The first rainy season begins around March and last to the end of July with a peak in June, this rainy season is followed by a short dry break in August known as the August break which is a short dry season lasting for two to three weeks in August. This break is broken by the Short rainy season starting around early September and lasting to Mid October with a peak period at the end of September. The ending of the short rainy season in October is followed by Long Dry Season. This period starts from late October and lasts till early March with peak dry conditions between early December and late February. The Sahel Climate or Tropical dry climate*, is the predominant climate type in the northern part of Nigeria. Annual rainfall totals are lower compared to the southern and central part of Nigeria.*

Rainy season in the northern part of Nigeria last for only three to four months (June–September). The rest of the year is hot and dry with temperatures climbing as high as 40 °C (104.0 °F) ."[5] The southern region was perfect for agriculture while the northern region was livestock rearing. This had an influence on our culture which is still present today.

[6]

There existed kingdoms and states all around the region and pretty close to one another they were. This brings about the next thing on my list, trade.

Trade:

With so many different tribes and kingdoms in the region, one thing was certain, trade. West Africa and the Gold coast was rich in gold and had little value in comparison with salt to west Africans, hence, gold became one of the largest exports of the region and salt, the largest import. Amongst west african states, salt, leather, horses, kola nuts, ivory, cloth and slaves were major themes in the domestic trade. The existence of the trans-saharan trade allowed immigration into these communities, while domestic trade created wealth for the masses who in turn kept increasing the population.

Deltas:

The abundance of water in these regions helped flourish and keep the natality high. It makes sense we build our civilisations around water since water is such an essential part of life. The same applies to all high density countries in Africa, the things they have in common are the rivers. Below is a map of Nigeria with emphasis on the rivers and the major cities. This same pattern is observed and areas closed to water sources have high population densities.

[7]

Footnotes

[1] https://www.google.com.ng/url?sa=i&rct=j&q=&esrc=s&source=imgres&cd=&cad=rja&uact=8&ved=0ahUKEwiPqoy1nYzWAhWKaVAKHdwlDX0QjRwIBw&url=https%3A%2F%2Fen.wikipedia.org%2Fwiki%2FList_of_African_countries_by_population_density&psig=AFQjCNFv3H6okPghwD1Lqnwc52TOlzR_dA&ust=1504638518708125

[2] Image on pinimg.com
[3] Image on lizardpoint.com
[4] Geography of Nigeria - Wikipedia
[5] Geography of Nigeria - Wikipedia
[6] http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/2/21/African-civilizations-map-imperial.png

[7] https://www.google.com.ng/url?sa=i&rct=j&q=&esrc=s&source=images&cd=&cad=rja&uact=8&ved=0ahUKEwi98OKL14zWAhXDY1AKHU7RAK0QjRwIBw&url=https%3A%2F%2Fen.wikipedia.org%2Fwiki%2FTalk%253ANigeria%252FArchive1&psig=AFQjCNHdNbGK7ir-lMcmnbgbrPO2bVC5Qg&ust=1504653852824541

Why does Nigeria, one of the richer countries in Africa, have such an abysmal life expectancy?

Ian Kedem Chief Agronomist at ASTC Ltd. (2013–present)1y

I live in Nigeria. A great majority of the population are extremely poor. It's difficult to explain poverty to someone in a developed county. Let me give you an example. Most people have to get up in the morning and hustle enough to buy enough food for that day. Millions go to sleep hungry.

Here in Nigeria there is no such thing as social welfare. You pay school fees and hospital bills. The budget for health and education is around 100 billion naira this year. That's for 200 million people. The budget for the 450 Nigerian Legislators is 145 billion naira. Can you see where the wealth of the country is going?

If you can't afford to pay for health care you're turned away from hospital. I've known people who have died at the hospital gate after being turned away for lack of money.

I personally witnessed a family smuggling what looked like a dead grandmother out of a hospital probably because they couldn't pay the bill. I know deceased who have been in morgues for years because the family doesn't have the money to pay for the hospital bill.

The hospitals are terribly under equipped and the doctors and nurses terribly under qualified and under paid.

The Nigerian President Buhari is no fool. When he became ill a few years ago he flew to England for treatment. His daughter has just given birth - in Dubai.

So poverty, lack of education and a terrible health care system means that people die young.

Millions of children under the age of 5 die in Nigeria every year from lack of food, clean water and basic health care. Malaria is rife, high blood pressure and diabetes is common.

The problem is that the poverty is increasing, with the fall in the price of oil the naira has become weak. Most things are imported. In that last few months staple food prices have increased. The people are desperate.

Related Links

Why is life expectancy so low in Africa? What are they dying of by the time they hit 50?
Why is the average life expectancy so low in Nigeria today?

How come life expectancy in Nigeria is only around 50? What are people dying from in their 50s?

Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?
Why does South Africa have such a low life expectancy (it's around 63)?
Which countries have the highest life expectancy?
In Nigeria, is life expectancy higher for Christians or Muslims?

Someone said that statistics have shown that living in Lagos can shorten one's life expectancy. Is this true?

Why is the life expectancy in Nigeria only 55.75 years? Do they really see folks dying around that age most of the time?

Why is the birth rate in African countries so high compared to Western countries, when their life expectancies are also so low?

Why is Nigeria a rich country, meanwhile the rest of Africa suffers?
Which country in Africa has the highest standard of living?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
How is life in Nigeria?
What is the cause of low life expectancy in Africa?

Related Answer
Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?

Jamie Oglethorpe, Grew up on the Zambian Copperbelt Answered May 19, 2018

Nigeria is the most populous country in Africa by far, which gives it a large GDP. It is far more important to look at the GDP (or GNI) per capita. This is a much more meaningful measure of wealth from the individual resident's point of view.
Here is the Gross Domestic Product for 2017, and Nigeria is on top[1] :

2017 Rank	Country	Nominal GDP ($ billions)	Nominal GDP per capita (US$)	Notes
1	Nigeria	376.284	1,994.235
2	South Africa	349.299	6,179.870
3	Egypt	237.037	2,500.772
4	Algeria	178.287	4,292.272
5	Angola	124.209	4,407.657
6	Morocco	109.824	3,151.145

On the other hand, the GDP per person is dominated by small countries[2] :

African rank (2017)	World rank (2017)	GDP (PPP) per capita (2017)[1]	Nation
1	37	34,865	Equatorial Guinea
2	47	28,712	Seychelles
3	61	21,628	Mauritius
4	67	19,266	Gabon
5	71	18,146	Botswana
6	84	15,150	Algeria
7	89	13,403	South Africa
8	92	12,994	Egypt
13	115	8,612	Morocco
14	124	6,942	Cape Verde
16	127	6,707	Republic of the Congo
17	129	5,927	Nigeria
18	137	4,605	Ghana
19	138	4,580	Sudan

 I looked for coampatible figures. The Nominal figures are at the dollar exchange rate. The PPP is adjusted for the cost of living[3]

Related Answer
How do other African countries view Nigeria?

Boris Guiffot, A Cameroonian dude who likes technology and politics Updated Jul 10, 2019 · Upvoted by Yusuf Idowu, lives in Nigeria

I am Cameroonian and Nigeria is the country with whom we share the longest border. That has a huge impact on the way we see the country. There is a large Nigerian community in Cameroon. Many Cameroonians pursue their high education in Nigeria.

Nigerians are considered very smart but some of them are famous to use that smartness to do unglamorous activities. They contribute to the stereotypes.

We often compete against each other at football (both our male & female team)

We like to tease you guys about football but we don't want to mess up with you when it comes to political matters : Yes, I am talking about Bakassi! Because of that disputed peninsula, we went to the brink of war in 1981. We are so relieved that it has been resolved diplomatically. Thanks guys for avoiding a useless war with a neighbor that has 1/10 of your population. We appreciate it!

We relate well because our anglophone regions speak a similar Pidgin English. Even the French we speak on the street is full of Pidgin words.

Our northern regions are very similar to yours. Most of them belong to the same Fulfulde/Hausa ethnic group. They were even part of the same empire before they were separated by colonial borders:

We both complain about the extreme corruption of governments. We sometimes share the podium as the most corrupt countries on the continent. Does this have anything to do with the fact that we are both oil producers?

Thank you very much for saving us from Hollywood and Telenovelas. We really love your fashion, music and movies. Our own industry grew exponentially after we decided to follow suit.

For some reasons, many of us think that Nigeria is very developed except for those who have actually set foot in the country. Nollywood certainly has something to do with it.

Our rivalry is usually with Ivory Coast and we don't interfere with you guys trying to downplay Ghana. Nonetheless, we wonder why you guys make so much noise about jollof rice. We might not be loud about it but ours is the best:

I am from West Cameroon and we are often mistaken for Igbos so I guess we might be distant cousins

We wonder why such a powerful neighbour couldn't contain Boko Haram after so many years

I don't know if there is a country in this world without a Nigerian community

We admire you a lot for your sense of self-worth and self-confidence

Your pastors took all Africa by surprise. They are so famous that it is told that some pastors will go for training in Nigeria before returning to Cameroon

Your garments are real works of art!

Overall, we mingle pretty well and seem to have a lot in common. I know a lot Nigerian-Cameroonian couples.

BellaNaija

Related Answer
Who is the richest person in Africa in 2020?

Rafiu Ibrahim Oluwatobiloba, I Am an African Boy. Answered Jan 1, 2020

The richest man in Africa is Sir Aliko Dangote.

Aliko Dangote GCON was born 10 April 1957, He is the great grandson of alhaji hassan dantata who was the richest man in west africa at the time of his death in 1955. For the seventh year in a row, Dangote has been the richest man in Africa. Presently according to forbes he has a net worth of 8.8billion dollars.

Dangote is a Nigerian businessman, investor, and owner of the Dangote Group, The Dangote Group was established as a small trading firm in 1977, which is now a multi trillion conglomerate and one of the largest private sector employers in nigeria. It has interests in commodities in Nigeria and other African countries.

His Dangote Cement company is the continent's largest cement producer which produces 45.6 million metric tons annually and has operations in 10 countries across Africa.

His next project, Dangote Refinery has been under construction for three years and is expected to be one of the world's largest oil refineries once complete.

From the left: The richest man in Africa and Bill Gates (second richest man in the world) and the vice president of Nigeria Prof Yemi Oshinbajo in year 2018 during Aliko's daughter wedding.

Aliko and Bill Gates when he came to Nigeria for his charity foundation.

Footnotes

[1] List of African countries by GDP (nominal) - Wikipedia
[2] List of African countries by GDP (PPP) per capita - Wikipedia
[3] The Big Mac index

Related Links

Why is Nigeria a poor country?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
What separates Nigeria from other African countries (both good and bad)?
Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?

Nigeria is the richest country in Africa, but some poor countries are doing better than Nigeria. Why? Don't include corruption part of our problem but other factors.

How is it possible that Rwanda is developing at a faster rate than Nigeria when Nigeria has access to the coast, youthful population, and natural resources? Why don't the leaders of Nigeria replicate the model of the leaders of Rwanda?

Which is the most hated country in Africa?
How do other African countries view Cameroon?
Is Nigeria the most developed country in West Africa?
Is Nigeria the poorest country all over Africa?
Why do South Africans hate other Africans?
Is Nigeria more developed than other African countries?

Why does Nigeria, one of the richer countries in Africa, have such an abysmal life expectancy?

Ian Kedem Chief Agronomist at ASTC Ltd. (2013–present)1y

I live in Nigeria. A great majority of the population are extremely poor. It's difficult to explain poverty to someone in a developed county. Let me give you an example. Most people have to get up in the morning and hustle enough to buy enough food for that day. Millions go to sleep hungry.

Here in Nigeria there is no such thing as social welfare. You pay school fees and hospital bills. The budget for health and education is around 100 billion naira this year. That's for 200 million people. The budget for the 450 Nigerian Legislators is 145 billion naira. Can you see where the wealth of the country is going?

If you can't afford to pay for health care you're turned away from hospital. I've known people who have died at the hospital gate after being turned away for lack of money.

I personally witnessed a family smuggling what looked like a dead grandmother out of a hospital probably because they couldn't pay the bill.

I know deceased who have been in morgues for years because the family doesn't have the money to pay for the hospital bill.

The hospitals are terribly under equipped and the doctors and nurses terribly under qualified and under paid.

The Nigerian President Buhari is no fool. When he became ill a few years ago he flew to England for treatment. His daughter has just given birth - in Dubai.

So poverty, lack of education and a terrible health care system means that people die young.

Millions of children under the age of 5 die in Nigeria every year from lack of food, clean water and basic health care. Malaria is rife, high blood pressure and diabetes is common.

The problem is that the poverty is increasing, with the fall in the price of oil the naira has become weak. Most things are imported. In that last few months staple food prices have increased. The people are desperate.

News Nigeria

BREAKING: Governor Udom Emmanuel in Cold War with House of Assembly Over N150 Billion Naira Fresh Loan

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 16h

A fresh attempt by Governor Udom Emmanuel to coerce members of the Akwa Ibom State House of Assembly into approving a fresh loan, a month after receiving a 4.7 billion Naira Loan in January 2022, met a brick wall and caused commotion in the Assembly.

A source told our reporter on Saturday, 26th February, 2022 that the request was met with protest as members feared a possible public backlash if the latest loan request is approved.

This did not go down well with the Speaker of the Assembly, Rt. Hon. Aniekan Bassey, who was said to have been directly mandated by the Governor to ensure total compliance of members.

According to some members of the Assembly, the latest move has generated a huge storm in the Assembly as members lament that they are being used as conduit pipes by Udom Emmanuel.

A good number of members reportedly directed the Speaker to tell the Governor to stay action on his latest request, or disclose the purpose of the loan, how it would be spent, repayment plan and life span of the loan.

In a desperate move to contain the members who were against the loan request, the Governor directed the Speaker to negotiate a deal with them, promising to grant automatic tickets to members seeking second term or higher elective offices, contracts to first term members who are not seeking second term, slight increase in imprests among other juicy promises.

The members also reasoned that the governor can't claim to be using the funds for projects completion since virtually no project has been commissioned in recent times.

A source who pleaded anonymity said: " We are watching with dismay, the litany of failed projects scattered around the state. Is it the Etinan - Uyo road? Where are the mini industries he mentioned some months ago? Where are the Mexican cows he promised? Where are the CCTVs that the house approved a huge sum for after the endSARS protest? Our retired primary school teachers have been scammed by the governor who asked them to go for verification exercise, and thereafter did nothing as we are talking now. He should come clear on how he spent the previous loans and what he wants to use this one for."

He stated that another worrisome financial recklessness on the governor is the issue of the refunded N 171 billion from the federal government, which he denied collecting, but later admitted that he used it to clear the debt the state owed the First Bank PLC which was N141 billion.

The action of some of the Assembly members, according to our checks, is also buoyed by their disagreement with the Governor on his choice of Pastor Umo Eno as his preferred successor.

They see it as payback time as the Governor is suspected to use recent loans to bankroll the ambition of his anointed aspirant. Despite a ceremonial endorsement of Umo Eno by the House, it is known that individual members have their choice aspirants. It was gathered that the said 'endorsement' came after Governor Udom threatened members who disagree with the choice with impeachment.

Another source who would not want his name mentioned said that individual members were miffed with the governor for paying attention to non important projects. He queried, "how do you commit billions to building a worship center and promoting your candidate to ensuring the welfare of the citizen?" He commended the house for rejecting such moves by the governor and insisted that the governor is doing it to make his successor suffer for paying unnecessarily heavy loans having known that his anointed candidate will fail the guber election.

It would be recalled that before the January 2022 loan, the Assembly had approved 18.7 billion Naira, 7 billion Naira and 10 billion Naira respectively for the Governor in 2021 alone.

While the loan debate continues to rage in the state, an attempt by the Leader of the Assembly, Udo Kierian to justify the 18.7 billion Naira backfired as he was severely criticized for saying: "afterall 30 years from now, I'm not sure how many of us will be available to repay this one. So, for me, I think it is good enough for us to tie into it."

The internal debt profile of the state stood at approximately 2.42 Trillion Naira as at the end of June 2021, according to the Debt Management Office (DMO).

Osazua Iruedo

Manager (2017–present)11mo

Why are a lot of Nigerians so extroverted, fun, and friendly compared to other countries?

If they say Nigerians are among the happiest people on earth I don't think we will argue. An average Nigerian mentality is just cruise. People that make fun of their own Misery's. Humor is a gift you get for being a Nigerian, slightly higher than the line for insanity. I won't be wrong if I say it's our coping mechanism. Fun is a way we know how to keep on pushing and a way to look beyond our imperfect country. With how our country is if we don't laugh at life we will go mad.

Who turns a protest into a party? Nigerians

Who replys with ffb on their president's post on Twitter? Nigerians

Who creates happiness out of nothing? Nigerians

Who turns every situation into a comedy? Nigerians.

Nigerians use banter and humor to hide how fucked we all are in this country.

Nigerians are warm, friendly, kind, fun, witty and merry. Despite all the troubles , all our pains. We are sensitive to all the Issues we have and our heart silently scream in pain. Yet we still force a smile and make jokes out of everything.

If only we have good leaders, Nigeria would have become the best place on earth

What's so special about the Yoruba people?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated 1y

I once had a Yoruba boss; an energetic full-blown Yoruba man who wouldn't say a few words without chipping in one or two Yoruba.

We were cool but not on one aspect; Greeting!

The Yorubas are known for their extraordinary show of respect for elders.

They often demonstrate this in greetings:

How a man places his head, knees and hands while greeting is very important to them.

And greeting sounds much sweeter to him when done with his own language-- Yoruba.

I have no issues respecting fellow human beings without minding their age or sex.

But, I was taught greeting differently mostly due to my environment and my guardian's orientation which obviously didn't suit him so well so we sometimes had issues.

He often said:

"My brother, You greet the elderly while standing?"

"Look at you, Your people are so uncultured."

I have lived with several Yoruba people and I can confidently say they are peaceful, they could be considered good neighbours.

And the respect they show, even people who are a few years older than me is fascinating.

The Yoruba states are amongst the most peaceful in Nigeria.

They also have the highest number of professors in the country, which shows their love for education.

People say Nigerians love partying. The tribe that has contributed selflessly to place our name at the top of that list is the Yorubas.

With every teardrop, the Yoruba man has nine more reasons to throw a party.

They are also amongst the very few tribes in Nigeria that appreciates their language.

A Yoruba friend was speaking Yoruba with another of his tribesman at my place, and I heard my name severally during their conversation, I was worried about this, bro, why are you mentioning my name in your Yoruba when you know I don't speak?

"Ah! Oga Victor, it's nothing bad."

Nothing bad? then why not speak with your brother in English, "Ah! no na, I can't speak English with my brother, the conversation won't be sweet."

When we want to mention loving tribes in Nigeria the Yorubas would be among the first.

Related Answer

Who is the founder of the Yoruba?

Funsho Agbalu, Social Analysis & Other Stuff

Updated Oct 31, 2018

The Mecca story is Yoruba Muslim propaganda propagated by Ilorin based Muslims who rebelled from the old Oyo Empire with Afonja's assistance.

The Yoruba identity is a product of miscegenation between old Ife, Nupes and Baribas, with ancient Ife's culture maintaining the dominant part of the mix. It started with a civil war between a migrant community which was more advanced technologically, headed by a certain Oduduwa (real name Adimula, Odùduwà became a title granted to him due to his work civilizing the original settlers of the area - literal meaning Odù - tí - ó - dá - ìwà: The Gospel that Created Good Character) and the original settlers of Ife headed by one Obatala.

The latter was betrayed by a brother who defected to the Oduduwa side of the war. Ife before this civil war, was a confederation of 13 settlements, administered by a council of elders - forerunners of the Ogboni. Oduduwa was victorious in this war, consolidating all 13 settlements into a single city state - Ilé-Ifè becoming the first Ooni of Ifè (Ilé - Ifè - literal meaning is Home of the Expansion)

His descendants and religious adherents traded food and beads in exchange for horses with the Nupes and Baribas of the lower Niger River, slowly migrating in waves to Old Oyo and other parts of the Yoruba country. They eventually came to dominate much of the South West of Nigeria today through cultural influence and military conquest.

Image:

Head with Are crown of the Ooni , Wunmonije Quarters, Ile- Ife , 14th - 15th century, Copper alloy

Related Answer

Who are the Yoruba People?

Debo Kayode Ogunranti, Native Yoruba man versed in it's history and culture
Answered Jan 9, 2018

Who are the Yoruba People?

According to Wikipedia, "The Yoruba people are an ethnic group of southwestern and north-central Nigeria, as well as southern and central Benin. Together, these regions are known as Yorubaland.

The Yoruba constitute over 40 million people in total. The majority of this population is from Nigeria, and the Yoruba make up 21% of the country's population, according to the CIA World Factbook, making them one of the largest ethnic groups in Africa.

The majority of the Yoruba speak the Yoruba language, which is tonal, and is the Niger-Congo language with the largest number of native speakers.

The Yoruba diaspora consists of two main groupings; one of them includes relatively recent migrants, the majority of which moved to the United Kingdom and the United States after major economic and political changes in the 1960s to 1980s; the other is a much older population dating back to the Atlantic slave trade.

This older group has communities in such countries as Cuba, Dominican Republic, Saint Lucia, Jamaica, Brazil, Grenada, Trinidad and Tobago, among others.

LOCATION: West Africa (primarily Nigeria; also Benin and Togo)

POPULATION: 45 million

LANGUAGE: Yoruba

RELIGION: Ancestral religion; Islam; Christianity

1 • INTRODUCTION

The Yoruba are one of the largest African ethnic groups south of the Sahara Desert. They are, in fact, not a single group, but rather a collection of diverse people bound together by a common language, history, and culture. Within Nigeria, the Yoruba dominate the western part of the country. Yoruba mythology holds that all Yoruba people descended from a hero called Odua or Oduduwa. Today there are over fifty individuals who claim kingship as descendants of Odua.

During the four centuries of the slave trade, Yoruba territory was known as the Slave Coast. Uncounted numbers of Yoruba were carried to the Americas. Their descendants preserved Yoruba traditions. In several parts of the Caribbean and South America, Yoruba religion has been combined with Christianity. In 1893, the Yoruba kingdoms in Nigeria became part of the Protectorate of Great Britain. Until 1960 Nigeria was a British colony and the Yoruba were British subjects. On October 1, 1960, Nigeria became an independent nation structured as a federation of states.

2 • LOCATION

The Yoruba homeland is located in west Africa. It stretches from a savanna (grassland) region in the north to a region of tropical rain forests in the south. Most Yoruba live in Nigeria. However there are also some scattered groups in Benin and Togo, small countries to the west of Nigeria. The occupations and living conditions of the Yoruba in the north and south differ sharply.

Current census figures are difficult to obtain. The Yoruba population is estimated to be 5.3 million.

3 • LANGUAGE

The Yoruba language belongs to the Congo-Kordofanian language family. Yoruba has many dialects, but its speakers can all understand each other.

Yoruba is a tonal language. The same combination of vowels and consonants has different meanings depending on the pitch of the vowels (whether they are pronounced with a high voice or a low voice). For example, the same word, aro , can mean cymbal, indigo dye, lamentation, and granary, depending on intonation. Pele o is "Hello"; Bawo ni? is "How are you?"; and Dada ni is "Fine, thank you."

4 • FOLKLORE

According to a Yoruba creation myth, the deities (gods) originally lived in the sky with only water below them. Olorun, the Sky God, gave to Orishala, the God of Whiteness, a chain, a bit of earth in a snail shell, and a five-toed chicken. He told Orishala to go down and create the earth. Orishala approached the gate of heaven. He saw some deities having a party and he stopped to greet them. They offered him palm wine and he drank too much and fell asleep. Odua, his younger brother, saw Orishala sleeping. He took the materials and went to the edge of heaven, accompanied by Chameleon. He let down the chain and they climbed down it. Odua threw the piece of earth on the water and placed the five-toed chicken upon it. The chicken began to scratch the earth, spreading it in all directions. After Chameleon had tested the firmness of the earth, Odua stepped down. A sacred grove is there today.

5 • RELIGION

As many as 20 percent of the Yoruba still practice the traditional religions of their ancestors.

The practice of traditional religion varies from community to community. For example, a deity (god) may be male in one village and female in another. Yoruba traditional religion holds that there is one supreme being and hundreds of orisha, or minor deities. The worshipers of a deity are referred to as his "children."

There are three gods who are available to all. Olorun (Sky God) is the high god, the Creator. One may call on him with prayers or by pouring water on kola nuts on the ground. Eshu (also called Legba by some) is the divine messenger who delivers sacrifices to Olorun after they are placed at his shrine. Everyone prays frequently to this deity. Ifa is the God of Divination, who interprets the wishes of Olorun to mankind. Believers in the Yoruba religion turn to Ifa in times of trouble. Another god, Ogun (god of war, the hunt, and metalworking), is considered one of the most important. In Yoruba courts, people who follow traditional beliefs swear to give truthful testimony by kissing a machete sacred to Ogun.

Shango (also spelled Sango and Sagoe) is the deity that creates thunder. The Yoruba believe that when thunder and lightning strike, Shango has thrown a thunderstone to earth. After a thunderstorm, Yoruba religious leaders search the ground for the thunderstone, which is believed to have special powers. The stones are housed in shrines dedicated to Shango. Shango has four wives, each representing a river in Nigeria.

The Yoruba who practice other religious are divided about evenly between Muslims (followers of Islam) and Christians. Nearly all Yoruba still observe annual festivals and other traditional religious practices.

6 • MAJOR HOLIDAYS

Local festivals are usually dedicated to individual deities. Yoruba may also celebrate the following holidays, depending on whether they are Christians or Muslims: New Year's Day, January; Eid al-Adha (Feast of Sacrifice), June or July; Easter, March or April; Maulid an-Nabi (Muhammad's birthday); Ramadan, followed by a three-day feast; Nigerian Independence Day (October); Eid al-Fitr ; Christmas (December).

7 • RITES OF PASSAGE

A newborn infant is sprinkled with water to make it cry. No word may be spoken until the infant cries. Also, no one younger than the mother should be present at the birth. The infant then is taken to the backyard. The umbilical cord is bound tightly with thread and then cut. The placenta is buried in the backyard. On the placenta burial spot, the child is bathed with a loofah sponge and rubbed with palm oil. The child is held by the feet and given three shakes to make it strong and brave. After a specified number of days, a naming ceremony is held. Relatives attend and bring small amounts of money. Male and female circumcision are usually performed in the first month.

Marriages are arranged. A man must negotiate with the girl's father. If he is approved he must bring the family a payment called a bride wealth, paid in three installments. Wedding ceremonies begin at the bride's house after dark. There is a feast to which the groom contributes yams. The bride then is taken to the groom's house. There she is washed from foot to knee with an herbal mixture meant to bring her many children. For the first eight days after marriage she divides her time between her husband's and in her parents' compounds. On the ninth day she moves to her husband's home.

Burials are performed by the adult men who are not close relatives but belong to the clan of the deceased. The grave is dug in the floor of the room where the deceased lived. After the burial there is a period of feasting. Many of the rituals associated with burial are intended to insure that the deceased will be reborn again.

8 • RELATIONSHIPS

Kinship is the most important relationship for the Yorubas. Best friends are very important as well. A best friend is referred to as "friend not-see-not-sleep." This means that one does not go to sleep without having seen his best friend. When approaching death, a Yoruba shares his last wishes with his best friend.

Also important are clubs that grow out of childhood associations. When a group of young friends starts spending time together, they form a club. They choose a name and invite an older man and woman to serve as advisors. The clubs continue through adulthood. They hold monthly meetings, with the members serving as hosts in turn.

9 • LIVING CONDITIONS

Traditional compounds (which house clans) in Yoruba villages are made up of rectangular courtyards, each with a single entrance. Around each courtyard is an open or a partly enclosed porch. Here the women sit, weave, and cook. Behind this are the rooms of each adult. Today the old compounds are rapidly being replaced by modern bungalows made of cement blocks with corrugated iron roofs. Most Yoruba towns, even small ones, have adequate basic services, including electricity, running water, and paved roads.

10 • FAMILY LIFE

Every Yoruba is born into a clan whose members are descended from a common ancestor. Descent is patrilineal—both sons and daughters are born into the clan of their father. Clan members live in a large residential area called a compound. The males are born, married, and buried in it. Females live in the compound of their birth until they marry. Then they go to live with their husbands. The eldest male, or Bale, is the head of the compound. A husband is responsible for settling quarrels within his own family. However, if he is unsuccessful or if an argument involves members of two different families, it is referred to the Bale.

Within the compound, the immediate family consists of a man, his wives, and their children. The Yoruba practice polygyny (having more than one wife). Each wife and her children are considered a sub-family. They have a separate room within the husband's and they share possessions. Each mother cooks for her own children only. A man is expected to treat each wife equally. However, wives compete to gain additional favors for their own children. The father is strict and distant. Often, he sees little of his children. When they are young, children of co-wives play together. However, as they grow older, they usually grow apart because of quarrels over possessions.

11 • CLOTHING

Western-style dress is worn in urban areas. Traditional clothing is still worn on important occasions and in rural areas. It is very colorful and elaborate. Traditional fabrics were block printed with geometric designs. Women wear a head tie made of a rectangular piece of fabric. They carry babies or young children on their backs by tying another rectangular cloth around their the waists. A third cloth may be worn over the shoulder as a shawl over a loose-fitting, short-sleeved blouse. A larger cloth serves as a wrap-around skirt.

Men wear tailored cloth hats, gowns, and trousers. One popular type of gown is shaped like a poncho.

12 • FOOD

The Yoruba diet consists of starchy tubers, grains, and plantains. These are supplemented by vegetable oils, wild and cultivated fruits and vegetables, meat, and fish. The daily family diet relies on cassava, taro, maize, beans, and plantains. One of the most popular foods is fufu (or foo-foo)

13 • EDUCATION

Since attaining independence (1960), Nigeria has set a high priority on education. Universal primary education has become the norm in southern Nigeria, where the Yoruba live. Secondary school (high school) education also became common. The first university in Nigeria was located in a Yoruba city. Originally called University College, it is now known as the University of Ibadan. The majority of students at Ibadan are Yoruba.

14 • CULTURAL HERITAGE

The Yoruba oral tradition includes praise poems, tongue twisters, hundreds of prose narratives and riddles, and thousands of proverbs.

Yoruba music includes songs of ridicule and praise, as well as lullabies, religious songs, war songs, and work songs. These usually follow a "call and response" pattern between a leader and chorus. Rhythm is provided by drums, iron gongs, cymbals, rattles, and hand clapping. Other instruments include long brass trumpets, ivory trumpets, whistles, stringed instruments, and metallophones. Perhaps the most interesting musical instrument is the "talking drum." The "talking drum" features an hourglass shape with laces that can be squeezed to tighten the goatskin head, altering the drum's pitch.

15 • EMPLOYMENT

About 75 percent of the Yoruba men are farmers, producing food crops for their domestic needs. Farming is considered men's work. Clearing or hoeing fields is done only by men. Wives help their husbands plant yams and harvest corn, beans, and cotton. They also help at the market, selling farm produce. Some Yoruba have large cocoa farms worked by hired labor.

The Yoruba enjoy trading. Huge markets with over a thousand sellers are common. Trade in foodstuffs and cloth is confined to women. Meat selling and produce buying are the province of men.

The new, educated generation is moving away from farming, and its members are looking for white-collar jobs.

16 • SPORTS

Although there are few organized sports, Yoruba (like other Nigerians) in some areas participate in wrestling and soccer.

17 • RECREATION

Traditional entertainment includes rituals, dancing, and music making. Modern forms of entertainment include watching television and going to movies and discos. Most households own televisions sets. The more religious households prohibit family members, especially women, from going to see films. Among urban teenagers, American youth culture is popular. Most young people listen to rap and rock music from the U.S. Ayo, a board game, is popular among people of all ages. It is a mancala game—a type of game popular in west Africa, that is played on a board with two rows of indentations or wells that are filled with small seeds or stones.

18 • CRAFTS AND HOBBIES

Crafts include weaving, embroidering, pottery making, woodcarving, leather and bead working, and metalworking.

Both men and women weave, using different types of looms. Cloth is woven from wild silk and from locally grown cotton.

Men also do embroidery, particularly on men's gowns and caps, and work as tailors and dressmakers. Floor mats and mat storage bags are also made by men.

Related Answer
Who gave Yoruba his name?

Zubair Muhammad, Self-Employed Updated Mar 9, 2021 Yoruba was gotten from Oyoroba = Oyo has a king

This is a comment from a NAIRALAND User (Tao11) about the origin of the word "Yoruba".
(1) The word "Yoruba" did not originate in Ahmad Baba's "Mi'raj al-Su'ud", or in any of his essays.

To originate a word is to coin such word.

The Timbuktu writer, Ahmad Baba (in that essay) simply made reference to different groups of people using their well-known pre-existing names.

The embedded screenshot right below shows a scan of the manuscript folio in question from his original Arabic essay written in the early 1600s having been taken captive, either him or his forebear. God Most High knows best.

The embedded screenshot which follows below shows a translation of the relevant section of the above Arabic original.

This translation below was prepared by John Hunwick and Fatima Harrak for The Institute of African Studies Rabat, Morocco in the year 2000.

Your statement: "Be so kind as to remove the veil from the various aspects of the problem, and satisfy our desire by giving a detailed reply for we have not found anyone who gives full satisfaction in all aspects of that matter, except for what comes from your direction, with the help of God Most High, though committing an error in the matter is a grave danger. All lands and regions are generally afflicted by it, so haply may God provide illumination in its regard at your hand. [God]—Sublime is He—is the one from whom it is asked that your reward be doubled and your treasure made abundant.

I say: "We have pursued the matter in as far as it was possible for us and to the extent of God's blessing. What is correct came through God's bounty and in His praise. What is error came from its own place and from its author.

We will add another rule for you, that is that whoever now comes to you from the group called Mossi, or Gurma, or Busa, or Borgu, or Dagomba, or Kotokoli, or Yoruba, or Tombo, or Bobo, or K.rmu—all of these are unbelievers, remaining in their unbelief until now.[68] Similarly Kumbē, except for a few of the people of Hombori 68 On the history of the Mossi, see Ivor Wilks, "The Mossi and the Akan states", in J.F. Ade Ajayi & Michael Crowder (eds.), History of West Africa, 3rd edn., Harlow: Longman, 1985, 465-502. The Mossi now live in central Burkina Faso.

The Gurma, or Gurmanche, inhabit territory to the east of the Mossi towards the R. Niger. See Ta'rīkh al-sūdān in Hunwick, Timbuktu and the Songhay Empire, 128, 199.

Busa is one of the principal towns of Borgu, which was in the 16th century a powerful state situated between Kebbi and the Yoruba kingdom of [Old] Oyo, to the west of the R. Niger. Songhay made several attempts to gain control of Borgu; see Ta'rīkh al-sūdān in Hunwick, Timbuktu and the Songhay Empire, 92, 109, 148.

The land of Borgu, inhabited by the Bariba people, is still a recognized entity, lying partly in Nigeria and partly in the République du Bénin. The Clearly, the text shows from its phrasing [viz. "... the group called ... Yoruba ..."] that this is a well-known pre-existing name.

Ahmad Baba didn't name us, neither did he name any of the ten groups in that listing.

(2) Yes Ahmad Baba wrote "Mi'raj al-Su'ud", but not in the year 1627 (in case that was assumed).

Rather, this specific essay was written in the year 1615 in response to some inquiries on enslaving black people.

The Arabic text of "Mi'raj al Su'ud" contains the precise year [and month] of its writing (in the Islamic/Hijri calendar obviously) as highlighted in the embedded folio below.

The highlight in this folio (which is simply the "verso" of the earlier attached folio) basically shows the wording (in translation): "[The year] one thousand and twenty four [of the Hijrah]".

When converted from this Hijri "AH" calendar into the Gregorian "CE" calendar; the year 1024AH falls into the year 1615CE.

The well-known formula "G = 0.9692*H + 622" proves sufficiently useful for this conversion.

•••And Muhammed Bello (1837 in his infaq al-maysur) both of whom were reported among the earliest to name the people in Oyo 'Yoruba', 'yaruba', 'yarba' at a time when they are still referring to themselves by their diverse ethnic identities•••
In the light of my above expositions from Ahmad Baba's essay of the year 1615, the anachronism and contradiction of the Sultan Bello Coinage myth thus becomes very obvious.

For emphasis, the year 1615 (Ahmad Baba) comes before the year 1837 (Sultan Bello).

And the word "Yoruba" (as the group name for Yoruba-speaking peoples) has been in existence prior to Baba himself as has been observed in that essay.

What then is the word "Yarriba", or "Yarba", etc., and what is its connection with Sultan Bello??

Captain Hugh Clapperton who was an acquaintance of Sultan Bello of Sokoto informs us in his 1829 publication on this.

He noted that "Yarriba" is simply the Arab's and the Hausa's articulation of the evidently pre-existing name "Yoruba". To quote Clapperton's precise words, he writes:

"Having seen the whole of the baggage off, we started in the evening, and proceeded on our journey. We learned in fact that we were not now in the king of Badagry's territory, but in a district of Eyeo [Ọ̀yọ́], which is called Yarriba by the Arabs and people of Houssa, and that the name of the capital is called Katunga, and that it is thirty days' journey."
~ Captain Hugh Clapperton; "Journal of a Second Expedition Into the Interior of Africa"; (1829), p. 4.

Furthermore, Bishop Samuel Ajayi Crowther also writing in the 1800s makes a note to this same foregoing effect when he writes as follows:

"European Travellers obtained the name Katanga from Hausa People. Yarriba, or Yaruba, is likewise the Hausa pronunciation: Yoruba would be more correct".
~ Reverend Ajayi Crowther; "A Grammar of The Yoruba Language"; (1852), p. i.

In summary, the name "Yoruba" did not originate in the writings of Ahmad Baba in the 1600s. Neither, obviously, did it originate in the writings of Arabs and Hausa-Fulanis in the 1800s.

As has been seen in Ahmad Baba's essay from the year 1615, the name "Yoruba" (in reference to the Yoruba-speaking group) predates the 1600s.

It is evidently our endonym from a long time ago. Don't be fooled by modern day propaganda, people

Cheers!

Women are the potters. In addition to palm oil lamps, they make over twenty kinds of pots and dishes for cooking, eating, and carrying and storing liquids.

Woodcarvers, all of whom are men, carve masks and figurines as well as mortars, pestles, and bowls. Some Yoruba woodcarvers also work in bone, ivory, and stone. Blacksmiths work both in iron and brass to create both useful and decorative objects.

19 • SOCIAL PROBLEMS

There are vast differences in wealth among Yoruba of different social classes. Many urban occupations do not provide adequate wages to support a family.

Most of this was sourced online.

Related Answer
Is it true that the Yoruba came from the Saudi Arabia?

Emare King

Answered Dec 5, 2018

The Yoruba have a culture that originates in Africa, Nubia. However, their population resided in Pre-Islamic Saudi Arabia. Their it is said in their oral traditions that they worshipped "Idols", and where eventually overthrown by Muhammad's Clan and other raiding Muslim Tribes.

There is much Evidence that suggest these oral traditions to be true. At the height of the Yoruba Empire, it stretched from Nigeria to Nubia, Sudan.

Onetara, Oludamare, Oba'talah, Ifa, Yemeya, Orisha, etc……. Share common roots and meanings with languages found in Nubia and Saudi Arabia.

Read Chiekh Anta Diop Books entitled Precolonial Africa, etc….for greater understanding. Keep in mind also their were Native Twa Peoples who lived in West Africa prior to migrations of Africans from Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Nubia.

What is a Yoruba demon?

Chaiiiiii!

Who let you guys in on this one?

Ayaf died o!

The words Yoruba Demon started as a joke on social media around 2015 and has now become a tribal slur on our nice, gentle, good looking young Yoruba men.

A Yoruba demon is a young good looking man of Yoruba origin (who else), who has a way with women. He is a seducer who lures women into his bedroom. He is said to be a playboy whose sole mission is to break the hearts of innocent women. He has a silver tongue, many girlfriends and an overactive sex life

A Yoruba demon is typically a young man of Yoruba descent who has the uncanny gift to effortlessly make ladies fall head over heels in love with him. He is naturally a gifted smooth talker, a born Casanova and prides himself in been able to acquire a huge followership of female admirers and side chicks. He is also gifted at absolving himself of any responsibility in his relationships. Generally, he is a seductive cocktail of sweet and bitter.

There is no going back after you date a Yoruba demon, you keep coming back for more.

He goes after a young lady's heart with no intention of loving her. They are typically seen at parties and would most likely wear big agbada.

They sometimes are seen in groups. To young women they are the Pied Piper of Nigeria!

Since a picture is worth a thousand words so I'm going to post a thousand pictures here.

First, you've got to know them.

Then, you start them young.

Juan Photographic
Weddings

Related Answer

If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer most?

Chukwuemeka Ikoro, IT Professional, Freelance Tech Writer, Geoscientist and Climate Change Champion Updated Dec 12, 2016

Originally Answered: If Nigeria was to seperate into 3 different countries (Hausa, Igbo, Yoruba), which country would suffer more?

I am sure that you are aware that there are over 250 ethnic groups in the country. The three groups you mentioned might not be enough to form a nation.

That being said, let's assume that what you mean is Hausa representing the whole northern Nigeria, Yoruba the western region of Nigeria, and Igbo comprising of the eastern and south-south regions. The country that will be least prosperous (suffer as you called it) is the one that repeats the same mistakes of Nigeria. By not recognizing that the strength of a nation is not what it has inside the ground or the size, the strength of a nation is in her people united by a common purpose. To build a prosperous nation you must make sure that every person feel welcomed and a part of the country. In so doing, in whatever position that they find themselves, they will do all it takes to move the country forward. They will fight for the nation!

You therefore cannot say literally who will “suffer” or not, it depends on the one that will organize themselves well, lead an inclusive government that will uplift her people.

My point is on the “people” because as you are aware, every region and even state in Nigeria have natural resources, but the natural resources alone does not make a nation rich (as Nigeria have proven) nor does population (as some other smaller countries have proven). That a country like Nigeria with abundant human and natural resources is wallowing in poverty is a big shame!

Related Links

Do the Yorubas have any special do’s and don’ts?

Do the Yorubas in Africa know about the importance of the Yoruba culture in Brazil, and that it is still very big in the Afro-Brazilian community? How do they feel about it?

Where did Yoruba people originate from?
Did the Yorubas come from Egypt?
Why are Yoruba men called "Yoruba demons"?
How related are the Brazilian Yorubas and Nigerian Yorubas?
What do Yoruba people think of Edo people?
What is a Yoruba demon?
Who is the founder of the Yoruba?
Why do most people think Yoruba nation is better off as a part of Nigeria?
What's the origin of the Yoruba tribe in Nigeria?
Where did Yoruba slaves go?
What does "Aye" mean in Yoruba?
What turned you into a "Yoruba Demon"?

Are the Yoruba people descendants of ancient Egyptians after being driven away by northern invaders? Yorubas have small nostrils and sharp nose despite being in tropical region, distinct from other blacks, they should have high Caucasian correlation.

What can be the reason why the leader of the secessionist movement of Biafra was not brought to court on the fixed judgement day?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian 7mo

The anyhowness syndrome makes affairs in Nigeria entirely predictable. In an answer to a previous question on how I thought Mr Kanu should be treated, I wrote:

There is what they should do and what is likely to happen.

What should happen is that the courts should punish him for skipping bail. I presume that comes with either a fine, jail sentence or both.

After that, he should be tried for his alleged crimes. If the government wins, he should suffer the consequences. If they lose, then after serving his sentence for breaking bail, he should walk free.

What is likelier to happen is that he joins Col Dasuki and Sheikh El-Zakzaky in DSS accommodations for the foreseeable future.

What should the Nigerian government do with Nnamdi Kanu?
There is what they should do and what is likely to happen. What should happen is that the courts should punish him for skipping bail. I presume that comes with either a fine, jail sentence or both. After that, he should be tried for his alleged crimes. If the government wins, he should suffer the cons…

There is your answer. The Executive, likely through the DSS, is detaining him on 'national security' grounds. If the fate of the others mentioned is any guide than he won't emerge for a very long time.

For the record, you do not uphold the law by undermining it.

Politics in Nigeria is anti-politics. Instead of solving problems, you create more in a reiterative pattern until infinity.

Mr Kanu's guilt is not for the Executive to decide, but I'm not holding my breath over the legislature earning their very large paychecks and restricting its 'national security' powers.

Why govern when rabble-rousing will suffice?

Related Links

What will happen if Biafra breaks away from Nigeria?

What is the chance that the Eastern States of Nigeria (Biafra) will survive, if they break away from Nigeria?

Will Biafra be actualized anytime soon? Why?
Why did the Nigerian leader's suspension of chief justice spark uproar?
Why do people still want Biafra?
Will Biafra be actualized peacefully?

Why has the United Nations refuse to grant the Indigenous People of Biafra freedom, knowing the kind of hardship and suffering the people are facing in Nigeria?

What is the best solution against the agitation for Biafra in Nigeria?

During the Nigerian civil war between Biafra and Nigeria, why was a tiny state of Biafra able to drag on for about three years, looking at the fact that Nigeria had two super powers (Britain and Russia) on their side, with a well organised army?

What do you think of Biafra separating from Nigeria? Will it result in chaos?
What is the real issue with the Biafra struggle in Nigeria?
When is Biafra going to actualize their freedom from Nigeria?
Is it true Britain is the reason why Biafra cannot break away from Nigeria?

Why is the UN not working to protect the right of the people of Biafra to self determination?

Why is the world keeping quiet on Biafra issue?

Why are a lot of Nigerians so extroverted, fun, and friendly compared to other countries?

Osazua Iruedo Manager (2017–present)11mo

If they say Nigerians are among the happiest people on earth I don't think we will argue. An average Nigerian mentality is just cruise. People that make fun of their own Misery's. Humor is a gift you get for being a Nigerian, slightly higher than the line for insanity. I won't be wrong if I say it's our coping mechanism. Fun is a way we know how to keep on pushing and a way to look beyond our imperfect country. With how our country is if we don't laugh at life we will go mad.

Who turns a protest into a party? Nigerians

Who replys with ffb on their president's post on Twitter? Nigerians

Who creates happiness out of nothing? Nigerians

Who turns every situation into a comedy? Nigerians.

Nigerians use banter and humor to hide how fucked we all are in this country.

Nigerians are warm, friendly, kind, fun, witty and merry. Despite all the troubles , all our pains. We are sensitive to all the Issues we have and our heart silently scream in pain. Yet we still force a smile and make jokes out of everything.

If only we have good leaders, Nigeria would have become the best place on earth

Related Answer
What do other countries think of Nigerians?

Dolapo Z. Olaitan Updated May 19, 2021

Nigerians can be thought of and seen in different perspectives. There are vast ethnic groups, religious sects and different beliefs, which I believe applies to other countries. And with these facts, these differences are enough to segregate and paint the country in different images. Other countries see Nigerians as threat in their homeland and some would welcome Nigerians as brothers, but I believe Nigerians are always judged as being deceptive, even fellow Nigerians are cautious of who to relate with and how deep you allow a conversation with a stranger. And yet, there exist saints and good people in Nigeria. I realized that not all Nigerians would embrace foreigners, and not everyone in foreign countries are racists. I guess empathy has a role to play there..and some Nigerians welcome every foreigner no matter your skin colour or origin, I've gone shopping and seen how Nigerians see and respect foreigners but these Nigerians are condemned in these foreigners' homeland, and nobody cares about how these Nigerians are maltreated abroad.

Nigerians are ready to interrogate almost every foreigner but hardly would get love from these people. I grew up believing black skin is a curse, and almost every Nigerian would bleach his/her melanin for attention but growing up made me realise how rejected Nigerians are in those lands they visit to make a difference in their lives. Nigeria is simply a misjudged country, I thought foreign lands are populated with saints and god-fearing people, never knew Nigeria isn't the only country with good and bad people… A cab driver would take around twice the charge for a ride because I'm a visitor and or a black man, but we believe these things only happen in Nigeria. The cabman back to my destination treated me with so much love and respect, talked to me about his love for ex Nigerian footballers like Kanu Nwakwo and Austin J.J Okacha which I least expected… Other drivers on different days played Nigerian artist music, but we thought these people are core racists but not all are; even though I understand they might have done that for business purpose but every good act is worth appreciating… Deceptive people are everywhere, Nigerians are just as flawed as the rest of the world but nobody talks about their imperfections except my holy country. Sold our citizens cheap to the world, only to treat Nigerians like trash because we must look for a greener pasture outside our border.

Answers to this question will always call for a debate, Nigerians are only misjudged for trying to chase their dreams. I believe every country harbours people like Nigerians, but just in different skin colours, speak in different English accent or languages. Nigerians should only be condemned for believing in religion than those missionaries, mental slavery is the topic of every new day in Nigeria and I believe it's the root of those critics they get from the outside world… because every religion teaches us to believe that a saviour is coming to save us from poverty while other countries plan and work towards making their country a safe abode for us. Nigerian leaders swear by these holy books and only to get to power to do otherwise, and nothing happens but yet Nigerians would shed their cold blood in the name of their religious beliefs.

Nigerians deserve love, but beware of who you love

Nigerians deserve attention, but be cautious of who has your attention

Nigerians deserve critics, but be mindful of those you criticize

And I believe every country has her safe and deadly zones… I wonder if Nigerians are hated for being ambitious, although a lot would use deception as a tool in their search for ambition which I'll also condemn… And I got to realise that this doesn't happen only in Nigeria, so why are Nigerians condemned? Many Nigerians are against these evil acts, not all Nigerians are in support. I believe Nigerians deserve to be loved and not killed in the name of jealousy they get from fellow Africans, and not hated for doing the rejected jobs in other continents… Foreigners enjoy what Nigerians can never access in their land, but yet Nigerians would never make their land a threat to these people.

Related Links

I have a couple of Nigerian friends who have been with a lot of ladies and seem like quite the womanizers. Are a lots of Nigerian men players?

Which are the most extroverted and the most introverted countries?
What do extroverts do when they have no friends?
Which countries are more introvert-friendly?
Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
How friendly are Germans with tourists?
What makes a Nigerian wedding fun?
What are the Germans like?
Why are so many Germans against socializing with strangers?
What are the dark sides of German culture?
Are Germans cold, less friendly and/or reserved?
Is Finland really the country of introverts?
What is like being an introvert in your country?
What do other nations think of Nigerians?

Why is Nigeria doing so poorly as a nation even though Nigerian immigrants excel when they live in other countries?

Wake Up Africa!

Why is Nigeria the only black-led Subsaharan African country that manages to grow to have decent strength and economy while other black-led countries are still suffering from extreme poverty? What is the secret of Nigeria for other blacks to learn?

Answered by Peter Topping 12h

You are incorrect. The last few decades have seen tens of millions of Africans lifted out of poverty. GDP growth rates (not the best metric I admit) have been second only to China in Ghana, Ethiopia, Kenya and other places.

Covid has seen IS and AQI take advantage and expand their chaos, the Western created embroglio in Lybia has exported vast amounts of crime and guns into West Africa and democracy has taken a real step back after the great advances of the 90s and early 2000s. This is temporary like the war in Ethiopia.

Nigeria is a giant enigmatic basketcase of excitement and feverish growth mixed with extreme poverty and regional violence. It's huge diaspora , media industry and population just means it gets all the attention .

Related Links

What is the barrier to entry for a foreign real estate investor into a developing country in Africa?

What does "roughrough" mean? Is it a pidgin English phrase in Ghana?

Some countries produce are of different standard of goods, the high standard for their self and the low standard are exported to LDCs, what can the world do to enforce the production of one standard of goods globally and sanction for violation?

Are all countries having a hard time hiring employees?

Is saying you're scared of being in a country such as Phil Mickelson did about Saudi Arabia supposed to be offensive?

What is a key consideration you believe Belize should have from the IPCC report? Discuss what may be an environmental threat to the country and how you believe Belize can mitigate it.

What are your favorite quotes by an African leader?
Why should we support Ukraine when they are a very racist country?

Some countries produces are of different standard of goods, the high standard for their self and the low standard are exported to developing countries like Africa, what can the world do to enforce the production of one standard of goods globally?

Aside from Western media dominating the media around the world, which has a power effect on the culture and ideology of the third world country?

Is Africa winning its war against the desert?

Is it true that the Polish border administration classified the refugees from the Russia-Ukraine war into 3 levels of importance and 3 degrees of quality of care: Ukrainians first, then Indians and Asians, then Arabs and Africans?

Why does Greenland look much larger than Africa in terms of size, even if it looks equal on the map?

Should Africans be forced to stay and fight for Ukraine?
Which nation contributed the most for world development?

What are the best options and implementation strategies to curb the incessant population growth in Northern Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor · Follow Storyteller Wed

A large number of Nigerians support their stand with religion, "go into the world and multiply," even those who can't boast of a single good meal a day have an excuse for having many children.

Some religions even allow their members to have four wives at the same time. In Some other traditional religions, one can have as many wives as they desire.

To them, they're doing God's work. Obeying God's command. Well, it's also written that you love your neighbor as yourself. I hope you're keeping that as well?

Another reason for this high population growth is societal pressure. In Nigeria, no one cares how much money you have or what you've been able to achieve with your life, at a certain age, if you're not married and have kids of your own, you're considered a failure, and I speak from experience.

I was born poor. Even the poor knew we were poor. That was how poor we were.

I attended community schools all my life. And in primary and secondary schools, it was quite common to not have teachers for certain subjects, and so you're expected to read them up yourself to pass the National exams. And I did that and went on to study Engineering.

The case about food was horrible at best. You could go days with no good meal. At best, you would have the same kind of meal two to three times a day, every day.

The accommodation was the worst of them all. I most times had no place to lay my head at night.

When it became impossible for me to sleep in the same room with my parents at about age seven, I had to fend for myself and it was one of the hardest moments of my life.

I would be out late in the evening, thinking of a place to sleep. Deciding if I should put up with distant relations or friends for the night.

Not that they had better accommodations, only that they sometimes had a tiny space for another tiny human being.

You could be in a tiny mat or a little foam on the floor with several others. Sometimes it was so tight that you won't be able to move all through the night. The position you take when you lie down is how you're expected to remain all through the night.

And I think I have spent a huge part of my life sleeping on floors more than I've slept on a bed—a clean, comfortable bed.

And even as I scramble to get a place to sleep at the time, my parents were busy making more babies and they did make more babies. And even those that came after me had to pass through what I went through until I came to their rescue.

It never dawned on my parents, especially my Dad what damage they were doing to us.

I built my parents a four-bedroom house. I send them money often. But I'm at the point of being considered a failure because I don't have a wife and kids at age 30.

They simply do not care about the cost of raising a child and the comfort a child needs. They believe that God is going to provide. Imagine the ignorance!

My Mom is ever ready to go back to living in her tiny room at my Uncle's house if my sole excuse for not giving her a grandkid is the support I render them.

My Mom and many other Nigerians were raised to believe that children are a gift from God and that the more you have the more wealthy you become. That could have been true if only you gave the kids the appropriate support they need.

Last year, Japan, a much wealthier country than Nigeria only had 800K births. In that same period, Nigeria had over 8 million live births.

Even the US birth rate fell by 4 percent in 2020, making another record low. This has become common with many Western countries as people calculate the cost and inconveniences of raising a child.

Nigerians unlike many other countries don't even get the needed support from their government.

From the time of pregnancy down to caring for the child after birth is a cost the parents would have to bear.

The average couple in Nigeria has six children. That is, all the challenges they were facing would have to be multiplied by six. Hence, there is so much neglect in our homes.

It all boils down to irresponsibility. By having sexual organs, many Nigerians believe they can make as many babies whenever and with whoever.

In the end, if the kids are hungry, sick, or need to go to school, we call relatives to come to our rescue. A relative that is struggling to get by. Hence, we end up recycling poverty as your relatives would beg you monies until you're dead poor as them.

Nigeria has over 10 million out-of-school kids. The highest in the world. Over 2 million Nigerian kids are battling starvation as I write this. Seven percent of Nigerian women of childbearing age suffer from acute malnutrition. Over 90 million Nigerians are poor, the highest number in any country, which crowns Nigerian as the poverty capital of the world.

And in some cases, mostly in the Northern part of the country, parents find it more profitable to put bowls on the palms of their kids to go begging for money rather than send them to school.

If anyone had to think twice before having kids, it would be Nigerians but sadly we don't. We just go with the flow and leave the consequences to the kids and loving relatives.

News Nigeria

REMARKS BY THE HONOURABLE MINISTER OF INFORMATION AND CULTURE, ALHAJI LAI MOHAMMED, AT THE TOWN HALL MEETING SHOWCASING THE ADMINISTRATION'S

GIANT STRIDES IN THE AREA OF INFRASTRUCTURE IN ABUJA ON TUESDAY, 22 FEB. 2022

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Feb 22

PROTOCOL

Please permit me to welcome all invitees to this Town Hall Meeting, our very first edition this year 2022. In particular, I welcome my colleagues, Honourable Ministers, who have taken time off their very busy schedule to be here.

2. This #FGTownHallMeeting, the 21st edition since we kick-started the programme in Lagos in 2016, is one of the more than half a dozen Town Hall Meetings which we have slated for this year to showcase the achievements of the Administration of President Muhammadu Buhari, as the Administration gradually winds up.

3. Because of the massive infrastructure development of the Administration, the first two in the series for 2022, including today's, will be dedicated to Infrastructure. The Honourable Ministers of Works and Housing; Power as well as Finance, Budget and National Planning are here for today's Town Hall Meeting, while the second edition on infrastructure will feature the Honourable Ministers of Transportation; Aviation; Water Resources as well as Communications and Digital Economy. The third Town Hall Meeting will also be dedicated to infrastructure, but this time, infrastructure development in the Federal Capital Territory.

4. Other Town Hall Meetings scheduled for this year will focus on the Administration's strides in the area of the National Social Investment Programme; fight against corruption; insecurity; national unity and the economy, among others.

5. Let me commend the National Orientation Agency (NOA), which has worked tirelessly with officials of the Ministry of Information and Culture to organize this event. It is always a lot of work organizing and coordinating events of this magnitude. We also thank the NTA and FRCN, which are covering this Town Hall Meeting live, as they have always done, as well as the News Agency of Nigeria, the Voice of Nigeria, and indeed all the myriads of media organizations that are here to cover this event. If I am right, the Daily Trust TV, for the very first time, will also be covering us live. Our sincere gratitude to you all.

6. On this note, I want to once again welcome all our invitees, while also wishing us all a successful deliberation. It is now my pleasure to invite the Honourable Minister of Works and Housing, to take the podium.

7. I thank you all for your kind attention.

News Nigeria
Money Laundering: Fmr minister, Sarah Ochekpe, sentenced to three months imprisonment

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Feb 22

A Federal High Court sitting in Jos, Plateau State, has sentenced a former minister of water resources, Sarah Ochekpe, and two others to three months imprisonment for conspiracy and money laundering.

Ochekpe, who was a minister in the administration of former President Goodluck Jonathan, was sentenced alongside Raymond Dabo, former acting PDP chairman in Plateau State, and Leo Jatau, coordinator of the Goodluck Johnathan campaign in the state in 2015.

The convicts were arraigned by the Economic and Financial Crimes Commission (EFCC) in 2018 for allegedly collecting N450 million from Diezani Alison-Madueke, former petroleum resources minister, in 2015.

They were alleged to have received N450million from Alison-Madueke to influence the electorate and the outcome of the 2015 presidential election.

In a judgment delivered on Tuesday, February 22, Musa Kurna, the presiding judge, found the accused persons guilty and sentenced them to three months in prison with an option of N1 million fine.

They were, however, released after paying the N1million fine.

News Nigeria

Secret Memo: National Intelligence Agency Directors Ask Buhari To Stop Signing Documents He Doesn't Understand —Report

Aniekpeno Ekong

Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria Dec 23

The directors in a secret memo unanimously noted with dismay several decisions Buhari has made after being "deliberately" misguided by his aides and advisers as a result of "selfishness".

Directors in the Nigerian Intelligence Agency (NIA) have asked President Muhammadu Buhari to desist from appending his seal on decisions he does not understand.

The directors in a secret memo unanimously noted with dismay several decisions Buhari has made after being "deliberately" misguided by his aides and advisers as a result of "selfishness".

All these they attributed to the president's inability to pay rapt attention to matters, Peoples Gazette reports.

"As the head of this massive entity call Nigeria, sometimes your aides, advisers and handlers, may, out of selfishness and vested personal interest, deliberately mislead you, to unwittingly do some things against your known principles, unfortunately, because, they know that sometimes, due to some urgent numerous state matters that need your urgent attention you may not necessarily be too meticulous about everything," the directors said in the letter.

The letter was written to Buhari amid claims that the President is considering tenure extension for the current NIA director-general, Ahmed Abubakar.

Appointed on January 10, 2018, Abubakar's tenure is expected to expire in January 2022.

The directors described Buhari's decision on the tenure elongation as a "wrong one based on a wrong advice". Nonetheless, they admitted that some of the president's decisions are borne out of inadequate facts of situations.

"We learnt that the tenure of the current DG, which comes to an end in January 2022, is being considered (for extension) or has been secretly renewed," the spy chiefs noted.

They alleged the repeated and "intense lobby" for tenure elongation for the heads of the security agencies.

"We have known all along that there has been clandestine and sometimes open intense lobby to mislead you to take the wrong decision, as was done in the last appointment," they said.

"Please excuse our use of this language to describe your last decision on this matter as a wrong one based on very wrong advice. With all sense of humility and modesty."

The NIA directors believed the president could not have approved the appointment of Abubakar in 2018 if he had been duly informed about circumstances against his appointment.

"There is no way you will knowingly approve any illegality and/or anything done without due process as the last appointment of the current DG," stressed the spy chiefs.

They pointed out that Buhari flouted the National Security Agencies Act, which specified that the NIA DG should be appointed on the advice of the national security adviser.

The spy chiefs said Babagana Monguno, the current NSA, had told the National Assembly that he was unaware of Abubakar's appointment when the president authorised it in 2018.

Controversies had trailed the appointment of the current director-general, as critics, including a Bauchi senator, Isa Misau, argued that Mr Abubakar was unqualified for the position.

Many have described the President's decision as a "breach of national security."

SAHARAREPORTERS

News Nigeria

I BOUGHT HUMAN HEAD ₦60,000 TO BETTER MY LIFE BETTER -ISLAMIC CLERIC CONFESSES!

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Dec 24

I bought human head for N60,000 to make my life better — Islamic cleric confesses

….Meant to be used to better my life

Dayo Johnson Akure

A 55-year-old Islamic cleric, Tunde Olayiwola has confessed that he bought the fresh human head found in his possession at Ajagbale area of Oka in Ondo town, Ondo State for N60,000.

Olayiwola who was paraded at the Ondo state police command said that the fresh human head was meant for money rituals.

In an interview, the suspect who said he hailed from Oshogbo, Osun state said he ordered for the fresh head for money ritual at the sum of N60,000.

” It was delivered to me at home by a man I met at a social function on Thursday morning. I was about to commence the ritual when I was arrested by the police detectives.

” I purposely ordered for the human head to make my life better and it was delivered to me. This is my first time but I want to do it to become rich and live a better life. The head was delivered to me today.”

Speaking, the state police commissioner, Oyeyemi Oyediran said that said “the suspect was arrested by men of the state police command after an intelligence report that the suspect was about to receive a consignment.

Oyediran added that “the suspect was apprehended with the fresh head delivered to him and confessed that the head was meant to be used by him to ensure a better life.

He said on the 23rd of December, 2021, at about 9 am, the police received information that a self-acclaimed cleric named Alfa Tunde Olayiwola, a suspected ritualistic was about to receive a consignment suspected to be a human head.

The police immediately swung into action and the cleric was apprehended at Ajagbale area of Oka in Ondo town.

A free head was found in his custody. He confessed that the head found in his possession was to be used to ensure he had a better life.

News Nigeria

JUST IN!!! ‘Go Ahead And Kill Him’, Victim’s Relative Tells Bandits Demanding N100m Ransom

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Tue

A yet-to-be identified relative of an abduction victim told bandits to do whatever they wanted, following a demand for a ransom of N100 million.

In a telephone recording shared on social media on Monday, the family member, who is a brother of the victim, tells one of the bandits that he has not been able to raise more than a million naira as ransom for the victim's freedom. Subsequently, he askes for the kidnapper's assistance.

"We have struggled and all we could raise is just one million naira. No one would want to lend us money now because it is Christmas period," the brother says in Hausa.

The abductor replies, "If you want your relative released, go and solicit the money".

Despite further pleas by the victim's brother, the abductor tells him he cares less about his excuses. "What is my business with any Christmas break?" He asks. "I am not aware of any break."

Afterwards, the abductor asks, "How much was the original ransom you were asked to pay?"

"We were told to pay N30 million," the victim's relative responds.

But the response does not go down well with the abductor who yells at the relative that the ransom originally demanded was not N30 million but N100 million.

Obviously running out of patience as well, the victim's brother says, "If that is the case, go ahead and kill your captive! May God punish you if you fail to kill him!".

News Nigeria

BREAKING: NFF Appoints New Super Eagles Head Coach

Aniekpeno Ekong Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria Dec 29

The Nigeria Football Federation has endorsed a proposal by its Technical and Development sub-committee for the appointment of Portuguese manager Jose Peseiro as the new head coach of the Super Eagles.

His appointment follows the sacking of Gernot Rohr earlier this month.

The executive committee of the NFF has, however, resolved that the interim head coach Augustine Eguavoen will be in charge of the three-time African champions for the African Cup of Nations in Cameroon while coach Peseiro will serve as an observer.

The NFF says the tournament will be a good avenue for Peseiro to launch a working relationship with Eguavoen, who will revert to his role as technical director of the NFF after the AFCON.

The 61-year-old was in charge of the Venezuela national team until August and has also coached Sporting Lisbon, FC Porto, and Al Ahly of Egypt.

Meanwhile, the executive committee has mandated the Technical and Development Committee and the NFF secretariat to organise a friendly match for the Super Eagles when the team arrives in Garoua for the AFCON 2021.

They have also been mandated to arrange matches for the Super Eagles and the Super Falcons in the upcoming FIFA windows.

Wake Up Africa!
The smartest family in Britain today, is an African family of Nigerian descent.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 17h

Reasons:

1. At 11 years old,Christina Imafidon (now 22) was the youngest student in history to attend a British university

2. Twelve year-old twins,Peter and Paula Imafidon became the youngest to ever pass the University of Cambridge's advanced mathematics. Setting a world record.

3. Anne-Marie Imafidon,Now 31 years old, Anne-Marie spoke six languages and graduated from high school at age 10. In 2003, when she was only 13,she was granted a British scholarship. And at 17, Anne-Marie obtained her Masters Degree from Oxford University.

4. Anne-Marie was the youngest person to pass the A-level computing exam. Just last year she was called a "serial world record breaker" in the September 2011 edition of "Higher Education Digest"

5. Fifteen year-old Samantha Imafidon had passed two high school-level mathematics and statistics exams at age 6. She became the youngest girl in the UK to attend secondary school at the age of 9.

How is life in Nigeria and Ghana for expats? Is it true that it is not safe to work there? Is it a dangerous place to work at? Especially a city like Lagos?

Debo Kayode Ogunranti Lives in Lagos, Nigeria 3y

How is life in Nigeria and Ghana for expats? Is it true that it is not safe to work there? Is it a dangerous place to work at? Especially a city like Lagos?

Maybe you should have stopped at the first sentence. Then one could have given you an objective response. The remaining questions are silly coming from someone who seems to know nothing about Nigeria and Ghana.

Life is good for expatriates in both countries and we have more than half a million satisfied residents living there.

Lagos is not more dangerous than New York, London, Paris or Tokyo, so is Accra, for the reasonable foreigner that is.

Related Answer: Michael Egbo lives in Lagos, Nigeria Answered Apr 21, 2018

To be very honest and objective about responding to this question instead of just responding emotionally. we have to analyse the state of security in our country. While Lagos is seems to be the safest in the country , we still have a breakdown of law and order across Nigeria (Herdsmen, Bokoharam, Militants, Hoodlums).

Therefore can you 100% say that Lagos is safe for a foreigner? as a citizen you aren't even 100% safe from attack in traffic by hoodlums or should we talk about the badoo group.

Now to respond accordingly, I will suggest you do research on the areas you will probably stay in when in nigeria and the security allocated to those areas(The company bringing you in should probably have answers for you).

Lagosians generally are an accommodating people and should treat you well.

If you dont have a driver assigned to you I suggest you patronise Uber or taxify services

Most people aren't aware but 112 or 199 can be called in most part of Nigeria when there is any emergency situation will get services from the police, fire department or ambulance service. I have been rescued from a situation by the police once.

Related Answer:

Françoise Marie: Whiteness spans three continents (Europe, Asia and Africa). Master's Degree Public Administration, Syracuse University Answered Aug 28, 2018, Whiteness spans three continents (Europe, Asia and Africa).

There are Whites who are native populations of Europe (except for the Inuits of Greenland, the Romani and the Kalmyk), Asia (Western Asia, specifically) and Africa (the Afro-Mediterraneans, to be more precise).

Their descendants scattered across the world are also considered Whites like White South Africans or the White Australians or Americans.

As for blackness, it has been narrowly defined and stereotyped.

Millions of people across the world have dark or copper brown skin but they are not considered black people because they do not fit the stereotype (nappy hair, broad nose and thick lips). The so called "Dravidians" or Canela "Indians" are typical examples.

Ancient Berbers aka Mauri or Mauretanii were described as having black skin by ancient European travelers or historians. The written word of the time is crystal clear.

Ancient Berbers looked exactly like their ancestors from the Horn of Africa. Moorish soldiers who joined Roman Legions during the Dacian Wars are immortalized on the famous Trajan Column, with disctinctive dreadlocks also found among the Afar of Djibouti.

In the 6th A.D, Procopius in his History of the Wars book IV contrasting the Germanic Vandals who had settled in North Africa with the Moors wrote the Vandals were not "black skinned like the Maurusioi".

Horners do not fit the "black stereotype". Their distincive E1b1b haplogroup is distributed across Europe, North Africa and Western Asia (among Arabs and Jews).

How they end up being lighter today ?

Lighter skinned Berbers absorbed a LOT European admixture from settlers, invaders, merchants who made Northwestern Africa their home like the Vandals, the Vikings, and Romans etc. They do carry the Berber marker EM81.

Ancient Berbers took countless of European women as intimate and "breeding" partners like the legendary King Juba of Mauretania

King Juba of Mauretania married two European woman; one of them, Cleopatra Selene, daughter of Greek Ptolemaic Queen Cleopatra VII of Egypt and Roman triumvir Mark Antony.

Berbers are people of MALE East African genetic affiliation who have marked and relatively recent strain of Eurasian blood on maternal lines. No wonder that Northern Somalia was called the Land of the Berbers. In addition, the Tuareg of Central Sahara are the prototype Berber because they carry the highest frequency of the Berber marker.

A large number of European looking Berbers have ZERO African ancestry.

-They are the UNMIXED descendants of European slaves (Janissaries or Saqaliba) during the Islamic Moorish Empire or Ottoman Empire. They were mostly of Slavic origin and they were Muslim converts. During the Reconquista, countless of Saqaliba (even FREE Iberian Muslims aka Andalusi) were forced to migrate to Africa.

-They are the UNMIXED descendants of Christian renegades or privateers who profited in Barbary slavery. Moorish pirates went as far as Iceland and American high seas to capture White slaves during the golden age of Barbary slavery. Many of their accomplices were European pirates.

Related Links

I am getting an offer for $ 2500 a month to work in Lagos Nigeria. What should I do?
Where do the richest people live in Lagos, Nigeria?

What should be the ideal salary in US dollars for living comfortably with family in Lagos, Nigeria?

How can I get laid in a country like Nigeria, Lagos as I am new here?
What is a good salary for expats working in Lagos, Nigeria?
What is it like to work in Nigeria as a foreigner?
Is Lagos, Nigeria a safe place for expats to live in? Why?

What advice would you give to a 'white man' going to Nigeria, Lagos for the first time and will be staying there for 3 months?

Why do so many foreigners go to Nigeria and think Nigeria is good?
How much salary would you need to live comfortably in Lagos, Nigeria?
How dangerous is Lagos for Americans or other Westerners to visit?
Which part of Nigeria is the best to live?
How is it to live in Lagos, Nigeria, as an expat?
Which area of Lagos, Nigeria has the best supply of electricity?
What is the working week in Nigeria?

Putting Nigeria side by side with South Africa, which of the two countries has the potential of leading the African continent out of the neo-colonial state they are in, considering both economic and military strength of both countries?

Emmanuel Sitamon

B.S in Computer Science & Mathematics, Lamar University (Graduated 2022) 2y

Nigeria will, below are the why's.

Before I elaborate on the reasons why Nigeria is the only potential candidate to lead the Continent of Africa out of the current neocolonial status-quo, Let me put some context and caveats in perspective.

My discussion is limited only to Subsaharan Africa, as I hardly believe black Africa will ever reconcile its strategic, cultural and economic ambition with that of Northern Africa. My observation is simply pragmatic, culture and race have ways of contradicting politics and ambition. As an African of black origin, I accept it as so. Needless to say, I do believe we should strive for complete integration of the continent, spanning from Cape Town to Cairo. But, we should not ignore that the global map of influence is drawn along the "race and ideology lines" first— It is not a terrible thing to admit— NATO is mainly composed of countries of "Western" origin. Turkey, I believe is a member of NATO simply for strategic reasons. Turkey is the gateway to the Arab world, As such, Turkey serves the role of a "buffer zone" between Europe and Asia (the Arab World), similarly, most Balkanic countries which are part of the EU also formed "Buffer zone" between Europe and Russia. When geography, race, and culture are not the main drivers behind shaping influence, Ideology and Ideals are.

You don't believe me, well Ask yourself why the Turkish bid to join the EU has been on hold for decades—There are more reasons to it, but culture is the leading cause of the delay.

With that said, I believe Subsaharan Africa will be the Diplomatic and the main Center of influence on the African continent because of its sheer size, population, and economic outlook. Nigeria, a Subsaharan country, is predicted to hit the 1 trillion dollar GDP mark by 2030 and will be the third-most populous country in the world by 2050. Simply, put Subsaharan Africa will become a powerhouse on the continent, one that Northen Africa can not reckon with.

Given that Subsaharan Africa is mostly Christian, should democracy gain a strong foothold in the region, The entire region will emerge has a strong partner for western global powers in advancing their agenda—I do not think that African sharing common values with the west will jeopardize the continent's ambition to do away with neocolonialism, it will actually speed up the end of neocolonialism—Democracy to me, constitutes human's fundamental need. There is no difference between the pain of a white mother whose son has been detained arbitrarily and that of a black woman experiencing the same situation in the jungle of Congo.

Now, going back to racing South Africa against Nigeria in the marathon of influence and ending neocolonialism, Below are the reasons Nigeria will win:

South African isolationism

During the apartheid era, the South African Government garnered support from fellow African and internationally. Nelson Mandela put South Africa in the heart of every African and that of leaders worldwide. Pressure from within South Africa, the African continent and globally, paved way to the handing over of the government to the ANC(African National Congress) by the then apartheid government.

Post-Apartheid, South Africa remained on the map—symbolically—thanks to Nelson Mandela legacy, but failed to establish a clear policy toward maintaining economic, military, cultural and symbolic influence on the African continent. Briefly put, South Africa chose to isolate itself and consequently killed its chance to be the big player on the continent.

Nelson Mandela passing further took away the symbolic influence South Africa used to exert on the continent.

Being the most advanced economy in Africa in term of manufacturing , infrastructure, and scientific development, the South African myopia to the opportunities that the many countries on the continent represent, is part of the reasons why its economy is currently stalling.

South Africa has everything to become the Germany of Africa, sadly and disgustingly, it has failed due to its inability to take big regional initiative towards integrating the subsaharans region. It took a small country—Rwanda—to spearhead an important earmark toward integrating the region, only to face friction from the South African government. In South Africa, they think in "NOW" not "TOMORROW".

Constant Xenophobia—mainly against other African of black skin color—clearly testifies of the failure of the South African Government to integrate the collective psyche of their citizen with that of the rest of Subsaharan African.

South Africa possesses an advanced military industry, yet it is not a key player in arms sales on the continent. To me, that is disgusting, South Africa should have been the number one exporter of arms on the African continent. Yet, they are too busy complaining about white farmers.

Culturally South Africa has failed to influence the Continent. Think about it, Nigeria is the biggest producer of movies on the continent in term of output, I don't care about what you think of the quality of their movies, we African love them. From Bamako to Cape Town African are watching them. The Nigerian Music industry is leading the continent, while despite all of its technological advancement South Africa is lagging behind.

In nutshell, South Africa does not wield any significant influence on the continent or the Subsaharan region because they chose their backyard instead.

Nonetheless, if it wakes up, it will have the potential and the capabilities to assert its influence on the continent and quickly kick out neocolonialism from the region.

Nigeria the sleeping giant

Nigeria, I believe will be the winner of this race.

The sheer size of the Nigerian population will force the country to opt for open and integrated regional policies in the region. Nigeria's population is currently at 202 million people for an area of 923,768 kilometer square and the country is set to host the 3rd largest population in the world by 2050. The survival of Nigeria itself will depend on how well it integrates with the rest of the continent.

According to PWC prediction, Nigeria will be the first economy in Africa in term of GDP and will be among the top 10 economies by 2050, South Africa will not. Culturally, It already has a lot of influence on the African continent. From its manufacturing industries to its music industry, Nigeria has positioned itself has a focal point in Africa.

Striving to lead the integration of the region, Nigeria will gain influence. In order to maintain its Influence, it will attempt to build military capabilities to support its ambition, defend its interest and that of its zone of influence which will definitely be the Subsaharans Africa.

Any form of neocolonialism, therefore, will be against the interest of Nigeria in the region. Having fought against colonialism, Nigeria with its newly gain Economic, Cultural and Military power will work with other African states to weed themselves off neocolonialism.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria becoming more prosperous than South Africa?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Can Nigeria defeat South Africa in a military war?
Why do African countries like Ghana, Cameroon, and South Africa hate Nigeria so much?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?
What is the difference between Nigeria and South Africa?
Which African country produces the best music, Nigeria, Congo or South Africa?
How do other African countries view Cameroon?
How many countries share a border with Nigeria?
How powerful is Nigeria in Africa?
Are South Africans superior to Africans from other countries?
Which African countries are democracies?
Why are South Africa and Nigeria hurting the rest of Africa?
What are the five most popular countries in Africa? What puts them on the map?

Related Answer

How can Nigeria become a developed country in the next 5years? What does the country need to do differently?

Sam Li Law & Finance, but fan of history, geopolitics, & military 2y

The unfortunate answer is that it can't. If we arbitrarily define a developed country as a high-income country, which means a GDP/capita of U$12,000 (defined by the World Bank), then Nigeria has to sustain a per capita growth of 42.4% real GDP growth annually for 5 years. The only growth rates that even resembles this unholy figure are for countries that discover a huge amount of natural resources, and that's Oman and Equatorial guinea.

To take the more recent example Equatorial Guinea which sustained 31.11% (1996–2000) and 24.68% (2001–05), triggered after the discovery of oil in 1996. Even then, it took a decade for them to reach the high-income status of $13,000 which in my opinion isn't very high. However, the country has a population of 1.2 million that sit's on a respectable 1.1 billion barrels of oil, compared to Brunei which which has roughly the same level, and a GDP per capita of ~$30k. While Brunei only has half the population, it's at least within reach for Equatorial Guinea. Best of luck to them.

While Nigeria is endowed with Natural resources, it has a huge population of 200 million. So unless it's sitting on 200 billion bbls of oil, which honestly would be great for global commerce, it's unrealistic to expect Nigeria to develop in 5 years.

What is realistic is to expect a time period of 20–30 years. If you think that's slow, that's the how long it took the fastest developing countries in history, like South Korea and China (still ongoing). If you think it's too fast, it's possible, and South Korea did it with virtually no natural resources and ravaged by war and colonialism at least to the extent and most likely exceeding that of most African nations.

Related Answer
What does Nigeria need to do to develop?

Roy A Hanssen Business Culture and Political Responsible (2016–present) 4y

Originally Answered: Will Nigeria ever get developed?

Development happens when political and economical institutions are set up in a way which benefit the people , and give the people incentives to use their talents to the best of their ability. So, the answer is in the people but without the current leadership setting up the right systems ,

Nigeria will forever linger in its current place ; making a few people really rich but keeping the majority at a low level.

If the Nigerian national football team was set up in the same way as the political and economical institutions are, Nigeria would struggle to beat even Gibraltar in a game because the coach will pick not the best team , but those players he knows or whose fathers he knows.

Related Answer

How will you turn a Country like Nigeria, into a developed Country, within the shortest time possible?

Kevin Adams French, Hungarian Expat, thinker, and drinker 5y

BIG question! If it were so easy, it would have been done already, right? Because Nigeria is not a special area of economic focus for me, let's just assume you are generically talking about any country with a currently less than desirable situation. In that light, here are some basic considerations…

Political Stability - A must have. No one invests and/or trusts a country that is not politically stable. This also has marketing consequences for any country doing business in a country within such countries.

Rule of Law - A must have. No one invests and or trusts a country where their assets can disappear overnight. No one wants to be assaulted. No one wants to pay corruption fees. No one wants to worry about basic human rights, capital rights, lawsuits, etc. outside of what is prudent and generally accepted.

Financial Capabilities - I must be able to do my banking in a safe environment; that environment must be as stable as possible. Currency fluctuations are a way of life in international banking systems, however, they generally fluctuate within a range. If inflation or other metrics within the country are outside of a predictable, profitable range, then money goes elsewhere.

Infrastructure - How do I get my goods and services from point A to point B within the country, and outside of the country? Reliable infrastructure is key.

Talent - Depending on what I am selling, there must be that kind of workforce available. Even if all 4 of the other things were present, you must have people with the required skills to employ.

These arone of these alone, or two, or three, is not enough to engineering a stable country. A great example of what is needed — though not the only way to go about it — can be seen in the example of Singapore and its modern founder, Lee Kuan Yew.

Related Answer

What steps does Nigeria or indeed any developing country have to take for their currency to be on par with that of a developed country?

Taofeek Olawale Shittu Badagry born and raised.5y

Nigeria needs to expand her production of exported goods, oil alone is simply not enough.

In fact that same oil we cherish so much could be the complete downfall of Nigeria's currency. How?

Oil makes an astonishing 94 percent of Nigeria's exports. The world is moving forward albeit slowly, most of our oil is being sold to major western countries, these countries are also the ones planing for the future in way of hybrid vehicles, electric powered vehicles(tesla), and solar powered machines. Soon they'll move on from crude oil, not completely though, but where would that leave us?

- What are we going to sell?
- What can we offer the world in the absence of our oil?
- The largest oil supplier in Africa with no stable electricity, where would that leave us when we can't sell any longer?

When the demand for oil decreases, we would have no choice but to devalue our currency to attract buyers.

News Nigeria

The federal government says it is ready to partner with Magnus aircraft industry in Hungary to commence complete manufacturing of aircraft in Nigeria before the end of Muhammadu Buhari-led administration in 2023.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 🇳🇬 . 🇭🇺

Hadi Sirika, minister of aviation, disclosed this while on an inspection visit to the Magnus Aircraft Industry in Pogany, Hungary.He noted that the partnership is to assemble airplanes locally, from start to finish

Related Answer

As a Nigerian, what is your honest opinion about the Hausa-Fulani, Igbo and Yoruba people of Nigeria?

Samuel J. Doupregha, lives in Nigeria

Updated Sep 11, 2018

Brace up, long answer. I'm Nigerian. I'm not Yoruba, Hausa, or Igbo. I can speak igbo though albeit not too well. I'm a minority, yes I'm so minor that in the North before 2011, I would have been taken for an igbo. That's how minor i am. I'm from the tribe of this man

Isaac Adaka Boro

Images from Google.

Without delving much into history, it would be nonetheless neccessary to give a background to my viewpoint about the three major tribes in Nigeria. Why should I do this? well obviously because that's the best way to give people an idea of how many Nigerians and there are alot of them (atleast 30% of the population), who are neither Hausa-fulani, Yoruba or Igbo view these tribes.

My late grandmother told me of how back in the 60’s during the Nigeria Biafra war, our people were tortured and killed in their droves. They were mostly unarmed and ran for their lives during the war, their sin was that their leaders had chosen to be on the side of Nigeria instead of Biafra. Not that the leaders did much of a representation anyway. I was also told by some of my uncles how prior to the war, in Port Harcourt city, the Igbos used tribal slurs and mostly took the natives to be low class. To make this apparent, I've had some experiences in that direction though to be fair, it does not in anyway represent the larger opinion of the Igbos today.

So who am I? I'm an Ijaw or Izon. We are over 15 million people(Ijaws make up about 10% of the population) and that's a conservative estimate especially in Nigeria where the more people you have, the more resources you are allocated to, whether you produce anything or not.

The man in the picture major Jasper Isaac Adaka Boro (1938-1968) was born in the oil producing community of Oloibiri(this is where oil was first discovered in Nigeria).

Oloibiri Today- image from google

There is even a movie by that name

He was basically from a family that was better off than the rest of the population. After his secondary education he joined the prestigious University of Nigeria, Nsukka and became an activist. He was also the student union leader there. He left all that, with an opportunity to probably go to Europe or America, to come back home to fight for the right for his people who were totally oppressed by the Hausa, Yoruba and Igbo dominated Nigerian state. Taking one of his reasons from his book "The 12 day Revolution" he stated that, despite the huge natural resources in the Niger Delta, the old women did not have access to clean drinking water. Children had no good schools to attend. The majority of the people were impoverished and really had no say in how they were governed. That was as far back as 1966 though this would seem like a description of the current Niger Delta. He was the first militant. Though he lost out in the battle against the Nigerian state, he was later released from prison to fight against the biafran forces during the civil war. He became a nationalist after his release from prison and believed that Biafra was not in anyway going to treat his people better. So he fought against Biafra and was later assassinated by a Nigerian Soldier, a Yoruba man towards the end of the war. His memory leaves on.

Now back to the question of how Nigerians view the the three major tribes, let me start this way, there are in my opinion two ways to view a people, generally and individually. They are both connected.

The Hausa-Fulani

Though there is no tribe called Hausa-fulani, its either Hausa or Fulani, but politically and religiously they are aligned so lets ignore that for the moment. Many people who claim to know the Hausa may infact not know too much about them. This is because for those who live in the southern part of Nigeria, they assume everyone from the North is Hausa or Fulani. In reality the north has so many tribes, and is not even homogenous religiously. Though we can all agree it's majority Muslim, but that's just about it.

I've had very close encounters with Hausa people, not just your typical aboki who shines shoes or does other menial jobs in the south or all around the country. I've met educated and high class Hausa and Fulanis. My honest opinion about them is that most of them do not really care about what happens elsewhere in the country. They are very religious and basically are not the easiest people to debate or discuss with. Religious arguments are really a no go area for them. I've noticed this to be true even for the Christain Hausa. Generally speaking, the Hausa or Fulanis believe they are meant to rule Nigeria unchallenged. They will discriminate other tribes especially non Muslims in general. Like I said this is on a general level. Let me illustrate from my own experience. I studied in a middle eastern country. Prior to that time, I basically still believed that Nigeria could have a more united future despite her current challenges. This believe was predicated on the fact that people are getting more educated and enlightened by the day and with a fledgling democracy, things would change. All these assertions were to be shattered not even in Nigeria but outside the shores of the country. I arrived my college. After a couple of days I noticed certain Nigerians were playing football together, and others chose other fields to play. I was relatively shocked to realise that the Muslim, Hausa, fulani and kanuris played football together. Other Nigerians, wether Igbos, Yorubas and a few Christian Hausas played together in a different field. It was mind boggling to me. I've asked myself how can one talk about a future united Nigeria if these young men who will eventually go back home and be in the helm of affairs are already acting this way. I've also been on a ship which had a mixed race of people. I was a cadet then doing my sea training. Once again it was the Muslim Hausa and Fulanis who were on that ship that went to request that the Christian and Muslim cadets should be separated. There were other nationals in that ship, but then my brothers from the North never cease to disappoint. These and many other encounters have shaped my opinion of the Hausa. I believe one Nigeria coming from an Hausa in general is not about a united Nigeria where everyone has a right to control their destiny but rather one in which the Northerners rule and circumvent the will of the south and use their resources to do whatever they desire.

The Yorubas

I've had Yoruba friends from as long as I can remember. I think I'm not alone in this regard. Yorubas are basically non violent and would debate you on anything, whether it's religion or politics or whatever it is. This in my opinion is one of the most attractive attributes about Yorubas in general. I also think the Yorubas understood the Nigerian terrain early enough to adopt an attitude of neutrality in order to protect their interest. Neutrality is really not neutral. As one would see, it's merely a political game of betting on both sides and whoever wins becomes your friend. This way you hardly loose. Enough of the politics and let's get down to it. I respect the Yorubas just like i respect any other tribe. Though I must say Yorubas put tribe above religion, and Igbos money above tribe, while the Hausa put religion above tribe. These are generalizations anyway and like they say about any generalization it coud usually be false including this one. My experience with Yourbas are endless because while I'm writing this, majority of my acquitances are Yorubas, I basically have them all around so I can say my opinion is not from hear say. Yorubas are naturally friendly people. They don't get aggressive easily, they respect elders, and also expect others to respect them. A Muslim Yoruba can attend a church service and would see no big deal to it. I believe they take religion for what it is it —a way to worship God. The common issue I've noticed with Yorubas is tribalism. I think this seems ironic since many people see them as neutral. When a Yoruba man does something wrong in the political scene, fellow Yorubas will find a soft spot for him. Sometimes excusing whatever that was done irrespective of the gravity of the offence. One such recent case was with the Nigerian Minister for Finance Kemi Adeosun, who has allegedly used a forged NYSC certificate and yet is been shielded by the government of the day. I've been shocked to notice that some of my anti-corruption Yoruba friends who i respect are not outraged about this, rather you would hear things like “well it's Nigeria na.” These same people would leap to the band wagon to condemn and criticize people who are accused of similar offences provided they are from the South. In general I think Nigeria would be alot better if other tribes learned some of the attributes of the Yorubas especially their non violent approach to burning issues, and the Yorubas would be better of if they come out of their self acclaimed neutrality and stand for equality and fairness in Nigeria, not just when it is politically convenient.

The Igbos

I could speak Igbo as early as when I was 6. I helped interpret the messages in church to my grand mom who didn't understand the language but attended an Igbo speaking Deeper life Bible Church. I've lived more with the Igbos than any other tribe and can easily pass for one if I wanted to. Here is my take on the Igbos. They are mostly objective and open minded. The individual igbos do not take politics to an extreme. They will not choose violence easily and like the Yorubas are open to debate. My personal experience with them have left me with a couple of ideas. A typical igbo would think you are brainwashed if you are from Niger Delta and does not support the Biafra agitation. I've had several arguments and interactions with them. Trying to point out to them that, if you assume you are intellectually superior to Niger Deltans then there is no way you can have them stand with you to achieve your aims. I understand in the Nigerian political game at the moment, my people are aligned with the Igbos, it wasn't always the case. There is alot I could say about the Igbos but let me summarise it this way. The Igbos I know are hardworking, shrewd in business, accommodating, and mostly nice to everyone. Anyone can live freely in an igbo state without fearing that someday some youths will wake up and start burning down buildings and killing people. They love music but most importantly most igbos I know are good at handling money. Their bad attributes are mostly in the area of assuming other tribes are less intelligent than them, yet this isn't peculiar to them but can be found among the Yorubas too.

So, before you react or rather respond to my opinion on this, please be aware that I judge people on an individual bases. I hardly care about what tribe you are from except we are discussing politics. Now about politics, I'm always saddened when I see how the three major tribes have ruined the country with their ethnic bickering and yet believe they should come first in everything just because they have larger numbers than others. Thanks for reading.

As an Igbo, do you long for Biafra?

Obinna Ezugwu Lives in Nigeria 2y

The answer is both Yes and No. Yes because Nigeria is not working and is in fact, more of a time bomb now. You need to understand that Nigeria is a country formed not on the terms of its people, or because the people came together to agree to be one country, but for the administrative convenience of the British colonial government. It hasn't managed to evolve into a nation ever since, most likely never will. And as it stands, the divergent and irreconcilable worldviews of the peoples who make of the country seem poised to set it aflame. Yet, every attempt to readjust it into a country or a nation as it were, has been resisted by vested interests. It's basically a country held together by oil and nothing much more.

No, on the other hand because I don't think Biafra will solve all the problems. I have been an advocate for restructuring, a middle ground of sorts. This is because I believe that the only way the country can survive is by loosening the suffocating unitary system being practiced at the moment. Each region should have a measure of autonomy, control its resources and pay tax to the central government. I have observed that while nations tend to compete with one another, in Nigeria, the competition is in terms of ethnic group A versus ethnic group B, and Christianity versus Islam. And usually, the ultimate objective of some, especially those who manage to hold on to power is to try to hold others down as if that's the way to achieve their own progress. It's a suffocating and frustrating scenario. Excellence is sacrificed on the alter of mediocrity, people are not promoted in the public sphere on the basis of what they know, but who they know or where they come from.

Having said that, I have often read with utter amazement people who try to malign and paint those advocating for Biafra as evil, or fraudsters. This is most unfortunate and is often informed on mere hate. The truth is that Biafra advocates are simply those fed up with the Nigerian system, and most importantly, the marginalisation of the Igbo, real or perceived. It is therefore uncharitable to say they are fraudulent.

It's ridiculous that while most people will agree that Nigeria is not working, they will in another breath begin to cast aspersions on those who say they want out because the country is not working for them, which is basically what Biafra is about. Here is probably the only place in the world where people call white black and black white because they can't bear to admit the truth.

Another unfortunate falsehood is the idea that the Igbo want Biafra so that they will dominate other groups that fall within the area that once constituted Biafra. This is another mischievous attempt to paint the Igbo in bad light. While some of those who advocate for Biafra have continued to draw their map to include the former Eastern Region, some of us continue to insist that should there be Biafra, it ought to be an exclusively Igbo affair. And in any case, those who often make the hate informed argument about the Igbo wanting to annex other groups, ignore the fact that there are also people in those groups who are asking for Biafra. And at the same time, they ignore the fact that even the Biafra advocates who draw this wide map have often insisted that everyone reserved the right to opt in or opt out.

In the final analysis, my point is that while all us may not agree that Biafra is the solution, it is hypocrisy to pretend not to understand the point those who argue for Biafra are making. You read all manner of hate comments about the Igbo and people who call for Biafra and you wonder where such is coming from.

To summarise, if you ask me to choose between Biafra and the status quo in Nigeria, I would not hesitate to choose the former. Because Nigeria as it is poses serious threat to my very existence and the continued survival of my people and their way of life. But of course, I sincerely believe that restructuring, or what we have come to know as true federalism will be best for everyone. It will give everyone space to exist in their own environment and reduce the raw hate we encounter daily in social discourse. And of course, put in check what appears to be an agenda by some to overrun and dominate others.

Chibuihe John, knows Igbo Updated Dec 3, 2019

At the present state of the struggle, I really don't. But, if either of Port Harcourt or Calabar or both willingly join the Biafra agitation, I will support it to the fullest. These two cities are coastal and will therefore make Biafra not to be landlocked. Majority of Calabar and Port Harcourt indigenes do not support the Biafra struggle willingly; so, I am presently having missed feeling about it. This is simply because a landlocked Biafra contained within an uncooperative hostile Nigeria without direct access to the ocean will suffer more than our present Nigeria suffering.

As Igbos, we do well in commerce and manufacturing and so need that unrestricted access to the world market for our growth and business development. All the core Igbo states in Nigeria are landlocked. A landlocked Biafra within a hostile Nigeria geographical space will definitely be worse. Nigeria will definitely frustrate the efforts of Biafra to connect and move goods through her sea ports to the world. So, staying in Nigeria will be a better option.

This doesn't mean that I like how Nigeria is being managed. Nigeria is a failed state led by the most incompetent set of people I have seen in life. There is nothing happening now in Nigeria that gives any analytical mind hope that a positive change is going to come in the nearest future.

I trust the ingenuity of the Igbos to build something from nothing when given the opportunity and a level playing ground which is not obtainable in Nigeria presently. This has been fueling the agitation for Biafra. We have the lowest poverty rate in Nigeria. Every Igbo account holder was given just 20 pounds after the Nigeria Biafra civil war no matter the amount of money they had in their bank accounts before the war. This didn't stop the Igbos from turning the 20 pounds to multi million naira businesses that have made Igbos to be the region with the lowest poverty rate in Nigeria. Nigeria poor economic performance post Biafra war is linked to political marginalisation of the Igbos. Igbos are individualistic, better leaders and business managers than the other ethnic groups. We will definitely be better of as Biafrans if we have direct unrestricted access to the world market through the ocean for our commerce and manufacturing industries development.

Olaniyan Toni, IT pro (2018-present) Updated Aug 8, 2019

This was initially a reply to an answer but I decided to post it as an answer of its own for obvious reasons.
Here is my take,

The amalgamation of 1914 was meant to be a blessing not a course, blaming the Britons for the challenges facing the nation 100 years after the amalgamation is ridiculous.

Africa at large and Nigeria in particular must first get rid of victim mentality before it can begin to experience any serious development.

Nigeria today has two major challenges mainly security and corruption. This has nothing to do with the amalgamation of 1914.

Disintegration is an illusion that always presents itself as a solution, truth is it has never been and will never be. Get Biafra today and it’s a matter of time before one of the newly created states start talking of marginalization again. It’s a circle that would never end. If you have been following elections across the country you will understand this last point.

People outside Africa can’t tell the difference between one Africans from the other let alone differentiating between Hausa Igbo or Yoruba. We have too much in common than tribalism will make us believe.

As a new generation, we should all see things differently. Say no to tribalism! and no to isolationism!

God bless Nigeria! God bless Africa! and God bless the entire world!

Remember, there's only one race, human race.

Here's is my other other answer to some challenges facing Nigeria Olaniyan Toni's answer to Which propaganda effort was so successful in Nigeria that people still believe it today?

News Nigeria

Buhari Condemns Violence In The Southeast, Consoles Obiozor

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 58m

President Muhammadu Buhari on Sunday strongly condemned as "deeply distressing" the destruction of buildings and assets of the Police in Imo State as well as the home of the President-General of the Ohanaeze Ndi Igbo, Professor George Obiozor, whom the president describes as a leading voice of moderation in the affairs of the country.

In a statement by his special assistant, Garba Shehu, the President, strongly condemned the violence in the sub-region and urged everyone to maintain peace.

He assured Nigerians that the situation in the entire Southeast is being reviewed.

While this is being done, President Buhari called on the people of Imo State in particular and the subregion in general, to maintain peace as the police and other agencies are working to ensure that normalcy is restored at the earliest.

The president extended his sympathies to the police authorities over the loss of men and materials and to Professor Obiozor, who he urged to maintain his commitment to the peace and oneness of the federation against these odds.

News Nigeria

Governor Aminu Tambuwal of Sokoto has said that President Muhammadu Buhari lacks the capacity to govern Nigeria.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 18h

Tambuwal, who made the comment during his visit to the Kaduna state PDP secretariat on Saturday as part of his consultations for his presidential ambitions in 2023, said: "The president doesn't understand Nigeria and the dynamics of modern governance. And we need, for us to really address the challenges of Nigeria's situation today, to have at the top of the leadership of this country someone that understands Nigeria itself.

"Someone that can reach out and consult and build consensus on issues that concerns Nigerians. You can only do that if you have the necessary network.

“We need someone that can unify this country, someone that is pan-Nigerian, someone that understands the dynamics of modern-day governance. Someone that has democratic governance experience, in terms of either being in the executive or legislative arm of government.”

Speaking on the state of the nation, Tambuwal, a former ally of Buhari, described the administration of President Buhari as a tale of forced marriage with the country, even as he lamented the near-collapse of the nation’s economy under the current administration.

He also took a swipe at the APC, saying: “We have seen that APC has not been able and cannot manage even their affairs as a party. How much more providing governance and leadership of a country as great, dynamic, and complex as Nigeria? We know the crisis in APC today.

“They will say ‘it is Abubakar Sani Bello today, tomorrow they will say it is Mai Mala Buni’. They are even confusing their supporters and members just the way they have succeeded in confusing the economy of this country,” added Tambuwal, who was a former member of the APC.

THE POWER OF ONE TOWARDS NATION BUILDING

· Following Posted by Tunji Alabi 20h

When we have faced down impossible odds; when we've been told that we're not ready, or that we shouldn't try, or that we can't, Nigeria Youth have responded with a simple creed that sums up the spirit of a people: Yes, we can.

We remain a young generation,The time has come to reaffirm our enduring spirit; to choose our better history; to carry forward that precious gift, that noble idea, passed on from generation to generation.

I believe that we have a righteous wind at our backs and that as we stand on cross roads of history, we can make the right choices, and meet the challenges that face us as a great nation.

The actions we take today are the foundations of our future. We create our own future, that is to say, we reap what we sow. we are the architects of our own life, and the future that awaits us, is the future we are creating now.

The smoke will soon gone
And the battle's will soon be finally won
Nothing will distract us from our victory.
Victory will be finally ours
History won't forget us and our name will be put in the book of History.

Tunji Alabi
The Invisible
#YouthDecide 2023

#nigeriansindiaspora #nigerianbusinesses #nigeriaproperties #nigeriansincanada #nigeriansinu #nigeriansineurope #nigeriansindubai #nigeriansabroad #nigeriabusiness #nigeria #politics #2023elections # #elections #future #power #nationbuilding #powerofpeople #powerofonetowardnationbuilding #nigeriadecide #nigeriayouth

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

Boris Guiffot

A Cameroonian dude who likes technology and politics Updated 2y

I am Cameroonian and Nigeria is the country with whom we share the longest border. That has a huge impact on the way we see the country. There is a large Nigerian community in Cameroon. Many Cameroonians pursue their high education in Nigeria.

Nigerians are considered very smart but some of them are famous to use that smartness to do unglamorous activities. They contribute to the stereotypes. We often compete against each other at football (both our male & female team)

We like to tease you guys about football but we don't want to mess up with you when it comes to political matters : Yes, I am talking about Bakassi! Because of that disputed peninsula, we went to the brink of war in 1981. We are so relieved that it has been resolved diplomatically. Thanks guys for avoiding a useless war with a neighbor that has 1/10 of your population. We appreciate it!

We relate well because our anglophone regions speak a similar Pidgin English. Even the French we speak on the street is full of Pidgin words.
Our northern regions are very similar to yours. Most of them belong to the same Fulfulde/Hausa ethnic group. They were even part of the same empire before they were separated by colonial borders:

We both complain about the extreme corruption of governments. We sometimes share the podium as the most corrupt countries on the continent. Does this have anything to do with the fact that we are both oil producers?

Thank you very much for saving us from Hollywood and Telenovelas. We really love your fashion, music and movies. Our own industry grew exponentially after we decided to follow suit.

For some reasons, many of us think that Nigeria is very developed except for those who have actually set foot in the country. Nollywood certainly has something to do with it.

Our rivalry is usually with Ivory Coast and we don't interfere with you guys trying to downplay Ghana. Nonetheless, we wonder why you guys make so much noise about jollof rice. We might not be loud about it but ours is the best:

I am from West Cameroon and we are often mistaken for Igbos so I guess we might be distant cousins

We wonder why such a powerful neighbour couldn't contain Boko Haram after so many years

I don't know if there is a country in this world without a Nigerian community
We admire you a lot for your sense of self-worth and self-confidence

- Your pastors took all Africa by surprise. They are so famous that it is told that some pastors will go for training in Nigeria before returning to Cameroon

Your garments are real works of art!

Overall, we mingle pretty well and seem to have a lot in common. I know a lot Nigerian-Cameroonian couples.

Related Links

Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
What is weird in Nigeria but normal in the rest of the world?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
Which African country has the biggest music industry?
What do black Africans think about black Americans, and vice versa?
Modernist.com : Are Nigerians really bad people?
Which is the most hated country in Africa?
Which African country produces the best music, Nigeria, Congo or South Africa?
What made the Nigerian music industry popular across Africa? How did they do it?
Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?
Why is Nigeria a poor country?
What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?
Is it true that South African females love Nigerian males?
What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

News Nigeria

Good News: Nigerian clergyman, Apostle Johnson Suleman has open Free Food Restaurant for all and sundry..

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

And he said the restaurant will be serving free food as long he's still alive!..

News Nigeria

President Muhammadu Buhari has summoned the Governor of Imo State, Hope Uzodimma, the Minister of Power, Abubakar Aliyu as well as the Chief Economic Adviser, Prof Doyin Salami, to a meeting at the Presidential Villa today.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 22h

According to a statement issued by the Senior Special Assistant to the President on Media and Publicity, Garba Shehu, the President is scheduled to meet separately with them on Monday afternoon.

President Buhari is expected to receive a briefing on the latest developments in Imo State, the power sector, and the state of the economy.

This is coming 24 hours after the President condemned the spate of violence in Imo State in the aftermath of the destruction of buildings, police assets, and the attack on the home of the President-General of Ohanaeze Ndigbo, Prof. George Obiozor. He also pledged to review the security situation in the southeast region.

President Buhari also voiced concerns last week over the frequent power outages, apologising to Nigerians and assuring them of quick relief to the situation.

What will Nigeria look like in 2035?

Seun Abimbola 15+ Years Building Businesses in Nigeria. 3y

Nigeria's economic prosperity has always been tied to its political leadership right from pre- independence. Interestingly 2035 will be an election year in the country if we still exist as one entity.

Our political discuss at this point will either be ideas and solutions driven or one of who has got the bigger guns and controls more of the impoverished large mayhem causing youth population.

With the rate at which our best brains are migrating to Canada, the later might not be far fetched.

So here's what we might look like in 2035.

Our roads might look like this.

Our hospitals might look like this

And the election won't hold as voter apathy would be at an all time high.

I am willing to wager a lot of another person's money though, that this won't be the case.

I think we would have solved the power challenges, tamed corruption to acceptable levels, become food sufficient and would have created policies that would help entrepreneurs build big businesses that in turn help create much needed jobs.

Oil revenues would play a smaller part in helping government fund its budget and more states would have embraced self sufficiency utilising our biggest resource which is human capital

So the country might look like this.

Bullet train from Eket to Sokoto calling at Okene Abuja and kaduna,

Ibadan byepass

Health Centre in Nnewi

Housing estate in Lokoja

Nine out of ten Nigerians who would read this would think it is impossible. I can't tell you for certain i am not among the nine.

News Nigeria

Yoruba, a west African language of Nigeria, has reportedly become an official language in Brazil.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Sun

Brazil's minister of culture has announced that Yoruba will become one of their official languages and African history will be added to school curriculum.

News Nigeria

Nigerian Army Sacks Private Soldier For Taking Picture In Colonel's Office

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 23h

The private soldier was accused of taking pictures while seated in the superior officer's office.

SaharaReporters gathered that the private soldier was accused of taking pictures while seated in the superior officer's office.

Private soldier dismissed from service after taking a photo in a colonel's office. Pls personnel should be warned cause it's getting out of hand," a short message sent by a commanding officer on WhatsApp to soldiers read.

Confirming the incident, a military officer said, "This guy is so indiscipline, a chronic one but I don't think he deserved to be dismissed with what he just did."

However, SaharaReporters had not been able to ascertain the identity of the soldier at the time of filing this report.
President Muhammadu Buhari last year signed the bill for the establishment of the army university.

The Bill entitled: “An Act to establish the Nigerian Army University, Biu as a conventional university with selected programmes, limited and focused faculties to promote scholarship, research and other means of advancement of knowledge and its practical application to military hardware and software, and provide an opportunity of acquiring a higher and liberal education in Nigeria”, seeks to tackle insecurity in the country, professionally.

In December 2021, Private Hannah Sofiat Akinlabi, a female soldier, was detained after video clips of her being proposed to by a male corps member at the National Youth Service Corps orientation camp in Yikpata, Kwara State, went viral on social media.

He was released after spending days in a detention facility of the Nigerian Army.

SaharaReporters had reported that the female soldier was ordered to be detained by Captain MM Abdulahi, Kwara State NYSC Camp Commandant, at a military detention facility in Ilorin, the state capital, pending further investigations.

A military source had said she was detained for not being “due for marriage, romancing on uniform publicly, absent on parade, indiscriminate behaviour, doing other things aside from her purpose in NYSC camp, disobedience to standing order of social media rule and disobedience to ethics and tradition of the Nigerian Army”.

Her arrest and detention were widely condemned by civil society groups and Nigerians in general, who described it as gender discrimination by the Nigerian Army.

Related Answer
What are some terrible misconceptions about Nigeria?

Roselyn Zuyeali Verkouille, NIGERIAN Answered Nov 27, 2016

All Nigerians are fraudsters and internet scammers. Hello? There are over 170 million Nigerians, that you were unfortunate to fall into the scam of a few does not make everyone of us scammers. Stop giving us scammer credit more than we deserve.

That many Nigerians travel with fake passports or Visas. It is true that some fools have attempted that in the past, some succeeded and some failed, not every Nigerian travels with a fake passport or visa. It is embarrassing when one is traveling as a Nigerian, once the officials see the green passport, the Nigerian will be asked to stand aside, while they look at the passport with all kinds of light, even if they find nothing, they still want to believe something is amiss with your passport.

That Nigeria is a war ravaged country. It is true there is still the Boko Haram insurgence, but it is not happening in every part of Nigeria.

News Nigeria

Caption; President Buhari meets with the Progressive Governors Forum at the Statehouse, Abuja. 22nd March, 2022. Photos; Tolani Alli

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 11h

Caption; Vice President Yemi Osinbajo SAN, COS to President Buhari Prof. Gambari, SGF Boss Mustapha present as President Buhari meets with the Progressive Governors Forum at the Statehouse, Abuja. 22nd March, 2022. Photos; Tolani Alli

News Nigeria

PRESIDENT MUHAMMADU BUHARI MEETS ALL APC CHAIRMANSHIP ASPIRANTS AT THE VILLA. 23RD MARCH, 2022

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 1h

President Muhammadu Buhari, SGF Mr. Boss Mustapha, Abdullahi Adamu, Sen Ali Modu Sheriff, Abubakar Yari Abubakar and Saliu Mustapha during the meeting at the Presidential Villa Wednesday Night in Abuja.

News Nigeria

PHOTONEWS: A day after announcing that his government cut the salaries of appointees by 30%, President of Ghana, Nana Akufo-Addo, visits Nigeria's President Muhammadu Buhari, at the State House, Abuja, on Thursday. I

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Thu

UNIOSCAN

Credit: State House

Nigeria: Do most Nigerians welcome westernization?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated 2y

There is fear that the unique cultures and traditions of Nigeria would go extinct in no distance time, even sooner than anyone's imagination.

Some call it civilisation, others see it as betrayal, while the majority see it as nothing... "It's none of your business," they say.

And this thinking is more prevalent with smaller tribes in Nigeria.

One could easily notice this in their behaviour.

In South-south Nigeria, speaking your mother tongue in some places is seeing as uncivilised.

I have seen where bosses got mad at junior staffs for greeting or asking them for favours with a language other than English.

"You're so primitive, don't you know this is a cooperate environment?"

My tribe Ijaw is a prime example of this fact:

Kids can't say the most common words such as 'come' in their mother tongue, what they speak is Nigerian English which is a mixture of British and American English which is undoubtedly funny to the English, but their parents love them for it.

A man has to over prepared to marry in Nigeria, mostly in my part because you need to do the traditional and white wedding sequentially.

From the look of things, the White wedding is even more important than our very own traditional wedding.

The way we dress is another prime example as the majority of our clothes are western this day and the trend is growing.

We pride ourselves about having a variety of food, but you would tell a different story when you visit a middle to high-class Nigerian home, the foods that are unique to Nigerians might not be found there, they are mostly fatty western foods.

The negative aspects of this behaviour are numerous.

Many of us are now considered uncultured; the typical African way of life is now oblivion to many, mostly the young generation.

Respect for elders which is a core aspect of our culture is presently considered unnecessary, and so it's no longer strange to see young people telling their seniors the F- word along with the sign.

I'm a fan of diversity, people borrowing cultures from other countries is not a problem for me, it's their life but seeing one's original lifestyle as second-rate is nothing but heartbreaking.

If you don't like your culture make it better, don't abandon it only to pick a foreign one.

Related Answer
What do whites think of Nigeria and Nigerians?

Robert Stephen Campbell, I can't speak for other people -- only for myself.
Answered Dec 21, 2016

Nigeria is a big country with many languages and ethnicities. I have known mostly Ibo and a number of Yoruba. One of the first things I think of when I think of Nigeria is FOOD! In the early 1970s, I had a Nigerian across-the-street neighbor, a PhD student in chemistry. We often said that we should exchange food, but nothing came of it until one day he smelled some kimchi or some other fragrant thing that was in preparation. We gave him a taste. He liked it but was surprised that I would enjoy anything so highly spiced.

“You like that? Don’t cook supper, we’ll bring you something.” That evening he brought over a pot of absolutely delicious stew that I, too, would have been a bit hesitant to serve to the average American.

He liked to throw parties, but they were usually separate for Nigerians and Americans. I got invited to several wonderful Nigerian potlucks. They were long ago, outdoors, and dimly torch lit, so my memories lack detail, but anytime I am offered Nigerian food (or other African food for that matter) I will gladly accept.

Related Links

Is Nigerian ancestral culture threatened by Westernization?
How are relatively Westernized Nigerians treated in Nigeria?
How do Nigerians feel about Chinese people working in Nigeria?
How do Westerners view Nigeria and Nigerians?
What does the Western world think of my country, Nigeria?
Why was western education introduced to Nigeria?
What do whites think of Nigeria and Nigerians?

Nigeria: What are things indigenous Nigerians know that Nigerians in the diaspora don't know?

What is an example of Westernization?
What do you think about westernisation in Morocco?
Is there a difference between westernisation and globalization?
Are Nigerians smart?
Is it wrong to become westernized?
How are Nigerians different, culturally, from other Western African people?
What do you think of Nigerians?

Is Enugu, Nigeria safe to live?

Kingsley Chinedu

Lives in Enugu, Nigeria Updated 2y

Enugu State is in South Eastern part of Nigeria. It is made up of four major cities: Enugu, Nsukka, Agwụ and Agbani.

The city of Enugu(and Enugu State as a whole) is one of the safest places to live in Nigeria if not Africa as a whole. I know this because I live in this lovely city.

Living in this city is fun and refreshing. Unlike the overcrowded and noisy state of Lagos, Enugu is a relatively quiet state of under 5 million people and unlike the Northern states of Nigeria, there has been no case of terrorism or public unrest in Enugu.

Aside the security benefits of living in Enugu, their are a lot of other things that make life fun in this beautiful state. Some of them I will try to illustrate here.

Good Roads :

Living in a city with a bad and pothole inflicted roads is a pain the ass. Thanks to our capable governors, Enugu has one of the best road network in the country.

Housing and Accommodations:

Getting a lovely and comfortable place to stay in the city is no hassle at all be it hotels or already completed houses for sale, Enugu has got lots of those. It is worthy to mention that cost of real estates in the city is a little on the high side due to the serenity of the city.

Entertainment and Nightlife:

There is no dulling moment in the city. The city is filled with exquisite and cool clubs, bars and the like. And then again, you need not worry about security as you can get out and come back at any time of the day or night without worries.

Further still, the city is home to some of the Africa's best entertainers

The picture above is that of artiste Flavour of Africa whose base is in the city of Enugu(he also owns an exclusive club called 2nite club, you should visit the club if you ever come down here, it is worth it) . There are lots of great entertainers in the city including our cherished vernacular rappers Phyno, Zorro, Mr Raw and a whole lot of others. Like I said, no dulling moment in the city.

Transportation and Travels:

Aside taxify and Uber which are just making their way into the city, the state has there own public transport system. Our coal city shuttle and taxi is ever ready to convey you to your destination in comfort

The city has it's own international Airport named the Akanu Ibiam international Airport. So movement to and fro the city won't be any headache at all

And be rest assured there is always a police car by the corner incase you need a fast reponse

The pictures and descriptions do no justice to the city, you need to see it to believe it

Photo source: Google.com

News Nigeria

Meet Nigeria's First Indigenous Professional Photographer

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Fri

Related Links

What advice would you give to someone who is moving to Enugu, Nigeria?
What are the good and bad neighborhoods of Enugu, Nigeria?
What are some lesser-known sights to see when visiting Enugu, Nigeria?

Which part of Nigeria is the best to live?
How would expats describe their honest experience living in Nigeria?
Is Nigeria safe for tourists?
Is Enugu, Nigeria, an overcrowded city?
How safe is Calabar, Nigeria?
How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?
What are the best things about living in Nigeria?
What is the best restaurant in Enugu, Nigeria?
Is it better to live in Lagos or Abuja?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
What can you tell me about visiting Enugu State, Nigeria?
Is Lagos, Nigeria a safe place for expats to live in? Why?

News Nigeria

PHOTO NEWS: President Muhammadu Buhari meets with APC National Assembly Leadership at the State House, Abuja, on Thursday, ahead of the party's national convention slated for Saturday.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Thu

Credit: State House

My DNA came back at CA 2% Nigerian and, I'm as 'White' a person can be, short of Albinism. My father was Hungarian, born/raised and my mother was generic Va/W Va 'hillbilly', red hair, freckles and all?

Ygor Coelho · Follow Avid reader on history of peoples and population genetics.Thu

Okay, so what? I don't get what the question is. I would find it extremely surprising if you told us that your ancestors were all from northern Finland, from central Siberia or something, but you just said that your mother was generic "hillbilly" from Virginia/West Virginia, a land that is known to have had large-scale (forced) settlement by West Africans, which the present-day Nigerians, despite all their ethnic and linguistic diversity, are almost universally in terms of genetic clustering of wide-ranging ethnogeographic groups. Almost "trace" percentages of African (say, anything between ~0.1% and ~2%) are not very unexpected when people of European background and those of African background have lived side by side for centuries, even where racial segregation was fiercely enforced for much of that time.

At 2%, it seems almost impossible for any of your ancestors known in the last 150 years to have had very visible African-like traits, and that's even taking for granted that those 2% of Nigerian admixture (let's be realistic here: that actually means "broadly West African close to what you'd find in some ethnicities from Nigeria") introgressed in your genetic roots just once, which is just a possibility (it's perfectly possible that you got a bit from this and another bit from that ancestor, so that the last decidedly black African-looking ancestor in question might've lived, who knows?, 300 or 350 years ago).

There aren't few people in this world with as much as 15% or 20% Sub-Saharan African admixture who are very light-skinned and can pass for Europeans. Now, just try to picture the likelihood that 2% of your genome deriving from present-day Nigerian-like people will have any notable influence on your looks!

ABOVE: Flor Gil, the undeniably light-skinned girl with bright green eyes and straight, blondish light brown hair on the right of this picture, sings alongside her maternal grandfather, the great Brazilian composer, singer and lyricist Gilberto Gil, who is a man with all the typical features associated with black African people. Just two generations of mixed coupling were enough to create such distinct phenotypes within the same family.

Most likely, if your family knows nothing about a black man or (more likely) woman in your genealogy going back to the last 400 years, in its oral lore passed through generations, that must mean that someone who was white for all practical purposes and visible features, but had in fact recent mixed origins, married into your family and became one of your ancestors not many generations ago.

It's not very rare at all for children and, especially, grand-children of black people who mixed with people of fully or mostly European background to have a much lighter-skinned and much more caucasoid-looking phenotype. The opposite also happens, no one can predetermine how the children of successive generations of mixed reproduction will look like, the odds are just that most will be in the middle of the spectrum, while a minority will look much more like this or that extreme end of it. That's all literally decided like a random lottery during conception, when a complete reshuffling of one's parents' genome happens through genetic recombination.

Related Links

I'm black and born and raised in the US. I took a DNA test and I'm 41% Nigerian. Is it appropriate for me to say I'm Nigerian American?

I'm a Dark skin, African-American male. I recently did an Ancestry and it came back as 53% European, 39% African. I'm 28% Italian and 14% German. Can anyone shed light on blacks having Italian DNA? I'm mind blown on how I'm more European than black.

Would Nigerians accept me as Nigerian with 35% Ancestry DNA? I'm Black with Caribbean parents.

How am I only 5% Italian on my DNA, when my father's mother was 100% Italian?

If someone has dark brown skin from African ancestry but has over 75% white European DNA, is the person white or black?

Is Indonesian DNA very dominant? Because the son of my oldest brother is 1/16 so 6.25% Indonesian and for the rest white and you can clearly see he's from Indonesian descent. Is Indonesian DNA really that dominant?

I'm British and I took the ancestry DNA test and I came back with black cousins in America. How did this happen? I'm white.

How is it that black people can have blonde/red hair and blue/green eyes without being mixed with white? I've seen multiple black people have them and they have no white parents, grandparents, or great grandparents. How is this possible?

Is 15 % considered a lot of a certain ethnicity? A friend just learned through a DNA test that she is 15% West African and is now calling herself "mixed race."

Genetics help. I'm African American and my husband is biracial African American and

Related Answer

I am Nigerian and Asian mixed. My Nigerian dad and some people in his family look eastern African (example s Somalia, Ethiopia). His ancestry DNA results show only west African DNA. Why does he look so different from other Nigerians?

Sandra Jackson-Opoku Travel to 8 African countries, lived in Nigeria for a year
Answered Apr 19, 2020

I hope I'm not being presumptuous in assuming that you didn't grow up in Nigeria. If so, it seems you'd have known that there's no particular Nigerian "look." As I've mentioned in another post, Nigeria is made up of three major ethnic groups and many minority groups. Each of them has its own language, customs, culture, and in some cases, genome. If ancestry results say 32% Nigerian, what does this mean if more than the last 10 generations of my family has been in America?

You didn't say what ethnic group your father is from. Could he be Fulani? Certain Fulani (Nigeria's largest ethnic group) have a "mixed-race" look similar to Ethiopians and Somali. Although really, people with that phenotype are also found among the Yoruba, Igbo and other ethnicities as well.

A Nigeria Fulani woman

Related Answer

Between the missionaries and colonial masters, which of them could be said brought the major early civilization in Africa (Nigeria) precisely?

Matt Riggsby

MA Archaeology, Boston University Mar 8

The earliest major civilization in Nigeria specifically [1] was brought by the Nigerians themselves, or at least by people native to what's now Nigeria. There were urban societies between the Sahel and the Gulf of Guinea by the early Middle Ages arising from the Nok and other neighboring cultures. Maritime West Africa tended towards relatively small kingdoms, as opposed to the large empires of the Sahelian region like Mali and Songhai. But it was civilization nevertheless. What missionaries and colonial administrators of the later 19th/early 20th century did, then, was to reconfigure societies of long standing along colonial lines, establishing layers of foreign overlords over native civilizations.

There are *lots*of other African civilizations: Egypt, Nubia/Kush, Axum, the Swahili cities, and many, many others. And neither missionaries nor colonial administrators had a hand in building any of them, though Omani merchants in the early Middle Ages were an important catalyst in the establishment of Swahili culture.

Related Answer

Between the missionaries and colonial masters, which of them could be said brought the major early civilization in Africa (Nigeria) precisely?

Ify Onabu, Interested in matters affecting Nigeria. Answered Mar 11

l would say neither of them brought civilization to Africa. The question pre-supposes that there was no civilization in Africa before the arrival of the missionaries or colonizers. African societies and empires had thriving civilization before the arrival of strangers on the shores of the continent.

African was certainly not uncivilized before the Europeans arrived.

Remember that great civilizations existed thousands of years before the Europeans came.

We had the great Mali empire, the Songhai empire, the Ashanti empire, the Oyo empire, the Kanem -Borno empire and also the Bini empire.

Mansa Musa of Mali Empire: reputed to be the richest man that ever lived!

Remember that the University of Timbuktu was a great centre of learning before the arrival of the Europeans.

The University of Timbuktu

The pyramids of Egypt are a proof of advanced civilization before the coming of Europeans.

The great art works of ancient Bini Kingdom are proofs of advanced civilization.

The great Bini moat is proof of advanced civilization.

Now, there is the discovery of the the Dufuna canoe which proves definitively that Africans actually were navigating Lake Chad about 8,000 years ago.

The myth of ‘uncivilized Africa’ was simply perpetuated to justify colonial plunder, violence and exploitation.

Related Answer

Between the missionaries and colonial masters, which of them could be said brought the major early civilization in Africa (Nigeria) precisely?

Ronnicolasp, former Ex Managing Quantity Surveyor Answered Mar 8

We see the early civilizations in Africa (Nigeria) seven hundred years ago. They reveal facial lines that many consider an ethnic mark. Facial markings are also evident on sculptures from the Kingdom of Benin in ancient Nigeria. Some have become status symbols in traditional societies. But it will also set it apart from the more than 250 other ethnic groups in Nigeria.

The practice of incising has a long history in Africa, although it is not limited to this continent. The Greek historian Herodotus wrote in the fifth century B.C.E. about the Carians living in Egypt: “[They] cut their foreheads with knives, thereby proving that they were foreigners and not Egyptians.” Bronze heads made at Ife, most Nigerians who have ethnic markings on their faces have no other choice in this matter. However, when they become parents, they must decide whether to give their children a sign.

Some people decide to do just that. According to the Times International of Lagos, there are several reasons behind this decision. The magazine states: “Some consider it a sign of beauty. Others don't believe that tribal tags can help determine a user's origins for reasons of favouritism. Another use is in determining the legitimacy of a child in traditional societies.”

Today, however, more and more parents find these reasons invalid. Even among people who are proud of their mark, relatively few are willing to take the risk of scribbling their children's faces. This is what happens in cities. Pain and the risk of infection, as well as the ridicule and discrimination a child may face later in life, are all factors that cause parents to give up facial markings.

Obviously, facial markings are growing in popularity and are not accepted. In Nigeria, people will carry “identity cards” in their wallets, not in their faces. I am reviewing this without being associated with missionaries or colonization, of my adaptation of my brother's correspondent from Nigeria in 1999

it's about the Carians called Herodotus, Wiki wrote:

In some translations of Biblical texts, the Carians are mentioned in 2 Kings 11:4, 11:19 (/kɑˈɾi/; כָּרִי, in Hebrew literally "like fat sheep/goat", contextually "noble" or "honoured") and perhaps alluded to in 2 Samuel 8:18, 15:18, and 20:23 (/kɾɛˈti/; כְּרֵתִי, probably unrelated due to the "t", maybe Cretans). They are also named as mercenaries in inscriptions found in ancient Egypt and Nubia, dated to the reigns of Psammetichus I and II. They are sometimes referred to as the "Cari" or "Khari". Carian remnants have been found in the ancient city of Persepolis or modern Takht-e-Jamshid in Iran.

The Greek historian Herodotus recorded that Carians themselves were believed to be aborigines of Caria but they were also, by general consensus of ancient sources, a maritime people before being gradually pushed inland.[5] Plutarch mentions the Carians as being referred to as "cocks" by the Persians on account of their wearing crests on their helmets; the epithet was expressed in the form of a Persian privilege when a Carian soldier responsible for killing Cyrus the Younger was rewarded by Artaxerxes II (r. 405/404–359/358 BC) with the honour of leading the Persian army with a golden cock on the point of his spear.

According to Thucydides, it was largely the Carians who settled the Cyclades prior to the Minoans. The Middle Bronze Age (MMI–MMII) expansion of the Minoans into this region seems to have come at their expense. Intending to secure revenue in the Cyclades, Minos of Knossos established a navy with which he established his first colonies by taking control of the Hellenic sea and ruling over the Cyclades. In doing so, Minos expelled the Carians, many of which had turned to piracy as a way of life. During the Athenian purification of Delos,[clarification needed] all graves were exhumed and it was found that more than half were Carians (identified by the style of arms and the method of internment).

According to Strabo, Carians, of all the "barbarians", had a particular tendency to intermingle with the Greeks, This is true, for the account of the publication Insight, the body of troops that aided Jehoiada in the overthrow of Athaliah and the installation of Jehoash as king of Judah.—2Ki 11:4, 13-16, 19.

Many scholars regard the Carian guards as another name for the Cherethites, who are said to have served in the military forces of David and Solomon. In the view of some scholars, the Cherethites also served as special guards for these kings. (2Sa 8:18; 1Ki 1:38; 1Ch 18:17) This relationship between the Carian guards and the Cretans is also based on the fact that the Masoretic text says “Search watchers” at 2 Samuel 20:23, while the text is in the margin, and also in many Hebrew manuscripts, it is "Chereti."

There is the ancient district of Caria in the southwestern part of Asia Minor. Since Ezekiel 25:16 and Zephaniah 2:5 associate the Cretans with the Philistines, and since the Greek Septuagint translation of these texts has the word "Cretan" and not Cretan, some believe that perhaps Carian's guards originally came from the Caria district through Crete.

caption, Archaeologists studying a Carian tomb in Milas, Beçin.[1]

Footnotes
[1] Carians - Wikipedia

Related Links

Is it justifiable for colonies, especially in Africa, to keep blaming their underdevelopment on colonial masters?

What would have happened to Africa if it hadn't been colonized?
What were the positive effects of the colonialism in Africa? What caused them?

Would Africa have developed or civilized if our colonier masters didn't come to colonize us or bring civilization to Africa?

Would Nigeria have developed if there was no colonialism?

Why did Africa fail to develop a sophisticated civilization that could compete with Asian and European civilizations?

Why is Christianity more wide spread in Africa, yet the colonial masters who introduced it, are not heavily practicing in their countries?

Why did Nigeria and other African nations fight colonialism? What made the indigenous Africans make the whites leave Africa? Is life better now than it was at the period of colonialism?

Since Mormon church statistics state that their average missionary in the US gains 1.5 converts for two years out, why do they keep training and pushing those kids out the door when there has to be a better way?

What would happen if a Jehovah's Witness or Mormon Missionary knocked on a Catholic

What makes no sense at all?

Hamza Danlami Yusuf · Follow Managing Partner (2015–present) Updated 3y

Nigerian Politician

Nigerians

Children of Nigerian Politicians

Children of Nigerians

Homes of Nigerian Politicians

Homes of Nigerians

Nigerian Politicians commuting

Nigerians Commuting

Nigerian Police

With Politicians

With Nigerians

With Ordinary criminals

How they treat Politicians who robbed the country blind

How they settle civil disputes

Our Roads across the country

The roads in abuja where the politicians reside

Our Daily Struggle

What we hear everyday

Nigeria remains Africa's Biggest Economy - IMF - Vanguard News

Poverty and hopelessness is the reality

Families now resort to begging just to feed

More nigerian Children

What the President is made to believe

Our families

Our towns

Our youths

Reality…

Our towns

Our families

Our youths

Our politicians

Nigeria's N18,000 minimum wage, one of world's lowest

Confirmed: Nigerian senators receive N13.5 million monthly, apart from salaries

What are some benefits of Nigeria moving its capitol from Lagos to Abuja?

Andy Bunting

Former Chief Executive Officer in Lagos. Now Retired! 3y

Absolutely none! The whole Abuja exercise was 100%, a vanity & ego project by the Northern Military junta ruling Nigeria at that time. The whole project was a hotbed of grossly over inflated contracts, that cost Billions of dollars. Still today it's a facade of being the capital of Nigeria. The haunt of diplomats. Lagos is still the vibrant commercial capital of Nigeria.

News Nigeria

Lt. Colonel Chris Ugokwe (left) and Brigadier Muhammadu Buhari were captured together in an undated photograph (Likely circa the early 1980s).

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 13m

Both men joined the Nigerian Army in the early 1960s (Ugokwe claimed that he enrolled on the same day as both Buhari and Shehu Musa Yar'Adua).

Ugokwe was officially put on army leave after the "reprisal coup" of July 1966. His escape from the North which had become unsafe for officers and people of Eastern Region origin was facilitated by Lt. Colonel Hassan Usman Katsina, the governor of the Northern province to whom he was serving as aide-de-camp. In September 1966, Ugokwe was escorted to Kaduna Railway station by Ibrahim Babangida and Garba Duba before embarking on his journey to the Eastern Region.

Ugokwe fought on the side of the secessionist state of Biafra between 1967 and 1970 as a brigade commander. He was reabsorbed into the Nigerian Army after the civil war with a loss of seniority.

He was significantly involved in two prominent military operations after his reabsorption into the Nigerian military.

As a Major, he was instrumental in flushing out dissident soldiers led by Lt. Colonel Buka Suwa Dimka from Broadcasting House during the abortive coup of February 13th, 1976. The mission was organized by the "Core Commander" of the Armoured Corps, Lt. Colonel Babangida (concerning whom Ugokwe had had 6 months seniority when both were members of the Armoured Recce Squadron before the civil war) and carried out on the ground by Ugokwe, the Regimental Commander, and Lt. Colonel M.B. Mayaki; Ugokwe leading the armored offensive and Mayaki (himself an armored corps officer) the infantry assault. Captain Jimmy Okojoko was also an influential fighter on the ground.

As a member of the General Staff in April 1983, Lt. Colonel Ugokwe was assigned by Major General Buhari, the General Officer Commanding (GOC) the Third Armoured Division in Jos, to recapture 21 islands located on Lake Chad from Chadian forces led by Idriss Deby, the Chief of Army Staff. Ugokwe arranged for the relocation of the headquarters of the Third Armoured Division to Maiduguri and in combination with the 21 Armoured Brigade succeeded in recapturing all 21 islands along with an extra two islands that were seized.

He retired in 1985 as a Lieutenant Colonel.

Lt. Colonel Ugokwe died on December 30th, 2016.

Muhammadu Buhari was involved in the coup which overthrew Major General J.T.U. Aguiyi-Ironsi in July 1966 and fought for the Federal side in the Nigerian Civil War. He was also involved in the coup of July 1975 which removed General Yakubu Gowon and brought to power Brigadier Murtala Muhammed.

During the 1970s, Buhari served as a military administrator of Bornu State, the Federal Commissioner for Petroleum and Natural Resources, and the Military Secretary.

Buhari graduated from the US Army War College in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, with a Master in Strategic Studies. During the early 1980s, first as a Brigadier and then as a Major General, he went on to perform General Officer Commanding roles for army divisions; two infantry and the other armored, before he emerged as the Head of State following the coup which overthrew the civilian administration of President Shehu Shagari on New Year's Eve in 1983.

Buhari was himself overthrown by a coup led by Major General Ibrahim Badamasi Babangida, shortly known as IBB in August 1985. He was placed in detention for a while.

Buhari made several failed attempts at becoming a civilian president during the 2000s but is presently serving his second term as a civilian president of the Fourth Republic.

News Nigeria
FIRST NIGERIAN WOMAN TO BUY A CAR

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 16h

Madam Efunroye Tinubu was the first Nigerian woman to buy a car; she was also the first Iyalode of the Egba land.

She was born around 1805 in Abeokuta, Nigeria, and was once a slave trader who traded with Europeans.

Madame Tinubu built a financial empire through the arms and salt trade. She married Adele, an exiled Oba of Lagos years after the death of her first husband. She gained economic and political power through marriage and was able to build a business empire through the trade of salt and tobacco from Europe for slaves from Abeokuta.

In 1835, her husband Adele returned to his throne but died two years later making her a widow for the second time. She then helped install Adele's son, Oluwole as the new king and married his military advisor.

After the accidental death of Oluwole, she helped install her brother–in–law on the throne and he rewarded her with stores in downtown Lagos. She was rumored to own over three hundred personal slaves.

After slavery was repudiated in 1845 by European nations and commercial crops the new items of commerce, she expanded her empire by controlling the major items of commerce.

Madam Tinubu was the major conduit in Lagos between European merchants and Traders. She fell from power after organizing a plot to remove the British consul, Benjamin Campbell from power after he railed against her secret slave trade with Europeans.

She was exiled from Lagos and returned to Abeokuta. Madam Tinubu was an economic powerhouse and an important figure in 19th century Nigeria and died in 1887.

News Nigeria

Nigeria football team risks FIFA ban as official died during fans riot.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 3h

Nigerian fans yesterday invaded the pitch after a 1:1 draw against Ghana forcing players and officials to run for their dear life into the changing room. Unfortunately, FIFA DOPING CONTROL OFFICER Dr. Joseph Kabungo did not make it out alive!

Joseph suffered a cardiac arrest during the commotion and was pronounced dead soon after.

Dr. Joseph Kabungo is CAF medical committee member who was also recently appointed to the FIFA medical committee. He served as the Zambian team doctor from 2003 to 2016.

May his soul Rest In Peace □

News Nigeria
NOBODY KNOWS TOMORROW

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 9h

During the Nigeria-Biafra civil war, many Igbo people fled other parts of the country for the East because they were being killed and massacred wantonly and the government was doing nothing about it.

Many abandoned their homes, properties and businesses for safety. Of them, was a young Igbo architect who had a young Yoruba banker as a neighbour in Apapa, Lagos. He also abandoned his home and with his family fled for the East.

However, the young Yoruba banker, while the war lasted, rented out his neighbour's house and kept every kobo for him while he was in the East. After the war, the Igbo architect returned to Lagos and the Yoruba banker handed over the entire proceeds of the rent and also the house to the Igbo architect.

Some few years later, the Igbo architect became the Vice President of Nigeria and the Yoruba banker established a commercial bank, the first by a private citizen in the country's history.

However, he could not get a license to begin banking operations. Many people were against him because it was unheard of at the time.

At this time, the banker remembered his neighbour who was now the Vice President and tracked him to the Christ Church Cathedral, Marina, Lagos on a particular Sunday. He had tried to get appointment to see him in his office but without success.

He and his wife then decided to go lay ambush for him in Church but the security men did not allow them. They then decided to sit by the pew close to the aisle to beat the security in the hope that the Vice President would see them while he walked to the front row. Yet, he still didn't see them.

After the church program they positioned that he will see them on his way out. However, the people following him out and security blocked his view. That was when the banker's wife decided to take a risk and like the woman with the issue of blood, she pulled the Vice President's cloth to get his attention who then turned and saw his old friend.

The young banker then narrated his plight and told the Vice President how he had tried to see him and what he needed to see him for. He told him about his application for a bank licence.

“Don’t worry yourself. Just come tomorrow at the Federal Executive Council meeting which I would preside because President Shehu Shagari would not be there,'' the Vice President assured him.

By 3.00pm the next day, the Finance Minister called the banker on phone that his licence was ready. The rest they say is history.

That young banker was Otunba Michael Olasubomi Balogun while the architect in this narrative was one of Africa’s Elder statesmen and former Vice President of the Republic of Nigeria, late Dr. Alex Ekwueme. The bank is what is now First City Monument Bank.

- One good turn truly deserves another.

- It is good to love our neighbours as ourselves, and importantly - Honesty pays.

News Nigeria

JUST-IN: CAF Official Dies From Stampede After Nigeria, Ghana Match In Abuja

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Wed

The Confederation of African Football (CAF) doping officer for Tuesday's second leg of the Qatar 2022 FIFA World Cup play-off match between Nigeria and Ghana, Dr Joseph Kabungo, has died after violence erupted at the end of the match at the Moshood Abiola National Stadium in Abuja.

Kabungo, a Zambian medical practitioner, was reported to have lost consciousness after he was beaten and stepped on as fans try to make their way out of the stadium due to stampede.

In a post on Twitter by British-Nigerian journalist, Osasu Obayiuwana, his death was confirmed after he was rushed to the hospital.

Neither officials of the Nigeria Football Federation (NFF) nor CAF has confirmed the official's death.

Related Answer
What was life like in 1960 Nigeria?

Audu Desmond Adama Works at Aryon (2018–present) Updated 2y

I'm not sure if I truly understood your question. What was life like in the year 1960 itself? Or were you referring to the 60's as a whole?

Ah well I think I would just write about the Nigeria of the late 50s and the early 60s before the Awolowo belligerence and the unfortunate Civil war; that should really capture it.

My answer though is mostly limited to interactions that I have had with the older generation, some of course I have read up on my own.

I had the privilege of meeting the father of a friend in Isele Uku (Delta state, south eastern Nigeria), like two minds from different generations we discussed for a long time, occasionally we quizzed ourselves, well I did most of the questioning. He told me of when he served in the Nigerian navy, of his sponsored education to India where he got his military training, of how the Nigerian government were literally always genuinely seeking out citizens who either wanted to go to school or learn a vocational skill so they could contribute their quota to the country….. all these were government sponsored.

My father told me of a time when the University of Nigeria had just a maximum of two students in a decently furnished hostel room, they had a functional refectory which served meals that were both pleasant to the eyes and healthy for the body, the campus had staff who did the Laundry of students, faculties were funded on demand basis for research purposes.

I'm sure by now you are getting the picture I trying to paint, even before Nigeria as a country was birthed and barely five years into her existence, she had already put into place an efficient and progressive system, There was so much emphasis then on human development and Nation building.

Take a look at this picture, what do you see?

ORDER

Take a look at this other picture below of modern day Nigeria, what do you see?

CHAOS

I currently reside In Enugu, so far it is the safest South Eastern state, I took a walk one evening around this place called Gariki and I could not help but imagine that things could go wrong any minute, there is some sort of suppressed anger and resentment for almost everything and everyone, someone just needs to mistakenly cause the spark and watch the Dragon unleash itself.

If you look deep enough it would appear as if we are a group of well tailored passersby who are sadly but gradually becoming mentally unstable, a product of an obviously failed and unprogressive system, a sorry state anything unlike the 60s, you see back then before all this talk about Biafra this and Oduduwa that … before the ugly civil war, there was this sense of nationhood among the folks (at least that is what I heard), I mean take a look at our first National anthem

"Nigeria, we hail thee,

Our own Native land,

Though tribe and tongue may differ,

In brotherhood we stand,

Nigerians all are proud to serve our Sovereign Motherhood…."

The standard of living of an average educated Nigerian man was way better than his counterpart in a good number of Western countries, can't say the same for today though, all thanks to decades of plundering, institutional decadence and value decrepitness.

Related Links

What was it like living in the 60's and 70's in Nigeria?
Was Nigeria thoroughly ready for independence in 1960?
What was it like living in the 60s in Nigeria?
What's the biggest achievement in Nigeria from 1960 to date?
What was life like in the early 1960s compared to the late 1960s?
How is life in Nigeria?

What is the difference between Nigeria independent in 1960 and Nigeria, being a republic in 1963?

What is going on in Nigeria since independence?
What did it feel like to live in the '60s?
How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?
Can you tell me what life was like for you in the US during the 1960's?
What was life in any part of Nigeria like before colonisation?
How old is Nigeria before independence?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
How's life in Nigeria for someone going there to work from India?

What is something amazing about Nigerians?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated 2y

I was shopping at some crowded market a few years back.
Suddenly, I saw people running towards someplace, and some lady saying "we need more wrapper, bring more wrapper."

Some aged women took off their extra wrapper from their waist and spreading it on the floor.

Aged women usually tie two wrappers around their waist.

More women left their businesses and were still running to the scene.

"No man should come, no man should come."

That was when I became interested, and my senses became more active. I gradually forget what took me to the market as i paid more attention to the ladies saying "men shouldn't come."

The men close by were now shifting backwards, behind the women.

I was curious, I must see what these women are keeping from men again, it must be something beautiful, why do women hide beautiful things from men?

I went close:

Bro, what's happening here? What's up?

I asked a few persons but didn't get a reasonable response, as a young girl was about repeating what she has said to me before, we heard a cry, a baby's cry.

"He's a boy, he's a boy."

"Fine boy. Do you see? You see this life?" a lady asked.

"If you don't fear this God?" another lady said while pointing her fingers to heaven.

It was a 'mentally ill' woman, popularly called 'madwoman' who just gave birth to a bouncing baby boy.

This sort of people walk freely in most places in Nigeria and they rarely hurt people.

And no government support ever comes to them.

Surprised?

Please, don't be, even normal citizens don't get support.

She was around the market picking dirt as they usually do before she realized her baby was due.

But that's not the point of this article.

These market women, abandoning their businesses in such a crowded market to attend to a fellow woman in need was amazing, it was something to see.

There is no emergency number to call in most places, I heard we have 112 which I never call except this one time when I was in my teens:

It rang, to my shock. A guy picked up:

"Yes, what is your emergency? "

What, it's working, you guys work?

I immediately cut the call, I could tell the operator was laughing at the other end too.

People usually complain that they never show up, except, maybe, in the next few hours or days.

These women understood there is no one to call, not even an ambulance, so they did what they could, and I can assure you they are good.

Many Nigerians are born doctors, they push and touch here and there and before you know it, the baby was born.

The same thing when a person is fainting, we don't wait to call anyone, people present do what they can to save the person right there and then.

People donated baby stuff, and some for the mother.

I didn't see anyone take her home. I understand it's difficult to take such people home, they could turn on you anytime.

This lady will never let anyone take her baby from her as she grabbed him tightly to herself.

And the question of how she got pregnant is a discussion for the gods.

This reminded me a part of Nigerians, a part that was pretty common when I was a kid, the act of good 'neighborliness' that is fading away rapidly as people become more isolated, minding their businesses due to weatherization, or is it civilization?

Just like a car owner who ask young men present to help push his car when it stops in the middle of the road, and all he says is "thank you."

We say to ourselves; we shall require this service from others sooner than later, so we help, we don't tell him; 'call the towing van.'

What is something amazing about Nigerians?

Nigerians magically, and unexpectedly come to support you when the need arises and stand by you until the end.

Related Answer
What is something amazing about Nigerians?

Updated Feb 29, 2020Updated Feb 29, 2020

Photo by NESA by Makers on Unsplash
It is in moments like this you see the beauty and uniqueness of Nigerians.

Indeed, there is no way we can be human without other people.

Naija; the land of fascination.

Farouk Othman , lives in Nigeria Updated Feb 29, 2020

1. We are RESILIENT. Oh boy! When we set our minds and hearts to something, we achieve it against all odds:

2. You may liken us to the physiology of xerophyte; we manage to thrive in harsh conditions—where the resources are scarce…

Xerophyte adaptations

A. Xerophytes are plants adapted to dry environments

--their adaptations allow them to obtain the maximum amount of water from their environment

…But when opportunities present itself; we are exceptional:

3. Contrary to popular opinion, we are diligent, smart and talented people. We chose our professions and we work diligently to the top.

Farmers and Market women

Teachers and Doctors

Fashion and Wood works

Engineers

Barristers and Lawyers

Artists

Musicians and Actors

Who is the best?

Place

to mention a few…

Scammers are the *tiny-minorit*y Nigerians you encounter. They are nothing but a flag stick on a cake (It labels and calls your attention to the cake) but does not define the taste— so taste the cake before concluding.

---

4. We are very RESPECTUL. Unless you prove yourself undeserving, we give respect to whom it is due. And we strongly expect you to reciprocate— don't make us ask!

5. We alone, I repeat, we ALONE have the right to satirize our country. We don't take it lightly with foreigners when they do that— even if it were to be a sister country. (Ghanaians and Senegaleses, no offense):

Nana Kwame Shelton
@Domani_Stilinsk

Nigerians dey talk like dem get electricity dem go take watch the World Cup.

2:58 PM · 09 Oct 17

382 RETWEETS 204 LIKES

Mr UnderCover @JJscatter 1d
@Domani_Stilinsk You Ghanaians should use your electricity and qualify for world cup.

1 2

6. We are optimistic. Amidst the pandemonium, when we experience a thing of joy; we celebrate like there is no tomorrow— we dance away our sorrows. We are very good at giving ourselves cause to celebrate.

7. We are Fun and colour-full:

8. Our Diversity makes us scintillating:

9. We are happy people…

…Doesn’t matter if outsider says otherwise:

So…

10. We are Nigerians… and we are Amazing!

Farouk

Related Answer

What do you love about Nigerians?

Torshie Torto, Ghanaian, West African and African, Answered Jan 6, 2020 · Upvoted by Chudi Makam, lives in Nigeria (2011-present)

Originally Answered: Why do you love Nigerians?

Well, because first and foremost, I'm Nigerian.

Obviously that is not true; I'm Ghanaian. The thing is, Nigerians and Ghanaians are like siblings. Ghana is surrounded on all sides (north, east and west) by French speaking countries (Burkina Faso, Togo and Ivory Coast). Geographically, Nigeria is nowhere close to Ghana. In fact, you'll have to cross two countries eastward before getting there. Yet, in Africa, Ghanaians feel closest to Nigerians in all aspect of life. In sports or whatever, Ghana strongly supports Nigeria. The only time Nigeria loses our support is when the competition is between Ghana and Nigeria, then of course, we would support our own country. So of course, this so called jollof wars is a huge waste of time since there is only one winner. Her name begins with a G and ends with an A. Thank you.

We have some kind of healthy rivalry between us, however, when we collaborate, it does not matter what kind of collaboration it is, we create magic. So why do I love Nigerians? There are so many reasons.

For starters, it is believed that members of my ethnic group, the Ga people, emigrated several centuries ago from Ile Ife in Nigeria. Honestly, I don't know how true it is, but I learnt that in our history books, so yeah.

On to more significant reasons. Nigerians are go-getters. Dude, you don't know ambition until you meet a Nigerian. They are very ambitious — when they want something, they go for it. It really does not matter what kind of obstacle is in their path. You may say that many human beings all over the world are like that. Well, maybe you have not met a Nigerian. Speaking of meeting a Nigerian, they are everywhere. Literally. This is because they see opportunity everywhere. I'm pretty sure half of the elves helping Santa at the North Pole are Nigerians. The Nigerians here in Ghana are business savvy. If there's one thing I'd like to learn from Nigerians, it's their aggressiveness when it comes to success. I'm too indifferent for my own good.

Another thing I love about Nigerians is their super-confidence. This does not even need any explanation. Personally, I believe Nigerians are the most confident Africans on the planet. If you meet one, you will know exactly what I'm talking about. Now I'm not saying Ghanaians are not confident. We are. In fact, I am. But I'm saying that if a Ghanaian and a Nigerian entered a room full of important people, there's a higher chance that those important people are going to know about the Nigerian in the room. We Ghanaians are way too relaxed to care. When I was in the university, it was very easy to spot a Nigerian. Apart from their accent, the easiest way to spot one was by the way they dressed and how they carried themselves in public. The issues we refused to talk about, they simply talked about in seconds. Damn. Can I get a Nigerian lawyer, please?

Moreover, Nigerians love to learn which makes them incredibly intelligent. I love intelligent people. So I love Nigerians. Logic.

Other things I love about Nigeria are their music, languages, food, fashion, etc. They are good at whatever they do. Unfortunately, they have a shitty government that does not give a fuck about the citizens of that beautiful country. Hence, no matter how intelligent, or confident, or ambitious they are, the country is still very much in poverty even though it is an incredibly rich country. But what can I say, Ghana is pretty much the same. Our governments are our worst nightmares; we thrive nonetheless.

Related Links

What do you love about Nigerians?
What is the number one thing you can't deal with about Nigerians?
What is one thing you wished all Nigerians knew?
Why do Nigerians dislike cats?
What is the most Nigerian thing ever?
How do you feel about Nigerians living in your country?
What are the top 10 things that Nigerians don't know about the rest of the world?
What amazes you the most about Nigerian dishes?
What are the amazing things about Nigeria that people don't know?
What do you want to know about Nigeria from a Nigerian?
What are your thoughts about Nigerians and have you visited Nigeria before?
As a Nigerian, what does the most Nigerian thing ever look like?
What are things that are mostly said about Nigerians, but are not true?
What screams I'm not a Nigerian in Nigeria?
What are the top 10 mind blowing facts about Nigeria?

Is Nigeria a failed state?

Stephen Moses CEO /Founder / Full Stack Developer (2016–present) Updated 9mo

Hmmm, the arrogance of this question.

Let me tell you a story.

Let's talk about Nigeria, I was born in Kano, which used to be one of the biggest industrial areas in Nigeria.

My family moved to Lagos, in the year 2000, during the Sharia Riot crisis in the North at the time. Youth Corp Members were at the receiving end of that crisis.

I've lived in Lagos (Western Nigeria) for most of my life, and only left the State, to go study and live for a while. I have encountered, met, interacted, with my brethren from different tribes, across Nigeria, a country with over 520 different spoken languages.

I can confidently tell you these truths. They might not be backed up by science but, they have stood the test of time.WHO SOLD NIGERIA: You could do a little research, into the formation of the Niger Company, now known as Unilever. Britain has invested a lot into buring history, many of their practices in the 18th century might not be quite popular today.

Britain invaded Lagos in 1851, they rained mortars on civilians, they killed innocent civilians, not because they were at war with the natives, but simply because they wanted our land, they wanted the resources, and in the name of the Queen they opened the gates to this Land with the blood of its children.

I need you to understand that our land was occupied by nations (tribes) who had coexisted and lived together as far back as the 1500s, Lagos might have been invaded but taking the entire territory was not going to be a small fit, for many reasons, but let's emphasis one, Community (Common Unity), this tribes might have had one or two disagreements here and there, but they unified against a common enemy.

That's why this vast peice of land was divided up to make conquering easier, they created division by offering deals to some tribes. So some leaders chose to avoid war with a particularly superior army. Let's stop here.

INDEPENCE STRUGGLE: The people of this Land endured, pain, pillaging, systemic Division, slavery, and white washing so much that in 1960 When She got her independence, the colonial rule had lasted 260 year (Two Hundred and Sixty Years).

And when our heroes past, gathered the people to demand and fight for their land, the British reluctantly left the land, but not before setting up systemic structures that would allow them to keep pillaging the nation of its wealth even till 2020,

Our heroes past, had not envisaged how deep, the problem was rooted, 260 years of systemic Division had rooted strong distrust, one could light a match and the whole forest would come down in flames, and the British made sure they had a box of matches.

As long as we are not unified, as long as we keep fighting each other, no one will pay attention to the billions of Dollars that leave the shores to the vaults in Britain. It's the old tactic of divide and conquer.

THE UNINTENTIONAL GIFT: As bad as things may seem, I still see hope, the simple solution to our problem is a unified voice, we need to rid ourselves of the Babellic confusion that plague us. And that brings me to the unlikely solution.

The English Language: Believe it or not but for a nation that has over 520. Language's we desperately need to understand each other, we need to understand that we are all fighting for the same thing,

i. The right to live
ii. The right to live freely
iii. The right to live in peace

This three rights sums up our struggle as human beings, and we need to tell each other this, we need to let our brothers know, that we appreciate his differences, and admire his Courage, my brother needs to know that I respect his tradition, and would like to learn his culture so I can please his ancestors when I'm on his land.

My sister needs to know, that her courage amazes my people and we love how powerful she is. She need to hear from my lips that my stomach dances when ever she is in the kitchen.

Our neighborhood Children needs to hear that we will protect them like our own children, because really we are just one big family, related, by blood, region and common goal to live a long and happy life, with the ones we love.

Yes English language which was used as a tool to rid us of our identity and for the convenience of the men that invaded our home, is now the most largely spoken language in Nigeria, most melenials, speak English as their first Language, that's why there is a significantly lower rate of ethnitism amongst the melenials, in urban areas like Lagos, brotherhood is in the Nigerian Identity.

We are beginning to understand our common struggle, to realize that we are not so different after all, we are just human and best of all brothers and sisters.

This is because we can now communicate in a common tongue.

I believe the older generation (our beloved Ancestors) will take the hate, and misconceptions with them to the other world, in a decade after wards we will not remember the hate, because our children will not understand it by experience, thus be distanced from such a dark history.

Dear reader, you have no idea how powerful Nigeria is, the clock is ticking, and history is writing down our endeavors across the globe. Watch out for us.

Edit: Hello beautiful people, the most common question in the comments is “you did not address the issue of a failed state”

I will attempt to do that here;

According to http://Britannica.com A failed state is a state that is unable to perform the two fundamental functions of the sovereign nation state in the modern world system.

1. It cannot project authority over it's territory and peoples
2. It cannot protect its national boundaries

By these standards I believe Nigeria is not a failed state, there might be gross marginalization, corruption, insecurity and nepotism, but that does not mean the Nigerian government is not powerful, that does not mean TOGO □□ can take out land, they won't like the outcome.

We might be aggrived by the way things are but let's not be emotional in intellectual discussions.

Stay blessed.

Related Answer
How do other African countries view Nigeria?

Boris Guiffot A Cameroonian dude who likes technology and politics Updated Jul 10, 2019 · Upvoted by Yusuf Idowu, lives in Nigeria.

I am Cameroonian and Nigeria is the country with whom we share the longest border. That has a huge impact on the way we see the country. There is a large Nigerian community in Cameroon. Many Cameroonians pursue their high education in Nigeria.

Nigerians are considered very smart but some of them are famous to use that smartness to do unglamorous activities. They contribute to the stereotypes.
We often compete against each other at football (both our male & female team)

We like to tease you guys about football but we don't want to mess up with you when it comes to political matters : Yes, I am talking about Bakassi! Because of that disputed peninsula, we went to the brink of war in 1981. We are so relieved that it has been resolved diplomatically. Thanks guys for avoiding a useless war with a neighbor that has 1/10 of your population. We appreciate it!

We relate well because our anglophone regions speak a similar Pidgin

English. Even the French we speak on the street is full of Pidgin words.

Our northern regions are very similar to yours. Most of them belong to the same Fulfulde/Hausa ethnic group. They were even part of the same empire before they were separated by colonial borders:

We both complain about the extreme corruption of governments. We sometimes share the podium as the most corrupt countries on the continent. Does this have anything to do with the fact that we are both oil producers?

Thank you very much for saving us from Hollywood and Telenovelas. We really love your fashion, music and movies. Our own industry grew exponentially after we decided to follow suit.

For some reasons, many of us think that Nigeria is very developed except for those who have actually set foot in the country. Nollywood certainly has something to do with it.

Our rivalry is usually with Ivory Coast and we don't interfere with you guys trying to downplay Ghana. Nonetheless, we wonder why you guys make so much noise about jollof rice. We might not be loud about it but ours is the best:

I am from West Cameroon and we are often mistaken for Igbos so I guess we might be distant cousins

We wonder why such a powerful neighbour couldn't contain Boko Haram after so many years

I don't know if there is a country in this world without a Nigerian community

We admire you a lot for your sense of self-worth and self-confidence

Your pastors took all Africa by surprise. They are so famous that it is told that some pastors will go for training in Nigeria before returning to Cameroon

Your garments are real works of art!

Overall, we mingle pretty well and seem to have a lot in common. I know a lot Nigerian-Cameroonian couples.

Related Answer

What is weird in Nigeria but normal in the rest of the world?

Osazua Iruedo, Manager (2017-present) Updated Aug 28, 2020 · Upvoted by Emeka Ugochukwu, lives in Nigeria (1994-present) and Chudi Makam, lives in Nigeria (2011-present)

Eating your chicken like this in Nigeria is weird. But seems normal in the rest of the world.

Common, 1,2,3,4 just shows you have a special beef with chicken. To us, it is really weird.

In Nigeria, you won't even know chickens have bones when we are done eating because there will be no evidence there was chicken on the plate.

In fact, I have always had this funny idea that all the ingredients used in cooking the chicken always find its way into the bone and I won't get all the benefits if I don't suck it out. Believe me, that sound we make when sucking out the juicy part is heavenly.

We Nigerians are expert at cracking open a chicken bone and getting out every last bit of marrow inside. We don't eat chicken, we obliterate them. We are archaeologist’s nightmare, we leave no bones behind.

We love chicken and everything about it

Seen the blank space below? That's what I am talking about.

Related Answer

Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?

Ke'Aun, African-American Cosmopolitan Updated Dec 6

I've wondered this myself sometimes.

I look at Nigeria's overwhelming economic/population edge against its neighbors, and the strategy gamer in me can't help but want Nigeria to do something… imperial.

Strategy gamers when a far-away war breaks out

Unfortunately for us armchair conquerors (but perhaps fortunately for Nigeria's neighbors), the country seems to be a decent enough neighbor given its heft.

Nigeria, far as I know, sticks to the continental agreement that the colonial borders are sacrosanct. It had a duspute with Cameroon over some territory, but when it lost that dispute it withdrew.

Nigeria has sent its forces abroad, namely to Liberia during its civil war. And it did send a warship to The Gambia during its election crisis a few years ago, in support of the guy who won against former President Yammeh (name escapes me). But these were all actions in support of regional missions or agreements.

This is not to say Nigeria is saintly, as it has other ways to make its power felt. I would also say that Nigeria probably has better things to do with its military. Boko Haram and other such internal issues being more important than map-painting for Abuja.

Once again it's up to us gamers to accomplish what politicians would fear to try.

There's no "Nigeria" in the game but… you work with what you get.

Related Answer
Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?

Alex Potgieter, lives in South Africa Answered Mar 5, 2018 · Upvoted by Duke Ogolor, lives in Nigeria (1960-present)

I am a white South African who has been to Nigeria (As well as many other West African countries).

I also speak the Igbo Language which is the language of the Majority of Nigerians in South Africa. So I can communicate with them and get to know them on a deeper level than the general public perception they are constantly faced with.

I can imagine that immediately whoever is reading this is thinking that I must be a user due to the existing stereotype… that is not the case. (I speak many languages and enjoy learning about and participating in the cultures of the languages I speak).

The whole thing with regards to the way South Africans see Nigerians is a vicious cycle it seems.

Due to the fact that, yes, they dominate certain areas of blue collar crime in South Africa, South Africans are quick to judge them all. Certain crime "kingpins" might be completely heartless and do terrible things to people who cross them. We see these "beasts" and judge a whole nation.

When we condemn a whole nation and deny them employment, make them a suspect wherever they go, treat the good ones like criminals, confiscate legal business merchandise like clothes and shoes just because they have no legal recourse to get it back- they eventually have no option than to either starve in the street or to do crime.

The system is wrong. Our perception of a whole group is allowing the drug lords and the human traffickers to prosper, while the good ones are being destroyed before they can even prove their worth and their cababilities for good ends.

I only associate myself with good, upstanding, honest members of the Nigerian population and I would prefer to have them in my house than some of my fellow white South Africans. (Not one Nigerian has stolen from me whereas I cannot say the same for South Africans).

We need to ask ourselves, was my son, daughter, brother, sister, friend etc etc etc, given drugs by force? Did an evil drug dealer approach them and force them to use out of the blue? Or did the user go out looking for drugs?

If every Nigerian in South Africa was deported, another group would take over the drug trade. This is not a problem that stems from whoever sells… it is a problem that comes from the general population themselves. I have Nigerian acquaintances (not friends) who do sell… I have never been offered or intimidated into using any illegal substances.

We need to stop judging the entire population because of a few. Yes they are loud, yes they look intimidating sometimes, yes they like making money… but the majority are good, intelligent, educated, logical people with an interesting culture, great business acumen and a love of mutual respect.

If you disrespect or swindle them, whether they are good or bad, "fire go enter your side" but if you treat a good one with respect, they will respect you back AND they will be loyal friends for life "no wahala ooo!"

Related Links

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
What is weird in Nigeria but normal in the rest of the world?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Do failed states really exist?
Has Buhari failed Nigeria?
What do Italians think of Nigerians?
How does the world view Nigeria?
How many countries share a border with Nigeria?
Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
How do Niger and Nigeria differ?
Is there any hope for Nigeria?
Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?
Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?

Is Belgium a failed state?
Has religion failed Nigeria? If yes, why?

News Nigeria

"I am a Muslim, I won't change my name from Ahmed to Joshua but I have changed Lagos from N600m monthly IGR to N45b monthly today. Lagos is Africa'5th Economy today. This is not a bricklayer's job.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Sat

I will put an end to excuses in government and restore excuses with performance.

We, the founders of APC had a dinner with Mr President yesterday but before that dinner, I've had series of meetings and talks with the President.

I look at everyone competing with me, I don't see my match in terms of capacity, capability, experience. I will put an end to excuses in government and restore excuses with performance.

You can't govern a country with anger.

Power is not served Al- a - carte, you don't see power in the food menu any where, you have to struggle for it."

- Aṣíwájú Bọ́lá Ahmed Tinubu

Compared to other African cities, how livable is Lagos?

John Efekodo Design Engineer Updated 1y

Livable for whom?

There's Indians, and Lebanese rocking it here in Lagos. But they own large businesses, supermarkets, shopping malls, factories. So they tend to live in the developed part. Somewhere like here:

….which is located in the central part of Victoria Island of Lagos. Victoria Island was named after Queen Victoria of England when the British colonised Nigeria and felt it was cool. The area has been developed for over 60 years at least..

There are some Chinese in Lagos as well. I have seen some living secluded in outskirt area of Lagos. They don't take walks or anything. So you won't know they live there. Probably for security reasons. I have not seen Lebanese or Indians living in these same outskirt areas that the Chinese live in.

As for Europeans, they tend to live in the city centre as well. Same Victoria Island or Ikoyi which is beside it, also a colonial developed area. Europeans never come to the outskirts of the city.

Now for our neighbouring Africans, Togolese, Chadians, Ghanaians, since they're black like us, they just mix with the crowd and live where ever they like. But cheap accommodation always in the outskirts. They come to do menial jobs.

As for other kinds of black people, Americans, Australians, we do not see them. If they did come around, there's loads of accommodation for them in the city centre with the Indians and Lebanese at a high cost, chuffer driven/room service etc.

News Nigeria
Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Fri
The Super Eagles of Nigeria Head Coach, Christian Eguaveon said he resigned.

But the Nigeria Football Federation- NFF said he was sacked.

Related Answer

What can you tell me about Lagos, and why is it different from other cities in Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor, lives in Lagos, Nigeria Answered Feb 27, 2020 · Upvoted by Solomon Ghox , lives in Lagos, Nigeria (1990-present) and

MORONKEJI , lives in Lagos, Nigeria (1987-present)

The city that never sleeps.

Everyone is on to something; everyone is either chasing something or running from something.

Lagos; the centre of excellence.

A complete city:

One could see the super-rich, the rich, the average, the poor and the very poor in a single city.

Fun thing is, everyone knows their place.

You either live around here:

Or

Here:

Imaginary lines are drawn on everyone's minds, and as you land, you peacefully pick the side you would be comfortable to stay and pay bills.

Because what you can get for 100 Naira could be sold for 300 Naira in another part of the same city.

The city for the smart and smart alone.

Somebody is somewhere wanting to use your head every minute, you're forced to keep your guard every time not to fall mugu.

The land of opportunities, one could come here with nothing and go back rich if they know what they're doing.

Everything is for sale here, somebody somewhere is always looking for something to buy.

One could grow old in this city and not even realise it.

Time flies here like being in a relationship with a charming lady.

And when one thing makes you sad and mad another thing is just by the corner bribing you to let go and just smile.

Frustration could be seen in the faces of many but when you ask them to relocate they would tell you never.

The land that doesn't permit depression, the home of fun and laughter.

Traffic is the main challenge here, and as I stare out to the streets, gulping my beer, frustration was all I could see and think about these persons returning from work.

Listen and, listen good boy, when it comes to city life, mostly in Lagos, there are only two things involved; either you use people to get ahead or allow others to use you to go ahead of you. Uncle Mike.

Eko, Lag, Lagos, Lasgidi; the city of many faces.

This is Lagos, shine your eye!

Related Links

Is Lagos, Nigeria a safe place for expats to live in? Why?
What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?
Which is the safest city in Africa?
Where in Nigeria do you want to live?
Which city is the most beautiful and livable in Turkey?
What do black Africans think about black Americans, and vice versa?
I'm relocating to Nigeria how do I prepare to live in lagos?
What can you tell me about Lagos, and why is it different from other cities in Nigeria?
How do Africans feel about African Americans?
What are the best African cities to live in?

What is the secret behind Nigerians doggedness and massive progress in foreign countries?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated 1y

Photo by Adeboro Odunlami on Unsplash

Nigerians are unfortunately used to doing things the hard way.

Imagine what they stand to achieve in a working system where things are quite easily done?

Today, 29 per cent of Nigerian-Americans over the age of 25 hold a graduate degree, compared to 11 per cent of the overall U.S. population, according to the Migrations Policy Institute. Among Nigerian-American professionals, 45 per cent work in education services, the 2016 American Community Survey found, and many are professors at top universities. Nigerians are entering the medical field in the U.S. at an increased rate, leaving their home country to work in American hospitals, where they can earn more and work in better facilities. A growing number of Nigerian-Americans are becoming entrepreneurs and CEOs, building tech companies in the U.S. to help people back home.

(Source: The Most Successful Ethnic Group in the U.S. May Surprise You | OZY)

Let me share an experience with you:

As a kid, I would go to the farm with my lovely grandmother to plant yams and cassava.

I was quite good at it--not anymore.

We would be in the farm working -- early in the morning until evening.

My job was to till the soil with a hoe, my grandmother only prepared the ground for me and supplied the pieces of yam or the short cassava stems.

We would do this in the dry season and harvest in the raining season.

It was at the southern part of Nigeria, it floods in the raining season, so you must plant early to harvest when the water comes.

We were farmers but we were always at the verge of going hungry and did go hungry sometimes.

If we miss any planting season, hunger is all that awaited us.

And if natural occurrences like flood and drought came into play, hunger was inevitable whether we plant or not.

There was no modern technology in play; no mechanization nor pest control.

We had to out-manoeuvre nature, bad government and our own stupidity to stay alive.

Good storage facilities didn't cut through our minds and even that of the government.

There were no tarred roads linking farmers to big markets to sell their produce.

Sometimes one had to eat and eat fast so the farm produce doesn't go bad.

We did our best, our best was never enough.

We put in all our efforts but got the slimmest of results.

This could be translated to most areas in Nigeria, we get things done the hard way: Doctor's performing procedures using makeshift technologies is normal, how about the Engineers and other local professionals?

It's a disgrace that things are the exact way they were eighteen years back when I was still a kid.

What is the secret behind Nigerians doggedness and massive progress in foreign countries?

Well, I won't be surprised if this claim is true.

When a person is used to doing things the hard way, facing unnecessary drawbacks and fighting them off for survival, what do you think such a person would do in a working system where things are quite easily done?

Great exploits are all that awaits Nigerians in a working system because we are trained to survive in a none working system.

Give a Nigerian a place to stand in your business:

There is a high chance you will smile to the bank as they take your business to the sky.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria doing so poorly as a nation even though Nigerian immigrants excel when they live in other countries?

What do Nigerians feel when they see other Nigerians overseas?
What are the most hated countries in your country?
Why don't Nigerians fix Nigeria instead of flocking to other countries?

Nigeria is the country that has the capacity to make every African proud but the situation is not what we see. What is wrong with the Nigerian people and the government?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?
Why are foreign women all over Nigerian men these days?
Which countries are Nigerian workers most appreciated, and for what reason?
Why are Nigerians not respected in a foreign country?
Are Nigerians smart?

Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
How do you feel about Nigerians living in your country?

How are Nigerians proud of their country knowing full well they live in an extremely heterogeneous country with so many different ethnicities and have only been a country since 1962?

Why is there a low Trust Culture amongst Nigerians both home and abroad?
Why are we (Nigerians) always angry for no reason in this country?

Wake Up Africa!
Does anyone regret leaving Nigeria to settle in another country?

Answered by Answered by

Ian Rutto Rutto

It would be vague to say a yes or no. First, you ought to know the driving factors that have pushed many Nigerians away from their motherland. These factors range from political, economic and social aspects. The North parts of the country have been plagued by terrorist attacks by the boko haram, an affiliate of the Isis. Their mission is to put Nigeria under Sharia law and rejection of western education and culture. Thousands of innocent people and members of the Nigerian forces have lost their lives under the ruthless shadow of the militants. This in effect has resulted into mass exodus of Northerners into Europe through a treacherous journey across the Sahara into Libya and Morocco by unscrupulous human traffickers. Some end up being slaves in North Africa and it is safe to say that they would regret their actions. However, many of the escapees have made it into Europe a safe haven where they are provided with basic amenities by the help of NGOs and bodies such as medecins San frontiers. Here, most have incorporated into European societies, workforce and other areas and we could say that in their new situation they would be very relieved and grateful. Other factors are skyrocketing unemployment and thus they find it hard to survive and opt for better economic opportunities. Socially it could be due to the hunt of human sacrifices since kidnapping people and killing of hostages has become rampant. This is done in order for clients to gain financial prosperity through human body parts. Of those who have emigrated to other countries mostly in Europe due to such vices, are happy and content in their new environments because they no longer have to live in fear.

Related Answer
Do you regret being born in Nigeria?

Uche Metuh Wonder (Nigerian) Woman 3y Let's look at 2 scenarios.

1. I regret being born in Nigeria; I'd rather not be born at all.
Well, too bad. You're born in Nigeria. Suck it up & make the "best" out of it.

2. I regret being born in Nigeria; I'd rather be born anywhere but in Nigeria.

This scenario assumes that if 1 isn't born in Nigeria, they'd be born in the lap of luxury to some Saudi Prince or some Silicon Valley startup Inventor.

Haha!

We forget that if we jump out from that bowl (Nigeria) with the hopes of landing into another bowl (country), our options are limitless. We could:

- Land on the ground & (be crushed) die.
- Land in the other bowl & be bullied, neglected, eaten alive, etc.
- Have a really incredible & cushy life.

We just don't know with certainty what the outcomes might be because we don't control them.

No matter how bad Nigeria is, there are many countries worse than Nigeria. All citizens of each country is fighting 1 battle or the other in their countries.

The best part of it all is that we're all equipped to deal with our battles based on our geographical locations.

If an American is sent to Nigeria or a Nigerian sent to the US, they'd both struggle greatly to adjust. Believe me, I struggled to adjust to my Canadian life. I'm still struggling till date.

I have many Canadian friends & in my humblest opinion, 90% of them didn't have the upbringing I had. There are numerous blessings I count in my life as a Nigerian: I never worried about a roof over my head, clothing, food, scholarships or any form of financial grants, debts, filing for bankruptcy nor relied on government handouts or community aid like some of my North American friends did.

Yes! I'm 1 of the few Nigerians who had a better life than some Westerners. So, why would I want to be them?

The headstart many of our western counterparts had in life are still things I can learn.

1 thing I can't learn is being Nigerian. You'd have to live it to have it. Imperfect as it might be, I'm glad I was born in Nigeria.

Nigerians don't need to leave the country to have better lives. All we need is to open our minds to be able to tweak a few things & our kids will be proud of our country, Nigeria.

I'd be more fearful of choosing any unknown future over my own reality. Call me a chicken or whatever, but I'd rather keep my Nigerian reality than be born a lab rat in a German laboratory :). Oh! The possibilities are definitely endless!!

Related Answer
Why do Nigerians living abroad move back to Nigeria?

Abayomi Odubanjo

Former Duty Officer (2010–2011) 1y

There's actually no place like home.

The above proverb simply sums up any answer that you must have read but no answers on Quora is a waste. But to add to more answers and explain the above adage to you, there comes a time in a man's life that has spent most of his youthful and approaching early old ages whether living abroad or even in the same country but let me use Nigeria for example because I live here and have known the behavioural patterns of my people.

At a point in life your roots just calling you to return to it so you see men in the their late 50s to early 60s wanting to go back and join the kinsmen in the villages for those living in Nigeria although we have some Nigerians that have refused to come back home due to so many reasons as concerns the economy which we have been facing for quite some years and other factors which could be of family or otherwise.

Some living abroad after working and having made a good relationship and connection of friends want to come back to invest or start up something which they do in the cities should it be an administrative nature or any other type of vocation and some to the country side for farms and industries. There are so many factors influencing the decision to come back or stay.

Even the animals in the zoo long for the day to return back to the jungle how much a human being who has left all to sojourn in a foreign or strange land with all the achievement and success to back home to show off and make his arrival known.

Related Answer

What advice would you give to someone who is moving to Calabar, Nigeria?

Kelvin Eteng BSc. in Genetics and Biotechnology, University of Calabar (Graduated 2012)
4y

Calabar is the capital of Cross River State. One of the most beautiful places in the country. Clean, green and full of very hospitable people. So whether you're coming for business or pleasure, or you are simply relocating, you're bound to have a good stay. The following are some of the things you should know while you're there.

Watch your personal belongings: This might sound strange for a relatively peaceful place, but then, there's no place without pick pockets and petty thieves. Don't say I did not warn you.

Bring lots of cash: The city never sleeps, especially on weekends. So there's always entertainment round the corner and it doesn't come cheap. Transportation and Hotels are relatively cheap on the other hand.

There are lots of fun things to experience especially this yuletide season. Lots of shows, featuring both local and international artistes, beginning from the very first day, to the very last day of December.

Avoid the part known as “Calabar South” by all means, this is our equivalent of the WILD WILD WEST. Please do not go there after 6pm, and if you must, then get some sort of security.

Visit the Museum, Mary Slessor’s home, the Christmas village and Spar.

Don't go away without witnessing the Carnival Calabar, Africa's biggest Street party.

Lastly, don't forget to try Afang soup, Edikan-ikong, Ekpang and Afia efere (white soup) while you're there! You will be wowed by the beautiful scenery and loving people. Welcome and do have a fun stay.

Related Links

Is it possible to move your car into another country that is surrounded by water, for example, Japan?

What are the characteristics of sub-Saharan Africa?

What could have become of the African nation if they were not colonized? Would they have been timid or more civilized? Civilized?

What is mythology? What country has the best mythology?

So most countries (mostly western) are declaring pandemic over, they now see covid as a normal flu, but isn't it dangerius? I think it's too early to declare covid over, will this cause covid to come back with deadly variants? Or this is over?

When you hear about the USA, what comes to your mind?
Does Africa have the greatest gemstones?
Has socialism failed in Africa?

Is Africa in danger that—in the next few decades—her most dynamic bright young people will abandon the continent and immigrate to Europe?

Initial moderators of this page claimed (rejecting an answer from me) that Africa currently has few or no dictatorships or famines. Are they correct?

Russia & India have been leading to have their own payment systems using their currencies in the world, set a model for many countries to follow. The world payment systems and hard currencies are to be fragmented. Why is it good for the world?

With the discovery of the Denisovans, does it mean not everyone is from Africa in anthropology?

In what ways can African leaders take advantage of the Russia/Ukraine way?

What measures should developing nations take to control the crisis that comes with climate change?

Is the world in support of Biafra?

Related Answer

Why is Nigeria being referred to as “The largest economy in Africa” and “The giant of Africa” when there are many African countries that are more developed?

Martin Dièdre Lives in Lyon, France (2020–present) 4y

Nigeria is the largest economy of Africa as well as the most populated country on the continent (185 millions inhabitants). But it doesn't mean it's necessarily a very prosperous or developed, it just means that a tiny income multiplied over a huge population allow Nigeria to have the biggest African economy, bigger than the economies of Norway, Austria, UAE, Denmark or Singapore, that experience huge GDP/capita. Egypt, South Africa, Botswana, Namibia, Seychelles or Mauritius are much more developed than Nigeria but with a smaller population.

Related Links

Does Nigeria have the capacity to be the largest economy in Africa without oil?

Why has Nigeria not yet emerged as the giant of Africa?
Can Nigeria be developed like South Africa?

Nigeria has the largest economy of Africa. What are the reasons it cannot compete globally?

How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Can Nigeria remain the giant of Africa forever?

What makes Nigeria Africa's largest economy? What are they doing that no one else is doing?

Why is Nigeria the biggest economy in Africa?

With Nigeria having the best economy in Africa, why isn't it even close to being as good as some of Europe's worst Nations?

Does Nigeria deserve its "largest economy in Africa" title?
What type of economy is Nigeria practicing?
Why did Europe develop more quickly than Africa?
Why are Nigerians poor despite Nigeria being the giant of Africa?

Why is Nigeria being referred to as the giant of Africa despite its terrible state?

Is South Africa the most developed country in Africa?

How are foreigners treated in Nigeria?

Kamshinen Maxwell Scriptwriter and Filmmaker (2014–present) 2y

On God’s earth, there is evidently no place to be a foreigner like Nigeria. You will be treated like a god, literally. Now, we are a well educated people. We know what you know, and if we had a working system, believe me, Nigeria will be an independent state, truly independent and a threat to Western nations.

So you are a foreigner right? Welcome to Nigeria. You land in our Airport. It’s new. Let’s say you are coming from Europe, Asia or America. “Wow, is that an escalator?”, you thought. All this while, you believed Nigerians lived on trees.

Everyone is smiling at you. Eyes stuck on you. You are curious, you do not understand. Your Uber is waiting. On the roads, wow, you see the beautiful country, it’s busy streets, street hawkers. If you are white, I assure you, someone will call you “Oyinbo” before you lay your head to bed. The Police will smile and wave at you. The traffic warder will wave at you and smile. The Soldiers at the checkpoint will not bother searching your cab. We already trust you. We will open doors and walk through it first for you. We will make sure your feet doesn’t strike a stone. You don’t understand what is going on. Then soon, you’d meet with a Nigerian lady.

She is too pretty. You can’t take your eyes off of her. She treats you like a King that you are. You finally realize what stereotypes have made you miss almost all your life. And in a few years…

BOOM!!! You'll be a full flesh Nigerian. You'll love us because we loved you first.

I really don't know what it is about foreigners that excite Nigerians, but I do know that we treat y'all like babies. We just love everyone!!!

We are the most exposed and traveled people in Africa but still, here we are…. COME TO NIGERIA!!!

Pic 1: Murtala Muhammed International Airport - Lagos Airport - Nigeria

Pic 2: My Gallery ❤

Pic 3: White Man Gives Reasons Why He Married His Nigerian Wife... | OMOJUWA.COM

Related Links

What is it like to work in Nigeria as a foreigner?
How are women treated in Nigeria?
Why do so many foreigners go to Nigeria and think Nigeria is good?
Can foreigners buy property in Nigeria?
How do foreigners feel about Nigerians when they're around them?
What are some truths about living in South Korea (as a foreigner)?
What are the culture shocks for foreigners in Nigeria?
How is life in Seoul, South Korea for foreigners?
As a foreigner what culture shock did you experience in Nigeria?

What site do foreigners who work or live in Nigeria use? I would like to meet a foreigner here in Nigeria.

How is life in Nigeria?
What do foreigners think of Nigeria and its people?

Most foreigners are not interested in Nigerians due to most Nigerians bad act. How do I let them know I'm having a pure heart (and also some out there too)?

Why are foreigners afraid of visiting Nigeria?
What are the cheapest Korean cities to live in?

How is Abuja City of Nigeria?

Obinwanne Ezeife Lives in Abuja, Nigeria 4y

If you are planning to move to Abuja permanently or maybe for a few years, here's a few things you need to know about the city.

It is a relatively new city and it was planned to be the Nation's capital from inception so it is well-organised and has good security compared to other Nigerian cities.

It is home to all of Nigeria's top politicians who are notorious for corruption and stupendous wealth. There is a ton of money amongst a very small circle of people and this has made property REALLY expensive. A decent 5-bedroom duplex in Asokoro/Maitama will set you back a million dollars (>N300m). A fully serviced two-bedroom apartment rental in Wuse is about eight–ten thousand dollars annually (>N2M) including utilities such as a stand-by generator to supplement the erratic power supply.

As a result, most of Abuja residents actually live in satellite towns and settlements. I would say 60%. So in the evenings, the roads are so empty and quiet. Its a serene environment if you like that kind of thing.

Most businesses are tailored for the rich (see #2). So most restaurants, hotels, bars and salons are tres expensive. Unless, you parley with a local and have him/her show you more affordable options. Speaking of hotels, we have a Hilton and a Sheraton; old but reliable. Also there's a fair selection of restaurants, so you can find Chinese, Italian, Indian, American and Ethiopian food at least that I know of.

School fees at a choice private school (elementary-high school//primary-secondary school) is between $3,000-$6,000 annually (i.e. >N300k a term) Unless you parley with a local and find cheaper options.
Transportation is affordable. An uber anywhere within town will hardly cost up to $4 (N1,500)

Health care is fair. While there are good government hospitals, you'd probably feel safer at the much better equipped and staffed private hospitals. No need to guess, they are expensive.

There is an abundance of religious presence. Churches preaching prosperity at every corner and the great Central Mosque in the centre of the city.

The night life is fun if you know what you're doing but it can easily get monotonous. Abuja people eat at expensive restaurants and then go to the club. That's it. Eat food. Pop Champagne. Repeat. Not many concerts. No music festivals. No comedy clubs. No broadway. There are a few funky live bands though… (shout out to Blake Excellent Resort)

Other fun activities are; seeing a movie at the Jabi Lake Mall or Silverbird galleria, visiting the amusement park, bowling, a few clubs do karaoke, hitting the gym at bodyline, golfing at IBB golf course, playing polo/horse-riding at the Guard's brigade ranch, visiting the Yar'adua centre or visiting gurara falls and a new boat club just opened at the Jabi Lake.

Abuja has a really big expat community because of all the NGOs and global partners with their head offices here.

It is important to note that most of the people in Abuja are not rich and you can actually lead a pretty modest and affordable life but this will involve you living outside of the city centre. This not only increases your commute by a whole lot(you'll have to scratch #6) but the farther you are from the city centre, the less safe your neighbourhood is. And you can wave your night life good-bye.

Otherwise, I love this city and I would endorse it to all who dare conquer the 'Buj.

Related Links

How lucrative is Uber business in Abuja?
What advice would you give to someone who is moving to Abuja, Nigeria?
What is it like to live in Abuja, Nigeria?

What are the best aspects of living in Abuja, Nigeria as a young adult?
Is it better to live in Lagos or Abuja?
Is living in Abuja, Nigeria more comfortable than living in Lagos?
What are the good and bad neighborhoods of Abuja, Nigeria?
Which is safer to visit, Abuja or Lagos?
What is the best business to do in Abuja?
Is Abuja a good place to live?
Where can I find a nice tennis club in Abuja?
What are the best activities to do with children when visiting Abuja, Nigeria?

Where's an affordable place to live in Abuja with the basics of security, average power supply, etc.?

Do you really live in Abuja?
Where is the best place to work in Abuja?

As an Igbo, do you long for Biafra?

Obinna Ezugwu Lives in Nigeria 2y

The answer is both Yes and No. Yes because Nigeria is not working and is in fact, more of a time bomb now. You need to understand that Nigeria is a country formed not on the terms of its people, or because the people came together to agree to be one country, but for the administrative convenience of the British colonial government. It hasn't managed to evolve into a nation ever since, most likely never will. And as it stands, the divergent and irreconcilable worldviews of the peoples who make of the country seem poised to set it aflame. Yet, every attempt to readjust it into a country or a nation as it were, has been resisted by vested interests. It's basically a country held together by oil and nothing much more.

No, on the other hand because I don't think Biafra will solve all the problems. I have been an advocate for restructuring, a middle ground of sorts. This is because I believe that the only way the country can survive is by loosening the suffocating unitary system being practiced at the moment. Each region should have a measure of autonomy, control its resources and pay tax to the central government. I have observed that while nations tend to compete with one another, in Nigeria, the competition is in terms of ethnic group A versus ethnic group B, and Christianity versus Islam. And usually, the ultimate objective of some, especially those who manage to hold on to power is to try to hold others down as if that's the way to achieve their own progress. It's a suffocating and frustrating scenario. Excellence is sacrificed on the alter of mediocrity, people are not promoted in the public sphere on the basis of what they know, but who they know or where they come from.

Having said that, I have often read with utter amazement people who try to malign and paint those advocating for Biafra as evil, or fraudsters. This is most unfortunate and is often informed on mere hate. The truth is that Biafra advocates are simply those fed up with the Nigerian system, and most importantly, the marginalisation of the Igbo, real or perceived. It is therefore uncharitable to say they are fraudulent.

It's ridiculous that while most people will agree that Nigeria is not working, they will in another breath begin to cast aspersions on those who say they want out because the country is not working for them, which is basically what Biafra is about. Here is probably the only place in the world where people call white black and black white because they can't bear to admit the truth.

Another unfortunate falsehood is the idea that the Igbo want Biafra so that they will dominate other groups that fall within the area that once constituted Biafra. This is another mischievous attempt to paint the Igbo in bad light. While some of those who advocate for Biafra have continued to draw their map to include the former Eastern Region, some of us continue to insist that should there be Biafra, it ought to be an exclusively Igbo affair. And in any case, those who often make the hate informed argument about the Igbo wanting to annex other groups, ignore the fact that there are also people in those groups who are asking for Biafra. And at the same time, they ignore the fact that even the Biafra advocates who draw this wide map have often insisted that everyone reserved the right to opt in or opt out.

In the final analysis, my point is that while all us may not agree that Biafra is the solution, it is hypocrisy to pretend not to understand the point those who argue for Biafra are making. You read all manner of hate comments about the Igbo and people who call for Biafra and you wonder where such is coming from.

To summarise, if you ask me to choose between Biafra and the status quo in Nigeria, I would not hesitate to choose the former. Because Nigeria as it is poses serious threat to my very existence and the continued survival of my people and their way of life. But of course, I sincerely believe that restructuring, or what we have come to know as true federalism will be best for everyone. It will give everyone space to exist in their own environment and reduce the raw hate we encounter daily in social discourse. And of course, put in check what appears to be an agenda by some to overrun and dominate others.

Related Answer
As an Igbo, do you long for Biafra?

Chibuihe John , knows Igbo Updated Dec 3, 2019

At the present state of the struggle, I really don't. But, if either of Port Harcourt or Calabar or both willingly join the Biafra agitation, I will support it to the fullest. These two cities are coastal and will therefore make Biafra not to be landlocked. Majority of Calabar and Port Harcourt indigenes do not support the Biafra struggle willingly; so, I am presently having missed feeling about it. This is simply because a landlocked Biafra contained within an uncooperative hostile Nigeria without direct access to the ocean will suffer more than our present Nigeria suffering.

As Igbos, we do well in commerce and manufacturing and so need that unrestricted access to the world market for our growth and business development. All the core Igbo states in Nigeria are landlocked. A landlocked Biafra within a hostile Nigeria geographical space will definitely be worse. Nigeria will definitely frustrate the efforts of Biafra to connect and move goods through her sea ports to the world. So, staying in Nigeria will be a better option.

This doesn't mean that I like how Nigeria is being managed. Nigeria is a failed state led by the most incompetent set of people I have seen in life. There is nothing happening now in Nigeria that gives any analytical mind hope that a positive change is going to come in the nearest future.

I trust the ingenuity of the Igbos to build something from nothing when given the opportunity and a level playing ground which is not obtainable in Nigeria presently. This has been fueling the agitation for Biafra. We have the lowest poverty rate in Nigeria. Every Igbo account holder was given just 20 pounds after the Nigeria Biafra civil war no matter the amount of money they had in their bank accounts before the war. This didn't stop the Igbos from turning the 20 pounds to multi million naira businesses that have made Igbos to be the region with the lowest poverty rate in Nigeria. Nigeria poor economic performance post Biafra war is linked to political marginalisation of the Igbos. Igbos are individualistic, better leaders and business managers than the other ethnic groups. We will definitely be better of as Biafrans if we have direct unrestricted access to the world market through the ocean for our commerce and manufacturing industries development.

Olaniyan Toni

, IT pro (2018-present) Updated Aug 8, 2019
This was initially a reply to an answer but I decided to post it as an answer of its own for obvious reasons.

Here is my take,

The amalgamation of 1914 was meant to be a blessing not a course, blaming the Britons for the challenges facing the nation 100 years after the amalgamation is ridiculous.

Africa at large and Nigeria in particular must first get rid of victim mentality before it can begin to experience any serious development.

Nigeria today has two major challenges mainly security and corruption. This has nothing to do with the amalgamation of 1914.

Disintegration is an illusion that always presents itself as a solution, truth is it has never been and will never be. Get Biafra today and it's a matter of time before one of the newly created states start talking of marginalization again. It's a circle that would never end. If you have been following elections across the country you will understand this last point.

People outside Africa can't tell the difference between one Africans from the other let alone differentiating between Hausa Igbo or Yoruba. We have too much in common than tribalism will make us believe.

As a new generation, we should all see things differently. Say no to tribalism! and no to isolationism!

God bless Nigeria! God bless Africa! and God bless the entire world!

Remember, there's only one race, human race.

Here's is my other other answer to some challenges facing Nigeria Olaniyan Toni's answer to Which propaganda effort was so successful in Nigeria that people still believe it today?

Related Answer

Why don't Yorubas also want independence like Igbos in Nigeria?

Anonymous Answered Apr 23, 2020

Map of Yoruba land

The Yorubas have all it takes to be a nation but the people feel reluctant because of some reasons:

Since the northerners (who are with most political power) needs Yorubas to conquer the south politically, the people feel like they are among the winning team against the Igbos who are their prominent competitor.

The people are generally unorganized. In any case of secession, there may be tension between the Christian and Muslim population.

Some Yorubas just don't want to follow any idea from the Igbos. Since the Igbos are the ones clamoring for secession for a long time , they see it as Igbos thing and something they should avoid.

Nobody is ready to fight for it. Yorubas sees secession as what is not worth fighting for unlike Igbos who are ready to risk everything for it.

Oil revenue share from Nigeria. This play a very little role here.

Related Links

What makes up BIAFRA? Can Biafra become a separate entity from Nigeria?
How can we unite the Igbos & Yorubas in Nigeria?

As a Nigerian, what is your honest opinion about the Hausa-Fulani, Igbo and Yoruba people of Nigeria?

Why do most Igbos passionately dislike Buhari?
What do Igbo people think of Republic of Biafra?
How do other non-Igbo Nigerians feel about Igbos?
Are the Igbo people truly marginalised in Nigeria?
Where did the Igbo people of Nigeria come from?
Are the Igbos of Nigeria Bantu?
Are the Igbo people related to the Jews?
If power was handed to an Igbo man, will Nigeria be developed?
How many states in Nigeria have an Igbo tribe?
Are Igbos in Nigeria mixed race?
Why do people still want Biafra?

Is there any tribe or ethnic group in Nigeria called Delta Igbo? If yes, what's their history or origin? If no, why do certain people call themselves Delta Igbo?

News Nigeria
Nigerian artist, Onuoha Columbus, paints popular movie star, Morgan Freeman, wearing him the traditional Isi Agu and cap from the Igbo Tribe.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Mar 8

The American actor's new name should be Maazi Morgan Freeman Nwafor Mbaise

What do you love about Nigerians?

Ke'Aun
Knows random history thingsFeb 12

One thing that impresses me about Nigerians is their willingness to move around the world in search of opportunities.

The Nigeiran diaspora is massive and everywhere. No one knows how large it is exactly, but this map certainly understates it. Wikipedia tells me that there are hundreds of thousands of Nigerians in Malaysia alone.

I know that many Nigerians are abroad because there's not enough opportunities for all of them at home, which is unfortunate. But, I respect their willingness to travel across Africa and the seven seas to build a better life.

Originally Answered: What do you like about Nigerians?

Abigail Abby Abok, I live in a heterogeneous Nigerian city Answered Nov 4, 2017

With our myriad of issues, there's so many things to like about Nigerians and I'm not saying this because I'm a Nigerian. Here are few out of the many things I like about Nigerians

Their Resilience; Nigerians are some of the most resilient people on earth. The average Nigerians suffers daily but never resigns.

Nigerians are hard worker and that's why they excel anywhere in the world where the system rewards hard work.

Their Creativity; Nigerians are highly creative. I mean creativity is in our blood. Have you heard our folklore? Have you listened to our comedians? Seen our dances?

Their meals; Nigerians cook the tastiest mouth watering meals. From simple breakfast like Akara and pap to lunches like ofada rice with palm oil stew to our world famous jollof rice and hudreds of other dishes, Nigerians do know how to cook sumptuous meals.

Nigerians know how to have a good time. Ever attended a Nigerian wedding or any Nigerian occasion? No? Please try to then you'd get what I mean.

Related Answer
What good things can you say about Nigeria?

Monica Samec lives in Nigeria, US, UK Updated Feb 22, 2017 · Upvoted by Chudi Makam , lives in Nigeria (2011-present) and Emeka Ugochukwu , lives in Nigeria (1994-present)

As a North American who has spent over a decade in Nigeria, I realized I should state this publicly more often because I think it most every day: Nigeria is fking amazing. Nowhere else can one test the boundaries of what is possible better than in this country.

What would be considered national emergencies elsewhere barely register in Nigeria. The so-called rules of the financial markets are ignored, twisted and shattered here but people continue on with grace and joy. Electricity goes off randomly multiple times a day yet people's energy is constantly high. Imagine what your life would be like without electricity for one week, and know most Nigerians have been without it for weeks at a time since they were born. Terrorist attacks on the scale of 9/11 have happened every year for the past 7 years. Still this remains a nation where people will smile, engage and offer assistance more often than not. If any peoples are ready to survive the end times, it is those who were raised in Nigeria.

Every large city has traffic, but in many Nigerian cities a hold-up transitions into a shopping mall. Delicious popcorn, questionable mousetraps, Suzanne Summers thighmasters, real puppies... Where else can you be cursing under your breath in a traffic jam and a random stranger brings you a PUPPY?

Sick of reading long rants about how persecuted your great-uncle is or what a terrible restaurant some random acquaintance went to? Strangely in a country where people have every reason to complain, there is very little of it, especially wrt trivial matters. Why? My theory is most Nigerians generally do not have time for such nonsense, and complainers are not entertained even by their own mothers. Most Nigerians I have met learn early to put up or shut up. Do you have any idea how refreshing this is coming from a culture where cynicism is treated somewhere between an aspiring profession and a god given right?

To be honest, sometimes I think that Nigeria is this fantastic secret carefully guarded by Niger Delta militants, Boko Haram terrorists and internet scammers. But I also realize this would ignore the massive endemic issues that make life a magnitude harder for most people here. I realize that as a relativity rich white person, I get treated better and have a different experience than many. I realize this experience is not everybody's cup of tea. But for those who can see past the problems to the opportunities, there is not really a better place to be than Nigeria.

Related Links

What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?
Are Nigerians smart?
Are Nigerians racist?
What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?
Is it true that South African females love Nigerian males?
What do other nations think of Nigerians?
Why don't Nigerians fix Nigeria instead of flocking to other countries?
Do Nigerians dislike whites?
Why are Nigerians so religious?
What do you think of Nigerians?
When Nigerian men say that they love you, do they mean it?
Are any Nigerians white?
As a non-Nigerian, what confuses you about Nigerians?
Why are Nigerians hated so much around the world?
What is the popular impression about Nigerians?

Why is Nigeria still a third world country?

Victor Dirikebamor

Storyteller Updated 2y

The phrase 'third world' is now considered offensive!
The very things that cause people to refer to a country as developed are either under development or not present in Nigeria at all.

The standard criteria for evaluating a country's level of development are income per capita or per capita gross domestic product, the level of industrialization, the general standard of living, and the amount of technological infrastructure.

Nigeria is, unfortunately, the poverty capital of the world at present, on a normal day, I could describe poverty to you without mistake because we see each other on the streets while going about our businesses, which indicates we have a low standard of living.

Nigeria is still not very suitable for business because of money wanting to change hands illegally. Where is 'Virgin Atlantic Airways'? And the mega-companies that came to to do business in Nigeria? 'Pack and go'. They have all left and still leaving. Either they have to deal with the government, police, hungry youths, power supply etc.

Laws don't hold water for the poor, the leaders make those laws for the poor and force them and only them to obey by fire or force.

Electricity is still a luxury here. If you have 'power supply' for twelve hours in a day you're in luck, there are places that manage only about forty-eight hours of power supply in a week, see Bayelsa or Delta state, in fact, come to the south-south.

If you visit our public hospitals in most places you would do anything not to get sick again.

We don't joke with the phrase 'safe journey' because the road you're travelling in is a death trap, it calls for thanksgiving and a little celebration when you arrive at your destination safely.

Our public schools are broken and little to nothing is done to revamp them. Youths mostly attend colleges to acquire a certificate so we don't appear as an unambitious son or a housewife.

The list is endless.

Roger? Rugged you… carry on.

Unless we solve each and every one of the challenges holding us back from living a meaningful life, a life with pride and dignity, Nigeria would be nowhere near developed just yet.

The painful part is, there are no actions on the ground to right our wrongs and, even if they are, the process is so slow that only the well-aged could see them materialise.

Related Answer: Adedayo Matthew, Avid follower of international affairs & diplomacy Answered Jan 10, 2018

Originally Answered: Is Nigeria a 3rd world county?

The very concept of categorizing countries as either first, second or third came as a result of the cold war.

First world countries, were those allied with the United States. Second world countries were those allied with the Soviet Union. Third world countries were those who allied with neither East or West as members of the 'Non-Allied Movement'. Nigeria was a member of this body.

However, fast forward to the end of the cold war. The United Nations in a bid to correctly classify countries requiring special assistance to attain the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) started using the phrase 'third world countries' to connote a group of least developed or underdeveloped countries - of which Nigeria is unfortunately a member.

However this is fast becoming irrelevant as it no longer reflects political or economic reality.

So in a direct answer to the OP's question - Yes, Nigeria is presently a third world country. But based on our current economic trajectory we should ascend to the status of a second world country in the not too distant future.

Third World - Wikipedia

Related Links

Why is Africa a third world country?

How can we end corruption in third world countries especially Nigeria? Is it even possible?

Why do third world countries mostly belong to Africa?
Why is Nigeria a poor country?
What makes a 3rd world country?
How can third world countries like Nigeria rise to the level of the UK or the USA?

Is Nigeria a first world country?
What factors make Ethiopia a Third World country?
Can we call Nigeria a third world country?
Is Nigeria the poorest country all over Africa?

Is Nigeria a peaceful country?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated 2y

Well, it all depends on what one call 'peace' this days.

I encourage people to have a direct experience without the digital filter of their smartphone, friends or anyone else.

Get lost in nature, and you'll be forced to come face to face with new ideas.

Here is my take on security in Nigeria:

There are thirty-six states here and the seat of government at Abuja, the safest city in the country.

In these number, for the past few years there has been cases of terrorism in three states. These are the places I've heard of a bomb blast and suicide killings ever since I was born, perhaps I'm quite wrong.

Other than these three states in the North East of the country, of which the Nigerian military is said to have neutralised, I feel pretty safe in the rest of the country.

What I fear in a few major cities, mostly in the southern part of the country is petty theft, cult clashes, and kidnapping.

I don't worry myself over kidnapping at all, it would be a waste of time for the perpetrators unless if they've got other use for me other than money.

Cult clashes are mostly amongst cult members (gangs), I try not to be around those places or walk away quickly when it does happen. And they usually happen in places men hang around in the middle of the night.

So, stay clear from Bars with little or no security presence.

I've falling victim of petty theft three times, my expensive phones where taken from me every single time but they never touched me despite there guns and crowd. I'm a mediator and I cooperate pretty fine.

I know very well not to flunt my wealth in some poor neighborhoods but I have no problem with that in rich neighborhoods.

Mark Zuckerberg strolling in the streets of Lagos.

I think these cases are not peculiar to Nigeria alone.

One should know; how, where and when to flunt there wealth and to be conscious about security.

When you come into a new city don't go out in the night and if you must do ask the locals.

Eat Nigeria food, dress like them, speak the Nigerian broken English and the fine boys wouldn't bother kidnapping you, they might think you're as poor an broken like they are.

That being said:Nigeria has several peaceful states and cities, no dire harm will come to you in such places. And you could survive in the few dangerous cities or neighborhoods too if you can blend in.

Having lived in Lagos for over 20 years, what can you say about Lagos?

Debo Kayode Ogunranti Lives in Lagos, Nigeria 3y

Having lived in Lagos for over 20 years, what can you say about Lagos?

Lagos is a good but opinionated wife, you live by her rules to enjoy her.

Lagos the Lag city (aka Lasgidi or Gidi for short) is the city of "brains" and "gentle" hearts. In Lagos, everybody learns faster why because Lagos is a "fast" city and there is nothing like a "first Lagos experience". Although Abuja is the capital of Nigeria, Lagos state (the city of lakes) is the most populous state in Nigeria and also the most populous city in all of Africa. Not just that, Lagos is also among the top 7 fastest growing cities in the world today.

Lagos state has a population of over 16million people and a total land area of about 999.6km.km with the population density around 8000 per squared kilometers making Lagos one of the most densely populated cities in all of Africa. Lagos state used to be the capital of Nigeria from 1914 to 1991 after which the capital was moved to Abuja.

About 60 years ago, less than 300,000 people lived in Lagos and everyone used to say Lagos was gorgeous but today more than 15 million people live (mostly in slums) on the same piece of land putting much pressure on the available natural resources.

In other words, Lagos is a mega city full of slums with the majority living in extreme poverty and hunger. About 2 out of every 3 people living in Lagos today live in slums. Lagos (without the slums) is the "New York City" of Nigeria where most Nigerians from small towns and villages across the country go to chase their dreams. Meanwhile, about 30% of all road accidents in Nigeria occur in Lagos because of the dangerous traffic of humans and vehicles.

Despite the extreme poverty and hunger in some places, Lagos the city of lakes remains the heart and soul of Nigeria and Africa as a whole. There are people from every country in Africa, every ethnic and racial group living in Lagos today. Because of the "fast" life in Lagos, only the strongest and the smartest survive in the city of Lakes and if you can survive in Lagos, there is no place on earth you cannot survive. Despite having a reputation as the most corrupt and perhaps the most "unfriendly" city in all of Africa, most Lagosians are very welcoming and hospitable people especially to "friendly" strangers and they tend to be protective of such strangers. Hospitality is not just part of Lagos but the entire country of Nigeria. Several Nigerians despite the harsh living conditions in some places are very hospitable people.

What can you do in Lagos as a tourist? Well, nothing beats a "first Lagos experience" and you can learn about life in Nigeria and Africa as a whole faster in Lagos than anywhere else in Africa.

The Tourist attractions in Lagos city include the sacred Oba's Palace which is the administrative and spiritual corner stone of the Benin Kingdom. The Oba's vast Palace has stood in the same place for over 700 years and you can learn more about the culture, traditions and a lot more about West Africa just by visiting the Oba's Palace. The National museum of Nigeria is also located in Lagos city. Here you can learn more about Nigerian arts including sculptures, paintings, archeological findings, etc. The Shrine of the great Fela Kuti (the greatest Nigerian multi-instrumentalist musician, composer, and a pioneer of Afrobeat music. Fela was also a human rights activist, and a political maverick) is also found in Lagos city.

Lagos is an exciting and interesting city to live in. But many residents hate to love Lagos. What do people hate most about living in Lagos?

Traffic: Lagosians dread the traffic. An average Lagos residents spend a quarter of the day in traffic situation is one reason why people hate Lagos. Take away the traffic and Lagos will be less stressful.

Area boys: The ubiquitous street urchins can sure make life difficult in Lagos when they start trouble. Ask most Lagosians, they will wish area boys just vanished from the city.

Expensive rent: Lagos rents should be among the highest in the world. The exorbitant rent in Lagos is the reason for the proliferation of slums in the city.

Road Rage: Lagos drivers are some of the craziest you can find anywhere in the world.

The Prices: Lagos is expensive. Cost of goods is higher than anywhere in the country.

Cost of Transport: Transportation is expensive and unregulated. The operators can wake one day and decide to increase transportation cost.

Annoying Beggars: Lagos is full of annoying beggars. Yes, some people have a reason to beg, but some beggars are just too lazy to work. They are in your face everywhere in traffic, at parties and on the streets. It is really one reason to hate Lagos.

Absence of Pedestrian Walk: Well, the situation with pedestrian in Lagos have actually got better. Absence of pedestrian walk on many Lagos roads is one reason to hate Lagos.

Lagos Police: Nigerian police are aggressive and unfriendly. But Lagos police officials are in class of their own. They are known for their brutality and extra-judicial measures. People hate them with passion.

Stress: Lagos life is a combination of stress. Ask any Lagosian and they will give you a million reasons why they are facing stress.

Related Links

What is the most dangerous neighborhood in Lagos, Nigeria?
What are some rules of living in Lagos, Nigeria?
What can you tell me about Lagos, and why is it different from other cities in Nigeria?
How do you see Lagos, Nigeria in the next 20 years?
What does nightlife feel like in Lagos?
What is the average cost of living in Lagos?
Is Lagos in Nigeria related to Lagos in Portugal?
How can I be streetwise in Lagos?
What if I take only $300 to Lagos Nigeria? Can I live off this?
How many people live in Lagos?

How can the hatred of Nigerians around the world be removed?

Victor Dirikebamor StorytellerThu

The case of Nigerians and those who think Nigerians to be a perfect synonym for fraud is likened to that of the Black Dot Story. Ask people who hate Nigerians why they hate Nigerians and see them mention scams and mostly about scams.

That is not all wrong. There is no nobility in denying the very existence of scammers in Nigeria. I like to think that such scam groups have only kept growing.

If you live in big cities, mostly in the Southern part of the country it would be hard to unsee them as they keep up with the tailored-lifestyle with insouciance.

The said scammers are mostly those who have been pushed to the end of hardship, the kind that is yet to cross your mind and is now doing anything to get ahead in life—way ahead with flashy cars, houses, and voluptuous women who don't give two f*cks about the source of their wealth.

Abuja
To them, the righteous path is so hidden and unreachable that the only way out is through evil.

Despite the unimaginable hard life, I think that no one should get ahead in life by fraud. That would be likened to eating your bread in sorrow or passing the night weeping and watching for more bitter dawn. It never ends well.

Nonetheless, that is only one side of the Nigeria story but choosing to dwell only on that story is also a problem.

We are a diverse country with hundreds of millions of people. Remembering us for scams alone is likened to not wanting to have anything to do with Americans due to mass shootings.

Nigeria's all-year-round warm weather is something many Westerners crave for.

The all-day warm and friendly Nigerians could be the best friends you'll ever have.

And millions of Nigerians are very talented at what they do, home and abroad.

Lagos

So, it doesn't make sense to the average Nigerian who is full of life and hard-working with all integrity and with the fear of God. Providing for their families against the worst of odds to be painted with the same brush.

I imagine that majority of the people who talk and see every Nigerian as a scammer would have nothing to talk about Nigeria if the topic of scam wasn't a thing. Their ignorance about the country would sliver to high heavens.

This is one reason they cling on to that brush so stubbornly because they sense, once that negative view is gone, they will be forced to deal with pain—the pain of ignorance.

I consider myself an avid consumer of information. I've realized in my research how easy one can be wrong just about anything.

And like have said since the time of the dinosaurs, the Nigeria scam stories, coupled with the all too common corrupt practices are stories that have stained the image of our otherwise great country and beautiful people but it still doesn't make it the entire story.

I assure you, I reassure you that there's more to Nigeria and Nigerians than scams and talks about scams.

Wake Up Africa!

What is the negative effect of oil companies spilling oil in oil producing communities in Nigeria?

Answered by Obiagheli Daniel Wed

Air, land and water have all been contaminated, with studies reporting devastating effects on residents' health and livelihoods. Farmland has been cloaked in oil, contaminating crops and exposing people to high levels of heavy metals such as chromium, lead and mercury.

Rather than processing gas, oil companies resort to the cheaper option of burning it as a waste product

Meanwhile, gas flares – where natural gas associated with petroleum extraction is burned off in the atmosphere – have filled the air with pollutants, and created acid rain.

Some communities who are largely dependent of fishing and farming for survival are getting involved in other ways of surviving, and this other is nothing but engaging in various types of criminal activities. And that's why there's been a lot of upsurge in criminal activities as well as artisan refining, all to survive."

Related Answer

If Nigeria is one of the leading oil producer, then why it is economically so weak?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian Updated 6y

Because its main export is a commodity prone to boom and bust cycles. The key to being a strong economy is to industrialise and quit being a one trick pony.
In addition to the above, Nigeria also isn't friendly to foreign investment, the bureaucracy is too stifling, the laws weak and your investment depends on the whims of populists.

Secondly, Nigeria isn't the safest place on the continent. Its oil fields are prone to vandalisation by militants, its food belt is in the throes of a settler/nomad conflict, its refinery pipelines are constantly being sabotaged. This means one, in addition to the volatility of the commodities market its main exports are not secured by the state. It then has to spend precious forex importing more food than necessary and refining oil which it produces.

Thirdly Nigeria is bogged down by a very very expensive system of government which somehow manages to combine profligacy with weakness, its recurrent expenditure is usually more than 70% of the budget and yet this money does not buy safety in the streets or efficient taxation. Without safety and a large tax bracket you're failing the main tests of a modern state let alone an advanced economy.

Finally Nigeria has an upper class probably the largest on the continent with an insatiable taste for the finer things who do not pay their fair share in tax, by that I mean they simply bribe the officials or lobby the politicians to waive taxes on their consumption. Further more they command much of the country's forex driving out smaller businesses and creating distortions to the economy.

Personally I believe corruption has zero or little to do with the weak economy, as the saying goes in Nigeria we're all corrupt. The majority however reinvest their corruption in the country which ought to drive economic growth No?? Besides how has corruption stopped China, India e.t.c from economic dominance. Corruption is just an easy excuse.

Related Answer
What is Nigeria's oil city?

Collins Chibuike , YouTuber | Wellness Instructor | MS Excel Guru
Updated Jun 2, 2019

Nigeria is the world's 6th largest producer of oil and the top largest producer in Africa. However, all these liquid diamonds are only produced in less than 8% of its total land area which are the regions commonly know as the Niger Deltas. These part of the country are mostly the south southern states; including a few other coastal states bordering the Atlantic ocean.

Moreover, 80% of the total oil produced in the country is from a few four states with large oil deposits in their soil. They include: Delta, Akwa Ibom, Rivers and Bayelsa. With Akwa Ibom being the largest oil producing state in Nigeria.

The Nigerian oil cities are the few cities located in the major oil producing states. They are relatively well-developed and enjoy the extra 13% funds allocation to oil producing states. They host lots of oil companies and manufacturing industries.

Some of these cities include:

Portharcourt: The capital city of Rivers state and the most populous of the oil cities. It hosts one of the three refineries in Nigeria and houses many manufacturing industries like Indorama Petrochemicals and Fertilizer Plant. The world's largest single-stream fertilizer plant. It is richly blessed with aquatic resources.

Warri: An old city and heart beat of Delta state, it hosts the second of the three refineries in the country(the third being in kaduna). Although not the capital city, it is the most populous and economic vibrant city of Delta state.

Uyo: It is the capital city of Akwa Ibom. The wealth of the state is evident on the beautifully designed landscape and luxury facilities of the city; sometimes referred to as small London. With its abundant supply of aquatic resources it also boasts of a fast growing economy.

Yenagoa: The capital city of Bayelsa state; native mostly to the Ijaw tribe. The tribe and homeland of the former president of Nigeria, Goodluck Jonathan. The city has many oil fields, and although mostly covered by creeks that hinders its economic progress, it still has many facilities of hospitality.

What are the oil producing states in Nigeria

The main and leading oil-producing states in Nigeria are: Akwa-Ibom, Bayelsa, Rivers, Cross-Rivers, Ẹdo, Delta, Ondo.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria's oil the best?
What family has control over Nigeria's crude oil?
If Nigeria has so much oil, why are they so poor?
Nigeria has oil but no active refinery. Which is better, refining our oil or importing our oil?
Which countries does Nigeria send their oil exports too?
Where does the oil generated from Nigeria go?
Does Nigeria have the capacity to be the largest economy in Africa without oil?
Why has Nigeria as a country refused to be refining her own crude oil til date?

Why do Nigeria have so much oil and also have refinenaries and yet export their oil only to import back in their country refined petroleum products?

Why is it that Nigeria can't export other products apart from oil or render services in other countries apart from African countries and how can it be done, if possible?

Is Nigeria the sixth largest producer of oil?

Why does the USA buy oil from other oil producing countries when they have enough oil?

Why is Nigeria not greatly benefiting from its oil industry?
What are the names of oil companies in Nigeria?

Is Nigeria one of the highest oil producing countries, and what rank are they?

The achievements of the northern people of Nigeria are rarely mentioned. What are some of the landmark achievements of those people from the Northwest and the Northeast which bring development and good reputation to the country?

The Multiple Award-Winning Rodent

Olutunji Timothy

A roving mindFeb 20

The Multiple Award-Winning Rodent

Olutunji Timothy

A roving mindFeb 20

Al Jazeera English
2 h ·

Medal-winning Magawa sniffed out more than 100 landmines and explosives during his five-year career.

AL JAZEERA ENGLISH • 2 -MIN READ

‘A hero is laid to rest’: Cambodia’s landmine-sniffing rat dies

An African rat hero, Magawa’s who became famous for detecting more than 100 landmines in the Cambodian countryside and winning a gold medal for his gifts, died aged eight.

The group expressed their appreciation for the work of the hero over the years adding that, "All of us at APOPO is feeling the loss of Magawa " .

Magawa, a giant African pouched rat originally from Tanzania, helped clear mines from about 225,000 square metres of land, the equivalent of 42 football pitches over the course of his career.

Magawa retired in June 2021 after detecting more than 100 landmines and other explosives.

APOPO trained Magawa to detect the chemical compounds in explosives by rewarding him with tasty treats, his favourites being bananas and peanuts.

He would alert deminers by scratching the earth after using "his amazing sense of smell".

In September 2020, the rodent won the animal equivalent of Britain's highest civilian honour for bravery because of his uncanny knack for uncovering landmines and unexploded ordnance.

Magawa was the first rat to receive a medal from British veterinary charity PDSA in the 77 years of the awards. Magawa was given a state burial.

The Multiple Award-Winning Rodent

Olutunji Timothy

A roving mindFeb 20

An African rat hero, Magawa's who became famous for detecting more than 100 landmines in the Cambodian countryside and winning a gold medal for his gifts, died aged eight.

The group expressed their appreciation for the work of the hero over the years adding that, "All of us at APOPO is feeling the loss of Magawa " .

Magawa, a giant African pouched rat originally from Tanzania, helped clear mines from about 225,000 square metres of land, the equivalent of 42 football pitches over the course of his career.

Magawa retired in June 2021 after detecting more than 100 landmines and other explosives.

APOPO trained Magawa to detect the chemical compounds in explosives by rewarding him with tasty treats, his favourites being bananas and peanuts.

He would alert deminers by scratching the earth after using "his amazing sense of smell".

In September 2020, the rodent won the animal equivalent of Britain's highest civilian honour for bravery because of his uncanny knack for uncovering landmines and unexploded ordnance.

Magawa was the first rat to receive a medal from British veterinary charity PDSA in the 77 years of the awards. Magawa was given a state burial.

The Multiple Award-Winning Rodent

Olutunji Timothy

A roving mindFeb 20

Al Jazeera English
2 h ·

Medal-winning Magawa sniffed out more than 100 landmines and explosives during his five-year career.

AL JAZEERA ENGLISH • 2 -MIN READ

‘A hero is laid to rest’: Cambodia’s landmine-sniffing rat dies

An African rat hero, Magawa’s who became famous for detecting more than 100 landmines in the Cambodian countryside and winning a gold medal for his gifts, died aged eight.

The group expressed their appreciation for the work of the hero over the years adding that, "All of us at APOPO is feeling the loss of Magawa " .

Magawa, a giant African pouched rat originally from Tanzania, helped clear mines from about 225,000 square metres of land, the equivalent of 42 football pitches over the course of his career.

Magawa retired in June 2021 after detecting more than 100 landmines and other explosives.

APOPO trained Magawa to detect the chemical compounds in explosives by rewarding him with tasty treats, his favourites being bananas and peanuts.

He would alert deminers by scratching the earth after using "his amazing sense of smell".

In September 2020, the rodent won the animal equivalent of Britain's highest civilian honour for bravery because of his uncanny knack for uncovering landmines and unexploded ordnance.

Magawa was the first rat to receive a medal from British veterinary charity PDSA in the 77 years of the awards. Magawa was given a state burial.

The Multiple Award-Winning Rodent

Olutunji Timothy A roving mind Feb 20

An African rat hero, Magawa’s who became famous for detecting more than 100 landmines in the Cambodian countryside and winning a gold medal for his gifts, died aged eight.

The group expressed their appreciation for the work of the hero over the years adding that, "All of us at APOPO is feeling the loss of Magawa " .

Magawa, a giant African pouched rat originally from Tanzania, helped clear mines from about 225,000 square metres of land, the equivalent of 42 football pitches over the course of his career.

Magawa retired in June 2021 after detecting more than 100 landmines and other explosives.

APOPO trained Magawa to detect the chemical compounds in explosives by rewarding him with tasty treats, his favourites being bananas and peanuts.

He would alert deminers by scratching the earth after using "his amazing sense of smell".

In September 2020, the rodent won the animal equivalent of Britain's highest civilian honour for bravery because of his uncanny knack for uncovering landmines and unexploded ordnance.

Magawa was the first rat to receive a medal from British veterinary charity PDSA in the 77 years of the awards. Magawa was given a state burial.

An African rat hero, Magawa’s who became famous for detecting more than 100 landmines in the Cambodian countryside and winning a gold medal for his gifts, died aged eight.

The group expressed their appreciation for the work of the hero over the years adding that, "All of us at APOPO is feeling the loss of Magawa " .
Magawa, a giant African pouched rat originally from Tanzania, helped clear mines from about 225,000 square metres of land, the equivalent of 42 football pitches over the course of his career.

Magawa retired in June 2021 after detecting more than 100 landmines and other explosives.

APOPO trained Magawa to detect the chemical compounds in explosives by rewarding him with tasty treats, his favourites being bananas and peanuts.

He would alert deminers by scratching the earth after using "his amazing sense of smell".
In September 2020, the rodent won the animal equivalent of Britain's highest civilian honour for bravery because of his uncanny knack for uncovering landmines and unexploded ordnance.

Magawa was the first rat to receive a medal from British veterinary charity PDSA in the 77 years of the awards. Magawa was given a state burial.

An African rat hero, Magawa's who became famous for detecting more than 100 landmines in the Cambodian countryside and winning a gold medal for his gifts, died aged eight.

The group expressed their appreciation for the work of the hero over the years adding that, "All of us at APOPO is feeling the loss of Magawa " .

Magawa, a giant African pouched rat originally from Tanzania, helped clear mines from about 225,000 square metres of land, the equivalent of 42 football pitches over the course of his career.

Magawa retired in June 2021 after detecting more than 100 landmines and other explosives.

APOPO trained Magawa to detect the chemical compounds in explosives by rewarding him with tasty treats, his favourites being bananas and peanuts.

He would alert deminers by scratching the earth after using "his amazing sense of smell".

In September 2020, the rodent won the animal equivalent of Britain's highest civilian honour for bravery because of his uncanny knack for uncovering landmines and unexploded ordnance.

Magawa was the first rat to receive a medal from British veterinary charity PDSA in the 77 years of the awards. Magawa was given a state burial.

Why are kids popularly called Dada in Nigeria, born in white garment churches only?

Olutunji Timothy · Follow Content Writer and Editor Updated Tue

Dada is a traditional Yoruba name for those born with dreadlocks. Over the times, most people have their dreadlocks cut. For instance, Muslims often shave the heads of the newborns; thus, many may not know that those children had dreadlocks at anytime.

However, some Christian denominations in the country rever dreadlocks. I don't know the reasons, but some people claim that it is to imitate Nazirites. The hair of a Nazirite must never be cut and must not drink any form of alcohol; they are dedicated to the service of God. A good example is Samson (Judges 13:5–13; 16:17). Samson also had dreadlocks 16:19).

Therefore, there are many Dada (people with dreadlocks) in those churches because:

a. It is very unusual for Nigerian Christians to cut the hair of the newborns. Thus, it is much easier to have more Dada among Christians and other (non-Muslims). Even, if the hairlocks would be cut later, many people would have known that the children were born with dreadlocks, hence, the name, Dada, by default.

b. Upon the discovery that a child is born with dreadlocks, the white-garment churches preserves the locks. They often sanctify the child, especially male, immediately so that the hair may be preserved.

c. Due to its significance among them, many of their prominent leaders, often adopt artificial means of developing dreadlocks on themselves. Therefore, not all them are Dada in the real sense of it.

How does e-Naira help the Nigerian economy?

Olutunji Timothy

Content Writer and Editor Sep 30

Originally Answered: How will the e-niara improve Nigeria's economy?

E-naira or what did you just say? Sometimes in 2020 the Central Bank of Nigeria and Nigerian government clamped down on cryptocurrency. They called all sorts of bad names. The government called it fraud, the apex bank in collaborations with the federal government suspended it and warned bank against accepting cryptocurrency for transactions. And just a couple of months later, the bank came up with its own e-naira, what a wonderful and incompetent fraud. Promoting the same thing you just declared illegal.

Few months during the debate on electronic voting, a principal member of the senate and former two-term governor, Ali Modu Sheriff, while addressing the journalists insisted that the National Assembly rejected electronic voting because of “yahoo boys" who manipulate the process. General elections hold every four years in Nigeria, if that is not save according to the parliamentarian, then, I think a digital currency is at a greater risk going by the stand of the man.

What is the value of Naira among the comity of currencies in Africa, let alone the world? Naira is currently one of the least valued currencies, even in Nigeria, some individuals and bodies prefer transacting in foreign currencies. Therefore, not many people fancy naira and since e-naira is of the same value with naira, that innovation seems dull and unimpressive. It doesn't look like something that has a good prospect.

Considering the economy and the terrible fall of naira under the current administration, people have faulted the competence of the current Central Bank Governor, Godwin Emefiele. Thus, not many people would trust the lofty prospects the bank attaches with the digital currency considering the fact that many of its past promises woefully failed.

This is a government that has a gluttonous penchant for debts and does anything extort Nigerians further. This may be another mean to 'legally' swindle Nigerians. And in a short time, the same bank, in its usual manner, would come up with another excuse for the failure of the currency. If the more globally accepted cryptocurrencies can crash, fluctuate and be rejected in some highly nations like China, then trusting e-naira, which is only accepted in Nigeria, promoted by the current CBN and the federal government would be unthinkable.

My final verdict: the e-currency may not add any value to the economy and would leave more Nigerians stranded as the government simply wants to extort more money from the people to prosecute its willful incompetence just as it did with many previous policies that looked very brilliant at the inceptions.

When animals take over the presidential office?

Olutunji Timothy Freelance Writer and Educator 1y

There were two classic developments recently when the certain audacious animals staged successful coup against the duly elected all-powerful presidents of two West African countries. These developments, surprisingly, received a warm acceptance from the citizens of those countries. Some citizens felt the animals actually acted on their behalf and did what should they have done at the first instance, particularly those who had been protesting against their leaders. Thus, these animals unseated the presidents, which the most ferocious activists, protesters and agitators could not do though wished.

Credit: Daily Monitor

In August 2017, during a prolonged foreign medical vacation of President Muhammadu Buhari, there were tensions at home with several calls for the president to resign on the ground of health-related incapacitation. At the height of this tension, the arrival of the president was suddenly announced.

But not long after the arrival that it was announced that rodents chased the President out of his office. It was reported that the rodents took over the highest office damaging certain equipment. Therefore, he had to work from home for indefinite period of time – until it would be certified that the President could return to the rat-occupied office.

In a similar vein, the people of Liberia were also caught unprepared when snakes visited their president and forced him out. These same snakes sent President Weah out of the office. Therefore, he had to work from his private residence while the invaders ruled from the highest office. This was in April 2019.

Credit: Expressive info

However, unlike the usual development in this part of the world, this time around, none of the two governments blamed the opposition for being behind the treasonable offence.

Sources

Rats force Nigerian president to work from home
Snakes force Liberian leader out of office

Related Links

Do you think Nigeria's e-Naira cryptocurrency will be successful? What positive effects will it have on the Nigerian economy?

What is the benefit of the Nigerian e-Naira?
How can an average Nigerian benefit from e-Naira?
Is the Nigerian Naira worth more than the US dollar?
What is the E-Naira positive effect in the Nigerian economy?
What is the significance of eNaira to the Nigerian economy?
What are some ways Nigeria can develop its economy?
What can the nigerian govt do to get the country's economy back on track?

Considering potential further devaluation of the Naira, is there a way for a local resident Nigerian to short/bet against the Naira?

What are the challenges behind the Nigerian e-Naira functionality?
How does the e-Naira recently launched by the Nigerian government work?
What are the challenges of the Nigerian economy?
What is eNaira in the Nigerian economy?
What is the disadvantage of e-Naira in Nigeria?
What will the Nigerian economy be in 5 years?

Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?

Rex Mutero works at Paramount Pictures Answered May 2, 2020

Originally Answered: Why is Nigeria so rich among all other African countries?

Nigeria is a poor country.

I can list five African countries that are richer than Nigeria.

A rich country does not have a foreign country fund their railway developments. China bankrolled a new railway in Nigeria. Here's why it's a big deal

A rich country does not get aid from another country USAID Provides $89 Million in New Assistance to Nigeria

Britain halves foreign aid money to Nigeria and urges country to 'step up' action against Boko Haram

Nigeria does not have a flag carrier. Most of the African countries have.

A rich country does not borrow Nigeria to Borrow $6.9 Billion to Counter Coronavirus Spread

South Africa, a genuine rich country did not borrow $26 billion but took it out of its coffers. South Africa Sets $26 Billion Plan to Save Virus-Hit Economy

Related Answer

Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?

Melville Ezeogu, lived in Nigeria Answered May 19, 2018

Well as of today, the 20th of May, 2018… Nigeria is ranked the richest country in Africa by GDP.

GDP is defined as the value of goods and services produced by the people and companies in an entire country in a given year..

But how does this affect you or your personal finances?

Most investors will look at the GDP to determine if they should stake their monies in companies in Nigeria if it has a rapid growth rate.

The Central Bank then uses these rates to decide on monetary policies that will either ward of recessions and or prevent inflation.

If growth slows down then you find less jobs, and “no money for economy” as they say in Nigeria.

So to answer you question.

Yes, Nigeria is the richest country in Africa but I and many other people think that more can be done.

Related Links

How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Why is Nigeria a poor country?
Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

Why is Nigeria one of the poorest country in the world with all the resources that can make her the one of the richest country in world?

How dangerous is Nigeria?
What separates Nigeria from other African countries (both good and bad)?
Who is the richest scammer in Nigeria?
How many African countries have a stable power supply?

News Nigeria

Late Stella Obasanjo, the wife of the former President of Nigeria, Olusegun Obasanjo attended a programme close to where she obtained her Secondary School education.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Sat

After the programme, while stepping out of the venue, she heard somebody shouting from behind, "Aunty Star!,

Aunty Star!, Aunty Star!....."

This was the name her juniors in school used to call her while she was in Secondary School.

She turned around and saw the woman calling her and ordered her escorts to allow her pass through.

The woman informed her that she was one of her juniors while they were in school.

Her Excellency was so pleased to meet her. The woman took the opportunity to plead with Stella to assist her as she was a widow and was suffering with her children.

Her Excellency, been a very compassionate woman asked her to name what she wanted her to do for her. The woman replied her by saying "Anything". This question was put to her again and she repeated the same answer! So Her Excellency instructed one of her escorts to give the woman#50,000.

After which, she gave the woman her private number and asked her to call her in two weeks time, that she was about traveling out and that by then, she should have thought out exactly what she wants her to do for her.

The woman went home rejoicing and even went to testify in Church.

However, before the 2 weeks elapsed, Stella Obasanjo died abroad while undergoing a surgery!

LESSONS!

• Always know what you want in life...and don't settle for anything less.

• Success occurs when preparation meets opportunity.

Opportunity is a visitor, when it visits you, try to maximize it as it may never come visiting again.

Thank u for reading and most importantly, pls apply it as you go forward.

News Nigeria

What is the effect of brain drain in Nigeria economy?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller1y

Peter Obi, former Anambra state governor went to study what was happening to schools in Uganda, a few years back.

He wanted to go via Kenya Airways but found them too pricey, that man is known for frugality, he then opted for Rwandan air, But, his greatest shock was that when the captain of the aircraft came to introduce himself, he was a Nigerian.

The captain said two of them in the cockpit are Nigerians.

They said they could not have a job in Nigeria. But, in Rwanda, they value them.

Some of the doctors attending to our politicians in London, and elsewhere are Nigerians, but those same doctors won't be given a chance to touch this politician here in Nigeria, when they meet them abroad, they obviously respect and do whatever they say.

Majority of Nigerian doctors and even engineers are already abroad, in countries where their services are well paid and respected.

I don't believe in brain drain.

Your asset is your knowledge.

And if somebody somewhere needs it, would you not make it available to them?

If they don't want your services in Nigeria, why waste away here?

What we call brain drain is a cumulative effect of leadership failure over the years. Our leaders have failed.

That is why the youths are leaving in droves:

To places where every equipment needed to do the job is available, not in Nigeria where an outdated x-ray machine is used in dozens of public hospitals.

If the government doesn't sit their assess down, if travel constraints become easier, most Nigerian professionals won't be in Nigeria, it would be a great loss to the country.

Related Answer

What is the effect of brain drain in Nigeria economy?

Weli Orlu, lives in Nigeria Answered May 25, 2017

Brain Drain in Nigeria is huge. The Economy has not started feeling the effects yet and so no one is noticing.

Nigerian health professionals are disappearing and no one is noticing. Every year Nigerian doctors and Nurses seek employment in foreign countries. Very soon Nigerians will not be known are Internet fraudsters but as doctors or Nurses which would have positive impact for Nigerians as foreigners being accepted and appreciated. This is already happening in Australia with many Nigerian doctors.

The image above shows Nigerian Doctors Protesting for better working conditions

People will start noticing when they enter hospitals without a doctor, then the Nigerian Government will start searching for a quick fix, and many more people will start traveling abroad for treatment.

Brain drain is also occurring in other fields, but brain drain can happen in different ways, which will affect the economy far worse than the normal brain drain we notice every day.

The brain drain i will talk about now is the brain drain of youths studying courses or choosing professions based on what is popular. Today many Nigerian youths are misled into believing that they can make quick success in music, this leads to a wasted life, the brain drain into the Nigerian movie and music industry will keep the country starved of other important professionals.

Every Nigerian youth wants to become a doctor or a lawyer, don’t be surprised to see surgeons that can’t stand the sight of blood, that can happen when youths are misled to choose professions that is not their calling.

If this trend continues our economy will be skewed, and we may effectively become exporters of doctors, i don’t know if that would happen to lawyers. In the years past we had literary giants and people from diffe rent professi ons in the Nigerian society, but things are changing.

In the long run we may find we have fewer people studying professions like literature, arts and science. These courses don't sell in Nigeria. More Nigerian doctors will travel abroad for greener pasture. The Government may be forced to open specialized medical schools to counter the effect. Nigerian youths will embrace partying at a higher level because we would have more musicians and fewer professionals.

How can we stop brain drain in Nigeria?

Demi Folorunso former Bid Strategy Manager at Neopost (2018-2019) Answered May 28, 2017

Brain drain in Nigeria will continue until there is a bloody revolution through the military. What I mean is a type of military take over the like of which the world has never witnessed in modern times. Anything else will be dancing round a volcano without anyone going inside it. Everyone that has ever ruled the country should be eliminated including their descendants and others in their family that has benefited from their ill gotten riches. Imagine, a country where you have budgets yearly and all they do with it is share the money amongst themselves. This has continued yearly unabated since independence. Now, we have democracy which they have turned into a money making machine. I tell you now, democracy will never work in such a country for the foreseeable future and a total waste of time. They now hide behind human rights and the rule of law. Where was the rule of law when they were looting the treasury blind? Brain drain has been going on for almost 60 years since independence, in the past people go abroad to study and always return back afterwards, not anymore. Corruption is now a societal cancer that it will need great men of integrity in the military to stop. The only thing that has changed in my lifetime is communication, banking and the money making churches and mosques multiplying faster than breeding rabbits all over the place. To conclude, for the military people to succeed, they only need like minded people in every part of the country and, to have the same relentless goal of dealing with corruption without fear. Otherwise, the country will be doomed for ever and the brain drain will continue. Serious problems need serious solutions.

What are the effects of brain drain in a country?

Demi Folorunso, former Bid Strategy Manager at Neopost (2018-2019) Answered Jul 3, 2018

When qualified and experienced people leave a country in droves. The consequences are dire from an economic, social, political and progressive point of view.

The first effect will be a shortage of intellectuals that can shape the direction of the nation. The economy will not grow due to lack of innovation and this in turn will promote dictatorship because the government will be made up of people who demands little from one another.

All you then get is budgets that are not executed for their various intended purposes and nepotism sets in like cancer.

The brain drain is usually to affluent countries in the West. They take your resources first, now they are after your Doctors, Nurses, Builders, Engineers, not to mention stolen money stashed in these countries by government officials.

Many people migrate with the intention of spending a few years to then travel back to their countries. In reality, the home they left behind is getting worse daily.

This then lead to them staying permanently in these countries. Now, we have Americans and Europeans blaming these brown people for all their ills and voting for deranged right wings. Its looking like the 1930s again.

Related Links

What are the reasons for brain drain in India?
What are the advantages and disadvantages of brain drain?
How does brain drain affect South Africa?
What are the consequences of brain drain?

What are the effects of brain drain in a country?
What are the positive effects of brain drain?
What can be done to stop the "brain drain"?
What your stand on brain drain?
How can one justify brain drain from India?
What are some of the effects of "brain drain" on a country's economy?

Would Nigeria have developed if there was no colonialism?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

Nigerian 1y

Compared to its past, Nigeria is developed. What it is not is prosperous. If you want to be specific (and you should), we are a middle-income country—neither low income, upper-middle or high income. Nigeria's developmental indices could be better, that it is not, is due to the dead hand of history. Nigeria is an unfinished revolution. It is unfinished, in part, because the British froze some revolutions in place to conciliate allies, but also because British rule sparked a backlash that led some to conclude that 'anything but the western way' is right. That is why it is impossible to give a definitive answer to your question.

I disagree with claims that there would not be a Nigeria without British intervention. There would be (and change), the expansion of the Sokoto caliphate did much of that work, but they were tottering. An entity from the south would have conquered them. That entity would end up looking rather like modern Nigeria. The same groups, but with different identities.

Undoubtedly, there would have been far more war than without the British. First because of the rise, in the south, of new men and the decline of the old elite. Second, because direct taxation across Nigeria was introduced by the British. And as all the riots in the early stages of imperial rule show, it was not one Nigerians (southerners especially) took to kindly. Without direct taxation, States were reliant on control of trading points and slaving for revenue. That meant war. The collapse of the external slave trade made war even more certain. The wild card amid this chaos were the Christians. They were rich, connected, cosmopolitan and most importantly well-armed. In addition to being small, they faced threats on all sides, to the east was expanding Dahomey, in the interior, war disrupted their trade, converts were vulnerable to persecution and in the north loomed a hostile Caliphate. In reality, they outsourced solving those problems to the British, but without the British what happens? One major problem is that the other place in Africa where the missions clashed, they warred. Funnily enough, there is a Nigerian connection. Lord Lugard made his reputation ending the four-way war between Catholics, Protestants, Muslims and Pagans in the Kingdom of Buganda. That necessarily need not have happened in Nigeria, but the possibility is strong. The early missions imported inter-denominational suspicions, then extant in Europe, into a place without the countervailing factor of a strong State. Even if the Christians don't kill each other, the factors enumerated above would still have pushed them to expand their sphere of control. Their sole advantage is a qualitative advantage over their numerically superior neighbours and the potential for rapid expansion.

The only prediction that can safely be made is more war. What will determine the future of this hypothetical Nigeria is what sort of victor emerges. All we can certain about is decisions made by our past rulers. I think that the North's education deficit would be less reduced, for one. We know that neither pagans or Christians (obviously) were opposed to western education. The Muslim opposition was and is ideological. Without the British, the caliphate was too weak to enforce a complete ban on missionaries and thence western education. The problem with British rule is that it was determined by their imperial strategy. Their enforcement of the westernisation ban, for example, was drawn from their experience in India and inspired by their fears of a pan-Islamic revolt across their empire (they ruled the largest number of Muslims ever gathered under one flag). But looking back, we can see that it was decidedly a terrible decision for Nigeria. The would-be non-British State-builders of that Nigeria would face massive (I repeat) massive challenges, but they would be free of two constraints:

1. Non-local factors battling for their attention, as in the case of the British.
2. Reflexive anti-west(ism), as in the case of those who came after the British.

Related Answer

Is it true Nigeria could have been better than this if it is still under colonial rule?

Aniekan Thomas, Medical Doctor at Garki Hospital Abuja FCT (2012-present)
Answered Feb 11, 2018

On the surface, Nigerian would have been looking much developed under the rule of the colonialists. The infrastructure would be looking good, the transport system would be working, and things would be run more efficently. BUT….there is a big BUT..

Most of it would be for the benefit of the colonialist government, not Nigerians.

Take a look at the map below..

That’s a map of Nigeria’s railways…which were not designed to move goods and people efficiently across Nigeria…but designed to move raw materials from the interior to the ports…to be exported to the UK.

In short…Nigeria’s economy would essentially be for the benefit of the colonialists, by the colonialists.

Meaning…if your part of the country…colony, I mean, is of no benefit to London…good luck.The railway line…and by extension, a host of other things..won’t reach you.

Related Links

Did being colonized actually help Nigeria?
What were the impacts of colonialism in Nigeria's government?
What does Nigeria need to do to develop?
Why didn't Nigeria resist colonialism?

Why did Nigeria and other African nations fight colonialism? What made the indigenous Africans make the whites leave Africa? Is life better now than it was at the period of colonialism?

Did Colonialism benefit or harm Africa?

Why is Southern Nigeria more affluent and much more developed than Northern Nigeria?

What will happen if Colonialism still existed?

Is it true that Europe is rich because of colonialism? If they never did that, then will they be third world countries today?

Are there any West European countries that have not maintained a colonial presence in the past three hundred years?

If Nigeria was colonized by Portugal between 1472 and 1960, what would happen to Nigeria?

Did any non-European countries have colonies?
What did Africa look like before colonialism?
Did colonies overall benefit from colonialism?
What European countries never had colonies?

How did you become successful in Lagos, Nigeria against all odds?

Paul Ategie Chief Solutions Architect 4y

Being successful is a highly relative term. I don't know that I am successful, but I will share a couple of things I do as an entrepreneur in Lagos to stay afloat.

1. Develop a skill, an art, a trade. Lagos like many major cities in the world requires you to be able to solve a problem and unless you want to always outsource, you need to develop the right skills.

2. Understand the terrain. Lagos is an urban reflection of Nigeria. Nigeria has its challenges, and you cannot overlook those challenges. Some of which are power, government policies etc

3. Create a cash-flow balance: you CANNOT spend more than you earn and be successful. You cannot have an expense chart bigger than your revenue. See why you need to have skills of yours , you save cost on the long run.

4. Be open to growth and partnerships: accept the fact that other people have values they can bring to your establishment.

5. Take a calculated risk: don't be shy to take risks. But be assertive about them. Lagos is for the daring and daunting.

6. Network (not multilevel marketing). Build strong networks and belong to progressive networks. Seek mentors who have semblance to your ideals. Remember, a rich mentor isn't always the ideal mentor.

7. Stay humble. Stay Sharp. Stay woke. Stay hungry.

How is life in Lagos different from life in the rest of Nigeria?

Anifowoshe Titilope, lived in Lagos, Nigeria Updated Jul 31, 2019

I was born in lagos, grew up in lagos, had my tertiary institution in ilorin, I now live in Abuja. I have been to all states in the South-South, South West and North Central political zones in Nigeria.

Life in lagos is rough and sharp; you must always “shine your eyes”.

Business in lagos has the tendency to grow faster than in other parts of Nigeria.

Lagosians are less tribalistic, more friendly and opened to anything that can give them “money”

Lagosians party harder than anyone in Nigeria; PortHarcourt can compete tho.

Lagos traffic is TERRIBLE.

You are sure to get the best street food in Lagos.

Related Answer

How can you make side money in Lagos, Nigeria?

Jide Ogunleye, lives in Lagos, Nigeria Answered Aug 26, 2018

There are a couple of things you can do to make side Money in Lagos. It starts with how much you earn, how much you can save and how much time you have.

Car wash: you can start this business in an area where the roads are not so good. It must be strategically located. This is good because you are not stocking up any product, it's strictly service based. Making this work will involve getting a trusted hand and build a good loyalty scheme for your customers.

Pig farming: this is also good. Do basic research online and equip yourself with information about it. You must be willing to visit the farm at least twice a week. This is where Time comes in. You can start small with 150,000 naira.

Mobile Apps: if you can learn how to build mobile solutions, you can earn money on the side by building solutions for people.

Online jobs: Sign up on fiverr , upwork or freelancer. You can get paid to do things like writing , sending emails, doing animation, website, etc. i hope you find this useful

Related Links

What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?
Where do the richest people live in Lagos, Nigeria?
Where is the best place to stay in Lagos, Nigeria?
What is a high monthly income in Lagos, Nigeria?
I'm relocating to Nigeria how do I prepare to live in lagos?
What is a typical middle class income in Lagos, Nigeria?
Is it possible to succeed in Nigeria? Is it possible to succeed without a good background?
What can I invest in Nigeria and become successful?
Why is it so hard to get a decent job in Lagos?
What kind of business can I start with N100,000 in Lagos, Nigeria?

News Nigeria

THE FIRST NIGERIAN FEMALE DOCTORATE DEGREE HOLDER IN PHILOSOPHY

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Apr 8

Igbara-Oke, Ondo State born Prof Sophie Oluwole (originally from Edo state), was the first woman to earn a doctorate degree in Philosophy in Nigeria.

She studied History, Geography and Philosophy at UNILAG after which she was employed as an Assistant Lecturer in 1972. She earned her PhD in Philosophy at the University of Ibadan (UI), Ibadan.

She taught African Philosophy at UNILAG and focused on the Yoruba school of philosophical thought that discussed the cultural and religious beliefs of Yoruba land. She retired from the department of history of the university 18 years ago.

She produced several books on philosophy including Ifa and Orunmila which aimed at correcting the Western philosophies on Africans.

The late philosopher; popularly called Mamalawo (female native doctor) was recognised for her activism for women in philosophy and education.

Prof Oluwole died in her home at Ibafo, Ogun State. She was 83.

News Nigeria

"For the past seven (7) years, I have served as Vice President under a true Nigerian patriot, President Muhammadu Buhari. " -Vice President Yemi Osinbajo

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Sun

In these 7 years, while on the train of duty and service, I traversed every part of our country, meeting Nigerians of every cadre, class, tribe and walks of life, both young and old; I MET YOU.

I've stood where you stand and sat where you sit. I know and I understand our hopes, aspirations and fears from a place of relatable proximity; and I believe that in those hopes and aspirations are the seeds for the great Nigeria that we all desire.

I believe that the very reason why the Almighty God gave me these experiences, these insights, and these opportunities, is that they must be put to the use of our country and its great peoples.

This is why today, with utmost humility, I formally declare my intention to run for the office of the President, Federal Republic of Nigeria, on the platform of our great party, the All Progressives Congress.

I also most solemnly and respectfully seek your support as fellow Nigerians everywhere in this land and the diaspora, as we embark on this great and exciting journey that lies ahead of us.

IT IS TIME.

News Nigeria
1966: ASSASSINATION OF ALHAJI (SIR) ABUBAKAR TAFAWA BALEWA

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Mar 30

"Who's there?" A voice queried from inside. However, Ifeajuna replied by kicking the doors open with his boots.

"You're under arrest sir," Ifeajuna said, pointing his gun at the Prime Minister, who looked startled. "Get up sir, we don't have a lot of time."

“Alright,” the Prime Minister replied gently, “allow me to dress up.”

He put on a white flowing robe with white trousers, a pair of slippers and his prayer beads. Without fear and a disciplined face, he trudged out of the room and the residence gently as Ifeajuna and his soldiers accompanied him with pointed guns.

When they reached the parked vehicles, Ezedigbo had arrested the Finance Minister, Chief Okotie-Eboh, and had tossed him like a bag of groundnuts into the back of the 3-Ton truck while the Prime Minister was assisted into the backseat of Ifeajuna’s luxurious car, a red Mercedes Benz, as the convoy drove off to the rendezvous.

Some few kilometers to their rendezvous, the Prime Minister became restless and was muttering to himself as he rattled his prayer beads. Okafor hinted Ifeajuna of the situation who quickly slammed the brakes and came out of the car.

“Are you alright sir?” Ifeajuna asked the Prime Minister as he opened the side door. “Or would you like some fresh air?”

To Tafawa-Balewa, it was a rhetorical question and the decision to answer or not rested on him. Without answering the Major, he gently alighted from the car and ambled towards the darkness as Ifeajuna watched anxiously, oblivious to what the Prime Minister was up to.

Then from a slow walk, to a pace and a sprint, the Prime Minister dashed for the darkness. Ifeajuna did not bother to pursue. Quickly, he grabbed his gun from the car, cocked it and aimed for the fleeing Prime Minister whose white outfit contrasted the darkness and conspicuously gave him away.

The “revolution” had failed and the Prime Minister had become a liability to their movement anyway. The Major shot sporadically at the fleeing figure sending the tranquility of the darkness to a bustle of gunfire like the crackle of burning dried leaves.

Tafawa-Balewa fell as Ifeajuna stared in horror at the darkness whether he got his target. The Golden Voice of Africa had been silenced.

Quickly, he moved towards the still body of the Prime Minister and after confirming he was dead, dragged him to a tree trunk and rested the body in a seating position with his clothing still intact.

Then he and Okafor brought out Largema’s corpse from the boot of the car and laid it down beside Tafawa-Balewa’s body. Having realised the coup had failed on their part, they sped, en route Abeokuta-Sagamu, towards Enugu in the East, which was nearly 450 kilometres away.

How come you enjoy Nigeria so much?

Judy Wanjiku Jørgensen Africa is not a country 3y

Nigeria has helped put Africa on the map, in a very positive way.
Most Nigerians are charismatic, boastful, ambitious, aggressive people. I think the over-population in the country pushes before to become more than average. They go for what they want!

Nigeria has produced and continues to produce great academic minds, artists, musicians, just to name a few.

Some of the most famous African writers and musicians are from Nigeria.

Think Chinua Achebe, Chimamanda, Fela Kuti, again, just to name a few great Nigerian minds.

Nollywood, Nigerian version of Bollywood, has been a pioneer in making African films portray characters that embrace their culture - quirks and all.

Naija, Nigerian music, has spread throughout Africa, making us not only jam to music whose words we barely understand, but also appreciate that African music can rule the airwaves.

Nigeria is like that older sibling, who encourages you to be bold in your identity.

Nigerian parents are also fond of giving their children usual names. Fountain, blessing, light. Heck, they had a president who goes by the name Goodluck Jonathan.

Unfortunately, when Westerners think of Nigeria, the first thing that comes to mind are the online scammers and swindlers.

But trust me. Nigeria is more robust than that negative identity.

Related Links

What should I know before coming to Lagos, Nigeria?
What do you love about Nigeria?
How is life in Nigeria?
What are the best things about living in Nigeria?
Why is life hard in Nigeria?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
Which part of Nigeria is the best to live?
What do you know about Nigeria?
What is something good that is happening in Nigeria right now?
What are 10 things to know about Nigeria?

News Nigeria
Nigeria Acquires Landing Ship to Boost Coastal Security

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

The Federal Government has acquired a new landing ship for the Nigerian Navy to boost security in the nation's coastal waters as well as to enhance the power projection capabilities of the Navy.

Minister of Defence Major General Bashir Salihi Magashi while taking over the new ship in a colorful change of flag ceremony held in Sharjah, Dubai said the acquisition of the landing ship Tank 100 NNS KADA was to replace the two Navy ships including NNS AMBE and NNS OFIOM decommissioned 10 years ago by the Federal Government.

"The induction of NNS KADA into the Nigerian Navy fleet will not only enhance the security of Nigerian Maritime environment but will serve as force multiplier in the projection of naval power capabilities for enhanced security in the Sub Region". the Minister pointed out.

General Magashi added that NNS KADA would also play a vital role in Maritime crisis management by conveying relief materials in areas facing humanitarian crisis within West Africa and beyond.

He thanked President Muhammadu Buhari for his commitment towards the recapitalization of the Nigerian Navy fleet to remain combat ready and alive to its constitutional responsibility.

The Minister urged the Commanding Officer and the Ship Company to "consider yourselves as privileged to be in charge of the magnificent new ship built by one of the best shipyards in West Asia".

Chief of Naval Staff Vice Admiral Awwal Gambo in a welcome address described the home bound voyage of NNS KADA as a mile stone achievement in the Federal Government effort to sustain the development of its economy.

A statement by the Nigerian Navy indicates that NNS KADA ship's journey to Nigeria would include ports visits to Oman, Kenya, South Africa, Angola, Gabon and expected to finally arrive Nigeria on May 27th, 2022.

Victoria Agba-Attah

Director (Press & Public Relations)

6/4/2022

Pix 4922: Minister of Defence Major General Bashir Salihi Magashi (6th Right), Chief of Naval Staff Vice Admiral Awwal Gambo (5th Right), Chairman House Committee on Nigerian Navy, Hon. Yusuf Gagdi (7th Right) and other dignitaries on board the newly acquired Nigerian Navy Ship KADA during the ceremonial change of flag and handover of the Ship to Nigeria

Pix 4704: (R-L) Minister of Defence Major General Bashir Salihi Magashi, Chief of Naval Staff Vice Admiral Awwal Gambo and the Executive Director of Damen Shipping Company of UAE

NIGERIA
What would be the fate of Nigerians in 2023 after the said election?

Answered by Phly Phlo Tue

It is a hot political topic in Nigeria, and the answers aren't easy. Nigeria, like most African countries, is currently suffering from a quality leadership vacuum. There are too many uncertainties in the body politics of Nigeria. The tenure of President Muhammadu Buhari (PMB) ends in 2023 and there is less than a year before the next general election.

Elections in Nigeria are not fought between political parties or politicians but fought between tribes and religions. This reality sadly means that the winner of an election in Nigeria cannot be a president for all citizens but would a president for his tribe or religion at best.

Though the 2015 election did yield a deserved and long overdue change of government, numerous questions surrounding the legitimacy of this change remain as Nigeria is going through a turbulent time. The elements of bigotry in ethnicity, religion, and leadership are the major problems of why Nigeria is still where it is today.

The fate of Nigerians in 2023 after the election would be sealed by Who they choose. If a wrong choice is made, Nigeria would be no different from the past democratic regimes. During the supposed first republic, many good leaders emerged in Nigeria. Those great leaders had a blueprint and a great vision for Nigeria. This cannot be said of many leaders today because the vision has departed from the Nigerian people, and people are no longer in charge.

It would be unsafe for the common citizen to remain passive as ethnic champions fan the embers of discord; it is for this reason that we must react to what is happening to save the nation from collapse. The different issue facing Nigeria has been given prominence by some groups or member party, using it as an excuse to further deprive the citizens of their rights to dominate government activities. especially when other issues (like ASUU strike, Insecurity, Injustice, Power failure, Unemployment, etc) are put on hold in the quest to give full attention to insensitive and non-beneficial issues facing the country on ethnopolitical lines. In the same vein, some religious champions have also taken advantage of this development to add fuel to fire by peddling falsehoods and dangerous statements.

Well, I hope that God would keep us alive in 2023 and beyond.

Who becomes president in 2023?

What would be the fate of Nigeria in 2023 after the said elections?

Will it just be about good governance or something more powerful than that for 2023-2027?

are questions Nigerians especially the citizens all need to ask themselves so that we can make the right choice God willing and avoid

Leaders that just want to hold onto power without knowing what to do with it

Leaders who don't know how to profit from a working economy

Leaders that can’t engage and negotiate with the citizens

Leaders who had served their time in office with scandals or corruption etc.

whose main aim is to destroy our collective existence as a people. There's a need to avoid a change of command in power that would continuously affect the Nigerian democracy negatively to ensure a return to a functional democratic government and avoid the fate that other African countries have met with democratic breakdowns.

In 2023, Nigerians I hope will be more educated, more peaceful and everything else that we could think of that means growth. There is a reason why every election, every president will say 'change is on'. For Nigeria, the change of 2023 must come from all angles, even from us as individuals. Empower yourself with knowledge and stand for what you believe in; you are the pillar of your fate.

It would be terrible for Nigerians once again to have another leader come back with promises (to eradicate corruption and improve the living standard of Nigerians) they can't keep and perhaps destroy the little that has been achieved so far (if any).

Related Links

How can start Affiliate marketing in Nigeria?
How do I maintain multiple subscriptions on Bitunz without losing money to a scam?
How much does it cost to rent/buy an office space in Lagos Island or Ikeja in Nigeria?
How did the Nigerian military capture the notorious arm-robber Anini?
How can I play US lotteries from Africa?
How can the Nigerian youth change bad governance?
What will make a Nigerian youth change his perspective about corruption?

What can I do when the items I order from AliExpress has shipped to another far away state in Nigeria?

How would Russia's new world order affect Africa?
Who will be the next Nigeria president.

Why do Nigerian mums use crude oil and palm canel oil mix for newborns?
Why are Nigerians so proud of their nationality?

How can I deal with an abusive boss who hit me while serving as a youth corps member in Enugu State, Nigeria?

If Simon Ekpa is responsible for banditry in the Easter Nigeria according to APGA. Who is responsible for Northern Nigeria Banditry in the North?

Why are the Fulani tribes in Nigeria so keen to take over everything?

AfriStar

6 chanteuses africaines de gospel ayant vécu l'enfer dans leur mariage (photos)

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK ven.

Dans la plupart des sociétés, les ministres de l'évangile sont comptés parmi les mariés les plus heureux. Cependant, il est de plus en plus fréquent, ces derniers temps, de voir les mariages de ces ministres de l'évangile marqués par des ruptures et des controverses. Malheureusement, ces femmes de Dieu sont contraintes de souffrir en silence ou d'endurer jusqu'à un certain point avant de demander le divorce, et ce en raison des attentes irréelles de la société à leur égard.

Ne manquant pas de reconnaître que ces musiciens, tout comme d'autres êtres humains, sont également vulnérables, ils sont le plus souvent jugés et renvoyés aux écritures de la Bible qui parlent contre le divorce.

Mais dans l'ensemble, il est indéniable que les chanteuses africaines de gospel ont connu certaines des pires formes de tragédies dans leurs mariages.

Voici 6 chanteuses de gospel ayant été victimes de violences conjugales

Osinachi Nwachukwu

La célèbre chanteuse nigériane de gospel, Osinachi Nwachukwu, connue pour sa chanson « Ekwueme », est décédée le vendredi 8 avril dans un hôpital d'Abuja.

La sœur aînée de la défunte, Miss Made, tout en confirmant l'incident, a révélé qu'elle est décédée à la suite d'un amas de sang dans sa poitrine après avoir été battue par son mari, Peter Nwachukwu.

Miss Made affirme que sa sœur était victime de violences conjugales depuis des années.

Obaapa Christy

Obaapa était mariée au pasteur Hammond Love, mais leur mariage était entaché des accusations d'infidélité et de violence domestique.

Elle s'est remariée et a donné naissance à un petit garçon, mais son mariage avec le pasteur Love, le père de trois de ses enfants, n'a pas encore été officiellement dissous.

Esther Smith

La célèbre chanteuse s’est remariée après avoir passé des années en tant que mère célibataire suite à son mariage raté avec le révérend Ahenka.

Esther Smith accusait son ex-mari de violence et d’avoir eu une liaison avec leur ménagère. De son côté, son mari l’accusait d’infidélité.

Joyce Blessing

Mariée à Dave Joy, qui était également son manager, leur mariage a été entaché par des d'accusations d'infidélité. Son ex-mari avait publiquement révélé qu'un test ADN avait montré qu'il n'était pas le père d'un de ses trois enfants.

Les deux se sont séparés et mènent chacun leur vie.

Diana Hopeson

La chanteuse s’est séparée de son mari il y a quelques années suite à des allégations d’abus. Elle a récemment révélé que le problème qui a conduit à l’échec de son premier mariage était entièrement d’ordre médical, émotionnel et psychologique. Elle est désormais mariée au révérend Emmanuel Hopeson, un autre pasteur.

Empress Gifty

La chanteuse ghanéenne Empress Gifty était mariée au pasteur Prince Elisha Osei. Les deux ont été ensemble pendant environ 10 ans avant de se séparer en 2014, après quoi ils ont légalement mis fin à leur mariage en 2017. La chanteuse de Gospel est actuellement mariée au politicien Hopeson Adorye

Source:Afrikmag

Related Links

How can start Affiliate marketing in Nigeria?
How do I maintain multiple subscriptions on Bitunz without losing money to a scam?
How much does it cost to rent/buy an office space in Lagos Island or Ikeja in Nigeria?
How did the Nigerian military capture the notorious arm-robber Anini?

How can I play US lotteries from Africa?
How can the Nigerian youth change bad governance?
What will make a Nigerian youth change his perspective about corruption?

What can I do when the items I order from AliExpress has shipped to another far away state in Nigeria?

How would Russia's new world order affect Africa?

Who will be the next Nigeria president.

Why do Nigerian mums use crude oil and palm canel oil mix for newborns?
Why are Nigerians so proud of their nationality?

How can I deal with an abusive boss who hit me while serving as a youth corps member in Enugu State, Nigeria?

If Simon Ekpa is responsible for banditry in the Easter Nigeria according to APGA. Who is responsible for Northern Nigeria Banditry in the North?

Why are the Fulani tribes in Nigeria so keen to take over everything?

NIGERIA

Why is it hard for the son of a poor man to secure a job in Nigeria? I am still jobless after graduation since 2016.

Answered by Ijeoma Peace Adiele Apr 9

The truth is there are job opportunities out there but they raised their bars so high. So it's either your skill up to their level or you get in through referral from someone who is an authority in that organization.

But I would advise you to skill up first because when opportunity meets preparation, the rest is history.

Related Links

How can express my self in Nigeria?
Why do most Nigerians jump into the Ponzi scheme?
As a deterrent to illegal, economic migrants, is the Rwanda plan effective?
How can start Affiliate marketing in Nigeria?
How do I maintain multiple subscriptions on Bitunz without losing money to a scam?

How much does it cost to rent/buy an office space in Lagos Island or Ikeja in Nigeria?
How did the Nigerian military capture the notorious arm-robber Anini?
How can I play US lotteries from Africa?
How can the Nigerian youth change bad governance?
What will make a Nigerian youth change his perspective about corruption?

What can I do when the items I order from AliExpress has shipped to another far away state in Nigeria?

How would Russia's new world order affect Africa?

Who will be the next Nigeria president.
Why do Nigerian mums use crude oil and palm canel oil mix for newborns?
Why are Nigerians so proud of their nationality?

Black History & Politics

· Follow Posted by Cheryl Brown Apr 11 Roots.

Muhammad Ali (Cassius Clay) in Nigeria. 1964.

Source: Black History. Credit: Real African Books

News Nigeria

Meet Umar Baffa, the Chairman of Birniwa LGA in Jigawa, who still goes about his craft as a professional tailor.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 22h

Many Nigerians have described him as one filled with humility.

Wake Up Africa!

Breaking : Legendary Gospel singer Osinachi Nwachukwu who hails from Nigeria is dead

Posted by Joseph Chidiebube Apr 10

May her Soul rest in peace

News Nigeria

Presidency Reacts to Reverend Kukah's message on the state of the nation.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 1m

The Special Adviser to the President on Media and Publicity, Femi Adesina, has said critics of President Muhammadu Buhari are responsible for the division in Nigeria and not the President's ruling style.

According to the media aide, the critics caused division in the country with their mouths.

Adesina's reaction is coming a day after the Catholic Bishop of the Diocese of Sokoto, Matthew Kukah, heavily criticised Buhari over insecurity, corruption and division in Nigeria.

Kukah, in his Easter message titled 'To mend a broken nation: The Easter metaphor, had said every aspect of life in the country has been destroyed, while corruption is enthroned.

News Nigeria

Fulani People Brainwashed To Think All Of Nigeria And Territory Belongs To Them—Prof Akintoye

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 15h

Popular Yoruba historian, Professor Banji Akintoye has explained why he is in the struggle for the actualisation of the independence of the Yoruba Nation.

Akintoye, who is the leader of Ilana Omo Oodua, the umbrella body for Yoruba self-determination groups, said his struggles for the actualisation of the Oduduwa nation was necessitated by the need to save his people from their suffering.

That is what is happening; saying it is a clash between farmers and herders, is a lie, it is not truth. When I came back to Nigeria, I was away for 25 years, I never thought I would come back to Nigeria. When I came back in 2015, I found our people in the midst of all these. I went about lecturing people that Yoruba is a great nation."

The professor also spoke on why elections should not hold in the southwest region, he said, "The more we hold elections under the 1999 constitution, the more we prolong our suffering. The Fulani marauders are telling us that they are in Southern Nigeria, Yoruba land, Igbo land, everywhere because the constitution allows that, so the more we hold elections under 1999 constitution, the more we prolong our suffering.

"I am very confident that if it comes to a referendum or some sort of voting, the Yoruba people will say in a very large majority that they don't want election in their part of Nigeria and those in the East and Middle Belt are saying the same and look at it, South and the Middle Belt account for three-quarters of the population of Nigeria so this is not the question of the minority.

"In our kind of situation, it is sensible to resort to what other nationalities have resorted to. Many nationalities that have tried to conduct their election like the Catalonians in Spain, like the Scots in Britain. We think it would be better to persuade the United Nations to come and run our referendum, the same way they did it in Sudan.

News Nigeria

President Buhari attends APC National Executive Committee (NEC) Meeting in State House on 20th April 2022

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 19m

ALL PROGRESSIVES CONGRESS
11TH MEETING OF THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

VE COMMITTEE
officialapcng
officialapc.ng

APC NWC 1: President Buhari with L-R: Speaker Femi Gbajabiamila, Senate President Ahmed Lawan, VP Yemi Osinbajo, APC Chairman Senator Abdullahi Adamu, APC Secretary Iyinola Omisore, and others during the APC National Executive Committee (NEC) Meeting in State House on 20th April 2022

What is Jeff Verkouille's opinion of Nigerian traditional weddings, now that he had his today 07/04/18?

Boris Ezomo · Follow Nigerian and proud of it 4y

Today was a big day for Jeff and Roselyn Zuyeali Verkouille. They had their Nigerian traditional wedding.

I said to myself. No way are they are getting married without me witnessing it. I had to see how our "Oyinbo in Paradise" holds up to our Nigerian traditional weddings.

So I hoped into the car in Benin City, and drive (okay someone else did the driving) all the way to Ajaokuta for the wedding. On behalf of all the people on Quora, especially Nigerians. This research feild trip had to be done to answer this important question. You all Quorans can thank me later.

I met a really lovely couple. I understand why our quora resident Oyinbo is in Paradise, and it is not because of Nigeria. More because of a certain Nigerian.

They had so much in common. I found both to be “down to earth” as we Nigerians say. Extremely friendly and even took time to have a chat with me in between the ceremonies.

As a bonus I got to met Jeff’s mum. She flew in for the wedding. She really remains me of my mother. Down to her love of animals. She has three cats and two dogs at home. She has far to go before catching up with my mother. The Benin City resident cat woman, with her collection of six cats.

If Jeff does not mind. I would love to share a few photos with the rest on Quora.

Also could they both answer the questions I asked of both of them. For research purposes of course.

Jeff and I. Here I noticed that my habit of Suya (grilled meat) and beer is beginning to show.

Jeff’s mum. Ignore the date stamp. My camera had gone mad.

Here is the happy couple. Just stunning, nothing more to say

This picture answers a common question frequently appearing on quota. “is it right for people of other cultures to dress in other cultures outfit?”

What do you think? Do they not look fantastic? They really make the Nigerian outfits look good.

It was great meeting you guys

What’s life like for an average Nigerian living in Europe?

John Efekodo Design Engineer 2y

UK
Things I didn't like:

1. No pepper in food.
2. Horizontal falling rain.
3. Wierd sun. Either too early 3:30am or too late 9:00am.
4. No cock crowing in the morning to wake everyone up.
5. Snow is not even glamorous in real life.
6. The weather is unnecessarily cold.

Things I liked:

You get a seat on the bus or train.

The driver or conductor are not shouting inside the bus or train.
Every business seems to use MS Outlook or MS Acces. When you call 2nd time, they know your name, address, and why you called the first time.

There's always electricity. No need to buy a generator and fuel it.
There aren't pot holes on the road
There's painted lines on the roads.
Lecturers actually come to class (and on time too).
Coin money still has value.
Things I couldn't understand:

Why are the people still living there despite the bad weather?

The roads are good and there's electricity everyday. What are they still complaining about?

Why do people buy on credit and go about with 0.00 bank account?

What's the point of licking Ice cream?
That's just a snap shot of my daily life when I lived in the UK years ago.

Related Links

How is life like for Nigerians living in Canada?
Do Nigerians that have moved to Europe end up regretting it?
How is life in Dubai for Nigerians?
How do I save to get out of a country like Nigeria to live in Europe?
How is life like for Nigerians in the UK?
How is life for Nigerians in Sweden?
How is life like for Nigerians living in America?
How is life like for Nigerian living in Poland?
How is life like for Nigerians living in Israel?
Do all Nigerians live in huts?

News Nigeria

Give me 4 years, I will fix Nigeria - Peter Obi

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 16h

THE Peoples Democratic Party, PDP, presidential aspirant, Mr. Peter Obi has said that he needs only four years to reposition the country if elected president of Nigeria in 2023.

Addressing stakeholders from Anambra Central in Awka, Obi said Nigeria at the moment, is unproductive and therefore needed someone to move it from a consumption to a productive nation.

He said: “Nigeria must create jobs; it must give people the opportunity to earn their livelihood; and it is not a rocket science.

"I have travelled to over 30 countries and I still say it that all I need is four years to position Nigeria to the path of progress”, Obi said.

"I would fix insecurity, bad economy, poor electric power supply and ensure food security in the country within the shortest possible time as president.

“Who says we can’t enjoy steady power supply in this country? Egypt, between 2016 and today, has doubled its power generation and distribution from 28,000 megawatts to 58,000 megawatts. Vietnam has doubled its own from 38 to 76.

“Let us give people conditions; if I am Mr President and if we do not have 20,000 megawatts in three years, I’ll go home".

At the meeting, stakeholders in the zone endorsed the former governor of the state for president, saying their support was based on his impressive performance in the state while in office as governor.

What Nigerian street food will you advise every tourist in Nigeria to try?

Aniekpeno Ekong Lived in Nigeria for more than 30 years Jan 12

I would recommend any tourists to try the ever delicious suya meat. Suya is a spicy meat skewer which is a popular food item available in Nigeria. Suya is generally made with skewered beef, ram, or chicken. Innards such as kidney, liver and tripe are also used. Suya meat is garnished with cabbage, tomatoes, onions, cucumber and red paper.

What are some positive sides to living in Nigeria?

Sean Lana Studied History & German (language) at University of Hamburg Updated 3y

Bills: The most important bills runs up in Nigeria yearly.For example House rent, sometimes the landlord want you to pay every two years.This is good because in advanced countries,you pay your house rent monthly and sometimes you get stressed, if you don't have money.This can happen to anybody and once you get evicted out of your Apartment ,you will become homeless. Your chances of becoming homeless person in Nigeria is very low. It is very easy to acquire properties or build your own personally house.

Speed limit :Even though the roads are bad, you can enjoy car race in Nigeria. No speed limit on the roads.

Family : I believe you can still raise a decent family in Nigeria because of our culture. Divorce rate is still low in comparison to other countries because many Nigerian women endure in marriage and always work hard so that they can enjoy their married life.Money also usually contribute to issues in marriage leading to divorce, It is still cheaper to maintain a family in Nigeria.

Food: We have different type of foods that are healthy.Nigerians didn't grow up with those cheese burgers,French fries etc.Consumption of chemical processed foods in Nigeria is very low. Your chances of living a healthy life is high. You also do not need any gym membership card, your daily activities alone is enough to loose weight.

Business : It is very easy for you to have your career and business going fine for you. Starting business in Nigeria is not that complicated like in western countries.

Crime Rate : Nigerians are generally not violent people like the way the media proclaim them to be.We have no Gun store in the country. So no gun shooting or shooting spree..It might have happened but at least very low. However, with my travel experience there is no perfect system just that one is better than the other.

Related Links

What are the best things about living in Nigeria?
What are the pros and cons of living in Nigeria?
What's the dark side of living in Nigeria?
How is life in Nigeria?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
What's so negative and positive with Nigeria?

What are the culture shocks for foreigners in Nigeria?
What is something good that is happening in Nigeria right now?
How much do you need to live a good life in Nigeria?
How hard is life in Nigeria at the moment?

How is it possible that Rwanda is developing at a faster rate than Nigeria when Nigeria has access to the coast, youthful population, and natural resources? Why don't the leaders of Nigeria replicate the model of the leaders of Rwanda?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

· Follow Nigerian 2y

Rwanda is more secure and more easily secured. Nigeria lacks the naval capability to secure its coasts, its youthful population offers a recruitment pool for all sorts of criminal enterprises and as for natural resources, well…

A loss of 300,000 barrels a day costs the government roughly $1.7 billion a month. In comparison, only 5,000 to 10,000 barrels are stolen per day in Mexico, which produces a comparable amount of oil.

A Primer on Nigeria's Oil Bunkering
This question hits the nail on the head on what I see as the major problem in analysing the Nigerian malaise. It is the 'As seen in London, Dubai, Singapore, China…' syndrome. Congratulations Rwanda, you're in august company. It is basically the assumption often advanced in public commentary that Nigeria is a generic template which just needs the 'correct writing', as seen in… But, Nigeria is not generic, meaning that ultimately whatever template emerges, in order to be successful, it must have been designed to solve actual Nigerian problems.

Nigeria's only worthwhile resources are her people and crude oil. The former is a double-edged sword and the latter, contrary to what decades of propaganda have primed Nigerians to think, is our only commercial resource, and even then, not at the extractive price of the Gulf States. Further, it is a resource with a 30-year timeline.

The primary difference between the leadership of Nigeria and Rwanda is two-fold. The first has to do with their pre-leadership background and the second, with the incentives of their society. The Rwandan leadership, it must be recalled, are an essentially meritocratic bunch who cut their teeth in the refugee camps and the Ugandan bush war. In contrast, the Nigerian leadership came of age in an era of abundance. The British were leaving not just positions of authority, but lucrative ones. Oil was discovered soon after, proceeds from which triggered a boom of White Elephants—some to be fair, worked. Foreign businesses were expropriated or legislated into admitting Nigerian ownership and so on.

For every Nigerian born after the war, those days are gone. Had they not bungled the country's industrial push and chastened by that experience, retreated into being rentiers; they would have been competing in a world in which Eastern Europe was behind the iron-curtain, China still chained to the iron bowl, Latin America still protectionist and half of Africa pretty much at war. Now, all those regions are up and running. The leadership, because they had it easy still persist in assuming, and not just that, but loudly proclaiming that it will be easy. Just a slight tweak, as seen in…

The refusal to admit the exact level of Nigeria's resources leads to spending pressures to misallocate resources. Because the perception of the pie is that it is infinite, not infinitesimal, as it actually is; society encourages the presence of big fish in little ponds whose purpose is to grab a share of the resources. That is why pretty much every suggestion of reform is zero-sum: Develop our area or we will destroy the country! We forget that big fishes in little ponds mean less food for the tiddlers.

When confronted with the reality of our propaganda, it cannot be that the propaganda is untrue, it must be sabotage, a conspiracy, a lack of effort!

Somehow, I doubt Rwandans do not know exactly who they are, where they are and what they must do to survive.

In sum, Nigeria has replicated every 'model' there is. The Steel Mill meant to drive industrialisation costs us billions of naira every year, has a full complement of staff and has never produced a drop of steel. We established Independent Anti-Corruption Agencies like Singapore. Nobody believes that Nigeria is less corrupt. We tried a National Shipping Line, A National Carrier, State-Driven Industrialisation, Structural Adjustment, Parliamentary and Presidential, so many models and systems. We even elected a tall glass-wearer with a military background

All built on sand, the rains fell, the floods came and winds blew. Hopefully, there ends up being some rock underneath this foundation of sand.

Related Links

Which country is the most developed, Rwanda, Kenya, Nigeria, or Angola?

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?
Why is Rwanda safer than most other African countries, even though not as rich?
Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?

Why is Nigeria one of the poorest country in the world with all the resources that can make her the one of the richest country in world?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?
What are the chances of Rwanda becoming the 'Singapore of Africa'?
Is Rwanda the most prosperous country in Africa?

Why is Nigeria the only black-led Subsaharan African country that manages to grow to have

What are the things not to do in Nigeria? Know who you're dealing with – do not offend the wrong person.

Victor Dirikebamor

Storyteller 2y

Originally Answered: What is a mistake you should never do in Nigeria?

Remember you're your own security in Nigeria, if you offend the wrong person, trouble would be your business.

How the rich, mighty and powerful get off here is through intimidation.

They could use the police and sometimes even the military against you, at this point only a few cares if you're innocent, your concern is if you're going to be in some shit hole jail or buried honourably.

And for those who are in the racket of fast business, "there are many different kinds of people in the world, and you can never assume that everyone will react to your strategies in the same way."

"Deceive or outmanoeuvre some people and they will spend the rest of their lives seeking revenge."

"They are wolves in lambs' clothing."

"Choose your victims and opponents carefully, then – never offend or deceive the wrong person."

(Source: 48 laws of power)

I know of a boy who paid a huge sum to some automobile repairs shop manager to learn the business, after a while, the boy discovered this man knew nothing about the job.

He was outsourcing engineers for every major job, this caused the young man to ask for his money back so he could re-subscribe to a company that knows the business, this was a big mistake.

The manager had police friends, and some military friends too, and he had money... He was rich.

The boy ended up begging for his life as the said manager labelled him a criminal wanting to do his business harm.

His puppets didn't only beat the shit out of this boy but made living hell for him...an innocent young man.

This kind of cases could bring out the worst in Victor, I could give my life to prove a point without thinking twice.

Intimidation is the worst of sins for me, and it's so normal in this part of the world.

The former and sitting president

I can only encourage people at this point to take advice from the bible, 'Be ye wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove'.

Offend no one.

If you must do:

Know who to offend!

Related Links

What good things can you say about Nigeria?
What should I absolutely not do when visiting Nigeria?

What are some reasons that you, personally, would not want to visit or live in the Nigeria?

Why should I never visit Nigeria?
What are the hardest adjustments to make when visiting Nigeria?
What are 10 things to know about Nigeria?
What should someone visiting Nigeria for the first time know?

What's something unique about living in Nigeria that is unlike anywhere else in the world?

Is Nigeria safe for tourists?
How dangerous is Nigeria?

News Nigeria

No Administration Has Done What I've Done For Nigerian Businesses – Buhari

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 21m

President Muhammadu Buhari has claimed that no previous administration has created an environment as friendly and viable for Nigerian businesses as done by his government.

Buhari stated this when he hosted members of the business community and leaders of political parties for an Iftar dinner at the Presidential Villa, Abuja, on Tuesday.

"No administration has done as much as we have done in the creation of a climate best suited for business, big and small, to thrive.

"The ease of doing business index that is globally recognized has acknowledged that the ease with which business is carried out in the country has never been better than it is today. We will continue to make it better.

"We will equally continue to count on the support of the private sector to improve economic growth and create new job opportunities for our teeming population," Buhari's senior media adviser, Femi Adesina, quoted the president to have said at the dinner.

Buhari urged the private sector to complement his administration's effort in poverty reduction and job creation for the young people.

"Employment is critical to the stability and prosperity of our country. Government and the private sector, working together, have an opportunity to transform the lives of people in ways that was hard to imagine in the past," he said.

The president also urged all political parties to keep their differences aside and support his government to fight insecurity in the country.

According to Adesina, the president described insecurity as a ‘‘common enemy’’ bedevilling the country.

‘‘Without mass, popular support to our hard working Armed Forces, it will take us much longer to finish off the successful war we are waging against terrorism, banditry and kidnapping.

”Our country must be kept safe for progress and prosperity to be entrenched.

‘‘I look forward to seeing the reflection of this spirit in the relationship between the parties and the government, especially as the electioneering season will soon be on us.

‘‘Today, we can proudly say that we have a political system that allows political parties of all views and persuasions, reflecting the diversity of our nation to co-exist, and contest for elections at all levels of government without fear or institutional bias and pressure,’’ he said.

Speaking at the event, the ruling All Progressives Congress (APC) National Chairman, Abdullahi Adamu, urged leaders of political parties to make firm commitments towards peaceful and successful 2023 general elections.

Nigeria is diverse ethnically. Does the country need to zone the presidency every four or eight years?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam · Follow Observer of Political Trends Fri

There are 100-400 ethnicities in Nigeria. Are they all going to get a president?

We all know better but choose to act otherwise because democracy in Nigeria is a mummer’s farce.

Albion did not believe in it. Hence, they introduced it while washing their hands off the whole project. Our leaders do not either. If they did, their conviction would motivate a better job. They go through the motions to keep their assets abroad liquid and save their precious visas. The public barely believes in Nigeria, much less some foreign concept of ‘governance’.

National office should be a reward for spectacular performance at the state level. A serious country would have a stable of sub-national star performers vying for national office. During elections, we would have a solid record of achievement to evaluate.

We don’t have that because we are not serious about democracy. We refuse to accept that it is an action, not an idea.

Zoning is a sop to the ambitions of those politicians that have the resources to mobilise voters. Mobilisation is an expensive investment recouped by ruling. Ruling comes at the expense of governing. Hence, the same problems, arguments and ‘solutions’. They were before our time and persist. Their continuation remains a choice.

Related Links

How ethnically diverse is Newfoundland, Canada?
How diverse is your country?
Can Nigeria preserve its linguistic and ethnic diversity?
Is Nigeria a developed country?
Does Nigeria Have A President?
Why is it difficult for the Eastern region of Nigeria to provide a president?
Why can't Bola Ahmed Tinubu become the next president of Nigeria come 2023?
How ethnically diverse is the Dominican Republic?

NIGERIA
Chinua Achebe at his house in Enugu, Nigeria, 1959

Posted by Frank Abah 17h

He is one of Africa's most acclaimed authors and considered by some to be the father of modern African literature. His early novels, including the groundbreaking Things Fall Apart (1958) and No Longer at Ease (1960), describe poignantly the effects of European colonialism on Igbo society, Nigeria, and newly independent African nations.

He taught at the University of Nigeria, Nsukka (1976-81), and was founding editor (1971) of the influential journal Okike. Achebe returned to the novel form with Anthills of the Savannah (1987). He has also written numerous short stories, children's books, and a book of essays, Home and Exile (2000), reflecting on his and his nation's coming of age.

- Igbo History And Culture TV –

News Nigeria

"MARK MY WORDS, WAR WILL SOON BREAK OUT IN NIGERIA" –Olusegun Obasanjo, the former Nigerian head of State

Aniekpeno Ekong Tue

Another civil war in Nigeria has become imminent and inevitable. The reason for its inevitability is simply because Muhammadu Buhari, the Northern Nigeria Fulani oligarchs and the wider network of Fulani in Sub-Saharan Africa have concluded plans to adopt Nigeria as the homeland for all Fulani in Africa.

Fulani have realised that the wandering and rootless lifestyle of cattle herding is no longer tenable in the twenty-first century. Fulani need to have land to call home and rear cattle and that land should be Nigeria. The indigenous peoples of Nigeria have clearly, vehemently and stridently opposed this diabolic plan and both sides are mobilising for war.

The Fulani won't relent and the indigenous people will not give up their land.

The same Fulani Project, having failed so shamelessly and woefully in the Central African Republic, will not be allowed to fail this time as the Nigerian Fulani project is better funded with the massive [stealing] of the sovereign wealth of Nigeria through nationwide kidnapping for ransom by lower class Fulani and the seizure of the reigns of Government and wealth by the elite Fulani.

Kidnapping and the seizure of the institutions of Government are all for the purpose of implanting Fulani into the mainstream and control of politics and the economy of Nigeria for the objective of funding the Fulani Project in Nigeria.

The Central African Republic (CAR) has gone through exact same experience that Nigeria is going through right now in the hands of the Fulani. The country has been run down by the killings and destitution wrought by rival gangs in the fight to destroy the chokehold the Fulani had on the politics and economy of their country. Although the Fulani hegemony over the CAR has been defeated, the street gangs that defeated the armed forces have turned on one another and themselves, unable to rise above petty gang warfare to rebuild their nation.

The Fulani have become a blight on Africa and it's biggest country Nigeria. Unable to break out of its centuries old cow herding and wandering culture, it continues to pull down every nation wherever it has any populations. Some countries in West Africa, Ghana and their ancestral home Guinea, have mastered the brutal tactics of dealing with Fulani and the Fulani have learnt the bitter lesson by staying away from these countries.

In the CAR, the Fulani following the pattern of their ethnocentric politics, had seized control of the commanding heights of the country's military and financial institutions, the foreign exchange trade, the mining and export of gold and above all the governing structures of Government. Mitchel Djotodia, a hare brained military officer and his Fulani faction seized power in a brazen coup by a demographic minority. All the non-Fulani military officers were flushed out of the forces, all the mineral deposits in the country were seized by Fulani merchants, non-Fulani traders were barred from trading in foreign exchange and the entire top echelon of the Civil Service were occupied by Fulani by as much as 83%.

France, the former colonial masters of CAR watched them do all these over the years and did not raise a protest. As in Nigeria, the Fulani were just 3% of the population of CAR, tucked in the desert recesses of the nation's Northwest. No world or regional power raised a whimper even though the ethnic groups of the rich southern forest regions roiled.

In CAR the Fulani went even beyond the provocative as they are doing now in Nigeria.

They started seizing ethnic lands, raiding churches and killing worshippers, the most brazen being the attack on Our Lady of Fatima Catholic Church in a town near Bangui the capital, where dozens of Catholic faithful were massacred during mass. The Fulani used their cattle bases allotted by Government to launch attacks and gun fights on the surrounding communities for robberies and ransom paying kidnaps as is happening now in Nigeria.

Again, as is happening in Nigeria today, the purpose of all the action of the Fulani was simple; to transfer all wealth available in the CAR by all and every means and place it in the hands and control of the Fulani.

FULANI REPEATING IN NIGERIA WHAT THEY DID IN C.A.R.

The same play book used in Central African Republic is guiding the actions and policies of the Buhari Government in Nigeria.

1). The Fulani elite are raiding the Central Bank, buying dollars and other currencies at heavily discounted rates.

2). Other Fulani are raiding the NNPC, ploughing through the vaults and trading Nigerian crude for personal gain.

3). The educated wing are mowing down governing structures, taking forceful charge and control of all commanding heights of Government and the armed forces.

4). The uneducated Fulani herdsmen are engaged in kidnapping for ransom and now primed to take over ethnic lands, spreading themselves across the nation in settlements acquired with public funds to terrorise indigenous populations.

HOW THE YOUTH OF C.A.R. DESTROYED THE FULANI PROJECT:

It will be of great use to retell the story of Central African Republic so as to have the understanding of how the youth of the country removed the yoke of unremitting oppression by the Fulani. The youth formed street gangs and committed to take on the army with all their vaunted training and intimidating and deadly weaponry. The youth had locally fabricated flint guns and machetes, while the army was menacing with their machine guns, grenade throwers and rocket launchers.

When the fight started on that fateful day in 2013 in Bangui, everyone expected a complete annihilation of youth on the streets but the youth took the fight straight to the Guard Brigade near the Presidential Palace.

By evening of the same day, soldiers bodies were seen littering the streets while some were cut to pieces. By night fall, the streets of Bangui had become the play ground and the killing field of the youth of Bangui. In 3 days of street fighting, the entire Presidential Guards of the army of the CAR was decimated, in disarray running to their ethnic base in the far north and President Djotodia, the Fulani tyrant had abdicated and run away from the Presidential Palace and Capital, Bangui.

Tyrants survive for only as long as the people live in fear and choose to tolerate them. The Buhari Government is counting on deploying the Nigerian armed forces against the many ethnicities where the RUGA will be sited, beginning with the minority groups.

Buhari's plan is to deploy Nigerian troops to subdue Nigerian people for the benefit of Fulani. Central African Republic provides a veritable lesson on how to deal with the unrelenting Fulani menace. The Niger Delta and Boko Haram if anything, have shown that the Nigeria army is not invincible in a fight with local forces. If anything, the Nigeria Army will likely disintegrate if made to fight in many fronts at once.

It is a known truth that the Fulani will not relent in their quest for the conquest of Nigeria until they have seized all sources of income and made everyone else subservient to their rule and hegemony.

The Fulani in Nigeria, in nearly a century of political and economic ascendancy have acquired so much power and money that it will defeat the purpose of such acquisition if they don't deploy it for the very purpose for the grasp for power, which is the conquest of Nigeria for the overlordship of the Fulani.

The final stage of the grand plan to subdue Nigeria for Fulani overlordship are afoot and Buhari and his people cannot back out now. So a war has to be fought to resolve matters.

Our people say that you don't strip a woman naked just to start looking. Nigeria has been stripped naked and with the RUGA monstrosity on the works, the next thing is to start the deployment of troops to protect RUGA in their various locations of development.

It was bound to happen that the Fulani who have been taking so much out of Nigeria and have succeeded in binding Nigeria hand and foot politically and economically, will take the wrong step into the abyss one day. The logical culmination of all the rapaciousness would be the last ditch attempt at the ultimate land grab, to seize the lands belonging to indigenous communities and hand it over to Fulani.

Internecine war in different RUGA locations and different fronts is therefore inevitable. Communities will rage to keep their land or lose it to their eternal shame and regret. Communities, particularly in Igboland will rather choose to be annihilated than lose their land to a hostile and predatory People.

Fulani have no land in Nigeria because they are not indigenous to Nigeria. They are migrants into Nigeria.

The decision by the Fulani to seize land by force in Nigeria can only lead to war in the many places where this seizure will happen. The people must resist as of necessity. They have done so in the Central Africa Republic and reduced the country to rubble and they will do it again in Nigeria.

Buhari will be compelled to deploy police and soldiers to defend the settlements and war will be declared everywhere there is a RUGA settlement in Nigeria. Fulani have no land to hold dear and protect in Nigeria. In fact, Fulani have no stake or investment in the project called Nigeria and will not care if Nigeria burns, in fact Fulani will be very willing to let Nigeria burn if the people are not willing to submit to their overlordship.

So they are minded to adopt a scorched earth policy to obliterate Nigeria. They have nothing to lose. They did it in CAR and they will do same in Nigeria. It will be the responsibility of the indigenous people of Nigeria to find common grounds to protect the land of their ancestral inheritance and prevent the Fulani from putting a knife on their unity and their need to bind themselves together in one nation, but they cannot do this without first containing the Fulani. Fulani will try to divide them.

Buhari and the Fulani oligarchs are counting strongly on deploying the armed forces to quell insurrections that will arise from this massive land grab, but that will be the Achilles heel of their grand plan. Once soldiers are armed to put down these insurrections, they will turn against their commanders to defend their communities. Nigerians should therefore await the great unravelling of their armed forces.

Do the Fulani have the firepower, the men and the capacity to fight? In the entire history of the Nigerian armed forces, the Hausa/Fulani officers and enlisted men have always been promoted far beyond their qualifications and competencies. The capacity to fight and man the different departments of modern warfare will be put to overwhelming test in any ensuing encounter.

The Fulani never fight an enemy in a frontal war. They attack isolated and undefended villages. In any direct confrontation, they run away. It was evident even in the battle of Bangui. Well armed Fulani soldiers could not take on street gangs with flint guns and machetes. It has also shown in the war against Boko Haram. The poor performance of commanders of their ethnic stock is a bad joke among soldiers in the front.

Hausa/Fulani soldier had to be sorted out and protected from slaughter by Boko Haram forces. This is not to talk of unending betrayals of their Christian colleagues and commanders in the battlefront.

Buhari, a Fulani irredentist, will use to his advantage and for the benifits of his agenda to divide, the ethnic and religious cleavages among the people of Nigeria. But the people aught to know that the Fulani are friends to no one and that a Fulani friend today can become an adversary tomorrow. You are only friend to Fulani for as long as you continue to serve a purpose in their overall plan.

Let the talk cease and the battle begin.

Is Nigerian someone from Niger or someone from Nigeria?

Yome Agu A Nigerian is a person from Nigeria Mon

A Nigerien is a person from Niger.

Why are Africans and Nigerians over religious?

Curious Naija Boy Lives in Lagos, NigeriaApr 17

I am going to write about Nigeria specifically.

Nigerians are religious because living in Nigeria is a gamble, this is a country where nothing is predictable.

Nigerian graduates swearing their allegiance to the country

You went to school you graduated, they said you must go for NYSC, you as a prospective NYSC corp member your luck is entwined between being sent to a peaceful location or being sent to a kidnappers den, being able to travel safely through the bad roads, using the terrible transport system or being among the unlucky ones who couldn't make it through the journey, being posted to a place where you can acquire real relevant skills that could improve your employability or being posted to a village school where you just idle around for a year.

Unsafe and uncertain: Inside Nigeria's mandatory youth corps

NYSC members complain of being sent to dangerous areas, poor conditions and little improvement in job prospects.

https://www.aljazeera.com/amp/features/2021/9/28/is-nigerias-mandatory-youth-corps-still-fit-for-purpose

After finishing your NYSC, now you need a job that is another major gamble that can dictate the course of your life, at this phase nothing is predictable also whether you graduated with the best certificate or not as far as you are an ordinary citizen you will certainly need God to prop up your luck.

I don't want to bother writing about how much you need your luck propped up when you finally and luckily get a job as a graduate in Nigeria.

Also as a citizen of this noble country, you need God to prop up your luck of not getting sick from what ever you do for survival, Nigeria has a doctor to patients ratio of 1:6000, so if you get sick and you are not so wealthy sorry bro your case is "on God": that's what we say during these period of uncertainty, or we say "you are OYO(on your own)". The government are always busy preparing for the next election, they have little time governing.

You have a business that rely on electricity sorry your case is “on God". Predicting that there's going to be electricity to run your business throughout a given day is just like predicting the second coming of Jesus. A lot of business close down because of this uncertainty, beside my house there used to be a frozen food store, they close down after seeing many of their stocked items rot in the freezer, now they sell mattresses, they are trying to reduce their uncertainty.

There are many more uncertainty in Nigeria than one could possibly list out in a small article. The point is it's Nigeria that makes people need God.

*Come to Nigeria you will need some God.

And there are people who see opportunities in these uncertainty and capitalized on it; the religious leaders.

The idea of religion in Nigeria is, when you serve God, pray regularly, pay tithes, then God the most powerful will help with all these uncertainty. Very few people care about hell or heaven over here.

Right from childhood you will be told constantly that you need to be religious and closer to God to maneuver these life challenges, that would actually not be there if the government do their job.

Meet Nnete Okorie-Egbe
She was 63 year old in 1929 when she led the women riot against colonial taxation in Aba, Eastern Nigeria. She died at 102 in 1968.

This person I’m going out with lives in Nigeria. She said they shut off power at night. Is that true? Cause I don’t know for sure if that’s true.

Aderemi Adebowale

Educationist/ Head of Nursery and Basic School at Richdeal School (2008–present)1y

Your girlfriend is right and sincere. The reason for this is multidimensional . However ,it is not as if they deliberately program light to shut off at night all the time The problem is the generating company do not seem to generate enough to get round the teeming population. The distribution companies called Discos have to ration the light and by hours . sometimes you get at night sometimes you don't, sometimes you get in the daytime sometimes you don't. How often you get light also sometimes depend on the area. Highbrow locations like Lekki, Victoria Island, Magodo in Lagos and other areas where there are wealthy people may get light 24/7 because they can pay sufficiently for it . So we can say it's the poorer neighbourhoods(speaking about Lagos State where I reside) that suffer long hours of no light .And the power outage could be in the day or at night it depends. The timing is dependent on calculations by the disco or whether there is a fault with generating/ distribution facility and how long it will take to put such facility back to work which could take from hours to weeks to even months! I mean it depends. Nevertheless there are a lot of things to enjoy in Nigeria, after all there are alternative source of power that you can make use of. So don't miss out on other pleasant possibilities in Nigeria aside light!

Related Links

How dangerous is Nigeria?
How is life in Nigeria?
Why is life hard in Nigeria?
What is the brutal truth about Nigeria?

I'm in a relationship with a man who tells me he's from Nigeria for almost 6 years. I've sent him over $87,000. What should I do?

This woman somehow got my number and saying she slept w/ my man and my man said he doesn't even know her. How do I know he's telling me the truth?

I've been dating this guy for 3 months. I still don't know where he lives. He knows where I live. He was sick one time, and I offered to give him some things to take to help him, and he agreed, but I had to meet him somewhere. Is this normal?

How true is it that the US Military major deployed in Nigeria doesn't have account access in that country?

How do you know when a Nigerian man is serious about you?

Is it a dangerous relationship in which you have to do things that you don't want to do? But you're scared that the other p

Is Nigeria safe for tourists?

Alex Roman Travel expert at hikersbay.com 7y

UK Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) advise against all travel to:

- Borno State
- Yobe State
- Adamawa State
- Bauchi State
- Gombe State

- Kano city
- Okene City
- Riverine areas of Delta, Bayelsa, Rivers, Akwa Ibom and Cross River States
- Warri city

The FCO advise against all but essential travel to:

- Kano State
- Kaduna State
- Jigawa State
- Katsina State
- Sokoto State
- Zamfara State
- Kebbi State
- Jos city in Plateau State
- Riyom and Barkin Ladi Local Government Areas of Plateau State
- Okene region of Kogi State
- Non-riverine areas of Delta, Bayelsa, Rivers and Akwa Ibom States
- Abia State

There is a high threat from terrorism. In the past few weeks there have been explosive attacks in Damaturu, Kano, Jos, Kaduna, Abuja and Lagos, with multiple casualties.

On 1 October, Nigeria celebrates Independence Day. On 6 and 7 October Nigerians celebrate Eid-al-Adha. In recent years, attacks have taken place around religious and public holidays in public or crowded places, including places of worship. You should be particularly vigilant during these periods. Avoid affected areas in the immediate aftermath of any attack.
You should avoid public places where crowds gather including religious gatherings and insecure public spaces like markets and transport hubs.

A heavy security presence often indicates areas of particularly high risk. An attack took place on 17 September at the Teacher Training College, just off the BUK road in Kano City which resulted in a number of casualties.

There were a series of bomb attacks in Kano and Kaduna prior to the Eid long weekend (from 25 – 28 July) and in Kano over the Eid long weekend, and a further bomb was exploded in Kano on 30 July.

Boko Haram regularly mounts attacks in northern Nigeria. The majority of attacks occur in the north east, particularly in Borno and Yobe states where Boko Haram's operating base is. There has, however, been a significant number of attacks in other Nigerian states and further attacks could occur anywhere.

Boko Haram issued a video on 19 February threatening to attack oil installations and oil workers in the Niger Delta region of south-east Nigeria. See Terrorism

There is a high threat of kidnap throughout Nigeria. Recent terrorist kidnaps have occurred mostly in northern Nigeria, but could occur anywhere in Nigeria. Kidnaps can be for financial or political gain, and can be motivated by criminality or terrorism. See Kidnapping

The level of consular assistance available to British nationals in areas where the FCO advise against all or all but essential travel is limited.

The Nigerian authorities have issued a statement confirming cases, including deaths, of Ebola virus disease. On 8 August President Jonathan declared a national state of emergency.

On 8 August the World Health Organisation (WHO) released a statement following a meeting of the International Health Regulation Emergency Committee, declaring the Ebola outbreak a 'Public Health Emergency of International Concern'. This includes a recommendation that there should be no general ban on international travel or trade, and that in states with Ebola transmission:

The Head of State should declare a national emergency

The State should activate its national disaster/emergency management mechanisms

The State should conduct exit screening of all persons at international airports, seaports and major land crossings there should be no international travel of Ebola contacts or cases, unless the travel is part of an appropriate medical evacuation

The Nigerian government has introduced measures for passengers departing from and arriving at all airports. These measures may cause delays. Consider allowing extra time to pass through airport checks to make sure you catch your flight.

more info: Nigeria travel advice - GOV.UK

Related Links

How dangerous is Nigeria?
How is life in Nigeria?
What is the brutal truth about Nigeria?
Why is life hard in Nigeria?
What is it like to be a tourist in Nigeria?

What are the top 10 mind blowing facts about Nigeria?
Why Nigeria lacks tourists? Is tourism still underdeveloped in Nigeria?
What are the best places to visit in Nigeria?
Which African countries are relatively safe for tourists?
Is Nigeria safe to visit in 2022?

Why is Nigeria being referred to as the giant of Africa despite its terrible state?

Fagbohun Ayokunle

Project Supervisor, Site Engineer at Transcom Engineering Limited (2014–present) Mar 6

Nigeria is not just called The Giant of Africa will nothing, but a certain period of time accomplishment with many things to show for it,until Coups was suddenly introduced into the system by external powers that say the growth as a Threat towards their evil agenda for Nigeria and for Africa. Simply because they knew once Nigeria continue in that trend and path of development and Economic growth, it will lead the path to the rest of Africa liberation and future competition with world oeers of this present days.

I won't mention the countries involved in this game against Nigeria,The Nigeria people and the whole African Continent development and Poverty liberation, so they can indirectly pounder on our wealth with deceit and laTER Come to us with financial aid and loans that will continue making us poorer and poorer with lots of Internal Plus external instabilities inflicting us like a virus, like a pandemic.

Having succeeded in playing politics against us as a nation, they keep on making sure the Best candidate of liberation don't get to Topmost political positions of economic and political affairs if the nation, IL The Nigerians people can deliver themselves from this tyrancy and attrocities, nobody will help them. They need to breakout of the shell they are in, which is being used to cage the great destiny of majority of it's people . I pray to God to give them sense, most especially the Northern Youths that are being used as a tool of continual poverty and indirect slavery against the growth of the southern region and the whole

Related Links

Why do Nigerians think that Nigeria is the “giant” of Africa when other African countries don’t even like Nigeria?

There are lots of countries that are just as bad as Nigeria, but why is it that Nigeria always gets the most hate?

Is the splitting of Nigeria possible in practical terms?

What would it take to unite Africa as one country? Is it even possible, given the conditions there?

What can Nigeria do to reclaim her lost glory of being the giant of Africa?
Does Nigeria have the qualities to be called the "giant of Africa"?
Why is Nigeria being referred to as “The largest economy in Africa” and “The giant of Africa” when there are many African countries that are more developed?

Will Nigeria eventually become African superpower?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?

What is the brutal truth about Nigeria?

Kaosiso Nwachukwu Lived in Nigeria (1999–0) 3y

Wow first answer I did love to answer. There are brutal and naked truths about Nigeria and believe me, its not something that we Nigerians love rather its something that we just have to admit to.

Nigerians hate Nigeria but they won't tell you that.

Nigerians will tell you that things are bad at home but won't like you to tell them that because they already know.

If free visa is given to all Nigerians. I doubt if anyone will remain. Nothing brings Nigerians close like football. Other things are just something else.

Don't tell a Nigerian that he is lazy because he won't find it funny. There is inner love and urge to go home but they can't because of how things are.

If you think life is hard in your country, ask a Nigerian.
Nigerians are not that lousy or noisy people you know, personalities differ.

A Nigerian will tell you, his tribe in place of his state at home.

Don't tell a Nigerian about his brother that committed a crime, he probably doesn't know that guy, you call his brother.

Don't tell a Nigerian that he is a bandit, he doesn't like it.

An Average Nigerian has seen it all so don't tell him how you have suffered in your country because his story is something else.

All Nigerians are not the same.
Don't judge a Nigerian with what another Nigerian did. It provokes them.

A Nigerian doesn't like to be pushed to the wall.
A Nigerian will say God forbid while he laments about his country but do well to close your lips unless you want to be insulted.

A Nigerian wants to go home but sometimes can't make himself do that.

A Nigerian is prone to competition. Every stage involves a competition on its own. There is an Exam body called JAMB for anyone who wants to enter into a university in Nigeria. For a Nigerian to pass the cutoff for his institution, he has to beat thousands of others.

A Nigerian doesn't like being told their shit to their face, they already know it so keep quiet.

Don't tell him about a Nigerian prince you met online. Its not his business.

A Nigerian wants to blow. He wants to be best in midst of everyone.

A Nigerian is an opportunist. If he is working for you, be careful.

A Nigerian has trust issues in business but don't worry if you are not a Nigerian.

A Nigerian is not an atheist and don't label him stupid for having a belief.

A Nigerian is a hustler. As you Bring the money just know that we mean business.

Fighting is not our thing but tooth falls when it takes place.

A Nigerian knows how to tolerate. But do not take advantage of it.
He is bitter in his heart. Don't mind that smile.

Suicide is not an option, if it is so everyone would have gone.

They don't want someone to frustrate their efforts.

Agreement is agreement. If a Nigerian is duped or not, He has to fulfill his own part and pay you back.

They are always on a watch out.

They are always grateful to God. Even those that are not that religious.

They are cool and free.

Watch how you talk about them because you might not know if they are in your midst.

A Nigerian doesn't need your encouragement, he encourages himself.

He knows he is alone in midst of everyone.

His favorite words are “Oluwa is involved” meaning God is in control.

A Nigerian racks sense in everything because he doesn't want to be left out.

Thank you.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria so associated with crime, and what's the real truth?
What are the top 10 mind blowing facts about Nigeria?
What are the best things about living in Nigeria?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
How is life in Nigeria?
Why is life hard in Nigeria?
Is Nigeria safe for tourists?
How hard is life in Nigeria at the moment?

This person I’m going out with lives in Nigeria. She said they shut off power at night. Is that true? Cause I don’t know for sure if that’s true.

What are the pros and cons of living in Nigeria?

How is life in Nigeria?

Charity Okorie

Volunteer at Be My Eyes (2019–present) Updated 1y

I'm going to be extremely honest with my answer.

Life in Nigeria as a Nigerian can be extremely hard if you don't have drive, money, family or connection. Without any of the above you will not survive Nigeria.

The country is filled up with people who work hard to get their money but it's never enough because most employers here believe a salary (especially the low-income ones) gives them the right to treat you like their property.

If you have drive you will hustle both good and bad (work hard) make it, if you have money even better because of money answers just about everything in Nigeria (the respect you get, how fast you get a service done, your security, the good life and of course admiration and support which is even sometimes fake).

If you have a family that supports you even if you don't have drive (they will motivate you), money or connection (one of them must have and will come through for you because family means a lot down here)

Generally, it's not bad because there are genuinely nice people here and you can make things work but it can get better.

Life in Nigeria as a foreigner can be a bed of roses especially if you are white-skinned because you will get special treatment from the moment you land in any of the International Airports till the moment you decide to leave because of the perception that you have money and will surely help them out. As long as you are wise (or at least have a wise person in your team) you will be fine, there's a lot of fun, women, and activities (at a price of course) all at your disposal.

P.s Don't come to Somewhere like Lagos if you can't stand crowds or traffic because we have them in drones (Lagos and traffic is like 5 and 6. So stick to places like Abuja or Port Harcourt but then again whats your trip to Nigeria without Lagos?

I hope this helps.

Related Links

How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?
What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?
Is Nigeria safe for tourists?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
Why is life hard in Nigeria?
Is Nigeria a failed state?

What do you love about Nigeria?
How much do you need to live a good life in Nigeria?
Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?
What are the best things about living in Nigeria?

Is it possible for white people across the world to experience or be subject to racism? If so, how?

Agustin Velazquez

Originally Answered: Is it possible for white people across the world to experience or be subject to racism? If so, how?

A type of racism that is not often discussed is when travellers are treated different just based on their skin colour. It can happen to any person when they are in a place where their ethnicity makes them stand out, I'll focus on the question raised here about white people being subject to "racism".

Now, it is certainly expected that people attract attention if they have an appearance that is not common in the area, however the experience depends on how the locals react to that fact. This can go from very trivial things such as constant staring up to outright targeting for a dishonest gain. In some countries and with some communities (specially developing countries / impoverished ones), it is common that if you look white, it is very likely that you will be overcharged just by the virtue of your skin colour. The locals will assume that you are richer than them and take advantage of this.

Some generalities that white travellers might encounter while visiting some developing countries (specially in touristy areas):

Being overcharged in Taxi / Bus / Boat tickets.

Non-display of prices in products, so vendors can charge differently and depending on negotiation skills.

To become target of tourist scams, on things that locals would typically know.

Experience outright harassment, specially female travellers in patriarchal societies

In a more extreme case skin colour discrimination, it reminded me the experiences of a couple of travellers in Ethiopia.

IMPORTANT: I am not trying to insult any the communities below, but merely showing how white people can be subject to undesired behaviours just based on their skin colour. I am neither trying to victimise white people overall.

This is Juan Villarino, a travel blogger / backpacker from Argentina. If you can read Spanish, I highly recommend his blog. You can notice that Juan is the only one smiling at the camera.

Acrobata del Camino

Blog de viajes de Juan Pablo Villarino, primer blog de crónicas de viaje de Argentina. Viajando de forma independiente alrededor del mundo desde 2005.

https://acrobatadelcamino.com/

Among other travellers, Juan and his girlfriend Laura were for a culture shock while traveling through Ethiopia. At this point, Juan had already travelled through 91 countries, and coming from Argentina, he definitively has exposure to impoverished communities. However, they were not prepared for their experience in Ethiopia, specifically the area around Lake Tana. Some of things that happened this time:

When spotted by children, getting them to gather around them with the same phrase: "you, you, money, money" very insistently. On every step of the road.

Once invited to stay at a local home for free, a cousin of the owner comes and asks for money against the homeowner's wishes. Equivalent to the fee of a night at a luxorious hotel in Ethiopia.

Being fast approached by adults on a motorcycle , pretending to clash them and stopping at the last second. Only to see their reaction and make a laugh out of it.

Being told to "go back to your country" when the couple was asked to design an irrigation system, despite them not being engineers and explaining they don't have any relevant experience to do it.

Laura tried to buy fruit from one of the local children, so he could make some money out of it. However, the child replied: "No, fruit mine. You, money."

They were invited to have lunch for free with a large group of policemen, just so that the policemen could disappear and leave the entire bill to the couple.

There are a number of other experiences that I am excluding here. However, it is to note that the couple has expressed their admiration on Ethiopian culture, landmarks, history and the few genuine displays of hospitality.

On the other hand, we have another traveller from UK with similar experiences to the above and some other to add. Since this is in English, instead of summarising, I'll you leave the link below for each to get a conclusion on their own.

Unfortunately, racist behaviours come in all colours. And again, not trying to victimise whites only, as this could happen to a person of any other ethnicity.

Fuck you Ethiopia! - Insideotherplaces

https://www.insideotherplaces.com/fuck-you-ethiopia/

Do you think Nigerians look the same as Somalis?

Jay Rob Studies biological and physical anthropology of prehistory 1y

I don't believe they look alike generally. Somalis have what are considered to be 'gracile' features and sometimes (though not always) looser curl patterns and straighter hair. They have what is known as 'caucasoid' skull shape (although terms like caucasoid, negroid, mongoloid, etc are all obsolete and hold no merit in modern day biological anthropology.) This is likely due to climatic adaptations to highland and hot lowland climates, and genetically being the region that humans populated out of Africa into the middle east and the rest of Eurasia on numerous accounts. Then there were likely some back migrants into the region who likely contributed to this phenotype in very ancient times (although we know that these back migrants lacked almost all of the genes associated with extreme skin depigmentation so I'm not saying they're mixed or less black. Its hard to put modern day race classifications on the ancient genomic landscape of a population that has existed since prehistoric times.)

Nigerians often have broader features like wide noses, a 'negroid'- like skull shape. They often have courser hair that is type 4, though not always. Although there are groups such as Hausa, some Ibo and others that have more 'gracile' features and looser curl patterns as well. This is likely because Hausa tend to live in regions of the Sahel which are very dry and hot. The semi arid climate would warrant them to evolve to have ‘thinner bone structure’ to dissipate the dry heat. Nigeria is a diverse country with over 250 different ethnic groups. They are linguistically apart of the niger-congo language family associated with west Africa.

West Ethiopid Phenotype (often associated with Hausa Fulani

In conclusion both groups are genetically distinct but very diverse within themselves. You can find a multitude of different features in both countries, and throughout the entire African continent for that matter.

Are Niger and Nigeria one country?

Anazuo Salihu Born and bred in Nigeria, a developing country3y

Originally Answered: Is Niger and Nigeria one country?

Niger is a Francophone speaking (they speak French) country sitting just atop Nigeria. Nigeria is coloured green. We speak English because we were colonised by the British.

You can find more details about both countries here [1]

Additional information:

Here's River Niger, the 3rd largest river in Africa. It flows Eastwards in a clockwise direction, towards the Atlantic Ocean, through Nigeria's Niger-Delta region.

There's also Niger State, Nigeria's largest state by area. It has 2 major hydroelectric power plants and 2 game reserves.

Pronounciations:
Nigeria: naɪˈdʒɪəriə

Niger (country): French: niʒɛʁ

River Niger and Niger State: naɪdʒər

Footnotes
[1] Niger vs. Nigeria

What are people from Nigeria like?

Ridwan 'Dewale 'Dimeji

Lives in Nigeria 2y

The first time I traveled to Owerri, in Imo state, I was amazed to see the level of the so much talked about diversity in Nigeria. It’s entirely something different. I am from a tribe called Yoruba, Imo people are Igbo, we have the Hausa-Fulanis among others but these three make up nearly 70% of the country's population. The language, culture, background, food and many more is really different. Now there isn’t one particular way to describe how people from Nigeria are like, what I can assure you is that Nigerians are good people regardless of what you may have heard about the country and her people. People from Nigeria are great but there are some who are highly unwelcoming. If you meet the Yorubas, be ready for a highly warm and hospitable welcome, also be aware that greetings in Nigeria are like no other places, you can’t handshake an elderly person as it is seen as a sign of disrespect, you are expected to take your co-workers as a family. don’t be surprised if there are gossips at some workplaces especially among the women. The list is endless but the summary of it all is that people from Nigeria are great, and while we have the good ones, the bad ones are really trying hard to continue to soil the country’s public image.

What are the biggest culture shocks people face when coming to Lagos, Nigeria?

Dirichi Umunna Lived in Lagos, Nigeria (2017–2018) 4y

I recently relocated to Lagos and I have been waiting for any opportunity to write this. There are a lot of surprises here but these ones hit me hard the most:

People don't care....much. I don't get this one. I was rushing off to work, in the rain because I had to resume early. All the cars coming through just sped by and even poured water on me. I walked for 20 minutes and nobody asked why. Now, it is nobody's responsibility to save me from the rain, but coming from Abuja where I spent all my life, this event would rarely occur. Someone would surely ask for why you are out in the rain.

People are angry and aggressive: Passengers fighting with passengers, passengers fighting with conductors, conductors fighting with drivers, conductors being really blunt and straightforward. Sometimes the amount of anger in the air is palpable.

Everyone is in such a hurry. Nobody waits. We are all going somewhere and we must get there.

People struggle to enter buses. It sometimes is a hustle to get a bus here. You have to fight off a million other people. Did I mention that the buses are crude and a health hazard?

People are scared. You don't use your phone in a bus, you don't stay out to late, you don't talk to stangers.

Traffic is a bitch. You can comfortably spend two hours in traffic. People keep saying that with time, I will get used to Lagos. I truly do want to. I truly do.

Related Answer

What are the biggest culture shocks people face when coming to Lagos, Nigeria?

Ugo Nganwuchu ,Medicine | Entrepreneurship | Philantropy

Answered Oct 9, 2016 · Upvoted by Adekunle Olusanya, lives in Lagos, Nigeria (2008-present)

Lagos is an interesting place. I've lived here for some 20 years. It is a very fast-paced city. You must understand how to fit into it, and in such a way that you won't easily lose your balance.

I was in Owerri last month and transiting in a tricycle (keke) when suddenly the rider stopped at a junction. I noticed every other vehicle also stopped. I looked out of the tricycle to see what was going on, because the road ahead was obviously free. I had seen a vehicle trying to turn at the junction but I had ignored it because it didn't totally obstruct the road. It was few seconds later it clicked in my head that the vehicles, including my keke, actually stopped to enable the vehicle complete its turning. I was shocked and exclaimed, "Ah!!! You people are patient in this place oh!". This won't happen in any part of Lagos. As long as there's a tiny space your vehicle can squeeze in through, it must be tried while trying to dodge the other vehicle you know may likely hit yours.

Almost everybody is impatient in Lagos. That is a crazy culture shock.

Next is that the cause of traffic is almost always never obvious. You just get to the end of a traffic and notice there's an imaginary line where people have refused to pass quickly, so vehicles just build up like that.

Then in Lagos, almost everyone is trying to outsmart the other person - bus conductor, keke rider, stranger on the street, beggars on the road, traders by the roadside and market, even your colleagues in the office and your church pastor. So you have to be mentally alert. If you're too generous you'll be effed up real good.

The hustle for survival is real here.

Related Links

What is the biggest shock for new expatriates to Nigeria?
What was your biggest culture shock moving to the United Kingdom?
What is the biggest culture shock you have ever faced?
What are some culture shocks you have ever experienced while in Africa?
What are culture shocks for people coming to Australia?
What's the most "This is Lagos" (Nigeria) experience you've ever had?
What culture shock can Nigerians or Africans in general expect to experience in Canada?
What culture shocks do you face coming to China for the first time?
As a Japanese person, what cultural shocks did you have when you visited the USA?
What is your biggest cultural shock from visiting America?

News Nigeria

Brief History Of Northern Nigeria Before Amalgamation

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Thu

To understand Nigeria you need to know the history to explain the politics.

When the British arrived in what became Northern Nigeria, there were by then lets say for arguments sake two nations ruling the North predominantly the Fulani and then also the Indigenous Hausa, the latter of which the Hausa kingdoms were constantly being attacked by the Fulani who are conquers by nature. The British to keep a balance assisted the Hausa and with their help confronted the Fulani.

The Fulani understanding conquest took to their new masters the British and in return for their new found compliant attitude Lord Lugard made every Emir in every town in the north a Fulani, inadvertently giving power back to the Fulani. (I wonder if this is where the phrase "the only thing Nigeria understands is war" stems from).

Then in 1914 for financial reasons the British amalgamated the Northern Nigeria Protectorate with the Southern Protectorates, now these were entirely two very different regions, as the southern protectorate wasn't a conquered region it was a democratic area of many nations that had been developed over thousands of years of trading with foreign lands (the southern protectorate agreed upon to protect trading) and was religiously predominantly Judea Christian and in every sense was far more developed than the north in every aspect; education, standard of living etc.. following the amalgamation there was a great need in the north for jobs only the southerners could really do for development of the country like railways, education etc..

So they were sent to the north, however they were still the foreigners and they could never fit in, understandably deep seated bad feelings embedded itself as the Northerners felt the Southerners were lauding their social standing over them and the Southerners could never fit into the social/political system as it was not designed to do so. (Oil doesn't mix with water). Now the British have left following independence the Fulani are still conquering as is there nature by political means.

To explain in full detail one must read: Historical background of Northern Nigeria in the Report of the Justice G.C.M Onyiuke Tribunal 1966.

For a century before the advent of British administration in Nigeria, the Fulani provided the ruling class of most of Northern Nigeria.

The notable exception is the Bornu Emirate to the north/east which is inhabited by the Kanuri. What we now know as the provinces of Sokoto, Gwandu, Katsina, Kano, Zaria, Bauchi, Adamawa, Plateau and Niger fell under varying degrees to the influence of the Fulani aristocracy. Northern Nigeria was by no means a void nor was it without history. We do not propose to delve into ancient history. This is hardly a useful exercise here. Suffice it to say that British expansion met established Hausa states at varying levels of development and prosperity.

They were in all at this stage 14 Hausa states which comprised, Darua, Kano, Zaria, Gobir, Katsina, Rono and Biram (the Hausa Bakwai or legitimate 7 states); Zamfara, Kebbi, Nupe, Gbagyi, Gauri, Ilorin (Yoruba) and Kwararafa (the banza Bakwai or upstart seven which developed to the south and west of the original group). Each state had its own traditions and legends of origin and at varying degrees had embraced or come under the influence of Islam. It had been said that it would be strictly incorrect to refer to these Hausa states as if they belong to the same ethnic group. They were people who spoke the Hausa language and adopted the Hausa mode of dress and life generally.

When the 19th century opened, the Fulani appeared to be the predominant race in the Sudan. Fulani is the Hausa name for the people who call themselves Fulbe. They themselves made a distinction between the Cattle Fulani and the Town Fulani; The latter included the aristocratic families such as Torobe. The origin of these people is less than clear. What is more certain, however is that by the 16th century, there was a steady movement of those Fulani people from the region now known as Senegal towards the East through Messina and the Hausa states toward Chad and Adamawa and beyond.

From the rank of the Fulani the great religious leaders of the 18th and 19th centuries came in the Sudan to launch a series of religious movements which, as often happened in Islam, passed into political wars. We are here concerned with the religious movement that affected Northern Nigeria.

Usman Dan Fodio who was subsequently known as Shehu or Sheikh was born a Fulani in the Hausa state of Gobir about 1750. He was brought up with his brother Abdullahi as a strict Muslim and after studying for some years in Agades he felt the call to dedicate his life to teaching the faith. On his return from Agades, Dan Fodio acted as a tutor to the Sarkin Gobir's two sons in Alkaluwa. One of these was Yunfa who was later to succeed to the throne.

In the interval before his accession Dan Fodio felt obliged to withdraw from Alkaluwa giving his reason the reversion to pagan practices by the court on the hostility shown towards the Muslim faith. When Yunfa finally became king, he sort out his old tutor and encouraged him to resume his itinerant preaching. Dan Fodio soon fell out with the new king and in 1804 was driven to flight. A party rallied to him, defeated the king, and proclaimed Dan Fodio, (now their leader) Sarkin Musulmi Commander of the Faithful, a title which is still held by his successor, the Sultan of Sokoto. A general movement broke out all over the area which later became Northern Nigeria.

The line of cleavage did not run clear between the Fulani and the Hausas but the Fulani who provided the energy and ambition to the apparent religious cause. Everywhere followers of the Shehu, appointed or self-appointed, received flags from his hands. They called upon the faithful to drive out the old Hausa or as they were called the Habe dynasties and then set themselves up in turn as rulers subject to Sokoto which had become the seat of the Fulani authority in 1810. Not only was this change accomplished in the old Hausa kingdoms but in the impetus of the movement, Fulani leaders pushed the boundaries of Islam south, incorporating in varying degrees many pagan tribes.

As indicated earlier the movement for religious revival degenerated into a political war of conquest. Consequently the son of the Shehu, Bello, who succeeded him became more interested in the military and political results of the religious revival than in spreading the faith.

The record for Fulani success had some important exceptions. The ancient Kanuri kingdom of Bornu with its capital near Lake Chad and itself Moslem, threw back the Fulani invaders. The holy man of Bornu, El-Kanemi, taunted Shehu Usman Dan Fodio with having turned a war of religion into one of conquest and with attacking his co-religionists.

El-Kanemi frankly admitted that some of his Chiefs had relapsed into heathenism, that the Alkalis or Moslem judges sometimes took bribes and women went unveiled; but he argued that this was not sufficient excuse for war. This opposition from Bornu, as we shall see when we come to consider the pattern and the spread of the atrocities in the 1966 program, seems to appear its head once again in 1966. Bello in his defense of his fathers action justified mainly on the ground of proselytism. Said he:

@And the second reason for our Jihad was that they were heathens, the people of Hausa. A further reason for the war was that we sought to aid truth against falsehood and to strengthen Islam. For to make war on the heathen from the beginning, if one has the power is declared a duty. So also it is it's a duty to make war on those heathen who have converted to Islam and later have reverted to heathenism, if one has the power. In truth we stated at the beginning of this that the Hausa chiefs, their people and their mallams were evil doers".

At the beginning of the present century, the British administration emerged in Northern Nigeria. They based their title on conquest. Sir Frederick Lugard, the first British governor of Northern Nigeria asserted in one of his early reports as follows:- "The Fulani hold their suzerainty by right of conquest. I can myself see no injustice in the transfer of the suzerainty thus acquired to the British by the same right of conquest".

The Fulani caste seemed to have accepted their masters without much resistance. The explanation of this, it is said, was due in part to the insecurity of the Fulani position in relation to their subjects who had shown little loyalty to the Fulani during the period of their confrontation with the British.

The British, by force of arms, broke the Fulani ascendancy in the north, but by twist of irony, restore that supremacy under the system of indirect rule. Once the suzerainty of the British was accepted by the Fulani, the British were content to allow an even to support and consolidate the authority of the Fulani Emirs in their various Emirates.

The Fulani Emir was left as the head of the native administration, the head of the native judiciary, the religious head, and practically the head of everything in his emirate. Offices in the native administration, in the native administration police, in the native judiciary, what filled by appointees of the emirs. These appointees were invariably the relations of the Emir or his courtiers. Moslem religion preempted every aspect of life in the Emirates. This society became a 'closed shop'. Strangers especially non-Moslems, had no place in the society.

It is generally accepted that in 1966 there were over 2 million Easterners in Northern Nigeria. Their presence in the north it was all connected with the amalgamation of northern and southern Nigeria in 1914 by the British. Unfortunately, although they were there in such large numbers and for so long and filled a very important position in the economic and political development of Northern Nigeria, they were never fully integrated into the mainstream of life in society. They became what sociologist call a privilege pariah class- 'privileged' because participating in and benefiting from the modernizing sectors of the economy to which the northern Muslims had been induced to turn their back.

Their standard of living was higher than the normal run of life of most northerners. They were 'pariah' because they were kept outside the rank system of society. Because of the attitude of northern Muslims to modern education, the administrators of the day were compelled to employ these Easterners though they disliked having them. It cut across the policy of the day of separating the north from the south.

'Divide and rule' is a cliché which is grown odious by being frequently used for all situations weather appropriate or not; but it really enshrined an important gem of British colonial policy. The north and south were amalgamated in 1914 ostensibly under One government yet the 'writ' of the legislative Council in Lagos did not run into Northern Nigeria. The British colonial administrator reserved the right to legislate alone for the north until the Richards constitution of 1946.

Easterners is and in fact other non-northerners were restricted in most of the towns to strangers quarters called Sabon Gari. In these circumstance the Easterners and Northerners grew up a separate communities. Dissimilarities were accentuated and old prejudices hardened. Since 1950 attempts, especially by southerners, were made to bridge the gap but such attempts were regarded by the northern aristocracy as an imposition from the south and were smashed.

The emergence of political parties in Nigeria did not improve matters in the north either. As far as the north was concerned it did not succeed in breaking down the old barriers. The dominant political party in the north (the Northern People's Congress) started off as a party of native administration functionaries and appointees of the Emir's and never really went beyond that.

It is our view that the foundation of Nigeria contain the seeds of her own destruction.

Is Nigeria a failed state?

Aniekan Thomas Medical Doctor at Garki Hospital Abuja FCT (2012–present) 4y

Originally Answered: Why is Nigeria failing as a state?

Nigeria is a failure…though not a terrible failure(see the Congo DR which is in a worse state) for the following reasons

Unproductive economy : At first glance, our economy seems very productive, however, scratch the surface, and our economic progress is essentially dependent on the raw materials we sell to the various world markets.

Problem is, the prices of those raw materials are not determined by us, they are determined elsewhere…and as a result, our economy is prone to a lot of shocks when the prices of said raw materials goes down.

And we worsen the problem by being very dependent on imported stuff…to the point that we lose millions of our hard earned forex importing stuff that we could well manufacture at home. Meanwhile, our manufacturing sector is unable to/unwilling to become a major exporter…saving and earning millions of forex for the treasury.

What a waste.

Unproductive education system: This is due to several factors

First…lack of funding. Government does not have enough money to fund education adequately in our country. This year, we are spending N600bn on education from our budget. Meanwhile, our universities alone need at least N2 trillion in funding annually to function properly.Add the phenomenon of very low , unsustainable school fees…

Second, emphasis on paper qualification, with less emphasis on skills acquisition and development…leading to the production of thousands of graduates with paper certificates, and nothing much otherwise. Meanwhile, our industries lack proper technical staff…which hampers our manufacturing capacity. And then…there is the disdain most Nigerians have for vocational and technical education…which is where your nation builders are trained.

A typical school in Nigeria…

People not doing their jobs.

Currently, we have a crisis in our country involving fighting between nomadic herdsmen and farming communities. Which started when certain people did not do their jobs. A farmer has his farm destroyed by cows or a nomadic herdsman has his cows stolen or killed…and the Police don't investigate, the courts don't pass fines, and compensation is not paid.So, laws are taken into one's hands, and crisis results.This has happened several times, and this is the main factor behind our civil war of 1967–70

Another problem is that people tend to see political office as a means for feathering the nest, and not actually doing any development.So, the hospital does not get built, and as a result , lots of people die, or get disabled. The road does not get built, and economic losses result. Power supply is not fixed…you get the picture.

For want of a nail

The Nigerian people themselves.

Power supply is epileptic in Nigeria..because people don't pay their bills on time, or prefer not to pay at all. And even when someone gets a prepaid electronic meter, they promptly bypass it.

Crime prevails in Nigeria because people don't report or expose criminals due to the fact that 'they are my tribespeople/family members/friends' …and criminals get off scott free because of some 'begging' on their behalf.

And when tribal or religious violence happens, both sides don't show remorse, but excuse the violence, blaming the victims, foreign powers, etc.

Plus, people complain about bad governance, ONLY when their favored candidate is not in power. When he or she is, everything is working out well.

Even political and specialist appointments are made from tribal and religious considerations, usually because that's what the people want. Leading to poor job performance…since the appointees are not up to scratch.

IN conclusion

Nigeria is a failing state…however things can change only if the people change. Because if the people don't change…we can divide this country into as many new countries as possible…and all of them will be failed mini-Nigerias.

It is how we do that…that is the question.

Related Links

As a non-Nigerian, what confuses you about Nigerians?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
How does the world view Nigeria?

Why do Nigerians think that Nigeria is the "giant" of Africa when other African countries don't even like Nigeria?

How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Do failed states really exist?
Is the Philippines a failed state?
When will Nigeria be recognized as a failed state?
Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
Who are Indonesia's allies and enemies?

News Nigeria

After the death of Mansa Mussa, the Empire of Mali declined in importance. Its place was taken by Songhai, whose greatest king was Askia the Great (Mohammed Toure).

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Tue

Askia came to power in 1493, one year after Columbus discovered America. He consolidated the territory conquered by the previous ruler Sonni Ali and built Songhai into the most powerful state in the Western Sudan. His realm, it is said, was larger than all Europe.

The German writer, Henry Barth, in his famous work Travels and Discoveries in North and Central Africa, calls Askia the Great "one of the most brilliant and enlightened administrators of all times." He reorganized the army of Songhai, improved the system of banking and credit, and made the city-states of Gao, Walta, Timbuctoo, and Jenne into intellectual centers.

Timbuctoo during his reign, was a city of more than 100,000 people, "people filled to the top," says a chronicler of that time, "with gold and dazzling women."

Askia encouraged scholarship and literature. Students from all over the Moslem world came to Timbuctoo to study grammar, law, and surgery at the University of Sankore; scholars came from North Africa and Europe to confer with learned historians and writers of this black empire. A Sudanese literature developed at the time and many books were written.

Leo Africanus, who wrote one of the best known works on the Western Sudan, says: "In Timbuctoo there are numerous judges, doctors, and clerics, all receiving good salaries from the king. He pays great respect to men of learning. There is a big demand for books in manuscript, imported from Barbary (North Africa). More profit is made from the book trade than from any other line of business."

Askia has been hailed as one of the wisest monarch of the Middle Ages. Alexander Chamberlain, in his book, The Contribution of the Negro to Human Civilization , says of him: "In personal character, in administrative ability, in devotion to the welfare of his subjects, in open-mindedness towards foreign influences, and in wisdom in the adoption of enlightened ideas and institutions from abroad, King Askia was certainly the equal of the average European monarch of the time and superior to many of them."

Which part of Nigeria is the best to live?

Adaeze Oba Lives in Awka Nigeria 4y

This would depend on your financial level. So am going to break down my top ones for you Abuja: if you have enough money to put into housing as rent is quite expensive there. And also transportation becomes expensive if you live on the outskirts of the town where houses are cheaper. This is the London of Nigeria where people are much more composed.

Lagos: this is an ideal place for you if you are looking for a busy and happening place. Cost of living is available for all the different levels of financial categories you can come up with. Famous for its hold-ups and early morning rushing to beat traffic lifestyle. This is the USA of Nigeria.

Port-Harcourt: this is for those looking for a mix of no 1 and 2. It's expensive but not as much as Abuja and it's a busy place but without trauma of Lagos traffic though it still has it's own.

Enugu: well it's here simply because it's the best place in all the south eastern states where you can find a decent paying job and cost of living is affordable too I mean you can still take a 20 naira bus in this town till date.

Ogun: as a result of Lagos overpopulation and being a bordering state to Lagos, this place has seen a rise in activities that makes it a place one can live and be comfortable since some businesses are moving away from Lagos to Ogun.

Akwa Ibom: it's also has it's own unique properties being part of the Niger Delta State with big companies setting up camp in the state like (Mobil), it's a good place to consider too.

Kaduna: it's the only Northern state that I can consider on this list. I haven't been there yet but from what I have been told, it's a relatively commercial state I know not to the point of Kano but unless you plan on becoming a food trader(very cheap) or foot wear producer since they have leather then I would not recommend here.

That's all on my list. Please note, this is simply based on my personal view and places I have been to that I liked.

Related Links

How is life in Nigeria?
What are the best things about living in Nigeria?
What advice would you give to someone who is moving to Enugu, Nigeria?
What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?

Where do the richest people live in Lagos, Nigeria?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
Is Enugu, Nigeria safe to live?
How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?
How safe is Calabar, Nigeria?
Which country is better to live in, Kenya or Nigeria?
ki Hospital Abuja FCT (2012–present)

Originally Answered: Why is Nigeria failing as a state?

Nigeria is a failure…though not a terrible failure(see the Congo DR which is in a worse state) for the following reasons

Unproductive economy : At first glance, our economy seems very productive, however, scratch the surface, and our economic progress is essentially dependent on the raw materials we sell to the various world markets.

Problem is, the prices of those raw materials are not determined by us, they are determined elsewhere…and as a result, our economy is prone to a lot of shocks when the prices of said raw materials goes down.

And we worsen the problem by being very dependent on imported stuff…to the point that we lose millions of our hard earned forex importing stuff that we could well manufacture at home. Meanwhile, our manufacturing sector is unable to/unwilling to become a major exporter…saving and earning millions of forex for the treasury.

What a waste.

Unproductive education system: This is due to several factors

First…lack of funding. Government does not have enough money to fund education adequately in our country. This year, we are spending N600bn on education from our budget. Meanwhile, our universities alone need at least N2 trillion in funding annually to function properly.Add the phenomenon of very low , unsustainable school fees…

Second, emphasis on paper qualification, with less emphasis on skills acquisition and development…leading to the production of thousands of graduates with paper certificates, and nothing much otherwise. Meanwhile, our industries lack proper technical staff…which hampers our manufacturing capacity. And then…there is the disdain most Nigerians have for vocational and technical education…which is where your nation builders are trained.

A typical school in Nigeria…

People not doing their jobs.

Currently, we have a crisis in our country involving fighting between nomadic herdsmen and farming communities. Which started when certain people did not do their jobs. A farmer has his farm destroyed by cows or a nomadic herdsman has his cows stolen or killed…and the Police don't investigate, the courts don't pass fines, and compensation is not paid.So, laws are taken into one's hands, and crisis results.This has happened several times, and this is the main factor behind our civil war of 1967–70

Another problem is that people tend to see political office as a means for feathering the nest, and not actually doing any development.So, the hospital does not get built, and as a result , lots of people die, or get disabled. The road does not get built, and economic losses result. Power supply is not fixed…you get the picture.

For want of a nail

The Nigerian people themselves.

Power supply is epileptic in Nigeria..because people don't pay their bills on time, or prefer not to pay at all. And even when someone gets a prepaid electronic meter, they promptly bypass it.

Crime prevails in Nigeria because people don't report or expose criminals due to the fact that 'they are my tribespeople/family members/friends' …and criminals get off scott free because of some 'begging' on their behalf.

And when tribal or religious violence happens, both sides don't show remorse, but excuse the violence, blaming the victims, foreign powers, etc.

Plus, people complain about bad governance, ONLY when their favored candidate is not in power. When he or she is, everything is working out well.

Even political and specialist appointments are made from tribal and religious considerations, usually because that's what the people want. Leading to poor job performance…since the appointees are not up to scratch.

IN conclusion

Nigeria is a failing state…however things can change only if the people change. Because if the people don't change…we can divide this country into as many new countries as possible…and all of them will be failed mini-Nigerias.

It is how we do that…that is the question.

Related Linkss

Which city is more developed, Nairobi or Lagos?
Why is Nairobi always ranked among the best, most developed cities in Africa?
Which country is the most developed, Rwanda, Kenya, Nigeria, or Angola?

Why is it that Kenya and Uganda can get along easily, but they both can't get along well with Tanzania?

Is Nigeria more developed than Kenya in all aspects?
Is Nigeria better than Kenya?
Why is Kenya more famous than most other African countries?
Which city is better, Nairobi or Dar es Salaam?
What is Kenya doing better than most African countries?
How is Kenya perceived internationally?

Pourquoi les gens ne se soucient-ils guère des autres dans le monde d'aujourd'hui?

Michel Verheughe Volontaire chez Croix Rouge1 an Réponse originale : Pourquoi les gens ne se soucie guère des autres dans le monde actuel ?

Je suis né en 1948 et si cette année quelqu'un aurait dit que 65 ans plus tard, le président des États-Unis serait un noir et qu'il autoriserait le mariage des homosexuels, tout le monde l'aurait pris pour un fou très plaisantin.

Et pourtant c'est bien arrivé ! Grâce aux télécommunications et, ensuite, les réseaux sociaux informatiques, nous savons aujourd'hui que nous sommes tous les même et que nous devons nous aider à vaincre nos problèmes.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi doit-on toujours jouer un rôle devant les autres pour être comme tout le monde ?

Comment se fait-il que certaines personnes s'entendent avec tout le monde ?

Pourquoi certaines personnes ont le don de se faire détester des autres sans le faire exprès ?

Les gens se soucient-ils vraiment autant de la vie des autres ?
Pourquoi blâmons-nous la société alors que nous sommes la société ?

Pourquoi les gens réservés et taciturne en société dérangent ? Et pourquoi leur fait-on la remarque et les incite-t-on à s'ouvrir dans certains cas ?

Que font généralement ces gens pour que tout les gens autour d'eux les déteste ?
Pourquoi les gens "bien" souffrent-ils plus que les autres ?
Pourquoi est-il plus pratique aujourd'hui de traiter les gens comme des fous ?
Que peut-on faire dans un monde où les gens se moquent de nos croyances ?

News Nigeria
ÌJÀKADÌ L'ORÒ ỌFÀ: THE BATTLE FOR AKỌGUN

By Agogo Ayo, Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 12h

It was late in the dry season of that year. We were returning from a raid into the Ànàgó countryside. We were successful in our raid. I could count a thousand slaves securely bound and led by our ìlàrí. These were former slaves who had proved themselves worthy of being in the army of Aláàfin. Onikòyí was our General. I could see him in the middle of the hoard as we head back to Ọ̀yọ́ ilé. We were in high spirit. Aláàfin will not only be happy with us, he will definitely promote some of us to higher rank in his army. I daydream of the day I will become lieutenant to Onikoyi himself. He is our Balogun.

Then words came to me that Balogun said we need to camp for the day. I was a little surprised at this because the sun is about to get to the center of our head, but I quickly hid my surprise. We normally travel very early in the morning till the evening, but given that we have left the canopy provided by tropical rain forest trees and we are in the open grassland on our way home, it is difficult to travel under the scorching sun of tropical Africa at noon. The sun is bad for horses that had been going on a long distance and also the slaves that had trekked the way since morning. We all needed a respite.

However, for me, I wanted us to camp quickly on our way for different reason. I could not but smile when the order to halt got to me. My reason I must say, was libidinous. I have caught a pretty girl of about 16 years of age among the slaves I was able to catch with my squad. Being the head of the squad, I have the sole right to do whatever I like with any of the female slaves so far I am not killing them. More, this girl was so beautiful I could not take my eyes off her.

I told my loyal slaves which I have promoted to my ìlàrí to quickly gather all the grass they could to build makeshift tents and huts for the night. While they were doing this I consulted other gang leaders and we deliberated on how we are going to share the spoils of war we got. We know all slaves belong to Aláàfin and he chooses whom to give one or two slaves, however, the cowrie money were got from slain enemies, the Iron, bronze, animals like bulls and fowls of different species we captured, all these belong to us except Aláàfin has interest in particular one.

By the time I returned to the spot I chose for my people, they had made four tents and a hut for me. One each to the north, south east and west, then the largest one was the hut in the middle and belong to me. I nodded in approval of what they did. I don't need to tell them before the make this makeshift tents and hut once the need arises. Two of my ìlàrí were dwarfs. I take them to wars and raids like this because they are source of entertainment to me and they have been loyal to me so far. They are my ears too.

So I called on the two to entertain me in mock fight. They always act out historical fights between legends of Onikoyi squad. And they exaggerate everything just to make us laugh. Today they acted the fight between Alápótabírán and Apọ̀funyọ̀yọ̀, both of whom were from Onikòyí clan like me. I could still remember the fight, which is normally done after a successful raid to celebrate or to choose the next Akọgun in our midst. Alápótabírán carried the day and was given the tittle of Akọgun Onikoyi and a damsel to have for the night.

He immediately removed the loin clothe of the lady and laid her in the presence of the people. The people were in rapturous ecstasy as this is what is expected of Akọgun. He must be able to fight well in battle, fight well in Ìjàkadì and lastly must be able to make woman cry for joy in the inner room.

News got to us later that the call for the fight was ill motivated and not because of show of mastery in wrestling but because Alápótabírán had being eyeing the prized lady who belonged to Apọ̀funyọ̀yọ̀ by right of conquest.

My dwarfs acted this story very well except when the one who acted Alápótabírán brought out his diminutive phallus and all the girls started laughing. We all laughed together because we wondered what can his small manhood do to the big bootied lady that acted the prized damsel.

This act brought me back to my prize damsel I have among the slaves. I have to lay her tonight, some of the gang leader may have been eyeing her as well. No, I won't wait till night. I have to lay her right now. She belong to me by right of conquest and even if I keep her till we get to Ọ̀yọ́, Aláàfin could "lay his leg on her" as the Emperor.

I looked at the direction of where she sat among the slaves forming the crowd. I saw her smiling at the small prick of the dwarf Alápótabírán. I smiled too. She will soon see the grandfather of that manhood. I signaled to my aid to bring her to my hut. He went to pick her immediately. I can have her among the crowd if I wish, but I just want to relish her youthful sweetness in the confines of my hut.

She must have been briefed by the elderly women among my slaves. For I could see she put little resistance and followed my lieutenant as he tried to drag her. Everybody went on with the entertainment.

In the hut I removed the strip of clothe covering her breast. Big succulent breasts stared at me. I hungrily jumped at them and took her down. To my surprise she was still a virgin! Such a rare prize. In a minute I was already inside her despite her cry. Yes, she belongs to me and I could do whatever I like with her. But the very act of having sex that day became what I will live to regret for the rest of my life.

The story continues...

Wake Up Africa!

What are the benefits of legalising marijuana in regions like Nigeria and Africa?

Answered by Andrew Joseph Mendence Apr 26

There really are no benefits to legalizing cannabis in any country.

What are the main arguments for legalising marijuana?

Daniel Kaplan Veteran English Teacher (1998–present) Updated 1y

I'm going to make an admission here… I've never tried marijuana. I've never had the urge. It has been offered. In fact, a coworker was quite adamant that I try it, but I talked him down. He threatened to lie and tell my wife that I'd tried it. I told him to feel free, since (if she'd believed him) she'd just be a bit disappointed. Regardless, I've never partaken. But I don't care about marijuana. I'm neither for it nor against it. It isn't something I think about. Since I have no dog in this fight, perhaps I'm in a unique place to offer my insight.

Instead of asking about the arguments for legalizing marijuana, why not ask about arguments for banning it? After all, don't we all believe in freedom except when there is a reason to bar it? If I decided that I wanted to ban wearing pink, frilly dresses, shouldn't the first question be, "Why?" That is how things work in a free society.

I can see reasons to ban marijuana, but those reasons cover pretty much the exact same reasons as alcohol. We tried that back in 1919, and it only served to create a massive black market and a strengthening of organized crime that dominated the 20th century. It was so unpopular that it was repealed.

Unlike alcohol, I'm not sure that marijuana causes serious health issues. I'm not sure that it is addictive, either. What does it cause? Mood changes, but that's also true of alcohol.

Like alcohol, it should be barred for children, and people who are high on marijuana should be barred from driving or doing other high-risk activities… but I don't see a purpose in doing more control than that.

Related Links

What is your opinion on marijuana legalization?
Should marijuana be legalized?
Why should Marijuana be legalized?
What's the best argument against legalization of marijuana?

What are the dangers/benefits of the legalization of marijuana?
What would it be like to legalise all drugs in the world?
Why are some US states legalizing marijuana?
Should all drugs be made legal?

What are your thoughts on legalizing marijuana? Do you think legalizing marijuana may be a bad or good thing? Please elaborate.

What would happen if all drugs and narcotics were suddenly legalized?

News Nigeria

Breaking: Police arrest suspected IPOB bomb manufacturer in Imo

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Apr 22

The Imo State Police Command on Friday said it arrested and paraded a 50-year-old-man one Simeon Onigbo, suspected to be a bomb manufacturer for the Indigenous People of Biafra, IPOB, used in attacking police stations and government facilities in the state.

The State Police Public Relations Officer, PPRO, Micheal Abattam, disclosed this to newsmen in Owerri.

The command said it was last Wednesday it uncovered and raided the IPOB bomb manufacturing camp at Uba Umuaka in Njaba Local Government Area of Imo State, based on the credible information that was made available to the Police.

However, he said the suspect had mentioned the names of other suspects in the bomb manufacturing within and outside the states.

According to the Command, "Sequel to the modified and invigorated strategies emplaced by the Command's management team under the watch of the Commissioner of Police, Imo Command, CP Mohammed Ahmed Barde, psc on the assumption of office, with a view to checkmate violent crimes and criminality in the State.

"In-Line with the Commissioner of Police strategy in stemming crime, the Command's Tactical Teams following credible intelligence received on 20/4/2022 at about 1700hours, revealed the hideout of the proscribed Indigenous People of Biafra IPOB/Eastern Security Network (ESN), its militia wing, where they are manufacturing Improvised Explosive Devices used in attacking Police Stations and Government facilities in the state.

"The Police Operatives immediately mobilised to the hideout of the terror group located at Uba Umuaka in Njaba LGA of Imo State and raided the camp.

In the course of the raid, one Simeon Onigbo 'male' age 50 years was arrested.

"On the spot interrogation, the suspect admitted being the manufacturer of most of the Improvised Explosive Devices (I.E.Ds) used in attacking police stations in the State and outside the State."

"On searching the criminal hideouts items recovered include the following: One already prepared Improvised Explosive Devices, Fifty-eight pieces of Cannon Steel Pipe, Two Chisels, One Monday Hammer one and a half bag of Potassium Nitrate, thirty Pounds Weight of Sulphur, Forty Pounds Weight of dry Sand, TenFifty-eighth of Red Sand, Thirty Pounds Weight of Gun Powder, Half Bag of Charcoal, Thirty Electronic Motorcycle Batteries and Seven Lengths of Fortyimeters Iron Rods.

"Meanwhile, the Command's Explosive Ordinance Disposal Unit (EOD) has taken over the recovered bomb for technical analysis and subsequently for possible detonation millimetres, the investigation is ongoing, the suspect has made useful statements and mentioned members of his gangs outside the State who patronise him. Operatives of the Command are not relenting and all efforts are on top gear to arrest the other suspects," Police said.

A Nigerian is a person from Nigeria.

Yome Agu Updated Apr 30

A Nigérien (male) & Nigérienne (female) is a person from Niger.

NIGERIA
Why Tinubu should be elected as President of Nigeria

Posted by Mohammed Isah 2h

For those of us who don't know who Bola Ahmed Tinubu and why Tinubu should be elected as President of Nigeria. Bola Ahmed Tinubu was the former governor of Lagos from 1999 to 2007. During this period, he initiated reforms that improved the efficiency of the civil service and improved infrastructure. He served from 1992 to 1993 as a senator until the end of the Nigerian Third Republic. Prior to entering politics he worked in the private sector for companies including Arthur Andersen and Deloitte, Haskins, & Sells. He was also an executive of Mobil Oil Nigeria. After Tinubu left politics, he became active in negotiations to unite Nigeria's opposition parties and in pushing for electoral reforms. He earned his bachelor's degree from Chicago State University in business administration in 1979. He holds the tribal aristocratic title of asiwaju, given to him by the Oba of Lagos, who holds a ceremonial position as traditional leader of the state of Lagos.

Why Tinubu should be elected as President of Nigeria?

During his time as a governor of Lagos State, Bola Ahmed Tinubu touched and improved every sector. I believe Nigerians will love to see his impact in Lagos State spread across the 36 state of the federation which is why Nigerians should vote in Bola Ahmed Tinubu as President of Nigeria come 2023. When it comes to health, He established additional 5 general hospitals in Lagos state 4. He upgraded facilities at the Lagos State Teaching Hospital (LASUTH) 5. He provided free healthcare services including free ante-natal care for women, free eye treatments and free glasses, popularly called 'JIGI BOLA'. Modern medical equipment were procured for the health hospitals and helath centres. New medical laboratories were also set up.

Under his administration, free health policy for children below 18 and adults above 65 years was introduced. The drugs for patients were heavily subsidized. Under the Blindness Prevention Programme, millions of Lagosians were saved from sight problems. To reduce the scourge of HIV/AIDS, the Lagos State AIDS Control Agency intensified its enlightenment programme targeted at youths. The administration's "Roll Back Malaria" programme complemented the Eko Free Malaria Treatment programme under which millions of people were treated.

https://gombiland.com/nigeria-getting-set-as-african-super-power/
Government also combated the dreadful diseases, including tuberculosis by setting up clinic devoted to the disease and polio through the immunization of millions of children. To attend to medical emergencies, the LASAMBUS scheme was initiated. Dozens of ambulances were provided to ease rescue operations. Tinubu introduced reforms, which led to the decentralization of the Health Management Board, the revatalisation of the Primary healthcare System, the establishment of the Lagos State Health Facility Monitoring and Accreditation Agency to ensure quality assurance, the establishment of Hospital Services Commission and the promotion of partnerships in health between the government and the private sector.

Tinubu is also passionate about Education which was why During the eight-year period of his being in office, he made large investments in education in the state and also reduced the number of schools in the state by returning many schools to the already settled former owners. Lagos is a mini-Nigeria playing host to citizens from other states of the federation. A discriminatory education policy was incompatible with the spirit of Lagos which is why the free Education in Lagos was for all tribes, ethnics who are residents of Lagos State irrespective of the residents state of origin. This further promotes peace and unity among residents of Lagos State.

Tinubu believed passionately that education was the antidote to poverty. Moreover, his mother, the late Abibat Mogaji, always sent a long list of students to him for financial assistance. Thus, the former governor started paying WAEC and NECO fees and fees for internal examinations. The administration kicked-off the Millennium School Projects as part of efforts to guarantee a conducive atmosphere for teaching and learning in public schools. This act gave hope to so many families who couldn’t afford quality education and also took many kids out of the street of Lagos. Bola Ahmed Tinubu solved the issue the north is facing regarding out of school children in Lagos state. I believe Nigerians especially the Northern Nigeria will love to have him as the President to further extend this system. It will reduce illiteracy in country and systematically reduce insecurities in the country.

He also initiated new road construction, required to meet the needs of the fast-growing population of the state. Road projects completed include Ijegun, Ojo; Oshifolarin, Somolu; Rhythm 93.7, Eti-Osa; Arufa Olugbemi, Ojo; Adeola Odeku, Victoria Island; Agege Motor Road (Idi Oro to Ilupeju Byepass),Mushin and Ojuwoye, Eko Akete, Abaronje-Okerube, Ikotun-Igbado; Alakuko, Ojokoro; and Aniyaloye/Edidi/Adegboyega/Fatai Bello, Ifelodun. Othere were Irede, Amuwo-Odofin; Owuto Ajaguro, Ikorodu; Ekoro, Agbado Oke; Aboru, Agbado Oke odo; Okun Alfa, Ibeju; Agunji Ajiran, Eti Osa West; Old Ota, Ifako Ijaye; Kudirat Abiola Way, Oregun, Maroko-Epe Bye-Pass, Eti Osa West; and Oterubi Ogidan, Agboju. There were also novel initiatives in transportation, including the development of modern water transportation, BRT and LASTMA to also tackle the issue of traffic caused by the growing population.

What about bringing unity to the nation? When you look at Lagos state, we already have the answer. He made Lagos state accommodating to all tribes and religions, made business easy for all tribes and religions too. He united all tribes in Lagos that it got to a point Lagos is been referred to as no man's land. This makes Lagos state the highest populated state in Nigeria. Lagos state through Tinubu promoted unity among Nigerians to the extent that if you enter a classroom in one of Lagos State free public school, you will see all tribes and religions in Nigeria benefitting from the free education. This should be one of the reasons Why Tinubu should be elected as President of Nigeria to further promote peace and unity.

When he was the Governor of Lagos State, Tinubu laid out the steps to improve incentives for civil servants, including salary increases which made Lagos state the state in Nigeria which pays its civil servants the highest amount of Salary. He improved the quality and hygiene of working environments, and teaching investment principles and how to work toward home ownership. His payroll-system reforms removed thousands of ghost workers from the system. Nigerians should take note that incentives for civil servants including salary increases was done by Tinubu when the FG suspended the allocation of funds to Lagos state. Even with no allocation from the federal government, Tinubu was still able to construct new roads, houses, hospitals and so much more.

For the former governor, necessity became the mother of invention. When the allocation for Lagos was seized, Tinubu put on his thinking cap. He embarked on a novel and aggressive revenue generation drive, which halted the dependence on federal allocations to the state. In 1999, under the military rule, Lagos was generating N600,000 monthly. Today, the Internally Generated Revenue (IGR) is around N33 billion. Through meticulous planning and disciplined implementation, the Asiwaju Tinubu Administration grew the budget size of Lagos State from N14.200 billion in1999 to N240.866 billion in 2007. It is significant that at no time under Tinubu's stewardship did budget implementation performance fall below 60%.

In a similar vein, the Tinubu Administration consistently maintained an annual budgetary ratio of at least 60-40% in favour of Capital over Recurrent expenditure to ensure rapid infrastructure development. A first class financial strategist, Asiwaju Tinubu, through creative and innovative financial engineering, took Lagos from a yearly Internally Generated Revenue of N14.64 billion in 1999 to N60.31 billion in 2006. By March 2007, the state had achieved a monthly Internally Generated Revenue of N8.2 billion.

For eight years, Tinubu also agitated for a special status, or special economic assistance, for Lagos State. Up to now, it is still a dream. No doubt that he is a visionary leader and more reason why Tinubu should be elected as President of Nigeria. He resolved the succession hurdle successfully in 2007. His successor, Fashola, built on his achievements. Fashola's successors, Ambode also continued from where Fashola stopped. And now, Sanwo olu still continued building on the foundation laid by Tinubu.

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

Gerald Nwakpu Lives in Abuja, Nigeria (2018–present) 3y

Mmmhh…I am quite surprised you have to as this,however I will give you some clues or answers why many countries may not like Nigeria. They includes;

1.)Nigerians generally are hardworking and smart. Yes, Nigerians are very smart and work harder than any other country. They are widely traveled and in every country,you must find a Nigerian community. It is said that if you go to any country and you dont find a Nigerian especially the Igbo tribe,run bro because there is no money in that country. Hence as far as money can be made in that country,YOU MUST FIND A NIGERIAN.

2.)They are Rich and are not afraid to show it. A typical Nigerian wants to be rich,so they work their ass off to achieve their life goals. In the course of this,they see life as a survival of the fittest. Imagin been born in a country of over 200m in population,it is either you compete or die. So when a Nigerian eventually makes money,he most times tend to be arrogant and proud to show it. I dont need to tell you that people will tend to hate anyone who is rich and arrogant at same time because most people preach rich and humility.

3.)Nigeria is blessed with Natural Resource. Nigeria is one of the highest oil and gas producers in the world. So people hate others when they have what they themselves lack,this is just reality playing their roles. Aside Oil and gas,Nigeria has gold,cement,land mass,zinc,Aluminium,steel,food e.t.c . So people must hate Nigerians for this because such countries lack those things,it is just natural.

4.)They are perceived to be into crimes alot. There are a lot of crimes too in other countries namely China,US,Kenya etc. Every other countries experience whatever crimes Nigerians have but due to the Nigerian population,they tend to out shadow others. It really takes a really smart mind to convince someone you have not met before to give you money,which alot Nigerians are good at,they found themselves in such crimes like internet fraud majorly due to poor leadership.However,people are bound to hate them for that or if someone should be so smart to scam you off your hard earned money,won't you hate such a person.

5.)Despite all these,alot of Nigerians are good and accommodating.This is wierld but true,most times people can just hate good people for nothing. Most Nigerians are good and nice people,they are willing to help and accommodate foreigners,however it won't be a surprise if people you show love to turn around to hate you. It is just natural.

These are the few I can wrap my head up for now,maybe as time goes on I can edit and add more. Thanks for your time.

Related Links

What is weird in Nigeria but normal in the rest of the world?
Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Why is it that outsiders hate Nigeria?
How does the world view Nigeria?
Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
Is Nigeria a failed state?
Modernist.com : Are Nigerians really bad people?
What do you think of Nigerians?
What is Nigeria best known for?

Why is life hard in Nigeria?

Obinna Ezugwu Lives in Nigeria 2y

Originally Answered: Is Nigeria a terrible place to live?

First, let me point out that the answer provided by the Israeli veteran below as to why Nigeria is in such a sad state is quite interesting. He made very cogent points. His assertion that Nigerians are docile and appear unwilling to demand better from the government is spot on. But there are some underlining factors here. My intervention is to explain those factors and thus, give deeper perspective to why Nigeria is such a sad place.

It is important to understand that there are no Nigerians as you have, for instance, Israelis or Polish or Finnish or English and so on. In other words, Nigeria is not a nation and there is hardly any allegiance to Nigeria beyond political rhetoric and pretentious nationalism.

Nigeria is a conglomerate of nations brought together by the British colonial government for administrative convenience and is held together by the armed forces and a greedy political class, not least foreign interests, for the purpose of sharing oil wealth. Nigeria is a country of peoples with diverse ethnicity, religions and irreconcilable worldviews. It is like bringing Israel, Syria, Lebanon and Egypt together to form one country and then handing over the military to one group to ensure that the country remains irrespective of what the constituent groups might feel. If for instance, the oil wealth that sustains such a country is in the Lebanese area, the military power would be handed to the Egyptians or the Israelis. This is what Nigeria is.

Now, what this has done is that Nigerians see themselves as Igbo, Yoruba, Hausa, Fulani, Ijaw, Tiv, Kanuri, Jukun and so on. Just as you would imagine to be the case in a country that has Jews, Syrians, Lebanese and so on as citizens. Beyond this there is also the very strong religious factor. As you probably know, Nigeria has a roughly even Christian and Muslim population, with the former being predominant in the South and the latter in the North. You can already see that from the religious perspective, Nigeria is an impossible experiment. This may not be politically correct, but the truth is that both religions cannot exist side by side peacefully. Again people see themselves first as either Christians or Muslims. Being Nigerian is third in the pecking order, after religion and ethnicity.

The effect of these is that leaders often emerge, not on the strength of their capabilities, but as religious and ethnic champions. Thus, as opposed to having charismatic leadership, we have ethnic and religious warriors who often don't see the need to be accountable because what brought them into power in the first place is not their capacity but religious and ethnic sentiments. Therefore, even when they mess up the entire space, Nigerians cannot protest against them because like I said, there are really no Nigerians.

If the leader is a Fulani Muslim from the North as we have now with Muhammadu Buhari, no matter how terrible he performs, the Fulani and the Hausa - who often exist side by side -will still side with him and any attempt by the Igbo for instance, to protest against him, will be seen as a fight against the Fulani which they will resist. So, for Buhari to ensure that there can never be a question of uprising against him, he turns into an ethnic champion by promoting the interest of his ethnic group and his religion above the others. This scenario exists, too, in various states where there is a multiplicity of ethnic groups.

Of particular interest in this case is Plateau State where the Israeli veteran lived. Plateau used to be a very peaceful state with clement weather. The choice destination for many Europeans in Nigeria because its weather is close to that of Europe. This was when the state was inhabited mainly by the indigenous Christian population. Now, with the entrant of Muslims and the resultant friction between the two religions, Plateau has become a state largely in ruins on account of religious and ethnic crises. In a sense, Plateau is a mini Nigeria.

Another important dimension is that Nigeria is not a productive country - does not have a productive economy but a consuming one. It is basically held together by oil proceeds from one region, the Niger Delta region of Southern Nigeria. To this extent, competence is hardly a factor in leadership selection because leaders are often elected to sit on oil wealth and distribute same. Therefore, each group sees their own person being in power as an opportunity to get access to this oil wealth. That is why, for example, you heard people like the current vice president, Yemi Osinbajo, arguing that the reason his Yoruba people should vote for Buhari during the 2019 election held months ago, is that Buhari will hand over power to the Yoruba in 2023. Osinbajo is a professor of law and a pastor of one of the largest Pentecostal churches in Nigeria, the Redeemed Christian Church of God, yet he makes an argument like that. This should tell you how deep-seated this problem is. Now, if the Yoruba were to go with this line of thought - even though my personal opinion is that it is just empty hope - they would have voted for Buhari in 2019, not on the strength of what he has done or intends to do, but in the expectation that they will get power and therefore access to oil wealth after him. This should explain why leaders get away with everything.

Also deriving from this is the fact that the political class themselves see political offices essentially as avenues for personal, family and group aggrandisement, not vehicles for service delivery. This is why, for example, Buhari would argue that he would distribute political appointments on the basis of the votes he got. The states that gave him more votes, he said, would get more appointments. Again the interest is not nation building because there is no nation to build. Thus, Nigeria is structured in such a way that political office holders get huge sums of money as salaries and allowances. The fastest way to wealth therefore, is joining politics, not starting a company, which of course, you are going to have to face bottlenecks and pay bribes to start.

This mindset has become pervasive. The police man sees his job primarily as an opportunity to exploit the weak. He mounts roadblocks ostensibly to check crime, but in reality, he is there extorting commuters. The civil servant doesn't see his post as a platform for service delivery, but an opportunity to exploit those seeking government service. The man at the corporate affairs commission does not see his job in terms of facilitating start-ups, but putting roadblocks to collect bribes from prospective entrepreneurs.

As you would probably expect in such a clime, elections are a sham and votes hardly count. This is another critical point. Until the people are able to vote out leaders who don't perform, there won't be accountability.

To summarise, Nigeria is simply a country forced together by the military and the political class for the purpose of distributing oil wealth. It is more like a criminal enterprise.

Related Links

How is life in Nigeria?
What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?
Which part of Nigeria is the best to live?
How much salary would you need to live comfortably in Lagos, Nigeria?
How hard is life in Nigeria at the moment?
Do Nigerians living abroad ever regret leaving Nigeria behind?
Life is so hard in Africa, where did Africans miss it, and what is the way forward?
What do you love about Nigeria?
How much do you need to live a good life in Nigeria?
What are the best things about living in Nigeria?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?

Naija Lolade Bsc in Import Export Logistics & Economics, London Business School (Graduated 2000) Updated 9mo

OMG!!! Everyone has written something totally different but not pin pointing out the real issue or where the problem originates from!

My quote ‘ If you don't know the problem of Nigeria, then you are part of the problem but not the solution. The moment you realize the problem of Nigeria, then you are already part of the solution’.

Nigeria’s problem is Economic problem. Solution to Nigeria’s problem is massive production and diversification plus de-dolarizing.

Nigerian Economy is service based Economy. Nigeria’s problem started when America decided to shortchange the economy. This is the root of Nigeria’s problem but not Oil. It’s like you have leaders willing to get off this one way traffic and each time they are either being killed, assassinated or regime change.

The Economy of Nigeria became shortchanged or short circuited during the installation of IBB. Many of you do not remember what took place.

Let me remind you. Before IBB 1Naira = 2 Dollar. When Buhari decided not to weaken the Naira or sign a petro dollar economy, he was removed and IBB was installed.

Note that Sheu Shagari was the President during 1983, Buhari’s came in after a coup but mentained the Exchange rate you see above in th PIC got to 1N =2$ during Buhari first Era.

Again, reminder of the root cause. Arab league were willing to borrow IBB money free of charge but IBB rather went to the puppet master U.S, the leader of the anglozionist empire to borrow money and sign Nigeria into a Petro-dollar economy where IMF decides for CBN,

Just one month after that, 1USD=2NGN.. Naira never recovered from that simple mistake IBB made even after OBJ paid all the Debt. Can you answer why Naira never recovered ?

If IBB had boycotted the petro dollar economy and follow Buahri's lead traveling to Cuba, south America and signing deals to use Naira or the currency of that country in deals. This will automatically generate demand for Naira and will make Naira stronger and less dependent on Dollar. Simple Economics 101. The more you get demand for your own currency, the moore stronger it gets. This is similar to what Venezuela is doing now with Petro crypto currency or what Turkey have proposed to set up TurkCrypto or even Crypto Rubble by Russia.

What are they doing ? Setting up a parallel market to the hegemony dollar which nothing except war is backing. So when you say 2 Dollar a day, where did you get this info from ? It's a known fact that GDP can never be used as accurate as possible because of standard of living which is high in some places and low in some states. GNP in Nigeria is mainly service based and it's in Naira ok.

If that policy Buhari started back in the day was followed by the next puppet IBB, Naira will be stronger today against Dollar and pounds. Even Naira may be used as reserved currency in some western african countries. This is just creating demand for Naira since Naija is not an exporting country. OK.

To help yourself, try as much as possible to add a deflationary currency to your portfolio for now. Crypto currency, boycott dollar or fiat by every means necessary, this way you are dumping dollar and stop sponsoring of the war or removing of head of states around and useless bases arround the globe. Fiat has failed the people. The future is Digital currency, a deflationary currency. By doing that, you get your Purchasing power high as ever.

Massive production = Diversification

Last thing, the FIAT system or capitalist system is nothing but a pure fraudulent system that only the most corrupt can survive in the system. For Nigeria to get out also needs to check this system and borrow more from a Socialist ideology. PPP is a very good example of a socialist ideology which is on its way to communism.

Mind you Comunism is the best ever. Nothing compared to communism.

I will give you just one good eample. In a communist state, everything last forever. I still use the oven made from North Korea 5o years ago. This oven was transfered to me by my Inlaw. Till date, the oven is still working fine. I will only choose to buy another one when I feel like I needed to change it or upgrade. Compar this to a completely greed system Capitalist which already wants me to change it every 2 years claiming it will help the middle class. You know what, the rich/greed continue getting richer while the poor continue getting poor is the reality but not what a mere capitalist preached.

Even as at that, North korea is still like 70% way to a complete communist ideology, no country, I repeat no country has ever made it 100% comunist because in a communist state, there is no central goverment. What is everywhere or common is Socialism.

This is what makes PPP very popular and working super fine. Publick private partnarship !

Related Links

Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?
Why are Nigerians hated by so many nations especially South Africans?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
Is Nigeria a failed state?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
What is Nigeria lacking?
Is Nigeria truly democratic?
Is Nigeria a Muslim country?

Are Niger and Nigeria related in any way? Why or why not?

Yome Agu Updated Sat

A Nigerian is a person from Nigeria. A Nigérien (male) & Nigérienne (female) is a person from Niger.

Boris Guiffot I might be called Cameroonian but I'm from Wakanda 2y

Besides the obvious similarity between their names, the two countries are crossed by a major river : The Niger River. The importance of the river for both countries explain why they were named after it.

Most Northern Nigerians and Nigeriens share similar traditions and the muslim religion. They are from the Hausa-Fulani ethnic group and speak Hausa, one of the most spoken languages in Africa.

The main difference is that Niger used to be a French colony while Nigeria was a British protectorate. Despite that, Hausa is usually the common first language in the area. If a Northern Nigerian and a Nigerien meet, they would usually speak Hausa.

Related Links

How do Niger and Nigeria differ?
Why is Nigeria much more developed than Niger?
How do we call 'a person from Niger' if Nigerian means 'a person from Nigeria'?
Are Niger and Nigeria one country?
What is it like living in Niger?
Does Niger have internet?
How often is Niger confused for Nigeria?

If Guinea Conakry is the main source of river niger then why are they not using it to their own advantage? Or by charging Mali, Niger, and especially Nigeria for the fresh water which plays a significant role in thier country.

What do you call something from Niger and Nigeria? Are both terms "Nigerian"?
What are people from Niger called?

News Nigeria

Jakande was sentenced to jail just like his boss, Awolowo. But Jakande was crying in the court not because of himself but for Awolowo.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

When Awolowo saw him, approached him and asked him "why crying for only me..." Jakande replied, "I don't mind going to jail and even adding your terms to mine, why South West, why is it that the only Premier in Nigeria that will be jailed is the Premier of my Region?".

Awolowo replied, "Dry your tears, God sometimes keeps his own away from when danger is approaching...."

And that was what happened! The reason why Nigeria didn't break in 1967 was Obafemi Awolowo.

Gowon said, "I needed him badly more than I needed the Nigerian Army".....Why? Two reasons;

1. The original rallying point of the Yoruba was Awolowo. If Yoruba supported the breakup, no Jupiter can stop it. Therefore, to keep Nigeria one, Awolowo must endorse it!!!!

2. The wisdom of Awolowo was unequaled, unparalleled, and unrivaled. His wisdom must not be on the side of the rebel, Nigeria would not survive without it.

No wonder the two Warriors Gowon and Ojukwu said and I quote; "I am the luckiest ruler of Nigeria because the best Nigeria asset in person of Chief Awolowo was my Vice Chairman and Finance Commissioner..."- Gowon. "Chief Awolowo is the best President of Nigeria that never was..."- Ojukwu. Need I say more?

Murtala Mohammed had ensured in his Transition Programme that Shehu Shagari would not contest but after his death, OBJ relaxed the rules.....Shagari was allowed to contest and won but in 1984, Buhari stopped Shagari again, describing his election as "shamelessly rigged".....

NCNC was the popular Party in Lagos. They always won Lagos. And Awolowo's Action Group would have lost in 1954 if not for Madam Abibatu Mogaji the mother of JAGABAN who mobilized the Lagos women for AG!

THE SECRET OF AWOLOWO...

Awolowo deliberately spent a lot of money in establishing exclusive investments for the Western Region where he thought the SW Progressive Politics would be financed. He said, "SW need a stable source of funds to fight politically because poor people cannot fight the Central Government...".

No one knew this secret until his Deputy had issues with Awolowo and leaked the secret to the opponent. He told them "fight Awolowo from now till forever, if you didn't destroy the Western Nigerian Investments, SW will always be buoyant financially and they will fight you and win you...." Wow!!!!! That was the end!!!

From that time, to cut the story short, SW was targeted! AWO was accused of fraud. Investments converted to Full state investment and later Odu'a Investment. And later, during the military regime, there was a time when all SW governors were non-Yorubas, Odu'a investment was crushed. Cold dead! But LAGOS of Tinubu reinvested the progressive interest in a more sophisticated way.

MAY THE SECRET OF LAGOS NOT BE LEAKED THE WAY ENEMIES LEAKED THE SECRET OF SW!!! The Story of Progressive Politics in Nigeria since 1954 had its Genesis from Awolowo's Palm Tree which, After processing, has its revelation from Tinubu's Broom!!!

No more No less!

We must never forget the families of Obafemi Awolowo, Lateef Jakande, Bisi Onabanjo, Bola Ige, Adekunle Ajasin, Ambrose Ali, Adebayo, JS Olawoyin, Anthony Enahoro, Abraham Adesanya, S.O Gbadamosi, Bode Thomas.....These are the first generation of progressive politicians who played progressive politics for life!!!

UP AWO!!!!

Simple but Notable. When Awolowo arrived in Lagos from Calabar Prison, after meeting with Gowon, it was Murtala Mohammed who voluntarily drove Awolowo home, in his car. Murtala described the gesture(driving Awolowo) as a privilege!!!

News Nigeria

Ozumba Mbadiwe

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 12m

Born on March 15, 1915 into the family of Mbadiwe Odum from Arondizuogu, present-day Imo state. Ozumba Mbadiwe was a politician, statesman, feminist advocate, nationalist and pan-Africanist. He was known for his glamorous and flamboyant style and was an important political figure in Nigeria's First Republic. He attended Aggrey Memorial College in Arochukwu, Baptist College, and Igbobi College in Lagos in 1934 and 1935, respectively. He began trading after leaving Igbobi and in 1937 founded his own trading company, Mbadiwe Produce Association. In 1940, Mbadiwe went on to study in the United States at Columbia University and New York University, where he assisted in the formation of the African Students Association in 1941 and the African Academy of Arts and Research in 1943 - two platforms that drew the notice of then-first lady of the United States, Eleanor Roosevelt, who welcomed him to the White House. Ozumba Mbadiwe Road in Victoria Island, Lagos, where the Lekki Toll gate is situated was named after him in immortalization. Recently, a top Nigerian artiste, Reekado Banks sang a song titled "Ozumba Mbadiwe" also in his memory. Gone but not forgotten!

News Nigeria

Legendary Afrobeat musician, Fela Kuti married 27 of his backup dancers in one day the

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

after he had asked all the ladies in his band if they wanted to marry him. When all 27 of them agreed to be his wives, Fela called 12 traditional priests to preside over the wedding ceremony which took place at a hotel in Lagos, Nigeria on the 20th of February 1978.

For honeymoon, Fela took all his 27 wives to Ghana.

However, eight years later in 1986, the late Fela divorced all of them at the same time with the claim that; "Marriage brings jealousy and selfishness"

What's something unique about living in Nigeria that is unlike anywhere else in the world?

Richard Nwachukwu
lives in Australia Answered Aug 13, 2019

Nigerian laws makes it possible for anyone to live and enjoy life in the country as long as you can afford whatever you desire.

Unlike other parts of the world where racism prevails, Nigeria is a country where you're loved regardless of what color your skin is.

Nigeria is rich in solid and liquid minerals and with a few thousand dollars, you could become a landlord, invest in any business of your choice

Labor is cheap, Nigerians love to work for their money (regardless of what you hear on the internet)

Life in Nigeria is cheap because the fx rates puts you at several hundreds over the local naira (if you have pounds, US/Ca/Au dollars, euros, Durham, etc)

Our women love foreigners too, you can get as much women as you desire so long as you take good care of them - lol.

The climate is superb, the rich cultural heritage would.make you never wanna go back, our food is second to non and our way of life is funny too.

You'll always find something that will make you laugh in my country.

However, we love to be respected too!

Related Answer
What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?

Claire Naya, lives in Lagos, Nigeria (2017-present) Updated Apr 3 · Upvoted by Timothy Ocheme, lives in Lagos, Nigeria (1997-present) and Iyaniwura Abdulrahman Adebola , lives in Lagos, Nigeria (1991-present)

"Driving a car in Lagos is like war, and in war you don't tell your opponent your next move"

There are two Lagos experiences; First the Mainland experience and the Island experience. Let's look at the both shall we?

MAINLAND.

Serving as a capital territory for 77 years to a country largely recognised for her gross population is no small feat, and to Lagos it's both a blessing and a curse.

I began this article talking about cars for a reason; TRAFFIC.

Lagos and Traffic are like bread and butter, spiders and webs, sugar and tea, one cannot exist without the other. If you're the impatient kind, you'll hate it here. If you're going to try, at least be ready with your insults or curses to throwback at anybody bc the traffic is a war zone and the curses are bullets.

Owing to the overpopulation, you're apt to meet different kinds of people, I used to be a fat teenager and one time while taking a stroll to a small kiosk, one street guy called me Orobo (fattie) y'all I was 14 lol although I hated that remark from a total stranger, it pushed me to lose weight through extreme means but at least we got the desired result.

Now I get called Ashawo a prostitute, basically every beautiful young girl, living her best life in exotic places is an Ashawo, I've also had strangers go extra miles for me to not be harassed by other people. So be ready to meet really rude humans and kind angels.

Here everything is a stone throw away from you, there are supermarkets, grocery stores, malls, fashion stores, cinemas, gardens pools like the proximity to something much needed is commendable.

Security isn't that much of an issue: if you get kidnapped in broad day light and the police doesn't stop your kidnappers, the traffic will. Haha but security isn't that much of an issue because you're expected to be alert at all times, there are natural sweethearts ready to help you with no intention of collecting tips from you and then there are others who expect you to give them money for no reason.

I love the street fashion, people wearing thrifts and still looking cool in an ugly way.

If you're a white immigrant then everyone treats you special like you're some sort of demigod or goddess. Nigerians in general have this deferential treatment or respect for White Immigrants and sometimes it bothers on fascination □□♀□.

ISLAND:

Still traffic but in a civilised way, people don't throw insults around but they will definitely switch to your lane and expect you to be cool about it.

Everyone is especially helpful and beautiful and mindful although there are some bad eggs too.

Everyone knows everyone, because they're all been-tos or mostly so.

If you're a white immigrant or you have a mixed baby with a Nigerian, there's a special clique for you to join where you lounge around with other women and sip martinis while discussing Nigerian Men.

Security is really good and expensive but at least you're safe.

Mainland is usually viewed as the poorer and middle classed side of Lagos while Island is the Upper Middle and Upper classed. Choose your fighter.

Anyways here's a picture of me enjoying my wine and a glass of watermelon juice on the Mainland because I cannot kill myself.

EDIT 2.0: holyyyy [expletive] why does this have 800+ upvotes??, did not expect this much at all, thanks for taking the time to read and also would have posted this underneath the picture but for some technical reason I can't, so you're here reading this before seeing the actual picture I promised. Haha sorry.

EDIT 2022: internationally, between the covid that held the world in a chokehold, the global inflation currently ongoing owing to gas and oil more like the lack thereof, the Ukraine invasion bordering on a possible world war.

Nationally, “The End sars protest and killings of protesters, the secessionists hoping to divide Nigeria, the ongoing Kaduna/Abuja train kidnappings and other kidnappings everywhere, the aviation fuel scarcity etc, a lot of countries and states are no longer what they once were in pre-covid era and Nigeria is not spared; particularly Lagos.

Everything right now is going to shit(excuse my language) the upcoming elections have suddenly turned the once serene atmosphere to a field mine, we’re all waiting for something to happen and truth is we don’t know what, we don’t know if it will be good or bad but yet we wait. security is now very much an issue, YOU ARE NOT SAFE IN NIGERIA, the police will not help you, strangers have grown more weary trying to survive, the govt has its head buried in producing a candidate to their personal interest, again if you’re a foreigner with no previous experience in Nigeria, I suggest you stay away. There’s been so much unnecessary deaths, natural and otherwise. God help us.

Related Links

Why are Sudan Somalia, Djibouti, Eritrea, and Mauritania considered Arab countries?
Are Djibouti people Arab?
Why is Somalia in the Arab League?
Why do Arabs try to claim Somalia as being Arab when Somalis are Black African people?
Were Djibouti & Ethiopia one country before the French colonised Djibouti?
Which one is Somalia, Arab or African?
Do most people in Comoros, Djibouti and Somalia actually speak Arabic?
Why is Djibouti not part of Somalia?
Why are Somalia and the Comoros Islands members of the Arab League?
Why isn’t Niger and Mali a part of the Arab League?

News Nigeria

COLONIZERS IN AFRIKA WERE NOTHING BUT FASCIST NAZI .

· Following Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 28m

ALL THESE EUROPAINS GLORIFYING INJUSTICE

IN MEMORY OF THE SILVERTON SIEGE

PRETORIA 1980 .

MESSAGE OF DEDAN KIMATHI

After taking a long journey, travelling throughout Africa and Palestine for three months, I have found that many things have changed, and evil has increased a great deal.

For the return of peace and the birth of a new Kenya, I have told all leaders of my army in the forest to stop fighting from August 1, 1953. General Kahiú-Itina, who is a special leader, is now under arrest for attacking Kagúndúiní, the Tetú Location of Chief Múhoya wa Kagumba of Nyírí, without my permission. We want peace, but we maintain that we must first be recognized as a people.

We will always find food despite your efforts to stop us from getting it.

As a member of the Defense Council of the whole of Africa, and the President of the branch in Kenya, I ask the [Colonial] Government to withdraw all its forces, including the police and the KAR troops from all areas of our country and stop the European settlers from hunting in the forest, then fighting will cease and racial cooperation will be established.

I am telling you, very clearly, that there is no Mau Mau; since the poor man is Mau Mau, it is only Mau Mau, which can finish Mau Mau, not bombs and other weaponry.

Because of the [Colonial] Government's policy of moving people without any consideration, and of harrasing them in the Reserves, many people have come to the forest for fear of being killed, or badly beaten.

As a result, Mau Mau has increased a thousand times and now I am glad that I have many soldiers.

When KAU (Kenya African Union) was proscribed, I congratulated the [Colonial] Government because I received many askaris.

Many Africans who were confined in Nairobi said they had been given a good reason to follow me in the forest.

Every week and every month, I received many people in my office coming from Nairobi, Nakuru and other small towns.

1. If people are being wantonly attacked in towns and even in the reserves, how can they put up with it without running into the forest?

2. If the police and KAR and homeguards withhold food, then who can put up with hunger?

3. If there is no political organization here in Kenya, why should everyone not side with Mau Mau?

4. If colour discrimination continues in Kenya, will the Africans, who have eyes, ears and a brain, remain the underdog?

5. It is better to die than to live in misery; why should we put up with suffering in our hearts [and in our own country]?

Now it is the responsibility of the [Colonial] Government to see whether [what I have said is] true or not. The foundation of lawful cooperation is also the foundation of peace, wealth and progress.

Why should the [Colonial] Government not believe me? I am certain after next month, it will.

Yours,

Field Marshal Dedan Kímathi

News Nigeria

BREAKING: Man caught stealing children's pampers and allegedly selling each 1million to ritualist in Felele, Lokoja.

· Following Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Wed

Although he was thoroughly beaten by locals before handed over to the police, he refused to mention his sponsors.

How do Nigerians feel when asked by Westerners, "How do you speak English so well?"

Ezeudo Maduka 3y

Originally Answered: Nigeria: How do Nigerians feel when asked by Westerners, "How do you speak English so well?"

When I was living in Texas, a certain Florida-born American who lived in Bedford, Texas at the time asked me, “How did you learn to speak English?” My simple answer was: “English is the official language in Nigeria.” I also explained to her that I not only spoke English but also spoke Igbo and the Nigerian Pidgin English.

Truth be told, an average Nigerian with basic education can speak at least three languages - English, the Nigerian Pidgin English, and a mother tongue. My wife speaks four languages, and is on her way to learning her fifth - Igbo! (I often tell my friends that how I know my wife is angry is when she begins speaking in a language that I don’t understand. She speaks two languages I don’t have a clue what she is talking about - Benin and Yoruba in addition to the Pidgin English, and a strong command of English)

The reaction of a Nigerian to the question, “How did you learn to speak English so well?” will depend on the inquiree’s perception of social issues, who asks the question, tone of voice, facial expression, and so on.

My first feeling when I heard that question was one of elation. The second feeling was of pity for the inquirer. That was MY feeling. Whether or not that was the right feeling is a question for another day.I felt elated because this lady was pleasantly surprised that I spoke English very well, and contributed robust ideas in the meetings we both attended often. I was neither embarrassed nor angry. Before we met, she might not have seen a Nigerian her entire life, and might have held the stereotypical view of Africa, that is prevalent in the United States, of a savage, brutish, and scary place.

I also felt pity for her because of her miseducation and/or ignorance. I have met some Americans who think that Africa is a country! After seeing the movie Black Panther, some Americans honestly believed there was a country called Wakanda.

A New Yorker might not ask the question of how a Nigerian learned to speak English very well; New York is a melting pot of languages and peoples. Nevertheless, I would not be surprised if someone who was born and raised in New York has limited knowledge of Nigeria, or Africa.

The Nigerian novelist and Orange Prize award-winner Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie was irritated when a French interviewer asked the question: “Are there bookshops in Nigeria?” You can view her reaction and response here: Interviewer asks Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie: 'Are there bookshops in Nigeria?'

I would not be irritated at the question; I would be flabbergasted at the inquirer’s ignorance. I would feel pity. Ignorance is universal. Being a teacher, I would “inflict” my student with knowledge rather than be angry.

News Nigeria

Nigeria□□ have been fined $152,000 for violating FIFA's disciplinary code during Nigeria's final 2022 World Cup Qualifiers against Ghana□□ in March.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Tue

Hundreds of fans stormed pitch following Nigeria's 1-1 draw, which resulted the elimantion of Nigeria from World Cup Qualifiers. Nigeria will also play their next match without fans, as part of their punishment.

How do Nigerians feel when asked by Westerners, "How do you speak English so well?"

Ezeudo Maduka 3y

Originally Answered: Nigeria: How do Nigerians feel when asked by Westerners, "How do you speak English so well?"

When I was living in Texas, a certain Florida-born American who lived in Bedford, Texas at the time asked me, “How did you learn to speak English?” My simple answer was: “English is the official language in Nigeria.” I also explained to her that I not only spoke English but also spoke Igbo and the Nigerian Pidgin English.

Truth be told, an average Nigerian with basic education can speak at least three languages - English, the Nigerian Pidgin English, and a mother tongue. My wife speaks four languages, and is on her way to learning her fifth - Igbo! (I often tell my friends that how I know my wife is angry is when she begins speaking in a language that I don’t understand. She speaks two languages I don’t have a clue what she is talking about - Benin and Yoruba in addition to the Pidgin English, and a strong command of English)

The reaction of a Nigerian to the question, “How did you learn to speak English so well?” will depend on the inquiree’s perception of social issues, who asks the question, tone of voice, facial expression, and so on.

My first feeling when I heard that question was one of elation. The second feeling was of pity for the inquirer. That was MY feeling. Whether or not that was the right feeling is a question for another day.I felt elated because this lady was pleasantly surprised that I spoke English very well, and contributed robust ideas in the meetings we both attended often. I was neither embarrassed nor angry. Before we met, she might not have seen a Nigerian her entire life, and might have held the stereotypical view of Africa, that is prevalent in the United States, of a savage, brutish, and scary place.

I also felt pity for her because of her miseducation and/or ignorance. I have met some Americans who think that Africa is a country! After seeing the movie Black Panther, some Americans honestly believed there was a country called Wakanda.

A New Yorker might not ask the question of how a Nigerian learned to speak English very well; New York is a melting pot of languages and peoples. Nevertheless, I would not be surprised if someone who was born and raised in New York has limited knowledge of Nigeria, or Africa.

The Nigerian novelist and Orange Prize award-winner Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie was irritated when a French interviewer asked the question: “Are there bookshops in Nigeria?” You can view her reaction and response here: Interviewer asks Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie: 'Are there bookshops in Nigeria?'

I would not be irritated at the question; I would be flabbergasted at the inquirer’s ignorance. I would feel pity. Ignorance is universal. Being a teacher, I would “inflict” my student with knowledge rather than be angry.

Related Links

Why do Nigerians speak bad English when it's their official language?
Why can’t Americans understand Nigerians’ way of speaking English?
Do Nigerians speak fluent English?
How many people speak English in Nigeria?
Do Nigerians speak English as their first language?
Are Nigeria’s native people considered to be native English speakers?
What do people think about Nigerian accent?
Is Nigeria an English speaking country?
How do Westerners view Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why are Filipinos so proud of saying they are English speaking, yet they often are afraid to

News Nigeria

In 1958, Nigeria's□□ Chinua Achebe wrote his first novel book "Things Fall Apart" at the age of 28, which has sold over 20 million copies and has been translated to over 50 languages.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

• It was ranked as one of the Greatest Books Ever Written in a list by Encyclopedia Brittanica in 2018.

• It was on number 5 on BBC's 100 Stories That Shaped The World.

• It was also among the 100 books that were featured on the TV series, The Great American Read.

In 2011, Chinua Achebe forced 50 Cent to rename his forthcoming new movie "Things Fall Apart". He was contacted by Achebe's legal team that he couldn't use the title. Even when he offered Achebe $1 million dollars, Achebe felt insulted and rejected the money. 50 Cent later re-named his movie "All Things Fall Apart".

Related Answer

Why is the west not sactioning Nigeria leaders the way they are doing to Russian olygach.. because every death in Nigeria is caused by the political leaders through their actions and inactions as so many lives are wasted on daily basis in Nigeria?

David Dasa, lives in Nigeria Answered Nov 9, 2017

Why is Boko Haram against Western education in Nigeria?

For no good reason, believe me.

After having several discussions with my muslim friends, and trying to make my own research for many years I came to the conclusion that the Boko haram issue has everything to do with the internal politics of Nigeria and is definitely not based on the teachings of Prophet Muhammad (PBUH).

They*(Boko haram)* simply wanted to achieve their own goals and looked for how to market it to the population, trying to make people fear western education as a first step towards westernization, which is seen as a corrupting influence on society's moral values. So apparently they would have us go back to the stone age.

They oppose secular institutions hence they oppose the secular state of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, and seek to establish their version of an islamic state (where of course their leader would be the head, and their principal officers would be high ranking government officials, pure selfish interest really).

Abubakar Shekau, the leader of Boko haram, probably doesn't even have any qualms with western education, but hey! That's the best marketing strategy he could come up with, so whatever.

Fortunately their message didn't catch on as nobody I have ever spoken to sees Boko haram as "liberators" or "preservers of moral virtue", the only people who bought into their ideology were some disillusioned youth who felt their career options were brighter as members of Boko haram, but everyone else sees them for what they really are, terrorist crooks and political tools.

What is Nigeria lacking?

Osazua Iruedo , Surviving in Nigeria Answered Nov 4, 2018

Nigeria is lacking a lot. But the one that bothers me so much is the lack of ELECTRICITY.

Isn't it sad to know Nigerian's economy has been described as a diesel generator economy, where small and medium scale business incur extremely high overhead cost of maintaining expenses. Even the small things of our lives are affected. Has anyone tried preparing dinner In the dark before? Or when at that moment when you are watching your favorite series on TV, phcn decides to do what they know how to do best.

Electricity is vital to development. It is crucial to industrialisation, wealth creation and employment opportunities. How will Nigeria solve the issues of lack of employment when there is no light?.

Companies are moving their manufacturing to other African countries since they realised how easy it is to import product than make them here. This has made so many people lose their jobs. Locally produced goods are more expensive than some imported goods since manufacturers sell at a high price because of high cost of production.

Is it the horrible stories from hospitals, where doctors operate with a kerosene lamp or light from mobile phones when there is no light.

Where did we miss it? It's sad we find ourselves in this very weird situation.

Nigeria is one of the world's largest producer of fossil fuel. Why are we having problems generating our own electricity?

I wish Nigerian government will solve the electricity problem. It's the sure way of putting the nation on the pathway to greatness and solving part of the employment issues.

Related Links

Why Nigeria lacks tourists? Is tourism still underdeveloped in Nigeria?
Why is Nigeria full of bad leaders?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
What does the Western world think of my country, Nigeria?
Why is Nigeria so hated in Western countries?
Why is it that outsiders hate Nigeria?
Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?
Why do so many foreigners go to Nigeria and think Nigeria is good?
Is the problem with Nigeria the people or the leaders?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

What is the root cause of bad leadership in Nigeria?

Adedeji D. Ajibola studied at D-Ivy College Answered Feb 15, 2018

Thomas Jefferson once said “the government you elect is the government you deserve”. However, that statement contains a huge conundrum in a country like Nigeria, A century of forced colonialism followed by about 30 years of a forced incompetent military government.

has created an indelible mark on the Nigerian psyche to the point where corrupt incompetent leaders are perceived as demigods or in some far more terrible cases God himself (or herself) and petty thieves looked on as the devil.

Of course the incompetence has been met with some resistance once every blue moon in the area of revolts and civil disobedience, however this has been met with a very brutal response from the government (where’s Nnamdi Kanu now?) now this is where we usually miss the mark, in the wise words of the icon Martin Luther King Jr, “no oppressor will ever willingly give freedom to the oppressed, it must be taken by force.”

This statement however is alien to the Nigerian people, once we try one time and we’re shut down we all go home and pat ourselves on the back and say “at least we tried” the irony is that these are the ones who claim to care and these are the rare Nigerians. Most times when you try to speak out you’re look at as a lunatic, because the term “I have a family” is a very common term so we’ll rather die in silence than bodily speak in public.

Nigeria's bad leadership is not the fault of the government itself, as Joseph de Maistre once said, every nation gets the leadership it deserves. Nigerians are not truly concerned about the state of their country, take a look at this it is clearly evident in our daily affairs. The people who can actually do something would rather not be arsed and would leave elsewhere for a "better life", the agonizing complication about this is that these people who leave are the ones that can truly have an impact on the country, majority that remain behind are plagued by ignorance, it is very evident in the last election. Out of the 200 million+ population, about 28 million voted. A measly 14% of the population, what I find laughable is that this is actually one of the best voting turn outs in the country's democratic history. The indifference, foolishness and ambivalence of a citizenry followed by callousness and mismanagement of its leaders gives you an environment like Nigeria. I don't believe telling the Nigerian people what to do will ever work, however creating an environment or rather giving them a glimpse of how a good government can impact a country, will more than likely spark an awakening. I'm an optimistic person, A believer in the greater tomorrow for Nigeria, and i believe sooner or later Nigeria will wake up and will be weary of what it has become. Our Moses is on the way to lead the exodus of Nigerians into freedom. As long as there are Nigerians like me who still love and believe in this country, there's still hope.

Related Links

Why Nigeria lacks tourists? Is tourism still underdeveloped in Nigeria?
Why is Nigeria full of bad leaders?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
What does the Western world think of my country, Nigeria?
Why is Nigeria so hated in Western countries?
Why is it that outsiders hate Nigeria?
Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?
Why do so many foreigners go to Nigeria and think Nigeria is good?
Is the problem with Nigeria the people or the leaders?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

News Nigeria

THEY CLAIM BUHARI HAS DONE NOTHING. UN SCRIBE, ANTONIO GUTTERES, SAYS NOT SO

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 22h

The Yoruba people of South-west Nigeria have a saying: when a child rejects instructions at home, it is from outside that such child is trained.

And that was exactly what happened on Tuesday and Wednesday, this week, when United Nations Secretary-General, Antonio Gutteres visited Nigeria as part of a three nations African tour. He said it was "a visit of solidarity with all Nigerians, particularly the victims of terrorism."

The UN Scribe was visiting Nigeria for the first time, and he had probably fallen for the antics of the Western media, and some unpatriotic Nigerians who have nothing good to say about their own country. They even visit the UN and parliaments of leading countries of the world, to de-market Nigeria.

Gutteres had probably thought he was coming to a country where hopelessness and despondency were order of the day. He started from Maiduguri, Borno State, once the epicenter of the Boko Haram insurgency in the country. When he saw what the Muhammadu Buhari administration, in conjunction with the Babagana Zulum government had done, he had a quick rethink.

At a meeting with President Buhari on Wednesday afternoon in Abuja, he declared: "I was extremely surprised. The image that exists is of a hopeless situation. But what I saw was a Borno of hope."

I chuckled as the international public servant expressed his consternation. He said he visited a centre where former Boko Haram fighters were being rehabilitated, and also camps of internally displaced persons (IDPs).

"It is necessary to provide a vision of the future for the people. Vision of jobs, schools, health institutions, and the like. And that was what was being done. It is a remarkably wise and well conceived strategy."

But the naysayers, the wailing wailers, always say President Buhari has not achieved anything in the country. They see roads, rail, bridges, airports, but they say he's not doing anything. Well, like the contumacious child, who refused to take instructions at home, an outsider has come to tell them the home truth.

They say Nigeria is good for nothing. Gutteres says the country "is a pillar of continental and global cooperation-and a steadfast partner of the United Nations." He added: "Nigeria is a country where Africa's promise and potential come to vivid life."

That is the same country that a clergyman, who should inspire hope and faith, says has been broken, completely destroyed and thrown to the dustbin. Well, when a child refuses to take instructions from home...

The UN scribe said Nigerians were fantastic people, and the country has "solid institutions, and a vibrant private sector." But that is not what some ever cynical Nigerians say about their country, and that is not the picture they go abroad to paint of their country. Shame, I say again; shame.

President Buhari said Boko Haram was the major security challenge his administration inherited in 2015. "They will kill people, and shout 'Allah Akbar,' (meaning God is great). But when you do that it is either you do not know that God, or you are being stupid. God is justice, and you can't take an innocent soul, and say God is great.

"We began to educate the people, and gradually, they understood that Boko Haram was not about religion. The group is largely decimated today, and government is trying to resettle the people. We are trying to get them back to the land, and things will get better in the near future."

Yet they say Buhari hasn't achieved anything. When your adversary sees your robust horse, standing in all its grandeur, he turns up his nose, and says; see this dwarf horse.

They have eyes and see nothing, they have ears and refuse to hear. Well, an outsider will one day come to tell them the truth.

The Secretary-General said the people he saw in Maiduguri "remain hopeful and committed to returning to their communities and resuming their lives."

Still commending the Buhari administration, he welcomed "the establishment of the Presidential Committee on the Repatriation, Returns and Resettlement of Displaced Persons in the North-East."

But to some of our people, the country is broken, destroyed, and nothing is working. Well, when a child refuses to accept instructions given at home, an outsider knocks sense into his head eventually.

Hear Gutteres again: "And I thanked President Buhari for his unwavering support of the Multinational Joint Task Force and the Lake Chad Basin Commission."

Yet, to the permanent critics, Buhari is not doing anything, and has not achieved anything. I hear.

In 2011, Boko Haram bombed the United Nations building in Abuja, killed many people, and completely wrecked the structure. The Buhari administration undertook the rebuilding of the facility, and got it delivered in good time.

The Secretary-General described it as "an impressive edifice, " stressing: "I want to thank the Government and people of Nigeria for not only hosting the United Nations, but for rebuilding and reopening the United Nations House in Abuja in 2019 following the terrorist attacks in 2011."

That's an outsider appreciating the good works of the Buhari administration, which the willfully blind have refused to see, and the deliberately deaf have refused to hear. If a child stubbornly spurns instructions at home....

Let's conclude with this very inspiring one from Mr Gutteres.

"My trip to Nigeria is not to visit people in despair, but people filled with hope. When there's political vision, good things can happen."

If you have been deluded, brainwashed, hoodwinked into seeing your country as broken, destroyed, good for nothing, then begin to have a rethink. Those who fed you with that narrative have their own sinister agenda. Our country has challenges in security, economy, and other areas, yes, but it is neither broken nor destroyed. "If you don't say you are, nobody would say thou art."

President Buhari has worked for this country, and continues to work. Let not an outsider come and tell us the home truth that is right before our eyes.

*Adesina is Special Adviser to President Buhari on Media and Publicity

News Nigeria

Meet Pistor Killer From Obinulo Ngodo

Isuochi, Who Defeated Killiwi Nwachukwu Once In A Fight.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 3h

Over the years, Isuochi has produced great men and woman who during their stay made history....One of such men is Sampson Ibeabuchi a.k.a Pistor Killer. He hails from Ngodo Isuochi. He was a strong and great man during his days; Pistor Killer at the early stage of 17 carried four able men on his body in a suspended style for more than 5 minutes without shaking.

He was very strong to the extent of pulling cars with his hair which no one during his days could dare to. He also partakes in several competitions which he was victorious and won medals as of that time. He carries 12 bags of 50kg Eagle cement on his body which non of his fellow Supermen where able to carry it, they were only able to carry 8 bags each.

He was once had a fight with Killiwi Nwachukwu which brought him victory at the end and was called the world Sampson-Pistor killer. He also lifted Killiwi Nwachukwu with one hand for than 20 seconds which struck the imagination of many as of then. He was friendly to many and loved by the Children of those days, he was also feared by his mates. It didn't stop there, he also uses his hair to lift up 80kg log of fresh wood and many other things which he displayed in his days.

News Nigeria

Ramadan: Asiwaju Bola Ahmed Tinubu donates 1800 bags of rice to Kano residents.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Apr 26

National Leader of the All Progressives Congress and Presidential hopeful, Asiwaju Bola Ahmed Tinubu has donated 1800 bags of rice to residents of Kano State.

The rice which was distributed on Sunday is part of a Ramadan package for Muslim faithful in the state.

RAMADAN
2023
PRESIDENT

RAMADAN
2023
PRESIDENT

What's something unique about living in Nigeria that is unlike anywhere else in the world?

Osazua Iruedo Updated 2y

There are so many unique things about Nigeria and Nigerians that you won't find anywhere else in the world.

In Nigeria, most of us can't take compliment and say thank you. It’s not intentional though, we just have a funny way of showing ourselves.

Friend : Your hair is so long and fine.

Nigerian : Eh! Have you seen my sisters hair, it’s longer than my own. Hmm, you've not seen anything yet.

Friend : you are just fresh and glowing.

Nigerian : Abeg don't whine me. I'm broke ,everywhere is just dry.

Again ,we have a funny way of giving the same brand or product a particular name we choose.

Others : I want to buy a pack of seasoning cubes.

Seller : which brand

Others : maggie

Nigerian : I want to buy Maggie

Seller : which one

Nigerian : knor chicken.

Other : I want to buy a soft drink. Soda or whatever you have .

Nigerian. I want to buy minerals .

And in nigeria, you will be telling your friends something and they will reply ‘I dey tell you'. Like ,who is telling who?

Related Links

What is weird in Nigeria but normal in the rest of the world?
What is normal in Nigeria, but weird in other places?
What are the best things about living in Nigeria?
How is life in Nigeria?
Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
What things have you seen while living abroad that you wish are present in Nigeria?
What does Nigeria do better than other countries?
What makes Nigeria so unique?

Why has Nigeria become the poverty capital of the world only next to India?

Theophilus E.Daniel-Kagbare Loves Nigeria, warts and all Thu

Be a VOICE not an echo!

Let's stop echoing all manners of crap simply because we hear them resounded over the air, in the mainstream media. If we don't have anything constructive or helpful to say, let's please be quiet.

Nigeria is not the poverty capital of the world. Unless, of course, YOU live in the poverty capital of Nigeria. And every country has it's pockets of poverty even in the midst of a booming economy.

Life is to you what you make of it; your country is to you, what you make of it.

Economies go through booms and bust, recession and depression, etc. These are part of the process, and the wealthiest nations of the world today went through their fair share of gloom.

To seek a constructive and intelligent engagement of ideas of how to better our circumstances, is a good thing; to indulge in emotional lamentation of our lot is a pointless and dissipating exercise.

For the fellows in the pictures below, the U.S of A is the poverty capital of the world. That does not, by any means, make America the poverty capital of the world. And those fellows may well pass through this phase of their lives to see far better days.

Related Links

Nigeria overtakes India as a nation with the poorest people and 44 Indians are coming out of extreme poverty every minute. Is this the Modi effect?

Nigeria has just been said to be the poverty capital of the world. Why is this so?

Why is Nigeria the only black-led Subsaharan African country that manages to grow to have decent strength and economy while other black-led countries are still suffering from extreme poverty? What is the secret of Nigeria for other blacks to learn?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?
Why is India considered the super poverty country in the world?
Why is there so much poverty in India?

Why is Nigeria one of the poorest country in the world with all the resources that can make her the one of the richest country in world?

Why is India much poorer than Nigeria, and how can India catch up with Nigeria?

India has the world's second highest number of people (after Nigeria) living in extreme poverty. Yet it spends a lot of money on space and lunar programs. What is the purpose of that?

What is the solution to poverty in Nigeria?

text end

Meet Nnete Okorie-Egbe, she was 63 year old in 1929 when she led the women riot against colonial taxation in Aba,Eastern Nigeria □□ She died at 102 in 1968.

Aniekpeno Ekong Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria

About the Author
Aniekpeno Ekong is Publisher at News Nigeria
Works at Government of Nigeria
Bsc from University of Calabar (UNICAL)Graduated 2008
Lives in Abuja, Nigeria2016–present
Knows English

News Nigeria

Kebbi business mogul signs N100m cheque for Tinubu's presidential form

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Apr 21

TINUBU
SUPPORT ORGANIZATION (SO)
KANO STATE CHAPTER OFFICIAL
07067696560

The Director General Tinubu Support Organisation (TSO), Aminu Suleiman, has signed N100million cheque to purchase the APC presidential nomination form for Asiwaju Bola Tinubu.

What armor and weapons did the warriors of the Mali Empire use?

Tyrone Chillifoot

Updated Nov 17, 2019

The malian empire had an army 100,000 strong. Armor typically included Chainmail, gambesons steel curiasses, wooden, reed, and hide sheilds made from elephant, Oxen and Rhino hide weapons were sabers, straight swords,lances, javalins, spears, barbed poisoned and flaming arrows horses would typically wear fabric armor interwoven with chainmail mail metal bress plates infantry were mainly armed with spears and longbows laced with a deadly poison that could kill within 30 minutes.

Related Links

Has society really changed much the last 50-60 years?
Is life better now than it was 100 years ago?
What was life like for the average human 10,000 years ago?
In what ways was life better 60 years ago than it is now?
What do you think is worse a death sentence or a life sentence?
What were you doing a year ago today? Did you think life was going to be this different?
20 years ago, how was your life like?
Is life better now than it was half a century ago? Why or why not?
What was the turning point of your life that changed you completely?
From what aspects was life better 2000 years ago?

News Nigeria

Jumping the Broom is celebrated on this date.

This is an African American term and custom for marriage.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

THE BROOMSTICK WEDDING.

"Look squar' at de broomstick! All ready now! one-two-three-jump!"

The significance of the broom to Black heritage and history originates in the West African country of Ghana. During the Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade, most of Ghana in the 18th century was ruled by the Asante or Ashanti Confederacy. The Asante's urban areas and roads were kept conspicuously clean according to visiting British and Dutch traders with the use of locally made brooms. These same brooms were used by wives or servants to clean the courtyards of palaces or homes. The broom in Asante, Akan cultures also held spiritual value and symbolized sweeping away past wrongs or removing evil spirits.

This is where the broom comes into play regarding marriage. Brooms were (are) waved over the heads of marrying couples to ward off spirits. The couple would often but not always jump over the broom at the end of the ceremony. Jumping over the broom symbolized the wife's commitment or willingness to clean the courtyard of the new home she had joined. Furthermore, it expressed her overall commitment to the house. It also represented the determination of who ran the household. Whoever jumped highest over the broom could be the decision-maker of the household (usually the man). The jumping of the broom does not add up to taking a "leap of faith."

Jumping the broom was not a custom of slavery, but is a part of African culture that survived American slavery like the Voodoo religion of the Fon and Ewe ethnic groups or the ring shout ceremony of the BaKongo and Mbundu ethnic groups.

Some people also believed this was a customer in England and was brought to America through slavery.

What are the differences between Bantu, Nilotic, Yoruba, Igbo, Hausa, Pygmy, Bushmen, Hottentot, Oromo, Lamba, and Cushitic people?

Kelechi Wachuku, Linguist & Anthropologist at Heart Updated May 16, 2021

Bantu = a language family that is a subset of the Volta-Congo family, which is part of the Niger-Congo language family. All ethnic groups that speak a Bantu language are, therefore, Bantu. Zulus and Kikuyus are examples of Bantu peoples.

Nilotic = a language family that is a subset of the ostensible Eastern Sudanic family, which is a subset of the proposed Nilo-Saharan language family. Dinkas, Nuers, Kalenjins, and Luos are examples of Nilotic peoples.

Yorubas = the people who speak Yoruba and identify as Yoruba. They speak a Volta-Congo language as well, and speak a language that appears to be fairly, but certainly not very, closely related to the next group in this series. They live mostly in SW Nigeria, but also in parts of Bénin and Togo. They are mostly Christian, but with a large Muslim minority.

Igbos = the people who speak Igbo and identify as Igbo. Their language shares a lot of similarities with the Yoruba language. They come from SE Nigeria. They are mainly Christian.

Hausa = A Chadic-speaking people (part of the Afro-Asiatic family) who live mostly in Northern Nigeria, but also in parts of Niger. They're mostly Sunni Muslim.

Pygmy = a term for the original inhabitants of the Central African rainforest. They are know to have a relatively short stature, and are genetically distinct from other Central African populations. They speak a variety of languages, some of which are unrelated to one another, but frequently live symbiotically with non-Pygmy communities. The term "Pygmy" is somewhat controversial, though.

Bushmen = a slightly outdated term that described non-Bantu Southern African indigenous groups, most of whom were hunter-gatherers. They're typically referred to as "Khoisan peoples.".

Hottentot = an outdated and offensive term for the aforementioned. The name is rooted in the way European settlers and travelers thought how their languages sounded (they have clicks).

Oromos = a Cushitic people who live primarily in Ethiopia and part of Kenya. They're mostly Sunni Muslim, but with a large Christian minority, and are the largest Ethiopian ethnic group by percentage.

Lambas = a Bantu-speaking people from Zambia and the Democratic Republic of Congo.

Cushitic = as of yet, it is a subgroup of Afro-Asiatic languages in Northeast Africa. This family includes the Somali, Afar, and Oromo languages.

Related Links

What is the difference between West Africans and Bantu people?

What are the average phenotypical differences between "The True Negro", "Forest Negro", "Bantu Negro", "Nilote", and "Negrillo"?

Are African-Americans mainly Bantu, Nilotic or Khoi-San?
Are West Africans considered Bantu?

What are often the difference in appearance between Cushitic, Oromo, Bantu, and Nilotic peoples?

What did the original people of Africa look like before the Bantu expansion?
Who are the Bantu people?

There is a new DNA study attached below that shows modern West Africans and sub-Saharan Bantu speakers are not native to the region and that they only arrived there around 500 BC. So where did they come from?

Are all black people, Bantu or descendants of? If not, why not?
Are the Igbos of Nigeria Bantu?

Ashes was the powder on their faces, Scars became their tattoos, Chains was the ornaments around their necks, Rocks was the pillow they rested their heads

Aniekpeno Ekong · Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria Apr 30

Their sweats never got dry even in the cold, Blood was their coverings when they ran out of sweat.

Despite the odds, our forefathers stood tall in the midst of challenges, They fought the battle of destiny to their last breath.

They didn't took flight even before the fright, They fought for freedom even in their own kingdoms.

They remained strong even in the presence of death, Their thick muscles was perforated with the strength of angry bullets

They went through the shames to cover the nakedness of their future generations.

Awake Africans we are not cowards, our fathers are warriors, we are Africans not African't

THE LABOUR OF OUR PAST HEROES WILL NEVER GO IN VAIN.

Why are Nigerian businessmen all over Africa, and what is the history behind it?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller 2y

Nigerians are found in every peaceful country where there is money to be made.

There is no place like home but it's easier to make it outside Nigeria than within Nigeria.

First, the capital you need to start a considerable business in Nigeria might be enough for two businesses in some African country.

It's no news cost of living is high in Nigeria, except you're living in the rural areas where you produce everything for your household.

And the unfortunate, pitiful toll gates that might swap your capital before your business even kicks off.

If you have a huge physical business, the cost of running a generator may not be easy, the scratch could be easily felt on your purse as one can't depend on the power authorities.

I remember a former boss buying a generator for 4 million Naira, not to talk of the running cost.

Secondly, some big businesses in Nigeria simply have branches in other African countries, that causes Nigerians to travel too.

In all, most Nigerians love to move around, we love our families but we don't cling on to them, we like to see them once in a while, like, during Christmas.

We go far to hustle and come back home for development.

But if you understand the Nigerian market, there might be no better place to make profits quickly as it could be in Nigeria.

Nigeria is a consumer market, people are known to buy things they don't need, only to impress.

It's often said that if you can't find a Nigerian in a place something is quite not alright there.

Related Links

What do you think of Max Siollun's account of Nigerian history?
What is Nigerian history?
What are the top 10 mind blowing facts about Nigeria?
Why are you proud to be Nigerian?

Why do Nigerians think that Nigeria is the “giant” of Africa when other African countries don’t even like Nigeria?

Do Nigerians living abroad ever regret leaving Nigeria behind?
What do you know about Nigerian Guy?
What do you think about Africans? How do you see Nigerians?
What is today all about in Nigeria?
Are there any successful Nigerian businessmen on Quora? How did you do it?

NIGERIA
Why are Nigerians so proud of their nationality?

Answered by Awere Obinna Sunday Apr 14

Even though things might not be working out as you eant , that'll not be the reason while you shouldn't be proud of your country.

The reason why I am proud as a Nigeria is because I know I am with the supernatural potential to change Nigeria if things are not actually working well.

Iam proud because I know God created me for a purpose as a Nigerian

Why can't I be proud of my own country, if I am not of which essence am a nigerian.can be disappointed in our leaders but I can be be disappointed in my own father land.

Top 10 Populated Countries In Africa

Frank Abah Economist, Trade Finance Consultant & Digital Entrepreneur 4h

1. Nigeria➜ 206,139,589

2. Ethiopia➜ 114,963,588

3. Egypt□□➜ 102,334,404

4. The DRC□□➜ 89,561,403

5. Tanzania□□➜ 59,734,218

6. South Africa□□➜ 59,308,690

7. Kenya□□➜ 53,771,296

8. Uganda□□➜ 45,741,007

9. Algeria□□➜ 43,851,044

10. Sudan□□➜ 43,849,260

© World Atlas □

News Nigeria

FG TO TAKE OVER MANAGEMENT OF UNIVERSITY OF MEDICAL SCIENCES UBURU, SAYS PRESIDENT BUHARI

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 1m

The Federal Government will take over the management of the University of Medical Sciences, Uburu, Ebonyi State, as a Federal Medical University.

President Muhammadu Buhari made the pronouncement at a state dinner in his honour on Thursday, in response to a request by Governor Dave Umahi on the university located in Ohaozara Local Government Area of the State.

The President told the people of Ebonyi that the process for the change of ownership of the university is on and ''will be concluded soon.''

On the request by the State governor to buy airport equipment valued at N10 billion, the President promised to find out the position of the Ministry of Aviation regarding that.

The President thanked the State government for the honour of naming the State International Airport and magnificent 4-way Light Tunnel after him.

He expressed confidence that these facilities and many more will further the frontiers of economic development in Ebonyi State in particular and the nation at large.

President Buhari, who assured the government and people of Ebonyi State of the support of his administration to enable the Governor to accomplish his vision for the State, thanked them for the reception accorded him during the two-day State visit.

''Thank you for keeping faith with our administration's development programmes and the manifestoes of our great party, the All Progressives Congress (APC),'' he said.

The President recounted that the last time he visited the State in 2017 in the 2nd quarter of the first tenure of Governor Umahi's administration, he had witnessed ''the commencement of mind-blowing projects''.

''I saw in Governor Umahi a strong desire to change the narrative of the State and meet the aspirations of the founding fathers.

''I was enthused by Your Excellency's vision to create the needed environment and raise the economic status of the State.

''I remember with pleasure, the hospitality that I received, how I was given a Chieftaincy title as 'Enyioha 1 of Ebonyi State' and 'Ochioha 1 of South East' by the Traditional Rulers of Ebonyi State and South-East respectively,'' he said.

''I commissioned two twin-flyovers, 14 km Abakaliki – Afikpo Road, performed the foundation Laying Ceremony of the Shopping Mall as well as the 4-way Light Tunnel named after me.

''At that time, your administration was in the opposition party, and yet you accorded me a spectacular reception. I thank Your Excellency and the good people of Ebonyi State.''

The President told the Governor that he was honoured ''that in the life of my administration, Ebonyi State government and her people made the right choice to join our progressive Party, the APC. Again, I commend the Governor for the courage to join the party at the centre and for all his contributions in moving our nation forward.''

Lauding the massive life-transforming projects executed by Umahi in the last seven years, the President told the Governor:

''You have done your people proud. I am particularly amazed by the economic development records of the State under your administration, the wonderful network of roads, critical infrastructure and investment opportunities in the State.''

He also commended the State for emerging as the second overall best in fiscal performance in Nigeria and for soaring high in fiscal discipline, transparency and accountability in the use of public resources, saying:

''It shows you have zero tolerance for corruption and waste of public funds. Indeed, people of proven fiscal discipline and track records of performance are desired in our quest for nation building.''

Umahi, while thanking the President for the various assistance to the State, said the financial assistance of infrastructural refund, payee refund, Paris club, bailout funds, agricultural loans, fertilizer support and budgetary funds are instances of great support to all States of the Federation.

''As Chairman of South East Governors' Forum, I must also thank Your Excellency for all the approvals you have made for the construction of the second Niger Bridge which is almost completed, rehabilitation of Akanu Ibiam International Airport, reconstruction of Enugu-Port Harcourt and Enugu-Awka expressway among others,'' he said.

The Governor pledged the support of Ebonyi people and indeed all South-East people, saying ''we value greatly this wonderful fatherly love and fair disposition to the plights of our people.''

Before the dinner, the President had inaugurated Office Complex of the Wife of the Governor, Akanu Ibiam Lodge (New Governor's Lodge), Ebonyi House (Governor's Office), Light Tunnel Flyover and the Ebonyi Shopping Mall.

Femi Adesina, Special Adviser to the President (Media & Publicity)

May 5, 2022

News Nigeria

Alaafin Of Oyo's 18 Wives Now Up For Grabs - Oyo Chief Tells Nigerian Men

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Sun

The 18 wives of Oba Lamidi Adeyemi III, the 45th Alaafin of Oyo, may now be available to suitors without undergoing cleansing rituals after the demise of the renowned monarch.

Oba Adeyemi, 83, passed on late Friday after receiving treatments at the Afe Babalola University, Ado-Ekiti and is expected to be buried according to Islamic rites by 4:00 p.m. on Saturday.

Oba Adeyemi's queens, Abibat (first wife), Rahmat Adedayo, Mujidat, Rukayat, Folashade, Badirat Ajoke, Memunat Omowunmi, Omobolanle, Moji, Anuoluwapo, Damilola, Chioma and others are now available for suitors.

"They are not performing any cleansing; They are free to move on with their lives," he said. Nonetheless, he said. "The wives cannot get married to an indigene of Oyo."

He added, "Now that Alaafin is dead, they all would be asked to exit the palace with their belongings. Although the properties of the late monarch would be shared among them."

AfriStar

Classement Bloomberg des milliardaires du monde : Aliko Dangote a gagné 25 places

· Follow Posted by David-GDK 4 mai

Le président du groupe Dangote, Aliko Dangote, est devenu la 72e personne la plus riche du monde avec une valeur nette estimée à 20,4 milliards de dollars, selon les dernières données de l'indice des milliardaires de Bloomberg

M. Dangote, qui reste l'homme le plus riche d'Afrique pour la 11e année consécutive, est le seul milliardaire africain à figurer dans le top 100 des 500 personnes les plus riches du monde. La majorité de la fortune de Dangote provient de sa participation de 86 % dans la société cotée en bourse Dangote Cement.

Selon Bloomberg, le milliardaire nigérian était classé en janvier dernier à la 97e place des personnes les plus riches du monde, avec une valeur nette de 19,2 milliards de dollars. En février, Dangote était la 83e personne la plus riche du monde, devançant le célèbre homme d'affaires russe et propriétaire du Chelsea Football Club Roman Abramovich, qui est désormais classé 132e sur la liste des 500 personnes les plus riches du monde.

En mars, Aliko Dangote a lancé la deuxième plus grande usine d'engrais dans le monde estimée à 2,5 milliards de dollars, capable de produire 3 millions de tonnes métriques ™ d'urée par an. L'ajout de la valeur nette de l'usine d'engrais de Lagos à la fortune personnelle de Dangote aurait fait passer sa valeur nette au-dessus de 20 milliards de dollars, faisant de lui le 72e homme le plus riche du monde.

En avril 2022, la fortune de Dangote n'a cessé de croître, Bloomberg indiquant que sa valeur nette de 20,4 milliards de dollars lui permet d'acheter 10,6 millions d'onces troy d'or.

News Nigeria

Denying Southeast Presidency in 2023 'll Spell Doom for Nigeria - Obasanjo Warns

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

Former president, Olusegun Obasanjo, has restated his position that the South-East should be allowed to produce Nigeria's President in 2023, insisting that it would ensure peace, justice, fairness and sustainable national development in the country.

Obasanjo, who addressed members of Political Action Committee, PAC, of Ohanaeze Ndigbo, who visited him at his Olusegun Obasanjo Presidential Library, Abeokuta, to solicit his support for the quest for a Nigerian President of South-East extraction, said the minimum Nigerians would accept is that the next president should come from the South.

The former President, who commended Ohanaeze Ndigbo for demanding their rights, told the delegation that what he "owes Nigeria is sincerity, objectivity and guidance."

He maintained the need for morality, equity and justice in a multi-ethnic, multi-religious and multi-cultural country like Nigeria, warning that "it is inconceivable to have peace and progress in a country that is rooted in injustice."

Obasanjo said: "Federal character, rotation of power and such other measures are meant to help our nation-building process and more sure-footedly, move Nigeria forward" and warned that "riding over these measures rudely, shoddily and roughly cannot augur well for our nation-building process and progress."

News Nigeria

Peter Obi Rejects VIP Treatment, Assists Stranded Nigerians At Abuja Airport

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 21h

Former Anambra State governor and 2023 presidential aspirant on the platform of the Peoples Democratic Party, Peter Obi, came to the rescue of passengers who had been kept waiting for over 24 hours at the Nnamdi Azikiwe International Airport, Abuja, IGBERETV reports.

On Monday morning, Peter Obi refused to board his flight at Abuja airport in order to assist stranded Nigerians.

Obi who has been traveling across the six geopolitical zones to consult stakeholders and party members over his presidential bid, was reportedly moved by the plight of the travelers.

IGBERETV gathered that Air peace, for unknown reason delayed Abuja-Benin flight for 24hrs, since, Sunday. On Monday morning, they reneged on the 7am rescheduled flight, for no reason. This led to argument as the situation got rowdy.

While the argument was going on, Peter Obi arrived at the airport enroute to Jalingo.

IGBERETV also gathered that Air Peace officials offered him a VIP treatment by attempting to pass him through a different boarding but Peter Obi declined, and went further to question why ordinary Nigerians like him were stranded at the Airport.

But Obi decided to stand amongst other travelers. He immediately made some calls and all the stranded passengers were boarded.

The over happy crowd erupted in chants of Obi! Obi! Obi! at the airport. Many snapped photos with him.

Twitter user, @Chude__ shared the video with the caption;

"Nigerians at Airport thanking Peter Obi this morning for he ensured their flight departs after Air peace delayedLagos flight for 24 hrs.

Just look at how accessible Peter Obi is.

News Nigeria
LUKULUKU BANTASHI

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Tue

For those that were old enough between the mid 80s and the 90s, Lukuluku Bantashi was a well-known comedian in the Yoruba movie industry who flourished for a very long time through his own unique cast and brand identity that no one has beaten till today. Lukuluku Bantashi Awo-Erin, as he was popularly called, was one among the many notable actors in the Yoruba movie industry that their stars have sunk prematurely into the history.

Not much is known about Lukuluku's personal life, but his comedy brand was known far and wide across the western part of the country.

Lukuluku Bantashi was able to build his own stage identity from his own template, and his comedy brand reigned for decades while his comical style continues to be unmatched till this moment.

Lukuluku, during his time, ruled the comic scenes of the industry while the likes of Epo-Tin-Tin, Baba Suwe, Ajirebi, Godogbo, James Dẹ̀pẹ́, Dẹ̀jo Tunfulu, Larondo and others queued behind him.

Lukuluku was the most beautiful bride in the movie industry that all the movie producers sought his graceful appearance in their movies, there was no known popular movie at that time that he did not feature, and movie viewers always looked for his head in the posters or on the video cassette jackets. He was indeed a hot selling point that none of the movie producers at that time would want to jettison his appearance.

Lukuluku Bantashi was popular for his unique comical crying-style which could crack one's ribs to pieces. He always played 'an old fool' whilst his face was always painted in charcoal black. Lukuluku would always wear oversize unmatched cloth which could throw you out of balance at a mere sight of him.

Lukuluku Bantashi presented his artistic talents in many movies like Yemi My Lover, Ti Oluwa Nílẹ̀, Imulẹ̀ Ìfẹ́, Legal Wife, Ami Orun, Itunu and many other movies before his untimely death in 1995.

The entire South west of Nigeria was shaken to its foundation on the day Lukuluku's death was announced. Sun refused to shine and moon hid its glow.

All the radio and television stations rendered heart touching tributes to him. The entire Yoruba actor guild (ANTP) at that time was stirred up and all its members were thrown into absolute bereavement. The untimely death of Lukuluku Bantashi was seen by many among the co-artists as a irreplaceable lost, and the tribute upon tribute was rendered to honor him.

Alhaji Gboyega Lawal, a popular Ibàdàn ace broadcaster, tried to douse and bring people's mourning under control, he planned to prank Lukuluku's resurrection from death in one of his live program on Galaxy Television Ibàdàn on a weekend that followed.

He costumed Yinka Ayefele to look almost exactly like Lukuluku and brought him on his program known as ON ROSY. Yinka Ayefele truly delivered as a replica of Lukuluku that beautiful Saturday afternoon on live broadcast, and that provoked people anxiety.

Hundreds of thousands of over-excited people besieged the TV station and requested to see the resurrected Lukuluku face to face. Things went out of control and Alhaji Gboyega Lawal and Yinka Ayefele were nearly mobbed by the angry fans of Lukuluku Bantashi.

Lukuluku's death is twenty six years now and his replacement still cannot be identified. Like I had said earlier, not much is known about his personal life and family. Rumour had it that he left no child after him to blow the horn.

The vacuum that Lukuluku left behind is still there till the moment as many of us that knew him are still missing him so much.

May his soul continue to rest in peace

Wake Up Africa!
Posted by Ozakpo Meshach Apr 21

Are you literally thinking Nigeria will get better? well honestly don't! Except we'll do more than thinking. Yea thinking and complaining won't make Nigeria and other Africa countries get better.

First let's look at how worse Nigeria has come

Under President Obasanjo our Naira was somewhat between 88 and 101 to 1$, Under Yaradua and Goodluck it was somewhere between 148 and 303 to 1$, Under this present administration it is somewhere between 'above' 350 to 680 to 1$ (Note I'm combining CBN rate and actual black market).

Now let's look at Security, Obasanjo faced heavy militancy which he crushed using military might, Yaradua met same and used negotiations to minimize if not end it. Goodluck continued from his predecessor as he said he would but this time he was faced with bokoharam, Buhari met Bokoharam coupled with enabled Fulani-herdsmen rampage, separatist agendas and numerous financed kidnappings.

Inflation; I need not tell you it has gotten worse and continues to get worse.

So when I say Nigeria won't get better by just thinking, believe you me, that's the truth.

What is the way forward?

let's look inwards, an average Nigerian is corrupt, when you hear them talk, you'll see high level of tribalism and religious sentiments.

Let's face facts; Globally there is massive inflation so if you think Nigeria will be spared then you must be a joker. Also middlemen can be attributed to the cause of this inflation in a way(some see inflation as a way to make massive profits)

Total mental rehabilitation of Bad Citizens; are you surprised? A good number of Nigerians vote who gives them money, ask them why they vote, they vote because he's their brother or sister or he has given them money. Have you actually understudied University politics? If you do so you'll discover that even the so called young leader you are craving for are heavily corrupt.

Let's end Bad leaders; 'I no talk say make we kill them ooo' □ However, we need to find a way to end the system that favours selection of bad leaders. Trust me this will be very hard.

Increase law enforcement salary; we need to be honest with ourselves, the income of soldiers(not officers) and policemen is low, many of them can't afford average houses and even some public university for their children. So what do you think they'll do? They will extort you and I.

Population control; well making this happen is quite complicated. We could start by sensitization, we let the citizens know that it's not wise to give birth to children you can't take care of.

Create a 'follow-able' punishment system for defaulters.
Well there are many other things we could suggest but it depends on who is at the top. So please go and get your voters card and exercise your right.

Pics Source: Quartz Africa

NIGERIA/GHANA

What do you think was the main problem in the match between Ghana and Nigeria that made Nigeria unable to beat Ghana?

Richmond Apore, Ehh I watch an unhealthy amount of football Answered Mar 30

Hubris and lazy tactics from the coach. Actually, both go hand-in-hand and resulted in Nigeria losing its berth at the World Cup to a very poor Ghana team.

Let's start with hubris. If one was to just listen to Nigerians online on Facebook and Twitter- you would've been left the impression that the Ghanaian team shouldn't even have bothered lacing up their boots to play the first leg in Kumasi as the match was going to be an overwhelming goal-fest for the Super Eagles.

Have a listen to what Yakubu said before the first leg in Kumasi:

How about the boss of Nigerian Football, Amaju Pinnick? For him, by default Nigeria was going to win, so when the first leg ended with a draw, to him it meant it was Ghana who fought to earn a draw, not Nigeria:

Do you get the picture? Of course, Nigeria had the more superior squad of not only both teams but arguably the top 3 in Africa alongside Senegal and Algeria. But the attitude of Nigeria simply dismissing the Black Stars as an inferior and weak opponent because of the Black Stars' shambolic showing at this year's AFCON, even infamously losing to MIGHTY Comoros surely didn't help.

But that is where you always have to be careful with underestimating your opponents. Yes, Ghana isn't the Ghana of old as we have struggled these past few years to replace stalwarts of our formidable 2008–2015 side. But the Ghana team at the AFCON was not even an accurate picture of the true strength of the Ghana squad, even granted it was still not very strong. Ghana was without several key players such as midfield talisman Mohammed Kudus and several other players who deserved call-ups but the favoritism of the GFA left them out of the squad. Even the coach of the team, Milovan Rajevac was past his expiry date as a manager but was still brought in due to past glories (led Ghana to the quarter-finals of the 2010 World Cup). Needless to say the disaster in Cameroon during the AFCON was just waiting to happen. Even with all of that Ghana could've still progressed out of the group stages if it wasn't for some series of bad luck.

Against Morrocco, we played a very good match against the tough Moroccans only to be left undone in the 86th minute by a defensive lapse of concentration, so we lost that game. Against Gabon, the team showed greater determination and was on course to win that match until again in the last few minutes a Ghanaian player was on the ground injured, and instead of the Gabonese players reciprocating the Ghanaian players paused play, they took advantage and scored a late equalizer. So going into the last game against Comoros, Ghana needed to win to progress to the knock-out stages. Comoros took an early goal and then things got worse for Ghana once captain Andre Ayew was sent off in the 25th minute, and even got much worse when Comoros scored their second in the 63rd minute. But somehow, 10 man Ghana roared back and tied the game before the 80th-minute mark, 2–2. But as you probably guessed it, yes, another late goal for the opponent as Comoros scored in the dying minutes to secure that famous 3–2 victory.

Now take a look at the sequence of events across Ghana's three-game at the AFCON, do they paint a picture of a team as bad as most people, especially Nigerians made out to be? Ghana's disastrous AFCON campaign was very misleading until after further inspection. Meaning, for all its misery, Ghana was not going to be that easy opponent the Super Eagles thought they were going to face in Kumasi and Abuja.

Even with all that, and let's say the Super Eagles respected Ghana as a good opponent. Nigeria still should've easily won the game on account of how skilled their attacking line is. Between "Senior man Kelz", Osimhen, Ighalo, Umar Sadiq, Emmanuel Dennis, Moses Simon, Ademola Lookman…seriously Nigeria shouldn't have had no problem dispatching Ghana in at least one of the two games. So what went wrong? Well, as a Ghanaian from what I saw on the pitch, Augustine Eguavoen seriously did a very lazy job with his tactics for both games, especially at home in Abuja. He struggled on how to adequately utilize his attacking threats and wasn't even sure which ones to trust. As he went with a completely different attacking line in Abuja vs when in Kumasi. Moreover, as some Nigerians pointed out on Facebook, with time dying in Abuja and Nigeria needing a goal to progress, Eguavoen rather wisely brought in additional attacking threats with Moses Simon, Ighalo, and Sadiq entering the game but guess who creates scoring opportunities for a striker? Creative midfielders, something Eguavoen failed to realize and bring into the match. It was as if he simply expected that by overloading the Ghanaian defense with extra firepower they would buckle and break down under pressure. Such simplistic thinking. So simple that his Ghanaian opposite number, Otto Addo at half-time predicted that Eguavoen was going to make that move and brought in an extra defender to now set up his Ghanaian team with 5 in the back, and swapped his wing-backs in case Eguavoen was to bring in fresh legs on the wings (which Eguavoen did with Moses Simon coming in the 2nd half on the left side). Simply, Otto Addo just outcoached Eguavoen with more adaptive tactics. He was always trying to assess the state of the match and make the appropriate changes. One example is in the last 20 minutes after Eguavoen poured in all his attacking arsenal on the Ghanaian defense, Addo instead of "parking the bus", knew that since he already had 3 center backs in the game to negate the Nigerian attacking threat, if Nigeria happened to score another goal, he wouldn't be able to equalize with Nigerian having most of the possession and with him down an extra attacking player, so instead brought in attacking creative midfielder Daniel Kyereh to try to play possession ball so to frustrate the Nigerians and kill off time and relieve pressure on his defense. It worked to perfection, Kyereh even managed to get two shots on goal in the process while killing off precious time.

Just to sum up, Nigeria was very overly-confident ahead of the game (they had a much superior team) but that hubris let them see the Ghanaians as weaker than they are. And even caused the Ghanaian team to prepare especially well for this tie. Our coach was out here bringing in 33-year-old former Belgian international (Dennis Odoi) because he feared he didn't have any experienced left-backs to deal with Nigeria's attacking wingers etc. Being the underdogs helped Addo be restless in his coaching. Remember how extremely sweaty he was after the first leg in Kumasi? But on the Nigerian side, I have to blame the coach, Augustin Eguavoen. The man didn't have any discernable philosophy on the field showing his game-plan to beat Ghana. It was almost as if he believed just putting all his attacking pieces on the field would bring victory. It didn't work. The team required, well, a tactician to find a way when the game-plan wasn't going to plan and make the necessary changes- something Eguavoen didn't do.

Unfortunately, Osimhen wouldn't be at the World Cup. The guy is a stud and baller. Nigeria needs a coach, and Ghana needs better players. Good luck to both teams!

Why do people compare Ghana with Nigeria?

Richmond Apore , I have a crazy obsession with History, primarily African history
Answered Oct 5, 2021

Most of it is mainly geographic. Both countries are in West Africa. Even with that, both countries are two of very few countries in West Africa colonized by the British hence are English speaking. This last part tends to be the reason why Ghana and Nigeria are mostly associated and compared. You look at Ghana, it's encircled by three French speaking countries (Burkina Faso, Togo and Ivory Coast), likewise for Nigeria, surrounded by three French speaking countries (Benin, Niger and Cameroon). What country is the closest English speaking for Nigeria? Ghana. Which country is the closest English speaking for Ghana? Nigeria. So geographically those comparisons/association make sense.

But I personally, as a Ghanaian think the comparisons is mostly due to how much both countries interact (again, not a surprise due to geography) in a lot of things, the arts, sports and entertainment. For instance looking at music, both nations even developed a musical genre together, Afrobeat, inspired from Ghanaian high life and Nigerian folk music. Some elements of Afrobeat transformed into the modern musical phenomenon- Afrobeats (with the s), as pioneered and popularized by Nigerian artists.

Then you have sports where despite Ghana's small size and population compared to Nigeria, we consistently punch above our weights. Which makes football matches with Nigeria more competitive than say Nigeria football matches with other English speaking West African nations like Liberia or Sierra Leone. Or even other English speaking countries in East Africa such as Kenya or Tanzania.

Nevertheless, at the crux of it, the main reason why people compare both nations is because of hubris and national pride. We Ghanaians see Nigeria as that big brother who's so talented but for some reason disappoints everyone and isn't where he is supposed to be. As such, some Ghanaians are convinced Ghana is better than Nigeria. Yet forgetting how large Nigeria is, coupled with the very intense tribal and religious dynamics rife everywhere in Africa but also more pronounced in such a bigger population. How I like to see it is Nigeria is basically like Ghana except that every petty corruption, tribal politics or other issue is amplified by a factor of almost 10 as Nigeria is almost 10 times the population of Ghana. Likewise, some Nigerians don't take us Ghanaians seriously because of our small population compared to Nigeria (Ghana pop is 31 million, Nigeria is 206 million). And thus any achievement we have is automatically negated by that. Forgetting that the peaceful elections in Ghana, reliable electricity etc…regardless of population size is still a rarity in most of Africa. Going back to that apology I used, If we Ghanaians see Nigerians as that unserious talented older brother, then Nigerians see us as that focused younger brother trying so hard to upstage them.

It's all love. I have a great deal of respect and admiration for Nigeria and Nigerians. Some of the most determined people I've met are Nigerians. As a Ghanaian, a stronger, more focused and powerful Nigeria is an asset to all of Africa.

Related Links

How can I emmigrate from Nigeria to Ghana, am tired of living in Nigeria?
How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?

Who will win in a war between Nigeria and Ghana in this present Nigerian economic recession?

Why are so many scammers from Ghana and Nigeria?

With the attack on the country's stadium in Abuja, Nigeria during the match between Ghana and Nigeria, how can we contain such from reoccurring?

Why do most people believe that Ghana is more better than Nigeria?
Which is the most English-speaking country, Ghana or Nigeria?
Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?
Who is going win today: Portugal or Ghana? Or will it be a draw?
Between Nigeria and Ghana, who has the highest portion of the white

News Nigeria

"My Husband Abandoned My Family After He Paid ₦580K Bride Price"

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Sun

I got married 8months ago, my hubby earns 70k monthly while I am yet to get a job, during our wedding ceremony, hubby spent about 580k on the list given to him for the traditional wedding, I persuaded my parents to reduce the list but they said it is a must and a tradition.

He was able to raise the money as I wasn't working and I couldn't help financially.

After marriage I suggested that he should be sending something monthly

A Nigerian Lady Identified as Elohor Okudu narrates how her husband has refused to help her own family members after paying almost N580k as bride Price to marry her.

The story was shared by a twitter user identified as @SmartAtuadi, the lady is seeking professional advice as the issue bothers her.

She Wrote: “I got married 8months ago, my hubby earns 70k monthly while I am yet to get a job, during our wedding ceremony, hubby spent about 580k on the list given to him for the traditional wedding, I persuaded my parents to reduce the list but they said it is a must and a tradition.”

“He was able to raise the money as I wasnt working and I couldn’t help financially. After marriage I suggested that he should be sending something monthly to my parents as he does send to his parents too, but to my surprise the reply he gave me was that he didn’t owe my parents anything that they have collected all they are entitled to. I was not angry about that until my younger brother wanted to get married and his bride family gave him list of things for the traditional wedding which amounted to 400k.”

“My dad then shared the expenses and told my husband to contribute 120k towards my brother’s wedding but to my surprise, my husband said no and told me that my family has collected all they wanted during our wedding and they shouldn’t come to him for any financial assistance, this got me angry and I told him that he is not responsible.”

“Ever since then we have been living like strangers in the house, he doesn’t talk to me, he has just been keeping to himself, and I have never seen him this way before not even in our 2 years of courting.

“Please our mummies and daddies, kindly advise me on what to do to save the situation, I am in between my husband and my family”.

A Nigerian man is currently on his way, riding from London to Lagos on his motorcycle. He plans to arrive Lagos within 25 days. It's a journey of 12,000km. He gave details of how he will do it.
News Nigeria

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 21h

The journey started yesterday and he is currently in France. People are wondering if he could do it and say they can't wait to see the outcome.

Nigerians are excited about it.

News Nigeria

The First Nigerian Female JuJu Musician, Guitarist

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Tue

Queen Serifat Oladunni Odunuga popularly known as Queen Oladunni Decency was one of the stars of the Yoruba juju musician during her lifetime

She was born in 1949 in Noforija, Epe, Nigeria and died in 1978 at the age of 28.

She was the founder and leader of a Jùjú music band called Her Majesty Queen Oladunni Decency And Her Unity Orchestra.

The First Female guitarist and band leader recorded many hit songs including: Atupa Ma iku, Ninu Igbagbo Lemi O Ma Yan, Alafia Logun Oro , Odun Yin San Wa Sowo, Metric System, Ijesa Progressive Union, Emi Yio Ma Yin O Logo, Chief S. B. Ajasa Oluwa, Mummy Juju Fans, Pegan Pegan and others.

AfriStar
Nigeria : vives tensions après la lapidation à mort d'une chrétienne

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK ven.

Des chefs religieux nigérians ont appelé jeudi au calme et demandé que justice soit faite après la lapidation à mort d'une étudiante chrétienne dans le nord-ouest du Nigeria, accusée de blasphème contre le prophète Mahomet.

Des chefs religieux nigérians ont appelé jeudi au calme et demandé que justice soit faite après la lapidation à mort d'une étudiante chrétienne dans le nord-ouest du Nigeria, accusée de blasphème contre le prophète Mahomet.

Le meurtre de l'étudiante a eu lieu dans l'État de Sokoto où la charia est en vigueur parallèlement au droit commun, comme dans d'autres États du nord musulman conservateur du Nigeria.

Des dizaines d'étudiants de l'école Shehu Shagari ont lapidé jeudi l'étudiante Deborah Samuel puis brûlé son corps après avoir lu un commentaire qu'elle avait posté sur les réseaux sociaux, qu'ils ont considéré comme offensant à l'égard du prophète Mahomet.

Deux suspects ont été arrêtés, selon la police.

What is the brutal truth about Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller Updated 2y

The richest people in Africa, are in Nigeria, and they are mostly politicians.

Nigeria is the richest and poorest country in Africa. This is not a contradiction, it's a reality.

Basically, no Nigerian is poor. Many of us, simply tolerate too much waste in almost every aspect of our lives, the apparent ones being money, food, and time.

Don't call any Nigerian you come across a scammer. We have a population of almost 200 million people, if you got scammed by one Nigerian, it doesn't mean everyone in that country is a scammer, it pains us to the marrow when you call every Nigerian you come across or read about as one.

The poor, lack almost every basic amenities you can think of in Nigeria; no clean drinking water, many rural health care system is non— functional and the ones in the cities are congested, epileptic power supply, bad roads, poor education…… mostly due to poor funding etc.

Nigerians lack good maintenance culture towards public property. You may praise and admire a brand new sports stadium or a magnificent government building, but in two or three years time it would become and eye -sore, that it won't even draw your attention to look at it.

Many Nigerians vote not because a particular politician is worth voting for, we vote mostly because he or she is a relative, a tribes man or woman, or in the same religion as ours. Hence our country has refused to grow, because we don't vote leaders who have the credibility to move Nigeria and Nigerians to the promised land, to a better standard of living that we lack today.

Nigerians are so divided here in Nigeria, but we automatically love each other and live as one in a foreign land. The president will ask you; what tribe are you from? then, he will in turn ask you, what state? The state Governor, will ask you, what local Government are you from? The chairman, of the local government will ask you, what community are you from? The community leader, will in turn ask you, what family are you from? And finally, your family members will ask you, who is your father and how is your mother? This is one of the fundamental problem in Nigeria. There is too much division in this country. There is no much pride in been a Nigerian in another state, it’s as if you were in a foreign country, with lots of intimidation and restrictions from the locals. ‘One Nigeria’ is just a literary phrase that pretends to unite all Nigerians as one but not in reality. You can't even vote your favorite presidential candidate, during and election, when you're in another state.

Many Nigerians are Jobless and are just idle, and they will do anything, yes anything just to bring bread to the dining table. Mind you, this idle youths are college graduates with Diploma and MBA’s, with no government or private institution to make use of their expertise.

Many Nigerian workers are either under employed or under payed.

We value friendship even more than blood relatives. The few friends i was lucky to have is probably the only family i know.

We celebrate everything and look for more reasons to celebrate. We party hard even with the only money we have in the hope that tomorrow will be better. Nigerians are very hopeful people, hence we rarely commit suicide.

We brag about been the poorest in this country, don't come and tell us how poor you are in your country, chances are; we have someone worse than your case, just a few blocks away.

People are forced to be smart and resilient in Nigeria, in what ever you do, you have to beat thousands if not millions to stand out, you can not be a lazy Nigerian except you want to die poor. Nigerians almost always stand out internationally because if one can beat thousands here in Nigeria to get to such level, then the sky is your limit.

Football and music are the only things that unite Nigerians at present, the later is even more promising in bringing about peaceful co-existence and patriotism.

We have good food here, this is a country of over 500 ethnic groups and they all have their delicacy, what ever type of food you want, chances are its a favorite food in a particular tribe or ethnic group here in Nigeria.

Despite all we face in Nigeria, on a darkest day, a typical Nigerian still believes that it will get better, you can see the embers of hope even in the eyes of our children.

Edit: Thank you all, for the beautiful comments. I am sincerely touched that almost all the feedback i got were positive and everyone wants the good of Nigeria. Our combine hope and positive efforts will see us through this dark times.

Godbless Nigeria!

Thanks for reading.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria so associated with crime, and what's the real truth?
What are the top 10 mind blowing facts about Nigeria?
How is life in Nigeria?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
Is Nigeria safe for tourists?
What are the best things about living in Nigeria?
Why is life hard in Nigeria?
How hard is life in Nigeria at the moment?

This person I'm going out with lives in Nigeria. She said they shut off power at night. Is that true? Cause I don't know for sure if that's true.

What are the pros and cons of living in Nigeria?

What is your best "only in Nigeria" moment?

Osazua Iruedo Manager (2017–present) 3y

Originally Answered: What could only happen in Nigeria?

You go to the market, you ask for the product you want to buy, the seller calls an exorbitant price, you price like a pro that you are,the seller tells you to come and steal it. Before you leave she insults you, your family ,your forefathers and the unborn generation.

We get excited and scream "up nepa" when electricity comes on.

It's only In Nigeria power holding company will cease light when it rains,and keep it off for a while.

It's only in Nigeria you will find twin name “praise and worship”

You withdraw money from the ATM and still make it a duty to count before leaving the ATM.

Only in Nigeria will you see roads blocked for parties,revivals and Muslim Friday prayers.

It's only in Nigerian movie you will see a woman wearing the same hair style even after 15 years.

The people that sits at the high table in Nigerian weddings get to eat the best food and drinks.

It's only in Nigeria you will see guys referring to themselves as a premier league club. E.g. I beat you yesterday. This can be so annoying.

It's only in Nigeria people will greet you for everything. Greet you in the morning,greet you when the sun shine, when the rain falls, when the Nigerian soccer team wins an important match, greet you when you are making your hair etc.

Nigerians will gather themselves together on twitter to insult anyone that tries to interfere in our matter or talk trash about Nigeria.

You will see people you didn't invite to your party dragging you from left to right to get souvenir.

Only in Nigeria will you see men in suits arguing about Nigeria at a newspaper stand.

Related Links

What's something unique about living in Nigeria that is unlike anywhere else in the world?

What are the best things about living in Nigeria?
What is the most Nigerian thing ever?
What's the most "This is Lagos" (Nigeria) experience you've ever had?
How hard is life in Nigeria at the moment?
How is life in Nigeria?
What is your best travel experience in Nigeria?
What is an "only in Canada" moment?
What was the best moment of your school life?
What was the best moment you had with your crush?

News Nigeria
Young Igbo Trader and His Hausa/ Fulani Friends Who Waits For A Riot Day.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Mon

There is an electronics shop on the same street where I lived in Karu, Abuja. Owned by a young Igbo. It wasn't long he got settled by his master.

He put in everything he got; the money his master settled him with, the money his widowed mum saved up and gave him to add to what his master gave him, the expertise and business knowledge he gained from serving his master, his passion for growth and excellence, his hard work and that art of delaying gratification, the discipline he has learnt to put himself under. Everything.

He slept in the shop and woke early to take his bath before anyone else awoke.

Gradually, his business grew.

The Hausa boys knew when he was an apprentice. They knew when he was settled. He was friends with them during the days of his little beginning. He joked with them and played cards on the days that businesses didn't open. They watched him and his business grow.

There's growth on the part of the Hausa boys, depending on how you see it. They themselves grew from little boys to teenagers, but remained stunted in areas of wealth creation. They weren't much equipped for the challenges of the present economic realities of the society.

They weren't enrolled to learn welding, nor auto tech, nor tailoring nor painting. Their parents enrolled them in classes where they were taught Arabic and islam.

Time went by.

When I walk by the electronic shop in the evenings, the young man who already has several apprentices, would display several new television sets at the same time, each showing a different programme. The shop was stocked full with freezers, tv sets, washing machines, refrigerators, generators, everything.

The hausa boys of his time who knew and played with him had grown and some happily married and others with no tangible means of income, and there's a younger set of them too, who after attending the madrassa, would converge across the street from the electronics shop, to watch soccer or any of the programmes showing on the TV screens.

They watch and salivate. They didn't understand how one person could own all these. These things they too crave, and which are definitely out of their reach.

And they wait for the day of crisis. It doesn't matter if the crisis was created by this man or not, and it definitely doesn't matter that it has nothing to do with him. They know where to run to whenever there's a demonstration or riot.

They've even marked the gadgets, and know who would take which whenever the riot breaks out.

So while there's still peace, they stand across the road to watch and salivate, and wait.

This is a scenario that is recreated across the North from generation to generation. Even if there is a fight in Chad or Sudan, their leaders will horridly organise a protest and their first place of looting and attack is igbo traders shop.

Last week, the Muslim youth killed Deborah accusing her of blasphemy and the Police arrested some of the killers.

In less than 12 hours, a protest was organised and they matched straight to old airport road, and looted and destroyed igbo traders shops.

Deborah is not igbo, neither is her parents, the police do not belong to the Igbos, but these youths who many of them have benefited from the benevolence of these traders went straight to destroy and loot their shops. - from Ada Obi and adapted by @Hope For Nigeria.

News Nigeria

President Buhari receives in audience Executive Committee of Fertiliser Producers and Suppliers Association of Nigeria in State House on 5th April 2022.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

FEPSAN 3: President Buhari alongside CBN Governor Godwin Emefiele, FEPSAN President Mr. Thomas Etuh, COS Prof. Ibrahim Gambari, Minister of Finance Zainab Ahmed, Minister of State Agriculture Mohammed Musa Bello, and other members as he receives in audience Executive Committee of Fertiliser Producers and Suppliers Association of Nigeria in State House on 5th April 2022

Le Maroc va-t-il enterrer le projet de gazoduc transsaharien entre l'Algérie et le Nigéria ?

Ciro Bou 1 an

Effectivement après l'Algérie , le Maroc a lui aussi annoncé un projet de gazoduc transsaharien . Pour l'instant Il existe déjà deux gazoducs en Afrique du Nord-Ouest, le "West African Gas Pipeline" qui relie le Nigéria au Ghana, en passant par le Bénin et le Togo, et le gazoduc Maghreb-Europe ("Pedro Duran Farell ") qui relie l'Algérie à l'Europe via l'Espagne (Cordoue) en passant par le Détroit de Gibraltar et le Maroc.
Les deux projets ont le même objectif, reliés les deux gazoduc existants et du coup permettre de transporter le gaz naturel du golf de guinée notamment du Nigeria jusqu'en en Europe. Mais ces deux pays ont deux projets bien différents:

Le projet proposé par l'Algerie devrait relier Warri au Nigeria à Hassi R'Mel en Algérie en passant par le Niger. Sa longueur serrai de 4 128 kilomètres et sa capacité annuelle de trente milliards de mètres cubes.

Le projet soutenu par le Maroc devrait quant à lui mesurer environ 5 660 kilomètres. Il longerait la côte Ouest Africaine en traversant 14 pays (Nigeria, Bénin, Togo, Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia, Sierra Leone, la Guinée, la Guinée Bissau, la Gambie, le Sénégal, la Mauritanie,le Sahara occidental et le Maroc. Le prix est estimé pour l'instant entre 20 et 25 milliards de dollars.

Mais un projet va t-il enterrai l'autre ?

Pour l'instant les deux projets en sont au même point ,mais le 7 décembre la Communauté économique des États de l'Afrique de l'Ouest (Cedeao) a annoncé que la réunion des États membres qui s'est tenu les 9 et 10 décembre à Ouagadougou, au Burkina Faso, étudiera de près la question des gazoduc. Ce qui est ressorti de cette réunion c'est de fusionner le projet NMGP du Maroc avec celui d'extension du réseau de gazoduc de l'Afrique de l'Ouest (WAGPEP) , projet entamé par la CEDEAO (Communauté économique des États de l'Afrique de l'Ouest) qui a pour but d'etendre le réseau de gazoduc existant jusqu'au Sénégal. Les tracés des deux projets sont assez similaire ce qui a amener a l'éventuelle décision d'une fusion des deux projet.

tracé du projet WAGPEP :

Pour moi d'un avis personnel cela va se jouer en fonction des relation entre ces pays et des pays plus influents, et oui , le but initial de ces projets et le transport du gaz vers l'Europe, et cela pourrait permettre à l'Europe de diversifier ses sources d'approvisionnement en gaz naturel.

on voit bien qu'il y a des enjeu pour la France quand on voit le premier point du compte rendu de la séance qui s'est déroulé a l'assemblé national le 10 décembre 2020 soit en même temps que la réunion de la CEDEAO :

Assemblée nationale
XVe législature
Session ordinaire de 2020-2021

Compte rendu intégral

Première séance du jeudi 10 décembre 2020

SOMMAIRE

Présidence de Mme Annie Genevard

1. Accord de coopération avec les États membres de l'Union monétaire ouest-africaine

PRÉSENTATION

M. Franck Riester, ministre délégué chargé du commerce extérieur et de l'attractivité
M. Jacques Maire, suppléant M. Jean François Mbaye, rapporteur de la commission des affaires étrangères
M. Rodrigue Kokouendo, suppléant Mme Marielle de Sarnez, présidente de la commission des affaires étrangères pour en revenir a la question de départ je pense effectivement que le

Maroc a de grandes chances d'enterrer le projet de gazoduc entre l'Algérie et le Nigeria car il a en ce moment des meilleurs relations diplomatiques et économiques avec les pays dit "occidental" ce qui a mon avis va être décisif pour la suite. bref, on verra ce qu'il en ai dans les prochains mois voir les prochaines années.

News Nigeria

Nigerian biker riding from London to Lagos enters Mali, might get home in 6 days

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong May 9

Brave Nigerian biker, Kunle Adeyanju who is riding on his motorcycle from London to Lagos has reached another milestone as he is now in Mali Kunle crossed to Mali from Senegal after spending a few days there during which he was hosted by the Nigerian community His latest milestone indicates that he is making progress in his avowed bid to complete the tasking 12,000km journey planned to take 25 days

It appears clearly that Kunle Adeyanju, the courageous Nigerian biker who is riding from London to Lagos is gradually but steadily getting home. He has crossed from Senegal to Mali from where he shared a photo standing close to a signpost that proved his presence in the West African country.

After taking a long rest in Senegal, Kunle set out again for the remaining part of the journey which has attracted huge attention.

He also used the period of rest in Senegal to service his bike called Eagle and to change the engine oil which he said was dark due to the rigours of the journey.

News Nigeria

President Buhari receives in audience Executive Committee of Fertiliser Producers and Suppliers Association of Nigeria in State House on 5th April 2022.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

FEPSAN 3: President Buhari alongside CBN Governor Godwin Emefiele, FEPSAN President Mr. Thomas Etuh, COS Prof. Ibrahim Gambari, Minister of Finance Zainab Ahmed, Minister of State Agriculture Mohammed Musa Bello, and other members as he receives in audience Executive Committee of Fertiliser Producers and Suppliers Association of Nigeria in State House on 5th April 2022

Le Maroc va-t-il enterrer le projet de gazoduc transsaharien entre l'Algérie et le Nigéria ?

Ciro Bou 1 an

Effectivement après l’Algérie , le Maroc a lui aussi annoncé un projet de gazoduc transsaharien . Pour l'instant Il existe déjà deux gazoducs en Afrique du Nord-Ouest, le "West African Gas Pipeline" qui relie le Nigéria au Ghana, en passant par le Bénin et le Togo, et le gazoduc Maghreb-Europe ("Pedro Duran Farell ") qui relie l’Algérie à l’Europe via l’Espagne (Cordoue) en passant par le Détroit de Gibraltar et le Maroc.
Les deux projets ont le même objectif, reliés les deux gazoduc existants et du coup permettre de transporter le gaz naturel du golf de guinée notamment du Nigeria jusqu'en en Europe. Mais ces deux pays ont deux projets bien différents:

Le projet proposé par l'Algerie devrait relier Warri au Nigeria à Hassi R'Mel en Algérie en passant par le Niger. Sa longueur serrai de 4 128 kilomètres et sa capacité annuelle de trente milliards de mètres cubes.

Le projet soutenu par le Maroc devrait quant à lui mesurer environ 5 660 kilomètres. Il longerait la côte Ouest Africaine en traversant 14 pays (Nigeria, Bénin, Togo, Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia, Sierra Leone, la Guinée, la Guinée Bissau, la Gambie, le Sénégal, la Mauritanie,le Sahara occidental et le Maroc. Le prix est estimé pour l'instant entre 20 et 25 milliards de dollars.

Mais un projet va t-il enterrai l'autre ?

Pour l'instant les deux projets en sont au même point ,mais le 7 décembre la Communauté économique des États de l'Afrique de l'Ouest (Cedeao) a annoncé que la réunion des États membres qui s'est tenu les 9 et 10 décembre à Ouagadougou, au Burkina Faso, étudiera de près la question des gazoduc. Ce qui est ressorti de cette réunion c'est de fusionner le projet NMGP du Maroc avec celui d'extension du réseau de gazoduc de l'Afrique de l'Ouest (WAGPEP) , projet entamé par la CEDEAO (Communauté économique des États de l'Afrique de l'Ouest) qui a pour but d'etendre le réseau de gazoduc existant jusqu'au Sénégal. Les tracés des deux projets sont assez similaire ce qui a amener a l'éventuelle décision d'une fusion des deux projet.

tracé du projet WAGPEP :

Pour moi d'un avis personnel cela va se jouer en fonction des relation entre ces pays et des pays plus influents, et oui , le but initial de ces projets et le transport du gaz vers l'Europe, et cela pourrait permettre à l'Europe de diversifier ses sources d'approvisionnement en gaz naturel.

on voit bien qu'il y a des enjeu pour la France quand on voit le premier point du compte rendu de la séance qui s'est déroulé a l'assemblé national le 10 décembre 2020 soit en même temps que la réunion de la CEDEAO :

Assemblée nationale
XVe législature
Session ordinaire de 2020-2021

Compte rendu intégral

Première séance du jeudi 10 décembre 2020

SOMMAIRE

Présidence de Mme Annie Genevard

1. Accord de coopération avec les États membres de l'Union monétaire ouest-africaine

PRÉSENTATION

M. Franck Riester, ministre délégué chargé du commerce extérieur et de l'attractivité
M. Jacques Maire, suppléant M. Jean François Mbaye, rapporteur de la commission des affaires étrangères
M. Rodrigue Kokouendo, suppléant Mme Marielle de Sarnez, présidente de la commission des affaires étrangères pour en revenir a la question de départ je pense effectivement que le

Maroc a de grandes chances d'enterrer le projet de gazoduc entre l'Algérie et le Nigeria car il a en ce moment des meilleurs relations diplomatiques et économiques avec les pays dit "occidental" ce qui a mon avis va être décisif pour la suite. bref, on verra ce qu'il en ai dans les prochains mois voir les prochaines années.

News Nigeria

Nigerian biker riding from London to Lagos enters Mali, might get home in 6 days

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong May 9

Brave Nigerian biker, Kunle Adeyanju who is riding on his motorcycle from London to Lagos has reached another milestone as he is now in Mali Kunle crossed to Mali from Senegal after spending a few days there during which he was hosted by the Nigerian community His latest milestone indicates that he is making progress in his avowed bid to complete the tasking 12,000km journey planned to take 25 days

It appears clearly that Kunle Adeyanju, the courageous Nigerian biker who is riding from London to Lagos is gradually but steadily getting home. He has crossed from Senegal to Mali from where he shared a photo standing close to a signpost that proved his presence in the West African country.

After taking a long rest in Senegal, Kunle set out again for the remaining part of the journey which has attracted huge attention.

He also used the period of rest in Senegal to service his bike called Eagle and to change the engine oil which he said was dark due to the rigours of the journey.

Why are so many black people being killed in Nigeria?

Yome Agu · Follow Mon

Can I ask you what race do you think Nigerians are?

Yes, there are many ethnic groups but none are non-black. Africans are classified by this socio-political term known as “black” because of our brown skin and “Sub-Saharan” African if the country lies south of the sahara.

Nigeria fits both of these nomenclature labels. Yet you ask a question that is very weird.

Why are so many black people being killed in Nigeria?
The way the question is worded it makes it seem like Nigerians are slaughtering, killing and oppressing black people but yet Nigeria is classified as a black country.

Something is not adding up here.

So, I will ask you again….what race do you think Nigerians are?

Related Links

What is the percentage of black people in the world?
Were the Egyptians black?
What percentage of black people are Nigerians?
Why do some black people dislike lightskinned black people?
Why is Nigeria so corrupt?
How do black people feel about black people in general?

What's it like being the only white person in a room full of only black people?
Is it intimidating?

Are black people killed by police disproportionately to white people in areas where the killings actually happen?

Do all black people from all over the world actually come from Africa?
Does Africa belongs only to black people?

News Nigeria

Kano Durbar Festival, a colourful horse procession in Kano State, Nigeria.

Aniekpeno Ekong May 12

MEN HAVE PAINS TOO

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Fri

A woman said to me, 'It took me years to really know that men cry too. I took my husband for a super human. I see him leave the house everyday and come back providing for us. One day as I have left the house and he was at home, I remembered that I needed to take something along, I turned back and headed home. As I got home, I tried going through the back door which was closer to the window of our room. I heard my husband crying like a baby asking God to help me get a job so I can help him fend for the family. He has never complained to me before but that day, I broke down in tears realizing that my husband has held much of his pains alone"

A young married lady went to her mother and complained that her husband has not always bought things she wanted from him. The mother asked her, 'How many of those things have you bought for yourself?". She stayed quiet and said, 'But he is my husband?". The mother replied her, 'Have you ever found out the things your husband wants you to buy for him?".

Men always try to hide their pains.

Men can be financially broke and pretend to have everything.

Most men are married but they have lonely life. Sometimes, ask your husband out. Men are not always busy as women think.

You have to understand that your husband has pains and needs too. Don't judge him by things you want from him. Sometimes, your husband doesn't have things you want.

Men also have emotional needs and problems. Men still cry for love...

News Nigeria

32-year-old man arrested for allegedly r@ping a 75-year-old woman to de@th in Adamawa State

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Apr 1

A 32-year-old man, Iliya Musa, has allegedly r@ped a 75-year-old grandmother to de@th in Adamawa State.

It was gathered that the incident happened on Saturday, March 26 in Maduguva community. Samuel Adamu, who is the son of the r@pe victim, said, "The r@pist came to my mother's house around 8pm last Saturday and r@ped her to de@th.

Our neighbour, Esther Thomas heard when my mother was shouting, so she rushed and called my elder brother, Yohanna Adamu, who caught him in the act."

Iliya Musa, who has confessed to the crime, told SaharaReporters that he was under the influence of alcohol. "I was returning from a wedding ceremony in the night when I heard the grandmother sobbing in her room. I went in and in the twinkling of an eye, I found myself on top of her," he said.

The image maker for the state police command, DSP Sulaiman Ngoruje, confirmed the incident, saying that the suspect has been arrested and will be charged to court.

News Nigeria

"The enduring security partnership between the United States and Nigeria remains a key priority. " -US Mission Nigeria

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Wed

U.S. Marine Raiders joined the Nigerian Navy Special Boat Service to train 27 officers for 6 weeks, focusing on Maritime security, field medical training, and counterterrorism at the Nigerian Navy Town in Ojo, Lagos. This training was part of the annual Joint Combined Exercise and Training between the U.S. and Nigerian Special Forces and demonstrates the close security relationship between Nigeria and the United States. #Security #ProudPartnership #USinNigeria

SPECIAL FORCES

What are Nigerians searching for in their next president?

Submission accepted by Alton Allen

Related Links

What is philosophy? What are the four trends in African philosophy?
How was the Nigerian Civil War fought?
How can I win against the Nigerian oligarchy?
What is the tracking of imperialism in Nigeria?
Who are those behind African terrorism?
What comes into your head when you hear the name Ghana?
Why is it that we do not hear about COVID in 3 world countries?
How do we get rid of mosquitoes in Africa?

What are the distinguishing features of African cosmological and metaphysical worldview?

Where is the safest place in Anambra State, Nigeria?
What is in ASO Rock Nigeria?

Why do people on Quora accuse African Americans of being Pan-Africanist? Are they trolls or ignorant? Nobody I've ever met seems to think about Africa at all.

What are the possible ways for re-engineering Nigerian society for sustainable development?

Who has the time to become one of the African deities NFT holder?

Is the local government system working in Nigeria?

Lekan Akinbohun

Senior Partner at Ashbod Engineering Services (2015–present) 8h

As a local contractor who is into construction of roads and building, I'll say with 90% accuracy that local govt in Nigeria isf not working and it's been crippled by d State govt.

The responsibilities of local govt include, building markets & motor parks, construction & maintenance of trunk C roads, maintaining primary health care, primary school and others govt responsibilities that deals directly with local ppl.

In all Nigeria States, what most State govs are doing in terms infrastructural growth are local govt projects, take Oyo State for example, as good as Gov. Seyi Makinde is performing most of his projects are local govt projects in the real sense, the building of Modern Motor Parks at Challenge, Iwo road interchange and Ojoo plus the Akesan Market and Shasha Market that were just rebuilt are all what a local govt should be doing were they functioning properly.

All internal roads of our towns and cities are in deplorables, our local health centers are rodents filled, I was at a local health centre in Oyo town at Ajagba area, it's a gory of its old self and this is a place where in d 80s I was told they locals are going for immunizations. The local schools are all in shambles and many markets remain an open field type of 1800s.

It's a pathetic situation seeing lives getting harder for local ppl due to their funds that have been hijacked by the State govt. The only way to change d situations is to restructure the 1999 constitution that's too unitary, in few yrs to come I can bet you, the deplorables situations where are experiencing now will be a child play.

In one word, what is the problem of

Nigeria?

Related Links

What are Nigerians searching for in their next president?
What is philosophy? What are the four trends in African philosophy?
How was the Nigerian Civil War fought?
How can I win against the Nigerian oligarchy?
What is the tracking of imperialism in Nigeria?
Who are those behind African terrorism?
What comes into your head when you hear the name Ghana?

Why is it that we do not hear about COVID in 3 world countries?
How do we get rid of mosquitoes in Africa?

What are the distinguishing features of African cosmological and metaphysical worldview?

Where is the safest place in Anambra State, Nigeria?
What is in ASO Rock Nigeria?

Why do people on Quora accuse African Americans of being Pan-Africanist? Are they trolls or ignorant? Nobody I've ever met seems to think about Africa at all.

What are the possible ways for re-engineering Nigerian society for sustainable development?

Who has the time to become one of the African deities NFT holder?

Who will win in a war between Nigeria and Ghana in this present Nigerian economic recession?

Kwesi Hughes 5y

We will not war with one another. Nigeria is a somnolent economic giant that is slowly waking to its own strength, whilst Ghana is its smaller, more chilled brother who doesn't always harness his gifts. Working together, trading more together, and crucially learning from and leaning upon one another, they potentially could form a powerhouse that would act focally for the region, and improve the lives of millions. War has destroyed much richer and better-developed nations than ours, and we have too much self-interest in co-operation ever to go down that hellish route. Just look around the world.

Related Links

Who will win a war between Nigeria and Ghana?

Who will win in war between Nigeria and South Affrica taking into considerations external help from allies?

Can Egypt defeat Nigeria in a full fledged war?
Can Nigeria defeat South Africa in a military war?
Can Nigeria defeat Cameroon in a war?
Who would win a war between Ethiopia and Nigeria, if they were neighbors?
What if Nigeria is to go to war with the rest of west Africa?
Who would win a war between Nigeria and Iran, if they were neighbors?
Who would win in a war between Nigeria and Bulgaria?
Who would win in a war without allies: Nigeria vs Oman?

Why is it that Nigeria rarely goes to war against any fellow African country?

Ke'Aun, African-American Cosmopolitan Updated Dec 6

I've wondered this myself sometimes.

I look at Nigeria's overwhelming economic/population edge against its neighbors, and the strategy gamer in me can't help but want Nigeria to do something… imperial.

Strategy gamers when a far-away war breaks out

Unfortunately for us armchair conquerors (but perhaps fortunately for Nigeria's neighbors), the country seems to be a decent enough neighbor given its heft.

Nigeria, far as I know, sticks to the continental agreement that the colonial borders are sacrosanct. It had a duspute with Cameroon over some territory, but when it lost that dispute it withdrew.

Nigeria has sent its forces abroad, namely to Liberia during its civil war. And it did send a warship to The Gambia during its election crisis a few years ago, in support of the guy who won against former President Yammeh (name escapes me). But these were all actions in support of regional missions or agreements.

This is not to say Nigeria is saintly, as it has other ways to make its power felt. I would also say that Nigeria probably has better things to do with its military. Boko Haram and other such internal issues being more important than map-painting for Abuja. Once again it's up to us gamers to accomplish what politicians would fear to try.

There's no "Nigeria" in the game but… you work with what you get.

Who will win in a war between Nigeria and Ghana in this present Nigerian economic recession?

Kwesi Hughes 5y

We will not war with one another. Nigeria is a somnolent economic giant that is slowly waking to its own strength, whilst Ghana is its smaller, more chilled brother who doesn't always harness his gifts. Working together, trading more together, and crucially learning from and leaning upon one another, they potentially could form a powerhouse that would act focally for the region, and improve the lives of millions. War has destroyed much richer and better-developed nations than ours, and we have too much self-interest in co-operation ever to go down that hellish route. Just look around the world.

Why do most people believe that Ghana is more better than Nigeria?

Joseph Yaw Frimpong Co-Founder & Director at ReaderApp (2018–present) 3y

Originally Answered: Is Ghana better than Nigeria?

This is a very sensitive question. Although at this rate Nigeria is not doing so well and Ghana seems to be getting all the credit especially in West Africa but do not ever underestimate Nigeria. They really have the propensity to be the "Mecca" of Africa. Forget about them being the poverty capital of the world. Forget about their power crisis etc. They are in crisis right now but when they rise nobody will be able to stop them.

Related Links

How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?
Is Nigeria more beautiful and developed than Ghana?

Why is Nigeria mentally closer to Ghana than to Cameroon with whom we share a border, a language, and lots of history?

How can I emmigrate from Nigeria to Ghana, am tired of living in Nigeria?
What city in Ghana is good for a Nigerian immigrant and how can I get jobs?
What do Nigerians think of Ghana and Ghanaians?
Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?
If Nigerian is better than Ghana, then why are they coming to Ghana?
Why is the Ghanaian cedi stronger than the Nigerian naira?
Which is more developed, Lagos or Ghana?

Which is the most English-speaking country, Ghana or Nigeria?

Farook Ajose Nigeria's future politician. Updated 4y

This question has two answers depending on how you interprete it.
The first one is, "Which is the most English-speaking country (relative to it's population), Ghana or Nigeria?". The answer to this is Ghana.

Ghana has an adult literacy rate of 76.6% while Nigeria has an adult literacy rate of 59.6%.[1] Hence, relative to the population, more Ghanaians speak English than Nigerians.

That's all, right? Wrong. Naija no dey carry last!

Ghana has a population of 28,210,000 of which 77.2% are adults(15 years and older).[2]With an adult literacy rate of 76.6%, the number of literate Ghanaian adults is 16,882,039. Including English-speakers who aren't literate, the number rises to 18,000,000.

Nigeria on the other hand, has a population of 186,000,000, 58.17% of which are adults (15years and older).[3]And with an adult literacy rate of 59.6%, the number of literate Nigerian adults is 64,484,935. Including English-speakers who aren't literate, it becomes 79,000,000.

So, to the second question which is; "Which is the most English-speaking country (by population of English Speakers), Ghana or Nigeria?". The answer is Nigeria.

Footnotes

[1] List of countries by literacy rate - Wikipedia
[2] Demographics of Ghana - Wikipedia
[3] Demographics of Nigeria - Wikipedia

Related Links

Why do Ghanaians speak better English than most African countries?
Does everybody in Ghana know English?
Which country speaks the best English in Africa?
In Africa, do more people speak French than English? Why?
Which country speaks the best English in West Africa?
Are Nigeria's native people considered to be native English speakers?

Why is Nigeria mentally closer to Ghana than to Cameroon with whom we share a border, a language, and lots of history?

Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?

Which of these two countries speaks good English more correctly in terms of Ascent, Nigeria or Ghana?

In Africa, do more people speak French than English?

VP OSINBAJO UNVEILS NIGERIA'S FIRST COCONUT OIL FACTORY, FRIDAY

Aniekpeno Ekong News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria May 12

All is now set for the commissioning of the St. Gabriel Coconut Oil Factory in Mkpat Enin, Akwa Ibom State, following the successful test running of the factory.

The multi-billion naira value-chain facility which would create thousands of job opportunities for Akwa Ibom people wil be inaugurated on Friday by the Vice President, Yemi Osinbajo,SAN following its completion by the Turkish firm, VKS.

The factory is expected to employ over 3000 direct workers and has the capacity to crack 1,000,000 nuts a day.

The St. Gabriel's Coconut Oil Factory Project, a major industrial investment by Akwa Ibom State Government comprises of a factory complex complete with administrative offices, production areas, technical spaces, industrial firefighting systems, water treatment plants, effluent treatment plants and residential quarters for technical and managerial staff as well as parking areas for several raw materials bearing vehicles.

The project is located in the serene environment of Ikot Akpan Okop village, along the East West Road in Mkpat Enin Local Government Area. The project execution was flagged off by Governor Udom Emmanuel during a ground-breaking ceremony on May 24th, 2017.

Recall that a whooping 2million fast yeilding hybrid coconut trees had been planted on an 11,000 hectare of land at the St Gabriel plantation in a swampland spanning Mkpat Enin, Ikot Abasi and Eastern Obolo Local Government Areas. Similarly, the Government has ensured that coconuts are cultivated at Okobo, Okon -Eket and other locations in the State.

This makes it the largest coconut plantation in Africa, and the most ambitious coconut project in the world. All this is a conscious effort by the visionary leadership of Governor Udom Emmanuel to prepare Akwa Ibom State, which is Nigeria highest crude oil producing State from over reliance on petroleum.

Media Unit

Govt House, Uyo

Akwa Ibom State

12/05/22

How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?

Oluwaseun Adeleye

I lived in Accra since 2013. Though I'm back home now in Nigeria but it was a great experience I had in Ghana to meet, sleep and dine with foreigners.

Ghanaians are very friendly people, mostly there females are much more friendly than males. But take note, there males which use to be your good friend before, could start to hate a Nigerian male once the Nigerian start earning some good money from there country. You can get along well with Ghanaian females, once you got some change to flex, or even just sweet mouth.

In Ghana, you find western foreigners using the local transportation system called Trotro with locals but in Nigeria it's very very rare to see a white person in Danfo or even okada. You might see white people use there own private car or escorted by military securities vehicles in Nigeria but not the case in Ghana. Everyone works freely even at midnight.

As a Nigerian, don't come here looking for jobs cause the Cedes is more than the Naira. You'll be disappointed, big time. I've seen some big hotels even pay as little as 100 Ghana cedes to there staff and they are more than happy with the money cause that's a lot for a Ghanaian but not a lot for a Nigerian, that's just about 8000 Naira per month. What will that do for a Nigerian? Ans -Nothing. A Nigerian can make more than that in a single day in the same Ghana doing business. So try starting up a small business and don't go looking for jobs cause even if you're given 300 Ghana cedes that's just about 25000 naira a month which is still small. My fellow Nigerians will say “Na 25k a month you come make for Ghana?”

Housing is expensive, the landlords will charge a Nigerian to pay at least 2 years or more upfront, where as charge other foreigners even to pay monthly or every 6 months. I still don't know why? A Ghanaian told me its because all Nigerians are rich people, that's the way they portray Nigerians in Ghana.

Ghanaian local foods are very very cheap but I'm a Yoruba, Nigerian I can't cope with there local food so I eat expensively twice every day. Eastern and northern Nigerians living in Ghana could cope with there local diet cause most of there foods are similar to there Nigerian diets. But I don't joke with there kwakye and shito cos is Rice and beans.

In Ghana education system is different than Nigeria, what's considered apprenticeship in Nigeria is considered school in Ghana. For instance, a Ghanaian learning a fashion design trade will tell you she's in school too... Will wear uniform and graduate like normal secondary school student.

In Ghana you can do your Junior Secondary school first and then come back after some years “lets say after 3 years” to start your Senior Secondary School. Whereas in Nigeria that's very rare, you finish Junior School and then start Senior school immediately, you finish your 6 years once and for all.

Ghanaians don't like to be bothered, don't try it, they might get angry at you. Once a Ghanaian says “No" then it means NO. Don't try to bother him or her, or else you might have a quarrel.

I once went to a grocery shop on my street to buy some food items and it was just around 5 pm, then the attendant told me he was closed even though I was looking at what I wanted to buy but I couldn't have it even with me holding my money he kept repeating I've closed chale, I've closed for the day, as a Nigerian that was strange to me, close at 5pm? In Nigeria you don't close shop until customer traffic ends. You close when there is no more customers. Some people close at even 11pm once people are still buying, even some have classes when you get there, if you call the number or something, they'll come and open the shop again for you to buy what you want but this man said he was closed at 5pm though shop was still open and he didn't leave the shop until night, customers came and he will not sell to them still telling them he was closed for the day. Not only him does this until I learnt from someone, Ghanaians don't like to be bothered, they do things at there own will, you can not force them.

Much more but that's all I can remember for now.

Who will win a war between Nigeria and Ghana?

Okley Lives in Accra, Ghana 3y

Which kind of war are you talking about. Either country has their own strength and weakness. I choose to ignore the idea of war where there are guns and bombs and politics involved because no one would wish to have this upon themselves and for that matter there is no need to predict and analyze where blood would spill from but Ghana and Nigeria already are at war in some different sectors; the Jolloff war and the Entertainment Industry war.

Both countries have been pressing each other's button on the matter of the Jolloff meal; I'm not sure how the "war" started but clearly this has been on for a long time now on social media platforms comparing the meals from each country, claiming from each side that their Jolloff taste better than the other. I think Ghana wins that battle anyway. (I'm a full 100% bloody Ghanaian). However, in some way, these people have managed to relate the jolloff meal with the appearances of people on social media. For instance they will compare two persons; one from either country and tag them as Ghana Jolloff and Nigeria Jolloff

In the entertainment industry, both countries have been exchanging blows there too especially in the music department. It is not as if they are dising themselves through music but there a little bit of competition there anyway and Both countries have great singers. They even go on to have concert annually named Ghana meets Niga (last one happend somewhere within this month) which has some of the biggest musicians in both countries on stage. Personally, I think Nigeria wins at the aspect of entertainment, hands down.

Related Links

Who will win in a war between Nigeria and Ghana in this present Nigerian economic recession?

How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?
What if Nigeria is to go to war with the rest of west Africa?
Can Nigeria defeat South Africa in a military war?
Can Egypt defeat Nigeria in a full fledged war?

Who will win in war between Nigeria and South Affrica taking into considerations external help from allies?

Who would win a war between Nigeria and Iran, if they were neighbors?
Can Nigeria defeat Cameroon in a war?
Who would win a war between Ethiopia and Nigeria, if they were neighbors?
In a war between the United states and the whole of Africa who will win?

Which university is better, the ones in Ghana or Nigeria?

Eben Sanny Lives in Ghana (1993–present) 1y

Ghanaian universities obviously offer high class academic disciplines than Nigeria's. Successfully completing your education in Ghana practically is comparable to an athlete who has covered a tedious/ competitive run amongst other equally good athletes.

I had a friend who completed his bachelor's in Nigeria and his experience corroborates exactly the dubious acts we often hear about Nigerian universities.

However, I believe they as well offer high class educational expertise but relatively, Ghana is ahead.

Related Links

How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?
How can I emmigrate from Nigeria to Ghana, am tired of living in Nigeria?

Why is Nigeria mentally closer to Ghana than to Cameroon with whom we share a border, a language, and lots of history?

Are Ghanaian universities better than Nigerian universities?
If Nigerian is better than Ghana, then why are they coming to Ghana?
As a Nigerian, how easy is it to get a job in Ghana?
Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?
Is Nigeria more beautiful and developed than Ghana?
Why do Nigerians like Ghanaian universities?
What city in Ghana is good for a Nigerian immigrant and how can I get

How can I emmigrate from Nigeria to Ghana, am tired of living in Nigeria?

Ali Sarpin Former Writer Updated Jan 2

I hope the Ghanian government closes their border, so Nigerians don't come. As a Nigerian, I believe it's imperative to solve problems in your own country instead of running to destroy another man's land.

If some parts of Nigeria are not doing well, it's because Nigerians themselves have voted poorly. Also, many Nigerians try too hard to be politically correct. The truth is that the mentality of the people in Northern Nigeria is stopping our progress.

They vote for idiots like Buhari then wonder why their region is doing badly. Buhari didn't come into power to make Nigeria economically better. He came into power to bring back authoritarian rule to maintain Nigeria's status as a neo-colonial territory of the British. The Nigerian elite has bought up millions of pounds worth of property in London and has no intention of improving Nigeria. Half of Nigeria's treasury money has been invested in UK properties.

So if you're one of those Nigerians who scream "One Nigeria," don't be a hypocrite. Stay in your country and fix the mess you started. Anybody who voted for Buhari should stay in Nigeria and fix the country. They shouldn't be allowed out.

Ghanaians have heavily invested in the peace and security of their country. One of the ways they do this is by voting for good leaders who don't have a record of killing people. So, it's a shame to see thousands of immigrants from corrupt countries like Nigeria, Niger, and Chad pouring into Ghana.

These immigrants have voted criminals into their government and have destroyed their own country. Now they are running to destroy other people's countries.

Also, as a predominantly Christian country, Ghana should protect its borders. Muslims bring nothing but chaos. Historically, the ancestors of these West African Muslims had no respect for the other Non-Muslim blacks.

Black Muslims were the most prominent slave raiders in the past. They freely captured innocent people from their villages and sold them into slavery. So, black Muslims should stay in their own terrible countries and deal with the bad consequences (which their religion and madness have brought upon them).

It's not fair to keep travelling to other's people's countries and bringing the same culture, mentality and chaos that destroyed your own.

Muslims often vote by religion. They never vote for the most educated candidate. They always think that their own Muslim people are more educated (just because they are Muslim). Yet, it's always their countries that end up with terrorism and all sorts of crazy things happening. This clearly shows that Muslims lack the ability to build sound countries.

Muslims will migrate south to our Christian (and animist) regions then start dictating their own laws in our regions. Years later, that country will start looking like a hellhole.

If you're a supporter of Buhari or a Muslim, my advice is to stay in your country and leave other people alone. I really hope Ghanaians start taking care of their country and close their borders to foreigners.

Related Links

As a Nigerian, how easy is it to get a job in Ghana?
How is life in Ghana compared to Nigeria?
How is life for Nigerians living in Ghana?
What city in Ghana is good for a Nigerian immigrant and how can I get jobs?
Is Nigeria more beautiful and developed than Ghana?
Which university is better, the ones in Ghana or Nigeria?

Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?
How safe is Ghana to live?
Why do Nigerians go to Ghana if they say Nigerian is better than Ghana?
What do Nigerians think of Ghana and Ghanaians?

Debora was kílled because of her reckless tongue, more Christians will be kílled if they disrespect Prophet Muhammad – Sokoto Government Aide

Aniekpeno Ekong · Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria May 14

Personal Assistant to the Sokoto State Finance Commissioner, Anas Mohammad Sani, has threatened that more Christians in Nigeria will be murdered if they say things considered disrespectful to their revered Prophet Muhammad.

Sani stated following the gruesome killing of Deborah Samuel, a Christian female student of Shehu Shagari College of Education, Wamako fir allegedly insulting Prophet Muhamamad.

He stated on his Facebook wall, adding that Deborah was brutally murdered because she was reckless with her tongue.

"Muslims don't take insults against beloved prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم in whatever form."

“The earlier our Christian brothers and sisters understand this, the better for all of us. May the recklessness of our tongues never drive us to (an) early grave.”

“We have just a life to live and enjoy. We can make noise on Twitter and condemn the mob action using the Queen’s English. However, that cannot bring back Deborah back to life. More so, if anyone will repeat it tomorrow, the probability of being served same meal is 99.9%,” Mr Sani declared

Related Answer

Debora was kílled because of her reckless tongue, more Christians will be kílled if they disrespect Prophet Muhammad

Answered May 15, 2022

The prophet Muhammad Prior to the Hijra travel struggled non-violently against his oppressors in Mecca. It wasn't until after the exile that the Quranic revelations began to adopt a more offensive perspective. There is a "significant debate about what the Quran commands regarding the more offensive perspective, especially killing an innocent person.

There is a story in the book of Jihad and Expedition of a certain girl that was blasmephous to the prophet. It's said that once at the time of the conquest, a singing girl was brought to al-Muhajir b. Abu Umayya who had been publicly singing satirical poems about Hadrat Abu Bakr. Muhajir got her hand amputated. When the Caliph heard this news, he was shocked and wrote a letter to Muhajir in the following words:

"I have learned that you laid hands on a woman who had hurled abuses on me, and, therefore, got her hand amputated. Allah has not sought vengeance even in the case of polytheism, which is a great crime. He has not permitted mutilation even with regard to manifest infidelity. Try to be considerate and sympathetic in your attitude towards others in the future. Never mutilate, because it is a grave offense. God purified Islam and the Muslims from rashness and excessive wrath. You are well aware of the fact that those enemies fell into the hands of the Messenger of Allah (may peace be upon him) who had been recklessly abusing him; who had turned him out of his home; and who fought against him, but he never permitted their mutilation."

A lot of people who were close and not even close to the prophet have written different things about what the prophet did when he was faced with different situations even though they never understood the circumstances or the inspiration of the prophet. Assuming everything they wrote is even true, the present Islamic cleric or teachers of the Law must consider the current civilization now in order to teach certain things of the Quran, Hadith & other of their Holy books. Even if the Christian God was to do what He did with the Israelites by taking them from Egypt to the promised land today, He wouldn't use the same old approach He used then in this Techno age or century.

I urge every Muslim to pick up their Quran, Hadith, and KITAB AL-JIHAD WA'L-SIYAR (THE BOOK OF JIHAD AND EXPEDITION) to read. Don't just swallow whatever interpretation these supposed teachers of the law or clerics tells you hook line and sinker. In most cases, education and exposure are needed to comprehend certain books, not just Holy books, and where this is absent issues like the innocent killing of Deborah Yakubu will persist. That is why persons like the Personal Assistant to the Sokoto State Finance Commissioner, Anas Mohammad Sani will say something like that.

The earth itself rotates and revolves clockwise not anti-clockwise, why then do some teachers of the law have chosen to be retrogressing in their state of mind or knowledge of the Quran and Hadith.

News Nigeria

President Buhari participates at the meeting with International Development Partners of the Great Green Wall and attends Opening Ceremony of COP15 in Abidjan on 9th May 2022

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong May 10

COP 15 1: President Buhari with L-R: ES UNCCD Ibrahim Thiaw, UNDSG Amina Mohammed and Minister of Environment Mohammed Abdullahi during meeting with International Development Partners of the Great Green Wall at the sidelines of COP15 in Abidjan on 9th May 2022

Is Nigeria a country that devours it’s best?

Danelle Lucado Studies in African History & Traditions Updated 7h

Yes in a way I believe so. The country is full of smart, friendly, hard-working people. The younger generation that's coming up now definitely has a desire to make a change in the government. The older generation, unfortunately Nigerians have a life expectancy at 55–60 years old, they no longer want to fight for change. It's tradition that once children grow into adulthood they become financially responsible for their parents.

The best of the best get ignored and left behind. Their ideals and dreams of a new Nigeria is falling on deaf ears. These are the ones that can make the change that's required to achieve greatness in the country. They just can't give up, don't let the corruption devour them, don't let the naysayers talk them out of it, they just need to do it. Make Nigeria a country as wonderful as the people who live there.

What does Nigeria do better than other countries?

Osazua Iruedo Surviving in Nigeria Answered Oct 25, 2019

God may have rested on the seventh day after so much work of creating the heavens and the earth, the snakes, the lions, the beast and all that were created. I guess that was the last day he enjoyed his rest because Nigerians call upon him 24/7, praying and pumping fist and begging him to pour down fire and brimstones on enemies that won't let us make headway.

Being optimistic.

The evidence of our optimistic spirit lies everywhere. In the way we hustle, the way we talk. We don't say negative things to ourselves at all. Instead of saying I am sick, we say I am strong. Why would I tell anyone I am poor when I should say I am rich. When a Nigerian tells you '’I will become the greatest by force'' please kindly understand he is not bragging. He is speaking his dreams into existence. There is no room for despair when we see ourselves, we are good at encouraging one another and saying it's well.

I was asking a vendor I usually patronise if he still has a particular item I always love to buy, he said it has finished. Then I said since your own has finished let me buy from another. He raised his hands to heaven and said his own will not finish in Jesus name. A typical Nigerian will reject every negative statement in any conversation.

For all it's political and economic troubles, Nigerians still remain optimistic and happy.

Opportunities doesn't come knocking on our doors, we chase it knowing God is always on our side.

Our optimistic spirit has created a lot of motivational speakers that encourages us to always aspire to acquire so that what we admire and desire will not expire but give way for us to inspire.

Or don't give up. You need to aspire, acquire,admire,perspire, require and desire so that you can retire in peace. Lol.

I love our optimistic spirit. I love my Nigeria.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria considered “the giant of Africa”?
Nigeria claimed to be a giant of Africa. Does any country contest this with Nigeria?
Which country is best to migrate from Nigeria?

There are lots of countries that are just as bad as Nigeria, but why is it that Nigeria always gets the most hate?

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
Why has Nigeria not yet emerged as the giant of Africa?
What does Nigeria need to do to develop?
What does Nigeria do better than other countries?

Why is Nigeria considered “the giant of Africa”?

Updated May 7

Originally Answered: Why is Nigeria named the giant of Africa?

Nigeria is the largest African economy (even though the country is struggling through corruption and terrorism now imagine if we didn’t have those issues).

Nigeria has contributed to UN peacekeeping for the African continent, the Middle East, South Asia and Southeast Asia.

Nigeria is the 12th largest producer of crude oil in the world and the 8th largest exporter.

Nigerian film industry is ranked as the second-largest film producer in the world.

Are there still chances that Nigeria will still become the giant of Africa?

Leeroy Him, African and North/East European Historian (1999-present) Answered Jan 25

Western propaganda about not splitting the country in and out of Nigeria is becoming harder to make effective. Nigeria was around 5 empires, 7 nations, 5 or 6 city-states or something similar to those before the borders of modern Nigeria where drawn, those numbers may even actually be higher (and while there weren't many more tribal congregations in the region, there were a few of those spread around too though not really relevant) so for Nigeria to succeed it needs to NOT be Nigeria.

This isn’t something like you saw in some parts of Europe, where in some cases there was commonality and overlap between ethnic groups to share a country, most of these are completely different people with not just different languages, customs, histories, aesthetics, building ideas, strategies, way of governing, culture, art, etc, many are just not compatible, this is like taking Germany, Russia, Spain, Portugal, Croatia, Georgia, the Balkans, and Italy and making it all one country, giving the control and power structure to Georgia and have them be the ruling class over the entire populace of incompatible people. Such a thing is incomprehensible to think of in terms of thinking about a functional country, but that’s what Nigeria is, and Nigeria isn’t the only colonial nation that used to be many separate nations of completely incompatible people and societies, however it’s likely the best example of why it can’t work,

4% of the countries land mass, which is huge, and can take up a chunk of Europe, maybe even 3.5% in some estimates, are responsible for about 98% of the reason why Nigeria is known as the biggest economy of Africa, it’s where near all the major trade is, the innovation, the technology, the urban development, the relative peace, the infrastructure, the revenue, the consumerism, and so on. It’s all in 3.5–4% of the land mass primarily in the south among the port hartcourt and parts of the Igbo area in the southeast and surrounding Lagos in the southwest as well as parts of Youruba/Oyoland. Areas in between do a bit of contribution to a lesser extent, but once you start heading toward the center of the country the more the gains turn to losses and than the losses gets worse as you keep heading north.

Can you imagine where Nigeria would be if the northern 60% of the country wasn’t there? Without the expenses and Jihadist's military interventions draining the economy as well as lack of any real contribution the the countries economy?

Even among the north it’s clear that there’s incompatibilities despite them all sharing islam as a religion, and they would be better off as separate nations.

Many people have done research and taken deep dives, and it’s universal that the country needs to be split, not into 34 pieces, as a modern nation needs some access to resources (or trade) to function otherwise it’s basically going to be a dead country inevitably, but you can easily do 5–10 countries as has been extensively researched by multiple relevant professions.

It’s only the west that seems to think this is impossible, and by proxy the current Nigerian control structure, controlled by the same group since Colonial times.

As it is, Nigeria is basically capped for growth, and eventually the expenses with dealing with the north will be more costly than the gains because of the disruption in the economy and the people fleeing southward. Which means conflicts in the future could happen in the center or southern part of the country, which would cause the country to collapse.

Related Links

Why is Nigeria considered “the giant of Africa”?
Nigeria claimed to be a giant of Africa. Does any country contest this with Nigeria?
Which country is best to migrate from Nigeria?

There are lots of countries that are just as bad as Nigeria, but why is it that Nigeria always gets the most hate?

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?
How do other African countries view Nigeria?
How dangerous is Nigeria?
Why has Nigeria not yet emerged as the giant of Africa?
What does Nigeria need to do to develop?
What does Nigeria do better than other countries?

THIS IS NIGERIA

Posted by Frank Abah May 18

UK population in 1960: 52 million
Nigeria population in 1960: 45 million

Nigeria population in 2022: 210 million

UK population in 2022: 68 million

(Please do not take my word for it. Research it yourself).

The cause? This mentality of: Have children anyhow. God will use mumu people's 'kindness' to help you train them!

And now Nigeria's population has exploded. And sadly, much of this explosion are not educated. And for tribal, political and religious reasons, we do not talk about it. There are 13 million children in Nigeria who do not go to school. They are concentrated mostly in just one geopolitical zone. The Northwest. They will reach adulthood and breed with speed. That is the real cause of Nigeria's insecurity. And until we deal with it, we are wasting time fighting the symptoms!

Stop justifying giving help to a poor man because he has a wife and many kids. Let him suffer! Such a man needs to suffer, so that other people see him suffer and learn not to have kids they can't cater for. Or we will have MORE of such in society, if you help them.

If you keep helping men for the sole reason that they are poor and have many kids, their mentality will be: born as you like, God will use mumu people to help you train them. In case you don't know, that is already the mentality of many low, or no wage earners, who have many children. Your 'kindness' is feeding that mentality and creating a population explosion, resulting in insecurity!

Nigeria must end this progressive backwardness!

#TableShaker

Credit: Reno Omokri

Do Nigerians live in Mauritius?

Adewale Franklin

Do Nigerians live in Mauritius?

Ah! Yes ! I can tell you Nigerian community there should account for up to 500 people from all over Nigeria .

Nigerians are everywhere even in Afghanistan i am sure. There are many Nigerians living on Mauritius Island. I once lived there for two years as well and we had a community of Nigerians way back then. Some are schooling, some are married to Mauritians both men and women and are settled there living their quiet lives. Some on the other hand are just working and living a normal life.

As it is easy to blend in Mauritius for all africans, you may not be able to differentiate between a Nigerian and a creole Mauritian as we all look the same. So yes there are lots of Nigerians there. Especially in Grand Baie area and in Vacoas after Port Louis.

Anyway if you ever visited Mauritius, don't forget to visit Mont Choisy beach as that place used to be my best spot whenever i needed to relax and whine out and lastly eat some roti to help you feel at home winks. Enjoy the weekend.

Me at Grand baie beach.

Adewale Franklin

What do Nigerians usually forget but should not?

Victor Dirikebamor

Storyteller Updated 2y

When ever I'm traveling to the far north by road, I usually get to my destination in the middle of the night no matter how early I leave home and the only people I see on the road are mostly soldiers.

While the rest of the country is sleeping... snoring their guts out, these soldiers are out on the road protecting travelers and arresting bad guys.

But how often do we thank them?

How often do we appreciate positive efforts?

We are very quick to judge their misdeeds.

We never fail to vilify them but very slow in appreciation.

The death of 'Lt Col Muhammad Abu-Ali', nicknamed the 'war king' in 2016 while fighting boko haram shocked Nigerians who heard of his good deeds before then.

Abu-Ali was quoted as saying "If anything were to happen to any of his team it should rather happen to him".

He was a fine soldier.

Whoever said the pen is mightier than the sword obviously never encountered automatic weapons.

The truth is, there are many more men just like him, who have laid down their lives in service to there country.

While we sleep they are out there in the dark.

When we rise they are still there... Come rain, come sun.

Two of my secondary school mates went to join the army not long ago and presently they are incapacitated, unfortunately for them they were both posted to fight Boko haram.

One is partially blind...they shot one of his eyes out, the other is an amputee.

These are young men with their lives ahead of them but has been reduced to their present state because they chose to serve humanity.

We are angry that a single story is being told about Nigerians yet Nigerians tell a one sided story about their military, their police.

All we see and talk about is how corrupt the police is.

We remember only the unnecessary tips they request from us.

We remember only the illegal arrest.

But most of us feel safe when we see them on the road, because at that moment robbers are likely not going to attack us.

We sleep safely at night because rough men stand ready to visit violence on those who would harm us.

No doubt, some of them are a disgrace to the country and the uniform they're putting on but having them around us is far better than not having them at all.

Sometimes people make fun of them, of their death.

"Boko haram don kill again o*".

"Soldiers dey die like fowl for North*".

"Militants don carry kill soldiers*".

Forgotten that it's human life we're talking about.

They are someone's close relative. Our fellow countrymen.

By the way as I'm typing this post:

Some are standing on the road in the bone shattering cold at pankshin in the plateau, some are on the dreaded creeks of the Niger Delta, others are at the scary hills in the West.

Some are chasing criminals, others are in gun battle right now, some might be getting killed right this moment, all in service to our country. while we lie in our warm beds.

It is often said that "in the land of the blind one eye man is the king".

The 'Nigerian military' and the 'Nigerian police' is not the best when it comes to discipline but it is certain that there would be no Nigeria without them!

Those who genuinely serve our country deserve our prayers and appreciation.

"The world is a dangerous place, not because of those who do evil, but because of those who look on and do nothing." – Albert Einstein.

What are the good things you have to say about Nigerians?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller 2y

The ability to survive is inborn in the average Nigerian, turning stone to bread is our mastery.

Nigerians are good neighbours. We don't ask "how are you" while walking away without caring about the reply, that's fake love to us. When we ask "how are you," we want to know if you're okay, we want to help if we can.

When you hear "Nigerians love celebrating" that is true but one can not celebrate alone, inviting loved ones, strangers and even enemies to our parties is natural to many here... If they invite you to eat, drink and dance with them and you failed to show up, sorry is your name as you will forever remain in their black book.

Fake love can be easily spotted here. One does not go about telling people "I love you" casually, we rarely tell people "I love you", we act it here, and when we do, it's real as day, unique and genuine. Nigerians value name a lot, a responsible Nigerian wouldn't want to do anything that would tarnish his image and family name, hence the majority of us try to live right.

Depression, suicide are all new to us, it was never seen when I was a kid. People here are loud, they listen to music, dance and celebrate for no reason like little kids. But now, things are changing a bit. I'm sure it has to do with the government, social media and people living fake lives, trying to emulate celebrities.

Education is taken very seriously in most parts of Nigeria. Without a college degree, one might never get a good job. About the only time people won't bother about your qualifications is when you're rich, they think you know. One could say all sorts of rubbish and they would clap for them.

I know some folks and mostly the young might not agree with this but when I was a kid, doing good to your fellow man wasn't being nice, it was a way of life and, telling one "thank you" was seen as an insult and, you would here questions lile; "is it because of this little thing you're thanking me? Can't you do the same for me?"

All of this, our way of life, our reputation as a people is greatly corrupted now.

People trying their very best to survive has drifted many away from our original lifestyle, a few years back when you hear "Nigerians are good people, a great nation" it was an understatement, we were beyond that, we were indeed the salt of the earth and still is.

Related Links

What good things can you say about Nigeria?
What are some things Nigerians consider rude or offensive?
What do you love about Nigerians?
What are the things most people ignore about Nigerians?
What do you like about Nigerian culture?
Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
What do you know about Nigerian people? Are they good or bad?
Do Nigerians mean well?
What do you think of Nigerians?
Nigeria: What is the typical food in a Nigerian diet?

News Nigeria

Zenab, the pretty lady following and supporting London to Lagos biker, Kunle Adeyanju, is coming to Nigeria

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Wed

Geraldine Amoah Zenab, the pretty lady who is noticeably supportive of Nigerian biker, Kunle Adeyanju is coming to Nigeria on the 29th of May to join in receiving the adventurer The lady has been very supportive of the biker and she became popular after she made a personal donation of about GH¢8k to the End Polio campaign for which Kunle is riding Many who have seen the announcement on Kunle's Twitter handle are very excited as they say it will be nice to have her around in Nigeria, the giant of Africa.

"It is finally going down as Zenab, the Ivorian lady who has been noticeably close to Nigerian biker, Kunle Adeyanju, is coming to Nigeria. This much was made known by the biker himself through a tweet. He said Zenab will be around to participate in his reception in Lagos.

Nigerians excited about Zenab's coming Many who have seen the announcement are very excited as some of them are even claiming something is going on between Kunle and Zenab.

Zenab herself even fueled the rumour when she tweeted that she missed the biker and he responded with the same passion. Neither of them has confirmed anything, but what is clear is that both share the same passion for the End Polio Rotary campaign.

See Kunle's tweet below: Twitter users react @Iranladebanjo said: "Something is cooking! I really don't want to believe that her coming is for the love of Rotary alone... If it what I think it is, it will be beautiful to see. We await her arrival." @Oroboisa21 commented: "If this lady is single and you're single too. Both of you must marry by force oooo. We go sponsor the wedding. I overly like two of you. Perfect-match!"

Wake Up Africa!
SOME NIGERIAN NEWSPAPER HEADLINES By 31/05/2022. ·

Posted by NEWSAFFAIR Wed

THE PUNCH.

Ogun community laments harassment by child beggars, demands relocation

Lagos man tortured, detained for 11 years over neighbours offence freed

Aggrieved Ogun politicians challenge Lagos Senators victory in court

Anambra gunmen kill policeman, steal rifle, kidnap vigilante chairman

Doubts over abducted train passengers rescue, new video surfaces

How kidnapped Methodist Prelate was released Gov Ikpeazu

Two Ekiti men to die by hanging for robbing 53-year-old lecturer

Okorocha engages five SANs, court hears bail application today

Three Kwara fraudsters jailed, forfeit money, phones

Anambra lawmakers killing invokes panic, killers vow to go after politicians

I cant be second-class citizen, says Wike, Atiku begins reconciliation

OAU students death: Parties adopt final addresses June 27

Lagos sergeant killed my inspector husband with sword Widow

Presidential primary screening: APC questions Tinubu, Umahi, Bakare, others on foreign citizenship, consensus

Please don't just stop after reading one headline out of all the over 50 newspapers on this platform,Please Read more headlines from " PUNCH,,DAILYTRUST,NEW NIGERIA," by visiting/Clicking the link below.

THE NATION - newsaffairng

SOME NIGERIAN NEWSPAPER HEADLINES 31/05/2022. THE NATION. Train attack: Osinbajo's classmate, Ango Abdulahi's son speak in new video BREAKING: Peter Obi secures Labour Party presidential ticket BREAKING: APC commences screening of presidential aspirants Stop shaving your public hairs, Blessing CEO advises ladies Five most educated Nigerian celebrities Annie Idibia denies unfollowing 2Baba Actor Kanayo hosts [...]

https://newsaffairng.com/2022/05/30/the-nation-208/
05/30/the-nation-208/

Nigeria : vives tensions après la lapidation à mort d'une chrétienne

David-GDK · Connaissances : Anglais13 mai

Des chefs religieux nigérians ont appelé jeudi au calme et demandé que justice soit faite après la lapidation à mort d'une étudiante chrétienne dans le nord-ouest du Nigeria, accusée de blasphème contre le prophète Mahomet.

Des chefs religieux nigérians ont appelé jeudi au calme et demandé que justice soit faite après la lapidation à mort d'une étudiante chrétienne dans le nord-ouest du Nigeria, accusée de blasphème contre le prophète Mahomet.

Le meurtre de l'étudiante a eu lieu dans l'État de Sokoto où la charia est en vigueur parallèlement au droit commun, comme dans d'autres États du nord musulman conservateur du Nigeria.

Des dizaines d'étudiants de l'école Shehu Shagari ont lapidé jeudi l'étudiante Deborah Samuel puis brûlé son corps après avoir lu un commentaire qu'elle avait posté sur les réseaux sociaux, qu'ils ont considéré comme offensant à l'égard du prophète Mahomet.

Deux suspects ont été arrêtés, selon la police.

What made Muhammad Ali the greatest heavyweight boxer of all time?

John McGlothlin Answered May 14

In the beginning, Ali’s blinding, incredible speed made him unique among heavyweight fighters.

After that was gone, after his 1,314 day exile, his willingness to fight any and everyone, his adaptability and ferocious will to win, his willingness to go the extra mile to win…those things, and the best resume among all heavyweight champions, makes him the greatest heavyweight of all time.

CREDIT PICTURE BIOGRAPHY

What made Muhammad Ali the greatest heavyweight who ever lived, and one of the 5 best pound for pound fighters who ever lived?

Ali had four distinct and unique abilities, 1 of which is uniqu

John McGlothlin Updated Jun 10, 2021

Muhammad Ali is justifiably ranked the #1 heavyweight of all time.
Joe Louis was a truly great, generationally great, fighter, but by the numbers, he faced lesser competition, and simply was not as dominant a fighter as Muhammad Ali.

CREDIT PICTURE THEBLACKMAN

Further, although some of the answers cherry pick quotes of Ali paying tribute to Joe's greatness after the Brown Bombers death, they forget all about what Muhammad said in his own autobiography, The Greatest: My Own Story:

*"*When people ask me about who was the greatest of all time, I say look at the records. I fought better competition, over a longer period of time than any other fighter in history. As for Joe Louis, if you want to see how I would have defeated Joe, look at his fight with Billy Conn, the first one. Billy was thirty pounds lighter and beat Joe easily for 12 rounds till he got greedy and tried to knock him out. I am taller than Joe, with a longer reach, faster than Billy Conn, stronger, better chin, with more power. Do the math."
Let us look at the numbers:

Anthony Mason, boxing writer, said:

"I think the only way to fairly rank a boxer's place in history is by comparing their résumés. And that does not mean just wins and losses - it is too easy today to fight only has beens or never will be's, and run up the record."
Muhammad Ali's record versus Joe Louis's tells the tale:

The Great Joe Louis faced 17 top opponents:

- Ezzard Charles, ranked as light heavy, but was undisputed heavyweight champion with 8 title defenses
- Rocky Marciano
- Jimmy Bivens
- Harry Matthews (HOF light heavy champ fought for the heavyweight title)
- Bob Pastor
- Joe Walcott
- Max Schmeling
- Primo Carnera
- Jack Sharkey
- Lou Nova
- Max Baer
- Tony Galento
- Nathan Mann
- Arturo Godoy
- Buddy Baer
- Lee Savold
- John Henry Lewis (HOF light heavy champ fought for heavyweight title)

Joe fought 15 top fighters, beating 15 of 17 at least once

Comparing records:

- Ali faced 22 top all time fighters, beating 21 of 22 at least once;
- Ali had a 95.5% win rate against top 100 of all time opposition;
- Louis faced 17 top all time fighters, beating 15 of 17 at least once;
- Louis had an 88% win rate against top all time opposition;

There is no doubt Ali faced better competition, and more of it, and beat a higher percentage than Louis did.

Numbers don't lie.

Ali faced 22 of the all time greats beating 21 of them

- Archie Moore;
- Floyd Patterson
- Larry Holmes
- Ken Norton
- Bob Foster ranked as light heavyweight
- Joe Frazier
- Sonny Liston

- George Foreman
- Ken Norton
- Jerry Quarry
- Jimmy Ellis
- Henry Cooper
- Jimmy Young
- Doug Jones
- Zora Foley
- Joe Bugner
- Oscar Bonavena
- Leon Spinks
- George Chuvalo
- Ernie Terrell
- Mac Foster
- Earnie Shavers

Ali faced better competition than any other heavyweight in history.

Ali faced 22 of the top all time greats. Ten of Ali's opponents are in the Hall of Fame!

Muhammad won 30 of 31 from top fighters, a feat not matched by anyone else in history.

CREDIT TO BOXREC FOR ALL RANKINGS AND RECORDS

Comparing Louis and Ali as fighters:

Louis had immense physical talent, more than any heavyweight in history except one:

Joe Louis Barrow was a unique, generational athlete and talent.

Joseph Louis Barrow, born on May 13, 1914 fought from 1934 to 1951. He reigned as the undisputed world heavyweight champion for an incredible 12 years, from 1937 to 1949. Nicknamed the "Brown Bomber," Louis' championship reign lasted 140 consecutive months, during which he had 26 championship bouts.

The great trainer Jack Blackburn fashioned Louis from a free moving, free wheeling amateur, into a deadly knockout machine who patiently followed his opponents around the ring, set them up with pinpoint jabs, and generally knocked them out with what Floyd Patterson called in 'The international hall of fame basic boxing skills:

*"*the "sweetest left hook I have ever seen, and the deadliest right cross."
A great boxer needs three things, according to Emmanuel Steward, the legendary, late, great, Hall of Fame trainer:

1. talent; (speed, strength, reflexes);
2. willingness to work and devote yourself to be the best;
3. great people to teach you and be your team.

Joe Louis Barrow had all three.

Sam Langford, one of the greatest fighters who ever lived summed up Joe Louis when he said:

"The Detroit Bomber is another Gans, whom I consider the greatest fighter of all time… He (Louis) can hit, he is fast and is no slouch at employing ring craft. I am glad I am still able to see enough to watch the boy. He is the marvel of the age."

CREDIT THE JULY 20, 1935 EDITION OF Chicago Defender

Jack Blackburn made Joe Louis Barrow into the Great Joe Louis

Jack Blackburn is best known as the Hall of Fame trainer of the great Joe Louis, but he was also a great lightweight boxer who engaged in over 160 recorded professional fights from 1901 to 1923. (Blackburn claimed to have had 385 fights. In a time when boxing was illegal in many states, most of his fights probably went unrecorded.) That boxing career shaped Blackburn's subsequent career as a trainer.

Never a champion Blackburn still fought some of the greatest fighters of all time. He fought the legendary lightweight champion Joe Gans, "The Old Master" three times, all time great Sam Langford six times, (despite a major weight disadvantage), the great welterweight Dave Holly five times, future light-heavyweight champion Philadelphia Jack O'Brien, andHarry Greb, possibly the fourth greatest middleweight of all time.

Blackburn even fought heavyweights Jim Barry and Gunboat Smith. Billy Rocap said the greatest fight he ever saw was Blackburn's famous 15 round draw with Sam Langford in Marlboro, Massachusetts. Veteran historian Charley Rose rated Blackburn as the third greatest lightweight ever in his 1968 ratings.

And Blackburn watched every bit of what trainers did during his 22 year career, and applied it to become a truly great trainer himself.

Blackburn trained four fighters who went on to become world champions:

- bantamweight Bud Taylor,
- lightweight Sammy Mandell,
- welterweight Jackie Fields, and
- heavyweight Joe Louis.

Louis was his pride and joy, who he felt he had molded in the image of the great technicians of his day, the vicious but cerebral Blackburn, the “Old Master of the Ring” Joe Gans and power punching Sam Langford.

CREDIT FOR PICTURE OF THE GREAT JOE LOUIS AND JACK BLACKBURN: THE SQUARED CIRCLE AND TWITTER

Joe Louis as an amateur

Joe Louis started in the unpaid ranks with an amateur record of 50-4 with 43 knockouts and won the Detroit Golden Gloves titles and the National AAU Light-heavyweight championship in 1934, before deciding to turn pro.

Louis's manager, John Roxborough, sought to hire Jack Blackburn, to turn Louis into the champion they envisioned.

Blackburn was introduced to Joe Louis on June 25, 1934 and watched Joe sparring and hitting the heavy bag. Blackburn said later he saw at once Louis had natural punching power, something that could not be taught, but he also saw that he was completely dependent on his power, and lacked solid fundamentals.

Blackburn talked of his observations of the young Louis, and what he thought he would need to become great, to the Pittsburgh Courier, on July 20, 1935 saying:

"Louis needed correction in everything except hitting. I had to teach him to back up his punches with the proper timing, accuracy and to instruct him in the proper art of balance. I trained him under the same methods I trained under when I was a fighter."

CREDIT COX'S CORNER, AND THE Pittsburgh Courier July 20, 1935 edition

Louis spoke of what Blackburn gave him in his autobiography Joe Louis My Life:

*"*He (Blackburn) saw my faults right off. I was hitting off balance. He corrected this by showing me how to plant my feet and punch with my whole body, not just swinging my arms. He said people going to fights don't want to see a dancer or a clincher –they want to see a man who goes for the guts. He said I had strength and that I could beat or knock out anybody I wanted to if I planted my body in the right position."

Louis said his first week with Blackburn the trainer did nothing but hold the heavy bag and taught Louis how to actually punch correctly.

CREDIT COX'S CORNER, AND Joe Louis My Life

Blackburn developed Louis into not only a boxer-puncher of extraordinary power and authority. Blackburn taught Louis to use short compact punches - compare his punching on You-Tube with Wilder's bolo punches!

Joe had weaknesses, though most could not take advantage of them

Manny Steward explained once:

“no fighter is perfect. A good trainer finds his fighter’s weaknesses, and devises ways to defend them, while finding his fighter’s strengths, and emphasizing those.”

Joe had weaknesses. His chin was decent, but not great, and he was not the fastest afoot of heavyweights, though his hand speed was impressive. He compensated for his weaknesses with pin-point accuracy, superb fundamentals, and truly impressive power.

Thanks to Jack Blackburn, Joe Louis was one of the best technical boxers to ever grace the ring.

Ali was more talented physically than any other heavyweight who ever lived

Boxing Historian Monte Cox wrote that:

“Muhammad Ali was the most naturally gifted heavyweight champion in history.” http://coxscorner.tripod.com/196...

CREDIT PICTURE PINTEREST

His phenomenal speed in his prime never ceases to amaze people who saw him in person, or even on TV, or who have studied him later on film. The late Jimmy Jacobs, then the owner of the world's largest fight film collection, once measured Ali's jab by an omegascope.

Ali’s jab was not only faster than any heavyweight of all time - including Larry Holmes by a wide margin, but Jacobs found that Ali was faster than any middleweight he measured - for instance, Sugar Ray Robinson's jab took 8.5 frames of film. Ali's took only 6.5!

CREDIT COX’S CORNER MONTE COX

Canadian heavyweight George Chuvalo said in Ring of Ali’s speed:

“my plan for the fight was simple: as the shorter guy, I wanted to stay close to Ali, nullify his speed and prevent him from using the whole ring. I also wanted to make it rough. The rougher, the better. But it took all of about 30 seconds for me to realize he was the fastest fighter I’d ever seen. It’s one thing to expect it; it’s another thing to feel it, live it."

Comparing accomplishments:

Ali beat every top 100 fighter he faced (19 of them) at least once, and four of them twice, all but Larry Holmes, whom he fought ill at 39

Ali was and is the first and only three-time lineal World Heavyweight Champion.

Ali was and remains the first World Heavyweight Champion to come back from retirement and regain the title.

Ali beat 14 world champions, from the years 1962 to 1978, over an incredible 16 year period.

Ali won twenty-two World Heavyweight Championship fights over a 14 year period.

Ali made a total of nineteen successful title defenses of the undisputed title, nine during his first reign and ten during his second reign.

Another record he set which stands today, he has a record of 11-0 in rematches. Ali faced a heavyweight record of 8 Hall of Fame fighters, winning against all but one, and making 11 total fights against Hall of Famers.

Ali was named Ring "Fighter of the Year" for 1963, 1966, 1972, 1974, 1975 and 1978. Ali was named the Boxing Writers Association of America "Fighter of the Year" for 1965, 1974 and 1975. Ali was named Sports Illustrated "Sportsman of the Year" for 1974. Ali was named The Ring "Fighter of the Decade" for the 1970s.

Ali was inducted into the U.S. Olympic Hall of Fame in 1983. He received the Boxing Writers Association of America James J. Walker Memorial Award for 1984. Ali was inducted into the World Boxing Hall of Fame in 1986. He was inducted into the The Ring Boxing Hall of Fame in 1987. Ali was inducted into the International Boxing Hall of Fame in 1990. Ali was named "Athlete of the Century" by GQ magazine in 1998. He was named "Sports Personality of the Century" by the BBC in 1999, and "Sportsman of the 20th Century" by Sports Illustrated.

Ken Norton said it best about the man he fought three closely contested bouts with. In an interview with boxing writer and historian Frank J. Lotierzo on ESPN radio 1490, he said:

Frank: In your book you say Ali is the best ever. Do you believe that?

Norton: "As far as I've been around, yes."

Frank: "Is Ali the best fighter you ever fought?"

Norton: "Yes."

Finally, most people do not realize 3 of Ali's 5 losses came when he was over 37, and ill with Parkinson's. The only two losses that occurred during his prime were to all time greats #10 Joe Frazier, (and Ali had been off going on 4 years, and had taken the Frazier fight only 6 months back over his trainer's objections), and to #26 Ken Norton, (and Ali had his jaw broken in the early rounds, and still managed to tough out the entire fights. He won 2 rematches against both men.

Max Kellerman summed up the Ali era: "From 1970, when Ali came back from his forced exile, to 1978, when Ali won back his crown for the final time (against Leon Spinks), Ali shared the very top shelf with Joe Frazier and George Foreman, and the three of them were supported by Ken Norton and Joe Bugner and, in the beginning of the decade, Oscar Bonavena, Jerry Quarry and Jimmy Ellis, and at the end of the decade Ernie Shavers, Ron Lyle and Jimmy Young. Ali fought them all, and many of the others fought each other. The greatest heavyweight era ever."

As heavyweight eras go, this one is very good

Fanboys don't understand the real meaning of losses and rematches, and the totality of Ali's record. Ali fought 3 fighters in the top 10 of all time, and 24 in the top 150 of all time, winning 29 fights with them. To compare, Tyson Fury has fought 3 in the top 150, and won twice.

Anthony Mason, quoted above, also said:

"look at rematches. "Look at who Great fighters fought. Great fighters who fought other great fighters had losses - but how did they do in the rematches?" As noted earlier, Ali was 11-0 in rematches, the best such record in history in the heavyweight division. Ali beat every single fighter who beat him until he was 39 years old. Ali faced a heavyweight record of 8 Hall of Fame fighters, winning against all but one, and making 11 total fights against Hall of Famers.

Ali is the most dominant fighter in history over the longest period against the best competition. No one else faced an all time great like Sonny Liston at 22, and a ferocious all time destroyed like George Foreman ten years later, and beat them both.

Joe Louis and history:

Joe Louis retired the first time in 1949 with a record of 61–1 over a 15 year career, in which he had been undisputed champion the last 12, (and he had avenged that one loss). Shamefully, the Internal Revenue Service forced Louis back into the ring to pay dubious taxes assessed on "winnings" from exhibitions in which he had collected not a penny, but donated the purses to the war effort and veteran's groups. Nonetheless, the government, insisting he owed money for those efforts - which he was never told at the time - forced the old Bomber back into the ring.

Joe should be remembered, as Rocky Marciano said, 'as the guy we grew up cheering for."

Max Baer summed up fighting Louis best:

"I define fear as standing across the ring from Joe Louis and knowing he wants to go home early.

Joe had a record of 26-1 (22 KOs) in world title fights. Joe had a record of 10-3 (9 KOs) against former, current, and future world champions.

Joe Louis was named fighter of the year four times by Ring magazine in 1936, 1938, 1939, and 1941. His fights with Max Baer, Max Schmeling, Tommy Farr, Bob Pastor and Billy Conn were named fights of the year by Ring. In 2002 The Ring ranked Louis #4 on their 80 best fighters of the last 80 years list. Louis was also ranked #1 on The Ring's list of 100 Greatest Punchers of All Time.

Grantland Rice, the great sportswriter, described Louis as a "brown cobra."

In 50 Years at Ringside Ring magazine founder Nat Fleischer said that Louis was the most effective, deadliest boxer at finishing any opponent once they were in trouble - and Louis owed that to Blackburn.

What would have happened had a prime Joe Louis fought a 1967 Muhammad Ali?

Joe was a great fighter.

Ali was simply a little bit greater.

Ali was 2 inches taller, had 3 inches of reach on Joe, and was naturally about 10 solid pounds heavier.

Speed though, pure, blinding, speed would have decided such a match.

Famed Boxing Historian Don Cogswell wrote, (IBRO Journal # 81):

“Muhammad Ali, in his first title reign, presented such a speed disparity between contestants as to appear supernatural."

A former champion who knew Joe Louis, who fought him, and who sparred with Ali, had an opinion on what would have happened.

Rocky Marciano, whose childhood hero was Joe Louis, and who literally cried after stopping him when they fought, called Ali "the fastest man on wheels." Rocky said, in awe, he had never seen a human being as fast as Ali was. Rocky, who got to know Ali well during the filming of the computer fight, and comparing Ali to Louis, said: "I never seen a fighter with hands that fast."

Rocky went on to say:

“Most would make the guy before they made him stop fighting – the fighter that destroyed Cleveland Williams, before time off took so much of the skip and slip from his legs – a strong favorite over anybody, anytime, anywhere, including me."

And Rocky noted it was not just Ali’s hands that were fast, Rocky said his legs and footwork were the best he had ever seen.

Floyd Patterson, who knew Joe Louis, and watched him fight as a young man, said Louis simply was not as fast as he was - and that Ali was faster than him. Patterson said:

“Hell, I was a lot faster than Joe Louis, and Ali was a lot faster than me!"
What about great contender Zora Folley? Zora Folley, after facing Ali, said:

“he is just too fast! you can't hit him! But he sure can hit you." What about Joe Louis, Foley was asked? "I knew Joe Louis and he was a great fighter." Could he have beaten Ali? "Nobody could have beaten Ali in 1967, nobody."

As noted earlier, Ali was 11-0 in rematches, the best such record in history in the heavyweight division. Ali beat every single fighter who beat him until he was 39 years old. Ali faced a heavyweight record of 8 Hall of Fame fighters, winning against all but one, and making 11 total fights against Hall of Famers.

Ali is the most dominant fighter in history over the longest period against the best competition. No one else faced an all time great like Sonny Liston at 22, and a ferocious all time destroyed like George Foreman ten years later, and beat them both.

Conclusion: Ali was a greater fighter than Joe Louis based on the record, fighting better competition over a longer period of time, and winning against better all time greats.

In a mythic fight between the two, Sonny and Rocky Marciano called it: Ali was too fast, period. He would do what Billy Conn did to Joe, except Ali would have finished him.

Related Links

Based solely on technique, what are the top 3 in heavyweight boxing history?

Who was a greater heavyweight boxer; Joe Louis or Muhammad Ali?
How many heavyweights today could Muhammad Ali have gone the distance with?
His skills be outdated today because of boxing evolution and modern training.

We know a prime Muhammad Ali matches well against anybody. But how does a 70s era Ali fare against the more modern super heavyweights (Lewis, the Klitschkos, Fury, AJ, Wilder) and why?

If Muhammad Ali competed today would he be one of the top 10 heavyweight boxer today? Since modern training (boxing evolution) has improved a lot since 1967.

Could Muhammad Ali beat even the weakest modern heavyweights today? Since every modern heavyweights refuse to have Ali's outdated skills in their arsenal, Ali's skills are outdated due to boxing evolution and modern training has improved a lot.

Who was the most overrated heavyweight boxer of all time?
Did Muhammad Ali really consider himself the greatest?
Could any heavyweight of today defeat Ali in his prime?

Apart from Muhammad Ali, is there any boxer in history who had a reasonable chance at beating a prime Sonny Liston?

Is Muhammad Ali considered one of the best heavyweight boxers of all time?

Hassan Ahmed, Combat Sports Answered Jul 30, 2021

One of? Um, he is widely regarded as the greatest heavyweight of all time and it’s not even close or by a mile. Ali is the best heavyweight in history ranked number 1 and the best top 5 pound for pound fighter.

EVERLAST

This question seems a little bit off because it looks like it implies that Muhammad Ali is not the considered the greatest heavyweight of all time when the reality thing is he is by almost all experts. Ali is the best heavyweight ever period.

And here’s a question to you, why is Ali widely the greatest heavyweight in history? Because he ran through a period of time when there was only 8 original weight division and he ran through the heavyweight division from 1960s to 1980s. As such, Ali is in no doubt the finest heavyweight ever.

Why else is he widely the best heavyweight ever? In his era, Ali defeated almost every known and respected heavyweight of that time. Ali fought during the time when being Heavyweight champ really did mean something. Opposition was strong and you always fought the best. Ali was dominant during the best time for Heavyweight boxing. So it's only natural for him to go down as the greatest of them all. Aside from being fighter of the years multiple times, he was also in some of the most entertaining and competitive bouts in boxing history.

Anything else of why is he considered the best heavyweight in history. It is said that Ali has the best heavyweight record and best heavyweight accomplishment and his record boasted Joe Louis who is ranked as the second greatest heavyweight of all time. Ali best opponents came from whole worthy hall of famers, world champions and including such high ranked contenders. Ali defeated Sonny Liston, George Foreman, Ken Norton, Archie Moore, Joe Frazier, Jerry Quarry, Larry Holmes, Ron Lyle, Earnie Shavers, Ernie Terrell and other such great contenders. Ali did faced the best heavyweight competition.

Another note of why is the best heavyweight in history. His skillset and according to some major experts, Ali was the most gifted heavyweight ever and was certainly the most talented and oh here’s a fact, he was the fastest heavyweight ever.

In conclusion, Ali is the king of heavyweight because he was the finest in his division, fought the best heavyweight competition, was the most gifted heavyweight fighter ever and certainly, he could do it all.

Ali is truly the greatest heavyweight of all time and his skillset, accomplishment, mentality, his record and his mindset will tell you everything period.

I AM THE KING OF THE WORLD!

Ali is the greatest heavyweight and one of the best pound for pound of all time bar none.

I need to get back being active again.

Related Links

Based solely on technique, what are the top 3 in heavyweight boxing history?
Who was a greater heavyweight boxer; Joe Louis or Muhammad Ali?
How many heavyweights today could Muhammad Ali have gone the distance with?
His skills be outdated today because of boxing evolution and modern training.

We know a prime Muhammad Ali matches well against anybody. But how does a 70s era Ali fare against the more modern super heavyweights (Lewis, the Klitschkos, Fury, AJ, Wilder) and why?

If Muhammad Ali competed today would he be one of the top 10 heavyweight boxer today? Since modern training (boxing evolution) has improved a lot since 1967.

Could Muhammad Ali beat even the weakest modern heavyweights today? Since every modern heavyweights refuse to have Ali's outdated skills in their arsenal, Ali's skills are outdated due to boxing evolution and modern training has improved a lot.

Who was the most overrated heavyweight boxer of all time?
Did Muhammad Ali really consider himself the greatest?
Could any heavyweight of today defeat Ali in his prime?
Apart from Muhammad Ali, is there any boxer in history who had a reasonable

When was Nigeria created, and why was the country given the name 'Nigeria'?

Yome Agu · Follow Thu

Modern Nigeria dates from 1914, when the British Protectorates of Northern and Southern Nigeria were joined. The country became independent on October 1, 1960

Niger and Nigeria get their names from the River Niger.

Origins:

Niger: African nation, named for the river Niger, mentioned by that name 1520s (Leo Africanus), speculated to be an alteration (by influence of Latin niger "black" but this was proven to be a misinterpretation) of a local Tuareg name, egereou n-igereouen, from egereou "big river, sea" + n-igereouen, plural of that word. Translated in Arabic as nahr al-anhur "river of rivers."

It was coined by British journalist Lady Flora Shaw (well kind of and at the same time not she just found out the name of the river and named the country after that adding an ia). Flora Shaw combined the words “Niger” and “Area” to form the name Nigeria.

The reason she was able to name Nigeria is because she got married to Lord Frederick Lugard, the person behind Nigeria’s amalgamation. He was the governor of both the Northern and Southern protectorates.

This is them.

What does a Lagos local know that most visitors don't?

Oluseyi Orlando Lives in Lagos, Nigeria 3y

Bargaining will be your greatest asset.
Lagos is really an amazing city

I can buy 3 pieces of this shirt for ₦1,500 each then sell it to Mr A for ₦2,000 then to Mr B for ₦5,000 and to Mr C for ₦15,000. There is usually no fixed price in most shops in Lagos, the price is usually determined by the bargaining force at both ends, you'll need to master this skill to avoid being cheated. One way to avoid this is to never let the seller know you're a foreigner this automatically takes you to being Mr C and if that's unavoidable due your skin colour, ethnicity or something else try acting like a typical lagosian by speaking pidgin or Yoruba or even dress like a Nigerian. Nigerians love when foreigners do this.

2. Using okada is a Traffic hack in Lagos.

Scenes like this are common in Lagos, so if you need to beat time to get somewhere and there's a traffic gridlock, lagosians know that commercial motorcycles are their best bet. Just make sure you use a helmet.

3. Lagos is not so dangerous as you think
It's like everyone thinks Lagos is very dangerous, maybe it's because of the kind of news they hear about Nigeria, alot of times I see a lot of Chinese, French and American expatriates being escorted by fully armed men in bullet proof vehicles , c'mon , no one is really going to shoot you or kidnap you, the probability of that happening is actually low, that's the truth, everyone is just busy trying to fend for themselves. The main problem is that our police are not the most efficient and reliable but they are trying, Lagos is just like any Megacity with a population of 20million+ So when next you visit Lagos try to be like Mark Zuckerberg, free yourself and enjoy the moment also be a bit careful

4. There are 2 sides of Lagos.

Take a look at this bridge, it's an iconic bridge in Lagos, it's the Third mainland bridge, the longest in west Africa about 11km in length. On one side we have the mainland on the other we have the island. These are 2 different parts of Lagos. About 80% of Lagosians live on the mainland while 20% live on the island. But 80% of visiting foreigners visit the island and 20% visit the mainland. Life is very different on both sides, The rich lagosians majorly live on the island and lekki while most other lagosians live on the mainland. The island is generally more developed than the mainland and more suitable for living because of it's much better infrastructures but it's better anyone visiting Lagos see both sides of Lagos before judging.

5. Lagos is Never dull

From the busy streets to the nightclubs to malls to bars to conservation centres to lounges and event centres Lagos is always bubbling, you can never get bored if you love fun

6. Lagos is the easiest place to make money in Africa.

Believe it or not, this is the truth.

The population is booming, The Economy is booming and the market is large. Lagos is a very good place to do business. There is a reason Aliko dangote and other Nigerian billionaires are based majorly in Lagos. Everyday, millionaires are made in Lagos. There are a lot of rich business people here that deserve to be on the Forbes's list but are ignored e.g Ronald chagoury and co. The only thing you need is a good market strategy and I can assure you that you'll make 5 times the Money you'll make in any other average African city. You're always welcome to invest here :)

Are Nigerian Igbos the most successful tribe in Africa?

They Lied, They Lie Lives in England (2001–present) 1y

Many of the rest of us stopped identifying ourselves by our tribes , we are aware of them , but we really don't wear it on our chests

I suppose Nigeria has over 200m people cant exactly identify as Christian /Muslim as that's a 50/50 as well

P.S I'm from the Ngoni tribe (Southern Africa) …. , Igbos don't know how to kill leopards and wear them the way we do so in that sense no Igbos don't want any of this smoke

Related Links

Where did the Igbo people of Nigeria come from?

Why do Nigerians love to identify with the ethnic tribe group? For example, Yoruba, Igbo, etc. They seem to be the only African country that does that.

Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?

Why are the Igbo people more successful than other tribes in Nigeria?

Are the Igbos of Nigeria Bantu?

Have The Igbos Always Been Intelligent and Creative?

Posted by Frank Abah

OUR ICONS

Meet Igbo Man, David Gittens, Who Designed & Built A Car Called 'Ikenga Gt' In 1967 In United Kingdom

Meet Igbo Man, David Gittens, Who Designed & Built A Car Called 'Ikenga Gt' In 1967 In United Kingdom

The ingenuity of Ndi Igbo and their contributions to the advancement of humanity has remained one of our major focuses here at 'Voice Of The Sun'. We take great pride in researching and teaching our family here of the great and noble achievements of their ancestors.

The story of David Gittens, a Brooklyn-born Igbo man, is one that speaks volumes of the contributions of Ndi Igbo in the automobile industry.

David Gittens was an artist and designer, and was an employee of Car and Driver magazine, as a staff photographer, from 1958 to 1964. After he got married in 1964, he and his wife moved to London. There he continued his career in photography and focused mainly on weddings and advertising. He would later advance his career and started to do transportation designing.

When he started, he ventured into some of the most complex designs at the time. He had a number of proposed projects, of which were a 'gas-powered single-seat city car, an electric city car, a Reliant-Based three-wheeled car, a small car based on Mini Moke Chassis, an expandable six-wheeled vehicle, and finally his high-performance mid-engined grand touring car which he later named the "Ikenga GT".

To achieve his goals, he bought a used chassis of the McLaren car model from Ken Sheppard. The limited production of his Ikenga GT was also to be run by Dheppard. When he got into the development phase, he contracted it to Charles Williams of William & Pritchard, which was a coachbuilding company. To finance the project, he got money through Copley's merchant Bank.

The name, Ikenga, which he chose for the car model is of Igbo origin. The Ikenga, to Ndi Igbo, represents accomplishment, success, achievement, strength, power, and justice. It is an embodiment of noble spirits, represented by a horned statue.

David Gittens completed the first version of the Ikenga GT in 1967, which he modeled on the MK1. He restyled the MK1 into the MKII the following year, with a classic leather interior, together with a complementary set of Gucci luggage. He also added some advanced lightning features to the new model.

Gettins's Ikenga GT started to draw the attention of the larger American community, and also the international community. It was first put on display at the Banking Hall at Harrods, during the Earls Court Motor Show, in 1968. The car was seen by 30,000 people at the Banking Hall. One of the spectators offered $53,000 for Gittens to sell the prototype. Also, a Saudi Prince commissioned a unique version of the Ikenga GT – it was to be called "Bird of Peace", at the cost of $35,000.

Gittens did not have the intention of producing his cars forever. He planned for the Ikenga GT to be a limited model, with a maximum of 100 to 150 cars, which were to be priced at £9000 or US$16,800 each.

To read the complete article, Visit Our Website Here => Meet Igbo Man, David Gittens, Who Designed & Built A Car Called 'Ikenga Gt' In 1967 In United Kingdom

Credit: Voice of the Sun

What are the Nigerian police like?

Osazua Iruedo #Endsarsmemorial Updated 2y

The Nigerian police is the principal law enforcement agency in Nigeria with a staff strength of about 350,000. Their uniforms are like this.

They are suppose to be our friend. But they are the exact opposite of that.like the bulky small kids who picks on their smaller colleagues, Nigerian police bully us.

They tell you police is your friend, but we know our friends wouldn't stand on the road looking for cheap ways to extort money from us. So the best thing to do is to avoid our “friends" in every way we can.

This is how you dodge getting involved with the Nigerian police even though you're not a criminal.

The more you try to avoid them,the more they find new ways to get you involved with them.

This is naija police when they catch you with an expired drivers license.

The way a Nigerian police looks at you if you are a young fine guy with beards and you drive a nice car.

To be on a safer side, it's advisable to move around with the reciept of your phone and even your birth certificate. Because they can ask you to show them anything.

They tell us bail is free. But the free has a fee.

They are like the friends you don't ever want to have anything to do with. They should be held accountable for destroying the meaning of friendship.

The Nigerian Dream: Is atheism prohibited by law in Nigeria? Can someone be executed for being an atheist in countries like Afghanistan, Iran, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Libya, and Yemen?

Answered by Boris Ezomo Oct 13

Atheism is not illegal in Nigeria. However, while we claim there is religious freedom, it is far from it.

In courts when been sworn in, you are asked if you are a Christian, Muslim, Pagan or Freethinker (Atheist) and given the Bible, Quran, a Charm or the Nigerian constitute to swear on.

BUT in Northern Nigeria where some states practice Sharia law. It may fall fowl of the Muslims. It is especially dangerous if you were a Muslim before. It is better to just keep shut about your loss of religion. As this maybe interpretation as blasphemy.

Mubarak Bala, an openly Atheist, made some unflattering posts on social media, while residing in a Northern Sharia state (Kano). He got 24 years in prison.

He pleaded guilty to all charges and asked for leniency. Guess he was escaping the faith of Deborah Samuel, a Christian that was stabbed and burned by her fellow students in the state of Sokoto. Claiming she blasphemed.

So my advice is to not go to states like those.

In the Christian south, if you announce that you are Atheist, you will get a faith worse then up north. Armies of pastors trying to convert you, and save your soul.

So my advice, your beliefs are no one's business. So do not make it theirs.

Related Links

Why is it that mostly in Africa, when given food with meat, they prefer to eat the food first before eating the meat?

What are the introductory objectives of a microfinance bank?

What are the influences of Fela Kuti on Afrobeats?

Why is African politics so complicated?

Many communities in Africa are faced with several challenges, as a pragmatic youth, what solution have you introduced to help your local community?

Are there real witches in Nigeria?

Good morning, does anyone know a Nigerian mechanical engineer youth interested in teaching and impacting knowledge (preferably up to age 25)?

Which media are the most credible in Nigeria when it comes to politics, cultural conflicts and the fight for law and order and against corruption?

Living in Nigeria, what do you think of the bulky three pin plug used for all your electronics and appliances?

How can I get renewable energy companies that are looking for a last mile distributor in Nigeria to distribute their solar power system to reduce poverty and increase access to clean energy?

What powers did Nnamdi Azikiwe have as President of Nigeria? Were they merely ceremonial as often touted or just not as comprehensive as modern Presidents of Nigeria have?

How can someone define a Nigerian society with references to a given society's; social life, common social behaviour, dress code and common food?

Do you think that Zimbabwe will try and join the Commonwealth again anytime soon considering how downhill the country has gone?

Is African land good for farming?

How can Nigeria, my country, be the richest in the world by 2030?

World Historical Events: ÀARẸ KURUMI OF IJAIYE. THE YORUBA WARRIOR WHO LOST HIS FIVE SONS IN ONE DAY

Posted by OWODEVWO OGHENEJIRO 23h

The story of Kurunmi is one that draws tears from the eyes of people who feel pity for a man who stood firm for tradition.

There was a time in the history of Yoruba where the heir to the throne is killed whenever the king dies. This tradition came about because it was discovered that a lot of princes killed their fathers so they could ascend the throne and become king instead.

It was believed that if the heirs were killed alongside their fathers, kings would live longer on the throne.

During this period, Alaafin Atiba was the paramount ruler of the Oyo empire, and he appointed Kurunmi, the son of Esiele as the Aare-ona-Kakanfo (the generalissimo of the whole Yoruba warriors).

As it was with tradition, a king and an Aare-ona-Kakanfo cannot stay in the same town because their wield similar powers, so Kurunmi was assigned to Ijaiye, where he was given the power to lord over.

One day, Alaafin Atiba summoned the kings and lords of the neighboring towns and told them he wished to change tradition. Present at the meeting were kings like the Timi of Ede, Balogun Ibikunle of Ibadan, and Kurunmi himself.

When they were seated, Atiba came down from his throne and held the sword of Ogun (the Yoruba god of iron) in his right hand, and the bolt of Sango (the Yoruba god of lightning and thunder) in his left. He charged the royalties present to swear by the sword and bolt that after his death, his son Aremo Adelu will be made king after his demise.

Kurunmi disagreed immediately, and he reminded Alaafin Atiba that according to the tradition, the moment Atiba does, his son Adelu must follow suit. Other royalties tried to persuade Kurunmi, but he was adamant. When he couldn't convince them, he walked out in anger and headed for Ijaiye.

The other kings and chiefs went home to their people to inform them of the latest developments. When Balogun Ibikunle of Ibadan told his chiefs the news, one of the chiefs Basorun Ogunmola took the matter up and suggested they wage war against Kurunmi.

Kurunmi had once captured Ogunmola who had a secret affair with his wife. He captured him, tied him to a stake like a goat and fed him ashes as food. As a form of revenge, Ogunmola proposed war against Kurunmi.

Alaafin Atiba sent emissaries to Kurunmi to change his mind, but he remained adamant, and when Alaafin Atiba saw that he would not change his mind, he sent two calabash bowls to Kurunmi. One of the calabashes contained an effigy of a pair of twins (Yoruba symbol of peace), while the other calabash contained gunpowder (Yoruba symbol of war).

Kurunmi immediately chose war and sent the emissaries back to Atiba. Immediately, Kurunmi summoned his chief warrior Balogun Ogunkoroju and told him to prepare for war.

As part of the preparations for war, Kurunmi consulted the oracle, and the oracle warned him not to go to war with Ibadan because he would lose the war. Kurunmi was not going to have any of it, and he pestered the oracle to tell him what to do to win the war.

The oracle then told Kurunmi that in order for him not to lose the war, he must not cross the River Ose, which was the boundary between Ijaiye and Ibadan. Kurunmi agreed, and went ahead to plan for the war against Ibadan.

While Kurunmi was making preparations, the Ibadan warriors, led by Ogunmola went to meet the people of Ęgba who were said to possess very powerful charms.

The Ęgba people then prepared a potent charm called Eedi (a charm that causes someone or a group of people to ignore warnings or dare something that will harm them). The Eedi was set out to the River Ose so that the Ijaiye warriors will be tempted to cross the river.

When the war came, Kurunmi sent his five sons to war to fight the Ibadan people. During the face-off, Ijaiye warriors soundly defeated the Ibadan warriors, and the remaining Ibadan warriors fled back, crossing the River Ose.

Unfortunately for Kurunmi, his warriors fell to the potency of the Eedi, and they crossed the River Ose,..... continue reading visit link https://worldhistoricalevent.blogspot.com/2022/10/aare-kurumi-of-ijaiye-yoruba-warrior.html?m=1

Africa In Real Time: Animals In The Wild

Atagwung Otugot Unyene

HSE SUPERVISOR at J&P Ogbilikana Services (2020–present) Oct 31

Elephant spotted in Andoni Local government area of Rivers state Nigeria walking around. Thought Elephants have gone into extinction in this region. Guys what do you have to say?

What are some interesting or surprising facts about Nigeria?

Silas O. Abayomi 35 years of practicing journalist, editor, and proofreader. Updated 2y

There are many interesting things about Nigeria, which makes it a unique country on the continent of Africa.

Nigeria is the most populous black country on the earth. With a population of about 200 million people, one or two out of every five black people is or [are] Nigerians.

Two, Nigeria president is the most powerful president in the world; with a military-imposed constitution without citizens participation, a constitution in a military style top-to-bottom control was foisted on Nigerians, making the occupant of the highest seat being the most powerful. He controls executive, he has much influence over judiciary, and he teleguide legislature, especially, where his party has majority. He controls all the three arms of the military: Army, Air Force, and Navy. He has Police Force under his grip control; all intelligence community comes under his control through the Office of National Security Adviser. He is the overseer of Nigeria economy through the principal agencies, he has unlimited control over through appointment of the principal heads: the Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN); the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC); Nigeria Maritimes Authority (NMA); Nigeria Ports Authority (NPA). With or without appropriations, Nigeria president, sometimes or unilaterally release funds or money.

Nigeria has the highest number of constitutions ever written in Africa. Since 1922, Nigeria has had more than ten different constitutions; unfortunately, most of these documents remain unworkable pieces of rules. In 1922, Nigeria had one Constitution; then in 1946; 1951 constitution, 1954 constitution, 1957/58 constitutional conference; 1960 constitution; the 1963 constitution; 1979 constitution; 1989 constitution; 1991 constitution; 1996 constitution; and the 1999 constitution, the worst political document in the history of Nigeria, which stole everything from owners, place the booty in the hands of elite and their proxies.

In Nigeria, you may have an army officer of a General rank or equivalent in Air Force or Navy, but has never gone to war. Rank received on ethic, tribal, religious platforms.

Nigeria has one of the best geographical features in Africa. It parades all vegetation from coastal, rainforest, mangrove, savannah, semi arid and arid; this unique feature makes the production of cash and food crops continous year round.

Nigeria is a home to world religions. It has no Vatican, no Mecca or Medina; no Jerusalem; still, carry religion upon itself than nations or people that introduced these tools of divisions and mind control measures. Fraternize with religions, but far from basic, common, and demands of real or true religion. About 90% are Christians and Muslims; still, Nigeria has one of the African worst sectarian violence. Distrust between the major religions has been the drawback to its greatness.

Nigeria has one of the brightest people around the world. Her citizens living inNorth America, Europe, Asia and Australia are among the best in their careers and professions.

Nigeria has the highest number of ethnic nationalities in Africa; between 1000 and 1500 ethnic nationalities are in Nigeria; however, the largest are: Yoruba in the West; Hausa, Fulani, Kanuri in the North; Igbo in the East. Other ethnic nationalities are: Ijaw, Edo, Itshekiri, Urhobo, Ibibio, Efik, Anang, Ikwerre in the south. In the north are Ebira, Beron, Tiv, Jukun, Gbayi, and many more. These are unknown nationalities, because the main ethnic groups dwarf them. Nigeria is the largest oil producing country in Africa, and eleventh in the world. It has 37.2 billion barrels of proven oil reserves, this supply may last another forty-five years. Her proven gas reserve is 202 trillion cubic feet, plus about 600 trillion cubic feet of unproven gas reserve.

Two great rivers-Niger and Benue complement Nigeria landscape; and these two rivers meet at Lokoja, the Kogi State capital.

Nigerians are very resilient, strong, tough, hardy, and quick to recover; in fact, these qualities have continuously made Nigeria political elite shortchanged their own, Nigerians won’t ask questions; rather struggle to sustain life for themselves. People care less about social responsibility; and government continues to use the social and political loopholes to hold their own down. Where government fails, it never accept responsibility; where government should be held accountable, it gives reasons, why it shouldn't be. Where government lack moral, social and political control, it goes ahead.

Nigerians are kind and benevolent at heart. Warm-hearted, tolerant, benign.

Another thing about Nigeria is the preeminent place of football. Nothing promotes unity and friendship in Nigeria than football. In fact, most Nigerians believe that the only god left in Nigeria is that of football.

The place of Pigin English. Pigin English is the less standardized English without rigors or rules, which both educated and non educated Nigerians speak with clear understanding. At times, Pigin English may be an amalgam of English Language with regional languages or/and dialects or a recalibrated English; very simple, easy to say, easy to understand. Everyone speaks it; everyone understands it; everyone enjoys it. Even foreigners who live in Nigeria speak it and communicate with it.

Nigeria has over one thousand languages and dialects spoken between few thousand to millions.

Another interesting thing about Nigeria is, an average Nigeria speak more than one language. Nigeria Language structure follows three different categories: the national language (which is English Language); the regional languages which are (Yoruba, Igbo, and Hausa); then, community dialects. A lot of Nigerians speak all of these languages, while majority may speak two or more.

ETHNIC GROUPS IN NIGERIA

bantu
photos

ToLet.com.ng

BellaNaija
BellaNaija

Related: What are some interesting or surprising facts about Nigeria?

Victor Dirikebamor Storyteller 2y

Others have said a lot already but this are three areas worth talking about still:

Afrobeats

Do you want to be romanced into dancing at a time you are not even in the mood for it? That's Nigeria afro-beats for you.

When you hear the sound, you can't help but start shaking your legs, then your head and hands, to the extent you can't help but stand and wiggle, and just when you thought the song is coming to an end, that the excitement is wearing off… like a shot of crack it strikes you back on with another amazing beat and lyrics... Words so unique and perfect, so similar with varied meaning which comes together to make one big meaning.

Rhythm is the soul of Naija afro beats, rhythm is also the soul of life, Nigerians are undisputed champions of music in Africa and its fame is travelling fast across African shores even to the seven seas.

Acclaimed authors

"The prison walls fell down," that's what Nelson Mandela said when he read "things fall apart."

Making profound meaning by adding two or few words is part of many Nigerians who never speak without a parable.

Literally giants using words to describe a scene making it look like a fascinating movie to readers with profound lessons, sadness and excitement are the expertise of many Nigerians.

Little wonder Wole Soyinka became the first African to be awarded the Nobel prize for literature in 1986 and Ben Okri's "The Famished Road" won the coveted Man Booker Prize in 1991 and Chinua Achebe, whose debut novel, "Things Fall Apart" has become a classic of post-colonial literature selling more than 20 million copies since its publication in 1958. It has also been translated into 57 languages.

Population

It will be difficult for the world to ignore Nigeria because we have the numbers here for the good and bad.

Our dizzying population is almost a thing to fear.

Numbers mean a lot here:

States with high population get more from the federal government... The only source of funding for state governments and as such you're in dangerous territory when you talk about most populated states and religion in Nigeria, every side once to be number one.

I have also heard of state governments encouraging their citizens to misbehave and produce more kids just to have a higher population in the future which could automatically translate to more budget allocation... Talk about crazy.

By 2047 Nigeria will have overtaken the US to become the world's third-largest nation with 387 million people, according to UN projections.

It is also a very young nation with more than 40% of the population of 196 million under the age of 14. And young people are set to play a huge role in government and nation-building or so i like to think.

Despite the chaos, a handshake is not too much for any Nigerian, its not easy.

Related Links

What are some unknown facts about Nigeria?

What is it that surprised you about Africa?

What facts are unique from Nigeria?

What are the biggest misconceptions about Nigeria?

What are remarkable facts about Nigeria?

What are the most disturbing facts about Nigeria that most people do not Facts About Nigeria: With the way President Buhari of Nigeria is borrowing money from China, don't you think that every Nigerian citizen is owing China?

Jen Ho Retired State Registered Nurse with 37 years of experience.Oct 19

Seriously are you telling me that Nigeria is so stupid as to borrow money from others with their eyes closed? No one coerced them into a trade Aggreement. Understand this, the Nigeria leaders themselves did so willingly and they had nothing but praise for China ever since.
Now regarding the second part of your question , the ‘owing factor of the Nigerians' , this question is up to the Nigerian Government to decide not you or me.

Would you rather the Nigerians never seek any help to improve their standard of living but stay in their time warp of perpetual poverty ?

How much is Nigeria owing World Bank?

The financial statements of the World Bank for fiscal year 2022 show that Nigeria owes the lending institution $13.04bn as of June 30, 2022. 14 Aug 2022 https://punchng.com › nigerias-debt...

Nigeria's debt to World Bank rises by $660m

.....

How Much Loan has Nigeria Taken from China? As at March 31, 2020, the Total Borrowing by Nigeria from China was USD3. 121 billion (₦1,126.68 billion at USD/₦361). This amount represents only 3.94% of Nigeria's Total Public Debt of USD79.

https://www.dmo.gov.ng › facts-ab...

FACTS ABOUT CHINESE LOANS TO NIGERIA

About featured snippets Feedback

Related Links

Should China's investments in Nigeria be suspect or trusted? Could the Chinese investments be similar to the IMF structural adjustment plans, a wolf in sheep's clothing? How can they make sure the country is not being taken advantage of?

China has been lending a lot of money to Nigeria recently. And there have been this rumor that Nigeria may lose her sovereignty to China if she couldn't pay up her debts. Do you actually think Nigeria sovereignty could be lost to China?

What do you think of the retaliation from Nigerians burning down a Chinese factory? How will this affect Chinese investment in Nigeria?

Will President Buhari and the present senate president ever be questioned on what they used the money they borrowed from China for?

Is Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari truly cloned?

What will you do, as a Nigerian, if president Mohammadu Buhari wins the

NIGERIAN
Posted by Frank Abah 18h

Peter Obi is not a saint. Neither is he 100 percent perfect. But with the present situation of Nigeria. Peter Obi is the messiah-Nollywood actor Nse Etim-Ikpe

News Nigeria: "I'm where I am today because of luck"— Tony Elumelu

Posted by Frank Abah 1h

A lot of people misunderstood Billionaire Tony Elumelu's tweets. This is because we don't read between the lines - we read literal meaning into deep thoughts, another reason why we got confused with the holy books.

Mr. Tony's tweets are Juxtapositions. Please google the word Juxtaposition.

When two contrasting words are placed together to subtly express their difference, it is called Juxtaposition. Intelligent writers use skills like Juxtaposition and Sarcasm to communicate sensitive information.

Now Re-read what he wrote as I inject explanations in brackets: "I am where I am today because of luck. Let me be clear: Luck is important, but it is not a substitute for hard work or labor. Luck is a part of the cocktail that you need for success.

“There are two ingredients for luck -hard work and passion. The more work you put into something and the more passion you apply, the “luckier” you will find yourself. You have to work hard, and be passionate and committed about what you do, to be successful and make your own luck. (Read this paragraph again. According to the dictionary, luck means success Achieved through chance with "NO EFFORTS" by you. So why did Mr. Tony insert HARD WORK AND PASSION into Luck? The answer is that Mr. Tony's intention is to inspire hardwork but he knows that Nigerians cannot swallow the bitter pill if he doesn't coat it with what they like the most - Luck or Grace. So because he didn't want to sound religious, he avoided the use of grace and used luck to communicate the need for hardwork and passion.)

Here's the last part of his tweet: “Hardwork and passion are within your power and control, and you should apply them to earn your own luck and to help us foster a better and more prosperous world."

(If you read the last part deeply, you will discover that he is trying to engineer your mind to take CONTROL of your own success and EARN your own 'luck'. If you can earn luck, then it is no longer luck.

Comprehension is key.

When you read a post made by a deep person, please don't read literal meanings into it. If you have been here for sometime, you will understand that I attack sensitive topics with a touch of sarcasm - and this diarms those who would have defended their sentiments and achieved quick results.

Imagine if Mr. Tony Elumelu had been straightforward and said "I am where I am today because of hard work and passion". Nigerians would call him boastful, arrogant and godless. But he subtly said the same thing but with a cocktail of juxtaposition and irony.

My name is Charles Awuzie and I am a student of written words.

Related Links

What's the world's richest ethnic group?

Which ethnic group in Nigeria is more educated?

Are the Igbos actually the wealthiest ethnic group in Nigeria or is that just a misconception?

How rich is Nigeria in Africa?

Is "American" a real ethnic group?

What is the richest tribe in Nigeria?

What is the richest ethnic group in Canada on average?

Which state has the highest ethnic group in Nigeria?

Why do some ethnic groups have bigger lips than other ethnic groups? What determines lip size?

Which ethnic group is leaving Nigeria the most for better economic fortunes?

What is the wealthiest ethnic group in Nigeria?

MUSIAU

Historian (2021–present) Sat

The Ibos are the wealthiest ethnic group in Nigeria as their culture praises Education and Hard Work. The Rise of the Ibos is remarkable as in the span of Hundred Years they came from being mostly Illiterate Tribal Peoples hiding from the Slave Traders in Northern Nigeria to then transition to an Urban well-functioning Society to then surpassing their Yoruba and Hausa neighbors to become one of the economic centers of Nigeria with them being the one of the merchant classes to several places in the Coast of Africa and also sending their top peoples to be educated in countries like the United States.

Related Links

What's the world's richest ethnic group?

Which ethnic group in Nigeria is more educated?

Are the Igbos actually the wealthiest ethnic group in Nigeria or is that just a misconception?

How rich is Nigeria in Africa?

Is "American" a real ethnic group?

What is the richest tribe in Nigeria?

What is the richest ethnic group in Canada on average?

Which state has the highest ethnic group in Nigeria?

Why do some ethnic groups have bigger lips than other ethnic groups? What determines lip size?

Which ethnic group is leaving Nigeria the most for better economic fortunes?

NIGERIA: Why are people selling off their properties to run away/relocate from Nigeria?

Answered by Winter SagTurquoise Jan 22

People are selling their properties in Nigeria to relocate to other countries in order to raise the resettlement funds they will need in the new country during the first few months of landing. It's a normal move to make when planning to relocate as it is useless keeping property in the country one is leaving especially if there are no plans to return. In addition, they may also be of the mindset that even if they do return, they would have made more money in the new country to fund purchase of better assets when they return to their homeland.

Related: Why are people selling off their properties to run away/relocate from Nigeria?

Udeh

Content Creator at Choconaija.com.ng (2020–present) Jan 15

Nigeria is a beautiful country with beautiful people. Our weather is topnotch, we are just pleading the ozone layer to take it easy on us

What about our food?

You can just stay long abroad without looking for where to get Nigeria food

What about cruise?

We are born for cruise, we catch cruise for a living, like I'm even catching cruise now

What about reality?

Let's face reality, people are running away because of bad governance, we have everything good but bad leadership spoils it all.

We call it 'Jakpa' people jakpa for good education

Security

Good pay

Enabling environment

Jakpa is in the mind of every Nigerian because it's even look like we all have given up, we the youth self don't have one voice,

Another eight years is about to start and we are so reluctant, I hope one day we all will realize that their a place called home, and she is crying for reconstruction.

But at the mean time, let focus on jakpa

Related Links

How do you design a physical questionnaire given that the subject matter of your research is how Nigerians feel about the naira redesigned?

How can I change my full name in my birth certificate and also in all my school certificates in Nigeria?

Where have you been to in Nigeria? What African Nigerian food have you tasted and was overwhelmed by how good and delicious it was?

Where can I get a dough sheeter in Nigeria for free for a startup bread bakery?

Could you live as an outlaw cowboy in Africa?

Does Facebook pay Nigerians?

What will happen to your dorm account in Nigeria if you transferred up to $5,000 from Bet365?

Without the use of the English language, will Nigeria as a country cease to exist? If yes, why?

What is the upcoming Nigeria 2023 election?

Is anyone interested in investing in an online Raffle Draw company in Nigeria? We are a registered company and fully permitted to operate in the Nigerian gaming market.

What are the teachers' contribution in mathematics failures among Nigerian secondary schools?

Why is Nigeria remaining poor, uneducated, and chaotic? Is President Buhari responsible for Nigeria's underdevelopment and instability?

Is there any delay for a January 31st flight from the USA to Nigeria flight because of a plane crash?

How many African fairy tales or epics do you know of? In addition to Mufaro's Beautiful Daughters (Called the African Cinderella) or Sundiata (Arguably the African King Arthur)?

Is anyone from Nigeria going to TAMUC this fall of 2023?

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location

On the southern coast of West Africa.

Official title of the state
The Federal Republic of Nigeria: is a federal constitutional republic comprising of 36 states including Abuja, the Federal Capital Territory (FCT).

Flag description:

Three equal vertical bands of green (hoist side), white, and green; the color green represents the forests and abundant natural wealth of the country, white stands for peace and unity.

Neighbors

Benin on W., Niger on N., Chad, Cameroon on E. Land boundaries; total 4,047 km. Border countries; Benin 773 km, Cameroon 1690 km, Chad 87 km, Niger 1497 km.

Founder of The Nation
Sir Namdi Azikiwe

Local divisions

36 States, 1 Federal Capital Territory (FCT) of Abuja

Government type - Republic - Federal parliamentary

Legislation chamber - Bicameral Parliament

Form of State - Federal Republic

Chief of State is the President who is elected every 4 years.

The President is eligible for a second term.

A Federal republic with two legislative bodies.

The Senate 109 seats, members are comprised of the 36 federal states to serve for four-year terms, and the House of Representatives 360 seats, members elected by popular vote to serve for four- year terms.

Executive branch

Chief of State (President), Head of Government (President), Cabinet: Federal Executive Council. The president is both the chief of State and head of Government. Presiden elected by popular vote to serve for four-year term, eligible for a second term.

Former Rulers

1960 – 1966 Al-Hadji Sir Abubakar Tafawa Balewa – Head of Government
1963 – 1966 Sir Nnamdi Azikiwe – Head of State

1966 - Majour-General Johnson Oguiyi-Ironsi – Brief Military head of state (193 days in office)

1966 - 1975 Majour-General Yakubu Gowon – Military head of state

1975 – 1976 Brigadier General Murthala Mohammed – Military head of state

1976 – 1979 Lt. General Olusegun Obasanjo – Militay head of state

1979 – 1983 Al-Hadji Shehu Shagari – Civilian president

1983 –1985 Majour-General Muhammadu Buhari – Military head of state and chief of the Nigerian Armed Forces, head of the Supreme Military Council (SMC)

1985 – 1993 General Ibrahim Badamasi Babangida shortly known as IBB – Military head of state

1993 - Mr. Ernest Shonekan – Civilian Interim President

1993 – 1998 Lt. General Sanni Abacha – Military head of state

1998 – 1999 Brigadier General Abdulsalami Abubakar – Military head of state.

1999 – 2007 Mr. Olusegun Obasanjo – took office as Civilian president

2007 – 2010 Mr. Umaru Yar'Adua – President (deceased)

2010 - Goodluck Emele Jonathan – President

2015 – Present Muhammadu Buhari - took office as civilian President-elect

Judicial chamber

Supreme Court & Federal court of Appeal:-, secular judicial chambers. Islamic law (implemented in some 12 states) & traditional law.

Capital city

Abuja (Officially) Federal Capital Territory (FCT)

Altitude 371m

Geographic coordinates - 9.05N , 7.32E.
A newly built city at the geographical centre of Nigeria, It is located in the centre of Nigeria in the Federal Capital Territory (FCT), was built mainly to replace Lagos as the federal capital in 1982, becomes the country's political capital commenced on the 12th of December 1991, replacing Lagos, the former capital of Nigeria.

Lagos (Economic capital) Laltitude 7 mtrs/23 ft.

Geographic coordinates - 6.27N , 3.23E.

It was named after Lagos of Portugal, a fishing port and a resort town on the Algarve coast of southern Portugal at the mouth of the River Alvor, after the portuguese first explored the site area. Yoruba meaning for "overseas" or "lakes", formerly the capital of Nigeria, Lagos founded as a village in 1472, declared as capital in 1914, it was a Yoruba settlement of Awori people initially called Eko, the Yorubas still use the name Eko when they speak of Lagos. It was l capital of Nigeria from 1960 to till the designation of a new federal capital at Abuja in 1982. Its overcrowded slums contrast with modern developments and it's traffic congestion is notorious. It has many light industries and craft products.

By 2015, Lagos will be the third mega city in the world after the Japan's Tokyo and India's Mumbai. It's current population is just more than 21 milion and grown at 3% per-year.

Names of main towns

Lagos (Economic capital), Ibadan, Kano, Kaduna, port-Harcourt, Enugu, Benin city.

Date of independence

1st October, 1960.

Religions (Major)

Muslim 50 % (mostly in North), Christians 35% (mostly in South & East), Indigenous eliefs 15%.

Main spoken language

English (official), Hausa, Yoruba, Igbo, Edo, Ijaw, Kanuri, Ibibio, Tiv, various tribal languages.

Currency unit

Niara (NGN) =100 Kobo.

Area in Km2

923,768.00

Country area comparison in Africa

14 out of 55 states.

Demographic terms ;-

Average annual population growth rate 1.966 %

Birth rate 36.07 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 16.31 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 47.24 years
Male 49.46 years ; Female 48.08 years;

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male:20, Female: 36

Average per capita income

USD 2, 500

Population density

164.8/km2

Urban population (%)

50

Contributor groups (%)

Farming, Fishing: 17, Industry: 53, Social service:

30 Main Export Items

Mfrd goods, petroleum-products, cocoa, rubber, timber.

Economy is based on

Oil refinery & Agriculture.

Climate

Equatorial in south; Tropical in center; Arid in north; Long wet season in the south, particularly the southeast and only a short wet season in the north.

Extremes;-

Lowest point; The Atlantic coast 0 mtr.

Highest point; Chappal waddi 2,419 mtrs.

Weather of the economic Capital (Lagos) average annual temperature 26.60c.

Altitude
7 mtrs/23 ft

Hottest Month
March 26-32oc.

Coldest Month
August 23-28oc.

Driest Month
December 25mm average Rf.

Wettest Month June 460mm average Rf.

Abuja Federal Capital Territory (FCT) : two and half times less the size of Lagos, the former capital of Nigeria. Two distinct seasons namely, the rainy season, begins around March and runs through October and the dry season which begins from October and ends in March. Rainy season is July to September.

Measures

Metric system.

Time zone

1 hour ahead of GMT/UTC

Public holiday

1st January (New year), 1 October (independence Day), December 25, 26 (christmas), Easter (variable), All Muslim holidays.

Ethnic-groups:

There are over 250 ethnic-tribes in Nigeria. Major ethnic groups:- Hausa-Fulani 29 %, Yoruba 21 %, Igbo 18 %, Ijaw 10%, Kanuri 4 %, Ibibio 3.5 %, Tiv 2.5 %, others 12 %.

Topography & Environmental concern

4 EW regions divide Nigeria a coastal mangrove swamp 10 to 60 miles wide a tropical rainforest 50 to 10 miles wide a plateau of savannah and open woodland and semi-desert in the N. Southern lowlands merge into central hills and plateaus. Environment: soil degradation; rapid deforestation; urban air and water pollution; desertification; oil pollution - water, air, and soil; has suffered serious damage from oil spills; loss of arable land; rapid urbanization.

Economy Overview:

Industry

Petroleum crude (95% of export), food processing, vehicles-assembly and other equipments, coal, tin, columbite, rubber products, wood working, hides & skines, textiles, cement and other construction materials, food products, leather-wears, chemicals, fertilizer, printing, ceramics, steel.

Chief crops

Cocoa (main export crop), tobacco, cotton, peanuts, palm product, corn, rice, sorghum, millet, cassava, yams, rubber trees, timber : cattle, sheep, goats, pigs, fish.

Natural resources

Petroleum, Natural gas, Coal, Iron ore, Columbium, Tin, Limestone, Niobium, Lead, Zinc, Arable land.

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 33

Grassland: 44

Forest woods: 12

Other: 11

Marine:

Coastline; 853 km.

Commercial Sea ports:-

Lagos, port-Harcourt, Calabar, Wari

Development prospect;-

Significant economic growth is at last being seen in non-oil GDP. Deregulating the oil and gas sector to encourage foreign investment is central to the plan, but government will struggle to persuade trade unionists and oppositionists that its "social safety nets" will cushion poor Nigerians from the inflationary effects. There will be more complex political ructions over the Petroleum Industry Bill, which could finally be passed in 2012.

The Petroleum Industry Bill: Petroleum Industry Bill (PIB) will decide the health of Nigeria's oil and gas sector for the foreseeable future. A core reform, it should bring all parts of the sector under one act, creating consolidation and clarity. But the recent turnover in members of the House of Representatives and Senate may mean that the PIB has to go back to square one.

In essence, the bill seeks to create a national oil company comparable to Brazil's Petrobras or Malaysia's Petronas, able to raise its own financing. But until it is passed into law, several multibillion-dollar investment decisions will remain stalled, waiting on the regulatory framework, and this amounts to a massive opportunity cost for Nigeria.

The PIB has faced great resistance from international oil companies whose resolute lobbying has threatened some innovative parts of the bill. In the meantime, some local companies – such as Oando, Brittania U and Afren – are showing a great deal more initiative than before, expanding into the region and serving the local market better. This is perhaps a result of the Nigerian local content bill signed into law in 2010 – a marker of what decent legislation can achieve when matched to Nigeria's potential.

A recent improvement in power delivery is welcome but barely touches the problem. The privatisation programme may help: six power plants and 11 distribution companies are supposed to be sold off by the first quarter of 2012 but government targets of 15,000MW generation by 2015 are no doubt optimistic. Power minister Barth Nnaji said in November that meeting the government's target would need $50billion of fresh investment. Foreign companies are attracted to the fast-moving consumer-goods segment. Brewers are expanding operations, Nestlé has completed two factories and Unilever is gearing up again. Local champions such as Dangote and Flour Mills will thrive, especially with recent legislation rewarding Nigerian companies with local manufacturing facilities. Service-sector industries are flourishing, with telecoms companies making a great deal of the running.

The IMF has lowered its earlier forecasts of overall economic growth to 6.9% for 2011 and 6.6% for 2012 but there is optimism that, despite the substantial influence of the oil sector, a significant degree of growth is at last being seen in non-oil GDP and this trend should continue once the stumbling blocks to infrastructure investment are removed.

What is winter like in Lagos, Nigeria?

Emmaid Prex

Lives in Lagos, Nigeria (2014–present)2y

Nigeria like many other Tropical Africans countries experiences just two (2) seasons and winter is not one of them.

Our seasons are the Dry and Rainy seasons.

During the Dry season, we experience harmattan. A period when the north East trade wind blows in from the Sahara desert. It is characterized by very cold dry and dusty winds. Most vegetations like Grasses and shrubs may dry up due to the poor moisture in the soil caused by the drought and Also in preparation for the rainy season.

I hope this answers your questions.

Related Answer:

Ogie Eboigbe

, lives in Lagos, Nigeria
Answered Oct 1, 2019

There's no winter in Lagos Nigeria. We have the rainy and dry seasons. During part of the dry season from December to January, there could be the cold and dusty period called the Harmattan. It will be sunny and dry during the day but cold at night. The Harmattan winds from the north brings with it dusty haze which can affect flights postponement. The rainy season used to be between May, June and July with a break in August to resume again in September. But with the global warming and industrialisation, all these timings have been affected and turned upside down.

What are some rules of living in Lagos, Nigeria?

, lives in Lagos, Nigeria (1975-present)

1. Never date a girl that is so popular in the crib to the extent that some area boys are also showing interest, you don't wanna be used as a scapegoat.
2. Never board a bus that is full of male passengers, not registered and also not loading from a designated bus stop or park. There is a high probability that you just entered ONE CHANCE!
3. Never wear a combination of complete yellow or black and also show some cult signs around a university campus in Lagos if you are not a cult member!
4. The best way to beat Lagos traffic is by using Okada (commercial or private motorcycle). You should also learn to leave your house very early in the morning and enter late at night, these are the best time to avoid a traffic jam!
5. It is very easy for the police officers in Lagos to tag you with any sort of crime, everything is a crime in Lagos. In fact, kissing your girlfriend in the public is a crime, avoid an argument with police officers and save yourself from stress by always having a valid ID card on you!
6. At all cost, you want to avoid interfering or looking, anytime you see strangers fighting! You don't want to be part of that jungle justice.
7. Be polite and very open-minded.
8. If you must use waterways transportation, consider buying your own personal life jacket.
9. Avoid street transactions at places like Lagos island, computer village, Sabo-Yaba. Go into their shops and if necessary, collect the receipt.
10. Don't misbehave in the public because some jobless people will just video you and upload it on Instagram! Enjoy !!
11. If you are a foreigner in Lagos, You might want to consider getting a driver to drive you around the town. Driving yourself gives a high probability of your involvement in a car accident. The reason is that Lagosians don't know road signs and drive in a very crazy manner!
12. Having tattoos and piercing in Lagos subject you automatically to Police harassment. Nigeria Police would assume that you are a criminal.

ONE CHANCE: This is part of the criminal activities that occur between public transporters and passengers. The driver would pretend as if the transportation is genuine and will kidnap passengers in order to rob them of their personal belongings, rape or both child and adult abductions. They usually do not depart from designated bus stations because of their evil acts, their fares are usually cheaper. Lagosians tagged this act "One Chance" but the standard word should be " Commercial bus robbers"

footnotes: 'One Chance' drivers' new methods to trap, rape, kidnap passengers

Police nab 11 One-Chance specialists in Lagos - Vanguard News Nigeria

Related Links

Has it ever snowed in Nigeria?

Which country in Africa does snow fall in?

Has it ever snowed in history in Jos Plateau in North Nigeria?

How would you describe the winter weather in Lagos, Nigeria?

Why doesn't it snow in Africa?

Why doesn'

What is winter like in Lagos, Nigeria?

Emmaid Prex

Lives in Lagos, Nigeria (2014–present)2y

Nigeria like many other Tropical Africans countries experiences just two (2) seasons and winter is not one of them.

Our seasons are the Dry and Rainy seasons.

During the Dry season, we experience harmattan. A period when the north East trade wind blows in from the Sahara desert. It is characterized by very cold dry and dusty winds. Most vegetations like Grasses and shrubs may dry up due to the poor moisture in the soil caused by the drought and Also in preparation for the rainy season.

I hope this answers your questions.

Related Answer:

Ogie Eboigbe

, lives in Lagos, Nigeria
Answered Oct 1, 2019

There's no winter in Lagos Nigeria. We have the rainy and dry seasons. During part of the dry season from December to January, there could be the cold and dusty period called the Harmattan. It will be sunny and dry during the day but cold at night. The Harmattan winds from the north brings with it dusty haze which can affect flights postponement. The rainy season used to be between May, June and July with a break in August to resume again in September. But with the global warming and industrialisation, all these timings have been affected and turned upside down.

What are some rules of living in Lagos, Nigeria?

, lives in Lagos, Nigeria (1975-present)

1. Never date a girl that is so popular in the crib to the extent that some area boys are also showing interest, you don't wanna be used as a scapegoat.
2. Never board a bus that is full of male passengers, not registered and also not loading from a designated bus stop or park. There is a high probability that you just entered ONE CHANCE!
3. Never wear a combination of complete yellow or black and also show some cult signs around a university campus in Lagos if you are not a cult member!

4. The best way to beat Lagos traffic is by using Okada (commercial or private motorcycle). You should also learn to leave your house very early in the morning and enter late at night, these are the best time to avoid a traffic jam!
5. It is very easy for the police officers in Lagos to tag you with any sort of crime, everything is a crime in Lagos. In fact, kissing your girlfriend in the public is a crime, avoid an argument with police officers and save yourself from stress by always having a valid ID card on you!
6. At all cost, you want to avoid interfering or looking, anytime you see strangers fighting! You don't want to be part of that jungle justice.
7. Be polite and very open-minded.
8. If you must use waterways transportation, consider buying your own personal life jacket.
9. Avoid street transactions at places like Lagos island, computer village, Sabo-Yaba. Go into their shops and if necessary, collect the receipt.
10. Don't misbehave in the public because some jobless people will just video you and upload it on Instagram! Enjoy !!
11. If you are a foreigner in Lagos, You might want to consider getting a driver to drive you around the town. Driving yourself gives a high probability of your involvement in a car accident. The reason is that Lagosians don't know road signs and drive in a very crazy manner!
12. Having tattoos and piercing in Lagos subject you automatically to Police harassment. Nigeria Police would assume that you are a criminal.

ONE CHANCE: This is part of the criminal activities that occur between public transporters and passengers. The driver would pretend as if the transportation is genuine and will kidnap passengers in order to rob them of their personal belongings, rape or both child and adult abductions. They usually do not depart from designated bus stations because of their evil acts, their fares are usually cheaper. Lagosians tagged this act "One Chance" but the standard word should be " Commercial bus robbers"

footnotes: 'One Chance' drivers' new methods to trap, rape, kidnap passengers

Police nab 11 One-Chance specialists in Lagos - Vanguard News Nigeria

Related Links

[Has it ever snowed in Nigeria?]

[Which country in Africa does snow fall in?]

[Has it ever snowed in history in Jos Plateau in North Nigeria?]

How would you describe the winter weather in Lagos, Nigeria?

Why doesn't it snow in Africa?

Why doesn't it snow in Nigeria?

What is winter like in Kano, Nigeria?

What is winter like in Umuahia, Nigeria?

Does it snow in Ghana?

What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?

t it snow in Nigeria?

What is winter like in Kano, Nigeria?

What is winter like in Umuahia, Nigeria?

Does it snow in Ghana?

What is it like to live in Lagos, Nigeria?

PRESIDENT BUHARI MOURNS THE DEAD, CONDOLES WITH ONDO STATE GOVT AND PEOPLE

News Nigeria

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Sun

President Muhammadu Buhari has condemned the heinous killing of worshippers Sunday at the St Francis Catholic Church, Owa-luwa Street, Owo Kingdom, in Ondo State.

The President says only fiends from the nether region could have conceived and carried out such dastardly act, adding that eternal sorrow awaits them both on earth here, and ultimately in the hereafter.

President Buhari mourns the dead, condoles with their families, the Catholic Church, and the Government of Ondo State, charging emergency agencies to swing into action, and bring succor to the wounded.

“No matter what, this country shall never give in to evil and wicked people, and darkness will never overcome light. Nigeria will eventually win,” the President says.

Femi Adesina

Special Adviser to the President

Media and Publicity

June 5, 2022

News Nigeria
8./ The Queen watching the pounding poles of the women of Kaduna, Nigeria as they grind corn.

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Jun 1

The Royal Family

7th Feb 1956.

(Photo by Daily Mirror/Mirrorpix/Mirrorpix via Getty Images)

Are there cities in the true sense in Nigeria?

Danelle Lucado

Studies in African History & Traditions May 26

Of course. There are many cities. Abruja for one. Lagos and Lagos Island… They're beautiful. The main difference is generator power as either a back up to electricity or in stead of. There are several surrounding estates, towns and villages. The further you get from the city, the less accommodations are. I've posted some beautiful pictures of the cities I found on Google. I also posted some of my own from the villages and towns where I was, Asaba and Ibuza.

Abuja, Nigeria - Travel Guide a...

10 Most Beautiful Cities in Nig…

What are the great examples of Nigerian frauds?

Paul-Mark O. Shokunbi

Lives in NigeriaUpdated 1y

See this, it will be useful in this post…

"A day will come when you think you're safe and happy, and your joy will turn to ashes in your mouth. And you will know that a debt is paid"

A man once shared his story. It goes thus:

Dayo (not real name) went to the petrol station to refuel. When it was his turn, he came out of his car and told the attendant N3500 ($9.67) of fuel should be sold. He looked down to use his phone while the attendant dispensed fuel. A few seconds later, he heard "I'm done". He looked up and saw N500 on the counter. He was like, I said N3,500 . The attendant insisted that he heard N500. He gave a stern look at the attendant before he continued using his phone.

After a few moments of some whirls, he heard again "I'm done". He looked at the counter and saw N3,000. Dayo already showing signs of agitation began to raise his voice. "I SAID N3,500, ARE YOU DEAF?". The attendant said he reset the counter before he finished the sales. The man started threatening the fuel attendant that if he knows what is good for him, he should sell all he paid for. The attendant began to protest that he has sold what Dayo paid for. Other fuel attendants began to move towards them in defence of the 1st attendant. Dayo knew he had to be smart so he held his peace.

He was wearing a lion tooth necklace he bought from an art gallery the previous day, like the ones above. He removed it from his neck and placed it his palm and clenched his fist. He mumbled some words to the necklace. The other attendants began to take steps backwards, leaving the 1st attendant to his fate. Fear showed in their eyes, this is júju (voodoo) they thought as they trembled. Dayo raised his hand, palm faced towards the the 1st attendant, showing the tooth to him and said "If you're innocent nothing will happen to you but if you're guilty, your manhood shall become the size of this tooth and 500 days from now, your family will mourn you."

Immediately the 1st attendant began to plead with Dayo “Oga, no vex, na play I dey play”. Dayo didn't flinch. Other attendants began to beseech on his behalf.

The 1st attendant hurriedly sold the remainder and added extra N500 in atonement for his sins. After much persuasion, Dayo took away his fake curse and with a bitter-sweet feeling, he drove off.

:-D

Related Links

How dangerous is Nigeria?

Is Nigeria a failed state?

Is there any hope for Nigeria?

What are common scams in Nigeria?

Are there cars in Nigeria?

How successful is the "Nigerian Prince" scam?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?

Is Nigeria safe for tourists?

How is life in Nigeria?

Are there ATMs in Nigeria?

NIGERIA.

Posted by

AUGUSTINE FESTUS

May 30

EFCC uncovers another N90b 'fraud' against Accountant-General

The scope of the ongoing probe of the suspended Accountant-General of the Federation, Ahmed Idris, by the Economic and Financial Crimes Commission (EFCC) has reached N170billion. Idris, who was battling for bail last night, has opened up on some top government officials allegedly involved in some transactions. The EFCC has grilled a Permanent Secretary in connection with some "deals in which he was implicated". The anti-graft agency was also closing in on a minister who was fingered in the allegations against the suspended AGF.

News Nigeria
Buhari to ECOWAS: Decision on Mali, Burkina Faso, Guinea must consider citizens

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Jun 4

President Muhammadu Buhari has declared that any decision to be taken by Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) leaders on the political situations in Burkina Faso, Mali and Guinea must consider the victims of unconstitutional changes of government and the adverse consequences of isolation on them.

The President spoke, yesterday, in Accra, Ghana at the Sixth Extraordinary Session of the Authority of Heads of State on the political situations in the three countries.

He expressed concern that since the last Summit of ECOWAS leaders on March 25, this year, not much has been achieved in terms of having an acceptable time-table for the conduct of elections to restore democratic rule in the affected countries.

He noted that although the military leadership in Burkina Faso has released President Roch Marc Christian Kaboré in line with the request by ECOWAS leaders, further measures must be taken to ensure his safety and full freedom.

President Buhari warned that the security situation in both Mali and Burkina Faso had reached alarming levels with incessant attacks by extremist groups on the civilian populace and military facilities, aggravating the humanitarian condition in the two countries.

''The deterioration of the humanitarian situation in Mali and Burkina Faso should be a source of serious concern to us as leaders in the region. As you may be aware, the world is still recovering from the effect of the COVID-19 pandemic, which wrecked the global economy…".

''While our economies begin to recover, the impact of the war between Russia and Ukraine has led to a surge in prices of many commodities including foodstuffs.

''We are, therefore, left with no option but to devise means of sustaining our economies by becoming more creative and evolving in finding other channels of demand and supply, in order to ensure that we cushion the effect of the war and prevent our economies from collapsing, and our people remain productive.

''We must, therefore, ensure that, in whatever decision we take, we must remember the mass of the populations in the affected countries, who are victims of the unconstitutional change of government and the adverse consequences of isolation brought about,'' he said.

To this end, the Nigerian leader called on the authorities to revisit the report presented by former President Goodluck Jonathan, the ECOWAS Mediator on Mali, on a transition timetable for the West African country.

President Buhari noted that Jonathan had recommended 16 months transitional timeframe ''as well as his further personal appeal and observation to us to give the military leadership in Mali up to 18 months for the conduct of election, starting from March 2022.''

''Furthermore, Nigeria is also calling on the Authority to consider the proposal earlier made for the Chair to personally visit Bamako and present this proposal. Nigeria equally welcomes the magnanimous offer by President Macky Sall, Chair of the Assembly of African Union to accompany H.E. President Nana Addo to Bamako for the purpose.

''From our findings, we are certain that the high-level visit proposed would be welcomed by the military leadership and would achieve the needed consensus. At the same time, the region must be ready to provide the needed support to Mali to return to democratic rule as soon as possible.''

On the situation in Guinea and Burkina Faso, President Buhari expressed concern that, till date, their proposed timeframes are not in tandem with the expectations of the regional leaders as well as their respective citizens.

He urged the military authorities in Burkina Faso and Guinea to renew their determination and immediately provide acceptable timeframes for the return to democracy in their respective countries.

He announced that Nigeria fully supports any action, including imposition of further sanctions that the Authority may adopt to compel the military leaderships in the two countries to submit an acceptable electoral timetable.

''Nevertheless, there is need for ECOWAS to continue to engage the military leaderships and key stakeholders in Burkina Faso and Guinea in order to reach an agreeable understanding, especially on the transition timeframes,'' he said.

Earlier, the Chairperson of the Authority and President of Ghana, Nana Akufo-Addo, thanked his counterparts for their strong commitment to democracy, peace and stability in the region and for staying focused on the situation in the countries.

President Akufo-Addo, who acknowledged the presence of African Union Commission Chairperson, Moussa Faki Mahamat, said the Summit hopes to find lasting solutions to political instability and the resurgence of coup d'états in the region since August 2020.

Wake Up Africa!

How was the Nigerian Civil War fought?

Answered by

Obinna Alexander

May 29

The Nigeria Civil War was fought like any other conflict, bloody, and destructive. I would rather prefer to refer to it as the Biafran War, the right to self-determination should never be undermined.

The war was fought between the Republic of Biafra and the Nigerian Federation.

The Nigerian Civil War (6 July 1967 – 15 January 1970; also known as the Nigerian-Biafran War or the Biafran War) was a civil war fought between the government of Nigeria and the Republic of Biafra, a secessionist state which had declared its independence from Nigeria in 1967. Nigeria was led by General Yakubu Gowon, while Biafra was led by Lt. Colonel Odumegwu Ojukwu. Biafra represented the nationalist aspirations of the Igbo ethnic group, whose leadership felt they could no longer coexist with the federal government dominated by the interests of the Muslim Hausa-Fulanis of northern Nigeria. The conflict resulted from political, economic, ethnic, cultural and religious tensions which preceded Britain's formal decolonization of Nigeria from 1960 to 1963. Immediate causes of the war in 1966 included ethno-religious violence and anti-Igbo pogroms in Northern Nigeria, a military coup, a counter-coup and persecution of Igbo living in Northern Nigeria. Control over the lucrative oil production in the Niger Delta also played a vital strategic role.

Related Links

What is the oldest archeological finding in Nigeria?

Which part of Africa would you love to travel to?

How can Africa solve their problems without taking them to the ICC court?

How can our government stop the religious killing in Nigeria?

How can I get help if I am an LGBTQ facing persecution in my country?

What are the roles of myths and proverbs in African philosophy?

What system of ruling do you suggest for African countries? Democracy has been a mess so far. I think we should go back to the military regime.

What do pan-Africanists and pan-Arabists think of each other? Are those two movements inherently antagonistic, or is there a way of reconciling them?

Is Russia winning the propaganda war in Africa?

What is the best Neshida in Ethiopia?

Why isn't soccer more popular than rugby in Cape Town (like soccer isn't played at schools, like rugby, cricket, hockey, netball, etc.)?

What are the reasons for the change of name from Akebulem (a name whose meaning is known) to Africa?

Is the whole of Africa still trailing because of the high diversity and unwillingly (majority) to accept each other (ethnicity) in reality (in reality, not social media)?

Are Paaden Eiland and Green Point in Cape Town safe or not?

What ideas do you have for an educational school trip to Kenya?

Why can’t Nigeria, as a country, develop like Western countries?

Yome Agu

.

Follow

5m

The problem is with people that think like you is you want an African country to imitate the European/Western model as if Western countries is the standard that Africa should attain for. When in reality the Western model is the least ideal aesthetic or standard for Africa to strive for.

Nigeria will develop in its own way. The African way and the country will develop its own technological aesthetic and architecture etc.

But first the hivemind has to change their mindset and be free of their mental shackles before they can make a difference in their physical world and if we're trying to hold on to our ancestors beliefs, the spiritual world too. Since, spiritaulity was one with life in most ancient African societies.

Not the Western one.

Related Links

Why are Muslim countries less developed than Western countries?

Why do many countries not like Nigeria?

Why is Nigeria not developed?

Why isn't Nigeria as developed as South Africa?

Can Nigeria be developed like South Africa?

How do other African countries view Nigeria?

What developing country will become the next developed nation?

Is Nigeria a developed country?

What is it about countries like Ghana and Nigeria that helps them develop at a quicker rate than some other African countries?

Why is Nigeria still a third world

MEET THE FIRST UNIVERSITY GRADUATE FROM NORTHERN NIGERIA; ABDULAZIZ ATTA.

News Nigeria

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

6h

Abdul Aziz Atta was born on April 1st, 1920 at Lokoja. His father was Alhaji Ibrahim Onoruoiza Atta, a paramount traditional Ruler in Ebira land, Kwara State{Now Kogi State}.

He was educated at Okene Elementary and Middle Schools between 1926 and 1935. In 1936 he entered Achimota College, Ghana, and studied there until 1944 when he went to Balliol College, Oxford , England, graduating in 1947 in Politics, Philosophy and Economics.

Atta returned to Nigeria in 1948 and joined the government service as Cadet Administrative Officer in the then Unified Nigeria Public Service. He served in Calabar, Opobo, Ikot-Ekpene and former Southern Cameroons, all then under the Eastern Region. He continued to serve in the Eastern Region even after the division of the Public Service.

He was District Officer in Umuahia before becoming the Private Secretary of Dr. Nnamdi Azikwe , Premier of the Eastern region. Thereafter, he was Secretary to the Agent-General for the Region in Britain; Training Officer in the Regional Ministry of Finance, Enugu; and Secretary for Anang Province. He moved to the Federal Public Service as Administrative Officer, Class II, in 1958 and was promoted to Permanent Secretary in 1960, and headed in turn the Ministry of Defence, Ministry of Communications, Ministry of Industries and Ministry of Finance.

He occupied the important post of Permanent Secretary, Finance, from 1966 through the years of civil war with all its effect on the country's economy[3] . In December 1970, he was appointed Administrative Officer (Principal Grade) and became Secretary to the Federal Military Government and Head of the Federal Civil Service.

He had four daughters and a son by his wife Iyabo Atta.

One of his brothers, Alhaji Abdul Malik Atta was Nigeria's first High Commissioner to the United Kingdom.

Atta died on 12th June, 1972 at the Royal Free Hospital, London, after two years in the highest administrative position in Nigeria, and was buried in Kuroko.

Nigeria from a 14-inch screen

Emmanuel-Francis' Knowledge Works

.

Follow

Posted by

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

Fri

There are as many viewpoints about Nigeria as there are Nigerians. And there are many Nigerians. We are, if estimates don't lie, one out of every six Africans.

My preferred starting point is geographical. Distance jumps out when you stare down a map. I was born in Jos, grew up in Enugu (Lagos, Kaduna and Benin) and went to university in Lagos. The result for me is an overriding national attachment that has come at the expense of my shallow regional connections.

I am likely a minority. Most Nigerians circulate within a narrow band of states or cities and capitalist disruptions have done little to disrupt the enclaves of religion and ethnicity except at the margins. Nigerians leave in separate utopias surrounded by menacing barbarians. The result is a pervasive, combustible atmosphere of mutual suspicion.

To their credit, the country's leaders have done their flawed best to reduce friction. The NYSC programme despatches graduates across the country. The 36 states vest immense powers in governors and ensure a sufficient dispersal of political power to satisfy ethnic groups. Federal character picks up from there by placing merit at odds with ethnic representation. Finally, the division of Nigeria into 'geopolitical' zones is now the arena where political contests occur. It has overlaid a secular identification over ethnic markers.

Since the incorporation of Nigeria as a Republic in 1963, there have been two Heads of State from the South-East, one from the North-Central, five from the North-West, three from the South-West, two from the North-Central, one from the North-East and one from the South-South.

The above figures are accurate but slightly misleading. Nine out of the sixteen Heads of State led juntas. Two of sixteen led military and civilian regimes. All of the Southeasterners were deposed. Put another way, the North-Central and South-East have never had an elected politician lead Nigeria. Except Dr Goodluck Jonathan, all national elected heads of government in Nigerian history have come from the North-West or South-West. Out of six elected heads of government, the split is three from the North-West, one each from the North-East, South-West and South-South.

The candidates that matter in the next election are Sen. Ahmed Tinubu and Alhaji Atiku Abubakar.

The South-West and North-East arm-wrestling for the fate of millions.

Ostensibly opposed, both used to be (and probably still are) friendly. They were united in their tutelage by the brother of the Second President of the Fourth Republic and their mutual dislike for Olusegun Obasanjo, the first president of the Fourth Republic.

Like many rich Nigerians, in the form for 'source of wealth' both are likely to fill in, 'Almighty Allah' (God in the case of Christians). Wags, AKA poor people filled with envy and mischievous spirits, allude to corruption. Both men are Horatio Alger types. Alhaji Atiku seems to be better at avoiding trouble. For example, one of the many profitable relationships he forged was with the Yar'adua family (as did Sen. Tinubu), one of the preeminent dynasties of the North-West. Yet, while his mentor and future boss, the first president of the Fourth Republic, were imprisoned by our last dictator, he avoided jail or death, perhaps at the expense of the company he had built as a customs officer. Sen. Tinubu, in contrast, fled into exile for his role championing the candidature of Chief MKO Abiola.

A final map shows the party affiliations of governors in Nigeria.

Imo, Ondo, Ekiti and Kogi are now APC states while Taraba and Edo are PDP states. That suggests that all the momentum is with the APC. People will talk about economic and security performance—all dire. But all those existed in 2015 and the party increased its vote tally by more than three million votes.

The enduring reality of Nigerian elections is low turnouts. In those conditions, the status-quo will prevail 10/10 times.

Do we use rats to sniff out landmines?

Claire Jordan

.

Follow

Worked at National Health Service (NHS)1y

Yes - but only giant African pouched rats, because of their greater lifespan. You couldn't do it with ordinary pet rats, because by the time you'd trained them you would only get a few months of work from them before they were too old, but with a pouched rat you get several years of work.

Pouched rats are about as big as a large guinea pig or very small rabbit (and have huge noses). Their sense of smell is as good as a dog's but they're much lighter, so there's no risk they will set off a mine by treading on it and get hurt. [The "pouched" part btw refers to the fact that they have cheek pouches, like a hamster's, for carrying food.]

The area which is to be searched for mines is marked out. Stakes are driven into the ground at short intervals along the sides of the potential minefield and then strings are passed back and forth between the stakes, until the field has a string across it at spaces of about every two feet, and a foot or two from the ground.

Sniffer rats are then fitted with little harnesses which are hooked onto some kind of clip which runs along a string. The rat walks across the minefield, guided by the string and sniffing as it goes. If it sniffs a mine it indicates the spot, and a human marks where the mine is and then gives the rat a banana treat.

The not-so dangerous lives of mine-sniffing rats

Wake Up Africa!

What is the oldest archeological finding in Nigeria?

Answered by

Jerry Kofi Adonu

31m

The record should probably go to an ancient canoe found in North Eastern Nigeria: the Dafuna Canoe.

It is estimated to be some 8500 to 8000 years old found on a territory which was probably the shores of a then larger Lake Chad.

The canoe is 8.4 metres (28 ft) long and is 0.5 metres (1 ft 8 in) tall at it largest point.Examination of the canoe showed that the bow and stern had been skilfully worked to points and that the work was carried out by "core axe-like and pick-axe bifacial tools of micro-lithic appearance".

It is the oldest boat ever found in Africa and the second oldest in the world.

Its well defined assemblage shows that it is a result of a far older tradition carried on by populations associated with the inhabitants of the Green Central Sahara.

Related Links

What's your thought on the recent survey found that 'China surpasses the U.S. in the eyes of young Africans'?

Which part of Africa would you love to travel to?

How can Africa solve their problems without taking them to the ICC court?

How can our government stop the religious killing in Nigeria?

How can I get help if I am an LGBTQ facing persecution in my country?

What are the roles of myths and proverbs in African philosophy?

What system of ruling do you suggest for African countries? Democracy has been a mess so far. I think we should go back to the military regime.

What do pan-Africanists and pan-Arabists think of each other? Are those two movements inherently antagonistic, or is there a way of reconciling them?

Is Russia winning the propaganda war in Africa?

What is the best Neshida in Ethiopia?

Why isn't soccer more popular than rugby in Cape Town (like soccer isn't played at schools, like rugby, cricket, hockey, netball, etc.)?

What are the reasons for the change of name from Akebulem (a name whose meaning is known) to Africa?

Is the whole of Africa still trailing because of the high diversity and unwillingly (majority) to accept each other (ethnicity) in reality (in reality, not social media)?

Are Paaden Eiland and Green Point in Cape Town safe or not?

NIGERIA.

Peter Obi: Nigerian Diaspora Pays Logistics to Enable Voters Pick PVC | #IgbereTV

Posted by

Frank Abah

Fri

By: Chidiebube Okeoma #IgbereTV

Information

Please if you are from Isiala Mbano LGA and you want to come to Owerri to register or revalidate your PVC and you don't have transportation money, worry no more.

Through the help of our brothers and sisters in the diaspora, Victor Uche is carrying people through and fro.

You don't need to worry. Just organize yourselves. Inform me and he will come carry you.

Let us get our PVCs and mobilize our people to go get their PVCs.

Fourth Edition of the Forbes Rated Igbere TV Leadership Excellence Awards 2022 Holds Nov 5 at Transcorp Hilton Abuja.

Nomination Opens Soon!

... Endorsed by African Union, African Film Institute

NIGERIA

FACT THAT PUT NIGERIA ON THE MAP

Posted by Economist & Digital Entrepreneur

Frank Abah

• The richest estate in Africa is found in nigeria

• Lagos, nigeria is among the best Africa cities when it comes to public transport

• The black richest man is a Nigerian " Aliko dangote"

• Nigeria has the largest music industry in Africa

• Lagos being the former capital of Nigeria played host to the first independence day celebration

• Nigeria 🇳🇬 has the largest movie industry in Africa

• Nigeria 🇳🇬 has the largest GDP in Africa and among the world's top30

• Nigeria 🇳🇬 was the fastest country to end ebola virus during it's first major hit in 2014 .

• African richest women is found in nigeria 🇳🇬 " Folorunsho Alakija"

• Nigeria 🇳🇬 has richest pastors in the world

• Nigeria 🇳🇬 has the most monarch and powerful kings recorded in the books

• Nigeria 🇳🇬 official language is English , however the commonly spoken language is the nigeria pidgin English .

• Nigeria 🇳🇬 is Africa's most culturally diverse county , having over 300 ethic groups and over 500 spoken languages/dialects

• The first indigenous African to win the miss world title is Nigerian 🇳🇬 " Agbani Darego"

• Lagos , Nigeria topped the 2021 ranking for best tech start -up cities in Africa

Credit: African Voice

He Saved Hundreds of Lives by Driving a Burning Tanker Filled With Petroleum Product Out of Populated Area in Delta

News Nigeria

.

Following Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Sun

Meet Ejiro Otarigho the hero who saved the lives of hundreds and prevented the destruction of property running into hundreds of millions by driving a burning tanker filled with petroleum product from a populated area in Agbarho, Delta to an uninhabited area (where there were no people living) in Delta.

He kept on driving the burning truck and didn't care if he died in the process.

An act that was captured by onlookers on-camera and had gone viral...

May God bless this man for protecting lives and businesses

He is a brave man who deserves a medal !

Let's celebrate him

Gunmen opened fire on worshippers and detonated explosives at a Catholic church in southwestern Nigeria on Sunday, leaving dozens feared dead, state lawmakers said.

News Nigeria

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Jun 5

Legislator Ogunmolasuyi Oluwole said the attackers targeted the St. Francis Catholic Church in Ondo state just as the worshippers gathered on Pentecost Sunday. Among the dead were many children, he said. Adelegbe Timileyin, who represents the Owo area in Nigeria's lower legislative chamber, said the presiding priest was abducted as well.

Authorities did not immediately release an official death toll. Timileyin said at least 50 people had been killed, though others put the figure higher. Videos appearing to be from the scene of the attack showed church worshippers lying in pools of blood while people around them wailed.

It was not immediately clear who was behind the attack at the church. While much of Nigeria has struggled with security issues, Ondo is widely known as one of Nigeria's most peaceful states. The state, though, has been caught up in a rising violent conflict between farmers and herders.

News Nigeria

Cross River Garment Factory in Calabar, Cross River State, Nigeria is the biggest garment factory in Africa.

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Sat

It is one of the world's biggest garment factories by floor size.

It sits on 2,000 square meters of land.

It contains over 2,000 electrical garment production machines.

News Nigeria

The Nigeria Army helped end Civil Wars in Liberia, Sierra Leone and Nigeria.

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

14h

Nigeria restored democracy in The Gambia, Togo, Sao Tome and Principe and Guinea Bissau.

In 2017, Nigerian troops entered The Gambia alongside Senegalese and Malian troops to ensure President Barrow was sworn-in, after then President Yahya Jammeh refused to handover.

In 2005, NIgeria's then President Olusegun Obasanjo ensured Togo held elections, after a coup installed Faure Gnassingbé as Togo's President, following the death of his dad, Gnassingbé Eyadéma who ruled for 38 years.

In 2003, former President Obasanjo reinstated Sao Tome and Principe's President Fradique de Menezes after he was overthrown.

The coup took place while he was in Nigeria on July 16, 2003.

News Nigeria

APC Delegate for Presidential Primaries Dies in Abuja

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Jun 7
BREAKING:

Nurudeen Lawal

One of Jigawa All Progressive Congress (APC) delegates, Alhaji Isah Baba Buji, has died while attending the presidential primary of the party in Abuja.

The deceased was Assistant APC chairman in charge of Jigawa central zone, The Nation reported. He was said to have slumped while getting ready to go to Eagle Square, venue of the primary with other delegates from the State. Jigawa APC Public Relations officer Malam Bashir Kundu confirmed the incident.

He was quoted as saying: "Yes, he died this morning. He slumped at Jigawa State Liaison Officer in Abuja and he was rushed to hospital and died before arriving the hospital. When we arrived the hospital he was confirmed died. It had been said he died of heart failure."

News Nigeria
President Buhari inaugurates Presidential Council on E-Government and Digital Economy in State House on 10th June 2022

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Jun 10

Digital Economy 7: President Buhari with L-R: SGF Boss Mustapha, Minister of Communication and Digital Economy Prof. Isa Pantami, Gombe State Governor Inuwa Yahaya and Exec. Vice Chairman NCC Prof. Umar Danbatta as he inaugurates Presidential Council on E-Government and Digital Economy in State House on 10th June 2022

Digital Economy 8: President Buhari with L-R: Chief of Staff Prof. Ibrahim Gambari, SGF Boss Mustapha, Minister of Communication and Digital Economy Prof. Isa Pantami and Gombe State Governor Inuwa Yahaya as he inaugurates Presidential Council on E-Government and Digital Economy in State House on 10th June 2022

News Nigeria

Labour Party's Presidential Candidate, Peter Obi, Departs For Egypt; His 3-Day Visit To The Northeast African Nation Is To Understudy Their Power, Education, Planning & Finance Sectors

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Tue

"I just departed for Egypt on a 3-day visit as part of my detailed study of comparable countries to Nigeria.

In Egypt, I am expected to understudy, among others, the Egyptian Power Sector, Education, Planning and Finance Sectors."

Does Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam support Biafra independence?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

Lives in Nigeria (1994–present)May 7

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam was watching a film when the notification of your question arrived. He is flattered and you wish to know his opinion. He assumed everybody knew his answer: no. He thanks you for the reminder that he knows very little.

The only independence movement he supports is the small and unpopular movement to liberate Nigeria from low-income status.

Emmanuel-Francis grew up in Kaduna, Nigeria. He remembers furious people certain that Nigeria was all that stood in their way to better days. They went around burning churches and killing Nigerians. That was an expression of their conviction. When those men came to his school, Emmanuel-Francis—much shorter and plumper then—was hustled over the fence into the nearby police station. Those Nigerian strangers kept him safe until he reunited with his mother.

Many days later, he remembers looking from his mother's arm as they went to check in on their relatives in the city. He saw a soldier atop what he now knows is an Armoured Personnel Carrier. That soldier looked majestic. Somehow he knew without knowing that everything would be alright. And it was. After all, you're reading this.

Emmanuel-Francis acknowledges that he is, perhaps, one of few Nigerians for whom the idea of Nigeria invoked fuzzy feelings of warmth and security. He got older, thinner, taller and babbled less. He learnt to stay away from his mother for minutes, hours, days and months without bawling his eyes out. He was taught a bit about the world and its people. Events have transformed his childhood feelings toward Nigeria into nostalgia. Yet his loyalty stands unbowed. Nigeria subsidised his education. Nigeria pays his mother's pension. Nigeria is one-quarter of his corporeal identity.

Like our evangelists in buses and on the streets, he has tasted and wants the whole world to know that Nigeria can be good.

The state of his country makes him contemplate his fraught feelings toward mortality. We have but threescore and ten years. To depart with no achievements is to leave behind a restless spirit. Nigeria is sixty-one and has aged poorly. Her merits are fading memories. Her body is riddled with cancers, coughs wrack her chest; her grey hair, matted with sweat, is clumped about her. Is she dying?

Emmanuel-Francis has other ideas. He keeps saying we should save and rejuvenate her. That the consequences otherwise are worse. He knows she can live forever. Her children need only believe, learn, and then have the will to act. And why shouldn't they?

Hearing them talk of rending her flesh and eating her heart fills him with horror.

Emmanuel-Francis also wonders why the Nigerian government subsidies the movie industry to make 1001 romantic comedies and hype vehicles for criminals instead of films like this.

It seems there is no end to the things he does not know.

NIGERIA.
Posted by

Frank Abah

4h

"If this way of life is what is derided as stinginess on the part of Peter Obi, then we all need to adopt this mould for a more sustainable and more human environment." - Bianca Ojukwu.

Bianca Ojukwu has defended Peter Obi after he was called stingy.

She told an interesting story of how Peter Obi visited her and her late husband Odumegwu Ojukwu in Texas, in 2009.

The then Governor of Anambra State, Peter Obi declined a $3,985 Tom Ford suit and went for a $220 suit.

Instead, he handed her $3800 that could have gone for the suit saying: "Please use this balance for your Charity foundation to help those in actual need".

The former beauty Queen, Bianca says: "Any progressive nation measures an individual by his values and not his vaults."

📸: Bianca Odumegwu Ojukwu (Facebook)

Credit: Legit.ng

Passionate Enugu-based Catholic priest, Rev. Fr. Ejike Mbaka, has declared that the Labour Party presidential candidate, Peter Obi, can never become Nigeria's president.

News Nigeria

·

Following Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

19h

Mbaka, who made the declaration at his Adoration Ministry ground in Enugu, said unless God ceases to exist, Obi would never lead Africa's most populous nation as it better to have an old man as president than a 'stingy young man'.

"A stingy man that cannot give people his money, with this hunger ravaging the land, and you are saying he is the one you want; you want to die of hunger? Are you people insane? Where is the Holy Spirit?

"It is now that [PDP candidate Abubakar] Atiku is seriously contesting for president; now that he is contesting without Peter Obi; it is now that he is serious. We want somebody that is serious. Unless Peter comes here to kneel, if he becomes president, he will close down this ministry. What we are doing is spiritual," said Mbaka.

"Listen, a good old man is better than a young wicked man. Peter Obi is going nowhere as far as God lives. If Igbos want a representative, it is not someone like Peter Obi.

"I should not have talked but I saw my video going round everywhere as if Fr. Mbaka wholeheartedly came out and apologized. No, I didn't apologize wholeheartedly, it was out of duress. I had to obey my Bishop, in obedience I had to; it is not of my volition. I did it because I am a Catholic priest. My Bishop said, 'do it', my own is 'Yes my Lord'.

"I did not say he is a bad man; I said he is a stingy man. A hungry man wants someone that is generous; the man has so much money, but he is 'I, me, myself'. But that money will not be useful to him. I am very happy now that I have spoken out. That apology is a poisonous curse against Peter Obi.

"If he is wise he should have come here after that apology to say he is sorry but he waited. Anybody supporting him is wasting his money, he is going nowhere."

Follow us for breaking news, videos, photos, and much more.

News Nigeria

AT PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY, PRESIDENT BUHARI URGES APC TO REMAIN UNITED, ASKS DELEGATES TO VOTE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE WITH BEST CHANCES OF VICTORY

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Jun 7

President Muhammadu Buhari early Wednesday morning in Abuja urged members of the All Progressives Congress (APC) to remain united and avoid acrimony, rallying delegates at the special convention to consider voting the presidential candidate with the best chances of securing victory in the 2023 general elections.

In his address at the Eagle Square, venue of the special convention, the President said the critical task ahead of the Abdullahi Adamu-led National Working Committee (NWC) ''remains to continue to forge the unity of purpose among party members and to keep securing needed compromises in the interest of the party.''

The President, who spoke to the delegates before the voting exercise to elect the presidential candidate, urged party officials and delegates to follow due process and abide by all extant laws and regulations pertaining to election of the party flag bearer.

The Nigerian leader said the flag bearer must be knowledgeable, fair-minded nationalist with a very strong belief in the unity of the country and strength of character and purpose to steer the country forward.

''My fellow party members and compatriots, I commend you for your various roles and contributions towards the successful conduct of the various APC primaries across the nation. I commend the party stakeholders, officials, organs and the Abdullahi Adamu-led NWC.

''I commend your efforts in organising party exercises and urge you not to rest on our achievements so far. Now we have a big task ahead: the special convention for the presidential primary.

''I congratulate all the winners, our newly emerged party flag bearers, so far, for the 2023 general elections and urge you to be magnanimous in victory, particularly towards your fellow aspirants who conceded to you. I urge you at all times to abide by the Party rules and follow party reconciliation processes.

''In every competitive event, there are bound to be winners and runners-up; and as such, all the aspirants who lost or conceded at the primaries, I equally urge you to maintain the spirit of sportsmanship and to stand by our great party for the next challenges ahead.

''As we go into the presidential primary, I urge all to keep to the same spirit. We must avoid acrimony and maintain the spirit of sportsmanship. The critical task ahead of the Abdullahi Adamu-led NWC remains to continue to forge the unity of purpose among party members and to keep securing needed compromises in the interest of our great party.

''I enjoin you all to be fair to all and to create a level playing field for all the presidential aspirants in the coming crucial party exercise.

''Please, follow due process in all the party decisions and I call on all party members, particularly the party officials and delegates to abide by all extant laws, rules, and regulations and to consider voting for the presidential candidate with the best chances of securing victory for our great party in the coming general elections,'' he said.

Underscoring that the principal challenge before the party is the need to keep a united front, the President affirmed that the National Executive Committee (NEC) of the party has vested its powers in NWC for the time being, as requested, and in compliance with the Party Constitution, to ensure smooth party administration and operations in these critical times in the overall interest of the party.

President Buhari, therefore, assured the party Chairman and the entire NWC members of his support, adding:

''Please do not hesitate to call on me and all other appropriate quarters for the help that will propel our great party to the victory that we all seek. To ensure a hitch-free presidential primary, please let us work collectively in the interest of our great party and our great country.''

On governance issues and how his administration has steered the ship of state in the last seven years, the President declared that the APC Government in spite of inheriting a nearly dead economy, has made substantial progress in implementing reforms, providing infrastructure and social care and redeeming Nigeria's image in the international community.

''Fellow delegates, fellow men, women, youth, citizens of our country. Many people have short memories. But let us remember the situation we inherited.

''A nearly dead economy in spite of oil being over $100 per barrel for many years. Vast areas of our country under insurgent control. Salaries, wages, pensions unpaid for months in many states.

''Problems were left unattended or ignored. Infrastructure left to decay. Internationally we were despised.

''Your APC Government has changed all that. Our response to any new challenges, whether banditry, kidnappings, insurgency has been prompt and head-on. Rehabilitation of infrastructure has taken place on a massive scale. Our response to Covid-19 is second to none in Africa.

''We have made substantial progress in governance, in implementing reforms, in democratic processes and in social care.

''We are now respected in Africa and across the world. These major achievements by APC are historic and far-reaching.

''We now have to choose a leadership not just to win elections next year but to continue and improve on these landmarks.

''We must choose a knowledgeable, fair minded nationalist with a very strong belief in the unity of our Nation, Nigeria, and strength of character and purpose to steer the country forward. We should not allow the PDP to drag the country backwards, '' he said.

Femi Adesina

Special Adviser to the President

(Media & Publicity)

June 8, 2022

Meet the naked tribes of Nigeria — where people wear leaves and little to nothing

INEMESIT UDODIONG

October 21, 2019 2:38 PM

Koma people are one of the remaining naked tribes in Nigeria (Middle Africa)

- Back in the biblical Garden of Eden, it was totally acceptable to go nude.

- Nudity (or near-complete nudity) continued in various parts of the world including Africa until civilization happened.

- With the ever-increasing influence of Western culture, this tradition is almost non- existent nowadays except for a few areas in Nigeria.

October 21, 2019 2:38 PM

Koma people are one of the remaining naked tribes in Nigeria (Middle Africa)

- Back in the biblical Garden of Eden, it was totally acceptable to go nude.

- Nudity (or near-complete nudity) continued in various parts of the world including Africa until civilization happened.
- With the ever-increasing influence of Western culture, this tradition is almost non-existent nowadays except for a few areas in Nigeria.

To Nigerians, is the word oyinbo offensive if addressing non Nigerians?

- John Flynn
- Lives in Ireland (1956–present)Updated Jun 9

- "To Nigerians, is the word oyinbo offensive if addressing non Nigerians?"
- The Nigerians use the term descriptively and it has no negative connotations. Therefore it is not offensive to them or the people they address as Oyinbo.
- I am an Irishman who has been going back and forward to Naija (Nigeria) for over 22 years now, have an apartment in Lagos and a Nigerian wife (Iyawo mi).
- I have a very outgoing personality and am always up for a bit of fun and adventure and so am called by MANY of my very dear friends and family there KOLO OYINBO (Crazy Whiteman) I regard this as a great compliment.
- My Yoruba friends also call me Baba Onigba which can be translated in several ways but could be, 'a man with a devil may care attitude', 'a man full of the joys of life' or (my favourite) 'the Man who does not give two shits'!

Related Links

- What are some things Nigerians consider rude or offensive?
- Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?
- What is the Nigerian problem?
- What do real Nigerian princes think of Nigerian prince email scams?
- What is your view about Nigeria/Nigerians? (Non Nigerians only)?
- What do you love about Nigerians?

- As a non-Nigerian, what confuses you about Nigerians?
-
-
- Why are Nigerians hated so much around the world?
-
-
- Why do Nigerians say ah ah?
-
-
- How do Nigerian names work?
-
-
- Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?
-
-
- Simply Izustic
-
- Freelance Writer at Upwork (2016–present)23h
-
- I've said it many times, Africa is a diverse continent. And the reason most people expect Africans to be dark skinned is because of the way most African Americans were dark skinned back in the days of slavery. And that's only because slave owners preferred dark skinned Africans to light skinned ones.
- In reality, Africa has a lot of light skinned people. And I'm not just talking about the Arabs, or the Berbers or Touregs, etc. Even among the bantu sub groups like the Igbo people.
- I come from a family of Igbo people. There has been no mention of intermixing in my family. Our lineage traces are far back as precolonial times. Apart from the lightness of my skin, I look as identical to the darkest bantu African group as you can find.

-
- Compare that with the mixed race Cape Verdeans like the lady below, and you can tell the difference.

- Related Answer
- Why are Igbos in Nigeria light-skinned despite being from West Africa?

- Chinonye Ezeamii
- · Follow Accountant 3y
- Long before the British came to Nigeria, the Portuguese had been here. The Portuguese freely interacted with Igbos, Binis, Yorubas etc for about 300 years before the British came. It was from them that Edos learnt bronze sculpting for example. Cloth weaving and colouring was learnt from them. Those were the days of free trade and free love so there was a lot of sexual interaction. In those days a man could say 'I am pleased with you , you can have my daughter or my maid" or to his visitor from a far away land. 'I want you comfortable, I will send my maids to keep you company" . Kings were very guilty of this. Well, the Portuguese benefited from this sexual freedom of those days and they had sexual relationships with lots of people from the South East and South South. Modupe Ozolua of Body Enhancement fame, always said that she was purely Nigerian and that her foreign looks were a co-incidence. I laughed within me. A few years ago, she said she had just found out that there was a Portuguese woman in her ancestry. It is no co-incidence that some Igbos have brown hair, brown eyes and light skin. That is their foreign genes speaking. Even the British who came long after the Portuguese were also making mixed race babies. Think about it : Did they stay for decades here without sex? Who did they have sex with? Natives, of course!

- Bottomline: Many Igbos do not know that they have Portuguese blood in them.

Related Links

- Are Igbos in Nigeria mixed race?
- How can I distinguish various tribes in Africa (e.g. Igbo, Yoruba or Hausa in Nigeria)?
- Some of my Nigerian (Igbo) family looks Asian, does that mean that there is some Asian blood?
- How do other non-Igbo Nigerians feel about Igbos?
- Where did the Igbo people of Nigeria come from?
- Are the Igbo people related to the Jews?
- As a Nigerian, what is your honest opinion about the Hausa-Fulani, Igbo and Yoruba people of Nigeria?
- Why do people say that Nigerians have light skin?

- Are the Igbos of Nigeria Bantu?
-
-
- Why is Igbo language similar to japanese?
-
-
-

Is Nigeria falling as the giant of Africa politically?

-
- Giwa Olaotan
-
- .
- Follow
- Proudly an armchair political analystThu
-
- Question: "is Nigeria falling as the giant of Africa politically?"
- Did we ever climb any political tree or mountain? Is there something I'm missing?
- Nigeria is regarded as the "giant of Africa" due to our large population and economy.
- I will take your question to be "Why is Nigeria weak in terms of world politics?"
- The answer isn't far-fetched and it's simple.
- Because our house is in disarray, we are unable to exert much influence over our neighbours or the community at large.
- Had it been we've got a functional system with features like good welfare, efficient research capabilities , innovation prowess , better international relations, excellent security/military might (Perhaps, our track-record of sending troops for peace keeping counts), and so on, it would have made sense to experiment with and showcase our giantness in Africa —for a start.
- But here we are, grinning when we are hailed with the metaphor, "Giant of Africa." That exact feeling a Yoruba man has when his friends call him, "Ọkùnrin mẹ́ta" which is translated as "three men in one."

Related Links

- Does Nigeria have the qualities to be called the "giant of Africa"?
- Why has Nigeria not yet emerged as the giant of Africa?
- Why do Nigerians think that Nigeria is the “giant” of Africa when other African countries don’t even like Nigeria?
- Can Nigeria remain the giant of Africa forever?
- Will Nigeria eventually become African superpower?
- Why is Africa politically unstable?
- What have you benefited from Nigeria as a citizen, the giant of Africa?

- Why is Nigeria considered “the giant of Africa”?
- Is Nigeria called the giant of Africa, and what are the criteria for the rating?
- What is the relationship like between Nigeria and South Africa?
- Do you see Nigeria to be surprisingly an innovative country like fictional Wakanda than others in Africa in the future?
- Yome Agu
- Apr 30
- Originally Answered: Do you see Nigeria to be surprisingly an innovative country like Wakanda than others in Africa in the future?
- First can we not compare a fictional non-existant African country to Nigeria or any other REAL African country?
- Wakanda is not real. It’s from the movie Black Panther and it’s NOT REAL. People need to stop comparing Wakanda to Africa or Wakandans to Africans.
- It’s like comparing Asgard to various different European countries/people. It’s not real stop acting like it’s a real place it holds no value in the real world.
- Also, just in case you’re one of those people don’t say “Wakanda Forever” everytime you meet or see an African stop please.
- What Nigeria's tech sector can learn from technology giant India
- https://www.weforum.org/agenda/2020/11/nigeria-tech-information-data-india/
- Is it racist to say 'Wakanda Forever' to South Africa? - WE THE PVBLIC
- The intentions are pure. The execution... not so much.

-
- https://wethepvblic.com/wakanda-forever-south-africa-miss-u
- e-win/
-
- nivers
-
- Nigeria's Tech Giant, SystemSpecs, Creates 2 New Firms at 30th Anniversary
-
-
-
-
- https://www.todaysecho.com/business/nigerias-tech-giant-systemspecs-creates-2-new-firms-at-30th-anniversary/

- Best Tech Companies In Nigeria 2021: Top 14 Nigerian Software Companies
- Which are the best tech companies In Nigeria 2021? Top technology companies in Nigeria. Biggest Nigerian software company to work with.
- https://bscholarly.com/best-tech-companies-in-nigeria/
-
-

- Anyway, considering that Nigeria is becoming a tech giant for Africa, then yes especially since Nigerians are building a place for tech entrepreneurs to thrive.

Related Links

- What country is more advanced in Marvel, Asgard or Wakanda?
- How do other African countries view Nigeria?
- Where is Marvel's Wakanda located in Africa, and what African country is there in real life?
- Am I crazy for thinking Wakanda is a messed up since they're the richest African nation but the rest of the continent either impoverished or in political turmoil?
- Which country has a better future: Ethiopia or Nigeria?
- How was Nigeria accepted as the leader of other countries in Africa?
- What will Nigeria look like in 20 years?
- Why is it difficult to believe there is a country like Wakanda in real life?
- If everybody in Wakanda lives in the hidden futuristic city, doesn't the rest of the world wonder where all the people are in the visible Wakanda?
- Is there any country in Africa which has a future?

Top 24 Richest And Poorest Countries Of Africa – 2020 Edition

- By Stephanie Rheingold Last updated Oct 23, 2021

- Nigeria

- Credit: Wikipedia

- Nigeria is the richest and biggest country in Africa. With a population of 206.14 people, a GDP of $444.92 billion and GDP per capita of $2,233, this west African country closes our list. The Nigerian economy is defined as a mixed economy emerging market, and according to World Bank, it has reached the status of lower middle income. The Nigerian economy is largely built around commerce and energy.

- It is the largest trader with the USA in Africa, as it supplies the country with around 1/5 of its total oil production. That places Nigeria as the 12th largest oil producer in the world and the 8th larger oil exporter. Moreover, Nigerian agricultural is a major source of employment for the country, as around 30% of its population are employed in agriculture. 2019 showed incredible growth mainly in the transport, oil, and information and communications technology sectors. Driving GDP growth to 2.3%, compared to 1.9% in 2018. In addition to those, household consumption was the key driver of growth in 2019.
- Nominal GDP Rank: #1
  Nominal GDP Per Capita Rank: #18
-

- Two kidnapped Chibok girls freed in Nigeria after eight years
- AFP - Yesterday 7:48 PM

- Nigerian troops have found two former schoolgirls who were abducted by Boko Haram jihadists eight years ago, the military said Tuesday, freeing some of the last victims of the 2014 Chibok abduction.

- © Audu MARTEKidnapped Chibok schoolgirls Mary Dauda (L) and Hauwa Joseph (R) were the latest released from the 2014 abduction by jihadists who kept them

- The two women each carried babies on their laps as they were presented by the military, after captivity with militants who stormed their school in April, 2014 in northeast Nigeria in a mass kidnapping that sparked international outrage.

- © Provided by AFPChibok schoolgirls Hauwa Joseph (L) and Mary Dauda (R), both had children with them

  Major-General Christopher Musa, the military commander of troops in the region, told reporters the girls were found on June 12 and 14 in two different locations by troops.

- "We are very lucky to have been able to recover two of the Chibok girls," Musa said.

- Dozens of Boko Haram militants stormed the Chibok girls' boarding school in 2014 and packed 276 pupils, aged 12-17, at the time into trucks in the jihadist group's first mass school abduction.

- Fifty-seven of the girls managed to escape by jumping from the trucks shortly after their abduction while 80 were released in exchange for some detained Boko Haram commanders following negotiations with the Nigerian government.

- In the recent releases, one of the women, Hauwa Joseph, was found along with other civilians on June 12 around Bama after troops dislodged a Boko Haram camp, while the other, Mary Dauda, was found later outside Ngoshe village in Gwoza district, near the border with Cameroon.

- On June 15 the military said on Twitter that they had found one of the Chibok girls named Mary Ngoshe. She turned out to be Mary Dauda.

- "I was nine when we were kidnapped from our school in Chibok and I was married off not long ago and had this child," Joseph told reporters at the military headquarters.

- Joseph's husband and father-in-law were killed in a military raid and she was left to fend for herself and her 14-month-old son.
- "We were abandoned, no one cared to look after us. We were not being fed," she said.
- Thousands of Boko Haram fighters and families have been surrendering over the last year, fleeing government bombardments and infighting with the rival group Islamic State West Africa Province.
- The conflict has killed more than 40,000 people and displaced 2.2 million more since 2009.
- Dauda, who was 18 when she was kidnapped was married at different times to Boko Haram fighters in the group's enclave in the Sambisa forest.
- "They would starve and beat you if you refused to pray," Dauda said about life under Boko Haram.
- She decided to flee and told her husband she was visiting another Chibok girl in Dutse village near Ngoshe, close to the border with Cameroon.
- With the help of an old man who lived outside the village with his family, Dauda trekked all night to Ngoshe where she surrendered to troops in the morning.
- "All the remaining Chibok girls have been married with children. I left more than 20 of them in Sambisa, she said. "I'm so happy I'm back."
- After the Chibok school mass abduction jihadists carried out several mass abductions and deadly attacks on schools in the northeast.
- In 2018, Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP) fighters kidnapped 110 schoolgirls aged 11–19 years from Government Girls Science and Technical College (GGSTC) Dapchi in neighbouring Yobe state.
- All the schoolgirls were released a month later except Leah Sharibu, the only Christian among the girls, who was held by the group for refusing to renounce her faith.

-
- Why do Nigerian men approach women in such rude ways?

-
-
- Victor Dirikebamor
- Storyteller Updated 2y
- I've noticed it too, and I'm not even a woman, I'm being approached rudely as a man every day.

- Instead of rude, aggressive is more like the perfect word.

- But the truth is Nigerian men ain't aggressive to women only, they're said to be aggressive about everything, yes, even in bed.

- You could easily notice Nigerians anywhere in the world as they go about their business. Bold, smart, noisy and nosey.

- Oh, yes, we don't even know we're that aggressive unless when we're in the midst of foreigners. It's like a default behaviour, even when you don't want to you have to be to survive.

- Ever heard of cities like Lagos, Warri, Benin? They're no place for a perfect gentle man.

- I remembered my friend jumping in and out of buses in Jos, he was used to jumping in an out of Danfo in Lagos and felt every place was like that.

- He has the unhealthy habit for asking for change before paying for anything. The natives were disgusted at his behaviour. They have no idea the kind of life he has being forced to live in Lagos.

- Nigerians are go getters, they grab and move without wasting time, sluggishness is almost a taboo.

- Have you ever seen a Nigerian settle fight between two friends?

- "It's okay, it's okay bro, I said it's okay."

- He's done being nice, the next thing is to ask them to hit it off.

- "Oya fight, fight na, kill yourselves. I'm done talking, I've done my part."

- The Nigerian man is often frustrated, there are alot of things out there making life hell for us, we just want to do what we can before departing this tough world.

- When we admire you, we walk up to you, tell you our mind with the best possible words and expect you to say yes and jump on our shoulders.

- The good news is, you're not forced, our girls are so aggressive, they won't give you the chance to intimidate them either. If you say yes we hit it off from that point, if you say no we ball.
-
- Time is money sister! Even lover boys who take things slow won't live forever.
- But you're in luck, I'm often nice and slow:D
-
- Nifemi Sola-Ojo
-
- .
- Follow
- A young Nigerian constantly seeking opportunities to make the difference.Updated 3y
-
- So who is more involved in infidelity: Nigerian men or Nigerian women?
-
- Durex conducted a survey in 2015, and they concluded that Nigeria women are one of the most unfaithful women in the world. A total of 35 countries were studied. How they came by that conclusion, I have no freaking idea.
- Nigerian women most unfaithful wives in the world? - Vanguard News
-
- It is extremely hard to really get if a lady is cheating compared to men.

- I have never met any guy that cheated and he wasn't caught by his partner
- But women, tend to be more careful about these things.
- Even when men finds out that their partner cheats on them, it is not a thing of pride for the man. So, he doesn't really go about talking of it.
- Ladies tend to speak more about it when their boyfriends or husbands cheat. Men are scum. Blah blah
- Reminds me of the story of a lady that was having an affair and the guy came to drop her at home, and when the husband came out furious, about to accuse her, she said swiftly, at that instance that the guy dropping her off was her Uber driver. Smooth right ? The Husband even tipped the Uber driver.
- Photo: Vanguard
-
-
- Steve Ogbujah
-
- upvoted this
-
- Related Links
- What are some things Nigerians consider rude or offensive?
-
-
- I have not seen many Nigerian women married to non-Nigerian African men. Yet many Nigerian men are married outside of Nigeria. Why is that?
-
-
- How do Nigerian men treat their American girlfriends?
-
-
- What do I need to know about a Nigerian man as a boyfriend?
-
-
- Why do Immigrant Black men (e.g. Nigerians) seem to find dates with higher-class Black American women than I do (a Black American male)?
-
-
- What do Nigerian men look for in American women?
-
-
- What is it like to date a Nigerian man?
-
-
- I am from the USA but my boyfriend is from Nigeria. Do we have too many cultural differences to consider a marriage? What if he wants me to move to Nigeria?
-

-
- So who is more involved in infidelity: Nigerian men or Nigerian women?
-
-
- Why is the nature of Nigerian men not so romantic?
-

\

The Nigerian Dream

What health benefits do people in Nigeria derive from eating animal skins, popularly known as "kpomo"?

Answered by

Boris Ezomo

Jun 12

Absolutely none

The cooked beef hide or Kpomo comprises of very little digestible protein and nothing else.

What you eat, will almost all end up in your stool.

But that is not why we eat them.

We like the hard gelatinous texture, and it's ability to absorb the flavour of the soup or stew it is cooked in.

If you feed Kpomo to children as an exclusive protein source, the child will develop kwashiorkor in a couple of months. Which is a nutritional disease rich in carbohydrates and poor in protein?

News Nigeria

Ekweremadu, wife arrested in London, charged with organ harvesting

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

1h

Sen. Ike Ekweremadu and wife reportedly arrested in UK for organ h@rvesting

.

Two Nigerians have been arrested by UK police for conspiring to traffic a child to Nigeria for the purpose of 'h@rvesting' the organs, Daily Mail reports.

Metropolitan police in a statement said that Beatrice Nwanneka Ekweremadu and Ike Ekweremadu - a former deputy senate president - who are 55 and 60 years old respectively have been remanded in custody and will appear at Uxbridge Magistrates' Court.

The police confirmed that Ike Ekweremadu and his wife have been charged with conspiring to arrange to bring a child to the UK to h@rvest organs in their home country, Nigeria.

Charges were brought against the pair ollowing an investigation by the Metropolitan Police's Specialist Crime team. Police, however, said the child has been safeguarded but did not disclose the gender or the age of the child or the location of the arrests.

The report suggests that it is likely the suspects were arrested at Heathrow Airport since they are appearing in a court in Uxbridge.

The investigation was launched after detectives were alerted to potential offences under modern slavery legislation in May 2022, the force said.

Wake Up Africa!

Why is Dangote considered the richest man in Africa?

Answered by

Boris Ezomo

34m

That's because he is the richest man in Africa. Not only that, he is the richest black man in the world.

His net worth is $13.9 billion.

Johann Rupert is next in line. With $11 billion. He is a South African entrepreneur.

Nicky Oppenheimer – $8.7 billion. The South African Diamond mine owner comes third in this list.

The Next richest Black person after Dangote is fellow Nigerian Mike Adenuga with $6.2 billion.

The richest non-African is Robert F. Smith with $6 billion.

Related Links

Why is it that some women in West Africa are not allowed to inherit from their father's property?

Based on statistics, is Tinubu the right man to lead Nigeria?

What are the best places to visit for a vacation in Africa?

Are you awareof human right violations happening inyour community

What are the best foreign countries in which to invest?

Is the government of Tanzania trying to force the Maasai tribe off their traditional herding lands?

Which country in Africa attracts a lot of investors in 2022?

How did the Africans lack the development in the Industrial Age?

How many time zones do we have in total?

Why do so many Africans on Quora seem to think we Europeans would give them visa sponsorship just because they ask?

What are the factors affecting the economic growth rate of Africa?

What can be done to stop the activities of terrorists from spreading from one county to another one?

What would African Buddhism look like? Since Buddhism gets absorbed into the culture of a country without destroying the native roots, wouldn't the flourish of Buddhism safe guard African culture?

What do you know about Cameroon?

Wake Up Africa!

Why is Dangote considered the richest man in Africa?

Answered by

Boris Ezomo

34m

That's because he is the richest man in Africa. Not only that, he is the richest black man in the world.

His net worth is $13.9 billion.

Johann Rupert is next in line. With $11 billion. He is a South African entrepreneur.

Nicky Oppenheimer – $8.7 billion. The South African Diamond mine owner comes third in this list.

The Next richest Black person after Dangote is fellow Nigerian Mike Adenuga with $6.2 billion.

The richest non-African is Robert F. Smith with $6 billion.

Related Links

Why is it that some women in West Africa are not allowed to inherit from their father's property?

Based on statistics, is Tinubu the right man to lead Nigeria?

What are the best places to visit for a vacation in Africa?

Are you awareof human right violations happening inyour community

What are the best foreign countries in which to invest?

Is the government of Tanzania trying to force the Maasai tribe off their traditional herding lands?

Which country in Africa attracts a lot of investors in 2022?

How did the Africans lack the development in the Industrial Age?

How many time zones do we have in total?

Why do so many Africans on Quora seem to think we Europeans would give them visa sponsorship just because they ask?

What are the factors affecting the economic growth rate of Africa?

What can be done to stop the activities of terrorists from spreading from one county to another one?

What would African Buddhism look like? Since Buddhism gets absorbed into the culture of a country without destroying the native roots, wouldn't the flourish of Buddhism safe guard African culture?

What do you know about Cameroon?

Why do so many foreigners go to Nigeria and think Nigeria is good?

Caleb Nwankwo

.

Follow

Lives in Nigeria (2004–present)Jun 18

It is simply the expectations. Almost the same way people feel that the USA is completely perfect with streets of gold, money in every corner and a peaceful and happy society. But then they are disappointed to see homeless people and so many people who are unsatisfied with the US medical and political system.

When people think of Nigeria, and Africa generally, they think of these

But then they are met with things like these

Transcorp Hilton

Mista Biee

All of these are in Nigeria .

No doubt that Nigeria has way more homeless people than America (about 48x more), but the expectations people have about both countries means that they will be impressed in Nigeria and a little disappointed about America.

Besides, Nigeria is a very interesting country. Nigerians are so proud of their country especially in the presence of foreigners, but Nigerians speaking to other Nigerians tend to speak more about Nigeria's problems. Nigerians have a wonderful vibe and tend to be successful abroad, so it's normal for people to be impressed.

Related Links

What is it like to work in Nigeria as a foreigner?

How do foreigners feel about Nigerians when they're around them?

What do foreigners think of Nigeria and its people?

As a foreigner what culture shock did you experience in Nigeria?

How can I get to meet foreigners in nigeria?

Why are Nigerians fleeing Nigeria?

How is life in Nigeria?

What site do foreigners who work or live in Nigeria use? I would like to meet a foreigner here in Nigeria.

Is Nigeria safe for tourists?

What is a good university for foreigners in Nigeria?

News Nigeria
42 Africans from Nigeria and Senegal fighting for Ukraine have died in the Russian-Ukrainian War according to the Russian Defence Ministry.

Aniekpeno Ekong

Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria 1h

38 of them are Nigerians, while 4 of them are Senegalese.

Source: BBC's Focus on Africa.

News Nigeria
PHOTOS: 2023: Peter Obi in closed-door meeting with Gov. Wike

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Wed

Days after his return from Egypt, presidential candidate of the Labour Party, Peter Obi, visited Governor Nyesom Wike of Rivers State.

Obi paid a visit to Wike on Wednesday at his private residence in Port Harcourt, the state Rivers State capital.

On his arrival, Obi was ushered in where he had a meeting with the governor behind closed doors.

The duos, however, did not speak to journalists about the purpose of the meeting, but it may not be unconnected to political realignment ahead of the 2023 presidential election.

Obi's visit comes days after the Ebonyi State Governor, Dave Umahi also met with Governor Wike behind closed doors.

Wike is widely speculated to be scheming to dump the People's Democratic Party, PDP after losing the PDP presidential ticket and vice presidential slot respectively to Atiku Abubakar, the party's 2023 presidential candidate.

Rare Stories

Posted by

Chukwuebuka Sunday

Jun 16

At least 35 teenage girls were rescued from a 'baby factory' hotel where they were used as sex slaves and their babies sold on the black market, Nigerian police say.

He said the owner of the hotel was on the run, while three suspects had been arrested, accused of abducting the teenagers, engaging in sexual slavery and prostitution, and operating a baby factory.

The so-called 'factories' are usually small illegal facilities parading as private medical clinics that house pregnant women and offer their babies for sale.

In many cases, young women have been held against their will and sexually assaulted before their babies are sold on the black market.

In other cases, unmarried pregnant women are promised healthcare, only for their children to be taken away. In others, women are raped and made pregnant.

The Abandoned Indian Nannies Of London-Who were The Ayahs?
Thousands of women from India and other parts of Asia were brought to London during the height of the British empire to look after young children, but many of these nannies were later abandoned and left to fend for themselves. A blue plaque will now be placed on a building in London where they were https://diyprofile.com/2022/06/17/the-abandoned-indian-nannies-of-london-who-were-the-ayahs/

Chukwuebuka Sunday

.

Medical Officer at Kano State Hospital Management Board (2021–present)Thu

Just south of Mexico City, there’s a haunted island that's completely overrun with decomposing dolls. Back in the 1950s, the island’s caretaker hung the first doll after finding the body of a drowned girl in the canal. Before long, he became obsessed with appeasing the girl's spirit and covered nearly everything on the island with dolls.

CONTENIDO
MALDITO

Then, in an eerie twist of fate, his body was discovered in 2000. He had drowned in the same place as the dead girl he'd found decades before.

Is it right to say "Nigerians"?

Yome Agu

.

Follow
10m

Is it right to say Chinese?

Is it right to say Japanese?

Is it right to say Koreans?

Is it right to say Mongolians?

Is it right to say Indians?

Is it right to say Sri Lankans?

Is it right to say Lebanese?

Is it right to say Italians?

Is it right to say Germans?

Is it right to Belgians?

Is it right to say Norweigans?

Is it right to say Croatians?

Is it right to say Americans?

Is it right to say Jamaicans?

Is it right to say Haitians?

Is it right to say South Africans ?

Is it right to say Ethiopians?

Is it right to say Ghanaians?

Yes, it's right to use the plural and say "Nigerians" and if the name for the people ends in an "ese" you say "the" or put "people" right after the word.

Related Links

What do you love about Nigerians?

What would you do to help Nigerians?

What do you think of Nigerians?

What can you say about Nigerian women?

Why are you proud to be Nigerian?

Why are Nigerians so religious?

Why are Nigerians fleeing Nigeria?

What screams "I'm Nigerian"?

How do Nigerian names work?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Is it right to say “Nigerians”?

Yome Agu

.

Follow

10m

Is it right to say Chinese?

Is it right to say Japanese?

Is it right to say Koreans?

Is it right to say Mongolians?

Is it right to say Indians?

Is it right to say Sri Lankans?

Is it right to say Lebanese?

Is it right to say Italians?

Is it right to say Germans?

Is it right to Belgians?

Is it right to say Norweigans?

Is it right to say Croatians?

Is it right to say Americans?

Is it right to say Jamaicans?

Is it right to say Haitians?

Is it right to say South Africans ?

Is it right to say Ethiopians?

Is it right to say Ghanaians?

Yes, it's right to use the plural and say "Nigerians" and if the name for the people ends in an "ese" you say "the" or put "people" right after the word.

Related Links

What do you love about Nigerians?

What would you do to help Nigerians?

What do you think of Nigerians?

What can you say about Nigerian women?

Why are you proud to be Nigerian?

Why are Nigerians so religious?

Why are Nigerians fleeing Nigeria?

What screams "I'm Nigerian"?

How do Nigerian names work?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why is the US embassy in Nigeria not issuing B1/B2 visas to Nigerians in recent times no matter how important or urgent their reasons for travel are? Are Nigerians currently blacklisted?

Sean Lana

I have visited more than 30 countries.Updated 1y
No Nigerians are not currently blacklisted.

I once answered this question before but I will summarize the answer again. The embassy is not relaxed due to demand in visas, Hence they receive so many applicants every day. US visa officers pay less attention to submitted documents, or they don't even look at them. It is expensive and time demanding to verify documents. Therefore, they use your body language and circumstances to quickly take a decision and hand over the blue paper to you.

Western Europe foreign missions most especially Germany always verify documents and based their denial on submitted documents. American Embassy is you and your confidence.

It is sad that wrong people get visa approval and people with good intentions get visa denial. That is one of the reasons why we pray to God for a favor . One thing again is your reason for the visit?

They also have statistics of those that were given visa in the past, if they returned and if they didn't. On what purpose were they given visa?? All these pieces of information could be used to be biased about future applicants.

In General, Visiting visa is the most difficult visa to get because you need to demonstrate to the VO that you gonna return home. This is a difficult task and Nigerian government ain't helping because all foreign mission thinks all Nigerians wanna run away. That's the struggle of living in a third world country Bro, Sad.

Edit: I just cannot believe that this answer went so viral, Thank you all for reading and for this reason, I have decided to upload the blue paper that is usually given by the VO once your Visa is denied.

If you check that law paragraph (214(b)) according to the US immigration law, It implies that the denied applicant is a potential immigrant. That means you need to really prove to them that you have strong ties to your country.

What are considered strong ties to my home country?

Ties are the various aspects of your life that bind you to your home country. Strong ties vary from country to country, city to city, and person to person, but examples include:

- Your job*;*
- Your home; and/or
- Your relationships with family and friends.

While conducting visa interviews, consular officers look at each application individually and consider the applicant's circumstances, travel plans, financial resources, and ties outside of the United States that will ensure the applicant's departure after a temporary visit.

Because of bad governance in third world countries, It is not that always easy for the citizens to even prove strong ties to your own country. This is absolutely sad because freedom is something that everyone should enjoy. Many of these countries are also trying to discourage economic immigrants. If you put all these factors together, getting a visa for some nationalities is just tough, but they did not blacklist Nigerians. I know that Indians, Bangladesh, and many other nationalities are also facing the same issue.

Source: https://www.dhs.gov/sites/default/files/publications/18_1009_S1_Entry-Exit-Overstay_Report.pdf.

Trump's latest immigration plan targets African countries whose citizens overstay visas

Update: If you compare these two available data published by the US Department of homeland security, You will notice that the percentage of overstayed visas increased in 2017 with 4,26%. The data for this year is not available. For those that can analyze further, I hope you know that this data gives a lot of deep information.

I hope that I have now perfectly answered your question.

Related Links

I'm an 18-year-old Nigerian and my B1/B2 application was denied last Thursday. The consular only asked if I was married and if I had kids and I said no, and he didn't even bother to ask what I was doing. What could have gone wrong?

Why does the US embassy look for a travel history of an applicant in Nigeria to decide whether the applicant can be granted a visa or not?

Why does the US embassy deny Nigerians that have had kids in the US previously renewal visa?

Why is it hard to get an American visa as a Nigerian?

What is the real reason the US suspends immigrant travel visas on Nigerians?

What are the B1 and B2 visa approval rates in Nigeria as of 2019?

Is it only the Nigerian Embassy that is not issuing a US visa, or is it the same thing in other countries?

Does the US Embassy confirm a bank statement while applying for a B1/B2 visa?

Will Trump ban Nigerians from traveling to the US with a B1 visa?

I am a Nigerian. When will the U.S. embassy start issuing visas from

What is the name Nigeria wants to change to?

Yome Agu

Some random politician suggested UAR (United African Republic or United Alkebulan Republic) a few months back.

And recently some random presidential candidate from Northern Nigeria said he would change the name from Nigeria to Nigrito if we elect him president (which I will not it sounds more colonial and racial like we were colonised by the Spanish or Portuguese).

I prefer Nigeria I mean it comes from an African word (specifically Tuareg), sure it was named by a British woman but I only feel it necessary to change colonial words, terms and names if it's fully Eurocentric or insulting towards us. The name Nigeria is neither insulting nor is it Eurocentric as it came from an African langauge.

Niger: African nation, named for the river Niger, mentioned by that name 1520s (Leo Africanus), speculated to be an alteration (by influence of Latin niger "black" but this was proven to be a misinterpretation) of a local Tuareg name □ □ □ □ □ □ □ □ □ □ □ □ □ □, egereou n-igereouen, from egereou "big river, sea" + n-igereouen, plural of that word. Translated in Arabic as nahr al-anhur "river of rivers."

And considering that there are Tuaregs in Nigeria (30,000) we could just say that the name is technically derived from a Nigerian langauge, the same for Niger they have the most Tuaregs.

So, is there need to change it if it was derived from an African langauge and a group of people who are also found in Nigeria?

I mean at least we aren't still named "Royal Niger Company Territories".

Tuareg, Tamajaq in Nigeria
Joshua Project profile for the Tuareg, Tamajaq in Nigeria
https://joshuaproject.net/people_groups/15223/NI

Related Links

If Nigeria had to be renamed, which name would you suggest?

Do you think it's time for the Philippines to change its name?

What other name can be given to Nigeria?

What is the old name of Nigeria?

If you can change countries' names which country will you change and why?

If you want to change the official name of Egypt, what would it be?

How do I officially change my name in Indonesia?

How do Nigerian names work?

How do you change your name in Nigeria after marriage?

How did Nigeria receive its name?

NIGERIA
2023: Without Shishi, Media Moguls Launch Obidient TV to Market Peter Obi #IgbereTV
Posted by

Frank Abah

2h

"It is getting beautifully interesting.

Some Good meaning Nigerians, Media moguls from North, South west, SouthSouth and SouthEast have launched Obedient TV. It will be broadcast Nationwide through Free on Air Channels. In Igbo, Hausa, Fulani, Yoruba and many other Nigerian languages.

This is not costing PETER OBI Shi Shi. This is from Obedient Volunteers.

This is not about IGBOs or CHRISTIANS.

This is about BETTER NIGERIA.

We are good people.

We deserve the best."

©□ Chinedu Obiakor

Credit: Igbere TV

Fourth Edition of the Forbes Rated Igbere TV Leadership Excellence Awards 2022 Holds Nov 5 at Transcorp Hilton Abuja.

Nomination Opens July1

Send Name, Brief Bio, email & Phone of your nominee to IgbereTV@gmail.com

... Endorsed by African Union, African Film Institute

What do Northern Nigerians think of Almajaries on the streets?

Victor Dirikebamor

Lives in Lagos, Nigeria2y

I'm not a northerner, but I've lived there and I can tell you many see it as a way of life, as there is no atom of disgust in their faces.

Not just in the North, but they also move down to the South begging for a living.

It was strange to me when I went to the North for the first time, seen dozens of children and adults; mostly disabled persons wanting to make a living by asking for financial help by the roadside which was strange to me because it's not very common at places I've stayed.

At Bauchi, my friend was eating in a restaurant, but he didn't seem to like his meal very much and was contemplating on eating more out of it, he pushed it to the side and kept talking, this little kids who have been standing by the side of the restaurant came quickly, took the food and shared it amongst themselves.

I was amazed at how they shared the little they got amongst themselves.

Epic right?

Well, I'm not privileged, I've experienced enough suffering in my short stay here on earth, and still battling to put two and two together but seeing these kids, in this manner, caused me to thank the maker and also feel sorry for them.

First, they don't go to school, and the North is majorly known for illiteracy.

Secondly, this innocent kids didn't ask to be born but some adult human beings felt they needed to prove their fertility, and increase their prestige around the community by bringing forth kids they can't even afford to raise.

It's a sorrowful scenery in places like Adamawa, Bauchi, Taraba and others.

The Kano State Governor Abdullahi Ganduje has recently banned little kids from street begging, also known as Almajiries, which seems to suggest that I'm not alone in my burdens.

According to him, kids should remain in the free government primary and secondary schools, where they are fed possibly once a day rather than being in the streets begging.

But this to me is treating the symptoms and not the virus.

He made no mention of the big issue; young men getting married and bringing forth kids they can't feed, which to me is the worst crime on humanity.

This is the very start of the problem, and if left unchecked will create bigger problems for Nigerians and the world at large.

The raging monster upon the land is population growth. In its presence, sustainability is but a fragile theoretical concept."

Related Links

Why do Nigerians think Nigeria is better than all other African nations?

What do you think of Nigerians?

What do you love about Nigerians?

What do people think about Nigeria and Nigerians?

Why do Nigerians think that Nigeria is the "giant" of Africa when other African countries don't even like Nigeria?

What do Nigerians think of Ghana and Ghanaians?

What do other nations think of Nigerians?

Do foreigners think that Nigerians still live in huts?

What do you dislike about Nigerians?

Why are Nigerians fleeing Nigeria?

The Nigerian Senate has disclosed that it would send a delegation toeet with embattled Nigerian lawmaker, Ike Ekweremadu, in London, the United Kingdom

Didier Champion

.

Follow
Lived in Kigali, RwandaUpdated 3y

Is there racism in African countries towards Africans from other African countries?

Yes.

There are way too many examples you cannot go throught all of them.

- From country to country, they tend to be for Economics reasons (Economic Migrants).
- Within the country's borders, it's just same old tribalism, identity politics, power hungry and hustle to the top (Igbo versus Fulanis in Nigeria, Hutu versus Tutsi before 1994 Rwanda, Kikuyus and Luos in Kenya, etc.
- The Northern Africa versus Sub-Saharan African countries. The easiest way to summarize it is that many of the African Arab countries see themselves as Arabs on the African continent. They generally look down black Africa for some strange reasons. Don't be surprised when a Moroccan friend in Morocco tells that they are finally going to "Africa" as if they Morocco is on Mars or Asia.

Today, If I had to pick one Xenophobia case in Africa, I would go for Nigeria and South Africa. The beef betwen Nigerians and South Africans has been going on for years.

In the 90's, many Nigerians moved to South Africa. In those times, Nigeria had a series of civil wars and tribal wars. Those Nigerians settle to South Africa. They started a series of succesful businesses. Like any refugees, you have to work harder than everybody. That's what the Nigerians did in South Africa.

With unemployment rates increasing in Black South Africans, they started shifting the blame to Nigerians.

" Nigerians are taking our jobs". Even the successful businessmen were told by the sittin president at the time " to share their secret of success" with South African nationals.

Is there racism between African national from different countries?

Yes, there is. However, since they are all black, I am not sure what to call it. Maybe, tribalism, nationalism, or just plain hatred. I am not sure. I would like to learn more though.

The article below is a good read to learn more about Nigeria and South Africa.

South Africans have never really wanted Nigerians

I picked these two countries because they are the largest economies we have in Africa. We kind of have a long way to go with Xenophobia, tribalism, and a multitude of other issues on the continent.

The correct term should be Xenophobia. Is black on black called “racism” too?

Yes, it does exist and from my understanding, many reasons are related to economics. Those from unfortunate countries moving to fortunate countries are looked down upon.

Hope this helps.

Didier Champion
Related Links

What's the most westernised African country?

Which is the most developed African country?

Which African country are you from?

What African country is the most successful today?

Why do South Africans hate other Africans?

Which African countries are relatively safe for tourists?

Are South Africans superior to Africans from other countries?

How do Africans feel about African Americans?

How many African countries have you visited and which one is your favorite and why?

Are white Africans considered African by native Africans?

News Nigeria
"Because I challenged OBASANJO on some of his policies, all of a sudden, he rushed down to my house unannounced, requested for pounded yam.
Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

21h

He came with all the fully armed security agents you can think of. My family was in serious panicking mood.

After the meal, he washed his hands and brought out a letter asking me to read and sign.

As I was reading, I saw it was my Resignation Letter as the PDP Chairman written by Obasanjo himself, a drop of water fell from my eyes, as I looked up, the security guards moved closer, I requested to go inside and get a pen, Obasanjo instantly brought out a pen from his pocket, 'this is pen sign it immediately".

I signed and he told me 'Chairman, you know that for what you said today, you shouldn't be my Chairman again..."

I remained dumb until he left.

Thirty minutes after, he came again, I thought they wanted to kill me, I went to meet him outside, he brought out the letter and said 'you didn't put date there, oya write today's date below your signature'. I did and he left.

It was a traumatic night for me and my family."

- Audu Ogbe

What makes Peter Obi capable of the Nigerian presidential seat? Does he have the experience and what does it take to be different from the others?

What makes Peter Obi capable of the Nigerian presidential seat?

Peter Gregory Obi is a Bridge-builder and proven Leader.

He is a bridge-builder who restored peace and order to a tumultuous Anambra State at the time he took over as governor in 2006. He is the harmonizer, capable of building consensus in the midst of conflicting interests and massive egos. While keeping faith with his vision and values.

He is a proven politician, with corporate management experience; as comfortable in the board room as in the hustings.

He is the only one of the aspirants whose antecedents clearly shows the ability to make our country pull its weight and meet its potentials. Hard proof, evidenced by his achievements as governor; no hubris. To make Nigeria a producer, not a consumer; a place of pride.

This man demonstrated ability to work with and collaborate with co-peer governors who voted him chairman despite being of a different party.

That certain doggedness: He claimed his mandate after a three-year litigation. He reclaimed his mandate after being impeached while refusing to bribe the legislators.

Does he have the experience and what does it take to be different from the others?

Yes. The record of his achievements - in education, health, patronage of made-in-Nigeria (Peugeot Automobile, Zinox Computers, Innosson Motors, etc), reduction of waste in government- in his two terms as governor clearly shows.

Humility.

Mr. Peter Obi combines humility with an uncommon doggedness in the pursuit of his goals. It is remarkable his fellow governors of different parties chose him to chairman of South-East Governors forum (2006–2014) and vice-chairman of Nigeria Governors forum (2008–2014). A bridge-builder.

International connections.

Who is a better qualified to be president than a former State governor, without any baggage, who can be invited to 10 Downing Street, in person, to discuss international trade and cooperation?

Achievements:

Peter Obi completed two terms as governor of Anambra State during which…

1. Anambra was the first State to commence Sub-Sovereign Wealth savings, the first of its kind in Sub-Saharan Africa. At a time many other Governors were leaving huge debts, he left the equivalent of $500 million Dollars in investment as well as local and foreign currency, including $156 million in Dollar-denominated bonds.
2. "Peter Obi was the only governor who met regularly with the Manufacturers Association of Nigeria (MAN) while in office.

a. Peter Obi, had "…special funds in the Bank of Industry (BoI) for manufacturers".

b. He "laid the foundation stone for the construction of Innoson Motor Manufacturing Company."

i. Cutic cable, in Nnewi, has a related story and there is close interface with firms like Chikason, Orange Drugs and other manufacturing companies in the state.

3. Development Partners quadrupled their interventions in the state at the time. Development partners such as UNDP, UNICEF, the World Bank, DFID, the European Union etc., which were not in Anambra State started working with the State.

a. Anambra was consistently adjudged one of the best states in development partnership and commitment to reforms for good governance.

4. He was recognized as Best Governor by the Millennium Development Goals Office (OSSAP-MDGs) and the UNDP in the implementation of their programmes in Nigeria.
5. Cleared off over N35 billion in arrears of pensions and gratuities.
6. The Nigerian Debt Management Office (DMO) rated Anambra as the least indebted state in Nigeria. In spite of visible and measurable achievements recorded in various sectors, the State under him did not borrow or raise bonds for her various projects.
7. Anambra State moved to Number One from 24th out of 36 States in National Examination Council (NECO) and West African Examination Council (WAEC) examinations for three consecutive years, after the return of schools to their original owners – Voluntary Agencies (Churches).
8. Under him, Anambra State procured and distributed over 30,000 computers to secondary schools, including 22,500 from HP. The biggest of such projects is in the Middle-East and Africa, according to Mr. Fabrice Campoy, the Managing Director for Personal Systems Group HP Inc.
9. Provided Microsoft Academies to over 500 secondary schools, described as the biggest such deployment in Africa so far by the Head of Microsoft in Nigeria, Mr. Ken Span.

Related Links

Is Peter Obi capable of the presidential sit? What experience does he have and what makes him different from the others?

What do Nigerians think about Peter Obi as Atiku's running mate?

What makes Peter Obi capable of the presidential sit? What experience does he have and what makes him different from the others?

What are your thoughts on the forthcoming Nigerian presidential election?

How excited are you about an Atiku/Peter Obi ticket in the Nigerian 2019 elections?

Nigerians seem excited by the prospects of Atiku/Peter Obi. What would Nigerians do if Buhari and the cabal successfully rig the 2019 presidential election?

Does Peter Obi stand a chance of being Nigeria's next president?

Who is considered the best head of state that Nigeria ever had?

What are the chances of Peter Obi becoming the Nigerian President based on analysis?

What would happen to Nigeria if Buhari wins a second term?

Why can Nigeria, the most populous country in Africa, the continent's largest economy, be described as a colossus with feet of clay?

Remi Beral

.
Follow
big history buff 1 year

Nigeria may be the richest country in Africa but it is deceptively rich. It is already (by far) the most populous country on the continent. Its economic growth, in recent years, has been lower than its population growth. Its population is very poor and the maximum inequalities. GDP per capita in PPP (purchasing power parity) is very low. At its highest it was $5500 in 2014. In 2019 it was $5300. It is the 16th GDP per capita PPP on the continent (out of 53 countries).

This situation is explained by the fact that Nigeria, like most African countries, is a rentier economy. Most of the wealth comes from the export of raw materials (crude oil, cocoa beans, rubber, gold, food, etc.). In Nigeria, the main export resource is oil and mining. In total, this represents 20% of GDP. The main problem being that it is foreign companies that exploit the oil and therefore export the profits to their country of origin (Total in France for example). In the event of a crisis, the country will see its exports drop, so its economy will be very hard hit.
Another major problem: imports. The country mainly contents itself with exporting resources. But for everything that is finished products it is often necessary to rely on imports. Gasoline, for example, is often an imported product. Yes, Africa's largest oil producer and exporter is a major importer of petrochemical products. The reason is simple: the factories are not there. To use oil, it must be refined, but the country's refining capacity is low. We find the same case in many African countries. We export resources and import finished products. In the event of a crisis, exports fall but imports cannot be reduced due to the inability to be self-sufficient. We complain in France of import a lot of Chinese products but for many African countries it's even worse because they produce almost nothing locally. To take another example we can look at agriculture. The country exports a lot of agricultural products to run European factories. In return, European countries sell processed products. So Nigeria buys chocolate made with the cocoa it has sold. In times of food crisis, we sometimes prefer to export (it brings in money) rather than distribute food. A certain number of food problems are due to this corrupt system (even the anti-corruption agency is accused of corruption…) which favors exports to get rich rather than local development and investments. is even worse because they produce almost nothing on site. To take another example we can look at agriculture. The country exports a lot of agricultural products to run European factories. In return, European countries sell processed products. So Nigeria buys chocolate made with the cocoa it has sold. In times of food crisis, we sometimes prefer to export (it brings in money) rather than distribute food. A certain number of food problems are due to this corrupt system (even the anti-corruption agency is accused of corruption…) which favors exports to get rich rather than local development and investments. is even worse because they produce almost nothing on site. To take another example we can look at agriculture. The country exports a lot of agricultural products to run European factories. In return, European countries sell processed products. So Nigeria buys chocolate made with the cocoa it has sold. In times of food crisis, we sometimes prefer to export (it brings in money) rather than distribute food. A certain number of food problems are due to this corrupt system (even the anti-corruption agency is accused of corruption…) which favors exports to get rich rather than local development and investments. The country exports a lot of agricultural products to run European factories. In return, European countries sell processed products. So Nigeria buys chocolate made with the cocoa it has sold. In times of food crisis, we sometimes prefer to export (it brings in money) rather than distribute food. A certain number of food problems are due to this corrupt system (even the anti-corruption agency is accused of corruption…) which favors exports to get rich rather than local development and investments. The country exports a lot of agricultural products to run European factories. In return, European countries sell processed products. So Nigeria buys chocolate made with the cocoa it has sold. In times of food crisis, we sometimes prefer to export (it brings in money) rather than distribute food. A certain number of food problems are due to this corrupt system (even the anti-corruption agency is accused of corruption…) which favors exports to get rich rather than local development and investments. we sometimes prefer to export (it brings in money) rather than distribute food. A certain number of food problems are due to this corrupt system (even the anti-corruption agency is accused of corruption…) which favors exports to get rich rather than local development and investments. we sometimes prefer to export (it brings in money) rather than distribute food. A certain number of food problems are due to this corrupt system (even the anti-corruption agency is accused of corruption…) which favors exports to get rich rather than local development and investments.

So Nigeria is not a colossus but simply a big African economy. The country is totally dependent on imports of finished products and exports of raw materials.

It can be noted, however, that more and more African countries seem to want to invest in industry to limit their dependence. Nigeria is currently investing heavily to increase its refining capacity. With the coronavirus crisis, the country risks suffering major economic problems. Exports collapsed (especially oil).

billionaire Aliko Dangote's $12 billion refinery is expected to solve the country's oil problems. Nigeria might even export refined oil. To be continued…

Questions similaires

Quel pays d'Afrique sera le premier à devenir un pays du premier monde ?

Pourquoi l'Afrique est-elle si reléguée en termes de développement ?

Pourquoi certains qualifient-ils l'Afrique de pays et non de continent ?

Pourquoi l'Afrique du Sud est-il devenu le pays le plus riche de son continent ?

Pourquoi le continent africain n'a-t-il jamais dominé le monde ?

Quel est le pays le plus développé d'Afrique ?

Quels sont les pays du monde qui enfoncent l'Afrique toujours plus dans la pauvreté ?

L'Afrique subsaharienne pourra-t-elle un jour atteindre le niveau de développement du reste du monde ?

Quel est le pays le plus puissant d'Afrique ?

Pourquoi la France est-elle considérée comme le pays le plus avancé d'Europe ?

News Nigeria
I'm offering Peter Obi golden opportunity to be my VP, I can't be his - Rabiu Kwankwaso

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

32m

Rabiu Kwankwaso, presidential candidate of the New Nigeria People's Party (NNPP), says his party is offering "a golden opportunity" to Peter Obi, standard-bearer of the Labour Party (LP), to be his running mate.

Kwankwaso spoke on Saturday with journalists after inaugurating the state office of the NNPP in Gombe state.

The presidential candidate said if he becomes the running mate to Obi, the NNPP will collapse.

According to him, the south-east will miss a golden opportunity if the LP candidate is not his running mate in 2023.

"From the discussion with the Labour Party, the main issue was who becomes the president if the parties merge," Premium Times quoted him as saying.

"At the end of the day, some of our representatives thought that there should be a criteria in terms of age, qualification, offices held, performance and so on," the NNPP candidate said.

"Of course the other side wouldn't want that. Most of the people from there believe that the presidency has to go there. If I decide to be a vice presidential candidate for anybody in this country; NNPP will collapse, because the party is based on what we have built in the last 30 years.

“I served for 17 years as a civil servant; we are talking of 47 years of very serious hard work that is what is rarely holding NNPP now.

“Even if my friend [Peter Obi] wants to accept the vice presidential candidate, some people in the south-east will not accept, that is not strategic.

“This is a golden opportunity, if they lose it, it will be a disaster.”

NIGERIA.
Posted by

Frank Abah

"Still OBIDIENT from Paris." - Paul Okoye.

From Portugal to Paris, Psquare body reporting Peter Obi in the city of love.

We are so excited to see these two together ❤️

📸: @peterpsquare @iamkingrudy (Instagram)

Wake Up Africa!

Why do Nigerians have too many mosquitoes?

Answered by

Boris Ezomo

Jun 27

Friend, you think there are many mosquitoes in Nigeria?

So funny. Try the mosquitoes in the Russian tundra

Those are mosquitoes on steroids compared to the teeny ones in Nigeria.

So why are there so many mosquitoes in the Tundra? Because it is sparsely populated with large areas of stagnant water. This is However natural.

What is not natural are the blocked drains with stagnant water we have in Nigeria. That allows the mosquitoes to breed.

The problem however is that those hyper steroid Russian mosquitoes do not carry malaria. The Nigerian one does.

Related questions

Is it reasonable for the Maasai tribe in Africa to believe that if a man thinks he is a woman, then there is something wrong with him?

Why are teachers on strike in Ghana?

What language is expected to be more important in Africa? French, Arabic or Swahili? (Don't mention English)

Was Europe & the Arab world prior to the 21st century worse to be a woman than in Africa, Americas & South Asia?

Is it true that France still has a huge influence in Africa, like almost as if they're practicing neo-colonialism?

Given the Ukraine war induced shortage, Why have African countries not invested in Wheat agriculture? Is Wheat not profitable

At least 27 people died trying to cross into Spanish territory from Morocco, how is this being received in your country? Would love to hear from Moroccans.

Why have African countries not invested in wheat farming?

How will the gold in Uganda affect the world?

How did imperialism affect African political systems?

In which part of South Africa are the farms of the killed farmers? How do south African farmers protect themselves? How are South African farmers taking precautions?

Is South Africa the most developed nation on the continent of Africa? If the case, why cannot South African passport holders (unlike the British) visit Australia, Canada & New Zealand visa free as tourists on holiday? Many wealthy people live there?

Why didn't the first civilization start in South Africa (the location of the place where the first humans were)?

Do you think Ziingo Nigeria is the best online shopping platform in Lagos Nigeria?

What is the state of preparedness for the fight against monkey pox for the African nation?

News Nigeria
Unknown Gunmen have gotten to Abuja? And they helped Boko Haram members escape from Kuje prison? What has Nigeria become? Is anyone in charge of this country?

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Just now

And when Gov Ortom said bandits could overrun Aso Rock and Abuja on Channels, he was almost yanked off air!

First of all, how will a government keep high profile terrorists in a medium security prison? It makes no sense and is a dereliction of duty. America keeps al-Qaeda and Islamic State prisoners in Guantanamo Bay. These guys should have been at Ita Oko under heavy military guard!

Boko Haram's attack on Kuje, which freed many arrested terrorists is a very sad development. Because unknown to the public, the release of those terrorists was one of the things the Buhari administration was using to negotiate with them. Now they have escaped, Buhari has lost that leverage!

Reno

#TableShaker

NIGERIA.

·

Following

Posted by

Frank Abah

20h

History Made As Calabar Port Comes To Live With The Arrival Of A General Cargo Vessel Of 190 Metres With 204 Heavy Duty Trucks, 22 Cubic Metres Of Pipes And Containers.

This Is The First Time serious Effort Are Put In Place To Decongest Lagos Port.

NIGERIA.
Posted by

Frank Abah

Sat

Elon Musk said American didn't vote out Trump so that Biden will come in to save America. They voted out Trump and voted in Biden because they wanted less drama.

Nigeria needs a President that comes with little or no drama. A family man, no age or certificate problem. Not a father to different children from diverse women or married to many wives. No drug dealing problems, no corruption problems, can travel to any country in the World. No health problems.

The only one that fits this bill is Peter Gregory Obi.

Nigerians Choose Wisely!

Obidient Movement 💯🇳🇬

Otuekong Ekere

NIGERIA
Nigeria Chief of Army Staff Lt General Farouk Yahaya built and handed over a one bedroom bungalow to one civilian, Adisa Babalola Rasaq.

Posted by

Frank Abah

Sun

Oga Adisa bin work as carpenter for di Nigerian Army Supply and Transport Unit Eleyele Ibadan as civilian staff from 1957 to 1995.

Di Army say dem do am in di spirit of di Nigerian Army Day celebration and as part of dia Corporate Social Responsibility.

Credit: BBC News Pidgin

News Nigeria

Mass burial in South Africa 🇿🇦 for teenagers that died in a nightclub in South Africa 🇿🇦

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Wed

Teenagers within the age bracket of 13 to 17

Nigerian authorities criminally charge 2 journalists over political reporting.

A police officer ties a crime scene tape in Owo, Ondo, Nigeria on June 6, 2022. Authorities charged Wikkitimes publisher Haruna Mohammed Salisu and reporter Idris Kamal with criminal conspiracy and defamation on June 28. (Reuters/Temilade Adelaja)

Abuja, July 8, 2022 – Nigerian authorities should immediately drop all charges against publisher Haruna Mohammed Salisu and reporter Idris Kamal and allow journalists to work free from legal harassment, the Committee to Protect Journalists said Friday.

On June 27, police in the city of Bauchi, the capital of northern Bauchi state, arrested and detained Salisu and Kamal, both with the privately owned Wikkitimes news website, according to the journalists and their lawyer, Idrees Gambo, all of whom spoke to CPJ by phone, and a statement by the International Press Center, a local press freedom organization.

Police released the journalists later that day but ordered them to return for further questioning the following day, they said.

On June 28, police took Salisu and Kamal to a local magistrate court, where they were charged with criminal conspiracy, defamation, and cyberstalking over reporting published by Wikkitimes on May 18, according to the journalists and their lawyer.

They were held overnight and then released from custody on June 29, after providing sureties on bonds of 100,000 naira (US$238) each, Salisu and Gambo told CPJ, adding that the prosecution dropped the cyberstalking charge as the court lacked jurisdiction. Their next court date was scheduled for July 25.

Convictions for defamation and conspiracy each carry up to two years in prison and an unspecified fine, according to Gambo.

"The prosecution of Wikkitimes journalists Haruna Mohammed Salisu and Idris Kamal offers yet another example of the criminalization of the press in Nigeria," said Angela Quintal, CPJ's Africa program coordinator, from Durban, South Africa. "Authorities should swiftly reform the country's laws to prevent the targeting of journalists, drop all charges against Salisu and Kamal, and allow them to work without fear of arrest or harassment."

That May 18 Wikkitimes report concerned threats against Husseini Musa Gwaba, the Bauchi state chairperson of the All Progressives Congress opposition political party prior to his death in May, and alleged that former APC member Yakubu Shehu Abdullahi had been displeased by Gwaba's appointment as chair.

Abdullahi filed a complaint over the article, which sparked the journalists' arrest, according to Salisu and the International Press Center statement.

Bauchi state police texted Salisu on June 18 asking him to come to the state's Criminal Investigation Department for questioning, the journalist said, adding that he was out of town and agreed to meet with officers the following week.

Salisu went to the station with Kamal on June 27, and when Salisu told police that Kamal had authored the May 18 report, officers detained both journalists, according to those sources. Mohammed and Salisu told CPJ that officers encouraged inmates to slap and kick the journalists while in detention until Salisu offered to pay the inmates 3,000 nairas (US$7) to stop.

When CPJ called Abdullahi for comment, he hung up after a CPJ representative identified themselves. He did not answer subsequent calls or text messages seeking comment.

CPJ called and texted Bauchi state police spokesperson Ahmed Mohammed Wakil and Ali Shehu, a Bauchi state Ministry of Justice lawyer, but did not receive any replies.

News Nigeria
UPDATED: Despite worsening insecurity, attack on his convoy, prison, Buhari jets out again

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Wed

A day after Nigeria witnessed some of the most daring attacks by gunmen, President Buhari is set to travel out of the country.

News Nigeria earlier reported about a presidential team in Katsina, the ambush of security officials in the same state, the attack on a major prison in Abuja and another killing of a police officer and kidnap of an expatriate in Kwara.

While Nigerians are still lamenting the daring nature of the attacks, a presidential aide announced that Mr Buhari will travel to Dakar today.

"President Muhammadu Buhari will depart Abuja Wednesday, July 6, to participate in the International Development Association (IDA) for Africa Summit in Dakar, Senegal," the president's office said in a Wednesday statement.

Many Nigerians have also condemned the frequent trips by the president while the nation suffers deteriorating security and economic situation.

However, Mr Buhari's spokesperson, Femi Adesina, defended the frequent foreign trips including the latest Senegal visit.

"Yes, the president should go," Mr Adesina told State House journalists Wednesday. "Because there's an international conference meant for heads of states and presidents, he should attend. You should never give in to terrorists. The moment theories begin to stop you from doing things, then we might as well throw up our hands in surrender. The President should go ahead. Yes, it's an international obligation."

Frequent Foreign Trips

Daily Trust had reported that in 2022 alone, President Buhari embarked on at least 10 foreign trips, with the latest being a state visit to Portugal, last week.

Before this, President Buhari had attended the 26th Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM), held from June 20 to 26, 2022 in Kigali, Rwanda.

NIGERIA.
Posted by

Frank Abah

23h
Dear Deji and co....

You literally don't know about The Baba-Ahmed Dynasty from where Peter intelligently picked his VP.

Baba Ahmed dynasty is one of the most powerful Northern Nigerian families.

Ibrahim Baba Ahmed led the respected Supreme Council for Sharia in Nigeria as its President General.

Ibrahim is a brother to Obi's VP. You gerrit?

Another notable member of the dynasty is Hakeem Baba Ahmed who is the spokesperson of the revered Northern Elders Forum NEF. Hakeem is a strong voice in the North. You gerrit?

Northern Celebrity Ummi Baba Ahmed is not one to ignore. Just be calming down.

Our man, Yusuf Datti Baba Ahmed owns two universities - the Baze University from where the likes of Dino Melaye, Osita and Patrick Uba graduated from... and Baba Ahmed University in Kano which has one of Africa's Software Engineering departments.

The Baba Ahmed University in Kano gave Yusuf Datti Baba Ahmed a certain level of influence in Kano politics with the likes of HRH,Alh. Nasir Ado Bayero, The Emir of Bichi and HE Dist. Sen. Ibrahim Shekarau, CON, PEN, Sardaunan Kano forming part of the University's Board of Trustees.

On a personal level, Yusuf is one of the best economists in Nigeria. He holds a degree in Economics. He is a multi billionaire who lives a quite life just like Peter Obi despite his political, business and academic accomplishments at the young age of 46. Yusuf was a senator and a House Of Rep member where he became a voice against corruption.

With the selection of Yusuf Datti Baba Ahmed, Peter Obi has earned my trust.

Tell Sowore's frienemy, Deji that his ignorance of the Baba Ahmed dynasty has been noticed. Ask his likes to wait for the deployment of Northern Structures like the Northern Elders Forum and Supreme Council for Sharia in Nigeria which are controlled by the Baba Ahmed family.

Reno knows what was coming hence he started sowing seeds of ethnoreligious division between the North and Peter Obi. Reno knows that Peter Obi is a better Northern ally than BAT. I, Charles Awuzie cannot count how many Strong Northern youth leaders who have sent me evidence of a massive Northern coalition for Peter Obi. The North of 2022 is not the North of 2015 - there's a massive political consciousness sweeping through the North which places competence over religion and tribe. The PDP and APC impoverished the North as a political tool to manipulate their massive votes but the Labour Party through Peter Baba Ahmed will undo their weaponized poverty.

If you are among those who laughed at the emergence of Yusuf Baba Ahmed as LP VP, you should laugh at your ignorance. Baba Ahmes dynasty has been activated. E go shock you.

My name is #CharlesAwuzie and I am confident in #ObiBabaAhmed .

Share this...

Credit: Dr Charles Awuzie

News Nigeria
BREAKING: Hours After Visiting Buhari, OPEC Sec-gen, Barkindo, Is Dead
Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Wed

Barkindo died on Tuesday evening, according to the Managing Director of the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation, Mele Kyari.

“We lost our esteemed Dr Muhammad Sanusi Barkindo,” Kyari said in a tweet.

“He died at about 11pm yesterday 5th July 2022. Certainly a great loss to his immediate family, the NNPC, our country Nigeria, the OPEC, and the global energy community.

Is Lagos a Yoruba state?

Yome Agu

· Follow Former Council Member at Andromeda Council Intelligence (1900–2012) Jul 3
Lagos is a Nigerian state and it belongs to no-one but Nigerians.

Related Links

When did the Yoruba religion begin? How old is it?

Where did the Yoruba language originated?

Why are Yoruba men called "Yoruba demons"?

Who is the founder of the Yoruba?

Where did Yoruba people originate from?

How many Yoruba states are in Nigeria?

How did Lagos end up in Yoruba territory?

How do I learn Yoruba language?

What are the Yoruba states in Nigeria?

NIGERIA.
Posted by

Frank Abah

Jul 4

There was a time Nigeria was so good with action movie. You cannot talk about Nigerian action movies without mentioning J.T. Tom West.

You cannot mention State of Emergency without mentioning J.T. Tom West— which he starred alongside Saint Obi, Asiegbu, Justus Esiri, etc Produced in 2000.

He played a significant and action role in Labista where he starred alongside Jerry Amilo, Emmanuel Ehummadu (Labista), Ernest Asuzu, etc produced in 2004.

J.T. Tom West was born in Port Harcourt, Rivers State, Nigeria. His full name is Joe Tamuno-Bibidamaa Tom-West.

He was also known for his role in Otondo (2004), Laviva (2007) and Born 2 Suffer (2002).

He died on September 28, 2006 in Lagos, after being involved in a fatal accident.

He was in blockbuster action movies in the late 90s and early 2000.

Credit: Onukwube Tv

News Nigeria
PHOTO NEWS: Funeral prayer for OPEC Secretary-General, Mohammed Sanusi Barkindo, on Wednesday.

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Wed

Barkindo died on Tuesday night in Abuja hours after he was honoured by President Muhammadu Buhari.

Salis Lawal

News Nigeria

PHOTOS: Buhari swears in new ministers Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong
Jul 6a

President Muhammadu Buhari has sworn in seven new ministers on Wednesday.

The ministers sworn-in today will replace former ministers who resigned to partake in the last presidential primary election.

NIGERIA
Young Girl Donates Her Life Savings to #ObiDatti

Campaign | Eagle Media TV Nigeria
Posted by

Frank Abah

17h

She heared Peter was on a Live Radio Interview in her neighborhood, she quickly Withdrew her savings and rushed to meet him at the station.

Imagine the content of the screenshot below! Why are Africans always treated in such inhuman manners? Is it not the same white people who are mistr...A

NIGERIA
Posted by

Ignatius Ohonsi

Tue
Imagine the content of the screenshot below! Why are Africans always treated in such inhuman manners? Is it not the same white people who are mistreating their black counterparts who preach that they are both created by the same God?

Why are scammers/scammers socially accepted in Nigeria compared to most European countries?

Jerome Cohen Versatile opponent. (1970 – today) Translator · lun.

Claudio Oliveira

Why are scammers socially accepted in Nigeria compared to most European countries?
It is socially accepted in Nigeria because this country is not a good place to live in, and it is clear that they do not have many opportunities in Nigeria.

With so much corruption and nepotism, many young Nigerians have nothing to lose, so they start scamming people for money, out of desperation, for quick “success” without morality or even remorse.

Due to severe poverty and lack of opportunity, this dangerous illegal activity is unfortunately part of Nigerian culture, to be honest.

Similar questions

The Malian authorities are thought to create a national currency. What are the chances of success with this currency and what are the risks of failure knowing that Mali is a continental country without great resources?

I am a well-educated Tunisian young man, but many European women see us as scammers and fraudsters. Why ? Why don't they appreciate that we are ambitious and responsible?

Why is the scam on the rise?

Why are several European countries still monarchies?

Can you explain with hard facts how Nigeria or other governments of African countries unequally distribute wealth to the minor noble classes and plunge 97% of the people into extreme poverty?

What's weird in Nigeria but normal in the rest of the world?

Why are most countries suspicious of Russia?

Why were most African countries colonized by France?

Why do most African countries remain poor?

Anna Sorokin, the con artist who inspired a Netflix series, explores a new gig: NFTs. A total of 10 NFTS will be

News Nigeria
PHOTO NEWS: President Muhammadu Buhari meets with Portuguese President, Marcelo Rebelo de Sousa, and receives Portugese National Honour in Lisbon, Portugal, on Thursday.
Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Jun 30

Credit: State House

How are relations between Nigerian Muslims and Christians?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

.
Follow
Nigerian Updated 2y

Politically fraught, economically unequal and individually variable.

Sometime early last week, Nigeria's first President in the Fourth Republic, Olusegun Obasanjo, stated that Boko Haram was for the 'Islamisation' and 'Fulanisation' of the country. It was predictably controversial if unsurprising. I doubt there is any Nigerian Christian who does not 'know' of the Muslim plan to sweep down south and 'dip the Quran in the Atlantic'. That creates familiar categories into which analysis of events in Nigeria are usually fit in. More on this later.

Other than the Federal Capital making a case for Libertarians, it is immediately obvious that absolute poverty in Nigeria is clustered in the North. While not all poor Nigerians are Muslim, most poor Nigerians are.

Poverty and levels of education correlate, so most rich(er) Nigerians usually encounter Muslims in various states of servitude. Dipping the Quran in the Atlantic should be no hassle, they are already in southern Nigeria; they are security guards, drive people, haul goods in the market, clip toenails, sell fruits and so on.

The effect, as I see it, is that essentially Muslim society in Nigeria, especially in the North from where the majority are from, is like an hourglass: dense at the top and bottom, narrow in the middle. This is in contrast to Christian society which is a classical pyramid. So, generally, Muslims are clustered at the bottom, and their presence at the top is seen as undeserved, the result of government design, courtesy the Islamophilia of the British and the willingness of the post-colonial Northern elite to sanction violence in protection of their interests. General Obasanjo, as he used to be, was a rare Christian Head of State in our era of coups.

The result of the above is that Nigerians will answer this question differently, based on their personal interactions. A fair rule of thumb, I think, would be that rich Nigerians would be understandably political correct, poorer Nigerians blunter and the poorest the bluntest.

Personally? Familiar talking points don't leave me enthused. So I'll answer by quoting the rest of the ex-President's comments.

Tracing the origin of the security threat to the Boko Haram insurgency and cattle rustling in the north, Obasanjo said: "They have both incubated and developed beyond what Nigeria can handle alone. They are now combined and internationalized with ISIS in control.

"It is no longer an issue of lack of education and lack of employment for our youths in Nigeria which it began as, it is now West African fulanization, African Islamization and global organized crimes of human trafficking, money laundering, drug trafficking, gun trafficking, illegal mining and regime change.

"Yet, we could have dealt with both earlier, and nip them in the bud, but Boko Haram boys were seen as rascals not requiring serious attention in administering holistic measures of stick and carrot.

"And when we woke up to the reality, it was turned to industry for all and sundry to supply materials and equipment that were already outdated and that were not fit for active military purpose.

"Soldiers were poorly trained for the unusual mission, poorly equipped, poorly motivated, poorly led and made to engage in propaganda rather than achieving results.

"Intelligence was poor and governments embarked on games of denials while paying ransoms which strengthened the insurgents and yet governments denied payments of ransoms. Today, the insecurity issue has gone beyond the wit and capacity of Nigerian Government or even West African Governments."

In other words, after they created a situation which now requires spending they won't be alive to repay and obeisance, again, at the feet of our white Fathers. A peculiar humiliation their wealth prevents them from fairly appreciating. His proposed solution:

"Government must appreciate where we are, summon each group that should make contributions one by one and subsequently collectively seek the way forward for all hands on deck and with the holistic approach of stick and carrot.

"There should be no sacred cow. Some of the groups that I will suggest to be contacted are: Traditional rulers, past heads of Service Chiefs (no matter how competent or incompetent they have been and how much they have contributed to the mess we are in), past heads of paramilitary or organizations, private sector, civil society , community leaders particularly in the most affected areas, present and past governors, present and past local government leaders, religious leaders, past heads of states, past Intelligence chiefs, past heads of Civil Service and relevant current and retired diplomats, members of opposition and any groups that may be deemed relevant.

Obasanjo: Boko Haram is for Fulanisation, Islamisation

So the people who created, and as he admits, are profiting from the problem?

Bruh

But of course, the focus has been on 'Christian' and 'Muslim' because they are familiar terms. Familiar and irrelevant.

Back to my safe space from this cruel world.

This is how a proper suicide charge against overwhelming numbers is led GOT fans: r/anime - Rage, my soldiers [Attack on Titan Season 3 Part 2]

Related Links

What do Nigerian Muslims think about Nigerian Christians?

As a Muslim, do you think Nigeria should be divided into Christian and Muslim countries?

What do Nigerian Christians think about Nigerian Muslims?

Why can't the Northern Nigerian Muslims allow their daughters to marry Christians?

How are relations in general between Muslim and Christian in Nigeria? Is there any mixed towns/cities? Have you ever had a member of the other religion as a neighbor?

If the Christians of Nigeria are more educated/developed, why is the richest man in Nigeria a Muslim?

Why do the Nigerians have armed conflict between the Muslims and Christians?

Why are there so many devoted Christians today in Nigeria?

Why is Nigeria totally anti-Islamic?

Why do some Christians and some Muslims hate each other especially in Nigeria?

NIGERIAN
Posted by

Frank Abah

2h

"I am the most successful Nigerian artiste of all time. I came into Lagos from Jos having nobody. And I built a record label on my back. The people I built at Chocolate City are in big positions in big organizations across the world. I've made executives. I've made stars. I took Ice Prince from scratch & watched him grow. I was there when he bought his first home. I've seen #Dice Ailes, #Brymo, #Blaqbonez, #Ckay etc. These are my legacies" - MI Abaga

8 greatest African women you should learn about.

NIGERIAN
Posted by

Frank Abah

1) queen 👸 moremi of ile Ife Nigeria 🇳🇬

2)- queen 👸 Amina of Zaria, Nigeria 🇳🇬

3)- Queen Makeda of sheba, Ethiopia 🇪🇹

4)- Queen Kandake, Ethiopia 🇪🇹

5)- Nefertiti of ancient kemet, Egypt 🇪🇬

6)- Yaa Asantewa of Ashanti kingdom, Ghana 🇬🇭

7)- Queen Nandi of Zulu kingdom, South Africa 🇿🇦

8)Joyce Ntila banda. Malawian 🇲🇼.

Thèse great women existed, but we were not taught about them in schoòl.

Credit to the Original Author
#Naijahotstreetjamzpromoters

Welcome to Abuja, the capital city of Nigeria! 🇳🇬

NIGERIAN
Posted by
Frank Abah

Abuja is situated in the heart of the country, and it's a city that beautifully blends modernity with tradition.

One of the first things you'll notice about Abuja is its impressive infrastructure. The city was carefully planned and designed, with wide roads, well-maintained parks, and stunning architectural marvels.

As you drive through the city, you'll be greeted by the iconic Nigerian National Mosque, a magnificent structure that showcases the Islamic heritage of the country.

On the other side, you'll find the Nigerian National Christian Centre, a symbol of Nigeria's Christian population.

These landmarks not only serve as places of worship but also as significant cultural and architectural attractions.

Aso Rock, a massive monolith, is another must-see in Abuja. It's not only a geological wonder but also the residence of the Nigerian President.

The rock is surrounded by lush greenery, providing a picturesque backdrop to the city. From the top of Aso Rock, you can enjoy panoramic views of Abuja and its surrounding landscapes.

Abuja is a city that celebrates its cultural diversity. The Nigerian National Museum is a treasure trove of artifacts and exhibits that showcase the rich history and heritage of Nigeria's various ethnic groups.

You can immerse yourself in the vibrant traditions, art, and folklore of the country as you explore the museum's extensive collection.

When it comes to experiencing the local lifestyle, Abuja has an array of options. The bustling markets of Wuse and Garki offer a glimpse into the daily lives of the people, where you can find everything from fresh produce to traditional crafts.

If you're in the mood for relaxation, head to Jabi Lake, a serene oasis where you can enjoy water activities or simply unwind by the tranquil shores.

Abuja is also known for its vibrant nightlife. The city is dotted with trendy bars, clubs, and restaurants where you can enjoy a variety of cuisines, including delicious Nigerian dishes.

From suya (grilled meat) to jollof rice, your taste buds are in for a treat!

Beyond the city limits, Abuja is surrounded by natural beauty. The nearby Gurara Falls and Zuma Rock are popular day trip destinations, offering breathtaking scenery and opportunities for outdoor adventures.

You are sure to meet beautiful ladies in Abuja as women from different parts of the country and beyond come regularly to this beautiful city.

So, get ready to explore Abuja and immerse yourself in its captivating blend of modernity and culture.

Credit: Eddie the Don I Facebook

N1 Million Per Month: Wigwe University's Accommodation to Become Most Expensive in Nigeria.

NIGERIAN
Posted by
Frank Abah

2h

Ahead of its official launch, Wigwe University, Isiokpo, Rivers State, has released its accommodation fees and plan.

The university was founded by Dr Herbert Wigwe, who died alongside his wife, Mrs Doreen Wigwe and son, Mr Chizi Wigwe and others on February 9, 2024, in a helicopter accident.

Pictures of the different accommodation packages in the institution would make it the most expensive in the country.

The accommodation plan for students at Wigwe University, Isiokpo, Rivers State, has been made public. The varsity would officially launch in 130 days and appointed Professor Miles Davis from the United States as its first vice-chancellor.

Accommodation plan at Wigwe University

A breakdown of the accommodation fees and plan of the varsity was published on its official website.

Two apartment plans were provided for students. The luxury single-bedroom plan costs N1 million per month, while the premium one-en-suite bedroom plan is N3.8 million per session.

The accommodation plan as seen on the school's site, reads:

"Accommodation Fee.

"Luxury Single Bedroom Apartment Plan ₦1,000,000 / Per Month.

"Premium One En-Suite Bedroom Plan ₦3,845,000 / Per Session.

"Classic 1 Plan ₦3,707,000 / Per Session.

"Classic 2 Plan ₦3,500,000 / Per Session."

Pictures of the accommodation plans were also published on the school's site.

Wigwe University was founded by Dr Herbert Wigwe, who died in a helicopter accident with his wife and son in February 2024. Once it is launched, the university's accommodation may become the costliest in the country.

Meanwhile, it was previously reported that Wigwe University was set to become the most expensive varsity in Nigeria. As the tuition fees for a student is close to #25million per year.

Copied.

Nigeria's 'elites' live on a different plane of reality.

Emmanuel-Francis' Knowledge Works
Posted by

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

Nigeria's 'elites' live on a different plane of reality.

Modest sum of N54 million or 135 times the annual minimum wage compounded into greater than N20 billion in six years. If my maths is mathing this return ain't 1x, 2x, 5x, 10x, 100x or even a 1000x. My calculator must be broken because we're entering into a realm of a tens of millions. What's a Warren, and who is a Buffet?

He said that he founded Alpha Trust Investment Club (ATIC) Limited in 2018 and they started it with a modest sum of N54 million, but the investment was now worth over N20 billion.

It's a shame that Nigeria forced him to be a police man first. Imagine the returns if he'd gone straight to business. I can only hope that now he's a civilian he opens a YouTube channel to share his nuggets of business wisdom.

"I thank NPF for the opportunity to serve and Nigeria for investing in me through training at home and abroad. I have been privileged to be trained in Ghana, England, Israel, California and more.

"I have served abroad in the United Nations, and this career gave me opportunities for self development, and these have prepared me for retirement. It's been a unique privilege serving Anambra.

"I'm proud of my men at Anambra State Police Command. You are gallant, heroic and never giving up. We didn't achieve anything through individual efforts but with other sister agencies," he stated.

He said that he founded Alpha Trust Investment Club (ATIC) Limited in 2018 and they started it with a modest sum of N54 million, but the investment was now worth over N20 billion.

He said the club currently has investments worth over N20billion, and that as he retired, he would go into business full time, ready to give Dangote a run for his money.

My firm now worth N20bn, will give Dangote a run for his money —Outgoing Anambra CP - Daily Trust
The outgoing Commissioner of Police in Anambra State, Aderemi Adeoye, says he is now going fully into business and he is ready to give Africa's richest man, Aliko Dangote, a run for his money. Adeoye stated this on Saturday during his ceremonial pull out parade from the Nigeria Police Force…
https://dailytrust.com/my-firm-now-worth-n20bn-will-give-dangote-a-run-for-his-money-outgoing-anambra-cp/

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

Observer of Political Trends

Apparently, people went gaga over this thing —the Citroen DS 19 — on its debut in 1955. Some French philosophe compared it to a mediaeval cathedral:

[The] supreme creation of an era, conceived with passion by unknown artists and consumed in image if not in usage by a whole population which appropriates them as a purely magical object.

Very French.

Citroën DS 19 | Louwman Museum

Emmanuel-Francis' Knowledge Works

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

, Observer of Political Trends

Found a map of The National Grid that's currently the bane of my existence!

It now makes sense why the Abuja and Lagos Discos always have gotten the bulk of the wattage.

So all the Igbo billionaires really can't shake body and build more than one thermal station in the S/E? I'd say very cool. But that's one thing I'm decidedly not(!) ATM.

Then again, it could be worse! Trying to imagine life in parts of Taraba or Sokoto and failing.

NIGERIA.
Dr M.I. Okpara And The Economic Blitz Of Eastern Nigeria

Posted by

Frank Abah

Sun

No one conversant with the history of Nigeria in the I950s and 1960's will miss the overwhelming impact of Dr M.I. Okpara on the nation.

After all by 1964 he was fully in charge of the fastest growing and industrialising economy in the world- the Eastern Nigerian economy.

Nothing illustrates the warped sense of history and the complete abandonment of the values of merit and excellence in our national affairs as this wilful omission.

The period of Okpara's stewardship of Eastern Nigeria is truly the golden age of Nigerian development.

By 1964- five years after Okpara's ascendancy to the premiership- Eastern Nigeria as recorded by a research group in Michigan State University in the US, Eastern Nigeria was the fastest growing and industrialising economy in the world – ahead of Malaysia, Korea, Taiwan and Singapore.

How did this happen?

It was the culmination of Okpara's unique vision in which agriculture and industrial development were the twin pillars on which he built the Eastern Nigerian economy.

In agriculture his plans had a two-fold thrust- the development of the farm settlements as the anchor for food crop (such as rice) and poultry development, as well as the establishment of estates of oil palm, cocoa, cashew etc which were processed for export.

Alongside the agricultural projects, were numerous industrial projects scattered over the length and breadth of Eastern Nigeria.

In one frenetic burst of energy, a wave of maniacal and frenzied activity was on-going all over Eastern Nigeria.

As the book reminds us " by January 25, 1963, the Michelin Factory at Port Harcourt was opened. The tyre factory was a USD 3,000,000 undertaking.

On March 22, the headquarters building of the Universal Insurance Company was opened in Enugu.

On May 10 the Nigeria Gas factory was commissioned at Emene near Enugu.

On May 16, the Aluminium Factory at Port Harcourt was opened.

On August 24, the Glass factory became operative in Port Harcourt.

On October 18, the Asbestos Cement Factory was opened in Emene.

On November 9, the foundation of the Central Bank was laid in Port Harcourt.

On November 30, the Golden Guinea Breweries was commissioned at Umuahia, for the production of larger beer and allied products.

On December 13 Hotel Presidential was opened at a whopping cost of BPS £2,000,000.

The burning fire for industrialisation led to the establishment of the modern ceramic industry in Umuahia, textile mills at Aba and Onitsha and a shoe factory in Owerri.

There was a catalogue of numerous small industries that were also established simultaneously with the major ones during this period.

It was during this period that the first phase of the farm settlements scheme were established - Ulonna in Umuahia province, Ohaji in Owerri Province- Igbariam in Onitsha province, Boki in Ogoja province, Uzo Uwanni in Enugu province, Abak in Annang province.

Each was to accommodate over 5,000 farmers and what was remarkable was the scrupulous effort for even spread of the settlements throughout the length and breadth of the region.

All these activities had been elaborated in his vision for the development of the region after the general elections of 1961.

As he stated…"the period immediately following the elections was a period for building the economic consciousness of the people"

It is this consciousness and burning desire to raise the standard of living of our people, the unflinching determination to assault poverty from all fronts, that has been distilled into the 1962-68 development plan.

Inviting the people as citizens of a democratic region to examine, approve, criticise or condemn any portion of the plan (the plan is the peoples plan) it provides for the development of the small village, it touches on the requirements of the largest city; it caters for the need of the smallest peasant industry and prescribes the means for the mounting of the biggest industries…"

What was remarkable in his vision was the appreciation of the role of the private sector. As he observed to achieve rapid economic growth and raise the standard of living of the people, it was necessary that "the private citizens, the ordinary men and women everywhere must participate by taking a fair and equitable share in our development and industrial projects…"

He elaborates on this vision when he states

".....In encouraging and participating in the industries established in the Region, our government was doing so on behalf of the citizens of the Region. It was, as it were, holding its shares on trust for the people. As and when the industries have overcome their teething problems and the risk of failures minimized, government proposes to divest itself of most of its shares and the money realized used in pioneering into new industrial projects…"

Thus, the visionary did not only recognise the role of the government as the steward on behalf of the people but more importantly acknowledged the government's fiduciary responsibility.

It was an incredible display of courage in the midst of rampaging risk factors and the energy to pursue longterm goals on behalf of the people.

It was a remarkable demonstration of transparency and accountability. It was a vision that was forty years ahead of its time.

These latter values were illustrated by his commitment to participatory democracy as shown in the fact that he inaugurated an annual series of leaders of thought conferences (a total of five in 1960, 1962, 1963 and 1965).

A remarkable aspect of his industrialisation plan was the collaboration and cooperation with foreign investors to undertake the large industries such as Michelin Tyre factory in Port Harcourt and the Nkalagu Cement factory in present day Ebonyi state.

Indeed in Okpara's long term vision as he told me in a conversation in his home in Nkwoegwu in 1983 was that Port Hacourt through Aba and Umuahia going on to Enugu would have developed into a globally significant industrial megapolis and conurbation.

This drove his passion for the development of the University of Nigeria for which he has not, in my view, been given adequate credit. He provided the money through his prudent management of the resources of the region.

If the politics of those times had been better managed, Eastern Nigeria would have been ahead of South Korea, Taiwan and Singapore for we were indeed ahead of these success stories of the second half of the 20th century.

What was most remarkable was his spirit characterised by his disarming humility and rock-solid determination to confront all the odds frontally. These were exemplified by his return to medical school after the war!

We cannot end this without recognising the unique strategies he adopted for the management of the government and the instruments he adopted for his far reaching economic programmes.

For the latter, the Eastern Nigeria Development Corporation was the engine room for the pursuit of his economic development plans. His management of men and resources was imaginative, innovative and revolutionary.

The most remarkable attribute is that after his stint as Premier of Eastern Nigeria he returned to live in his father's modest bungalow even as some members of his cabinet had vast estates in their hometown and elsewhere. That speaks volumes of his integrity.

He had arrow heads who coordinated the activities of the government in addition to the informal agencies of democratic participation.

He ceded the day to day running of the party to his old friend Dr L C Mbanugo, the civil service to Sam Oti, the intelligentsia to Professor Kalu Ezera and the economic domain to Odumegwu Ojukwu Snr.

These were his kitchen cabinet at it were and beyond the formal structures of the party and the bureaucracy. Thus, he could exercise an inspiring overview to the business of governance through the formal structures of governance, even as he recognised the validity of the informal networks that are the eyes and could invigorate governance.

In the final analysis his success ultimately rested on his understanding of his people and the operative environment that had shaped him and his people.

He certainly deserves intense study if we are ever going to appreciate where the rain started to beat us given our present circumstances.

The book is an honest effort but is riddled with avoidable typographical and other errors but it is a treasure trove of information on the Okpara years and a wistful reminder of what Nigeria could have been.

Nevertheless, the vision must survive and endure.

Credit: Igbo History

The Northern Nigeria ethno-religious crisis (mostly claiming Southerners' lives) couples with President Buhari's body language in nepotism, tribalism, favourism and other -sm made me developed unimagined hatred against Northerners, pls do I need it?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam
Observer of Political Trends1y

I am glad that the idea of hatred makes you hesitant. That makes you better than most of us. Your parents did an excellent job.

Three different trends are contributing to the current challenges facing Nigeria.

1. We are in a wave of mass hysteria that is worsened by social media.
2. Our institutions and leadership are failing to stem the tide. Worse, they are creating a perception that they're fuelling the crisis.
3. The Presidency has been elevated to absurd heights, and the current president has not risen to the occasion.

Imagine you were in a crowd on one of our hot, humid days. Out of the blue, a man screams out in pain: 'Ahh, they have stolen my penis'.

Next, he points to someone shady in the crowd and screams, 'Oh God! It is him. He stole my penis'.

At that moment, the crowd can go two ways.

a. People can express concern at the sole hysteric. Try to calm him down and try to establish that his penis is actually missing. If it is, then investigate and establish a chain of responsibility.
b. People can react in fear of losing their phallus and eliminate the accused immediately lest his vile sorcery affects them.

In Nigeria, we go for b. And not metaphorically either.

Ahem.

'Missing' penis sparks mob lynching

By Mannir Dan-Ali in Lagos Police in the south western Nigerian state of Osun say they have embarked on a constant patrol after mobs lynched at least 12 people since last weekend. We are terribly worried about the mass hysteria State police commissioner All the killings occurred after the victims were accused of making people's genital organs disappear. The Osun state police commissioner Ganiu Dawodu, who dismissed claims of organ disappearance, told the BBC that the mob killings started two weeks ago and has swept though six main towns in the state including the university town of Ife and the state capital of Osogbo. "We are terribly worried about the mass hysteria leading to such mob action," Mr Dawodu said. Mobbed The most gruesome case occurred on Friday when hundreds of members of the evangelical sect Brotherhood of the Cross went to the town of Ilesa for their annual convention. While the sect members were on a house-to-house preaching mission, someone raised an alarm that his penis had disappeared. An angry mob descended on the visiting evangelists and burnt eight of them to death. Two buses and a car were also burnt. The Osun state police commissioner said that they have since arrested two persons including the man who raised the false alarm about disappearing genitals. Police action Mr Dawodu told the BBC that the hysteria generated by the incidents is connected to similar accusations in Oyo state where at least six people were burnt to death last month. Oyo state police commissioner now insists that everywhere is quiet and they have charged a number of people arrested over last month's killings. In neighbouring Osun the police say they have rescued six people from the hands of angry mobs. The lucky ones include a woman who was rescued after a mob put a tyre around her neck and was about to set her ablaze. The police and the state governor have gone on local television and radio appealing to the public not to take the law into their own hands. They have also appealed to religious leaders and traditional rulers to ask their followers not to take part in such mob actions. As in Oyo state, the police in Osun have deployed plainclothes detectives on streets of major towns to keep an eye on those they accuse of raising false alarms.

http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/africa/1274235.stm

Gov Ortom dismisses rumour of alleged missing penis, cautions Benue youths

Amid rumours of the alleged disappearance of male genitals through mystical powers, Gov

https://www.pulse.ng/news/local/ortom-dismisses-rumour-of-alleged-missing-penis-cautions-benue-youths/hgtv6pf

Man’s alleged missing manhood restored in Umuahia – The Sun Nigeria

Okey Sampson, Umuahia A man whose manhood was alleged to have disappeared in Umuahia, the Abia state capital on Thursday after buying tiger-nut from a Hausa fruit hawker was said to have been restored. The incident happened on Oboro Street by Niger when a man stopped a Hausa fruit hawker to buy tiger nut. Reports […]

https://www.sunnewsonline.com/mans-alleged-missing-manhood-restored-in-umuahia/

Koro: The mystery of the missing manhood - DocAyomide.com

Last week I shared the TALE OF TAMEDO: the story of a man on the streets. If you missed that episode, or you’d like to see it again in one piece, you can find i https://docayomide.com/koro/

Dwarf beaten mercilessly over missing penis in Enugu (video)

Jungle justice was meted out to a dwarf identified as Anayo by a mob which gathered after a man raised an alarm over his missing penis at Obiagu axis of Ogui community in Enugu stat https://www.lindaikejisblog.com/2019/9/dwarf-beaten-mercilessly-over-missing-penis-in-enugu-video.html

Man strips naked as his 'penis' disappears in bank

DanMallam Muhammed By Jethro Ibileke A yet to be identified middle-aged man narrowly escaped death from angry mob after he was accused of mysteriously causing the disappearance of another man's genital organ. The incident which occurred on Wednesday in Benin City, Edo State, at one of the new generation banks located along Sapele Road, caused commotion inside the banking hall, when the victim (name withheld), raised the alarm over the alleged disappearance of his genital. He alleged that his genital mysteriously disappeared after the suspect who was behind him on the queue, touched him. The commotion that ensued disrupted banking activities for several minutes, as the man stripped himself naked and wept uncontrollably. The loud noise also attracted youths from the neighbourhood who dragged the suspect outside the banking hall and descended on him. Attempts made by the management of the bank to rescue the suspect failed, as the youths insisted that the suspect must pay for his sin. The prompt arrival of police operatives saved the suspect from the rage of youths from the neighbourhood who were bent on lynching him. The police operatives who arrived in a Hilux van were said to have dispersed the crowd and took both the victim and the suspect with away them. One of the eye witnesses who gave her name simply as Gloria, said the two men were standing next to each other on the queue when the victim suddenly screamed. "The man [victim] suddenly screamed, saying that his genital has disappeared. "He accused the man behind him on the queue, of being responsible for the disappearance of his genital after he touched him. "The suspect who at first denied the allegation, later confessed to being responsible and promised to restore the missing genital after the youths in the area gave him the beating of his life. "The man was not even ashamed, as he stripped himself naked. The [genital region] actually became flat," she said. - No Evidence for prosecution – Police Meanwhile, Edo State Police Command has said that the case is not known by the law of the land. The State Police Command Spokesman, DSP, Chidi Nwanbuzor, who confirmed the incident on phone, said their intervention was to avert breakdown of law and order. Nwabuzor, who said there was no evidence for prosecution, added that the case is not known to the law. "Police arresting is just to ensure that there is maintenance of law and order in the bank. But, the case of somebody's penis disappearing is not known by law. "How do you know who could be responsible for the disappearance of the penis?" He asked.

https://pmnewsnigeria.com/2019/10/04/man-strips-naked-as-his-penis-disappears-in-bank/

Hysteria does not mean the absence of a problem. Obviously, something has to go wrong before somebody believes their penis is missing. However, hysteria often ignores the actual problem. That makes it terrible.

In the analogue world, waves of hysteria passed. This brave new age of social media threatens to make it permanent.

Our leaders and elders first failed to create institutions capable of dealing with our national problems. Now, rather than acting as calmer heads, they are feeding the hysteria. It is impossible not to feel under siege.

The fundamental problem is our northern region and their Sahelian neighbours. They are a mess: poverty-ridden, violent and with an illicit drugs crisis. All that was before the Islamist insurgencies and ethnic tensions with the Fulani across the region and beyond.

Thousands of Cameroonians flee to Chad after herder-fisher violence

Some 11,000 Cameroonians from the Far North region of the country fled across the border to Chad, after violence between fishers and herders over the weekend, according to the governor of Chad's Chari…

https://www.rfi.fr/en/africa/20210818-thousands-from-cameroon-flee-to-chad-after-herder-fisher-violence-boko-haram

Mali attack: Behind the Dogon-Fulani violence in Mopti

Dogon-Fulani tensions have existed for a while but what is behind the increase in communal killings?

https://www.bbc.com/news/world-africa-47694445

Occasionally, their problems splash on southern shores. However, by Nigerian standards, the south is a veritable oasis of peace.

Northerners, not southerners are the primary victims of the northern crises. Some 20 million in the region have been displaced into camps where they face exploitation and molestation. The majority of inter-ethnic and inter-religious violence happens there.

There are no southern equivalents to Borno, Sokoto, Zamfara, Kaduna or even Benue. There are none like even Katsina, the President's home state. Its governor, Aminu Masari, recently told his citizens to arm and defend themselves. Things in the south can be bad. They are not that bad, at least not yet.

Sadly, politics in Nigeria is not conducive to solving problems. Mutual suspicion does that.

We overestimate the office of the President. It is a powerful office, but also a limited one that attracts undue attention to the detriment of other positions. Yet, because those positions are essentially invisible, it makes the competition over the presidency more vicious.

In truth, most presidential acts do not directly affect the average Nigerian. Those that do can be reversed either by the courts or the legislature.

But the system is not functioning. When the president ignores the courts, the senators shrug and go back to slapping sex shop attendants or something.

The security services are not functioning. The legislature has not examined their structure or proposed new institutions. None of their heads has taken responsibility to resign.

The trash cans in my street are overflowing. Odds are that people won’t blame Enugu South LGA; they will blame Nigeria. That is only a hop and step away from blaming the president.

Sadly, he has not risen to the occasion. But then again, which Nigerian leader ever has?

There are two possibilities.

Either we have a singular talent for ending up with bad leaders, or they reflect our unwillingness to govern our society.

I lean towards the latter view.

Your feelings are Nigeria trying to drag you down to its level. Resist! We are all in the same pot.

I am impervious to criticisms about Nigeria ’cause no be do am, and wetin man fit do?

The chink in my armour is the drive-by. When someone is talking about something else entirely and uses Nigeria as a negative example without giving us even the teeniest amount of thought.

A perfect example is this book.

I thought I was getting CSI but got a pretty decent memoir. 99% of the book had nothing to do with Nigeria, except for the 1% that saw her visiting our ‘forensic labs’, only to find all its expensive equipment sitting unwrapped.

The memory is painful.

You see, forensics is the ultimate commitment to alien concepts like ‘innocent until proven guilty’ and ‘individual responsibility for individual crimes’.

If we had a policing system and justice apparatus committed to such ideals, it would go miles in clamping down our propensity for hysteria.

Honestly, it is too expensive and too hard. ‘Heating up the polity’ and performative modernity are much easier tasks. And also, if you’re the guy selling the guns, profitable too.

So I can understand why many of us make the wrong choices. Nigeria makes the right thing neither easy nor sensible.

RWANDA

National Flag

Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT HIGHLIGHTS: Diaries updates, key events, brief analysis and relating news articles in timeline

Overview, Diary updates and Refreshes

The Republic of Rwanda is a young nation with a long history. A newly independent, undeveloped country, Rwanda is similar to many other developing nations in Africa, where new ideas and old traditions often clash on the road to economic and social progress.

Rwanda is a tiny, landlocked nation in the heart of East central Africa. It is the home of the ancient tribes of the Tutsi, and Hutu, old enemies trying to live together under the same government. Rwanda was a colony of Belgium until given its freedom inJuly,1962 when the Republic of Rwanda was born. Rwanda is also home to numerous and exotic wildlife including the much endangered mountain gorillas. In the past few decades, Rwanda was the scene of one of the worst massacres of the 20th century. Almost one million of its citizens were killed and millions more were forced to flee into exile because they belonged to the Tutsi tribe or sympathized with them. The refugees are now returning and Rwanda is dealing with the aftermath of genocide and the starvation and poverty that it caused.

Rwanda existed as an independent, highly centralized state for several centuries, ruled by a King and noble elite drawn largely from the minority Tutsi (15%) group. It became part of German East Africa in 1899. Following the First World War, it became part of the Belgian-administered territory of 'Ruanda-Urundi', with neighboring Burundi, under a League of Nations mandate. The colonial authorities initially consolidated the power of the existing Tutsi elite. In an attempt to head off claims for independence from the ruling elite, the Hutu majority was later encouraged to participate in the political life of the country. Independence from Belgium followed in 1962, after a Hutu uprising (1959-61) and large-scale massacres of Tutsi. This brought to power a Hutu-dominated.

Which president has the most accomplished military record, and why?

Morris Gad
Lives in Nairobi, Kenya May 16

President Paul Kagame of Rwanda. After the world abandoned Rwanda during the 1994 genocide, Kagame led a rebel unit that effectively ended the genocide and he has gone ahead to lead Rwanda into one of the fastest developing country in Africa/

World History
Franklin Walters Long Time Social Scientist; Historical Reseacher. Varoius Public and Private Schools and Universities. Answered May 26

One must qualify the word “accomplished”, to declare by what standard “accomplished”. Heroism under fire? Highest rank achieved? Number of directly attributable victories in battle? Most improbable victories? Greatest wins, in circumstances that placed the nation at grave risk if lost? Washington, who had several horses shot out from under him and had numerous bullet holes in his clothing, suffered many defeats but in each case, he survived or won the most critical battles and except possibly for Grant, participated in more actual battles than any other. At a moment when all was lost, in the opening battle of the French and Indian War, after Fort Necessity, when the British General in Chief was killed, in the northern Virginia wilderness, Washington single handedly rallied what was left of the British Army, on that field and with his Virginia Militia, led them all out to safety, thus preserving a core of that army, that left the French having to delay their invasion and thereafter protect their flank. Had Washington failed that day, the French might very well have won that war and there would be no USA today. Later in the Revolutionary War, he was the one absolutely indispensable leader. Without him, it wouldn't have happened. In personnel bravery, none other can be said to be braver both under fire and in his courage of conviction.

Grant saw much action and was also under fire, both in Mexico and the Indian Wars, before the Civil War. His famous ride to rally his forces during the Shilo Campaign was an act of enormous courage. Had that rally failed, he likely would have been killed or captured. He was definitely a fighting General, as were Wm. Harrison and Andrew Jackson, whose respective victories at Fallen Timbers and New Orleans, were indispensable to our fighting spirit, after so many losses, in that War of 1812, even if not decisive in the outcome of the war and both were on the field of battle.

Zachary Taylor was no armchair General either. Ike was. He was under fire in WWI and did go up to the lines in both WWII and Korea but actual direct combat was not his forte. Others did experience it but in the categories cited above, Washington and Grant have to be considered foremost.

TR was brave to the point of recklessness and fought in the front lines, literally with his command, all the way to the top, under withering fire. He definitely earned his CMH. JFK earned his plaudits, also and went on to fight in many more battles after the one he is famous for. G.H.W. Bush was also the "real deal". Getting shot down was just the frosting on the cake. The bravery of USN carrier pilots was extraordinary, period…and still is. Harry Truman was under fire in WWI.

So, what is the difference between them and other regular combat veterans? We all have decorations, who served in combat. We all had to be brave. Many of us were promoted, in rank. Some of us were instrumental in winning battles in less observable ways but still deserving of acknowledgement.

The difference is that these were elected President of the United States. Ford was, too, kind of but was also a USN veteran and so was Carter, in nuclear submarines, at the height of the Cold War, a rather hair-raising experience in itself.

So, let's talk about bravery in another sense. When Chester Arthur became President, after the assassination of Garfield, he was summoned to the "king pin" boss, who ran the Republican Political Party, from behind the scenes and told what to do. Alone, with that Republican big boss tyrant of his day, he was told that he (Arthur) had been made Vice President, by the "boss" and that he must do what he was told. An aide entering heard the exchange. Arthur replied, "You may have made me Vice President Sir but God has made me President and I will serve the people"…and he did, basically founding the U.S. Civil Service and diminishing the insider politics of his day, that were undermining our concept of "government of the people; by the people; for the people".

I vote for Washington, Grant second, TR and GHW Bush third. When he realized the true nature of the Republican Party, with its system of "bosses", he bucked the tide and went back on his given word of "No New Taxes", because it was not in the best interests of the American people. Like Chester Arthur, he said "no", to the bosses, putting the people's government and interests first. Sometimes the battles behind the scenes in the political theater are of more issue than the public ones, in either war or peace.

Related Links

Who was the greatest military commander of all time, and why?

Who was the least accomplished US President?

What is the most number of presidents (current and former) ever alive at one time?

Which US president accomplished the least during his entire political career?

Which president of the US would you say accomplished the most in their first year in office? What did they accomplish?

Which presidents weren't in the military?

Government led by President Kayibanda. Inter-communal violence between Hutu and Tutsi continued until 1973, when Kayibanda was deposed and a more moderate - but still firmly Hutu - Second Republic was declared under President Habyarimana. Rwanda remained largely peaceful during this period, although Tutsi were still excluded from power and faced widespread discrimination. Many left the country, joining those who had fled the killings of 1959. Power was concentrated in the hands of a single party, the Mouvement Revolutionnaire National pour le Developpement (MRND). Habyarimana and the MRND won several uncontested "elections" through the 1980s. The Rwandan Genocide: In 1985 Tutsi exiles in Uganda formed the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF). Having failed to negotiate their return to the country, the RPF invaded Rwanda from Uganda in October 1990, demanding representation and equality for all Rwandans. A civil war in the border area ensued. Each incursion by the RPF was followed by reprisal massacres, largely of Tutsis, by government forces. A peace agreement was brokered in 1993, the Arusha Peace Accords, which inter alia provided for a power-sharing arrangement involving all political forces and the RPF. But, unwilling to share power, a group of extremist Hutu politicians planned to consolidate their hold on the country by wiping out all the Tutsi, along with moderate Hutu leaders. They prepared the largely illiterate population through ethnic propaganda, armed extremist youth militia (known as the Interahamwe) and drew up lists of those to be targeted. The killing was sparked by the assassination of President Habyarimana in April 1994. The genocide and massacres lasted until July 1994 and cost the lives of around one million Rwandans. It was halted by the RPF taking control of the country. The extremist politicians and over two million Hutu fled the country together with many members of the Rwandan Armed Forces and the interahamwe, both with their weapons to neighbouring countries. The majority went to what was then Zaire.

Origins of name: From the name “Kinyarwanda” a predominant Rwandan language.

Former Names: Ruanda, was a German colony under German East Africa.

It was part of German east Africa from 1899 until 1917, when Belgium tookover the administration, the League of Nations created Ruanda-Urundi as a Belgian mandate administration as a trustee in 1923.

During colonisation Ruanda under the colonial administration, was divided into eight territoires (territories): Astrida, Biumba, Kibungu, Kigali, Kîsenyi, Nyanza, Ruhengeri and Chiangugu.

Rwanda came to be when Ruanda-Urundi were separated in 1962.

Gained it’s independence on July 1, 1962

Headship since independence; Head, Provisional Civilian Government

Between 1973 and 1990, despite the atrocities that Hutu-Tutsi violence has wrought on the nation, Rwanda was one of the most peaceful places on the African mainland.

During that time, Rwanda did not have civil wars, famines and military coups d'etat. A Republic in eastern central Africa.

Originally inhabited by the Twas (Pigmies), the Hutus were established there while the Tutsis believed to be appeared in the fourteenth century to the area, known as Rwanda now. It was part of German east Africa from 1899 until 1917, when Belgium tookover the administration, the League of Nations created Ruanda-Urundi as a Belgian mandate in 1923.

During the colonial period of the 1920s to the 1960s the Germans and later the Belgians instituted a form of divide and rule by giving the minority, the Tutsis, who comprised 15% of the population, a special privilege in education in ownership of land and in local government. The 80% majority Hutus were deprived of their land and all other privileges and remained oppressed both by the Tutsis and the colonialists. Though, Tutsis and Hutus share a common culture and language the colonialists took the physical appearance of the Tutsis to determine that Tutsis are of a superior race and therefore deserve a special status in the social and economic life of the country. Over the years the some of the Tutsis really believed that they were entitled to power and privilege and that they were better people than all the rest. Although Rwanda was definitely not a land of peace and harmony before the arrival of the Europeans, there were no incidents in its pre colonial history of systematic violence between Tutsis and Hutus. There were plenty of wars both domestic and against foreign invaders but they were either defense against foreign invasion or internal power struggles.

In Rwanda, hatred amongst the Tutsi and Hutus were sponsored first by the colonialists and after independence by governments who allowed the colonial polices of segregation to continue and manipulating it for their own benefits. The Belgians were for example having produced Identity cards classifying people according to their ethnicity, they considered the Tutsies to be superior to the Hutus, not surprisingly, the Tutsies welcomed this idea. And for the next twenty years the Tutsies have had better jobs and educational opportunities than their Hutu neighbours, resentment among the Hutus gradjually built up, culminating in a series of riots, more than twenty thousand Tutsies were killed and many more, perhaps over hundred fifty thousand people fled to the neighbouring countries of Burundi, Tanzania and Uganda. Deprived of political power and materially exploited by the Tutsi minority and repeatedly told that they deserved their fate the Hutus began to hate all Tutsis, even those who were as poor ul Kagame has been an effective leader for Rwanda. Given that so few African leaders have done what is best for their country, is there concern who will succeed him?

Didier Champion

Lived in Kigali, Rwanda2y

A Rwandan here.

It is very true that Paul Kagame has been a great leader for our country. He is the forefather of Rwanda, post 1994. He has built a strong foundation for Rwanda. The next leaders will be able to build on what he has done in Rwanda. Didier Champion's answer to Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?

In my opinion, there are more Rwandans who will take on the challenge. On top of the list, I would nominate Donald Kaberuka, Louise Mushikiwabo, and the list can get very long. At the present moment, Rwandans are just not ready to take a gamble on someone else if they know that there is a good choice available.

The political party in power are not known to be predictable. My speculation is that they already have their chosen one already. The party elders (together with President Kagame) have a few individuals in mind. I have been following how they operate and RPF does not like surprises. They like to plan, 10 years, 20 years, ahead, and given their military background, they start with the worst case scenario.

In Rwanda, they enjoy the support of many Rwandans. So, we have learned to trust them as they have the best interests of our country at heart.

To summarize, I would say that I am not worried of who will succeed him. Whoever the RPF selects as the chairman or woman, they will be the chosen one. As a Rwandan patriot, I will support whoever they will go with. It's that simple.

Follow Rwanda Today to learn more.

Related Links

Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?

Who will be the leader of Rwanda after Paul Kagame?

What is Paul Kagame like personally?

Why are African leaders so corrupt?

How do the Rwandan neighbors (in particular Burundi, the DRC, Uganda and Tanzania) consider or view Rwanda and its leadership under Paul Kagame?

What is your opinion on Paul Kagame (the president of Rwanda)? Why are the opposition leaders in Rwanda all in exile or killed?

How do Rwandans feel about Paul Kagame's vision of Rwanda as 'The Singapore of Africa'?

What do the people of Rwanda think of Kagame as their leader ? (Both Tutsis and Hutus)

How did Rwanda manage to build its country?

What good things has President Paul kagame done for Rwanda?

as they were happened in 1959 in a relatively smaller extent. In a successful Ba-Hutu revolt against the Tutsies monarch in 1959, i.e. three years before independence from Belgium, the majority ethnic-Hutus overthrew the ruling Tutsi monarch, following the abolition of the monarch a provisional government under Rwandan ethnic-Hutu politician namely, Dominique Mbonyumutwa formed on the 28th January, 1961, when the king, Kigeri V of Rwanda was under visits to other nations, seeking an international recognition, ethnic-Tutsies were massacred in over next years, and many more driven into exile in neighbouring countries where the children of those exiles to create up the ethnic-Tutsi rebel group, later known as the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF). When independence was officially neared it brought the Hutu majority to power under prime minister Gregoire Kayibanda to be elected as it's post-Tutsi monarchy head of government, and led Rwanda's struggle to independence from the Belgians and replaced the provisional president as head of Rwanda semi-autonomous republic on the 26th of October, 1961, his successful campaign for political power brought his majority ethnic-Hutus to political power in Rwnda which were oppressed as majorities.

FACTS AT A GLANCE RWANDA: LAND AND PEOPLE

Official title of the State: Rwandese Republic
Location: East Central Africa
Area: 10,169 square miles (26338 Square kilometres)
Climate: Temperate
Capital: Kigali
Other Cities: Gisenyi,Ruhengeri, Butare

Population Density: 590 people per square mile (228 per square kilometer)
Major Lakes: Kivu, Burera, Ruhondo, Rwanye, Muhazi, Ihema, Mugesera
Major Rivers: Kagera, Ruzizi, Kagirumba, Nyabarongo
Highest Point: Mt. Karisimbi, 1,4870 feet (4,532 meters)
Official Languages: Kinyrwanda, French, English
Other Language: Swahili
Ethnic Groups: Hutu, 83%, Tutsi, 16 Twa, 1%
Religions: Roman Catholic 65%, Protestant 9%, Muslim 1%, Traditional religions 18%
Literacy Rate: 60.5%
Average Life Expectancy: Males 41.5%, Females 42.4%

National Economy

Division of Labour Force
Agriculture 93%

Government and Services 5%
Industry and Commerce 2%

Agriculture Products: Bananas, Coffee, Tea, Beans, Peas, Sweet potatoes, Cassava, Potatoes, Corn, Sorghum, Peanuts

Industries: Textiles, Wood, Paper, Processed foods, Rubber, Plastic, Mining (Tin and Tungsten)

Major Imports: Food products, Machinery and Equipment, Steel, Construction materials

Major Exports: Coffee 74%, Tea

Currency: Rwandan Franc

Government
Form of Government: A Republic with Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches Legislative branch: Transitional National Assembly
Formal Head of States: President
Head of Government: Prime minister
Voting Rights: All adult men and women over the age of 18

History At A Glance

Before 13s A.D. : Rwanda is inhabited by the Twa, Forest-dwelling, hunters and gatherers. The Hutu, a more aggressive Bantu people migrate into Rwanda from the north.

By 1300s: Many small Hutu kingdoms were established. Each Kingdom centers around a family clan 1300 to 1400: Small groups of the Tutsi people migrate into Rwanda from the Nile River basin. Although the Hutu outnumber the Tutsis, the Tutsis, who are warriors and cattle herders, gradually gain political and economic power.

The late 1400s: King Rugazu I Bwimba began expanding Rwandan territory.

mid-1500s: King Mihamhwe I Mutbazy centralizes the monarch and establishes the country's feudal system.

The late 1800s: King Kigeri IV establishes Rwanda's present-day borders. European explorers pass near the kingdom of Rwanda but do not enter it.

1885: The Conference of Berlin gives Germany colonial rights to Rwanda. Great Britain and Belgium argue over Rwanda's borders with their neighboring colonies.

1894: German explorer Count Von Gotzen is the first European to enter Rwanda.

1907: Explorer and scientist Richard Kandt is named the first German governor of the colony.

1910: Germany, Great Britain, and Belgium settle their border disputes. Rwanda officially becomes German territory.

1912: German soldiers help the Mwami (king) put down a rebellion among the Hutu tribes people in the northeast.

1916: During WWI, Belgian forces took over Rwanda.

1923: The League of Nations (LoN) assigns Rwanda and the neighboring Burundi to Belgian administration. The new territory is called Rwanda-Urundi. The Belgians reduce the Mwami's power and dismantle the feudal system.

1931: The Belgians dethrone King Musinga, who goes into exile in the Congo. Belgium appoints a new king.

1946: Rwanda and Burundi became a trust territory of the United Nations, under Belgian administration. Belgium is told to prepare the Rwandans for instrumental self-government.

1953: Rwanda's first elections for advisory councils give some political power to the Hutu people.

1956: All adult men receive the right to vote in council elections.

The late 1950s: Hutu political parties formed and urged the end of Tutsi domination.

1959: Fighting breaks out between the Hutu and the Tutsi. Thousands of people are killed or forced to flee into other countries.

1961: Elections for a new legislature are held. The Hutu win majority of the seats. Gregoire Kayibanda, a Hutu leader, is elected president of the new republic.

In July, 1962 Rwanda gained it's independence with Gregoire Kayibanda it's president for the officially titled "Republic of Rwanda".

1962s: The United Nations separate Rwanda and Burundi. Belgian administration ends and the Republic of Rwanda is born.

1960s: Conflict continues between the Hutu and Tutsi. Rwanda and Burundi dissolve their trade and diplomatic agreements.

1965 to 1969: Gregoire Kayibanda is reelected president. Hutu and the Tutsi are victims of discremination and violence. Many Hutu formed rival political groups and fight among themselves.

1973: Major General Juvenal Habyarimana, the defence minister, overthrows Kayibanda's government. He dissolves the legislature, suspends the constitution, and places the country under military rule.

1975: Major General Habyarimana declares that the National Revolutionary Movement for Development (MRND) is the only legal political party.

1978: Habyarimana is elected president.

1983: Habyarimana is reelected president for a second consecutive term.

late 1980s: Habyarimana rules Rwanda without opposition and maintains close economic links with Belgium.

1990: In October Rwanda is invaded by a Tutsi military group known as the Rwanda Patriotic Front (RPF). The Rwandan government fights off the attack and goes on a rampage against the Tutsis in the country, killing thousands and arresting thousands more.

1991 to 1992: The RPF invaded again, this time working its way to within a few miles of the capital, Kigali. A ceasefire is called and negotiations begin but quickly stall. An all out offensive is again launched by the RPF.

1994: Habyarimana is killed when his plane is shot down. In retaliation his followers begin one of the worst massacres of the 20th century-the kill almost a million Tutsies and force millions more to flee the country.

In July, 1994: Rwanda experienced Africa's worst genocide in modern times.

1995: The RPF beat back the military responsible for the genocide and gain control of the country. Nearly two million refugees remain in camps Zaire (now called DRC), Burundi and Tanzania. A Commission is set up to arrest and try the persons responsible for the massacre and the jail filled up. Many of the perpetrators flee the country and can not be caught.

1996 to 1997: The refugees finally begin to return to Rwanda and the task of caring for all of them begins.

UPDATED BRIEF ANALYSIS: Rwanda/Burundi

Formerly Ruanda-Urundi, once part of the German East Africa, was the centerpiece of the post-World War I movement and the European colonization of Africa. After the Germans lost the great war, they relinquished their land holdings to Belgium in what would be a decades-long occupation. On this day in 1962, the once-joined union gained independence from Belgium to become Rwanda and Burundi.

Germany colonized the region in 1884, with the Hutu, Tutsi, and Twa tribes of what is now Rwanda, the dominate people. The Europeans ruled via the tribal leaders and kings, but sided in policy with the Tutsi overall.

In what is now Rwanda, the Hutus were the majority just as in Burundi. Between 1916 and 1924, the union was held by the Belgian military. When that order fell, the region became a United Nations trust territory between 1945 and 1962. Prior to 1945, the region was under a “Class B Mandate” by the defunct League of Nations.

The Belgians manipulated the tensions between the ruling Tutsi and the Hutu people, which pitted the Africans against each other instead of the colonial government. Belgium promised to advance the needs of people in the region, particularly via education, but that was a falsehood as many natives never made it beyond secondary school.

An independence movement began in the region in the 1950s, starting in the Belgian Congo. But in Ruanda-Urundi, the infighting between the tribes turned deadly when the Hutu slaughtered thousands of Tutsi and eventually came to ruling power in 1960 by way of Belgium-led elections.

Two years later, with many Tutsi fleeing to the area where Burundi would be and onward to Uganda, the revolt in Rwanda and the happenings in Burundi made both segments of the region declare their independence on this day in 1962.

It took more than two years for the government structure to be split between the two nations, and almost immediately, Burundi joined the United Nations.

War time would visit Rwanda again in 1990 in a major civil war led by the Tutsi-dominated Rwandan Patriotic Front. Even today, there exists tension in the region over the past happenings between the Hutu and Tutsi clans. (Text ends)

A Republic in East central Africa

Rwanda located a few degrees south of the Equator. At independence a time bomb had already been set and it was now only a question of when it would go off. However, certain sections of the Tutsies were unwilling to accept the loss of their privileged positions and formed a guerilla groups that mounted raids on Hutu communities, thus provoking further Hutu-reprisals. In the fresh-round of bloodshed that followed in 1959, thousands more Tutsies were killed and tens of thousands of their fellow tribesmen fled to Uganda, Burundi and Tanzania. In 1963 the Ba-Hutu manifesto declared, but had nothing to serve for the country's ethnic tensions. Although, inter-tribal tensions eased for many years after that, there was a resurgence of anti-Tutsi sentiment in 1972 when tens of thousands of Hutu tribesmen were massacred horribly in Burundi, such slaughter reignited the old hatreds in Rwanda and prompted Major-General Juvenal Habyarimana, the defence minister to oust the president, on the 5th of July, 1973, Mr. Gregoire Kayibanda was overthrown by military coup just before the 1973 election to hold, the ex-president and his family were arrested, starved to death in a secret location on the 15th of December, 1976.

The ex-defence minister Major-General Juvenal Habyarimana came to head Rwanda. Then, on the first day of October, 1990, the whole inter-tribal issue was savagely reopened. Rwanda was invaded by an estimated 5,000 well-armed rebels of the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF), a Tutsi-dominated rebel group, from their bases in western Uganda, it was led by Paul Kagame, a former security officer under Ugandan army, and assisted by other officers and soldiers of the NRA of Uganda. A week later, Juvenal Habyarimana requested France, Belgium and the Congo flew in troops to help the Rwandan Army repulse the RPF rebels. With this support assured, the Rwandan Army went on a rampage against the Tutsies and any Hutu suspected of having collaborated with the rebel RPF, thousands were shot or hacked to death and countless others indescriminately arrested, herded into football grounds and police-stations, left there without food and water for days, many of them died. In early 1993, the RPF was within 25 km radius of the Rwandan capital, Kigali, at this point a ceasefire was cobbled together and the warring parties brought to negotiating table to Arusha, Tanzania. The negotiation b/n the warring parties stalled several weeks and hostilities were grown-high. French troops were flown into Rwanda ostensibly to protect foreign nationals in Kigali but the French were accused by the RPF of assisting the Rwandan Army.

The accusations by the RPF were denied by the French. Meanwhile, with morale within the Rwandan Army at a low ebb, the RPF launched an all-out offenssive. President Juvenal Habyarimana attempted to contain the situation by calling a conference of regional presidents to which the RPF itself was invited, which power-sharing was part of it's agenda, but time was too late for Juvenal Habyarimana, who went-back from this conference in April, 6th 1994 with some what less than he would have liked, but just as his light plane was about to land at Kigali airport on the way back to home with his Burundian counterpart, shot-down by a surface to air missile, both he and his colleague, the neighbouring Burundian president Cyprien Ntaryamira were died in the crash, when, killing all on board, apparently shotdown above Kigali airport, that triggered the Rwandan genocide which mostly Tutsis and moderate Hutus have horribly killed, who were behind the attack is still unclear. It was in the evening of the 6th of April, 1994 it exploded as the worst genocide since the Second World War. The Hutu militias then began a campaign of orchastrated killing against minority-Tutsies. Believed the violence was well-organised and methodically executed, bands of Hutu soldiers and local militias systematically slaughtered their Tutsi neighbours and many Hutus who were refused to co-operate horribly massacred, close to a million Tutsis and moderate Hutus were massacred in the most brutal way. Right one hundred days later, the Tutsi-led Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) rebel movement, led by the incumbent Rwandan President Paul Kagame, captured Rwanda's capital, Kigali, prompting thousands of Hutus, including some of the killers, to flee into the Congo. Within a year of the RPF victory, a legal commission was set-up in Arusha, Tanzania to try those accused of involvement in the Rwandan-genocide; Rwandan prisons are still overflowingly filled-up with suspects including women and youths as most cases resolved in a Rwandan traditional methods of "Gakaka" meaning for a way-out of crises. However, many of the main perpetrators of the genocide, firmly believed the Interhamweis and former senior army officers who were fled into exile out of the reach of the RPF-led government.

It will probably never be known who fired the anti-aircraft missile, as there are several speculations regarding the gunning-down of the plane with both presindents of Rwanda and Burundi on board, but this event unleashed on of the 20th century's worst explosions of bloodletting in the tiny African nation. The Hutu-politicians and their military supporters have decided at that point to activate what amounted to a final solution to the Tutsi problem by exterminating them. It was clearly all pre-planned and the principal player among these in favour of this final course of action was an army commander namely, Colonel Theoneste Bagosora, who had been in charge of masterminding a virulent hate-campaign against the Tutsies and some even trained and distributed weapons to the Hutu-Interhamwei militias in Kigali and elsewhere to enable them "more efficiently" to attack and kill the Tutsies and Hutu-moderates before the shoot-down of the plane. The Rwandan Army and the Interhamwei militia's death-squads ranged at will over the countryside killings, looting and burning, and roadblocks were set-up in every town and city. Everyday thousands of Tutsies and any Hutu suspected of sympathising with them or their plight were butchered on the spot, the streets of Kigali were littered with dismembered corpses and the stench of rotting flesh was everywhere. Those who attempted to take refuge in religious missions or churches did so in vain and, in some cases, it was the nuns and priests themselves who betrayed the fugitives to the death-squads. Any mission that refused the death-squads access was simply blown apart, perhaps the most shocking part of the tragdy was the enthusiasm with which ordinary Hutus-men, women and even children as young as ten years old, joined in the carnage.

Most of the Interhamwe former member militias went in to neighboring countries such like Kenya and the Congo where they enjoyed protection, others including Colonel Theoneste Bagosora, the alleged archtect of the Rwandan-genocide, and Ferdinand Nahimana, the director of the notorious RTLM (Radio Télévision Libre des Mille Collines) which actively agitated the Huttus to butcher the Tutsies fled to cameroon where briefly enjoyed protections, however, the Cameroonian government under newly president Paul Biya, the Rwandan exiles were arrested, Cameroon has since then sent a number of prominent Rwandans associated with the genocide to Arusha, Tanzania, for trial. As Rwandese government inquiry has found it recently, "Hutu-extremists assassinated Rwanda's ex-president in April, 1994 and used it as an excuse for the mass killings of Tutsi rivals". The attack, the government report said, was a deliberate attempt by Hutu-extremists close to the president to scupper an imminent peace agreement with Tutsi-led Rwandan Patriotic Front /RPF/ rebels. In 2006, a French judge accused Mr. Paul Kagame and his associates of killing president Juvenal Habyarimana- an allegaition he dismissed as ridiculous insisting that extremist Hutus shot-down the presidential plane and blamed the RPF to provide a pretext for carrying out premediated slaughter. Mr. Paul Kagame told the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) at the time, "I am not responsible for Habyarimana's death and I don't care, I was not responsible for his security and he was not responsible for mine either. He would not have cared if I had died and I don't care that it happened to him".

According to a recent inquiry, members of Mr. Juvenal Habyarimana's own inner circle plotted his death months in advance. The report contradicts an earlier French government investigation on the matter, which accused Mr. Paul Kagame's Rwandan Patriotic Front /RPF/ of being behind the attack.
Ethnic tension in Rwanda is nothing new, as there have been always been disagreements b/n the majority Hutus and minority Tutsies but the animosity b/n them has grown substantially since the colonial period. The two ethnic groups are actually very similar, they speak the same language, inhabit the same areas and follow the same traditions. However, the Tutsies are often taller and thinner than Hutus, with some saying their origins lie in Ethiopia. During the genocide the bodies of Tutsies were thrown into rivers, with their killers saying they were being sent back to Ethiopia. Interahamwe, meaning, "those who attack together" was mobilised, this group was at it's peak, estimated at thirty thousand strong soldiers and police officers encouraged ordinary citizens to take part in the massacre. The ethnic-Tutsi led Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) were out then to re-establish the political power they lost in 1959, many say, although the RPF accelerated a downward spiral towards genocide with it's invasion of Rwanda in October, 1990, the blame for the increasingly violent discrimination against the Tutsies undoutedly lay with the regime under the late president Juvenal Habiyarimana. A civil war brokeout between main ethnic rival groups, the Hutus and the Tutsies, and some estimated one million Tutsies and moderate opposition Hutus were butchered by the Interahamwe Hutu-militias within ninety days, made most Rwandans displaced and refugees in neighbouring countries.

The Tutsi led rebel group of the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) Army, fought their way to the city of Kigali, against the government of Rwanda in July, 1994 and ended up killings. Mr. Pasteur Bizimunngu, an ethnic-Hutu politician appointed symbolic president until he resigned on the 23rd of March, 2000, when head of the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF), Army-General Paul Kagame, nicknamed the "Pilate", was the strongman with real power though he was vice president and minister of defence, to become president of Rwanda, there was a pervasive view allover Africa that power belongs to the general who leads his group to victorious armed struggle. A new constitution passed by a referendum on the 26th of May, 2003, with an election held on the 25th of August, 2003, that re-affirmed the president, Mr. Paul Kagame with more than 90 % of the votes. The next presidential polls of August, 2010 will be the second presidential elections held since the genocide in Rwanda have taken place so far. Mr. Paul Kagame, the RPF leader is also expected to win easily, for what is due to be a final seven year term in office since he came to power by armed resistance in July, 1994. He was overwhelmingly re-elected in August, 2010 but several opposition parties were barred from taking part, his government has denied claims, it was behind a series of attacks on his critics ahead of the election.

President Paul Kagame attracted a massive 93% of the popular vote in the presidential election in August, 2010, however, criticism of the lack of political freedom in the country has become löoder in recent years, political opponents have been attacked, and although the president repeatedly denies that he or his party has any connection with the harassment of opponents, crirics say the government's domination of the political system is not a healthy sign for a multi-party democracy. In August the European Union observer mission praised the calm atmosphere and the high voter turn-out at the polls but, at the same time, it expressed concern over pre-election political violence. Mr. Paul Kagame and his coalition government remained determined to proceed with the country's economic reform programme in an effort to turn Rwanda, into a middle-income nation within a generation. The scars of the 1994 genocide will always bear on Rwanda's political history. The Tutsi led RPF forces came to power in July, 1994, ending the genocide, in which some 800,000 Tutsis and moderate Hutus were slaughtered. The Rwanda of today had to be very creative to mend the wrongs of the past and establish a sense of equality, justice and security amongst its people and a lot has been achieved so far but it will be a long healing and reconciliation process.

Side note: An internal UN report accuses Rwanda of complicity in supplying weapons and soldiers to the rebels in Democratic Republic of the Congo. The UN says it has evidence that a rebellion in the Democratic Republic of the Congo is being fuelled by recruits and support from neighbouring Rwanda. An internal UN report seen by the BBC cited defecting soldiers, who said they had been trained in Rwanda under the pretext of joining the army, before being sent over the border to fight. The conflict broke out in April,2012 after a mutiny by some Congolese army officers. Rwanda's foreign minister told the BBC the UN report is "categorical lies". "The UN mission in DR Congo is lying; they have not verified anything; they are repeating claims and rumours that we, the Rwandan government, have heard over the last many weeks," Foreign Minister

Louise Mushikiwabo told the BBC's Network Africa programme. "What would Rwanda gain in creating instability around its own borders? It does not make sense," Ms Mushikiwabo said. The UN report says some of the mutiny's leaders are former rebel Tutsi officers who had been linked to Rwanda, whose government is dominated by ethnic Tutsis. They were incorporated into the Congolese army in 2009 as part of a peace agreement. The area has suffered years of fighting since 1994, when more than a million ethnic Hutus fled across the border into DR Congo following the Rwandan genocide, in which some 800,000 people, mostly Tutsis, were slaughtered. Rwanda has twice invaded its much larger neighbour, saying it was trying to take action against Hutu rebels based in DR Congo. Tens of thousands have fled the recent violence in the eastern DR Congo.

Side note: Rwanda's Calllixte Nzabonimana gets life for genocide. A former Rwandan youth minister has been given a life sentence after being found guilty of playing a key role in the 1994 genocide. Callixte Nzabonimana was found guilty of genocide, conspiracy, incitement and extermination by the UN tribunal based in Arusha, Tanzania. His lawyer told AFP he will appeal. Ethnic Hutu militia and soldiers killed some 800,000 minority Tutsis and politically moderate Hutus in less than 100 days between April and June 1994.

Side note: Rwanda's community courts, known as "the gacacas", are to close, after 10 years of trying those accused of involvement in the 1994 genocide, the BBC has reported. The courts were set up to speed up the prosecution of hundreds of thousands of genocide suspects awaiting trial. But human rights group say the gacaca fell well short of international legal standards. According to latest government figures, about 65 per-cent of the close to two million people tried have been found guilty of the genocide by ethnic Hutu militia and soldiers of some 800,000 minority Tutsis and politically moderate Hutus in 100 days between April and June 1994. The UN's International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda was set up in neighbouring Tanzania to try the ringleaders of the genocide. It has convicted 38 people and acquitted eight so far. It is due to be closed down at the end of the year. But this left hundreds of thousands of people accused of involvement in the killings, leading to an enormous backlog of cases in Rwanda. It is said up to 10,000 people died in prison before they could be brought to justice. Community courts known as "the gacacas" were set up to clear the backlog and met in villages across the country, often outdoors in a marketplace or under a tree. The hearings gave communities a chance to face the accused and give evidence about what really happened and how it happened. But more than 160,000 judges were elected from among communities hut they lacked legal qualifications. Some of those found guilty have been sentenced to long jail sentences, with hard labour. But local and international human rights groups say the trials were held without defendants having access to qualified lawyers.

Accession to power of president Paul Kagame, in a war of resistance.

Tentative election calendar- Presidential, August.

Rwanda/Burundi – Diaries updates, and related Key notes in timeline:

1300s - Tutsis migrate into what is now Rwanda, which was already inhabited by the Twa and Hutu peoples.

1600s - Tutsi King Ruganzu Ndori subdues central Rwanda and outlying Hutu areas.

Late 1800s - Tutsi King Kigeri Rwabugiri establishes a unified state with a centralised military structure.

1858 - British explorer Hanning Speke is the first European to visit the area.

1890 - Rwanda becomes part of German East Africa.

1916 - Belgian forces occupy Rwanda.

1923 - Belgium granted League of Nations mandate to govern Ruanda-Urundi, which it ruled indirectly through Tutsi kings.

1946 - Ruanda-Urundi becomes UN trust territory governed by Belgium.

1957 - Hutus issue manifesto calling for a change in Rwanda's power structure to give them a voice commensurate with their numbers; Hutu political parties formed.

1959 - Tutsi King Kigeri V, together with tens of thousands of Tutsis, forced into exile in Uganda following inter-ethnic violence.

1961 - Rwanda proclaimed a republic.

1962 - Rwanda becomes independent with a Hutu, Gregoire Kayibanda, as president; many Tutsis leave the country.

1963 - Some 20,000 Tutsis killed following an incursion by Tutsi rebels based in Burundi.

1973 - President Gregoire Kayibanda ousted in military coup led by Majour-General Juvenal Habyarimana.

1978 - New constitution ratified; Juvenal Habyarimana elected president.

1988 - Some 50,000 Hutu refugees flee to Rwanda from Burundi following ethnic violence there.

1990 - Forces of the rebel, mainly Tutsi, Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) invade Rwanda from Uganda.

1991 - New multi-party constitution promulgated.

1993 - President Juvenal Habyarimana signs a power-sharing agreement with the Tutsis in the Tanzanian town of Arusha, ostensibly signalling the end of civil war; UN mission sent to monitor the peace agreement.

April 1994 – Juvenal Habyarimana and the Burundian president Ciprien Ntaryamia are killed after their plane is shot down over Kigali; RPF launches a major offensive; extremist Hutu militia and elements of the Rwandan military begin the systematic massacre of Tutsis. Within 100 days around 800,000 Tutsis and moderate Hutus are killed; Hutu militias flee to Zaire, taking with them around 2 million Hutu refugees.

1994-96 - Refugee camps in Zaire fall under the control of the Hutu militias whose are responsible for the genocide in Rwanda.

1995 - Extremist Hutu militias and Zairean government forces attack local Zairean Banyamulenge Tutsis; Zaire attempts to force refugees back into Rwanda.

1995 - UN-appointed international tribunal begins charging and sentencing a number of people responsible for the Hutu-Tutsi atrocities.

1996 - Rwandan troops invade and attack Hutu militia-dominated camps in Zaire in order to drive home the refugees.

1997 - Rwandan- and Ugandan-backed rebels depose President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire; Laurent Desire Kabila becomes president of Zaire, which is renamed the Democratic Republic of Congo.

1998 - Rwanda switches allegiance to support rebel forces trying to depose Laurant Kabila in the wake of the Congolese president's failure to expel extremist Hutu militias.

March 2000 - Rwandan President Pasteur Bizimungu, a Hutu, resigns over differences regarding the composition of a new cabinet and after accusing parliament of targeting Hutu politicians in anti-corruption investigations

April 2000 - Ministers and members of parliament elect Vice-President Paul Kagame nicknamed “the Pilate” as Rwanda's new president.

October 2001 - Voting to elect members of traditional "gacaca" courts begins. The courts - in which ordinary Rwandans judge their peers - aim to clear the backlog of 1994 genocide cases.

December 2001 - A new flag and national anthem are unveiled to try to promote national unity and reconciliation.

December 25, 2001; Just when it looked like the offensive was winding down, the Burundi government reports major military action in the Tenga forest. After several small-scale FNL counter-attacks, the Burundian Army launched a counter-counter-attack in Tenga, with action continuing December 23 and December 24. Though the exact locations of the camp sites the Burundian Army occupies remain unclear, the fighting seems to be in and around those positions. The army claims 515 FNL guerrillas dead, with army losses at 28. AFP quoted Burundi Army Major General Samuel Gahiro as saying "Tenga has been definitively liberated." That remains to be seen, but it does appear the offensive has produced several major successes for the government.

January 1, 2002 The US has placed the Army for the Liberation of Rwanda (ALIR) on its list of "other terrorist groups. This group is composed of Hutus from the former Rwandan Army and the Interhamwe militia. -- Stephen V Cole January 2, 2002 Tanzania government sources reported a Burundian aircraft dropped three bombs near the border village of Kilelema. The bombs landed in a farm field and no one was injured. Tanzanias Defense Ministry issued a protest.

January 3, 2002 On January 2, 10 FDD rebels and one Burundian Army troop died in a series of clashes outside of Kirama (Kibira forest area). On January 3, FNL guerrillas killed three civilians and a Burundian Army soldier when they ambushed a two-truck convoy in northwest Burundi.

January 4, 2002 A South African civilian serving with the protection force (peacekeeping force in Burundi) was murdered in Bujumbura. Police reports said the man was strangled to death with a rope.

January 9, 2002 The Burundian Army reported it used Katyusha rockets to attack FNL forces in positions northeast and southeast of Bujumbura. Two Mi-24 helicopters were also employed, with strafing and missile attacks on the rebels.

January 16, 2002 More action in Bujumbura Rural province (the area surrounding Burundis capital). Burundian government officials said 30 more people have died in firefights and ambushes around the capital. The heaviest fighting (according to the Burundian spokesman) occurred around the Ntahangwa Valley. On January 13, the Burundi government reported 12 people died in a series of FNL rebel attacks. The clashes also took place around Bujumbura.

January 19, 2002 In response to the volcano on its border, Rwanda announced that it will open 26 refugee camps for approximately 650,000 people who had fled the eruption of Mount Nyiragongo.

January 23, 2002 FDD guerrillas launched an attack in Bubanza province (northwest Burundi). One civilian, a Hutu serving as a local security official, was killed in the attack.

January 25, 2002 FDD rebels struck Burundian villages near the Tanzanian border (Cankuzo province). Burundian government sources reported nine civilians were slain the the attacks. A subsequent report said a large number of FDD guerrillas were in an area near the village of Gisagara (which is near the Tanzanian border). These FDD groups have camps inside Tanzania.

January 27, 2002 Burundi has agreed to pull its troops out of Democratic Congo "soon". In exchange for this commitment, the Democratic Congo has agreed to stop supporting the Burundian rebels operating from the Congo and encourage them to negotiate with the Burundian government.--Stephen V Cole

January 28, 2002 Burundi reported that around 20 people died in a series of attacks and firefights around Bujumbura. The attacks included a rebel ambush of a bus in the town of Migera.

February 16, 2002 The Burundian government reports another firefight between rebel groups. This time its an internecine FDD struggle in the Kibira forest. 12 rebels died in the firefight, that pitted a group favoring peace negotiations with a rejectionist rebel group.

February 17, 2002 One man was killed and four wounded when Hutu FDD rebels attacked a truck on a road in Ruyigi Province. One of the passengers was the local UN administrator for the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA). Looks like another calculated FDD attack.

February 20, 2002 A South African soldier on peacekeeping duty in Burundi was killed in what may be an attempted fragging incident. Apparently the soldier shot and wounded a South African officer in the South African headquarters in Bujumbura. Another soldier intervened and was also wounded, but the second soldier managed to kill the trooper who had wounded the officer. The latest report says the incident continues to be investigated. South Africa now has around 750 soldiers in Burundi.

March 16, 2002 Burundi reported several attacks throughout the country. On March 6 Hutu rebels ambushed a Burundian Army unit near Kambezi and killed six government troops. FDD guerrillas killed 11 civilians in a series of attacks around Bujumbura. A Burundian army source also said another 200 Hutu rebels had entered Burundi from base camp areas in Tanzania. An army patrol engaged the guerrilla group and two soldiers were killed in the firefight.

March 21, 2002 The Burundi government said that 60 people died in a two-day long firefight between the Burundi Army and FNL guerrillas. The firefight occurred near Bujumbura (Nyabiraba district).

April 5, 2002 On April 2 the Burundi government reported an estimated 24,000 people fled from the Kibuye area to escape a series of firefights between FNL Hutu rebels and the Burundian Army. A temporary refugee camp has been set up near the town of Rushubi. The firefights have occurred over a three-week period. This suggests that the government may have launched another slow offensive in the region, a clearing operation to pinpoint and destroy rebel bases. On April 4 the Burundian Army said that the FNL had abandoned two command posts near Mbare and Gasarara (which are in Bujumbura province). A subsequent report identified these towns as Hutu areas that strongly support the FNL.

April 11, 2002 Clashes between the Rwanda Patriotic Army (RPA) and its former allies, the Banyamulengein, were feared to have claimed 400 civilian lives and eight RPA soldiers on 30-31 March. Rwanda allegedly sent two helicopters to shell Minembwe on Easter Sunday and Banyamulenge soldiers shot down one of them, killing the eight RPA soldiers. There are an estimated 1,000 to 4,000 Rwandan troops backed by helicopters skirmishing in the high plains South Kivu areas of Uvira, Minembwe, Kamombo, Ndondo, Fizzi and Rwerera.

Meanwhile, Nambia had pulled it's troops out of the DRCongo on 3 April because, as President Sam Nujoma told the press, the "time had come for peace to be restored in that country". - Adam Geibel.

April 15, 2002 Western press sources and NGO sources report 42 people were killed in various incidents in Burundi. The most grievous incident occurred April 6, when a Burundian Army unit (according to the NGO source) surrounded a house (possibly a housing complex) "suspected" of harboring rebels, and destroyed it. The incident occurred in the village of Gihanga. 38 people were reportedly killed in the incident (29 civilians, two Burundian Army troops, and seven FNL rebels). A western press source said that the Burundian Army unit received weapons fire from the house.

April 18, 2002 NGO and African news sources reported a possible mass killing in Burundi by FDD rebels in the town of Nyanza-Lac (south of Bujumbura). One report said the FDD rebels attacked from Tanzania and returned to Tanzania by boat (on Lake Tanganyika). Approximately 60 people were killed in the raid, with several dozen wounded.

April 29, 2002 Burundian sources reported that Burundian Army has launched a new offensive in the Kibira forest area (western Burundi). One large firefight took place April 25, where three government soldiers were killed. On April 27 the Burundian Army said its troops attacked an FDD command post and destroyed it.

April 30, 2002 The Burundian government reported an FDD rebel night attack in the town of Rumonge. A government security officer was killed as well as a civilian. The FDD band then looted several houses before withdrawing.

May 1, 2002 The South African government said that it will pursue a new regional peace initiative to try and reach a peace settlement in Burundi.

May 8, 2002 The Burundian government reported a series of attacks around Bujumbura. FNL rebels struck near Nyabiraba and killed ten civilians. An FNL unit ambushed two military vehicles near Kanyosha and killed at least five people.

May 13, 2002 Government and press sources reported rumors that the FNL is once again going through a spate of in-fighting. Allegedly, several of FNL leader Agathon Rwasas bodyguards died in a shoot-out in Kibuye. A subsequent report said two bodyguards were killed in an assassination attempt.

May 16, 2002 On May 15 Burundi government sources reported that the Burundian Army had attacked several FNL positions in a new offensive east of Bujumbura. On May 16 western press sources reported that the FNL struck back, hitting five government positions outside of Bujumbura. A government spokesman acknowledged two Burundian Army soldiers died in the fighting. An FNL source later said that the rumors of a mutiny in the FNL were false.

May 17, 2002 The first allegation came from a DRC (Kinshasha) spokesman (always a suspicious source). The DRC spokesman claimed that Rwandan-backed members of the RCD and troops from the Rwandan Patriotic Army (RPA) had arrested and executed 20 members of the RCD in Kisangani. A Rwandan spokesman immediately denied the accusation. The propaganda jousting follows the rebellion of approximately 100 members of the RCD who took over the Kisangani radio station. RCD spokesmen are now saying several mutineers were killed as loyalist RCD troops expelled them from the radio station.

May 24, 2002 The Burundian government reported that the armys most recent offensive had killed 66 FNL Hutu rebels. The Burundian Army has been conducting an operating in western Burundi since early May. Seven Burundian soldiers have died in the offensive.

June 6, 2002 The Burundian Army reported a Katyusha rocket attack by FDD Hutu guerrillas near Lake Tanganyika. At least six civilians were injured by the volley of seven rockets. On June 4 the Burundian Army reported that FNL Hutu rebels launched an attack near Bujumbura (Gasamanzuki). Several houses were destroyed.

June 15, 2002 FDD rebels conducted a series of ambushes in Cibitoke province. Ten civilians and three Burundian Army soldiers died in one of the attacks, when the FDD band ambushed a bus. Another 25 civilians were killed and wounded in other attacks.

June 24, 2002 The Burundian government reported one soldiers and seven civilians died when Hutu rebels (no group identified) ambushed a convoy near the town of Musayni.

June 28, 2002: And what else is new. Rebel and government leaders both report new peace talks are deadlocked in Burundi. New fighting is reported in the Kigura forest area (near Rumonge) and along the Tanzanian border. The Burundian government now estimates the FNL can field 1000 guerrillas. Thats down from early 2001, when the FNL had an estimated 3000 rebel fighters.

July 8, 2002: More reports of Hutu rebel movements into Burundi from Tanzania. Burundian government sources report 200 FDD Hutu rebels entered Burundi from Tanzania on July 4. On July 6 and 7, Hutu rebels mortared the villages of Ruyigi and Makamba. There was one person reported wounded in the shelling attack.

July 11, 2002: FDD rebels attacked a village in Kayanza province and killed four civilians and one Burundian Army soldier. The rebels entered the area from bases in the Kibira forest. This indicates that the FDD have re-occupied the forest, following the recent government attacks in the area.

July 12, 2002: An FDD rebel group attacked a coffee processing in the town of Buhoro (central Burundi). Burundian officials described the attack as part of a rebel offensive in Gitega province. Nes services reported that the Burundian government responded with air attacks on the rebels.

July 13, 2002: The Burundi government accused Tanzania of aiding the FDD Hutu guerrillas. AFP quoted a spokesman as saying that Burundihad witnessed flagrant rebel military organization and interaction with the (Tanzanian) administration." That seems to mean the Tanzanians let the rebels cross the border without interference. In a subsequent report, the Burundi government said that more fighting was occurring in Makamba and Ruyigi provinces.

July 17, 2002: Burundi's Army claimed that 219 Hutu rebels and 12 soldiers had been killed in the east and southeast of the central African country, since insurgents launched an offensive on 7 July. The claim could not be immediately confirmed by independent sources.

An army spokesman said the Forces pour la Defence de la Democratie (FDD) rebels are working in two groups, one of which was in the central Mwaro province and the other in the eastern Ruyigi province, where the army had blocked its advance. The rebels were able to infiltrate via Lake

Tanganyika and across the River Maragarazi that borders the two countries (and because of the dry season, was shallow enough to walk across).

July 25, 2002: The Burundian government claimed that Hutu rebels (no organization identified) kill four civilians and wounded at least ten in an ambush in Cibitoke province (northwest Burundi).

July 27, 2002: One 26 July, the Burundian Army raised it's claim of dead Hutu rebels to at least 500 over the last two weeks, while suffering only 15 losses. Colonel Augustin Nzabampema told reporters that the fighting between the army and Forces in Defense of Democracy (FDD) rebels was concentrated in three central provinces west of Bujumbura. Nzabampema denied recent reports that hundreds of rebels had crossed into Burundi from neighboring Tanzania, saying no rebels had entered the country since last month. However, an anonymous Burundian intelligence officer claimed that more than 1,000 rebels had crossed the border and were preparing to launch an offensive. On 21 July, Burundian Defense Minister Cyrille Ndayirukiye called for international observers to be deployed on the Tanzanian border to monitor alleged incursions of Hutu rebels into Burundi. He claimed that the Tanzanian-based rebels had been crossing the border since early July.

Fighting was continuing in parts of the Gitega province, but the situation had become calm in the provinces of Muramvya and Mwaro. The rebels had also recently attempted to attack an army barracks in the village of Kabezi (about 9 miles southwest of Bujumbura) but were repulsed.

Between 100 and 150 rebels had attacked Gitega (the country's second-largest city) on 22 and 23 July, killing two people. The rebels had also burnt five vehicles and a home, then looted 30 shops before army troops arrived and forced them to withdraw. The rebels had been bent on destroying personal and public property, and infrastructure such as health centers and coffee factories. Gitega resident Ernest Bigoro told the local Bonesha radio that "there were at least 200 of them, dressed in military uniforms and well armed". FDD Major "Zenon" said the army claims were "pure fabrication", but refused to elaborate. Burundi's civil war erupted in October 1993 and has claimed more than 200,000 people, mostly civilians. - Adam Geibel

July 28, 2002 FDD rebels in Burundi attacked the town of Ruhororo and killed at least three people. They also attacked a displaced persons camp located in Muhanga. The Burundian Army also told western news agencies that between 1500 and 2000 rebels have participated in the series of attacks that began the first week of July. This new offensive has consisted of attacks on towns and villages in east and southeast Burundi.

August 2, 2002 The Burundian government said that rebel attacks were increasing just as a new round of peace talks is set to begin. The Burundian Army claimed that it had killed 102 Hutu rebels in a series of fights during the last week that are intended (by the rebels) to undermine peace efforts.. The new peace talks start August 6.

August 3, 2002: Update on the peace talks scheduled for August 6: Both the Burundian government and the FDD have confirmed that they will participate in the conference. However, elements of the FDD continue to pursue an offensive in eastern Burundi. The question now: is the FDD at the peace table the same FDD that's on the battlefield? (Austin Bay)

August 6, 2002: The Burundi peace talks didnt start off on the right foot. Actually, they didnt start on time, either. A Tanzanian spokesman said that the talks, schedule to begin on August 5 in Dar-Es-Salaam, didnt begin, though the FDD was now scheduled to participate in the talks. However, fighting continued in Burundi. On August 5, Hutu rebels killed three civilians in an attack inside Bujumbura. One of the dead was identified as a radio reporter. A late report said FNL rebels struck the town of Migera on August 4 and killed three people there.

August 11, 2002: The Burundian government said FNL forces attacked the city of Gitega. Ten civilians were reported killed.

August 15, 2002: The Burundi ceasefire talks finally got off the dime. On August 12 the Burundian government met with Hutu rebels (including the main faction of the FDD, CNDD-FDD) in Tanzania. The talks continued through August 15. Pierre Nkurunziza heads the CNDD-FDD. Regional analysts now estimate the CNDD-FDD has from 10,000 to 12,000 guerrillas.

August 19, 2002: In the shadow of the peace talks, Burundian rebels claimed to have captured 72 government troops during two months of fighting in the center of the country and are being held in the southern rebel stronghold of Makamba, according to a senior FDD rebel official's statement on 13 August.

However, Army spokesman Col. Augustin Nzabampema dismissed this as "a big lie". The army had been fighting about 1,000 rebel troops in eastern Ruyigi province, (170 kilometers east of the capital Bujumbura). The ethnic Hutu rebels had entered the country from Tanzania to launch attacks on 9 August and warned that any civilians who offered them support would be treated the same as the attackers. - Adam Geibel

August 22, 2002: The talks continue, the war continues. The Burundi government reported 23 people were killed in a series of battles and ambushes throughout the country. The biggest firefight occurred August 20 when approximately 20 rebels were killed in an attack on the town of Mubone. FDD forces attacked the town of Muranvya August 21.

August 25, 2002: Rumors of an imminent FNL (National Liberation Forces) rebel attack had been circulating in Burundi for about a week when it became reality at dawn on 25 August, with rebels lobbing mortars and grenades into the capital's northern Gikungu district. Government troops quickly took up positions and began skirmishing inside the city, while others responded with tanks and artillery. The Army claimed to have repulsed the attack and killed 24 rebels, at the cost of three troops and three civilians KIA. Other sources believed at least two soldiers had been killed near a water tower in the northeast of the capital. The attack shattered hopes of endin nine years of civil war on the eve of planned peace talks.

Two South African peacekeepers were also wounded, when a shell landed near the home of a minister they were guarding. One was seriously wounded and would be evacuated to South Africa.

There were plenty of indicators of an upcoming attack. The Army claimed that between 200 and 300 Forces for the Defence of Democracy (FDD) rebels entered Burundi from Tanzania on the night of 20 August and were about 100 miles from Bujumbura by the 22nd. The UN later reported that at least 2,000 civilians fled their homes in Bujumbura's Rural Province on the 20th. - Adam Geibel

August 27, 2002: On August 26 FDD rebels attacked the village of Bugendana (east of Gitgea). On August 27 the FDD attacked the city of Gitega. At least one civilian was killed and several were wounded. A Burundian Army unit counter-attacked and the rebels fled.

August 31, 2002: The peace agreement signed a month ago between Rwanda and the DRC (Democratic Republic of the Congo) has yet to be implemented. But both nations are not concerned, as they expect to to take several months to untangle the various rebel groups in DRC.

September 3, 2002: Rwanda is beginning to send ethnic Tutsi refugees from the Congo back to their homes. There are some 31,500 such refugees in Rwanda and 1,300 are going back now.

September 4, 2002: Burundi army troops attacked a FNL rebel camp and killed at least 48 rebels.

September 10, 2002: Hutu rebels in Burundi continue to make small attacks throughout the nation, killing one or two civilians or local officials in most cases. Over the weekend, such clashes left 15 rebels and six civilians dead.

September 13, 2002: Rwanda says it will begin pulling troops out of DRC next week. Meanwhile, the DRC is arresting former senior Hutu Rwandan officials accused of war crimes back in Rwanda, and disarming exiled Rwandan Hutu militias.

September 14, 2002: In the last week, Burundi rebels have killed eight civilians and kidnapped two others. The rebels accused the civilians of collaborating with the army. The rebels try to terrorize the population into not helping the army. Meanwhile, the main Burundi rebel group is continuing to discuss peace with the government.

September 16, 2002: A battalion of some 500 Rwandan troops has left Congo. The government won't say, but it is believed that there are still 20-40,000 Rwandan troops in Congo.

September 19, 2002: The government and FDD are blaming each other for the slaughter of 183 (according to the government) or "over 1000" (according to the FDD rebels) civilians by "men in uniform" on September 9th. Both army troops and rebels wear uniforms. The government says it is investigating.

September 21, 2002: Rwandan troops began withdrawing from the Congo, as per a deal with the Congo government.

September 24, 2002: After years of diplomatic and military pressure from Rwanda, the Congolese government has announced the banning of Rwandan Hutu political groups (led by men responsible for 1994 Rwanda mass murder). The leaders of these groups are also to be expelled from the Congo, although catching all of them will be difficult. But at least they won't be able to operate openly, as they have for the last eight years.

October 1, 2002 The Burundi government admitted that it's troops had killed 173 civilians in a battle with rebels. The government has ordered the arrest of the officers in charge.

October 5, 2002: The last of 22,000 Rwandan troops has marched out of the Congo.

October 6, 2002: In Burundi, the rebel Forces for the Defence of Democracy (FDD) is thought to have about 10,000 armed men, with only about 4,000 active in Burundi and the rest in Tanzanian camps. There is a dissident wing of the FDD with 5,000 men operating out of Congo camps. This group has made peace with the government, but this deal has not been completely implemented. The rebel National Liberation Forces (FNL) has about 3,000 armed men operating around the capital. But the FNL is rife with factionalism.

October 10, 2002: Several hundred Congolese refugees fled to Burundi to avoid fighting between rebel factions in Congo.

November 2, 2002: And what else is new? It looks like Congo misled some of its Hutu allies, thereby gaining a negotiation chit or two with Rwanda. Heres the story, or stories, for at least two versions are circulating. Following a mediation effort by South Africa, eight Rwandan Hutu leaders were told by Congo government negotiators they could return to Rwanda. Or maybe they werent told, for one version says the men thought they were going to South Africa. They were put on a South African chartered aircraft. The plane took the rebels to Kigali, where they were arrested by the Rwandan government. All eight belong to the Rwandan Democratic Liberation Front (FDLR). South Africa and the UN (MONUC) have agreed to help disarm Rwandan Hutu militias as well as arrest Hutus involved in the 1994 genocide. Good luck. (Austin Bay)

November 3, 2002: FDD rebels shelled Gitega with mortars. The bombardment lasted for nearly two hours, However, there were no reported casualties.

November 8, 2002: No surprise here, unfortunately. Ceasefire talks between the Burundian government and the FDD have broken down without an agreement.

November 12, 2002:The Burundian rebel group Conseil national pour la defense de la democratie-Forces pour la defense de la democratie [CNDD-FDD] warned Bujumbura civilians to leave areas near military bases immediately for their own safety. The rebels claim that several Burundian and Rwandan infantry battalions are leading an offensive against the communities of of Bukeye, Teza, Muruta and Matongo. They were supported by Burundian military aircraft dropping "unconventional bombs"

The day before, Ugandan President Yoweri Museveni gave both factions in Burundi two weeks to reach a cease-fire or risk the wrath of regional leaders. Museveni threatened to isolate the country, comparing their problem to the Ivory Coast's. South African Deputy President Jacob Zuma, who is chairing the talks, was more optimistic and claimed that "for the first time the two parties have discussed the real issues, made progress and identified issues that needed further discussion".

That same day, FNL rebels opened fire on a Burundian military vehicle transporting troops. Three soldiers and three civilian bystanders were wounded by gunfire. The attack caused at least 5,000 people to flee the area, about 12 miles south of the capital. - Adam Geibel

November 22, 2002: The Burundian government reported another series of FDD mortar attacks north of the capital and more fighting in the Rutegama area (east of the capital). The Burundian Army is apparently responding to some of the mortar attacks with artillery counter-battery fire. Thats a tough trick. You need lots of forward observers with radios linked to the artillery fire direction center (assuming there is a fire direction center) and/or counter-battery radar systems. The Burundian Army apparently has none of this. Firing artillery into suspected positions usually shoots up jungle and does little else, However, the area is very close to populated towns and villages, so off rounds arent going to simply hit jungle. As for Rutegama, ten civilians died in the renewed fighting in that area. There was no information about government and rebel casualties.

The Burundian government claimed that its forces dealt the FDD a heavy blow in a battle near Rutegama. The Burundian press release said the bodies of 33 FDD rebel were found after the Burdundian Army cleared the battlefield. Ten civilians died in the battle, which took place November 21. One part of the broken FDD force fled into the Kibera forest. On November 22, Hutu rebels fired mortars into two Bujumbura suburbs and killed four people. A subsequent report said the Burundian Army had launched a counter-guerrilla sweep to try and flush the mortar unit.

November 29, 2002: The Burundian Army said its troops killed 50 FNL rebels in an offensive outside of Bujumbura (in the Tenga forest area). The offensive began on November 26 and included mortar, rocket launcher, and helicopter gunship support. The report said 10 Burundian Army soldiers had been killed in the fighting.

December 4, 2002 A spokesman for the Forces for the Defence of Democracy (FDD, Burundi's main rebel movement) that the group was ready to sign a deal with the government, as regional leaders met on 1 December to seek an end to the country's devastating civil war. Burundian negotiators had agreed on 22 November to set up a technical working group to discuss security details and a ceasefire implementation. The rebels were demanding the withdrawal of a 700-man South African protection force from Burundi, but the Burundi government insisted they remain. The rebels also called for government forces to be returned to their barracks and disarmed.

Burundi's other main rebel group, the Palipehutu-FNL, has declined to meet the government. Nearly 400,000 people remain displaced by the fighting. Donor countries have pledged $905 million to support Burundi's peace process.

Human Rights Watch warned that recent army massacres of civilians and the FDD bombardment of the capital are raising the risk of further widespread slaughter of civilians. The recent movement of thousands of well-armed FDD fighters into northwestern Burundi have heightened fears of an all-out rebel attack on the capital, Bujumbura. Another, smaller rebel group (the National Liberation Forces) also occupies the hills around Bujumbura. Most of the army's highly placed officers are Tutsi and most of the victims of army atrocities are Hutu. By the same token, the rebel forces are largely Hutu and a large percentage of Bujumbura residents are Tutsi. - Adam Geibel

December 9, 2002: The largest rebel group in Burundi, the Forces for the Defense of Democracy (FDD), agreed to a cease-fire on 3 December, leaving only one real rebel group fighting the government. The ceasefire takes effect on 30 December 2002. The rebels would report to UN-supervised billets the next day, although who actually was going to supervise this exercise and where the billets would be located was undecided. - Adam Geibel

December 10, 2002: Burundi FNL rebels continue raid into neighboring Congo, and appear to be out of control.

The FDD rebels accuse the government of firing 140 rounds of artillery at FDD camps outside the capital. The government says this was in response to raids by FDD fighters on villages outside the capital. Some 300 homes were looted of food and other goods.

December 11, 2002: The FDD refuses to attend more peace talks in South Africa, but instead wants to hold the talks, as before, in nearby Tanzania.

December 13, 2002: Despite the ceasefire with the FDD, government troops say it is difficult to tell the difference between fighters from the FDD and the FNL (which has not agreed to a ceasefire.) This has led to some tense moments out in the bush.

December 16, 2002: Fighting around the Burundi capital has left four soldiers, two civilians and 13 rebels dead. One of the clashes involved FDD rebels stealing cattle, the other was an ambush by FNL rebels. The FDD rebels have a ceasefire agreement with the government, and this cattle raid is the first violation of that.

December 24, 2002:Anywhere between 3-5,000 FNL rebels continue to operate outside the capital, refusing to make peace with the government. The FNL is a Hutu organization, and many of its members are turning to banditry. Nine years of civil war have left over 250,000 dead and now only the FNL wants to fight on.

The Interhamwe Hutu militias fighters in the Congo have generally reverted to banditry, and some have tried to sneak back into Rwanda.

December 27, 2002: Burundi reports continued fighting north of Bujumbura. 5000 civilians have fled a series of firefights between the Burundi army and the FDD that began on December 24. A subsequent report said the Burundi Army was using heavy artillery (a term that seems to mean tube artillery of any kind, instead of mortars) against the FDD units.

January 14, 2003: The Burundian government reports heavy fighting in the Mpanda district (western Burundi). The Burundian Army engaged an FDD Hutu rebel force. The battle caused around 10,000 civilians to flee the area. The FDD accused the army of breaking a ceasefire in the district.

January 19, 2003: Western sources report FDD rebels ambushed a Burundian Army unit and killed at least 10 Burundi soldiers. The ambush took place in Ruyigi Province (eastern Burundi).

February 1, 2003: FNL (National Liberation Forces) Hutu rebels killed seven people in two attacks near Bujumbura. All seven were civilians; one was a local government official. One spokesman said the killings were part of an FNL strategy to undermine new peace talks which are scheduled to begin February 4.

February 16, 2003: The UN reported that on February 11 CNDD-FDD rebels infiltrated from the Kibira Forest and took up positions in the Rutegama, Mbuye and Kiganda communes (all in Muramvya Province). On February 12 the Burundian Army and the CNDD-FDD engaged in several firefights in each of these areas. The government claimed 20 rebels died in the firefights. There were no government casualties reported.

February 21, 2003: FDD rebels pulled out of the latest round of Burundi peace talks. Peace talks? Actually, the government and the rebels are back to ceasefire negotiations. An FDD spokesman accused the government of not sticking to a commitment to reach a permanent ceasefire accord. Sit tight for the next round of talks.

February 24, 2003: The Burundian government reported at least 12 people died in fighting throughout the country. FDD rebels struck in Gitega and Ngozi provinces. The FNL launched an ambush near Bujumbura and killed three Burundian soldiers.

March 5, 2003: UN sources report that a series of attacks by the FNL (carried out March 1-4) has created 20,000 refugees. The FNL attacked the town of Gisovu, near Bujumbura.

March 14, 2003: The Burundian government reported a series of firefights in eastern Burundi. A major clash occurred in Nyabitsinda. In the firefight that occurred on March 14 the Burundian Army reported two of its soldiers died and 13 FDD rebels were killed. On March 13 another battle occurred in the same area. The Burundian Army said three of its troops were killed and seven wounded in that battle. There were no reports on FDD casualties.

March 15, 2003: Rwanda has issued an ultimatum for the Ugandan army to withdraw from Bunia in eastern Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) immediately or face the Rwanda Patriotic Army (RPA). In a strongly worded statement, Rwanda accused Uganda and the DRC government of deploying their troops, along with FAC, Ex-FAR and Interahamwe militias, into areas in north Kivu that threatening Rwandan positions. The statement continues with the dire threat that "should the international community fail to reverse this development promptly and decisively, Rwanda would be compelled to assume responsibility and take appropriate measures to protect its people."

The Rwanda statement was released as Interahamwe and ex-FAR reoccupied some of the defensive positions previously held by the Rwandan army, bringing these militias closer to Rwanda's borders. Rwanda has apparently mobilized to re-enter the DR Congo and massed a large army in Goma, ready to flush out Mai Mai rebels and ex-FAR from the area. Rwanda alleges that the DRC (with Ugandan help) has deployed about 300 troops and that the Ugandan army had moved tanks, APCs and heavy artillery in the Ituri region.

Ugandan Defense Minister Ruth Nankabirwa told the press that the Ugandan Army was not about to leave Bunia and rejected US ambassador to the DRC's call for the Uganda Army to withdraw. In turn, the Ugandan Army has ordered the Union of Patriotic Congolese (UPC) rebels to withdraw from all airports in Ituri region considered a strategic threat to Uganda. The Ugandan reinforcements sent to Bunia were attacked by Lendu militias marching to the area.

Rwanda has reportedly deployed troops at six locations near the Ugandan border over the last two weeks and some of the units were observed with heavy artillery. Uganda has beefed up its force in Congo to 5,000 men, with three battalions (2,000 men) around Bunia alone. - Adam Geibel

March 27, 2003: Burundi claimed its armed forces killed 66 FDD Hutu rebels in a series of heavy firefights north of Bujumbura. The battles took place near the villages of Kavumu and Musenyi (Kibira forest area) in Muranvya province. The Burundian report said four Burundian soldiers were wounded. A subsequent report said four Burundian Army soldiers were killed in the battles. An FDD spokesman told AFP that the Burundian government claims were exaggerated but the fighting had been heavy.

April 3, 2003: An independent radio station in Burundi reported that around 440 civilians have been killed in fighting in the eastern province of Ruyigi since January. The civil war has displaced an estimated 14 percent of Burundi's 6.8 million people and 350,000 more have fled to Tanzania. - Adam Geibel

April 7, 2003: The former US presidential special representative to the Great Lakes region urged the US Congress to support the African Union (AU) peacekeeping mission. The translation from diplo-speak means "send money", with the US bankrolling some part of the peacekeeping bill while the South African military reaps the operational rewards of US financial support. The South African government is dominated by the unrepentantly-Marxist African National Congress party and over the last two years has criticized the Bush administration at every turn, so they should be expected to try and hijack any credit for stabilizing the situation. Of course, if Burundi goes up in flames, it will somehow be America's fault. - Adam Geibel

April 10, 2003: The AU is providing 3,500 peacekeeping troops from Ethiopia, Mozambique and South Africa under a peace agreement to try to end the civil war which began in 1993. According to Major General Sipho Binda, the South African commander of the African Mission in Burundi (AMIB), the AU peacekeeping force will be deployed in Burundi before May 1 (the day the transitional government is due to take power).

Apparently, the left hand doesn't talk to the right hand. The day before, a South African defense forces spokesman could not say when the Mozambican and Ethiopian troops would join the South Africans. Binda had just arrived in Bujumbura with a 50-strong planning team and would spend a week in the country assessing the situation. - Adam Geibel

April 16, 2003: A South African Foreign Affairs Deputy Director said that some African countries had asked them to intervene in other conflicts on the continent, such as in Sudan and the Ivory Coast. Unfortunately, after years of budget cuts by the Mbeki government, the South African military has neither the muscle nor ability to project themselves into Peacekeeping situations.

They already had problems deploying a 751-man composite battalion to Burundi, as part of a United Nations-endorsed VIP protection operation in support of the transitional government and now there are plans to put 1,200 South Africans into Burundi. These troops would be tasked with enforcing a series of ceasefire agreements and political settlements, at a time where the ceasefire between the government and rebels looks like it will fail. More than 6,000 people have fled their homes in central Burundi since fighting broke out between Hutu rebels and government troops in the second week of April. - Adam Geibel

April 17, 2003: Forces for the Defense of Democracy (FDD) rebels attacked government positions around the capital. The most intense fighting took place in the hills surrounding Bujumbura, although mortar shells were fired in the southern neighborhoods. Fourteen shells landed in that area, with one house set ablaze. The government was responding with it's own artillery and at least one helicopter gunship. - Adam Geibel

April 18, 2003: The Burundian Army claims it troops killed 26 Hutu FDD rebels in a counter-attack outside Bujumbura. The FDD group had been shelling the Bujumbura outskirts with mortar fire. The mortar attacks took place April 16 and 17.

April 20, 2003: Burundi rebels threatened to increase their attacks against the capital Bujumbura, in order to force the government to include them in a transitional government as agreed in a December ceasefire deal. The Burundi army has come under heavy attack from FDD rebels shelling the outskirts of Bujumbura and other cities. - Adam Geibel

April 23, 2003: South African Major General Sipho Binda, commander of the African Union (AU) peacekeeping force for Burundi, and his staff of 20 are heading for Bujumbura. South Africa, Mozambique and Ethiopia are supposed to contribute 1,800, 200 and 1,000 troops, respectively to the peace-keeping force, but uncertainty about funding could delay the troops deployment. Each country is expected to finance its own soldiers for the first two months, but both Mozambique and Ethiopia have shown reluctance to foot this bill. South Africa may end up being the only country to send troops (probably a motorized infantry battalion). This happened about six months ago when four countries were committed to sending forces to Burundi, but only the South African government honored this agreement. - Adam Geibel

April 24, 2003: The FDD, Burundi's main Hutu rebel group, asked the international community to help facilitate real and definitive peace talks in Burundi.

April 27, 2003: The first contingent of African Union (AU) peacekeepers arrived in Bujumbura, Burundi. 100 South African troops, led by General Sipha Bindo, flew into the Burundi capital's airport and then moved to a lager area nearby. The AU plans on deploying a force of around 3,500 troops. The FDD, however, issued a statement that basically said the Hutu rebels believe the AU force amount to a "reinforcement" for the Burundian Army. (Austin Bay)

April 29, 2003: FDD Hutu rebels killed eight civilians in an ambush in the village of Guhyungwe (Bubanza province). The rebels opened fire on two passenger-carrying mini-buses.

May 2, 2003: Burundi’s new president assumed power April 30. President Domitien Ndayizeye, a Hutu, took over per the August 2000 national accord. "I am wondering what is the reason for war today, Ndayizeye said. Sometimes I think the rebels are crazy. If they like the rebel life, maybe they want to continue it." Those of us who cover Burundi have had that unfortunate impression for some time. On May 2 there were several reports of small-scale attacks outside Bujumbura.

May 9, 2003: Theres still not much peace to keep in Burundi. The Burundian government said that its forces had killed at least 100 FDD rebels in a series of battles in the Kibira forest. Two villages were specifically mentioned, Ndubura and Ruce (both are northeast Bujumbura). There were conflicting accounts of Burundian Army casualties, though a Burundian officer who, asked for anonymity, said 19 Burundian soldiers were killed and 42 were wounded in the actions that took place over a five day period. This looks like another government offensive into the Kirbira forest. On May 7 other government troops fought with FDD rebels in the eastern province of Ruyigi. The government claimed its troops killed 23 FDD rebels in that battle. The report called the Ruyigi battle a pre-emptive action. This usually means the government got a tip on a rebel movement and tried to set up a blocking position outside a village to prevent a rebel attack.

May 10, 2003: The government is making another attempt to negotiate a deal with the Hutu rebel groups. Factions of the FNL and FDD rebels have agreed to take senior positions in the government and talks are apparently underway with other leaders of FNL and FDD.

May 27, 2003 Reports out of Burundi say that two factions of the rebel FDD have fought a series of sharp battles in the Rukambasi mountains. The area is south of Bujumbura. What kicked off the intra-FDD fighting isnt clear. One of the FDD factions signed a ceasefire agreement with the Burundian government, but hat ceasefire has not held.

June 4, 2003: FNL rebels killed 20 Burundian Army troops who were defending the Mugere dam complex (near Bujumbura). An FNL spokesman claimed a government armored vehicle was destroyed. The most interesting claim was that over 1000 FNL rebels were involved in the attack. Thats a large force, but Mugere is a big target (producing around a third of Burundis electricity). The government did confirm that the dam was attacked but disputed the rebels claims. We could find no reports of electricity disruptions in the capital, though a subsequent wire report said the dams hydroelectric facilities were producing less electric power and that several technicians were missing.

June 13, 2003: Britain has pledged $6.5 million and the United States donated $1 million, to boost the African force monitoring cease-fire in Burudni. The African Union Mission in Burundi (AMIB) force includes troops from South Africa, Ethiopia and Mozambique.

The South Africans currently have 908 soldiers deployed in Burundi, protecting political leaders who had returned from exile to join the interim government of Burundi. That function had previously been carried out by the SA Protection Support Detachment, which has been in Burundi since 2001.

Whether the South African military is up to this level of activity is debatable, since they only spend about 1.6 percent of their gross domestic product on defense. This is far less than in other countries, like Botswana (5.5 percent) or Nigeria (4.5 percent). Coincidentally, Minister Mosiuoa Lekota told the press that very same day that South Africa's continental commitments mean that the South African National Defence Force will need more money. The South Africans are deploying twice as many troops as they anticipated when they set their last budget, but not gotten any more funds to support these moves. Opposition parties in South Africa are warning the government that commitments in other parts of the continent could become "Pretoria's Vietnam". - Adam Geibel

June 15, 2003: The Burundi government claims its troops fought a battle in the Kayanza region (central Burundi). At least 12 FDD Hutu rebels died in the engagement. The battle occurred as FDD representatives were meeting with UN diplomats in Tanzania to discuss furthering the peace process.

June 16, 2003: A third day of fighting scattered thousands of people seeking safety. The government claimed that 12 FDD rebels were killed and four soldiers wounded in the latest round. Most of the chaos has been in Makamba province, 200km southeast of Bujumbura. Government forces fought FDD rebels following a rebel ambush of a bus on the 15th, after which 15 passengers were taken captive. On the night of the 15th, an unidentified group of armed men burst into the bar where political opposition party leader Gerard Buryo was and gunned him down. Between 1993 and 1995, nearly 30 Burundian parliamentarians were killed under questionable circumstances. - Adam Geibel

June 17, 2003: The Burundian defense ministry has admitted that the National Liberation front (FNL) sabotaged the Mugere dam, the largest hydroelectric source in the country. Three of the dam's four turbines were completely destroyed in the 15-hour long attack on Jun 3-4 and the facility can now provide Bujumbura and its suburbs with only two megawatts (instead of eight generally produced before the attack). The rebels had made endless military attacks around Bujumbura during the previous three days and the local radio described the rebel mission at the dam as "massive". - Adam Geibel

June 24, 2003: An unknown number of CNDD-FDD rebels were killed in fighting against government troops in northern Burundi, forcing up to 65,000 civilians to flee their homes. An CNDD-FDD spokesman accused the army of launching preemptive attacks on their positions. - Adam Geibel

June 29, 2003: FDD Hutu guerrillas kidnapped four Hutu members of Burundi's parliament. The four men are in the Front for Democracy in Burundi (FRODEBU). The kidnapping took place in Ruyigi province. A subsequent report said the man driving the PMs' car was also kidnapped. Peace process? The FDD and FNL continue to use terror tactics to intimidate Hutu moderates.

June 30, 2003: Burundian sources reported three FDD rebels were slain by African Union peacekeepers. The peacekeepers came from the South African contingent. The FDD launched a night attack on a demobilization camp near Muyange. The attack continued for three hours. The South African unit reported ten mortar rounds hit the camp. Interestingly enough, the camp houses former FNL fighters.

July 4, 2003:The first group of 150 CNDD-FDD fighters arrived at a cantonment site near the Burundian capital, Bujumbura. They registered by the African Union (AU) troops manning the site and were later disarmed. These 150 joined 58 FNL fighters, who had arrived after June 26 at the Muyange cantonment, 30 km northwest of Bujumbura. African Mission in Burundi (AMIB) sources estimated that 5,300 fighters from the small rebel groups would be cantoned during the first 90-day period before their integration into the country's new security forces. - Adam Geibel

July 7, 2003:At daybreak Hutu FNL rebels fired mortar bombs into Bujumbura, in the fiercest attack on the capital for almost three months. They launched the attack as a warning to the government, after President Ndayizeye threatened to crush their movement. Agathon Rwasa's faction of FNL remains the only group that has not signed a ceasefire agreement with the government.

Government troops claimed to have pushed these rebels out of Bujumbura and that the fighting was confined to the outskirts of the capital, but admitted that the rebels had blocked key roads leading into the capital. The army cleared all of them during the course of the day except for Highway 7 leading to the southeast, finding that one difficult to retake since they feared killing residents taken hostage by the rebels. The rebels are not in uniform and Bujumbura's residents fear that they could be mistaken for combatants during the street battles.

The army's preliminary report saying it had killed seven rebels, but witnesses at the Musaga and Kanyosha suburb (south of the capital, where fighting was heavy) said they had counted 17 to 20 civilian bodies. - Adam Geibel

July 8, 2003: Thousands fled their homes as heavy fighting between Hutu rebels and the army continued for a second day in southern neighborhoods of Bujumbura. Both sides exchanged fire with mortars, rocket-propelled grenades and assault rifles. An unidentified army officer saw more than 50 corpses. The army announced that it had killed 15 rebels and driven the rest out of the city, although the rebels counted only six dead and 17 others injured. The army was reported to still be shelling FNL positions southeast of Bujumbura. - Adam Geibel

July 12, 2003:An update on the big FNL offensive in and around the Burundian capital of Bujumbura: the Burundian Army reported 44 FNL rebels were killed south of Bujumbura. Among the 44 rebels were two senior FNL officers, Colonel Raphael Barankitse and Major Giovanni Kwizera. The 44 were apparently killed in a heavy firegight in the Gikoto area. The FNL offensive began July 7 with a series of attacks south of Bujumbura. The Burundian government reported that, as of July 12, 179 people had been killed in the offensive (20 to 30 were Burundian Army troops.)

July 13, 2003:At 3 AM, Hutu rebels resumed their worst assault on Burundi's capital in 10 years of war "to alert the world" to the conflict. The rebels also launched a 30-minute raid on a navy camp inside a large military base, where they destroyed an armored car with a rocket before being repelled at around 7:00 AM. The clashes died down around 8:30 AM, by which time all rebels had been chased out of two eastern residential districts and a northeastern neighborhood.

The army claimed that rebel child-soldiers were on a suicide mission and that the rebels' presence in some of the southern districts had continued to grow until they numbered 2,000. The army estimated that they had killed 28 rebels during the day.

The aim of the rebellion has been the same for years: to ensure an equal share in army management between the two main ethnic groups in Burundi, the majority Hutus, and the minority Tutsis, who currently have total control of the military. There were unconfirmed rumors suggesting that the FNL had been joined by elements of the Forces for the Defence of Democracy (FDD), which last week officially said that it did not want any part in the fighting.

It was impossible for the press to contact the rebels, and Information Minister Albert Mbonerane said that journalists who published or broadcast interviews with armed or unarmed opposition groups would be detained. The government had imposed a nationwide curfew from 9 PM to 6 AM for an indefinite period, the first time there has been nationwide curfew since 2001.

The 900 South African-led African Union force have done nothing to stem the violence in the capital. Welile Nhlapo, deputy head of the AU mission, told the press that they were not involved in the fighting, it wasn't their responsibility and they would not let the situation slide into chaotic situation that they could not control. Asked what the force would do if the situation worsened, Nhlapo said he could not predict future actions. - Adam Geibel

July 18, 2003: The FNL offensive that began July 7 continued with a variety of attacks around Bujumbura. A report on July 18 said that at least 300 combatants (troops and rebels) had died in the fighting between July 7 and July 17. On July 17 the Burundi government issued a statement that said African Union peacekeepers might need a wider mandate for operations. That could mean the AU forces would get directly involved in field operations against the FNL.

July 19, 2003: As their offensive appeared to subside in Bujumbura's outlying areas, FNL Hutu rebels issued a statement that asked Nelson Mandela to participate in Burundian peace negotiations. This looks like a diplomatic attempt by the FNL to gain as much negotiating leverage as possible from the military offensive -- the old "fire arrows then offer an olive branch" gambit, with the twist of trying to get a globally-recognized figure to acknowledge your side's political heft.. If Mandela accepts the FNL "request," the FNL's negotiating stature immediately improves, ie, the FNL would claim that it "returned the Nobel Peace Prize winner to the Burundian peace process." Mandela, however, is wise to the strategy. Stay tuned. (Austin Bay)

July 22, 2003:The Burundian government said the FDD killed eight civilians outside the town of Kayanza (north of Bujumbura). The government also said this broke a truce agreement. The government report alleged that in the incident the rebels fired on what was clearly a civilian vehicle. The Burundian government, however, is a questionable source. Reports continue to circulate among human rights groups of the Burundian Army (which is 99.9 percent Tutsi) shooting up Hutu villages and then blaming the FDD and FNL for the action.

July 29, 2003:The FDD issued a statement that said its forces would not quit fighting until the Burundian government reached a comprehensive settlement with the rebels. The FDD contended that there is no peace for AU peacekeepers to keep in Burundi. The FDD said that as long as the government continues to fight the FDD will conduct operations.

July 30, 2003: FNL Hutu rebels issued a statement that contradicted a claim by the Burundian government. The government said on July 29 that it had found a mass grave outside Bujumbura with the bodies of 30 FNL fighters. The FNL said on Wednesday denied that bodies were those of FNL guerrillas. Whose bodies are in the grave? Once again, the rule of thumb in Burundi is that the government claims are highly questionable and so are those of the rebels. It could easily be a grave with 30 civilians killed by government troops or by rebel forces. We could find no independent journalists confirmation of the mass grave discovery.

August 10, 2003:Renewed fighting between FNL (the other rebel group, and not willing to negotiate) and Burundian troops over the August 9-10 weekend forced at least 30,000 people to flee their homes. Rebels from the larger of two FNL factions fired on government troops on patrol in a rebel-held neighborhood and one soldier was reported killed. A rebel spokesman described the government patrol into the rebel-held area as "a provocation." The FNL faction also maintains bases in the string of hills overlooking the city on Lake Tanganyika.

August 13, 2003:It's not a big surprise -- but it is a setback. A meeting between Burundi's president and the head the rebel Hutu FDD was supposed to take place in Pretoria, South Africa. However, the meeting has been "postponed" -- perhaps for only a few days, perhaps for several weeks. The issue they are to discuss is FDD participation in the Burundian government. This would be a major step to ending the civil war. And this is why there is foot dragging in both the government and rebel camps. Many rebels don't trust any agreement with the government that doesn't include significant demobilization of the Tutsi-dominated Burundian Army. The Burundian government doesn't want to do that. Still, a preliminary meeting (which a subsequent report suggested could come off August 15 or 16) would nudge the process in the right direction. Stay tuned.

August 20, 2003:The Burundi government reported approximately 15,000 civilians fled new fighting. The Bunrdi Army fought FDD guerrillas in several small actions beginning August 17. The major action occurred near the Mpanda commune (western Burundi). The FDD claimed the government launched a series of rocket attacks in the area. The rockets are inaccurate area weapons and using them could be the reason civilians fled the region. On August 20 a major clash took place near the town of Gisenyi.

August 21, 2003:The latest round of Burundi peace talks concluded in South Africa. The ceasefire which does not exist on the ground in Burundi was discussed, but the FDD and Burundi government representatives came up with no new means of implementing it. The FNL is not participating in the talks.

August 25, 2003: Burundi's Front for Democracy in Burundi (FRODEBU), the main Hutu political party, has fired five members. The members were accused of belonging to the FDD and FNL guerrilla organizations. FRODEBU has 87 seats (out of 182) in Burundis national transition assembly (a government organ that is supposed to evolve into a parliament). FRODEBU is a political success at the moment and doesnt want to give Burundis Tutsi-controlled army a reason to crack down on it. Harboring guerrillas would be the pretext.

August 26, 2003: Rwandas President Paul Kagame was re-elected president in the first vote held since the 1994 genocide. Kagame took 95 percent of the vote. Kagame is a Tutsi. Opposition leader Faustin Twagiramungu (a Hutu moderate) claimed fraud and said he would contest the election. Interestingly enough, 96 percent of eligible voters voted and that looks like a good figure. Kagame ran on a national unity platform. There were numerous accusation of government intimidation of the opposition.

August 27, 2003: South African troops participating in the African peacekeeping mission will stay in Burundi despite funding shortfalls. Of a 3,099-strong peacekeeping force that was supposed to have been deployed in Burundi since June 2003, only 1,600 South Africans have arrived. Although Mozambique agreed to provide 202 troops and Ethiopia 1,297 troops, their deployment has been delayed due to a lack of money. In April, the European Union promised the cash-strapped African Union $12.96 million for the troops, but so far no money has been delivered.

However, the South African force is worried about the slow pace of the demobilization process. The concerns center on the small number of rebels already in camps; the FDD was supposed to send 3,500 troops but only sent 150 and the FNL, which was supposed to send 1,800, has only sent 22. - Adam Geibel

August 29, 2003:A UNICEF report titled "Mine Victims in Burundi" claims that 230 people suffered from landmine blasts in 2001 and 2002 (44 of whom died; others were crippled). Anti-personnel mines accounted for the greatest number of victims (116 in 2001 and 87 the next year). Government forces have planted mines to protect their positions and sometimes may forget them, while the rebels use them to sabotage the infrastructure. However, an army spokesman denied that the army has been using mines and also claimed that the rebels' use of these devices was limited. He admitted that government forces were regularly injured by grenades left behind by the enemy but characterized landmines as very rare. - Adam Geibel

September 4, 2003: Repeated attacks by armed elements from neighboring Burundi have stopped the returning flow Congolese refugees from Burundi, that had been underway. FNL rebels killed at least a dozen people in late August in Rusabagi, 85 km south of Bukavu in the Congo's South Kivu Province. The attackers used crude weapons (including garden hoes, machetes, knives and axes), proving once again that medieval weapons are still lethal in the 21st century. - Adam Geibel

September 6, 2003: Burundi's two main Hutu rebel movements have started fighting each other. Thousands of civilians from Bujumbura Rural Province fled fighting that erupted between FNL and FDD rebels. The two rebel groups are also fighting each other in the northwestern province of Bubanza, a region repeatedly cursed by fighting between the army and rebel groups. The FNL has admitted losing nine fighters and claimed an unknown number of FDD killed. The Tutsi-dominated army has no clue why the two Hutu groups are fighting each other. The FNL claims that the FDD and the army plan to gang up on them. - Adam Geibel

September 9, 2003: Mozambique said it will send 228 soldiers to participate in the African Union peacekeeping force in Burundi.

September 13, 2003: The African Union will call a meeting next week in Tanzania to discuss implementing a peace agreement in Burundi. Meanwhile, the fighting continues. On September 11, at least 17 people died in an ambush northwest of Bujumbura. The Burundian government claimed 14 schoolchildren and one Burundian soldier died in the ambush. The government blamed the FDD. The FDD categorically denied that it was involved in the incident. On September 10, NGO sources said that around 15,000 refugees had fled from fighting in west Burundi. The sources speculated that the refugees were fleeing from the intra-rebel fighting that occurred last week between the FDD and FNL.

September 16, 2003: The highly touted negotiation session organized to end Burundi's civil war collapsed in mutual recriminations. The talks, held in Tanzania, include South Africa's President Thabo Mbeki. Burundi's President Domitien Ndayizeye met with Pierre Nkurunziza, the FDD's current leader, One issue that they completely failed to resolve is how to implement the ceasefire that was signed last December. That ceasefire has never been honored.

September 17, 2003:About 10,000 civilians fled their homes following renewed fighting between two rebels groups in Burundi's Bujumbura Rural Province. The fighting took place in the Bugarama valley in Mubimbi, 25 km from the capital, Bujumbura.

The Burundian government promptly imposed a curfew on five zones on the outskirts of Bujumbura, as a security measure for better control of people's movements in the suburbs. Rebels in civilian clothes have infiltrated into the capital during previous offensives.

On 16 September 2003, Radio Publique Africaine (RPA), a privately-owned radio station, was suspended indefinitely. The authorities have accused the station of broadcasting "enemy propaganda" by interviewing an FLN spokesperson. On September 13, Isanganiro radio was also suspended for one week for giving air time to rebels. The next day, the other privately-owned stations in Burundi decided to cease coverage of the government's activities until Isanganiro was allowed back on the air. - Adam Geibel

September 18, 2003: President Domitien Ndayizeye blamed the collapse of peace talks on a power-sharing deal proposed by regional mediators, claiming that it was too favorable to the main Hutu rebel group. Under the deal, the FDD (the biggest Hutu rebel group) would fill 40 percent of posts in the army, police and intelligence services, while the remaining 60 percent would be held by the Tutsi-oriented government and other groups.

Large numbers of Gendarmerie were deployed in the morning around strategic places across the capital to prevent the Uprona (the pro-Tutsi Union for National Progress) party from assembling and creating chaos. - Adam Geibel

September 19, 2003: The African Union (AU) reiterated its concern over the failure to deploy an "effective functioning" African Mission in Burundi (AMIB), then made fresh appeals for a peacekeeping force there. South Africa, Ethiopia and Mozambique had agreed to contribute troops, but only South Africa had so far sent combat troops (Ethiopia had sent an advance party of officers). Lack of sufficient finances and logistical problems were cited.

Burundi's government is lifting its ban on two independent radio stations pulled off the air for violating a law against airing the comments of rebel officials. The government had accused both of inciting ethnic divisions. - Adam Geibel

September 21, 2003: FNL rebels killed nine people in the village of Bangateri (east of Bujumbura). The shootout began when an FNL team walked into a bar in the town and killed two Burundian Army soldiers. A firefight then erupted throughout the entire village.

September 25, 2003: Ethiopia reported that it will send a thousand soldiers to Burundi to participate in the African Union peacekeeping operation. Initial contingents will arrive around October 1. The Ethiopians should be one of the more reliable forces in Burundi. It will depend, of course, on leadership and the Rules of Engagement (ROE) under which the reinforced battalion operates.

September 26, 2003: The United Nations World Food Program (WFP) said that the deteriorating security situation in Burundi is hampering efforts to reach tens of thousands in dire need of food assistance, after they fled their homes in the face of renewed fighting, arson and looting. Over the past three weeks, over 53,000 have fled their homes surrounding the capital as well as in provinces to the north and east. - Adam Geibel

September 27, 2003:The first group of Ethiopians, 226 troops, arrived at Bujumbura's international airport. The 1,000-strong Ethiopian peacekeeping battalion would arrive in Bujumbura in four successive groups. The second group is expected to leave Addis Ababa Bole International Airport on September 29 and arrive on the 30th. The next group would arrive on October 5. - Adam Geibel

October 12, 2003: On October 8, the FDD and the Burundi government signed a peace agreement aimed at ending the civil war. The agreement attempts to implement the ceasefire deal reached in December 2002. However, on October 9, the Burundian government accused the FDD of killing four civilians and four Burundian Army soldiers in a cattle raid and ambush operation in Mbuye (northeast of the capital). The FDD denied the accusation, but in a press release said that the FNL (National Liberation Forces), the other major Hutu rebel group, might have been responsible. The FNL did not sign the new peace agreement.

October 14, 2003: The Burundian government and various western sources reported an FDD group attacked a village in the Bukorokoro Hill area (north of Bujumbura). One report claimed the FDD group cut off the head of the village head man. A late report claimed that another FDD rebel unit struck another village outside Bujumbura. The claim was uncorroborated. A Burundian government spokesman told western journalists that it did appear since the ceasefire agreement (October 9) the FDD had quit attacking military targets. However, there were still raids against civilians. Despite the new ceasefire agreement, it appears fighting continues. The FDD leadership probably exerts limited control over many rebel bands. To pin it all on the FDD would be a mistake. The Burundian Army ahs a miserable track record for controlling its forces as well.

October 15, 2003: Mozambique troops arrived in Burundi to beef up the African Union peacekeeping contingent. Mozambique described the deployment as a "first contingent" consisting of 20 troops. Another 200 will be sent and probably deploy within the next month. The Ethiopian contingent is said to now be up to 840 soldiers. That figure could increase. South Africa has 1600 troops committed to the AU peacekeeping force and is effectively serving as the "lead nation" in the operation . One of the goals of the peacekeeping force is to provide security for humanitarian aid. One report said the some of the peacekeepers are in fact delivering aid themselves.

October 18, 2003: New --and confirmed-- fighting has occurred between the Burundian government and the FDD. This is a breakdown in the ceasefire signed earlier this month. A Burundian government spokesman said four FDD fighters died in a firefight October 17. The clash occurred in the Mwungwa area (east of Bujumbura).

October 19, 2003: Mozambique sent another 91 troops to Bujumbura, bringing the African peacekeeping mission in Burundi to full strength. Joining 139 of their countrymen, along with Ethiopians and South Africans already in Burundi, the African Mission in Burundi (AMIB) now musters 3,128 peacekeepers.

The AMIB's mission is to help disarm, demobilize and reintegrate into society all of the rebel troops, as well as monitor the country's transition to democracy. However, little progress has been made. So far, only one demobilization center has been set up at Muyange (30 km northwest of Bujumbura). Designed to hold up to 3,000 combatants, it now houses only 191 former CNDD-FDD and FNL fighters.

Their deployment has had a string of financial and logistical problems. The United States wound up financing the Ethiopian contingent's deployment. Britain, France and the United States paid for the deployment of the Mozambicans. The Mozambican Ministry of Defense announced on 15 October that it would spend at least US $14 million to support their contingent over the next 12 months.

Life for the South African troops hasn't been pleasant. One young corporal stationed at Bujumbura committed suicide on September 30, unable to cope with the scandal of being charged with misconduct and a lack of discipline. Seven other South Africans have died in Burundi under strange circumstances: four soldiers drowned after being lowered into a river by helicopter, a senior officer shot another dead, another drowned after falling into a swimming pool at the base and the first (in 2002) was found bound and hanging in a house. - Adam Geibel

October 21, 2003: Burundi marked it's 10th anniversary of the outbreak of civil war. Since 1993, over 300,000 people (mostly civilians) have died, more than half a million Burundians have been internally displaced while another 500,000 had to flee to neighboring countries. A succession of ceasefire pacts and a power-sharing government have failed to completely solve the problems and stop the fighting. - Adam Geibel

October 28, 2003: The carnage continues. Western sources reported that three FNL "sympathizers" were shot and killed. The reports said the FNL supporters may have been killed by FDD supporters. A further story said two of the murdered men were shot in their beds and then set on fire. The murders occurred after a Burundian government official reported that FNL supporters killed three FDD members on October 26.

October 31, 2003:There were clashes in two areas near Bujumbura, during which FNL rebels battled government troops. There were no casualty figures, but around 2,000 locals fled the scene of the fighting. - Adam Geibel

November 1, 2003: Two soldiers and four rebels were killed near the capital Bujumbura, in an attack blamed on the National Liberation Forces (FNL). The deaths came as Burundi's government and FDD rebels were meeting in South Africa to put the finishing touches to a deal aimed at bringing an end to the country's civil war. According to officials in Rutunga (30 km south of the capital), the six were killed when rebels attacked an army position. - Adam Geibel

November 2, 2003: The rebels attacked a military installation in the afternoon at Kanyosha, a semi-rural area south of the capital and killed three soldiers. Earlier in the day, three FNL rebels were killed in a confrontation with a group of soldiers in Kabezi (15 kilometers south of the capital).

South Africa's minority Democratic Alliance defense spokesman pointed out that no financial support from the UN or other donors has been received for the SANDF troop deployments in Burundi. They claim that South Africa has become involved in an open-ended process that will cost taxpayers a great deal of money. The deployment in Burundi was expected to cost about $98.6 million in 2003, a further $81.9 million in 2004, $111.9 million in 2005 and about $87.1 million in 2006.

While the World Bank and other donors had pledged $90 million to Burundi for the demobilization, disarmament, and reintegration process, it was dependent on a political agreement between all of the groups.

The peace agreement is signed, allowing the FDD rebels to be included in the military and form a political party. Both government and rebel fighters will be granted temporary immunity from prosecution. - Adam Geibel

November 4, 2003: The FNL denounced a deal aimed at ending the country's civil war and said fresh fighting could erupt near the capital at any moment. An FNL spokesman also said that government and FDD troops had deployed into FNL strongholds surrounding Bujumbura. - Adam Geibel

November 7, 2003: Burundi's president promised the former FDD rebels top government and army posts within the next three weeks, under a peace deal signed earlier this month. The army will stand a better chance of defeating the FNL, the second biggest rebel group, once it has joined forces with the FDD. - Adam Geibel

November 10, 2003: Five people (including a soldier on duty at the presidential palace) were killed when the Hutu FNL rebel group fired off ten mortar shells (with three hitting the president's residence) and mounted a ground attack as a show of force in Burundi's capital. The bombardment that also wounded two men guarding the US military attach's house and destroyed his automobile, when a mortar bomb hit his home. In the spirit of equality, the home of a Chinese diplomat living inside that country's embassy compound was also destroyed by a rocket. Another blast also left a three foot wide hole in the embassy's ceiling. Obviously, FNL skills leave a lot to be desired. The attack took place two weeks before the larger FDD rebel group was due to join the ranks of an enlarged administration. Meanwhile, the army used mortars and rocket launchers to open up a major offensive to flush FLN fighters out of the hills which surround Bujumbura. - Adam Geibel

November 12, 2003: Around 12,000 civilians have fled their homes in Burundi's western province, following the latest fighting between the army and FNL fighters. Meanwhile, bicycle taxis have been banned in the capital. The mayor feared that the popular mode of transportation used by many poor people in Burundi could also be used by rebels to infiltrate his city. - Adam Geibel

November 14, 2003: New fighting broke out in Burundi November 12 when FNL rebels clashed with the Burundian army. Twelve died in the clash. There was no breakdown on government and FNL casualties. On November 14 another firefight broke out. Three Burundian troops died in an ambush along National Highway 7, southeast of Bujumbura

November 15, 2003: The leader of the Democratic Liberation Forces of Rwanda (FDLR a Hutu militia organization) surrendered to Rwandan army troops. The leader was identified as Paul Rwarakabi. He was originally in the Hutu Interahamwe militia. The FDLR is based in the DRC. Several of its leaders are accused of participating in the 1994 genocide that killed 800,000 Tutsis. The surrender of Rwarakabi may have been encouraged by the DRC government. The DRCs support for Rwandan rebels has diminished since mid-2003, and the signing of the comprehensive Congo peace plan.

November 16, 2003: The Tutsi-dominated Burundian government and the FDD (Forces for Defense of Democracy, the largest Hutu resistance organization) signed a new ceasefire and powersharing agreement. The government and the FDD then gave the FNL (National Liberation Forces) three months to join the peace accord. Four African presidents attended the signing ceremony (Uganda, South Africa, Mozambique, and the DRC).

November 20, 2003: The Burundian government claimed FNL rebels killed 11 people in two attacks near Bujumbura. The FNL did not agree to the new ceasefire agreement and political powersharing deal signed November 16.

December 2, 2003: FNL Hutu rebel leaders walked out of the new Burundi peace talks. The peace conference in Nairobi, promoted by several African governments, was an attempt to bring the FNL into the transition government with the Burundian Tutsis and the FDD. The US and UN are also involved. A subsequent report, based on interviews with FNL leaders, reiterated FNL charges that the negotiations with the Burundian government will be fruitless as long as the Tutsis continue to control the Burundian Army. The FNL claims to have thousands of fighters in the field. Military analysts familiar with the Hutu resistance in Burundi put the figure at 1500 to 3000 fighters, with the lower figure more likely.

December 12, 2003: Several sources reported UN observers in the DRC said Hurundi Hutu rebels based in the DRC were accepting the peace agreement reached between the Tutsi-dominated Burundi government and the Hutu FDD. One report said, attributed to a DRC military officer, said that Burundi Hutu fighters he had met were coming in because they want to go home. The rebels said they would turn in their weapons.

December 24, 2003: The United Nations Security Council has decided to officially support peacekeeping troops in Burundi. This may be something of a formality since over 2,500 African troops are already serving in Burundi as peacekeepers. The peacekeeping force will be both an African Union and UN operation.

December 28, 2003: After ten years of civil war between Hutu and Tutsi, and over 200,000 killed, the rebels are ready to make peace. But many of the rebel fighters have become marauders who have learned to live off plunder. The young ones know no other life and and will be difficult to demobilize. Many countries are reluctant to provide troops for African peacekeeping because of the chaos and savagery of the rebels encountered and the ineptness and corruption often found among UN officials.

January 10, 2004: Burundi has begun integrating FDD rebels into the Army. The first FDD troops and officers joined on January 7. Initial reports are the integration went smoothly. The rebels are also joining the ranks of senior officers. The Burundian Joint Military High Command now includes 20 officers from the Burundian Army and 13 from the FDD. This meets the requirements of the Technical Forces Agreement signed on November 2, 2003 as part of the overall peace deal. This is going to be a real test of the peace agreement. A number of the FDD rebels were fighting the Burundian Army as late as September 2003. Integrating new troops into a military is a tough task to begin with, even for modern armies. Putting former enemies into the same army in the middle of a peace process makes for an even riskier dynamic. However, this may be precisely what the situation in Burundi requires. The Burundian Army has been the source of much suffering among Burundian Hutus. Integrating the Army will inspire political confidence. The presence of former Hutu fighters and Hutu leaders will also allow for some degree of internal policing. The integration may have already had positive political effects. Two days before the formal integration, the FNL rebel faction announced that it is interested in discussing a peace agreement with the new transitional government. It is no coincidence that this offer comes as the military integration is occurring. (Austin Bay)

February 10, 2004: A total of 90 former CNDD-FDD rebels were flown back to Burundi from the Congo by MONUC, to be reintegrated into society. There are no more combatants in the Congo's Katanga region and only 50 at Uvira, with 100 in south Uvira.

South Africa said that it would keep its peacekeeping forces in Burundi for as long as they were needed. South Africa's Foreign Affairs Minister hoped the United Nations would ultimately take over the mission, but the UN has been reluctant to risk sending international peacekeepers to the region before there was "total peace" in the country.

FNL rebels fired mortars at Bujumbura's suburbs on the 6th, killing one person and sending dozens of others fleeing in panic. Talks between the president and the FNL ended in January without a breakthrough. About 300,000 have died in fighting between Hutu majority rebels and the Tutsi minority-dominated army over the past decade. - Adam Geibel

February 17, 2004: The FNL (the only rebel group still fighting the Burundian government) dismissed as meaningless a threat by regional leaders to impose sanctions against them, since the FNL is fighting inside Burundi, and has no support from any regional country and no bank accounts in Africa or in European countries.

The FNL had accused the president of breaking a promise to end hostilities on the 13th and threatened to unilaterally suspend their participation in peace talks.

Burundi demobilized 29 child soldiers, who had served as porters in the regular army. They also had the task of observing enemy movements, for which they earned the nickname "Doriya" (loosely, 'spy' or 'sentry'). - Adam Geibel

February 19, 2004: South Africa's Minister of Finance allocated around $165 million for the country's peacekeeping missions on the African continent over the next three years. Almost the entire amount would go towards South Africa's deployment in Burundi, which had yet to find foreign donors.

The South African Defense Force (SANDF) has more than 2,000 troops deployed in peacekeeping missions in the Congo and Burundi. The entire allocation would be spent on maintaining the troops in these countries over the next three years. South Africa was reimbursed for the cost of troop deployment in the Congo by the UN, but had been shouldering the $121 million-per-year expense of the Burundi mission since 2001.

The South African peacekeeping effort in Burundi became an African Union (AU) mission only at the end of 2002, but the AU does not have the financial resources to maintain the mission. At the end of 2003, the United Kingdom and the United States agreed to fund the deployment of Mozambican and Ethiopian troops to Burundi for a period of 60 days (that period is now over).

South Africa's Deputy President had appealed to the UN to take over the AU mission last year, but remained un-optimistic because the UN was also considering the deployment of peacekeepers to the Ivory Coast, Sudan and Somalia. - Adam Geibel

February 26, 2004: Systematic rape by soldiers and criminals has become all too common in Burundian life and became even more widespread in 2003. The eastern Ruyigi province was one of the worst affected, with scores of rapes committed by government forces and the Forces for the Defense of Democracy (FDD, the main Hutu rebel group) in a cycle of reprisal attacks.

Meanwhile, minority party politicians in South Africa have called the government to task for "dubious" air charter contracts. Volga Atlantic Airlines (named as a subcontractor for notorious international arms trader Victor Bout), as well as Marvotech (allegedly subcontracted by Volga Atlantic) and Norse Air Charters had received substantial payments for charter services to Burundi on behalf of the SANDF. - Adam Geibel

February 27, 2004 The situation in Burundi continues to be a case of "two steps forward, one step back". The chairman of the Party for the Liberation of the Hutu People (Palipehutu), Etienne Karatasi, returned to Burundi after 39 years of exile in Denmark. A list of over 2,000 of his rebels had been submitted to the ceasefire commission. About 150 had already assembled in the northwestern province of Cibitoke and that others were due to join them shortly. Karatasi is the legal agent for the FNL party.

Meanwhile, fresh fighting between splinter groups the FNL rebel movement and the regular army has displaced thousands of people in Bujumbura Rural Province, outside of the capital. Up to 20,000 people could be effected, although there is no way to determine the exact number that are on the road.

The day before, a UN evaluation team said that it favored converting AMIB into a UN operation. The team was invited by the government and South African Deputy President Jacob Zuma (the Burundi peace process facilitator). If the UN Security Council gave the go-ahead, there would "simply be the change of helmets" for the 2,870 AMIB troops from Ethiopia, Mozambique and South Africa.

South Africa had been footing most of the AMIB bill and was screaming under the financial strain. At the end of January, Ireland contributed over $500,000 to AMIB. - Adam Geibel

March 2, 2004: Burundi's President threw a wet blanket over hopes that elections could be held this year when he stated that thousands of combatants would first have to demobilized. No one knows exactly how many armed men are in Burundi, but the current estimate of all rebel groups is about 40,000, while the army has between 25,000 and 30,000 soldiers. It was not clear how many army soldiers the government plans to demobilize and only the Forces for the Defense of Democracy (FDD) have begun demobilizing, sending 12,000 of its 30,000 men to cantonment camps. Splinter groups of the FNL are still fighting. - Adam Geibel

March 6, 2004:The increase in rebel violence over the last few weeks has caused aid groups to cut back on aid deliveries. Drivers and aid workers are being threatened and shot at by the newly restive rebels. The threatened delay in food air deliveries has an impact on the rebels, as they often subsist on the food aid as well, taking a portion of donated food that passes through territory they control. If the rebels take too much (the excess is sold in the markets for money to buy other things), the aid groups halt the shipments. There is a constant state of negotiation between the rebels bands and the aid groups over how much food can be stolen while on its way to starving refugees.

March 16, 2004:Rwandan President Kagame accused France of direct responsibility for the 1994 genocide of at least 800,000 ethnic Tutsis and moderate Hutus by supplying weapons, logistical support and even senior military planners to the ethnic Hutu regime. Diplomats and witnesses have often accused France of tacit involvement, but Kagame's comments are the most explicit to date.

Last week, the government denounced a French police report accusing Kagame of launching the April 1994 rocket attack that downed the plane carrying then president, Juvenal Habyarimana. The police report was compiled by a French judge on behalf of the French aircrew who died in the plane. All of the work was done in France, with no interviews taken in Rwanda. Kagame claims the police report was a politically motivated attempt to deflect blame from France.

The Rwandans are about to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the genocide. President Habyarimana's death sparked 100 days of genocide and the prevailing educated theory has been that militant Hutus shot down the plane, as a deliberate pretext for wholesale slaughter.

In the early 1990s, there were reports that French peacekeepers appeared to side with the Hutu government against the Tutsi-based Rwandan Patriotic Front (then led by Kagame). French troops moved United Nations peacekeepers away from a college where they were protecting 2,000 Tutsis and Hutus subsequently moved in to slaughter these Tutsis. In 1990, the RPF had been responsible for an armed incursion into Rwanda from exile. - Adam Geibel

March 17, 2004:Rwanda opened a diplomatic mission in neighboring Congo, after years of tension and proxy fighting between the two countries. Rwanda had backed rebels fighting the Congolese government of President Joseph Kabila during that country's civil war. - Adam Geibel

March 18, 2004:The United Nations is investigating how it came into possession of a flight recorder alleged in a press report to have been from the aircraft carrying the Presidents of Rwanda and Burundi that was shot down in 1994. Arrangements were being made to transport a "black box" which originated in Rwanda to the United States National Transportation Safety Board for analysis in the presence of an official from the United Nations civil aviation agency. Ten years after he was killed, the crash and their deaths remains a mystery - more so because the plane was brought down in an area controlled by government and Belgium troops. But a week after being found, the flight recorder was examined by experts and it appears that the flight recorder was not from the 1994 Rwanda aircraft.-Adam Geibel

March 23, 2004:The UN Security Council is discussing Secretary-General Kofi Annan's suggestion that 5,650 UN peacekeepers should be deployed in Burundi, to take over for 2,523 African Union peacekeepers and 43 military observers, whose mission there ends in April. Meanwhile, the World Bank has approved a $84.17-million credit to help the transitional government return former combatants to civilian life and rebuild the country's road infrastructure battered by ten years of civil war.

The biggest problem remains the FNL rebel movement, which refuses to come to an agreement with the new coalition government. At least 10 rebels and three civilians were killed in skirmishing between the FNL and government units on the 17th, at a refugee camp west of the capital. Thousands of civilians panicked and took to the roads.

Other rebel groups have found room for compromise. Around 200 former CNDD-FDD rebels arrived in a training camp in the southwestern province of Bururi on the 16th, where they are due to undergo training as a unit of the new National Defence Forces of Burundi. A total of 800 government and 400 CNDD-FDD would begin six months of training to form the Special Unit for the Protection of Institutions (which would replace the Unit for the Security of Institutions, as the integrated national army takes shape).

South African troops are due to take part in the training of the new unit in Bururi.

The CNDD-FDD signed a power-sharing agreement with the transitional government of Burundi on 16 November 2003 and 40 percent of the new army's general staff are former CNDD-FDD officers. - Adam Geibel

March 30, 2004:Burundi, aiming to reduce as much as possible tribal political infighting in general elections planned for later this year, agreed to a plan that would alternate presidential power between Hutus and Tutsis. The new Burundi Senate would be ethnically balanced. The problem in Burundi, of course, is that political infighting runs the immediate risk of escalating to another round of open warfare. Burundi also plans to eliminate tribally-based political parties. That will be tough. However, the Burundian government is at least admitting that in too many cases in Africa, a political party is really a tribal front organization. (Austin Bay)

April 3, 2004: Its a bitter tenth anniversary a decade since the Rwandan genocide. President Paul Kagames government has pursued a policy of mass reconciliation. Critics charge the Rwandan governments program is mass re-education, with Tutsi and Hutu history spun to gloss over differences. Kagame, whose forces stopped the genocide when they took power in Rwanda after invading from Uganda, points to the relative peace that now exists in the country. Few people, however, want to debate the extent of the murders anymore, or the fact that Hutu extremists planned the genocide in advance. Rwanda's Ministry of Youth, Culture and Sports conducted an extensive census and study and released the results April 1. The study reported that from April to June 1994 937,000 Tutsi and moderate Hutus (thats the term used for Hutus who refused to participate in the killings) were either murdered or died as a direct result of the violence. The Rwandan government report tried to identify the names, age, and place of birth of all victims. While this figure is on the high end of estimates (usually given as 500,000 to 800,000 dead) it does have documentation to support it. The Rwandan government asserted that the figure could still rise as local Gacaca courts (grass courts held in the middle of the village) continue throughout the country. Gacaca justice draws on traditional tribal legal rules. The Rwandan government is using them as a form of truth and reconciliation commission. (Austin Bay)

April 11, 2004:The charter for current African Union (AU) sponsored peacekeeping operation in Burundi (the African Mission in Burundi, AMIB) expired April 2nd. The "charter" was, after some negotiation, officially extended to May 2nd. The AU forces in the AMID (from South Africa, Ethiopia and Mozambique) currently contains 2,523 peacekeepers.. However, the AU acknowledges that the effort is expensive and funds are short. The UN has agreed to beef up the peacekeeping contingent to around 5,600 troops (plus about a thousand civilians). The UN would assume much of the financial burden of the operation. The cost for the first year would be $418 million ($269 million for troop pay and maintenance, and $149 million to buy equipment and pay for transporting the troops to Burundi.) After national elections on October 31, the militias will be disarmed. Or that's the plan.

April 22, 2004:Congolese troops and UN peacekeepers began moving against Hutu rebel camps on the Rwandan border. Diehard Hutu Rwandan rebels have refused to move back to Rwanda and accept amnesty, and the risk of being arrested for leading the 1994 genocidal killings in Rwanda.

April 30, 2004:UN peacekeepers in Congo thought they had a confrontation with Rwandan troops (who were looking for Hutu rebels.) But what they apparently ran into were Congolese Tutsi rebels (backed by Tutsi dominated Rwanda). The Tutsi tribes in Congo are still supported by Rwanda, as a force that can fight the Hutu rebels in Congo. The UN estimates that there are still some 8,000 Hutu rebels in Congo, and since 2002 some 11,000 have been sent back to Rwanda.

May 4, 2004:In Burundi, the FDD Hutu rebel organization have accused the Tutsi dominated government of not giving the FDD the third of government jobs they were promised by the peace deal. FDD has not threatened to restart the fighting, but this may delay the November elections. The peace deal signed in November, 2003, provided for disarming the 20,000 FDD gunmen, and rewarding them with government jobs, goods or cash. The government and the rebels eventually came to a disagreement over who shall get exactly what.

May 5, 2004:Rwanda continues to battle Hutu rebels along the border with Congo. The Hutus continue to raid into Rwanda from bases in Congo. In 2002, Rwanda agreed to get its troops out of Congo in return for Congolese troops shutting down Hutu rebel camps in Congo. But continued disorder in Congo has prevented Congo from getting much of an armed force to the Rwanda border area until recently. The Hutu rebels are not doing so well either, as most of the fighters are tired after ten years of fighting and living in the bush.

May 10, 2004: In Burundi, the rebel group FDD (Forces for the Defence of Democracy), is demanding more government jobs, and the release (from jail) of several FDD members, before they will rejoin the government. Uganda says it will send troops into Burundi if FDD does not rejoin the government and continue disarming rebel gunmen. Meanwhile, government troops continue fighting gunmen of the FNL (Forces for National Liberation). But there are only a few thousand FNL out there. Most of the rebels were FDD, and over 20,000 of those have assembled in government camps, awaiting demobilization. But until the government comes up with the money, the FDD men keep their weapons. The UN is trying to round up the money for the demobilization of the Hutu rebels, but is having a hard time.

May 17, 2004:Rwanda is preparing to send troops back into Congo if Congo does not speed up the disarmament or destruction of Rwandan Hutu militias in eastern Congo. These militias, numbering 6-8,000 armed men, live on pillage and looting, and still raid across the border into Rwanda. Congo considers the Hutus a problem, but pleads poverty when it comes to gathering troops and going after the Hutu. Rwanda is apparently just keeping up the pressure on Congo, lest the Hutu militias are just be ignored.

May 22, 2004:The UN has agreed to send 5,650 peacekeepers to Burundi to insure that the rebels and government comply with the details of the current peace deal. South Africa will lead the peacekeeping force.

May 27, 2004:Hutu rebels, remnants of the force that killed nearly a million Tutsi in the 1990s, continue to raid villages along the Rwandan border. Most of these Hutu groups have camps in Congo. Rwanda continues to threaten Congo with military force if Congolese troops do not do something about the Hutu rebel camps. Congo doesn't have the trained troops for the job, so the UN peacekeepers in Congo are seeking to do it.

May 28, 2004:While the Burundi government and rebels haggle over details in their peace agreements, the fighting in the countryside has been steadily declining. Also declining is the number of people in refugee camps. Two years there were 281,000 people in such camps, but since then about half of these refugees have felt confident enough about the law and order situation, to go home. There are still several thousand armed rebels out there, and these guys are still living largely off plunder. But they restrict their operations to a few areas, and are under constant pressure from the army and police.

May 29, 2004:FNL rebels clashed with army patrols south of the Burundi capital over the last few days, leaving 12 rebels and one soldier dead. The army is more aggressively patrolling areas where the FNL camps are, in order to make life more uncomfortable for the rebels and encourage them to surrender.

June 1, 2004:Fighting continued south of the Burundi capital, where troops and FNL rebels have been skirmishing for several days. At least half a dozen rebels have been killed. The few thousand armed members of the FNL live in remote camps south of the capital. Sometimes, groups of FNL members come closer to the capital looking for food.

June 9, 2004:In an effort to pressure the FNL rebels of Burundi, travel restrictions were placed on FNL members by Tanzania, South Africa, Zambia, Rwanda, Ethiopia, Mozambique and Kenya. The leaders of these countries are trying to convince FNL leaders to give up their armed resistance. The FNL is the only active rebel group left in Burundi, all the others having agreed to a peace deal in 2000.

June 12, 2004:Some 3,000 Congolese Tutsi refugees have fled to Burundi after the recent fighting between a rebel Congolese Tutsi militia and Congolese troops around the town of Bukavu.

June 25, 2004:A Burundian rebel FNL leader, Eugene Sinzumunsi, was arrested in the capital, along with four other rebels, by the police. Sinzumunsi was arrested in the home of Nephtalie Ndikumana, a former rebel leader who had joined the government. The remaining FNL rebels are basically fighting over how much money and government jobs they will get for laying down their weapons.

June 29, 2004:Congolese rebel leader, colonel Jules Mutebutsi, has fled to Rwanda with 300 of his men. Congolese troops and UN peacekeepers are looking for Mutebutsi and his men. Like so many other groups of ethnic Tutsi rebels, Mutebutsi and his gunmen are considered bandits, to be shot on sight. Mutebutsi and his followers were disarmed when they entered Rwanda, and are being kept in a lightly guarded detention camp.

June 30, 2004:Fighting between troops and rebels continues outside the Burundian capital. The FNL rebels are unable to agree on some sort of compromise with the government. Some 50,000 civilians have fled the suburbs of the capital to avoid the fighting.

July 6, 2004:In the suburbs of the Burundi capital, 300 UN peacekeepers were sent to patrol an area where the army and FNL rebels had been fighting. The FNL is growing weaker, as more of its members tire of the years of fighting, and the constant pressure from the army and UN peacekeepers.

July 8, 2004:Burundian troops have moved to the Congo border to look for several hundred Rwandan Hutu rebels who have been forced out of the Congo by UN peacekeepers and the Congolese army.

July 10, 2004:In Burundi, some 18,000 FDD rebels and government troops are assembled and ready for UN supervised disarmament. That process, which will see the troops and rebels receive cash and goods for turning in their weapons, will begin next week. Some $84 million has been raised to pay for this.

July 14, 2004:FNL rebels attacked a town south of the capital, killing 15 civilians before arriving army troops and police drove them away. The rebels were apparently angry with the local civilians for not providing them with support. The Hutu rebels live off nearby civilians, but many of these Hutu civilians are tired of years of rebellion.

July 17, 2004:UN investigators accuse Rwanda of continuing to support Tutsi rebel groups in Congo. Rwanda denies it, but the evidence is pretty convincing. Captured Congo Tutsi rebels admit getting money and guns from Rwandan army officers.

July 27, 2004:The Hutu FDD rebels have agreed to rejoin the government, having stopped that last May.

August 1, 2004:The FNL Hutu rebels continue to fight in one of Burundi's 17 provinces. But the FNL is also talking to UN representatives in Kenya, trying to work out some kind of peace deal. The FNL fighters are basically operating like bandits, and are more a police problem.

August 12, 2004:The last Hutu rebel group in Burundi, the FNL, continues to resist negotiations. Actually, most of the FNL operations are banditry, as the rebels steal to support themselves. The government is threatening the FNL leadership with being labeled a terrorist organization, but this may not work. The FNL leadership itself is split and may be more interested in fighting for power within the FNL, rather than making peace with the rest of the country.

August 14, 2004:Rwanda has defeated the Hutu rebels who have, for ten years, operated from bases in neighboring Congo. There are still several thousand of the Hutu gunmen over in the Congo, but the Congolese army and UN peacekeepers are constantly after the Hutu to disarm, and Rwanda maintains thousands of troops along the border, or are ready to pounce on any armed Hutu who come across in Rwanda.

August 15, 2004:Burundi FLN Hutu rebels took responsibility for a August 13 attack on a refugee camp near the Congo border. The camp held Congolese Tutsi who had fled violence against Tutsi within Congo. The FLN killed nearly 200 refugees, mostly women and children. The FLN claimed that the refugee camp was used as a base for Burundi army troops and Congolese Tutsi gunmen. The Tutsi are a minority (about 15 percent of the population) in Rwanda and Burundi). The Tutsi tribes moved into the region from the north several centuries ago, and used force and superior fighting ability to displace Hutu and other tribes. The animosities from that ancient invasion have never disappeared.

August 18, 2004:The August 13 slaughter of nearly 200 Tutsi refugees apparently involved Hutu militiamen from across the border in Congo. Burundi believes that Congolese soldiers were involved, and that the attack was planned and launched from the Congo, with only some help from the Hutu FNL rebels inside Burundi. This, alas, is all too possible. The Tutsi, a tribe originally from the drier Sahel to the north, came south centuries ago and were always seen as outsiders by the local Bantu peoples. The majority of the locals in eastern Congo, Rwanda and Burundi are primarily Hutu, or other Bantu tribes. The refugee massacre reminded the Tutsi that they have many enemies on both sides of the Congo border. Thus both Rwanda and Burundi, currently run by Tutsi minorities, threaten to send troops across the border to go after Hutu gunmen responsible for the killings, and restore active support for Tutsi militias in eastern Congo. At the moment, the Congolese army does not have enough troops in the eastern Congo to deal with renewed fighting by the Tutsis.

August 20, 2004:Some 20,000 Congolese refugees in Burundi will be moved farther away from the Congo border with Burundi.

August 23, 2004:In Burundi, FNL rebels attacked an army camp. Three rebels were killed and three soldiers wounded.

August 24, 2004:Burundi and Congo have agreed to improve border security and increase efforts to destroy Hutu rebel groups operating in both countries. This is another result, and reaction to, the August 13 slaughter of Congolese Tutsi refugees in Burundi. The killers have not yet been found.

August 30, 2004:The Burundi-Congo border was closed again, because of fear of more armed groups crossing into Burundi to attack refugees.

September 2, 2004:A UN investigation found that the August 13 massacre was planned and carried out by three groups. The Burundi FLN Hutu rebels, who took credit for the attack, were one group. But two Congo based groups, Mai-Mai tribal rebels and Rwandan Hutu rebels based in Congo, also took place. These findings have caused Burundi, Rwanda and Congo to agree to join in an attack on the Hutu rebels.

September 5, 2004:Corruption in Congo has rendered the armed forces there highly ineffective, making it difficult to hunt down Hutu rebels. Rwanda and Burundi feel they may have to send troops back into Congo to finish the Hutu rebel groups once and for all.

September 6, 2004:Thousands of the 30,000 Congolese refugees in Burundi camps have been returning to the villages in the Congo. Attacks on the camps, and a perception that things are safer in Congo, at least safer than in Burundi, have caused the movement.

September 10, 2004:The Burundi army continues fighting FLN rebels outside the capital, killing 21 of the FNL Hutu rebels.

September 18, 2004:Burundi has proposed a new constitution that would bring peace between the Hutu and Tutsi tribes, and end over a decade of violence.

September 22, 2004:Rwanda continues to shrink the size of its armed forces, demobilizing 1,398 troops. Since 1997, Rwanda has shrunk its armed forces by 35,284. However, no one is sure exactly how many men are in the army. Its believed to be between 50-60,000. Rwanda also supports several groups of armed irregulars. Most of the troops are Tutsis, which are only aboyt 15 percent of the population.

September 24, 2004:Burundis attempts to encourage Congolese refugees to return home has run into problems. Many of the refugees are from Tutsi tribesmen, and the majority Bantu tribes are attacking the Congolese Tutsi when they cross the border from Burundi. Burundi wanted the refugees to stay in the Burundi camps, but the Tutsi refugees feared more attacks by Rwandan and Burundi Hutu (a Bantu group) gangs based in Congo.

September 25, 2004:There are now 4,726 UN peacekeepers in Burundi, with another 700 (a battalion of Kenyan infantry) about to arrive.

September 27, 2004:Outside the Burundi capital, troops killed at least 37 FNL rebels. A unit of former rebels (from the FDD) assisted the army. The Hutu FDD have made peace with the Tutsi dominated government, and are eager to stamp out the FNL and get reconstruction going faster.

October 5, 2004:Several hundred Burundian Tutsis have fled to neighboring Rwanda, to get away from Hutu militants.

October 9, 2004:The Tutsi minority in Burundi, Rwanda and Congo continue to live in fear of neighbors who want them dead, or somewhere else. Rwandan Tutsis have negotiated a deal that gives Tutsis enough clout in the government to keep the Tutsis safe. A similar deal is almost done in Burundi. But in Congo, Tutsis are still subject to attack, and there is no safety in sight.

October 15, 2004:National elections, to elect a post-civil war government, have been delayed from November 1 to the Spring of 2005. The vote would approve a new constitution, and working out the details for that, especially in the area of protecting the rights of Hutus and Tutsis, has caused the delay.

October 19, 2004:For the second time in a year, a senior clergyman has been murdered. This time it was a Catholic priest, a senior diocese official, Gerard Nzeyimana. The priest was a Tutsi and was outspoken in denouncing Hutu leaders who committed mass murder against Tutsis during the last eleven years of civil war.

October 21, 2004:Parliament approved the new constitution, but many Tutsi members said they would boycott it. The Tutsi, while only 15 percent of the population, dominate the army, and other aspects of the economy.

October 22, 2004:The 13 years of civil war has killed five percent of the population, and few Burundians are eager to go back to fighting. But some are, and if the shooting began again, most would join in for reasons of self-defense, or revenge.

October 25, 2004:Despite an extensive investigation, the UN was unable to positively identify the group responsible for killing 160 Congolese Tutsi refugees in a Burundi camp last August. Hutu militants, either from Congo, Rwanda or Burundi, were suspected, and still are. But no one took credit for the murders, and not enough clues were left behind to allow positive identification of the culprits.

October 26, 2004:Rwanda, Uganda and Congo have agreed to set up an organization to quickly deal with security issues (mainly refugees, bandits and rebel groups) showing up on their common borders.

October 29, 2004:Burundi troops caught a group of FNL rebels south of the capital, and killed 15 of them. Some may have escaped, but 13 firearms were collected.

November 4, 2004:Eight of ten Burundi Tutsi political parties have relented and accepted the new constitution, which gave it enough support to bring the constitution into force today. The Tutsis felt that there were not enough safeguards for Tutsi rights. However, the Tutsis, like everyone else, is tired of years of civil war and wants to "give peace a chance." At this point, the only real opposition to a new government, and elections, are the Hutu FNL rebels, who still have several hundred armed men operating south of the capital.

November 12, 2004:A group of FNL rebels attacked a camp of the FDD (former Hutu rebels, now allied with the government). Ten FNL men were killed, one FDD man was wounded.

Rwanda and Uganda have agreed to conduct joint patrols on their border, in order to deal with rebel or bandit groups that one country or another may favor (or be suspected of favoring).

November 18, 2004: In Burundi, the national vote on the new constitution had been put off to late December. Continued disputes between Hutu and Tutsi politicians, as well as delays in registering voters, caused the delay. Moreover, the disarmament program for former rebels is behind schedule. While most Burundians want peace, there are still minorities in the Tutsi and Hutu communities who want to continue fighting. The violence has killed over 300,000 people in the last ten years.

November 26, 2004:The Burundian government said that several Burundian Hutu rebel groups had moved from the Congo into Burundi. The government specifically mentioned the Forces for National Liberation (FNL). The FNL rejected the November 2003 peace deal. The accusation followed reports of fighting near Bujumbura. Western sources said the Burundian Army killed 17 Hutu rebels in two firefights. One occurred east of Bujumbura in the Benga hills. The second was south of Bujumbura near Kanyosha. It is unclear why Hutu rebel groups in the Congo have chose this time to launch a new offensive into Burundi. Given reports of Hutu rebel operations near the Rwandan border, it's possible that the rebel groups are trying to coordinate an offensive against both Burundi and Rwanda. However, both the Burundian Army and the Rwandan Army are far stronger than the rebel groups. There are rumblings among some Hutu groups that accepted the November 2003 peace deal that the peace process is not moving fast enough. The FNL's attacks may be designed to slowdown the peace process even more. Scaring Burundian Tutsis makes them even more reluctant to trust the peace process. Slowing down the peace process increases Hutu disaffection. The FNL can then present itself as the only "armed Hutu alternative" to the failed peace process.

November 28, 2004: Rwanda announced on November 27 that its military forces will continue to attack Rwandan rebel groups in the Congo if the Congolese government does not disarm the rebels. This statement follows a November 24 Rwandan threat to attack the FDLR (Democratic Liberation Forces of Rwanda) Hutu rebel group in the Congo. The FDLR command cadre has several key Hutu leaders who were involved in the 1994 genocide in Rwanda. Several sources reported in late October that Hutu rebels (including the FDLR) were working closely with a Congolese militia in the eastern Congo. Rwanda interpreted this move as preparation for renewed Hutu guerrilla attacks on Rwanda. The Rwandan government also scolded "the international community" (ie, the UN) for failing to help disarm and demobilize Rwandanrebel groups in the Congo. This follows a November 25 UN warning to Rwanda. The UN Security Council said Rwandan attacks into the Congo would "frustrate" UN peacekeeping efforts. On November 27, former FDLR commander Majour-General Paul Rwarakabije urged the FDLR to surrender and seek peace. The trouble with the UN comes as Rwanda faces another diplomatic row with Uganda. On November 24 Uganda expelled a Rwandan diplomat Ugandan authorities claimed was aiding the PRA (Peoples Redemption Army), a Ugandan rebel organization that was bases inside the Congo. Rwanda retaliated by expelling a Ugandan diplomat.

December 5, 2004:Reports from the eastern Congo indicate that "larger formations" of Rwandan troops are once again operating inside the Congo. On December 2 the Congolese government said that 6,000 Rwandan troops had crossed the border and attacked at least one village in the Congo. British sources said that UN observers in the Goma area reported significant Rwandan troop movements. One said that as of December 2, eight Rwandan battalions had lined up at the Rwandan-Congo border.

What Rwanda calls a battalion varies in size, usually from 400 to 600 troops. The Rwandan government allegedly informed other African governments that if its troops moved into the Congo the troops would only target Rwandan Hutu rebels and not engage Congolese troops. Rwandan President Paul Kagame later issued an official statement that said military action (in the Congo?) would be "brief." On December 5 several African sources reported that Rwandan troops had attacked 21 villages in the Congo, with the first attacks occurring on November 24. The UN said that Congo civilians had given similar reports to UN peacekeepers. One of the reports said Rwandan soldiers had burned houses in Congo villages suspected of "housing" (supporting) Hutu rebels. Rwanda contends that up to 10,000 Hutu rebels are in the eastern Congo and they are threatening Rwanda. Other estimates put the number of Hutu rebels at 3,000 to 4,000. One has to ask what the Rwandans will do if and when they encounter Interahamwe Hutu rebels operating with Congolese "militias." In early November it was noted that Hutu rebels and Congo militias were operating together near the Congo-Rwandan border. A mix of Hutu rebels and Congo militias could well produce a figure of close to 10,000 (supporting the Rwandan allegation).

December 31, 2004: The UN won't directly accuse Rwanda of invading the Congo, but the UN does keep insisting that "foreign troops" have entered Congo, to fight Rwandan Hutu militias, right near the Rwandan border. Rwanda denies everything. Journalists are reluctant to investigate, because people with video cameras tend to draw fire.

January 18, 2005:Several thousand Congolese Tutsi civilians have fled into Rwanda, because of attacks by Rwandan Hutu militias. Apparently there are Rwandan troops (mainly Tutsi) in Congo trying to hunt down and kill these Hutu gunmen.

February 5, 2005:Burundi's rebel Forces for National Liberation (FNL) issued two promising statements on January 28 and another on February
3. The guerrilla group said that it would consider peace talks with Burundi's coalition government. Good news? The FNL has put out negotiation offers before, and the civil war simply continued. The February
3 statement stipulated that South Africa's Deputy President Jacob Zuma cannot act as a "mediator" in peace negotiations. After the January 28 FNL peace offer, Zuma said he "welcomed it" but the FNL offer came "too late" to change plans for elections held in April. Now the FNL believes Zuma is "biased" against it. Zuma has served as a "peace facilitator" for the various factions in Burundi's transitional government. The FNL prefers a UN negotiator The FNL also has this demand: it insists that it be treated as a legitimate resistance organization, not a terror organization. Meanwhile, the killing continues. The government claims that a provincial governor in Bubanza Province (north of Bujumbura) was assassinated earlier this month by the FNL. The governor's car was ambushed as he was traveling to Bujumbura. The FNL denies the charges and blames "other groups" in Bubanza Province who have grievances with the governor's administration. The major firefight on January 2, which left 46 FNL fighters dead, demonstrated that the FNL still has a force in the field-- but that death toll represents a large tactical military defeat in the Burundian civil war. Perhaps it's beginning to dawn on the FNL that the new FDD Hutu party made the smart decision to end the fight and join the government. There's an echo here of holdout pro-Saddam Hussein Sunnis waking up after the January 30 Iraq elections--like, hey guys, you're missing the political train. As it is, rogue Burundian Hutu guerrilla groups remain in Burundi and the DRC. The FNL claim that "other groups" murdered the Bubanza governor could well be true, and that means continued low-level fighting even if the FNL joins the Burundian peace process. --Austin Bay

February 20, 2005:The Burundian government claims that 18,000 Hutu rebels have turned in their arms since January 25, 2005. The 18,000 rebels are part of the FDD (Forces for Defense of Democracy). The rebels began gathering in what the Burundian government calls "regroupment camps" as part of the peace process now under the direction of the transition government. (Some reports call the camps "cantonments.") The Burundian government also says that 9,000 other former FDD fighters are now conducting operations with the Burundian Army--specifically pursuing some 3,000 FNL (Forces for National Liberation) Hutu rebels who have not joined the peace process. In fact, since late December, the "Army of Burundi" now has a new official name: National Defense Forces (FDN). This reflects the transition government's "military integration policy." The FDD and five other rebel groups are in the process of being integrated into the Burundian military. The Burundian Army was a Tutsi-dominated institution that was a law unto itself. The new FDN is supposed to have Hutu officers in key positions and be accountable to the civilian leaders in the transition government. The fact that the transition government has demobilized nearly 20,000 former rebel fighters gives the peace process a tremendous boost. It also shows how strong the FDD is in comparison to its rival, the FNL. The biggest Hutu rebel organization chose to political option. Like Saddam's former cronies who set off bombs in Iraq, the FNL can still make trouble, but as a political force it is increasingly marginal. (Austin Bay)

May 15, 2005:The FNL signed a cease fire agreement, and continued negotiating terms of a peace deal.

June 30, 2005:Violence between FNL rebels and government forces has increased throughout the month, leaving several dozen casualties. The ceasefire deal with the FNL is still technically in force, but is unraveling in the countryside.

July 16, 2005:Hutu rebels in Burundi launched new attacks, this time in central Burundi. On July 12 the FNL (Forces for National Liberation) attacked a Burundi Army unit in central Muramya province. Two firefights were reported. A total of three Burundian soldiers were killed, plus one policemen, and five FNL rebels. The FNL failed to join the Burundi peace process. The FDD (Forces for Defense of Democracy), the largest Hutu rebel group in Burundi, did quit fighting-- and proceeded to win the majority of seats in Burundi's last parliamentary election. A senior FDD leader will become Burundi's president next month. That means a Hutu-led Burundi government will face a Hutu-led insurgency.

July 21, 2005:Two Ethiopian soldiers assigned to assigned to ONUB (United Nations Operation in Burundi) have been "repatriated" to Ethiopia. The soldiers violated the UN military forces' sexual misconduct rules-- in place after investigation revealed extensive sexual abuse and exploitation by UN soldiers serving in the Congo. Ethiopia is responsible for discipline. ONUB is a UN Chapter VII peacekeeping mission, established by UNSCR 1545 in May 2004. The peacekeepers support the Arusha Agreement (peace agreement which led to the Hutu rebel FDD ending its insurgency).

July 28, 2005: The former rebel FDD, now a political party, has been sweeping local elections and is expected to gain a majority in the upper house of parliament. Despite the success of the Hutu FDD, the other (smaller) Hutu rebel group, the FNL, continues to fight. FDD representatives and supporters have been attacked recently by FNL rebels.

August 13, 2005:FNL Hutu rebels in Burundi have killed at least one hundred civilians in the month of July. June was likewise a bloody month, with nearly 200 civilian deaths. The FNL -- which refused to join the peace process--is pursuing a strategy similar to the Saddamist/al Qaeda terrorists in Iraq: Sow as much chaos as possible and try to incite another Hutu-Tutsi civil war. The FNL has been as unsuccessful as the Sunni Arab terrorists in Iraq, even though the FNL terror campaign has gotten practically no media coverage outside Burundi.

August 20, 2005: Former Hutu rebel leader, Pierre Nkurunziza, was selected as president of Burundi. Nkurunziza's mother was Tutsi.

August 31, 2005: The new government was installed, containing Hutu and Tutsi ministers. This government is the result of the peace deal between Hutu and Tutsi.

September 2, 2005: Battles with FNL rebels continue, with five rebels and one soldier killed on the outskirts of the capital.

September 13, 2005: The FNL refused to hold peace talks with the new government.

September 19, 2005: Peace or continued war? Burundi's FNL rebels have sent conflicting signals in the past-- and they are doing it again. The reason may be quite simple: the FNL is composed of competing factions. On September 14 the FNL attacked "several tragets" near the capital. On September 15 FNL rebels attacked a military base in the Gihosha region (north of the capital). The FNL group used grenades and rocket-propelled grenades in the attack. One person was killed. Later on the same day an FNL spokesman said the FNL was willing to discuss peace. The FNL, however, rejected negotiations with the Burundian government. The FNL spokesman said the group would discuss peace with (quote) "representatives of the Hutu, Tutsi and Twa ethnic groups." (The Twa are also called the Pygmies.) The FNL (a Hutu rebel group) does not want to legitimate its Hutu rivals who have joined the government and participated in electoral politics. The fact is, the FNL missed a political opportunity rival Burundian Hutus accepted, and that fact is finally dawning on the FNL holdouts.

November 25, 2005: Responding to a government report that troops had killed 41 FNL rebels, the FNL fired three 60mm mortar shells at the capita outskirts. There were no casualties.

December 5, 2005: The government believes the FNL are rapidly losing what little civilian support they have, as more former FNL supporters report to government officials, with information about FNL activities, and requests for protection from FNL retribution.

December 15, 2005: The Burundian government claimed that its forces hit the rebel Forces for National Liberation (FNL) hard in October and November of this year. A word of warning: the following are Burundian government figures, not independent figures. The government said the Burundian Army killed 120 rebels during the two month period and captured 646. This is out of an estimated 3000 FNL fighters. That means the government is claiming 25 percent of the FNL holdouts were either killed or captured since October 1. This is doubtful, but the FNL is taking a beating, and is still out there.

December 18, 2005: UN peacekeepers begin their withdrawal this week. About 200 troops will leave, and all 5,000 UN peacekeepers are to be gone by the end of 2006.

December 26, 2005: The UN has extended the peacekeeping mandate in Burundi. The extension is for six months, from January 15 to June 30, 2006.

Despite the extension, the Security Council believes the situation in Burundi has stabilized and the new unity government will be able to handle holdout Hutu rebels. The UN Operation in Burundi (the acronym is ONUB) currently deploys 5, 300 troops. Troop withdrawals scheduled for early 2006 will cut that number substantially. Mozambique's small contingent will begin withdrawing December 28, 2005. Kenya will withdraw its battalion in February. Ethiopia is currently scheduled to withdraw its battalion-sized contingent in March.

The only remaining rebel group, the FNL, has little popular support, and has been reduced to the status of bandits.

February 15, 2006: The Burundi government reported a firefight near the capital city, Bujunbura. Five members of the Forces for national Liberation (FNL) rebel group died in the clash. One Burundi Army soldier was killed.

March 8, 2006: At least three senior Burundian military officers are believed to be part of a coup plot to overthrow the current president, Pierre Nkurunziza. Senior national police officials may also be involved in the coup planning. The Burundi Army remains dominated by Tutsis. Nkurunziza is a Hutu. Since August 2005 he has led a "national unity" government with the support of the majority Hutus as well as key Tutsi politicians. Nkurunziza was also a key leader in the Hutu rebel group, the Forces for Defense of Democracy.

March 9, 2006: Nepal reported that a 225 troop "army team" had departed for peacekeeping duties in Burundi

March 10, 2006: A potential coup against the Burundian government was discovered by Burundi's intelligence service, the Service de Renseignement. UN ceasefire monitors in Burundi had feared a "backlash" by Tutsis in the Burundian Army against President Pierre Nkurunziza's government. In that sense, the coup talk reported March 7 and March 8 wasn't a surprise. Burundi's government remains very fragile. It relies on the presence of peacekeeping forces and the cooperation of several Hutu and Tutsis factions. If the intelligence service "cracked the coup" as reported, that has to be an encouraging signal. Nkurunziza has argued the majority Burundians are tired of war. He's right. However, the Hutu Forces for National Liberation (FNL) have not joined the peace process, and "old guard" Tutsi officers in the military do not support democracy because it means Tutsis can no longer dominate the majority Hutus.

March 12, 2006: The last active rebel group in Burundi, the FNL, have finally agreed to revive stalled peace talks. The FNL itself is split into factions, some of which are not willing to stop fighting. The FNL is one of seven Hutu rebel groups that opposed any government that included minority Tutsi. The better organized and more militarily effective Tutsi, had long dominated the majority Hutu.

April 10, 2006: The Burundian government confirmed that it will begin peace negotiations with representatives of the rebel Forces for National Liberation (FLN). Tanzania had reported on April 7 that an FLN negotiating "delegation" was in Tanzania.

April 10, 2006: Rwanda and Burundi have been discussing the 19,000 Rwandans now currently living in Burundi. The Rwandans are variously described as "illegal immigrants" or "asylum seekers" or "refugees." Many of the Rwandans are Hutus who fled Rwanda in 1994 after the Hutus genocidal attacks on Rwandan Tutsis. Burundi has tried to review some cases. The Burundian government said that of 450 asylum cases reviewed, 52 were judged as valid asylum cases. Burundi has said that most of the Rwandans will be sent home. The Rwandan government will then decides if the returnees will face prosecution.

The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) sentenced the former mayor of the town of Gikoro to 15 years in prison. According to the court, the former mayor, Paul Bisengimana, had reached a plea bargain with the prosecution. The ICTR is focusing on leaders and "masterminds" who directed the genocidal attacks. Bisengimana is in that category. He pled guilty to "murder and extermination." Bisengimana was involved in the murder of over one thousand people. Because of the plea bargain, Bisengimana received a sentence on the "extermination" charge only. -- Austin Bay

April 14, 2006: Burundi's National Defense Force (the Burundian Army) has opened a "demobilization camp" for FLN guerrillas who agree to end their rebellion. The Burundian government also said that it is currently conducting peace negotiations with two separate FLN factions. The negotiations are being held in Tanzania. (South Africa, Uganda, and Tanzania are helping facilitate the negotiations.) The negotiations are being conducted separately (ie, the two FLN factions are involved in separate negotiations). The FLN has always been "faction ridden". Even if the two main factions agree to join the government small, holdout elements may continue to fight. Hutu distrust of the Tutsis is one reason, but there is often a more practical reason in play. Guerrillas survive by banditry and smuggling. Banditry and smuggling may be an easier way to make a living than subsistence farming. Demobilization camps -- in principle-- are supposed to do more than disarm guerrillas. The camps are supposed to help them develop (or re-learn) civilian skills.

April 15, 2006: Burundi lifted its national curfew (from midnight to 6 AM). The curfew has been in effect for 34 years. A "temporary curfew" was imposed during the Hutu-Tutsi civil war of 1972. The curfew was made permanent in 1993. The national unity government believes that the curfew can now end. Though the Forces for National Liberation (FLN) continue to fight a guerrilla war, most FLN attacks occur in one province (Bubanza) where the FLN operates out of the Kibira forest area.

May 24, 2006: Buundi's national unity government has made great strides toward ending the civil war. That's one reason the UN is transferring peacekeepers from Burundi to the Congo. However, violence does continues. The Burundi government reported Burundian Army attacked an FNL (Forces for National Liberation) camp in the Kibira forest. Attack helicopters supported the assault. At least ten rebels died in the fighting.

Rwanda joined Uganda and Congo in agreeing to a UN-backed initiative to "sanction" rebel militias operating inside their countries and along their borders. The UN is trying to stop support for the rogue militias operating in the eastern Congo.

May 30, 2006: South Africa is mediating peace talks between the Burundi government and the hold-out Forces for National Liberation (FNL). The FNL is the Hutu rebel group that has so far refused to end the civil war.

September 5, 2006: A grenade attack in Bujumbura killed four people and wounded 12. The grenade attack came as FNL and government representatives said they had reached a tentative ceasefire agreement.

September 7, 2006: The FNL (Forces for National Liberation) and the Burundian government signed a ceasefire agreement. Negotiations had been taking place in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania. How the "demobilization process" for FNL fighters will proceed has not been precisely determined but many FNL fighters will be "integrated" into the Burundian national police and the army. FNL fighters are supposed to begin assembling by September 21.

September 12, 2006: The UN's International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda sentenced former Rwandan Army lieutenant-colonel Tharcisse Muvunyi to 25 years in prison. Muvunyi was accused of failing to stop genocidal massacres carried by his soldiers in his unit and for failing to punish the killers (ie, during the 1994 genocide of Tutsis in Rwanda). In one specific case, Muvunyi was accused of permitting his troops to kill a group of orphans who were hiding in a school.

September 16, 2006: A large group of Rwandans who survived the 1994 genocide participated in a protest in the Rwandan capital, Kigali. The genocide survivors called on global leaders to act to end the genocide in Sudan's Darfur region.

September 25, 2006: In Burundi, FNL rebels have begun gathering in Bubanza and Bujumbura Rural provinces for the last week. Many of the FNL fighters in Bujumbura Rural have been in camps across the Congo border. Some 400 fighters belonging to another FNL faction have reportedly assembled in Bururi province (south Burundi).

October 30, 2006: The Rwandan army has begun a special military academy course that focuses on African Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (ADDR). The course is designed to prepare officers to deal with the social, political and economic reintegration into society of former soldiers and guerrilla fighters. This is a common problem in Central Africa, especially Rwanda, Burundi, Congo (DRC), Uganda and Republic of Congo (Brazzaville). The course is based on a UN-developed training program and is designed to "link" the military and civilian elements of what the UN calls "peace support operations." This may not sound like a major development, but in fact it is. The Rwandan government understands that successful demobilization and reintegration is its biggest security and developmental challenge. The UN has been encouraging officer and troop professional development programs that "focus on the real challenges" facing developing nations emerging from civil and regional conflicts. The course is a Rwandan example of what the US Dept of Defense calls "unified action" - combining security, political, and economic tools to achieve a strategic or operational goal. (Austin Bay)

November 3, 2006: The Burundian government granted "temporary immunity" to the leaders of the National Liberation Forces (FLN). The FLN was the last rebel group to accept the peace agreement that has -for the most part-ended Burundi's long civil war. The immunity is for actions up to September 7, 2006. That is the date the FLN agreed to terms.

November 7, 2006: The Rwandan government is "examining allegations" that a few French troops may have cooperated with radical Hutu groups during the 1994 Rwandan genocide. The allegations are complex but the implication is that some of the French advisers working with the Hutu-led government aided the Interahamwe Hutu militias. The troops are alleged to have encouraged Tutsis to come out of hiding. Subsequently, the Tutsis were attacked by the radical Hutu militias.

December 17, 2006: The Burundian government gave "temporary immunity" to former members of FNL splinter faction, the Palipehutu-FNL. The faction was one of the last to join the peace process. The government statement said that the "immunity" (amnesty) was given in order to facilitate reconciliation and political development.

December 18, 2006: Rwandan reported that its peacekeeping contingent in Sudan had completed its first tour. Rwanda has 254 soldiers serving with UNMIS - UN Mission in Sudan, (ie, south Sudan). Rwanda will replace the first contingent with another 254 soldiers.

November 25, 2006:France and Rwanda have severed diplomatic relations. The French have supported the theory that the leaders of the current Rwandan government were the instigators of the genocide 12 years ago (by shooting down the aircraft carrying Rwandan and Burundian Hutu politicians.) A French court recently called for the prosecution of senior Rwandan officials. The current Tutsi government denies all this, and points out that France was supporting the Hutu dominated Rwandan government twelve years ago, and thus shares responsibility for that government's genocide against Rwandan Tutsis. The French are poor losers, especially in Africa, where they still maintain considerable economic and political influence. Twelve years ago, the Tutsi rebels were close to overthrowing the pro-French Hutu government. France cannot forget that, not only did their guys lose, but their Hutu protégés killed half a million innocents in the process. You've got to blame someone, and the French have decided to blame the people who stopped the killing.

December 25, 2006: The UN prepared to withdraw its peacekeeping contingent from Burundi. While the UN considers the Burundi peacekeeping effort to be a success, the political situation in Burundi is considered "fragile." One of the issues remains a trial for an alleged coup. One of the suspects is a former president, Domitien Ndayizeye. who was arrested in August 2006. A potential "food crisis" also exists in northern an east-central Burundi. Famine has a way of creating refugees, which in Burundi often leads to bandits attacking the refugees. In the past some of the "bandits" have been Burundi Army soldiers. At its height, the UN mission in Burundi had over 5,500 peacekeepers. The force is now down to around 2,500 troops. The peacekeeping force will have a civilian follow-on monitoring office, the UN Integrated Office in Burundi (BINUB). South Africa promised on December 12 to keep a contingent of its forces in Burundi after the UN officially withdraws. South Africa has 850 troops in Burundi, but that number could decrease in 2007. The South African contingent would serve as a "stabilizing" force in Burundi.

February 27, 2007: South Africa said that it will keep 1,100 troops in Burundi as part of the African Union's (AU) "special task force" for Burundi. South Africa is engaged helping negotiations between the Burundian government and the last rebel organization that has not signed the Arusha Accord (Burundi peace agreement). That organization is the Palipehutu-FNL

March 2, 2007: Rwanda reported that two "bombs" (most likely artillery or mortar rounds) fired from the Congo ((DRC) landed inside Rwanda. The Rwandan military claimed that Hutu Interahamwe rebels were operating in the border area (Rubavu district).

March 3, 2007: Now Burundi is offering to send peacekeepers to Somalia. Responding to an African Union (AU) request for peacekeepers, Burundi said that it could send up to 1,700 soldiers to Somalia. Burundi's defense ministry says that its troops have experienced and "technically" (ie, tactically) ready. However, they have equipment problems. The troops are basically light infantry and lack heavy weapons. They also lack support equipment. It is likely that they will need engineering and medical equipment. Burundi already has 50 troops and policemen serving in Sudan's troubled Darfur region. There is a reason for maintaining a foreign peacekeeping force in Burundi, while sending Burundian soldiers on other peacekeeping missions. The peacekeeping training helps professionalize the Burundian military. The troops are also paid in hard currency. Finally, it gives the Burundian military something to do besides fight inside Burundi.

March 5, 2007: The Rwandan government announced that plans on creating "one of the best air forces on the continent." (ie, Africa). The aircraft would be used to support Rwandan forces engaged in peacekeeping efforts. This suggests Rwandan intends to acquire transport aircraft and transport helicopters. At the moment Rwanda relies on the United States to airlift its troops and police security forces to Darfur. A Rwandan spokesman said that Rwandan does not want to be "dependent" on its "partners" for transportation.

March 11, 2007: Burundi is now regarded as a peacekeeping success. Burundi has offered to return the favor and send peacekeepers to Somalia. However, the situation in Burundi remains precarious. Once of the reasons for the fragility is a looming food crisis. December 2006 was marked by heavy rains. In fact, the last two growing seasons have experienced very heavy rainfall and destroyed many crops. The price of sweet potatoes (an important food source) has risen over 40 percent since the beginning of 2007. Rain isn't the only problem. The long war limited the farmers' ability to take care of the land and in many places soil (which to begin with is often thin in jungle regions) has been depleted. The government's concern is that a food crisis could lead to renewed fighting.

May 12, 2007: Last year Rwanda said that it would send more troops to Darfur to serve with the African Union peacekeeping force. Now Rwanda says that may have to withdraw its troops because they lack barrack facilities. The US and the UN promised to help build facilities in Darfur, but it was not clear who would pay the costs. Rwanda has three battalions in Darfur (approximately 2000 soldiers) serving with the African Union force.

May 22, 2007: A South African soldier, serving with the residual peacekeeping force in Burundi, was wounded in a shooting incident on April 9. The soldier was evacuated to a South African military hospital, where he died today. The incident is still under investigation. South Africa agreed to keep a small contingent in Burundi because the Burundian government trusts the South Africans to make fair decisions and not favor either Tutsis or Hutus. It also helps that the South Africans are the most professional military in Africa.

May 25, 2007: More than 8,000 refugees who fled Burundi in 1972 will be permanently resettled in the US. The refugees have been in Tanzania. The first group of approximately 90 Burundians left for the US in early May.
The rest will be flying to the US throughout the remainder of 2007. Phoenix and Atlanta are two of the primary destinations. Burundian refugees interviewed by the UN said that they did not believe it was possible to "integrate locally" in Tanzania. Tribal differences are simply too strong. Returning to Burundi was not an option, either. Many believed their lands and homes had been stolen, and the theft recognized by local authorities.

August 15, 2007: Bad news from Burundi. After resigning from a ceasefire monitoring team, key members of the Forces for National Liberation (FLN) have reportedly returned to the jungle. The FLN is a Hutu organization and one of its factions was the last to join the peace process. The Burundi government is concerned that the FLN splinter group may try to re-ignite the civil war. Up to this point the UN has regarded Burundi as something of a limited peacekeeping success. The official UN force has been withdrawn, though several international contingents remain in Burundi. South Africa has the largest contingent, with around a thousand troops.

August 31, 2007: Rwanda has decided to shake up the East African Community (EAC). The EAC is a very loose regional association, the kind of organization that serves as a platform for the pontificating types. Rwanda wants to turn the EAC into an economic union. Rwanda wants the EAC to end trade barriers. The first step would be to "harmonize" tariffs. but the Rwandan government is really advocating free trade. Over time, free trade and liberalized economies produce greater wealth for more people. East Africa is poor. This is a "regional solution" rather than a "donor-driven solution" (ie, aid). Rwanda has the right idea. However, tariffs do more than protect political cronies - they also line the pockets of corrupt politicians and bureaucrats. Rwanda has a fight on its hands.

September 9, 2007: In northwest Burundi, fighting between rival factions of the last rebel group, the FNL, left at least twenty dead, and caused over 4,000 civilians to flee the violence. The FNL signed a peace deal with the government a year ago, but disputes within the FNL have prevented the rebels from actually disarming and accepting amnesty. Violence caused by the civil war within the Hutu FNL, and bandits spawned by the various rebel groups, killed about 150 people over the Summer. Not quite peace, more like a crime wave driven by political and ethnic differences. Both Burundi and Rwanda have a centuries old conflict between the Hutu majority, and the better organized Tutsi minority. Tutsi tribes live on both sides of the Congo border with Rwanda and Burundi, and these tribes stick together whenever any Tutsi are threatened.

October 6, 2007: For the last two months, Congo and the UN have been accusing Rwanda of arming a Tutsi militia inside Congo, near the Rwanda border. While Rwanda denied supplying arms to the Congo Tutsis, there were more calls for Congo to do something about the Rwandan Hutu militias, that formed from those who fled Rwanda after the 1994 attempt to kill all Tutsi in Rwanda. Of late, the war of words has escalated, with Rwanda media talking about another invasion of eastern Congo by Rwandan troops, to deal with the Hutu guerillas once and for all. It was such an invasion in the 1990s that led to the downfall of the decades old Mobutu dictatorship, and a civil war that has killed millions.

October 10, 2007: Between 1990 and 2001 the Rwandan government spent $8.4 billion on weapons and military equipment, a lot of it from Eastern Europe. Most of the money was spent on small arms and ammunition. During this period the Rwandan economy grew by an average of 2.8 percent a year. If the money spent on weapons had been invested, the economy may have grown up to 4.5 percent a year. But tell that to the people involved. Much of the money was spent from 1990 to 1994, when the then Hutu-led government was fighting the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF, a predominantly Tutsi group). After the Tutsi genocide in 1994, the RPF took power. It spent money on arms and ammunition to fight Hutu rebels who had fled into the Congo. It also became involved in the Congo's various wars.

October 11, 2007: The FNL faction which withdrew from peace negotiations earlier this year has begun to fracture. The PALIPEHUTU-FNL faction has divided into at least four groups. Three of the groups are described as "dissidents" and all of them have indicated to the government that they are interested in renewing peace negotiations. This could be a break for the government, which has been trying to bring the PALIPEHUTU-FNL into the peace process. If it can't bring to the organization to the peace table, perhaps it can bring pieces (so to speak).

October 18, 2007: Rwanda will send a fourth battalion (55th Battalion) to Sudan's Darfur region this month. Three Rwandan Defense Force (RDF) battalions are already in Darfur. The fourth battalion is being deployed as part of the African Union-UN "hybrid" force. It will serve in the El Fasher sector. The lead elements of the battalion left by air for Darfur on October 15th. The unit is trained to use light armored personnel carriers. Currently 18 APCs slated for use by the 55th Battalion are already in Darfur.

November 8, 2007: In Burundi, the last rebel group, the Hutu Paliphehutu-FNL faction, continues to suffer from its own little civil war. One faction of the faction wants to accept amnesty and peace, another faction does not. In the last few weeks, fighting between the two factions has left over a ten dead, and dozens wounded. The government is apparently waiting for the smoke to clear, to find someone to talk to.

Rwanda has backed off on its threats to intervene in the battle against Tutsi rebels just across the border in eastern Congo. Rwanda and Burundi are both run by Tutsi minorities, and Rwanda has often gotten involved in helping Tutsi minorities in neighboring countries. The Tutsis are better organized, and better fighters, than the other tribes in the region.

November 29, 2007: The Burundian government said that Burundian Army and police units fought with elements of the FNL-PALIPEHUTU faction north of the capital of Bujumbura. The government statement followed reports of a "gang attack" on November 28 that killed three people and a hostage taking incident earlier in the week in which two Burundian police officers were seized.

November 30, 2007: A high-ranking group of Belgian defense officials and military officers visited Rwanda to discuss bi-lateral military cooperation. Rwanda was at one time a Belgian colony.

December 6, 2007: East African leaders at a regional security conference in Ethiopia asked the UN to enforce legal and economic sanctions against Rwandan Hutu rebels operating in the Congo. The Rwandan government has been pressing for effective sanctions against the Hutu rebels for almost ten years. Rwanda contends that "several thousand" Rwandan Hutu rebels have bases inside the Congo.

December 8, 2007: The Rwandan government has decided to hire eight commercial court judges from the island of Mauritius. Rwanda wants to improve its business courts and someone in the government has decided to hire Mauritian judges. Rwanda is trying to attract investment and investors want "honest courts" that enforce legal contracts.

December 11, 2007: A spokesman for a Burundian NGO said that that in the first ten months of this year, 393 people in Burundi were either killed by "the police or armed bandits." Given the level of violence that plagued Burundi during its civil war (roughly 1995 to 2006), this bad news ought to be taken in context. The UN estimates that 300,000 people died during the civil war.

December 14, 2007: The African Union said today that Burundi will send a battalion of peacekeepers to Somalia by the end of December.

December 18, 2007: The peace process in Burundi may be stalling. The government there is saying that it intend to take "a tougher stance" against factions in the Forces for National Liberation (FNL) which have reneged on commitments to join the peace process. Burundi's defense ministry reports that in "outlaw" FNL factions have conducted ambushes on roads this Fall as well as taken hostages. No number of alleged attacks was given. The largest "rogue faction" is the FNL-PALIPEHUTU. The FNL-PALIPEHUTU did agree to join the peace process but some of its fighters have reportedly "returned to the bush."

December 23, 2007: A second company of 100 Burundian Army soldiers deployed to Somalia. That makes 200 Burundian soldiers either in Somalia or enroute. Burundi has said it will eventually send 1700 soldiers to Somalia.

January 1, 2008: In Burundi, a French relief worker was murdered and a second wounded in an attack by a gunman. The attack took place in Ruyigi (east of Bujumbura). Direct attacks on aid workers such as this are rare. But robbery isn't rare. Concern is rising throughout Burundi about increased violence. The government has attributed the rise in violence to Palipehutu-FNL faction that has quit the peace process (the JVMM The Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism in Burundi). Whatever the reason for the attack on the air workers, the murder sows fear among NGOs. Impoverished Burundi is especially dependent on medical aid NGOs.

January 5, 2008: Last year, about 40,000 Burundian refugees returned from camps in Tanzania, and all those camps (housing 110,000 Burundians and 100,000 Congolese) are expected to be closed this year. Meanwhile, at least 10,000 Congolese have fled to Burundi. There, they are fed and housed by foreign aid groups, which also provide food aid to over 60,000 Burundians. Many of those receiving aid are returning refugees. In the last six years, nearly 400,000 Burundians have returned from refugee camps in neighboring countries.

January 9, 2008: The Burundian Army said that three of its soldiers were wounded in a firefight with a group of Palipehutu-FNL rebels. Five FNL rebels were killed in the battle. An FNL spokesman said the government story was false. The FNL fighters were "looking for food" when they were attacked by soldiers. Both the government and FNL agreed that the firefight took place near the town of Musigati. As with so many of these incidents in Africa, the wire services and internet rely on the statements of the government and then the rebel groups. The best check on both of these clearly self-interested sources is information gleaned from NGOs.

While these groups often have agendas and slants, the best NGO sources rely on reports from relief personnel on the scene and refugees. Those, too, can be confused, but at least it is another side of the story.

January 13, 2007: The Rwandan government is now paying much closer attention to events in Burundi. Burundi and Rwanda are very similar in demographics – a majority Hutu population with a comparatively wealthy Tutsi minority. While this may seem like now news –a country should always pay attention to events next door – the Rwandan government actually has the 1994 genocide as a riveting reason to pay attention to Burundi. In 1992 fighting between Hutus and Tutsis escalated in Burundi. Atrocities committed by Burundian Tutsi security forces against Burundian Hutus inflamed Hutus in Rwanda. Of course there were attacks by Burundian Hutus on Tutsis. The point is inter-tribal violence fed tribal passions next door. The increase in violence in Burundi is thus especially worrisome to Rwanda. There are some differences of course between 2008 and 1994. There are still peacekeepers in Burundi; the small peacekeeping force in Burundi operates under the auspices of the African Union.

January 30, 3008: The Rwandan government said that it believed military intervention by international forces might be the only way to avoid further ethnic fighting in Kenya. The Rwandan statement emphasized the "quick reaction" was the best way to deal with a crisis. The Rwandan statement was based on Rwanda's experience in 1994 (Rwandan genocide of Tutsis at the hands of radical Hutus).

February 8, 2008: In 2007 the US government gave Rwanda seven million dollars worth of military aid. Much of the money was used to support training programs for the Rwandan Army as well as provide equipment for Rwandan peacekeepers serving in Darfur.

February 10, 2008: Criminals or assassins? The presumption is assassins. Frederique Banvuginyunvira, the head of Burundi's second-largest political party, Front for Democracy in Burundi (Frodebu), was wounded in a grenade attack on his home. His wife and child were killed in the attack. Banvuginyunvira serves as part of the ruling national unity government, headed by the Forces for the Defense of Democracy Party (CNDD-FDD). The attack comes as negotiators are trying to reach a new agreement with rebel Hutu factions.

February 11, 2008: The mandate of South Africa's chief mediator for Burundi, Charles Ngakula, was extended until the end of 2008.

February 12, 2008: The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) will end its formal operations sometime in 2008. The UN established the ICTR in November 1994 (UNSCR 955) to prosecute the key instigators of the 1994 Rwandan genocide. The first ICTR initiated trial took place in 1997. At the end of 2007 the ICTR had completed 35 cases. The ICTR has 27 on-going cases. 16 people on the ICTR's wanted list (ie, people accused of major genocide-related crimes) have yet to be arrested.

February 13, 2008: The Burundian government and the FNL rebel faction, National Liberation Forces–Party for the Liberation of Hutu People (FLN-PALIPEHUTU) will begun face to face talks in late February. It is not clear that this is a break through, but it is a sign of some progress. In July 2007 the FNL-PALIPEHUTU rejected the international mediation team as "biased" in favor of the Burundian government. The UN has estimated that the FNL-PALIPEHUTU still has around 2000 fighters. The FNL faction will be asked to join the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism (JVMM), which oversees the peace process.

February 19, 2008: The US and Rwanda signed a bilateral investment treaty. This is a big deal for Rwanda and potentially a good deal for US investors. Bilateral Investment Treaties (BITs is the acronym) provide legal protections for foreign investors, which is supposed to increase the likelihood they will invest in a developing country. The "legal protection" usually means an international arbitration panel (one beyond the reach of corrupt local officials). BITs, however, serve a political purpose for local leaders who want to promote "the rule of law" and combat corruption. BITs provide a small but potentially powerful means of demonstrating how the "rule of law" reinforces economic development and promotes wealth creation.

March 1, 2008: The Burundi Army claimed it killed 17 rebels belonging to a Forces for National Liberation (FNL) faction. One soldier died in a firefight with the rebels. The shootout occurred in operations following the February 26 slaying of two Burundi Army soldiers in Bujumbura. In the wake of that attack the government accused the FNL of intending to "resume the war" (ie, rekindle the civil war).

March 13, 2008: Rwanda claims that Rwandan Hutu rebels operating in Congo's North and South Kivu provinces have acquired "outside financing." Well, the accusation is more specific than that. The Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) controls several key mines. They also control road and river transportation routes for the minerals, and several key airfields. One of the more important mines is a gold mine in South Kivu (at Kilembwe). The FDLR is also "extracting taxes" from locals in Congo. The FDLR does this in several ways. There are "road taxes" (charged when people move goods on roads). The FDLR also controls several market towns and takes a cut of agricultural goods sales in the markets.

April 2, 2008: The UN Peace Building Commission in Burundi has urged the Burundian Government and the FNL to continue Burundi's reconciliation process and implement the 2006 Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement. The UN report comes as violence has flared in rural Burundi. In early March grenade attacks were made on the homes of four members of Burundi's parliament in the capital, Bujumbura. In July 2007 the FNL-Palipehutu withdrew from participating the Joint Verification and Monitoring Mechanism (ceasefire monitoring agreement group originally run by UN peacekeeping mission in Burundi).

April 9, 2008: A Burundian Army soldier serving with African Union peacekeeping forces in Somalia died from wounds. The soldier was wounded in a suicide bomb attack April 8. The attack occurred in Mogadishu.

April 17, 2008: A rebel FNL faction mortared a military post outside of Bujumburu.

April 19, 2008: This time it is more than a firefight. The Burundian Army and a rebel faction of the FNL-Palipehutu have engaged in a series of running battles with FNL rebels. This appears to be the biggest outbreak of combat in the last twelve months. The government used attack helicopters against rebels in the Bubanza area northwest of Bujumbura. In the last two days six Burundian soldiers have been killed and an estimated 20 rebels killed. An FNL spokesman said that the government had launched an attack in the area. Bubanza is regarded as an FNL stronghold. The FNL has also denied accusations that the Rwandan Hutu rebel militia in the Congo, the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) was aiding the FNL. Both the FDLR and FNL, however, are ethnic Hutu rebel groups.

April 23, 2008: FNL guerrillas fired mortars into Bujumbura. There were no reported casualties.

April 26, 2008: Burundi's president called for international and regional involvement to help stop the new round of fighting that began April 17.

April 30, 2008: Burundian forces launched an air strike on rebel FNL positions in the Rukoko Swamp northwest of Bujumbura. The area is on the Burundi-Congo border and is used as a base camp area and an infiltration route by various rebel groups. The report did not specify the type of aircraft, but Burundi military airstrikes are usually delivered by armed helicopters. There were a series of firefights began on April 28, leaving 17 FNL rebels and four Burundian Army soldiers dead. Given the area where the fighting is taking place, this does look like a government offensive.

May 1, 2008: The Rwandan government is once again emphasizing "anti-genocide ideology" education, especially in Rwanda's Southern province. The Rwandan government uses the term "genocide ideology" to refer to the ethnic and regional tensions which led to the 1994 genocide of Rwandan Tutsis. This is clearly a political information campaign, with a direct person to person component as well as radio programming. Local courts ("Gacaca" traditional courts in many cases) are still prosecuting people who committed crimes during the genocide.

May 4, 2008: Another series of gun battles have broken out between rebel FNL factions and the Burundian Army. A major firefight erupted May 1, ten kilometers from Bujumbura. On May 2 the government reported that four rebel fighters and one Burundian Army soldier had died in what was described as an FNL-initiated ambush. The fighting has displaced 3,500 people. The government continues to reject a new "power-sharing deal" demanded by the FNL rebels.

May 7, 2008: The Burundi government believe that many fighters have left the FNL-PALIPEHUTU and that the faction now has fewer than 3,000 rebels. The faction disputes this count. That said, the 3000 figure has been batted around for several months. Some of the recent firefights have involved several hundred FNL gunmen, which could indicate great strength – or that government forces have hit major rebel bases.

May 8, 2008: The Burundian Army claimed that it had killed 50 members of the FNL-PALIPEHUTU in a series of firefights near Bujumbura (the Kabezi area, 20 kilometers south of the city). Subsequently, the FNL faction said that government forces launched an attack. The rebels said the attack undermined diplomatic moves to restart the Burundi peace process.

May 20, 2008: UN mediators and representatives from sub-Saharan Africa states believe the Burundi peace process is "getting back on track." Contacts with the FNL-PALIPEHUTU have been renewed.

May 30, 2008: The head of a Forces for National Liberation (FNL-PALIPEHUTU) faction that had quit the peace process, returned to Burundi's capital, Bujumbura. A member of the peace mediation team in Burundi said the return of Agathon Rwasa was part of a new push to revive the peace process and put the Comprehensive Peace Agreement into full effect. South African peacekeepers were part of the official contingent that met Rwasa (the contingent included government members and international diplomats). That's telling. Rwasa's FNL faction (Party for the Liberation of the Hutu People) argues that the Burundi military is not trustworthy and cannot be trusted.

June 4, 2008: The Burundian Army's Rapid Mobile Intervention Group (GMIR is the French acronym) is accused of illegal detention and torture in 2007. The GMIR is generally regarded as the Burundian Army's elite force.

July 9, 2008: The Burundian government accused the FNL-PALIPEHUTU of "halting demobilization" and recruiting new rebel fighters. The FNL faction denied the accusation.

July 10, 2008: The UN Security Council voted to end the arms embargo on Rwanda. The embargo had been in effect since the 1994 genocide.

July 18, 2008: Sweden took over as chair of the Burundi Peacebuilding Commission. The commissions is a "country specific" operation designed to monitor and forward Burundi's peace and reconciliation process.

July 20, 2008: The UN Security Council extended the mandate for judges serving with the UN war crimes tribunal tasked with investigating the 1994 Rwandan genocide. The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) is headquartered in Arusha, Tanzania. It was created in November 1994.

July 22, 2008: A young woman was killed in a hand grenade attack in Bujumbura. The attacker was allegedly a Burundian soldier. Interestingly enough, the soldier was arrested and charged with murder -a possible sign of change in Burundi.

August 2, 2008: For the last two weeks Rwanda has been telling the UN it will withdraw its peacekeeping contingent from Darfur if the UN insists that Rwanda replace Rwandan General Emmanuel Karake Karenzi. Rwanda, however is emphasizing that it is not issuing an "ultimatum." Still, this is a touchy subject. Karenzi is currently the deputy commander of the UNAMID force in Darfur. This is a prestigious position and Rwanda is proud of Karenzi's senior status. Karenzi, however, has also been indicted in Spain for war crimes (specifically "reprisal killings in Rwanda") he allegedly committed during the 1990s. A UN group had been investigating Karenzi's actions in a major battle in 2000 in the Congolese town of Kisangani, but that incident was not involved in the Spanish indictment. The Spanish indictment mentions two towns (Mukingo and Nyakinama) in Rwanda where Karenzi was allegedly involved in the murder of ethnic Rwandan Hutus. Rwanda has 2600 soldiers and police in Darfur with UNAMID. A Rwandan withdrawal would put the entire UNAMID peacekeeping effort in jeopardy. On July 31, Rwanda's president Paul Kagame took on more than the Spanish indictment. Kagame accused the UN's International Criminal Court (ICC) of practicing "imperialism." Kagame contends the ICC targets African countries, specifically "poor countries."

August 20, 2008: The Rwandan government continues to accuse France of "playing an active role" in the 1994 genocide of Rwandan Tutsis. Rwanda argues that French military trainers helped arm Hutu extremists. France denies the charges.

August 24, 2008: The Burundi military claimed that a Palipehutu-FNL (Forces for National Liberation) rebel group ambushed several soldiers near the town of Murwi. One soldier was killed in the firefight.

August 27, 2008: A senior Palipehutu-FNL leader claimed that Burundian security forces had a plan to assassinate FNL leaders. Agathon Rwasa made the claim on a BBC News program. The FNL provided no proof.

September 3, 2008: Rwanda has promised the Congo government that it will help accelerate the "disarmament and demobilization" of the Congolese rebel militia the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR). The militia includes Rwandan Hutus who belonged to the Interahamwe.

September 8, 2008: The UN has issued a new assessment of Burundi's peace process. The "positive developments" include a "cessation of hostilities" - at least for the most part. However, the UN analysis notes that there remain numerous problems that will take compromise. The most important goal is integrating the Palipehutu-FNL faction into the September 2006 Comprehensive Ceasefire Agreement. That is proceeding. However, to say the least, Burundi is impoverished. Trouble in neighboring Congo constantly presents Burundi with the threat of "spill-over violence" and even renewed violence. Burundi's domestic political scene is chaotic - there are 34 political parties. That noted, the parties are for the most part engaged in politics, not combat. The face to face meeting between Burundi's president. Pierre Nkrununziza, and a senior Palipehutu-FNL leader (on August 18) is regarded as a major step toward reconciliation. Control of the security forces (especially the Burundian Army) remains a problem. The UN code phrase is "rule of law within security forces." That's an important phrase, and one that is tough to implement.

October 15, 2008: Burundi has deployed 850 soldiers with the African Union peacekeeping force in Somalia (AMISOM peacekeeping force).

October 21, 2008: A South African spokesman said that the peace process in Burundi had "deadlocked." The Burundian government rejects the FNL-Palipehutu faction's demand that it keep the name "Palipehutu" once it becomes a political party. The name roughly translates as "Hutu people's liberation party." The government says a political party cannot be based on ethnic affiliations. This rates a snicker because all but a handful of sub-Saharan African political parties have a central ethnic group or tribal group at their core. But there is a certain understanding about these things. The FNL-Palipehutu could re-name itself "The Burundi Party for Social Welfare and Development" or "The African Congress for Unity Party" or something similar and that would be cricket. It would still be a Hutu-based party but the name would imply at least a notion of a "bigger tent."

October 28, 2008: Burundi and Tanzania signed a security partnership agreement. Tanzania will help train Burundian security forces.

October 29, 2008: Rwanda accused Congolese troops of firing into Rwandan territory from Congolese soil. The Rwandan report said that "an incursion" took place as Congolese Army forces were fighting with a Tutsi rebel group inside Congo.

November 8, 2008: Rwanda and Germany continue to be at diplomatic loggerheads. Rwanda has expelled a senior German envoy in response to the arrest of a Rwandan diplomat arrested in Germany, The Rwandan, Rose Kabuye, is allegedly involved in the shooting down of President Juvenal Habyarimana's airplane in 1994. The Germans arrested Kabuye based on a French warrant. Habyarimana's airplane had a French aircrew, who also died when the plane went down on April 6, 1994. Hutus accused the Tutsi-led Rwandan Patriotic Front of shooting down the aircraft. In the wake of the crash radical Rwandan Hutus launched genocidal attacks on Tutsis throughout the country.

November 12, 2008: The government formally arrested one of Burundi's main opposition leaders, Alexis Sinduhje (who heads the Movement for Security and Democracy, or MSD). He had been under "detention" for nine days.

November 17, 2008: The governments of Rwanda and Congo said that they had agreed to cooperate to "uproot" the Forces for the Democratic Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) which continues to operate in eastern Congo. The FDLR is run by former members of the radical Rwandan Hutu Interahamwe.

November 21, 2008: The Rwandan government denies that it intends to "annex" parts of eastern Congo. The government says allegations that it is providing logistical support for Congolese Tutsis under the command of General Laurent Nkunda are false. Still, Nkunda's forces also seem to have reliable supply lines in an isolated corner of the Congo. He is getting re-supplied. Sure, Uganda remains a possibility, as does Burundi. Tribal ties are very important socially, culturally, and politically in sub-Saharan Africa?and that makes Tutsi-led Rwanda the most-likely source for supplies, and even experienced soldiers from the Rwandan army, reaching Nkunda's militiamen.

December 4, 2008: The Forces for National Liberation-Palipehutu (FNL)-Palipehutu) agreed to change their "unconstitutional name" for a political party, ie Palipehutu. The word is a contraction of the French words for "Party for the Liberation of the Hutu People." According to the deal worked out with the Burundian government, the FNL-Palipehutu's new name for their political party can include the tribe name "Hutu." How this plays out of the next few months remains to be seen. This "name game" has been a major stumbling block in peace negotiations.

December 6, 2008: The Rwandan government said that it had discussed conducting "joint disarmament operations" against Interahamwe Hutu militias operating in the Congo-Rwanda border region with the Congolese government. The Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) were specifically mentioned. The Rwandan government has sought the elimination of the FDLR since 1994. The Hutu radicals who formed the FDLR played key roles in the 1994 Tutsi genocide. What would a "joint disarmament operation" look like? The Rwandan Army is superior to Congo's forces. "Joint" could mean permission to attack the FDLR in Congolese territory – with Congolese observers watching the action. That would not be too different from Uganda's deal with Sudan, which allowed the Ugandan Army to operate against the Lords Resistance Army in southern Sudan.

December 15, 2008: Some 94,000 Burundian refugees have returned home since January 2008. This signals that a lot of people believe Burundi's peace deal is going to hold up. However, the returnees create a lot of problems. Immediate shelter and food for returnees is one problem. Providing farming implements and seeds is another (most Burundians are farmers). There is also the issue of land ownership. Because some of the refugees have "been in exile for years," squatters or neighbors have been using the property. This problem occurs throughout the world. It happened in Bosnia and it is happening in northern Uganda. The trick is to sort it out using legal methods instead of starting a new war.

December 16, 2008: The Rwandan government UN allegations it supports militias fighting in eastern Congo. The report tied the Rwandan government to General Laurent Nkunda's National Congress for the Defense of the People (CNDP).

December 24, 2008: Implementing the latest agreement between the Burundian government and the FNL remains a huge problem for peace mediators. The FNL-Palipehutu have officially agreed to participate in the peace process and this means demobilizing guerilla fighters in assembly areas. The assembly areas will be monitored by outsiders, but the level of trust between the FNL's fighters and the Burundian Army is very very low. Apparently Tanzania played a key role in pressuring the FNL-Palipehutu to agree to drop its "illegal name" on December 4. The FNL wants some

"follow-up" by Burundi's neighbors to guarantee security during the demobilizing and reintegration process.

February 1, 2009: The Rwandan government said that its troops which are operating in Congo against the FDLR will pull out by the end of February. The Rwandan force is still called an “observer force” but is carrying out military operations inside the Congo.

A statement by the Congolese government indicated that it did not expect former general Laurent Nkunda (under arrest in Rwanda) to be extradited to Congo “soon” but that would come in time.

February 10, 2009: International observers monitoring the Rwanda-Congo joint operation against the FDLR hope that the Rwanda-Congo action will “intimidate” FDLR militiamen and they will disarm without further fighting. The UN believes that very few “Interahame genocidaires” actually remain in Congo. Many Rwandan Hutus who fled Rwanda after 1994 have “assimilated” into Congolese society and have warned Rwanda and Congo against indiscriminate attacks.

February 15, 2009: Mediators in Burundi have had a tough months trying to get the government and representatives of the FNL-PALIPEHUTU to firm up their peace agreement. The PALIPEHUTU faction is once again insisting that it get to keep its name as it transitions to a political party. The name is an acronym for “party for the liberation of the Hutu people” and the government objects to ethnic parties. There are other problems. The original peace agreement promised to demobilize Forces for National Liberation fighters (of various FNL factions). The total number is around 20,000 and mediators report the demobilization process is “going slowly.” Major elections are scheduled for 2010, but some mediators fear that the FNL-PALIPEHUTU could “head for the bush” once again in 2009 – and rekindle the civil war.

In the eastern Congo, Rwandan troops have been seen pulling back towards the border. The Rwandan government has said it would have its troops out of Congo by the end of February, or thereabouts.

February 23, 2009: Where is former Congolese general Laurent Nkunda? Since his arrest (or, alleged arrest) by Rwandan forces operating in the Congo, the word is he is being held in Rwanda’s capital, Kigali. The Congolese government wants him extradited to the Congo, or at least claims to want him extradited. The Rwandan government says that Nkunda is Congolese and he will be “returned” to the Congo eventually. What happens if and when Nkunda returns to the Congo? That remains to be seen. Many Congolese believe Nkunda is responsible for keeping the war going in eastern Congo. That is a big stretch, but the perception is there; Nkunda might serve as a scapegoat. However, actually trying Nkunda in Kinshasa might have political repercussions among Congolese Tutsis that the Kabila government doesn't want. Even though the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) militia still has forces operating in eastern Congo, the deal brokered between Rwanda and Congo looks pretty good. Congo got Nkunda off the immediate political and military landscape. Nkunda's National Congress for the Defense of the People (CNDP) is now run by Congolese Tutsis who want to strike a deal with the Congolese government. Rwanda has hammered the FDLR (whose leaders were involved in the 1994 genocide) and has a new "alliance relationship" with Congo. Rwanda and Congo, however, continue to insist that Nkunda's arrest was not "linked" to the Congolese agreement launch a joint attack against the FDLR. (And if you believe that we've a bridge to sell you running from Manhattan to Brooklyn.)

February 22, 2009: Eleven Burundian troops serving with African Union peacekeeping forces in Somali died in an attack by suicide bombers sent by the Islamist extremist organization, al-Shabaab. The Burundi contingent was in Somalia's capital, Mogadishu.

February 27, 2009: Rwandan military forces in the Congo completed their withdrawal from the Congo. The withdrawal began on February 25. The operation (called "Unoja Vetu", which is Swahili for "Our Unity") began on January 20.

March 2, 2009: UN reports said that FDLR Rwandan Hutu rebels who "scattered" when Rwandan forces attacked them in eastern Congo have returned to several Congolese villages as the Rwandan Army withdraws. The Congo government disagreed with the UN assessment, claiming that the FDLR contingents were conducting small raids (and accused them of "looting") but were not retaking villages. This is not the news from UN observers the Rwandan military wants to hear. However, the Rwandan government appears to be satisfied with the joint operation with Congolese forces. The Rwandan military believes it hit the FDLR hard – the official statement says the FDLR wasn't destroyed but its "operational capacities" were reduced. No one is quite sure, but an estimated 5,000 Rwandan Hutus were "repatriated" to Rwanda. Many of these people were not FDLR fighters but were family or displaced persons. The Rwandan military claims it killed 153 FDLR fighters in the offensive. The Congo-Rwanda alliance claims it lost eight soldiers. Moreover, it sent the clear message that it is prepared to strike them again, with the Congolese government as an ally.

March 4, 2009: The Burudian Hutu rebel group FNL (Forces for National Liberation-PALIPEHUTU) has demanded that the Burundian Army return a cache of weapons the army discovered and seized on March 3. The weapons cache was located just outside Burundi's capital, Bujumbura. The FNL is now part of the "peace process", which explains in part why the rebels have the brass to demand the military return their weapons. An FNL spokesman said that the cache would have been turned in as part of Burundi's official Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (DDR) process for former rebel fighters. The cache had 40 AK-47s, four submachine guns, and two 60 mm mortars – in First World military terms a platoon but in FNL terms a major unit (it had mortars for fire support). The cache also contained ammunition and explosives.

March 5, 2009: Is the Rwandan pullout from Congo really complete? Right now no one is sure but there is some evidence that a cadre of Rwandans remains in the Congo. It makes sense for the Rwandans to leave liaison officers and observers with Congolese forces.

March 14, 2009: The Rwandan government now says discussions "are delayed" with the government of Congo concerning what to do with former Congolese rebel leader Laurent Nkunda. Rwanda says Congo asked for the delay. Congo has said it wants to extradite Nkunda and return him to the Congo for trial. Congo let Rwanda send troops into eastern Congo to fight Rwandan Hutu rebel militias. The quid pro quo was Rwanda's arrest of Nkunda. Both nations deny this but at the time Rwanda and Congo said they had agreed that Nkunda needed to be arrested.

March 16, 2009: The Rwandan government is making what appears to be a serious attempt to curb corruption. Five senior officials have been fired and prosecuted recently, and dozens of lower ranking officials suffered the same fate. But, like the most of Africa, the corruption is pervasive, and a major drag on the economy. The corruption is the main reason African economies have declined in the last half century, while those everywhere else in the world have grown. The corruption is also the underlying cause of the many wars that still rage in Africa.

April 6, 2009: A contingent of Rwandan Army forces conducted a raid into the Congo. The operation was described as a "joint operation" with the Congolese Army to disarm FDLR militiamen. Rwanda and Congo have said that they will continue to conduct joint anti-FDLR militia operations.

April 7, 2009: The Rwandan government held ceremonies commemorating the 15th anniversary of the Rwandan genocide. Around 800,000 Tutsi people and Hutu moderates were slain by Interahamwe Hutu militias and their tribal allies.

April 18, 2009: Burundi's Forces for National Liberation (FNL) formally surrendered to the government. A senior FNL commander surrendered at a ceremony in the town of Rubira (near the capital, Bujumbura) and said that the FNL is not going to "resume war." That may or may not prove to be true, but after 13 years of civil war Burundi is exhausted. The FNL will now become a political party.

April 20, 2009: The Laurent Nkunda's sage continues. A Rwandan court panel rejected an appeal by Nkunda's lawyer that he be freed from custody because his arrest was illegal. Nkunda is under "house arrest" in Rwanda. He was arrested by Rwandan forces when they invaded Congo to attack FDLR sanctuaries in January. The Congolese had warrants for Nkunda but apparently didn't want the political problem of arresting him -
- Rwanda could arrest the Tutsi leader and face less political blowback. Congo claims to want to bring him back to Congo for trial. Maybe, maybe not. The Rwandan government has said since the arrest that removing Nkunda was "fundamental" to forwarding peace in eastern Congo.

April 21, 2009: African Union peacekeepers are helping the Burundian government disarm FNL (Forces for National Liberation) fighters as part of the new demobilization and reintegration process for former FNL rebels. AU peacekeepers are manning five demobilization points around the country. There are approximately 21,000 former FNL rebels in Burundi. The Burundian Army and various police organizations have agreed to employ 3500 former rebels. Around 12,500 have already returned home. However, the AU estimates that another 5000 must be demobilized. There are still a lot of light weapons in Burundi. The government estimates that from 100,000 to 300,000 illegal arms remain in the country --and a significant number of them are AK-47s. Other African countries have faced this problem as war subsides and a hesitant peace begins. The Congo Republic (Brazzaville) confronted a similar "small arms threat." Many former fighters do go home but there is always the possibility that a few will decide to continue to live as guerrillas, except now they become bandits. They are bandits armed liked guerrilla fighters and bandits with the skills of experienced guerrilla fighters.

April 30, 2009: Rwanda and Congo continue to argue that their joint offensive against the FDLR was a success, but more and more Congolese civilians complain that the FDLR has returned. FDLR factions are conducting reprisal raids in the Congo. The FDLR militiamen suspect Congolese villagers told the Congolese government and UN peacekeepers their whereabouts and now it is payback time.

May 8, 2009: The Rwandan government reported that "returnees" from the Congo (ie, members of the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Congo, FDLR, who were responsible for the 1994 genocide) continue to arrive. Between 140 and 150 FDLR members are surrendering each month in the Congo and going through a "voluntary disarmament, demobilization, and repatriation" program run by the UN. Congo then returns the militia fighters to Rwanda. Around 3,000 dependents (ie, of FDLR fighters) have also returned to Rwanda since Rwanda and Congo conducted a joint offensive against the FDLR in January 2009.

May 12, 2009: Many of the 20,000 Rwandan Hutu refugees in Uganda are fleeing refugee camps, rather than return to Rwanda. The UN ordered the refugee camps emptied by the end of July, and many of refugees fear prosecution for participation in the 1994 massacre of Tutsis.

May 14, 2009: In Burundi, 203 members of the FNL (Hutu National Liberation Front) were freed from jail as part of a peace deal. The FNL also registered itself as a political party (joining 41 others) and released the last 136 teenage soldiers from its combat units. Some 2,000 adult fighters were also demobilized from the FNL.

May 15, 2009: Rwanda has a major criminal problem with smuggling (via Lake Kivu) from Congo. The eastern Congo has been lawless for over a decade because of banditry, renegade militias and civil war. Rwanda is seeking to obtain speedboats for the police so they can deal with the Lake Kivu smugglers.

The demobilization of Hutu rebels in Burundi during the last year did not result in all weapons being turned in. Hundreds of hand grenades ended up on the black market, where they sell for as little as a dollar each. The grenades are used by criminals, or to settle feuds, and last year, killed nearly 150 people. There are still over 100,000 (and as many as 300,000) illegal weapons in Burundi (which has a population of nearly seven million, of whom 83 percent are Hutu and 13 percent Tutsi.) Not all of the FNL rebels have given up violence, and some are still running death squads and attacking government officials they disagree with. But this is low level, with one or two deaths a month.

June 1, 2009: All about the violent competition between better organized and more aggressive Tutsis and more numerous Hutu tribes. It's been going on for centuries, but the latest installment has finally ended, with the last Hutu group in Burundi giving up, then changing its mind, but not making nearly as much trouble as in the past. Rwanda blamed for continuing violence in eastern Congo, as they attempt to destroy Hutu terrorists based there. But now Rwanda is cooperating with Congo and the UN peacekeepers to shut down Tutsi militia in eastern Congo.

June 13, 2009: UN and Congolese army troops have been unable, after nearly a year of trying, to dismantle or push into Rwanda, the FDLR rebels (formed by Hutu participants in the 1994 genocide against Tutsis in Rwanda). Despite fifteen years of peacemaking in Rwanda and Burundi, the hostility between Hutus and Tutsi remains.

June 15, 2009: The UN is trying to close refugee camps in Tanzania that have housed Burundian Hutu refugees. Some of the Burundians "DPs" (displaced persons) have lived in the camps since the 1970s, having fled Burundi following the Tutsi versus Hutu ethnic violence in 1972. In 2002, as part of the Burundian peace process, the UN began encouraging Burundian Hutus to move back. The program accelerated in 2008 as Hutu guerrilla holdouts joined the peace process. The program includes new housing in Burundi. When the refugees return (and become "returnees") they often find their former lands occupied by someone else or used by someone else. This has occurred in northern Uganda, where returnees have also found their old homes and land taken over by other families. This situation leads to conflict. The trick is to settle the conflict in court instead of with rifles and grenades. Money talks, and this is a case where international aid money does forward peace.

June 19, 2009: Fifty-seven former members of the Rwandan Hutu-led Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) were repatriated to Rwanda in the last month.

June 27, 2009: Hand grenades sell for roughly one US dollar on the black market. The hand grenades are "war leftovers" and they are being used by criminals in robberies. A government study reported that 616 people were killed in "acts of violence" in Burundi in 2008, 22 percent were killed with hand grenades.

June 29, 2009: South Africa will withdraw its 1,100 peacekeepers from Burundi, as it appears that the peace deal currently in place, is working.

July 1, 2009: Burundi is upgrading its police weapons depots and storage facilities. During the long civil war, guerrillas frequently struck police stations. Killing police was one goal but obtaining weapons was usually the primary objective.

July 14, 2009: The UN's International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) continues its dismal job of investigating the 1994 genocide and trying accused mass murderers. The court has convicted a major political figure in the genocide, Tharcisse Renzaho. Renzaho (governor of the Kigali district in 1994). He received a life sentence on five capital counts (including genocide and two counts of murder).

July 21, 2009: Rwanda and Congo have decided to continue to improve political ties. The process began with the joint operation earlier this year against the Rwandan Hutu-led Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR). Rwanda and Congo have upgraded diplomatic ties (exchanged ambassadors) and are exploring ways to improve economic cooperation. The countries have been enemies since the mid-1990s. One of the issues the two countries intend to address is the FDLR, which continues to attack Congolese civilians.

July 26, 2009: The whereabouts of former rebel Congolese leader, General Laurent Nkunda, are a subject of conjecture in both Rwanda and Congo. Officially Nkunda is under arrest in Rwanda. Nkunda was arrested in January 2009 when Rwandan military forces entered the Congo and conducted a joint operation against the FDLR.

July 27, 2009: Rwanda announced that it is considering future joint military operations with the Congolese government. The Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR, a radical Hutu organization) is in the process of reconstituting its militia forces in the Congo. A Rwandan senior leader said that the military operations could be launched "on short notice."

August 11, 2009: The Burundian government is attempting to consolidate refugee camps. Burundi, which is at the moment accepting Burundian refugees returning from Tanzania, has at least 30,000 refugees, the majority from the Congo. The government, with aid from the UNHCR, is moving 2,500 Congolese refugees to a camp in Ruyigi province (eastern Burundi). Many of the refugees are Congolese Tutsis.

August 21, 2009: Rwanda is waging political war on the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR), the predominantly Hutu militia operating in the eastern Congo. The Rwandan government is calling for the prosecution of FDLR leaders and their “international” supporters. This could mean several things, but Rwanda has claimed that former FDLR leaders are in exile in Europe. The Rwandan government also wants the UN to enforce sanctions on the FDLR.

August 31, 2009: Burundi announced that it had completed its latest disarmament and reintegration program. The government made the announcement in mid-August. Burundi has conducted several “Disarmament, integration, and training” programs. This one began in April 2009. All told, the government claims that 16,948 former fighters have passed through the disarmament and reintegration process.

September 2, 2009: A US congressional delegation visiting Rwanda told the government that is was impressed with Rwanda's recovery from the 1994 genocide. The group also praised Rwanda's efforts at improving its health care system and education system.

September 18, 2009: Twelve Burundian soldiers serving with the African Union (AU) peacekeeping mission in Somalia (AMISOM) were killed when two bomb-laden vehicles blew up in Mogadishu. The Somali Islamist organization Al Shabaab used two cars with United Nations insignia.

September 19, 2009: Several Burundian opposition political parties have demanded that the government pull its troops out of the AU Somali peacekeeping force (AMISOM). The demand came after 12 Burundian soldiers died in a terror bomb attack in Mogadishu. The Burundian peacekeeping contingent in Somalia is becoming an increasingly tough political issue for the government.

September 20, 2009: Has Burundi been successful in forwarding the peace process? When the last National Liberation Forces (FLN) splinter group, the FNL-Palipehutu agreed to join the peace process, many observers thought the fighting was finally over. Several senior FNL leaders got positions in the government and military as “reintegration” became the code word. In April 2009 the international committee guiding the peace process got an agreement with the government to place 3500 former FNL fighters in the Burundian Army. Now a number of critics aren't so sure. It is clear that the FNL-Palipehutu has not turned in all of its weapons. The big elections scheduled for 2010 may not be peaceful. Several hotheads have suggested they will return to violence if the elections don't produce the results they like. Fractures in Hutu political parties have appeared, and Hutus who joined the peace process before the FNL-Palipehutu do not like the new political competition. Some members of the FNL are still “collecting taxes” in the hinterland (which means they are robbing people). Former FNL fighters are also being recruited by Hutu militias fighting in the Democratic Republic of Congo. At one time these were rumors but the rumors have now been confirmed as the militiamen have talked to the foreign press. The lower-ranking rebel fighters say the senior leaders (in the FNL) have done okay, but that most rebels do not have jobs. Many received a “disarmament and reintegration” bonus of around $100, but not all. The fighter say Congolese militias (like the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda) offer them as much as $500 to join. That kind of money looks real good.

September 23, 2009: Rwanda continues to modernize its military. Rwandan troops serving with the UN-AU peacekeeping force in Darfur (UNAMID) have gained valuable experience on that deployment. The government has also introduced a number of programs over the last three years to professionalize the military. The Rwandan Army has “cross training” programs with several countries, including Belgium. There, 53 Rwandan soldiers have completed training courses at Belgium's Royal Military Academy.

September 28, 2009: An unidentified attacker threw a grenade into the market in the town of Karamba, Rwanda. Four people were killed and 47 wounded. The attacker fled on a motorcycle.

October 13, 2009: Congo and Burundi said they have completed negotiations designed to facilitate the return of 2,500 Congolese citizens from Burundi to the Congo. The refugees fled fighting in Congo's South Kivu province in 2004. This marks a change in the Congo government's approach, which had initially refused to accept them. Burundi regards some of the refugees as potential security problems. The refugees recently rioted to protest what they see as the lack of concern by both governments. Burundian police had to break up the protest.

October 19, 2009: A document allegedly written by Congolese Tutsi leader (and former general) Laurent Nkunda is making the rounds in east and central Africa. Nkunda is now under arrest by the Rwandan government. He was arrested in January 2009 by Rwandan troops inside the Congo as Congolese and Rwandan forces began a joint attack on the FDLR. The chief points made in the alleged Nkunda “manifesto” is that he sees himself as leading an “ethnic Tutsi” insurgency and that current national borders need to be changed. Nkunda also claims that he was not a “proxy” warlord for Rwanda and never received arms and ammunition from Rwanda.

October 23, 2009: A senior Al Shabaab spokesman (Somalia's Islamist group) threatened to launch suicide bomber attacks on Uganda and Burundi. The spokesman threatened to bomb targets in Kampala (Uganda's capital) and in Bujumbura (Burundi's capital). Both Uganda and Burundi have troop contingents serving with African Union peacekeeping forces in Somalia, and there have been frequent battles between these peacekeepers and local Islamic radicals. The peacekeepers tend to win all these battles.

November 4, 2009: Burundi conducted a ten-day long “weapons turn-in” program. The government has been concerned about the ready availability of weapons and ammunition among former guerrilla fighters. The “national disarmament commission” (as it is called) has come up with a trade-in deal. Citizens who turn in weapons and ammunition can receive mobile phones (a very popular item), farm tools, and construction materials. The recent ten-day drive was regarded as a success. People turned in 2,482 rifles, 789,000 rounds of ammunition, 10, 429 grenades, and 28 mines. “Other explosive devices” were also turned in (presumably home-made bombs, but you take a guess). The government has also passed a law restricting possession of fire arms.

November 6, 2009: Rwanda has been a stalwart contributor to peacekeeping operations in Africa. Recently a Rwanda contingent (a reinforced company) returned from a year's duty in Darfur with the AU-UN “hybrid” UNAMID peacekeeping force. The contingent was part of Rwanda's 9th Battalion which is deployed in Darfur. The battalion has around 800 troops. 3200 Rwandan troops (four battalions) are serving with UNAMID.

November 10, 2009: Infighting among Burundian Hutu leaders associated with the old National Liberation Forces (FNL) has split the Hutu political movement. The FNL is now a political party. Recently the ousted FNL leader Agathom Rwasa. Rwasa warned the government that splits inside the FNL could lead to violence during next year's election. Rwasa currently serves in the coalition government.

November 18, 2009: The Rwandan government thanked Germany for arresting a former Hutu leader who was once head of the FDLR. The Germans arrested Ignace Murwanashyaka and his deputy, Straton Musoni. Both men are charged with war crimes and crimes against humanity. The FDLR was organized by ethnic Hutus who were involved in the 1994 genocide and who managed to flee Rwanda to the eastern Congo.

November 21, 2009: The Rwandan government acknowledged that the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR, a Rwandan Hutu militia) is still fighting in the Congo. The government said that the FDLR has apparently managed to get a few new recruits from Rwanda.

November 29, 2009: Rwanda joined the British Commonwealth of Nations. Rwanda is a former German and Belgian colony. Rwanda also has ties to many French-speaking African nations. However, Rwanda thinks it has more in common with the Commonwealth. Uganda and Kenya are key Rwandan trading partners and both are former British colonies. Mozambique (which was a Portuguese colony) joined the Commonwealth in the 1990s.

December 5, 2009: Two Rwandan peacekeepers were killed in Sudan's Darfur region. The men were serving with the UNAMID peacekeeping force. Three Rwandan soldiers were killed the day before in an ambush in Darfur.

December 15, 2009: Burundi's National Independent Electoral Commission (CENI) announced that national elections will be held on June 28, 2010.

December 17, 2009: The UN Security Council extended its political mission Burundi through the end of 2010. The UN Integrated office in Burundi (BINUB) was established in 2006. BINUB has been directed to help monitor Burundi's national elections.

December 18, 2009: The UN extended Rwanda's genocide tribunals until 2012. There are still a number of cases remaining from the 1994 genocide. Cases are supposed to conclude by mid-2010, but can be appealed through the end of 2012.

December 25, 2009: The UN has been touting Burundi's 2010 elections as a milestone. However, a lot of Burudians are talking as if they believe the elections will be big trouble. No, it isn't that they are against elections, the worried think that many of the political factions see the elections as a chance to stoke discontent and trigger violence. One sign of this is the many Burundi political parties with “youth wings”. The young don't have jobs, a lot aren't in school. It is easy to get them to throw rocks –and to try to get a reaction from the security forces. Though a lot of illegal weapons have been turned in (the government gave cell phones to people who turned in weapons) everyone believes that a lot of weapons remain, hidden in Bujumbura (the capital) but especially in caches in the countryside. Some former rebels may be banking on electoral fraud and ballot troubles. It will give them a reason to contest the election. A South African research outfit said that some of the political parties are now or plan to re-arm their militias. The militias will be used to intimidate voters.

December 28, 2009: An anti-corruption NGO in Burundi alleged that the government stole $1.6 million from the 2009 budget.

January 10, 2010: A UN advisory panel reported that Burundi's intelligence agency has been providing “military support” to the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR), a radical Hutu militia operating in eastern Congo.

January 11, 2010: A key member of the Peace and Democracy Union (UPD), a Burundian opposition party, was murdered north of Bujumbura (Burundi's capital). Sylvere Niyonzima was reportedly standing in a bar when a man wearing a mask came into the bar and fired eight shots at him at close range. Burundian opposition groups accused the government of plotting the assassination.

January 12, 2010: The Rwandan government released a long-awaited report on the assassination of President Juvenal Habyarimana. Habyarimana was murdered in 1994 when a shoulder-fired anti-aircraft missile struck his plane as he was flying into Rwanda's capital, Kigali. His assassination was used by Hutu extremists as a reason to launch their anti-Tutsi genocide. Habyarimana was himself an ethnic Hutu. The government report (which according to one source included interviews with almost 600 witnesses) concluded that Hutu extremists were responsible for Habyarimana's death. A number of Hutus claim the report is a fraud.

January 14, 2010: The Rwandan government said that it had investigated three grenade attacks that occurred in December 2009 and a fourth attack that occurred in early January. The government report said the actions were criminal involving thefts and personal feuds. However, one attack was related to an impending genocide trial. Two potential witnesses were murdered in that attack. The string of attacks had led to speculation that a rebel group was launching attacks in Rwanda. Sub-Saharan Africa has a lot of weapons floating around, dangerous leftovers from the various wars afflicting the region. The Republic of Congo (Brazzaville) and Burundi have both run major weapons turn-in programs, but media constantly report that Kalashnikov assault rifles, land mines, and grenades can be quickly acquired by anyone with cash. Rwanda has had a similar program and in 2009 the government claimed it destroyed 30,248 small arms that it had confiscated or acquired.

January 21, 2010: A year after Rwanda and Congo launched a joint offensive against the FDLR, Laurent Nkunda is back in the news. A Rwandan court has postponed a hearing on a request by Nkunda's lawyers that he be released from house arrest in Kigali, Rwanda. Nkunda was arrested by Rwandan forces inside the Congo on January 22, 2009. The Rwandan Army and the Congolese Army were conducting a joint offensive against rebel militias in the eastern Congo. Nkunda was head of the National Congress for the Defense of the People (CNDP), a Congolese Tutsi militia operating primarily in the Congo's North Kivu province. The Congolese government still says it wants Rwanda to send Nkunda to the Congo for trial on war crimes charges, but a number of observers are not so sure that the Congolese government really wants to put Nkunda on trial. The Congolese government does not want to antagonize Congolese Tutsis who still think Nkunda is a hero. Nkuna's lawyers contend that the general's arrest was by Rwandan forces operating in the Congo was illegal and his detention in Rwanda is illegal. Some commentators suspect the Congo and Rwanda are working out a diplomatic deal. On January 18 the Congo's minister of information said that the Congo and Rwanda would solve the problem of extraditing and presumably trying Nkunda this year.

January 26, 2010: A key leader in a Rwandan opposition party, the United Democratic Forces (UDF), recently raised the issue of the ethnic composition of Rwanda's government. This has been a no-no since the 1994 genocide. The UDF leader, Ms. Victoire Ingabire, who is a Hutu, intends to run for president. Ms. Ingabire has been accused with inciting ethnic discontent (or, put in another way, exploiting tribal rivalries or “playing the tribal card” in Rwandan politics). The Tutsi-dominated government has made the accusation, but so have several survivors of the Tutsi genocide. Ms. Ingabire replies that the genocide was a crime but Hutus have also been victims (which is true).

January 30, 2010: The Burundian government has arrested 16 soldiers and charged them with plotting to destabilize Burundi. That means plotting to overthrow the government. The government accused the soldiers of plotting a military mutiny that would ultimately involve troops at several military posts throughout the country. Several of the soldiers arrested are assigned to a commando unit which is based in the capital, Bujumbura.

February 5, 2010: The Burundian government said that it is proceeding with courts martial against 33 Burundian soldiers accused of refusing to obey orders. The soldiers were in Somalia and were protesting pay problems. They said they had not been paid their monthly salaries and that they were due food ration supplement pay. The soldiers protests occurred in January 2009.

February 13, 2010: Burundi's defense ministry (National Defense Force) announced that it remains committed to the African Union Peacekeeping Mission in Somalia (AMISOM). Radical Somali Islamists have made threats against nations who have peacekeeping forces in Somalia. Uganda and Burundi have large troop contingents in Somalia. Burundi has approximately 2,500 soldiers in Somalia (organized in three battalion task forces). The Burundian Army has around 28,000 soldiers.

February 20, 2010: A series of grenade attacks in the Rwandan capital of Kigali killed one person and wounded approximately 30. Authorities reported three different grenade attacks, beginning late on the evening of February 19. The government has been attributing past grenade attacks to crime or personal motives – preferring that interpretation to terrorist or tribal political motives. Rwanda has new elections scheduled for August 2010. Waves of violence preceding elections is nothing new-- violent intimidation by the ruling party and opposition parties is all too common in the region. Government opponents have been targeted in past grenade attacks. One thing the government says is true: there are a lot of weapons and explosives left over from the civil war and the other wars in central Africa. Grenades are easy to acquire.

February 21, 2010: Burundian government officials are once again expressing concerns about potential violence prior to national elections. Actually, a series of elections are scheduled in the summer and the fall of 2010. Opponents claim the government is overstating the situation so it can clamp down on them, but NGOs operating in Burundi appear to agree that the peace process remains very fragile. Several political parties are organizing what they call youth wings (youth movements). Youth wing activities include physical training. If this looks like the initial stages of building a party militia, well, it very likely is.

February 23, 2010: In Rwanda, police have, over the last few days, arrested those believed responsible for the three recent hand grenade attacks. The suspects are Hutus, belonging to exiled anti-Tutsi groups based in Congo.

March 2, 2010: Police in France arrested Agathe Habyarimana. The Rwandan government has accused her of playing a key role in planning the 1994 Tutsi genocide in Rwanda. She is the widow of Juvenal Habyarimana, who was president of Rwanda in 1994. He died when his plane was shot down in April 1994. The genocide followed his assassination. Agathe Habyarimana has been living in a suburb of Paris for over a decade. She initially went into exile in Gabon and Kenya. Her arrest by France is regarded as a sign of improving relations between Rwanda and France. Rwanda had repeatedly requested her arrest and extradition. Rwanda and France broke relations in 2006 when a French court accused Rwandan President Paul Kagame of shooting down President Habyarimana's plane in 1994. Rwanda accused France of providing training for the Hutu militias that conducted the genocide. France and Rwanda restored relations in November 2009. French President Nicolas Sarkozy visited Rwanda in February 2010. During his visit he said that France had made several mistakes in judgment about the 1994 genocide.

March 14, 2010: The CNDD-FDD chose former Hutu rebel leader Leonard Nyangoma as its presidential candidate in the June election. Nyangoma is a bitter opponent of the current president, Pierre Nkurunziza, who is also a Hutu.

March 23, 2010: Burundi's security forces, especially the army, are fragile. The arrest of 18 soldiers in January on charges of plotting a coup has shaken the Burundian Army. The accused soldiers will be tried and the government is concerned that the trial may lead to further fractionalization in the military. Burundi has around 28,000 personnel in its army and a police force of 18,000.

March 26, 2010: Rwanda's supreme court said that it was not the proper forum to hear a plea for release from arrest by former General Laurent Nkunda. He has been under arrest in Rwanda since January 2009 when Rwandan troops arrested him inside the Congo. The civilian court said he should be tried in a military court.

March 31, 2010: The Rwandan government said that it supports The East African Railways project. For years Rwanda and Burundi have hoped that improved rail connections would serve as an economic boost and allow them to increase exports. Tanzania has been involved in the project since its port of Dar es Salaam would be the terminus. War and chaos, however, prevented the countries from pursuing the upgrade project, which includes laying standard gauge track and laying lines to support electrical powered locomotives. At the moment it takes about six days to ship a large cargo by rail from Dar es Salaam to the Rwandan capital of Kigali. The upgraded railway and new rail equipment would reduce the travel time significantly, to as little as eight to ten hours. Rwandan businesspeople have argued that the new railway will be the region's best anti-poverty program.

April 10, 2010: Despite a Congolese refugee repatriation agreement signed in February by the UN, Congo, and Rwanda, several tens of thousands of refugees remain in Rwanda. Rwanda wants the refugees to return but Congo's North Kivu province remains dangerous.

The Rwandan government arrested to senior army officers on charges of corruption and immoral conduct. The arrests came after the government a shake-up in the command of the Rwandan Army. Rwandan media reported that many soldiers resent a recent pay raise for the army's Presidential Brigade (an elite unit). Other military salaries were not increased.

April 20, 2010: 300 former National Liberation Force (FNL) fighters confronted police in Burundi's capital. The demonstration turned violent when the protestors began throwing stones at police and passing vehicles. Police reported they arrested eight protestors.

April 23, 2010: As the national elections near, the tension in Burundi is increasing. NGOs that were pro-Hutu rebel are describing demobilized rebel groups (many from the National Liberations Forces, FLN) as being uncontrolled. Several political parties have established youth wings that last year peace activists claimed were really the beginning of party militias. It appears that worry was justified, as reports indicate some of the youth wings are now collecting weapons. The CNDD-FDD (National Council for the Defense of Democracy-Forces for the Defense of Democracy) and the FRODEBU (Front for Democracy in Burund) parties both have youth organizations that are frequently rallying in the streets. The CNDD-FDD is the main government party. City elections will take place in May. The presidential election is scheduled for late June.

April 28, 2010: The Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) rebel group in the eastern Congo denied that it had any links to Hutu opposition leader Victorie Ingabire or any Hutu opposition group involved in upcoming elections in Rwanda.

May 11, 2010: A Rwandan court has decided to postpone once again a hearing on the status of former Congolese Tutsi rebel leader, General Luarent Nkunda. The court did confirm Nkunda's whereabouts-- he is still being held in Rwanda. Nkunda was arrested by Rwandan forces January 22, 2009 during a joint military operation conducted by Rwandan and Congolese military forces against rebel groups in the eastern Congo. Nkunda was head of the National Congress for the Defense of the People (CNDP) and aspired to becoming a national leader in the Congo. His CNDP forces had conducted a successful series of operations against the Congolese Army in north Kivu province in 2008. A lawyer for Nkunda blames his extended detention on the Rwandan Army's current chief of staff, General James Kaberebe.

May 14, 2010: Demonstrators in Bujumbura, Burundi, fought with security forces. The demonstrators were protesting the murder of an opposition activist by gunmen. The shooting occurred in early May. The protestors claim government-backed assassins committed the slaying. The murdered activist belonged to the Movement for Solidarity and Democracy.

May 24, 2010: Rwanda and Uganda have both announced that they intend to pursue closer relations. The two countries have often been at odds, at one time or another providing safe haven for the other nation's rebel groups.

May 25, 2010: Re-run time? A group of eight Burundian opposition parties is demanding that the Burundian election held on May 24 be held again – as in an entirely new election. The opposition parties claim the government cheated and are promising to challenge the results. Before the election, disaffected groups within the parties, including the so-called youth wings, threatened street violence if the elections were tainted. The big worry is that the young wings will be the seeds of a new armed guerrilla movement.

May 28, 2010: Burundi's election bureau announced that the ruling party, the National Council for the Defense of Democracy-Forces for the Defense of Democracy Party (NCDD-FDDP), had won over 60 percent of the vote in elections which were held May 24. A group of European Union election observers praised the election and said it met international standards. Voters elected representatives to local council governments throughout the country.

May 29, 2010: Fights broke out in Burundi's capital, Bujumbura, between the opposition National Liberation Forces (FNL) and government security forces. Around 50 protestors were arrested. The FNL claims this past week's elections were fraudulent. Street battles and opposition demands for a new election are not unique to Burundi. The same thing occurred in Sudan in April and in Ethiopia this month. Even comparatively stable Kenya had a violent post-election period after its 2007 national elections. Many Africans think elections are just a sham, run on behalf of the governing party. That noted, the idea of democracy is powerful, and Burundi is an example of that. Observers estimated that around 90 percent of Burundi's 3.5 million eligible voters cast ballots in the election. Ninety percent. Huge. People want the right to vote; they also want it to mean something.

June 1, 2010: A potential Hutu presidential candidate in Rwanda is claiming repression of the Hutu opposition by the predominantly Tutsi-led government. Victorie Ingabire is currently under detention herself. She was arrested in late April and charged with the crime of promoting a genocidal ideology. Ingabire countered the charges by saying she is only exercising her right to speak freely. Ingabire leads the United Democratic Forces (FDU) party. The government claims that Ingabire wants to reignite ethnic tensions between the Hutu and Tutsi. Presidential elections are scheduled for August 2010.

June 13, 2010: The charges of election fraud in the May 24th local elections continue to trouble Burundi. An opposition coalition group is demanding that the elections be held again. The group is called the Alliance of Democrats for Change (ADC). The big worry is that the electoral fraud accusations could escalate into violence and reignite the civil war. International election observers have generally viewed the local elections as fair, with only minor problems. In central Africa, that has to count as a good election. The trouble is the losers disagree and some of the losers were, until recently, armed guerrillas.

June 21, 2010: Gunmen in Sudan's Darfur region attacked a group of Rwandan peacekeepers who are serving with the UN-African Union UNAMID peacekeeping force. Three Rwandan soldiers were killed and one wounded. The attack took place in the village of Nertiti (West Darfur, Jebel Marra region). The peacekeepers were guarding a developmental aid project. UNAMID said three of the attackers died in the firefight.

June 22, 2010: Hand grenades were thrown into a bar in the capital of Burundi, Bujumbura, killing two and wounding eight. It was the second major hand grenade attack in the capital in the last five days.

June 29, 2010: The Ugandan Army claimed that Rwanda is building up its forces along the Ugandan-Rwandan border. Rwanda denied the claim.

July 1, 2010: Burundi's electoral board declared that the only candidate in the June 28 presidential election won. President Pierre Nkurunziza received over 90 percent of the votes. The election had a 77 percent voter turnout.

July 1, 2010: Rwandan, Burundi, Kenya, Tanzania, and Uganda announced that the East African Community (which was a customs union) is now a common market promoting free trade among the members. The group plans to create a monetary union in 2012 and being using a common currency by sometime in 2015. Combined the five countries have around 130 million people. The new EAC has a legal as well as economic angle. The five countries are discussing ways to create common laws to make contracting and transportation easier. Eventually EAC citizens will be able to travel from country to country without visas or passports-- very similar to the European Union.

July 3, 2010: Opposition leaders in Burundi describe the security situation in their country as rapidly deteriorating in the wake of claimed massive election fraud in May. They claim the government is clamping down on opposition activity. The government responds by saying that in June Burundi suffered around 60 grenade attacks, which wounded between 50 and 60 people. Many of the grenade attacks were directed at the ruling National Council for the Defense of Democracy-Forces For Defense of Democracy (CNDD-FDD) party's offices.

Two members of the CNDD-FDD were slain in the grenade attacks. One opposition politician was killed.

July 12, 2010: Burundi placed its military on alert following terror attacks in Uganda. The attacks were made by the Somalia-based Al Shbab Islamist terror group. Burundi, like Uganda, has troops serving with African Union peace keeping forces in Somalia.

July 15, 2010: Rwandan opposition continues to complain that it is being targeted by the government. The opposition points to a number of violent incidents over the last six months. The latest is the death of Democratic Green Party activist Andre Kagwa Rwisereka. Rwandan police claim he was killed in a robbery attempt. That's not the way the Democratic Greens see it. In June a former senior officer in the Rwandan Army was shot in South Africa. Lieutenant General Faustin Kayumba Nyamwasa is on the outs with his former boss, Rwandan president Paul Kagame. Nyamwasa's supporters say the shooting was an assassination attempt ordered by the government. The government calls the charge a lie.

July 30, 2010: The ruling CNDD-FDD party in Burundi won the senatorial elections which, as with other elections, opposition parties have boycotted (because they believe the voting is rigged.) This does not bode well for avoiding the resumption of rebel activity.

August 8, 2010: President Paul Kigame won the Rwandan presidential election with 93 percent of the vote. This was about what he got in the last election (2003). While accused of harassing other candidates and manipulating the entire elector process, Kigame is widely popular for the success of his economic policies, and for the fact that he led the Tutsi exile army that invaded from Uganda in 1994, ended the genocide of Tutsis and imposed peace. Despite Kigame's success, there are several Hutu, and Tutsi, opposition groups. Some are just pushing to get more for a particular tribe, but many want more political freedom. Kigame says that eventually that will happen, but the economy comes first. Most Rwandans agree with that, partly because the deadly ethnic animosities still exist, and could again break out in genocidal rage.

August 11, 2010: Two grenades were thrown into a bus station in the Rwandan capital, killing two and wounding five.

August 19, 2010: Rwandan police say they have rounded up a gang responsible for grenade attacks in the capital.

August 22, 2010: Uganda, Guinea and Burundi have pledged an additional 2,000 troops for the Somali peacekeeping mission. This would bring the total strength of the force to 8,000. New rules of engagement (ROE) would allow the peacekeepers to be more aggressive against the Islamic radical militias causing most of the mayhem there. The new troops and ROE are not expected to be in place until early next year.

In Burundi, hundreds of thousands of refugees have returned, but many have found all the good land taken. This has left many of the returned families jobless and destitute. To make matters worse, a recent corruption survey found Burundi the most corrupt nation in the region, with neighboring Rwanda being one of the least corrupt.

The situation was a little different down south. After 1959, the Tutsi in Burundi took the hint and were successful in repressing the Hutu rebellion that occurred in 1965. With 14 percent of the Burundi population Tutsi (contrasted with only nine percent in Rwanda), the Tutsi were numerous, and savage, enough to hold onto their power. Periodic massacres of the Hutu kept that majority people out of power for years. But the ballot, and Hutu numbers, eventually prevailed. By the 1980s, Hutus occupied most senior government positions. But the Hutu-Tutsi animosity remained, and was intensified by the mass murder that took place in neighboring Rwanda in 1994. The Rwanda killings were organized by the Hutu dominated Rwanda government, and the Tutsi in Burundi feared the same thing might happen to them. The Burundi Hutu saw what happened in Rwanda and were not encouraged. The fighting in Burundi got worse from 1994 through 2000, with as many as 100,000 people dying in the fighting or from exposure. Over the last decade, peace deals have been worked out with all the Hutu rebel factions, and Burundi has avoided the large scale bloodshed found in Rwanda and eastern Congo.

In response to this sort of thing, Rwanda is depending more on China (which doesn't care about local history much) for military equipment and economic development. This is going on throughout Africa, and China sees the UN war crimes investigators as a valuable, if unwitting, ally.

In the 1500's the Tutsi (plural- Watutsi) moved south from their original home in the Sahel. They were tough warriors and successful invaders. With a different complexion (an important point for the Tutsi) and standing (on average) several inches (5-10 cm) taller than the local Hutu, it did not take long for the Tutsi to take over and install their own brand of Apartheid. The area eventually evolved into two Tutsi ruled empires, each roughly covering the territory of modern Burundi and Rwanda. In 1899 the Germans moved in and made both areas colonies. The British replaced the Germans in 1916 and passed the area over to the Belgians in the 1920's. It was assumed that, when the areas became independent nations, the Hutu (over 80 percent of the population) would run the countries. The more aggressive and warlike Tutsi had other ideas, and the Hutu knew it. In 1959 the Hutu of Rwanda rose up against the Tutsi (who held most positions of local power), slaughtered thousands of them and drove several hundred thousand into exile (mainly in Uganda). Several thousand of these exiles formed an army and attempted a comeback in 1990. This comeback waxed and waned until the Hutu of Rwanda struck back in 1994, slaughtering over 800,000 people (Tutsi and Hutu "sympathizers") in a three month period. The Tutsi rebels in the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF), better organized and trained than the Hutu dominated Rwandan army, took control of the government. The Hutu who led the genocide (many of them in the Interahamwe movement) fled to refugee camps in Congo and other neighboring countries. The Tutsi-led Rwandan government continued to fight a low-level battle with the Hutu rebel organizations (eg, Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda, FDLR), with eastern Congo providing the battleground. Many of the Hutu rebel groups had once served in the Hutu-led regime's Armed Forces of Rwanda (FAR, Forces Armées Rwandaises, the Hutu-dominated Rwandan army). Rwanda also ran a "national reconciliation program" to attempt to resolve the ethnic conflict. Many Hutu went to jail for murder, but a far greater number were admonished and shamed --often using tribal rituals as well as legal proceedings – and then allowed to return to their homes. Rwanda has also begun sending soldiers to serve in African Union peacekeeping operations. But now that the UN has decided to accuse Rwanda of war crimes, Rwanda will fight back, full of righteous indignation at yet another attack by arrogant Western imperialists.

August 30, 2010: The UN leaked a draft of a report on atrocities in eastern Congo. The report details the mass murders committed by Rwandan Tutsi troops, who entered the country in 1994, in pursuit of millions of Hutus who had fled Rwanda after they murdered a million Tutsis. That led to Tutsi exile groups in Ugandan entering Rwanda and defeating the Hutu militias that did the killings. It's long been known that the Tutsis slaughtered thousands (perhaps hundreds of thousands) of Hutus in the Congo. The release of this UN document has angered the Tutsi dominated government of Rwanda, which now threatens to withdraw their peacekeepers from UN sponsored operations. The Tutsi despise the UN because the international community stood by while the Hutus slaughtered Tutsis in 1994. This massacre was, however, part of a centuries old battle between Hutu farmers, and Tutsi herders who have been moving into the area now occupied by Rwanda, Burundi and parts of eastern Congo. All these areas lie in the fertile highlands surrounding Lake Victoria. All have large ethnic Hutu populations and significant ethnic Tutsi minorities.

October 31, 2010: Rwanda and China have agreed to increase military cooperation. China will help Rwanda construct a floating dock to help support military operations in central Africa's Great Lakes region.

November 6, 2010: The Congolese military reported that two Congolese civilians were killed by suspected members of the Burundian FNL in the town of Kiliba. The incident occurred in South Kivu province near the Burundi border as the rebels sought to free two men arrested by the Congolese Army.

November 24, 2010: Where is former Congolese Tutsi rebel general Laurent Nkunda? He is still not in jail in the Congo. The Congolese government recently reminded Rwanda that it had promised that Nkunda would face trial in the Congo. However, he continues to remain in detention in Rwanda. Rwandan political opposition leaders say that Nkunda will not be released because of what he may say about the Rwandan government's involvement in the eastern Congo.

November 30, 2010: Opposition political parties in Burundi have asked the government to end what they call official and unofficial attempts to suppress them. The opposition groups have reorganized their umbrella group, the Democratic Alliance for Change. The appeal comes amid reports that former Burundi Hutu guerrillas now in the eastern Congo are seeking weapons and new recruits.

December 3, 2010: The UN Security Council froze the financial assets of three key leaders in the Rwandan Hutu rebel organization, the FDLR (Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda), along with travel bans. The FDLR is involved in the sale of minerals illegally mined in the eastern Congo. FDLR commanders are also involved in weapons smuggling, and not just to FDLR militias.

December 8, 2010: The Burundi government believes that reports of Burundi rebels organizing new guerrilla forces in the eastern Congo have been exaggerated. The UN believes that a faction of the National Liberation Front (FNL) had been recruiting fighters in the eastern Congo. The obvious concern is that the FNL faction would launch a new civil war in Burundi. The FNL is a political party in Burundi, but there are major fissures in FNL leadership. One of the alleged rebel faction leaders, Agathon Rwasa, recently said he and his group had renounced war. However, Rwasa's name has cropped up in the reports of rebel activity in eastern Congo. Rwasa left Burundi this past summer after accusing the government of rigging elections. There is suspicion that 400 FNL fighters are operating from a base camp in the Congo (South Kivu province) near the Burundi border.

December 10, 2010: The Rwandan government released an new archive documenting the 1994 genocide. The archive includes extensive video footage as well as witness statements.

December 11, 2010: Instructors from Great Britain have been teaching military English at the Rwandan Military Academy, where 61 soldiers recently completed the one-month long course. The English language skills are useful in peacekeeping operations, particularly in Darfur where Rwandan troops serve with UNAMID. The Rwandan government has also stated that over the long term it believes Rwanda's economic and political future lies with its east African neighbors Uganda and Kenya, nations which were once British colonies and which use English as a common language.

December 14, 2010: American trainers from Combined Joint Task Force-Horn of Africa (CJTFHOA) have been conducting a five-week long training course for the Burundian Army (Burundian National Defense Force, BNDF). The course is aimed at battalion commanders and staff officers who will lead peacekeeping operations. The course includes familiarization with NATO doctrine and wargaming methods to examine potential courses of action.

December 23, 2010: Somalia's al Shabaab militant Islamist rebels said that they would launch more attacks on both Burundi and Uganda. Al Shabaab claims it is retaliating since Burundi and Uganda supply troops for the African Union's peacekeeping operation in Somalia.

January 1, 2011: A grenade attack in Bujumbura (Burundi's capital) killed three people. Investigators called the attack indiscriminate and was intended to disrupt New Year's celebrations. Everyone in Burundi is on edge. While local rebels have used grenade attacks in the past, Somalia's militant Islamist group Al Shabaab has threatened Burundi with terror attacks. Burundi has peacekeeping forces in Somalia. Burundi increased internal security during the Christmas and New Year's holiday season.

January 6, 2011: Several former officers in the notorious Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) militia have been surrendering over the last six weeks. Those who surrendered to Congolese forces have been returned to Rwanda. The Rwandan government has been telling FDLR members who were not involved in the 1994 genocide that they will be well treated if they turn themselves in voluntarily. Former FDLR members have passed the word on to fighters still in the field that the government is honoring that commitment. The government says that since 2009 around 2,270 former FDLR fighters have returned to Rwanda.

January 10, 2011: Former Congolese Tutsi rebel leader Laurent Nkunda had another court hearing in Rwanda cancelled. The Congo has been trying to extradite him so that he can be tried for crimes committed by him and his militia forces in the eastern Congo. The word is that Rwanda does not really want to give Nkunda to the Congo, though they promised to do so when Rwandan forces arrested him in January 2009, as Rwandan and Congolese forces conducted a combined anti-militia operation in the Congo.

January 12, 2011: US Africa Command's (AFRICOM) Combined Joint Task Force- Horn of Africa (CJTF-HOA) hosted a military logistics conference for several East African countries. Both Burundi and Rwanda had officers at the seminar. Rwanda is trying to professionalize its forces and improving logistics is an absolute requirement in order to achieve that goal. Only South Africa and Nigeria (and perhaps Angola) have any real national logistics capabilities in sub-Saharan Africa (that can extend their military's reach beyond an immediate national border). For example, Uganda has (with U.S. help) conducted operations in the Central African Republic.

January 17, 2011: The Rwandan government has jailed four former officials, including Lieutenant General Faustin Nyamwasa (who was wounded in an attempted assassination in June 2010 in South Africa). The four men were convicted of threatening state security. In the case of Nyamwasa he was allegedly linked to a series of grenade attacks in Rwanda. In response to this, opposition politicians accused the government of attempting to suppress dissent and impose a dictatorship.

February 10, 2011: Two Rwandan journalists have been sentenced to prison for what the government calls stirring ethnic tensions. Rwandan is split between ethnic Hutus and ethnic Tutsis. The division has had terrible consequences?the worst example being the Tutsi genocide of 1994. The journalists' jail terms, however, appear to be ridiculous. One journalist has been sentenced to 17 years in jail. The journalists wrote that a lot of people are not pleased with the government of President Paul Kagame. That's true. Human rights advocates are now accusing Kagame of using the ethnic tension allegation as a way to silence his critics. That's true, too.

February 14, 2011: The Burundian government reported that some fifty gunmen assaulted a police headquarters ten kilometers south of the capital, and the fighting lasted several hours. One attacker was killed and his body was recovered and found to be wearing a military-style uniform. This suggests a guerrilla attack. However, the government attributed the attack to armed bandits. Maybe, maybe not. For months Burundi has been rife with rumors of a National Liberation Forces (FNL) revival. The FNL is a Hutu liberation group. Several FNL factions have joined the peace process, but the rumor mill says hard core FNL factions have returned to the bush. The government report said that a house that was burned in the attack was owned by a senior FNL leader. That would support the bandit theory. It would also support a scenario where FNL radicals wanted to show their displeasure with other FNL factions. It also suggests –if you want to consider a conspiracy theory?a scenario where the government wants to incite infighting within the FNL. Far out? Not in Burundi. It’s happened before.

February 16, 2011: The chief of staff of the British Army visited Rwanda to discuss increasing defense cooperation with Rwanda. Great Britain currently provides the Rwandan military with training support and logistical support.

February 24, 2011: China and Rwanda are discussing improving relations. One area of closer cooperation under consideration is military-to-military cooperation. Both China and Rwanda have troops in peacekeeping operations in Sudan. China has an enormous economic interest in retaining access to Africa's natural resources. The Rwandan Army is regarded as a decent force, especially for a sub-Saharan African nation that isn't named Ethiopia, Nigeria, South Africa, or Angola. The Minister of Defense, James Kabarebe, and the new Chinese envoy, Shu Zhan, yesterday explored ways of enhancing military cooperation between the two countries' armed forces. The Rwandan government recently acknowledge that China trains 30 Rwandan soldiers every year in China.

February 27, 2011: The Rwandan Army (RDF, Rwandan Defense Force) announced that it plans to have a mobile field hospital ready for deployment by 2011. The field hospital would support peacekeeping operations.

March 7, 2011: Four leaders of the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) will face trial in Germany in May. The militia commanders are charged with war crimes and crimes against humanity. These crimes were committed in the Congo. The FDLR is a militia that has roots in the Rwandan Hutu Interahamwe radical group that was involved in the 1994 genocide.

March 10, 2011: Another 1,200 Burundian peacekeepers have arrived in Somalia.

March 14, 2011: Burundi currently has 3,500 soldiers deployed with the African Union peacekeeping force in Somalia (AMISOM). This is an extraordinarily large force for a nation as small as Burundi. However, the peacekeepers get paid. For Burundi the upside is obvious: troops gaining military experience and getting paid for it. The downside is also obvious. Burundi, like Uganda (which has 4,500 soldiers in Somalia), is a target of the Somali radical Islamist organization, Al Shabaab. There have been several hundred Burundian casualties in Somalia so far.

March 14, 2011: The Rwandan government has launched another diplomatic offensive against the French investigation into the shooting down of Rwandan president Juvenal Habyarimana's airplane on April 6, 1994. In 2006 a French judge claimed that forces loyal to current Rwandan president Paul Kagame were involved in the attack on the aircraft.

March 24, 2011: Rwandan media report that the number of people who do not believe the 1994 genocide occurred on the scale it did is increasing. There are two terms in play: genocide doubters and genocide deniers. One source blames the Internet for spreading stories that the genocide was exaggerated. Analysts point out that the websites are recycling claims made by a number of radical Hutu organizations in the mid to late 1990s. However, the mass grave sites confirmed in Rwanda provided grisly evidence of the size and scope of the murders. If it sounds a little bit like the rise in the number of Holocaust deniers as memories of World War Two fade, well, it is.

March 27, 2011: Burundi announced that it has deployed 1,000 of the additional 2,000 soldiers the country has promised to commit to the African Union peacekeeping force in Somalia (AMISOM).

April 3, 2011: France announced that it had arrested a Rwandan fugitive who is charged with crimes connected to the Rwandan genocide of 1994.

April 6, 2011: Today is the 17th anniversary of the beginning of the Rwandan genocide. On April 6, 1994, Rwandan president Juvénal Habyarimana and Burundi's president Cyprian Ntayamira died when their plane was shot down. Over the next two and a half months around 800,000 Rwandans (most of them Tutsis) would be murdered.

April 7, 2011: In ceremonies remembering 17th anniversary of the Rwandan genocide, a UN official speaking at ceremonies in Kigali asked east and central African nations to continue to help bring perpetrators to justice.

April 10, 2011: Grenades have been the terror weapon of choice in Burundi and Rwanda. As Burundi's civil war slowly ground to a halt, the number of grenade attacks on civilian targets and security targets (especially police stations) began to climb. Over the past three years (2008-2011) Rwanda has gone through cycles of grenade attacks. Typically a bar or bus or open area with people (small market) are the targets. Opposition politicians in Rwanda have suggested that on at least one occasion the grenade attack was sponsored by the government. The truth is, no one is quite sure and those who know keep quiet. Beginning in late February 2011, however, the Rwandan government has been arresting a number of people it claims are involved in grenade smuggling for the purpose of conducting terror attacks and committing other crimes. One of the men arrested operated out of Burundi. The common element in all of the arrests (about three dozen so far) has been the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) militia. The government has also seized over 1000 grenades (primarily US-type M26 grenades and Russian F1 grenades). The FDLR militia primarily operates out of the Congo (North and South Kivu provinces), but has connections to several Hutu extremist organizations. That's logical – the FDLR was once the Army for the Liberation of Rwanda (ALIR), which was composed of Hutu Interahamwe radicals involved in the 1994 genocide. Around 2000, the ALIR combined with several other extremists factions to become the FDLR. In early March the smuggler with the Burundi connections was arrested while trying to smuggle two grenades into Rwanda's capital, Kigali. There is an interesting political and information warfare angle to the grenade terror campaign. In response to the cycle of attacks in 2008, the government began a policy of putting Rwandan soldiers on the streets. Well, soldiers were already conducting some patrols, but the government wanted to increase visible presence to deter grenade attacks. Opposition politicians accused the government of imposing a police state. There were also stories going around that the military was involved in the attacks. Recently, a Rwandan Army spokesman said that investigations are continuing and military intelligence is involved in the investigations. That's because the government regards the FDLR as a military threat. And it is.

May 4, 2011: The trial of two former FDLR commanders has begun in Germany. Both leaders, Ignace Murwanashyaka and Straton Musoni , face numerous charges of war crimes and crimes against humanity. German prosecutors have gathered evidence in the eastern Congo against both men. The men were arrested in 2009. Their prosecutions may lead to further arrests of members of the FDLR living in Europe.

May 13, 2011: Rwandan police detained six people on charges of belonging to an armed group that is based in the eastern Congo. That is usually bureaucratese for members of the FDLR (Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda) but there are other radical factions operating out of the Congo. The government statement suggested the people arrested were involved in a plot to commit terrorist acts inside Rwanda.

May 17, 2011: The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) sentenced a former Rwandan Army senior general to 30 years in prison. He was convicted on being involved in the 1994 genocide that killed 800,000 Rwandan Tutsis and moderate Hutus.

May 23, 2011: Many claim that the stage is being set for a new civil war in Burundi. Opposition parties accuse the government of acting increasingly arbitrary and the police have cracked down on opposition parties. The Arusha Peace Accord (signed in August 2000) is in danger of unraveling.

May 29, 2011: Gunmen in Burundi murdered four people and wounded three others when the attackers opened fire on a soccer game. Many of the fans at the match were members of Burundi’s majority political party. Residents told officials that one of the attackers sang a song identified with the Hutu FNL (National Liberation Forces) guerrilla group.

June 2, 2011: Soldiers serving with Burundi's peacekeeping force in Somalia are claiming they have not been paid for nearly five months. Collectively the Burundian soldiers (around 4000) are owed $20 million. The government claims that the money, disbursed by the African Union, is in the government's national bank. The money goes directly into an individual soldier's bank account and his family has access to the account. However, several soldiers claim that isn't true. The soldiers believe someone in the government has stolen the money.

June 5, 2011: The government of Belgium is warning Burundi that it may reduce aid if Burundi does not fight internal corruption. Belgium is also concerned about increasing violence in Burundi and reports of police torture. Transparency International ranked Burundi as east Africa's most corrupt nation in 2010.

June 15, 2011: In mid-May the CNDD-FDD said that it would not negotiate with opposition party leaders about problems arising from the 2010 elections. However, since the beginning of June, there have been rumors that negotiations would soon start. However, the president, Pierre Nkurunziza, and other governing party officials are denying that negotiations are taking place. Opposition party members say the government's refusal to listen to their concerns could lead to violence and possibly a new rebellion.

June 22, 2011: Armed men wearing police uniforms launched several attacks in Burundi. In one attack they attacked a small bus in northwestern Burundi, near the town of Buganda. The attackers robbed the passengers then forced several of them to lie on the ground. The attackers then poured gasoline on the passengers and set them on fire. Two people died and two people were injured. Another group of these attackers assaulted a police station in the capital, and killed a policeman. One attacker died in the firefight. Another attack occurred in eastern Burundi (Ruyigi province) where attackers assassinated a tribal chief who belonged to the National Council for the Defense of Democracy–Forces for the Defense of Democracy (CNDD-FDD, the governing party).

June 23, 2011: Rwandan announced on June 22 that it had detained several more suspects on charges of belonging to a terrorist group, in addition to the six arrested in early May. The suspects revealed that they receive support from two organizations, the Rwanda National Congress (RNC) and Convention National des Republicains (CNR). The suspects said they had been sent into Rwanda to recruit more volunteers to carry out attacks.

June 25, 2011: A bus in southern Burundi (Bururi province) was ambushed by unidentified gunmen.

June 27, 2011: The Burundian government is blaming a series of attacks on towns, vehicles, and sports events on bandits. The people, however, are not buying it. Since the last week of May several spectacular terror attacks have occurred that have gotten regional headlines and scared a lot of people. Media coverage and public fear are the aims of terror attacks. The general opinion in Burundi is that a National Liberation Forces (FNL) faction is launching the attacks and trying to incite a new Hutu insurgency. Opposition political leaders, however, claim the government has cracked down on its political opponents so hard that anti-government violence is inevitable.

July 12, 2011: A grenade attack in the town of Kamembe (southwestern Rwanda, near the Congo border) injured 21 people. Opposition politicians accuse the government of undermining the democratic process and repressing minority Hutus.

July 20, 2011: The Burundian Army engaged a group of gunmen who ambushed two vehicles in western Burundi, near the Congo border. The government reported that two Burundian Army soldiers, a policeman, and five gunmen died in the firefight.

August 10, 2011: A Burundian government report noted that land disputes are increasing. Some of the disputes are due to refugees returning to their former village areas.

August 26, 2011: The Rwandan government asked the African Union (AU) to recognize Libya's rebel movement, the Transitional National Council (TNC). The government said that dictator Muammar Gadhafi is no longer capable of running the country. Rwanda is recognizing the TNC as the official Libyan government.

August 29, 2011: Rwandan officials and UN observers in the Congo now estimate the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR, a Hutu extremist militia operating in the Congo) now has approximately 2,500 fighters. It had 6,500 in 2008. The UN credits its demobilization and reintegration program which has encouraged FDLR defections. Rwanda also operates a demobilization and reintegration camp in its territory.

September 2, 2011: Five former FNL rebels are seeking asylum. They claim they have been targeted for death by government assassins.

September 6, 2011: Burundian police reported they killed two gunmen in a heavy firefight that broke out in the capital, Bujumbura. One of the gunmen turned out to be a former security guard of an FNL leader, Agathom Rwasa, who is allegedly in hiding in the Congo.

September 7, 2011: A Burundian human rights group claimed that the government is sponsoring death squads which are attacking political opponents.

September 9, 2011: Rwanda and France are making diplomatic efforts to improve ties. The presidents met in Paris to discuss mutual relations. Rwandan president Paul Kagame has accused the French of favoring the Hutus who committed the 1994 genocide. Kagame had long demanded an apology. It appears Kagame has dropped that demand. France denied Kagame's accusation. French investigators have accused Kagame of being involved in the shooting down of the airplane carrying Rwanda's president in 1994. Kagame denies that accusation.

September 19, 2011: In a terror attack vaguely reminiscent of the Mexican drug cartel assault on a Monterrey, Mexico casino, Burundian gunmen dressed as policemen attacked a bar in the town of Gatumba (about 15 kilometers west of the capital, Bujumbura). At least three-dozen people were slain. The gunmen pushed people in the bar to the floor and then shot them, one by one. Witnesses said the attackers also carried knives (likely machetes). The attack was designed to be an outrage and to exacerbate tensions in the country. The bar was the favorite local watering hole for supporters of the governing National Council for the Defense of Democracy-Forces for the Defense of Democracy (CNDD-FDD). Though no political group took credit for the attack, the big worry is that radical Hutus in the FNL are responsible for the attack.

September 20, 2011: The U.S. State Department urged the Burundian government to quickly bring the perpetrators of the massacre in Gatumba to justice. America is worried that the attack could start another civil war.

September 25, 2011: Fear of renewed civil war is gripping Burundi. In the wake of an attack that left nearly 40 people dead, the government and several opposition groups acknowledge the peace deal is in trouble. Opposition politicians complain that attacks on their constituents have increased since January. The government points to increased agitation and violent threats by former Forces for National Liberation (FNL) guerrillas. Since the FNL signed a truce in 2005, the largest political parties have hedged their bets. The youth groups associated with the parties are stacked with militants. The youth groups could easily become armed militias, and everyone knows it. Human rights organizations claim that approximately 125 members of the opposition were slain during the May-August time frame. Opposition parties call the murder extra-judicial killings.

October 15, 2011: Opposition parties in Burundi continue to accuse the government of permitting a secret campaign to kill their party members.

They point to a human rights report of September 2011 that alleges 125 opposition party members were slain in Burundi during the summer. The government rejects the accusations. Who is committing the murders?
That's tough to say. The major political parties have their own militias.
Some of the militia groups operate with very little control. They are essentially gangs.

October 31, 2011: Where is General Laurent Nkunda? The Rwandan government says he is still in Rwanda and in jail. However, Rwanda and Congo are undergoing yet another diplomatic reconciliation. The Congolese government says it still wants to try him for war crimes. Rwandan media indicate the government may return Nkunda to the Congo. Nkunda led the National Congress for Defense of the People (CNDP) rebel group in the Congo. It was regarded as a Congolese Tutsi militia.

November 7, 2011: Rwanda is urging its neighbors to cooperate in regional security training exercises. Rwanda has sponsored a series of East African command post exercises. Who are the enemies Rwanda identified as regional threats? Uganda's Lord's Resistance Army, Somalia's Al Shabaab Islamic terrorist group, and Rwanda's own Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) Hutu militia group received prominent mention. The exercises are a good idea, but the initiative also has a diplomatic aim. Many sub-Saharan African governments have often looked the other way (and sometimes assisted) when rebel organizations threatening neighboring countries have established bases in their territory. Rwanda wants to end that game.

November 15, 2011: Rwanda confirmed that it will deploy five helicopters to Sudan's Darfur region in the first months of 2012. The UNAMID African Union-UN peacekeeping force has been desperately short of helicopters ever since it deployed. Rwanda began a special training program this year to prepare what amounts to a helicopter transport company for deployment. The unit has 140 personnel (pilots, maintenance techs, logistics support).

November 17, 2011: New Cassava Disease Alarms Rwandese Farmers'

A new cassava disease that has been reported in the Eastern Africa region is already affecting Rwandan farmers, leading to a reduction in cassava and potatoes output in the country. Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO) yesterday reported that Cassava Brown Streak Disease (CBSD) is on the verge of becoming an epidemic, calling for an urgent increase in funding, research, training, surveillance and other measures to help farmers and breeders. According to research, the virus is prevalent in a large part of East Africa, especially in the Great Lakes Region, putting a crucial source of food and income at risk, according to FAO. Gervais Ndashaka, a cassava expert at the Rwanda Agricultural Board (RAB), confirmed to The New Times that, though the disease had first been reported in various regional countries like Tanzania, Kenya and Uganda, it was finally spotted in part of the Eastern Province. "We have this disease and it has affected parts of Bugesera and Nyagatare districts and is spreading to other areas of the country. Where a farm is affected, production rate reduces by at least 20 percent," he said. He revealed that the virus was first detected in 2009, but at a small scale, noting that it has now spread, adding that it might cause food insecurity if it is not contained. Ndashaka further mentioned that they had embarked on sensitisation campaigns to inform all farmers about the virus as well as introduction of new types of resistant cassava varieties to aid in wiping out the disease. Some of the symptoms of the virus are the yellowing of cassava leaves from the normal green colour. A surveillance analysis conducted by the National Agricultural Research Institute in 2010 showed a 15.7 percent rate of infection on local varieties and 36.9 percent in improved species. According to Jan Helsen, head of FAO's European Union-funded Regional Cassava Initiative in Eastern and Central Africa, there was need to invest in research to ascertain the real information concerning the disease. "None of the cassava varieties currently being distributed to farmers seem to be tolerant to the effects of CBSD. We urgently need to get information on the extent and severity of the outbreak, and to support investments to identify disease-tolerant varieties and coping strategies for farmers," he is quoted in a statement as saying. Reports indicate that one of the challenges facing those trying to stem the spread of CBSD is its timely detection thus causing its continued spread. Cassava accounts for as much as a third of the total calorie intake for people in countries such as Burundi, Rwanda, Uganda and DRC.

November 22, 2011: The Burundian government claimed that police and army units killed 18 bandits (term used) in a raid in the Cankuzo area (eastern Burundi). The police and military operation was part of an increased security presence after a bandit group (described in some reports as a rebel group) attacked a bar in a town near Bujumbura and killed 36 people execution-style.

November 29, 2011: South Africa, after indicating otherwise, refused a request from Rwanda to extradite former Rwandan general Faustin Kayumba Nyamwasa. The Rwandan government has accused Nyamwasa of being involved in several terror attacks (specifically grenade attacks) in Rwanda in 2010. He is also accused of letting his soldiers kill several hundred Hutu civilian refugees in the Congo. Nyamwasa denies the allegations and says Rwandan president Paul Kagame is lying. Nyamwasa wants refugee or asylum status in South Africa. Some opposition members believe Nyamwasa is a potential rival of Kagame.

December 2, 2011: Burundi was declared completely free of landmines. This comes after seven years of vigorous mine clearing effort, and three years ahead of schedule.

December 4, 2011: Burundi's internal political situation continues to deteriorate. There is growing evidence that the government is using death squads (operated by the police and party militias) to go after members of opposition political parties. Now the charge is more explicit: that government's extra-judicial killers are systematically killing former National Liberation Forces (FNL) guerrillas. One group claims 300 people have been murdered and that the former rebel fighters who have been slain had demobilized (i.e., met the peace accord criteria). However, there have been numerous violent attacks by factions claiming to be associated with the FNL. The government claims that many former FNL fighters have returned to the jungle with the intention to start a new civil war. (See report of October 15.)

January 4, 2012: Two people were killed and 16 were wounded in a grenade attack in Kigali, Rwanda. The government and the Rwanda National Congress opposition party both condemned the attacks.

January 13, 2012: Rwandan authorities reported that 22 people have been convicted of conducting grenade attacks in Rwanda since 2008.

January 18, 2012: Rwanda suspended then arrested four senior military officers. The officers are under investigation for being involved in the illegal sale or smuggling of Congolese minerals (conflict minerals). International investigators have claimed for years that Ugandan and Rwandan officers have either participated in smuggling Congolese operations or turned a blind eye to them. One of the men arrested was a senior intelligence officer, General Richard Rutatina. A division commander and a senior intelligence colonel were also arrested. Last year the Rwandan government and the Congo agreed to crack down on mineral smuggling. These arrests indicate that Rwanda is doing so.

January 24, 2012: Tanzania released Burundian opposition leader Alexis Sinduhije from custody. The Burundian government had asked Tanaznia to arrest him in early January (for extradition to Burundi) on accusations of supporting a renewed rebellion by the FNL. Tanzania sent Sinduhije to Uganda. Sinduhije leads the Movement for Solidarity and Development (MSD) opposition group.

January 28, 2012: A Burundian court convicted 16 people of participating in the fateful September 2011, terror attack on a bar in a town near Bujumbura.

That attack left 36 people dead. Seven of the people convicted received life sentences. The government also indicated that it believes former National Liberation Forces (FNL) leader Agathon Rwasa was involved in the attack. Rwasa is currently in hiding.

February 6, 2012: The Rwandan government claimed that the country's poverty rate had dropped to 45 percent from 57 percent in 2007. If true, this is a major achievement. Rwanda's population is around 11 million.

February 8, 2012: Burundi arrested Faustin Ndikumana the leader of PARCEM, an anti-corruption group that had recently accused several judges of seeking bribes.

February 15, 2012: Rwanda has signed on with a US-backed strategy to defeat the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) militia. The FDLR still operates in the eastern Congo (North and South Kivu provinces). The UN Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo (MONUSCO) also supports the joint effort to cut FDLR finances, smuggling operations, and attacks. The US and UN want to try to create a cooperative security arrangement to defeat the FDLR, one that is similar to the multi-lateral cooperative agreement Uganda and the US worked out to fight the Lord's Resistance Army.

February 20, 2012: Burundi has earned political respect for its participation in the African Union's peacekeeping mission in Somalia (AMISOM). Burundi currently deploys 4,400 soldiers in Somalia. However, Burundi's human rights record remains miserable and the European Union is once again criticizing Burundi for this bad behavior. EU diplomats are calling the continued string of killings extrajudicial murders, which of course implies the government is involved. The UN reported that 57 extrajudicial murders or murders that rated as highly suspicious occurred in 2011. That's fewer than some human rights groups claimed (300, in Fall 2011).

February 20, 2012: The Rwandan government claimed that the country's poverty rate had dropped to 45% from 57% in 2007. That announcement led to several independent attempts that tried to determine if it was true, and if so, why. Even if the statistics are rough (and they are) the fact is that Rwanda has made significant economic strides in the last ten years. A decade ago the government decided to focus very seriously on bottom-up economic development. As Transparency International (the premier anti-corruption non-governmental organization) noted, Rwanda began a serious effort to end corruption. If an official took a bribe, the official was prosecuted. The government also initiated reforms that made it easy for entrepreneurs to start businesses and for small businesses to grow. The Rwandan formula followed several ideas espoused by Hernando de Soto Polar, the Peruvian economist (who concluded that property rights and law and order were the keys to economic growth).

The government gave farmers solid title to the land. The government's critics, foreign and domestic (and there are many of them), point out that President Paul Kagame's government is politically repressive and the president really brooks no personal opposition. All of those points are accurate. They also note that Rwanda has few good roads and that transportation of goods is a huge problem. Electricity, even in the capital, Kigali, is iffy. The people also lack the technical skills that a modern 21st century economy absolutely requires. This criticism is accurate too. There are also critics who argue that the small business reforms have had very little impact and that much of Rwanda's economy remains underground and untaxed. This is an interesting argument and given the extent of black markets in developing nations it could be true. The counter argument is that more reforms are in order, so the underground businesses can evolve into legitimate (tax paying) ones. However, the fact remains that Rwanda's economy has improved. Income in Rwanda has increased, perhaps doubling since the wicked days of 1994, though 1994 income statistics are questionable. The government argues that infrastructure improvement is coming but Rwanda and Rwandans are beginning to reap the rewards of a decade of developing small business skills, human capital. (Austin Bay)

April 10, 2012: Rwanda deployed 150 soldiers to serve with the UN Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS). Rwanda has agreed to deploy a battalion of 850 soldiers to South Sudan.

April 15, 2012: The Rwandan government promoted 23 general officers. One was promoted to Lieutenant-general, six to Majour-general, and 16 colonels were promoted to brigadier general. The new lieutenant general is Karenzi Karake, who has served with the National Intelligence and Security Services (NISS), Rwanda's intelligence agency.

April 30, 2012: U.S. AFRICOM reported that members of Rwanda's 71st Battalion completed a five-week long training course in preparation for deploying to support peacekeeping operations. The course included battalion logistics, weapons maintenance, and medical aid training.

May 4, 2012: The Burundian Army claimed that rebel leader Claver Nduwayezu (known as Mukono) died in a firefight with government security forces. Nduwayezu also used the nom de guerre Carmel. According to the army, the firefight took place inside Burundi, five kilometers from the Congo-Burundi border. The government asserted that Mukono was responsible for the infamous attack on a bar in the town of Gatumba (near Bujumbura)where 39 people were killed, some of them murdered execution-style.

May 20, 2012: The Burundi government is accused of permitting extra-judicial killings, which have led to scores of political opponents being killed. It is believed that the assassins have been state security personnel and sometimes members of rebel groups.

May 24, 2012: A trial court in Burundi convicted 14 people of murdering Ernest Manirumva, a noted anti-corruption activist. Manirumva was murdered in 2009. At the time he was investigating ties between Burundian police and Hutu rebels operating in the Congo. Many believe that the court failed to try real criminals (corrupt Burundian police officers who were smuggling weapons remain at large and who were likely tied to the real killers).

June 6, 2012: The Burundian is believed to have executed Jean-Petit Nduwimana, a former senior intelligence officer. Congolese security forces apparently captured Nduwimana in May and then sent him to Burundi, where the government quietly killed him. Nduwinmana was a senior rebel leader and in 2004, was integrated into the Burundian Army after the peace settlement. He became chief of staff of the military intelligence service and was a member of the ruling party, the National Council for the Defense of Democracy and the Forces for the Defense of Democracy (CNDD-FDD). However, in 2008, he grew disillusioned with the CNDD-FDD government and said he was preparing to start a new rebellion. In 2011, Nduwimana said that he had joined the Forces for the Restoration of Democracy (FRD), a new Burundian rebel group.

June 9, 2012: Foreign observers say that recent reports of serious rebel activity in Burundi are credible. Bit by bit the peace settlement is unraveling. Several opposition political leaders have left the capital and according to the government are now organizing forces in the jungle. The government is particularly concerned about Agathom Rwasa, the National Liberation Front (FNL) leader. Rwasa is reportedly active in the eastern Congo.

June 20, 2012: Rwanda's foreign minister said the Congolese government is lying when it accuses the Rwandan government of supporting the M23 Congolese rebel group. A leaked UN report, however, said that investigators have evidence that M23 is receiving military supplies and financial help through Rwanda.

July 5, 2012: The president of Somalia visited Burundi, which has over 4,000 soldiers deployed in Somalia with the AU's AMISOM peacekeeping force.

July 15, 2012: Rwanda and the Congo agreed to allow an AU (African Union) sponsored international force help deal with rebel groups in the eastern Congo. The AU had previously said that it was ready to organize a neutral regional force for deployment in the Congo.

July 22, 2012: The U.S. announced that it will curtail military aid it provides to Rwanda. The U.S. announcement follows several weeks of serious allegations made by UN investigators that Rwanda is providing the Congo's M23 rebel group with military and financial aid.

July 31, 2012: The UN's Group of Experts on the Congo (GoE Congo) has accused Rwanda of providing M23 with material and financial support.

August 1, 2012: The Congolese government charged Rwanda with arming the M23 rebel group, which Congo considers a group of mutineers. Rwanda charged the Congo with helping the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) Hutu militias plan attacks on Rwanda. The FDLR has ties to the Hutu leaders who led the 1994 Rwandan genocide.

August 7, 2012: The U.S. government told Rwanda that it must help the Congo and the UN disarm the M23 rebel movement and insure that the rebel group does not receive military supplies or aid.

The Rwandan government said that the UN group which investigated the allegations that Rwanda is supporting the M23 Congolese rebel movement is acting in bad faith. According to Rwanda, the UN report is highly inaccurate. The government accused one member of the UN study group of having a benign view of radical Hutu organizations like the FDLR and had published an article that described the FDLR as victims of the Rwandan Tutsi government. Rwanda basically said the UN study exhibited an anti-Tutsi tribal bias.

August 15, 2012: The Congolese government (Democratic Republic of Congo) asked that international donors and financial institutions freeze aid to Rwanda because the Rwandan government supports the rebel M23 movement.

August 16, 2012: Rwandan opposition leaders from the United Democratic Forces (FDU) have asked the International Criminal Court (ICC) to investigate Rwandan president Paul Kagame on charges of committing war crimes in the eastern Congo. The accuser cited a UN report that found evidence that the Rwandan government is supporting the M23 Movement rebel group in the Congo.

August 23, 2012: A Burundi government task force investigating reports of extrajudicial slayings reported that no extrajudicial murders had occurred. The task force said that it had not found a single credible report of an extrajudicial execution.

September 2, 2012: Though Rwanda is continuing to receive heavy criticism for its alleged involvement with rebel militias in the eastern Congo, the political damage so far has not been significant. Rwanda has been a major contributor to the UN-African Union, UNAMID, peacekeeping force in Sudan's Darfur region, and the UN knows that Rwandan soldiers have been reliable. Rwanda has also made some savvy political overtures to neighboring Uganda and Kenya. Both Uganda and Kenya have large troop commitments to the AU's AMISOM peacekeeping effort in Somalia. Rwanda has also taken advantage of several U.S. AFRICOM training initiatives. In October, Rwanda will host some 1,800 soldiers from the East African Community (EAC). The EAC consists of Tanzania, Kenya, Uganda, Burundi, and Rwanda. Rwanda has played an important role in strengthening the EAC. The concept behind the EAC is not new. In the first half of the 20th century, when they were both British colonies, Kenya and Uganda had a customs union designed to expand bi-lateral trade. An East African Community existed from 1967 to 1977, but fell apart. The current EAC was created by a treaty in 1999 and could evolve into a free trade pact. The member nations have now agreed to a defense protocol, so it is also on the road to becoming a military alliance. The October military exercise is billed as a major field training exercise designed to enhance security cooperation among the EAC members. A Burundian Army colonel who helped plan the exercise said that the field training will focus on counter-terror operations and also counter-piracy. Uganda and Burundi have gained a lot of experience in working together in AMISOM. A Burundian government official pointed out that the EAC members face common security threats. For example, Somalia's Al Shabaab Islamist militia has launched attacks in Uganda and Kenya. Al Shabaab has also threatened to launch attacks on Burundi.

September 3, 2012: The Rwandan Army said that it was withdrawing two special forces battalions which have been operating in the eastern Congo. The Rwandan government said the two battalions have been participating in joint operations with the Congolese military since 2009. The Rwandan special operations soldiers had been assigned to the Joint DRC-Rwanda Special Forces Battalion that was based in the Rutshuru territory of DRC's North Kivu province.

A former leader of Burundi's main rebel group, the FNL (National Liberation Forces), said that a new FNL faction has been established. The faction was responsible for a recent attack on a Burundian Army post near Bujumbura. The new faction is named the FNL-Ubugabo-Burihabwa.

September 4, 2012: Congolese civilians in North Kivu province reported that M23 rebels skirmished with Congolese Army soldiers in the Rutshuru district. The report puts in question claims by officials in the Congo that an informal ceasefire has existed between M23 and the Congolese Army since the first week of August.

September 5, 2012: UN peacekeepers in the Congo confirmed that 357 Rwandan Special Forces troops have been operating in the eastern Congo. The Congolese government said that 100 Rwandan Special Forces soldiers were operating in the region. The Rwandan troops were working with Congolese Army soldiers to monitor Rwandan FDLR (Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda) ethnic Hutu rebels and their Mai Mai militia allies.

September 6, 2012: Observers in the eastern Congo reported that M23 rebels have moved into an area near the Rwanda-Congo border that was formerly patrolled by a Rwandan special forces unit.

September 6, 2012: The Rwandan government announced that its new national development fund with a long-range goal: getting the country away from relying on foreign aid. The fund now has a little over $10 million, most of the money coming from Rwandan government workers and Rwandan expatriates. The government said that the fund will help capitalize new projects and money from the fund will also be used to partner with foreign investors. The fund is named the Agaciro Fund (which translates as "Dignity" Fund in the Kinyarwandan language). Critics have pointed out that the Rwandan government is establishing the fund just as numerous international donors are discussing withdrawing aid because of Rwanda's alleged support for Congolese rebels. Almost 50 percent of Rwanda's annual budget comes from donor countries and aid organizations.

September 25, 2012: The Rwandan government once again denied charges that its security forces are involved with the Congo's M23 rebel movement.

October 2, 2012: Diplomats in Burundi are reporting that from 300 to 500 former FNL (National Liberation Forces) rebels have returned to bases in the jungle. Though the Burundian Army has used its experiences in Somalia to increase the professionalism of its soldiers, a 500-man strong guerrilla force represents a real threat to the country. Many of the FNL rebels are veteran guerrilla fighters.

October 15, 2012: UN investigators claimed that the Rwandan and Ugandan militaries have aided the Congo's M23 rebel movement.

Several key accusations made in the critical UN report appeared in print on October 17. One source claimed that the UN document said Rwanda's defense minister is commanding M23 – and that is a very serious allegation. Excerpts claimed that the Rwandan government has given M23 heavy weapons and helped provide recruits. These allegations go several steps beyond a UN report issued earlier this year that concluded evidence existed that Rwanda was supporting the Congolese rebel group. Rwanda has a record of using proxy forces in the Congo to combat the radical Hutu FDLR (Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda).

October 18, 2012: The UN voted to give Rwanda a non-permanent seat on the Security Council. Non-permanent members serve on the Security Council for two years. Luxembourg, Australia, South Korea, and Argentina were also elected to fill Security Council slots. Non-permanent seats bring prestige and recognition to any country obtaining one, but they are particularly coveted by developing countries. Their UNSC votes matter. Rwanda's selection, however, comes at a very uncomfortable time, for both the UN and Rwanda. Bits and pieces of a UN report on the Congo's M23 rebellion have been appearing in various international media. The UN report is very critical of the Rwandan government and its alleged support of the M23 rebels. The tribal connection is undeniable. The Rwandan military is largely run by Rwandan Tutsis. The M23 rebels are Congolese Tutsis. One media leak reported that UN investigators have evidence that Rwanda's defense minister has given M23 rebels direct orders. Rwanda vociferously denies that it supports M23. Congo objected to Rwanda taking a seat on the Security Council but Rwanda had no opponents for the open African seat. The General Assembly voted overwhelmingly to give Rwanda the seat. It was a reward of sorts. Rwanda has consistently provided soldiers for UNAMID, the UN-African Union peacekeeping mission in Sudan's Darfur region and overall is the sixth largest provider of soldiers for UN peacekeeping missions.

October 24, 2012: Burundian security forces claimed they killed nine gunmen in a firefight in the town of Buganda. The government claimed that the gunmen had entered Burundi from the Congo. After the firefight occurred, a guerrilla group calling itself the Murundi People's Front-The Saviours' (FPM-Abatabazi) said that it had launched an attack in the area and its fighters had killed nine Burundian Army soldiers and wounded 17 others in the operation.

October 30, 2012: Rwandan opposition leader Victoire Ingabire jailed' Rwandan opposition leader Victoire Ingabire has been found guilty at her treason trial and sentenced to eight years in jail. The prosecution had requested a life sentence for the charges of threatening state security. The court also found her guilty of "belittling" Rwanda's 1994 genocide. Ingabire was not in court to hear the verdict as she has been boycotting the trial, saying it is politically motivated. The Unified Democratic Forces leader was arrested in April 2010 and was barred from standing in elections later that year. The BBC's Prudent Nsengiyumva in the capital, Kigali, says her lawyer, the deputy UDF leader and a number of her supporters were in court. They were stunned by the verdict, expecting her to receive a life sentence, our reporter says. She had also faced terrorism charges, but these were dropped during the two-year trial. The UDF has 30 days to appeal against the verdict. Ingabire, a Hutu, returned from exile in the Netherlands in January 2010 - and has been in jail since her arrest. She has questioned why Rwanda's official memorial to the 1994 genocide does not include any Hutus. Most of the 800,000 people killed were ethnic Tutsies but Hutu moderates were also slaughtered by the Hutu extremists.

November 5, 2012: Rwanda accused a group of Congolese Army soldiers of violating the Rwanda-Congo border near the town of Kibumba (13 kilometers north of the Congolese border city of Goma). Rwanda claimed that the Congolese soldiers crossed the border on a reconnaissance mission. A Rwandan military spokesman called the border crossing a provocation. The term provocation indicates the Rwandans believe the incident was intentional. After the Congolese crossed the border, a firefight erupted between the Congolese soldiers and a detachment of Rwandan soldiers. One Congolese soldier died and a Rwandan soldier was wounded. Both the Rwandan and Congolese governments regard the incident as serious. It is the first confirmed firefight between Congolese and Rwandan military units since 2001.

November 13, 2012: Great Britain announced that it will give very close scrutiny to any future requests for aid from Rwanda. The announcement comes after new allegations made by UN investigators that Rwanda is supporting rebel groups in the Congo. Great Britain, however, recently approved a controversial $30 million aid request to Rwanda.

November 15, 2012: The government of Burundi acknowledged that a Burundian Army officer was killed in the Congo's South Kivu province. The government said the officer was participating in an intelligence gathering operation that is permitted under a bilateral agreement with the Congo.

November 19, 2012: As M23 rebels neared the city of Goma, on the Congo-Rwanda border, the Congolese government rejected a demand by the rebel movement that the Congo begin direct political negotiations with the group. A Congolese spokesman said that the Congolese government needs to negotiate with the real aggressor in the region, which is Rwanda. Rwanda denied the Congo's accusation and said that Congolese Army troops had fired into Rwandan territory. Rwandan security forces did not respond to the Congolese gunfire.

November 23, 2012: Rwanda has denied another barrage of charges that it is supporting the M23 rebel movement in the Congo. The government said that its policy is to end the hostilities and it has asked the Congolese Army and M23 to seek a peaceful solution. Rwanda has said that the International Conference of the Great Lakes Region (ICGLR) provides the best regional forum for conducting peace negotiations. The ICGLR has 11 members, including Rwanda, Burundi, Uganda, and Congo.

November 27, 2012: Rwanda claimed that an estimated 100 to 120 FDLR fighters entered into Rwandan territory from the Congo and killed one civilian in the village of Muti. Four other people were wounded.

December 2, 2012: the Rwandan government claimed that an FDLR band launched an attack near Kinigi. A national park warden was killed in the attack inside Rwanda's Volcanoes National Park.

December 5, 2012: Does M23 do anything for Rwanda other than cause it to be condemned by the UN and numerous aid organizations? Though the Rwandan government vehemently claims it does not support the rebel group, there are a few Rwandans who will tell reporters and UN investigators that they think M23's predecessor organization, the National Congress for the Defense of the People (CNDP), was a necessary response to the threat posed by the FDLR. They point out that the FDLR was formed by Hutu mass murderers (genocidaires) who killed over 800,000 Rwandans. The Hutu genocidaires fled into the Congo after the Tutsi-led Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) seized power in 1994. The CNDP was organized in late 2006, by Congolese Tutsis to counter the FDLR because the Congo government was unwilling or unable to take on the FDLR. The Rwandans interlocutors increasingly point out to journalists that the Congolese government is endemically corrupt.

December 16, 2012: The Burundian government is concerned that weapons from Libya that once belonged to the forces of former Libyan dictator Muammar Gaddafi will start showing up in central Africa. The government is concerned that former National Liberation Forces (FNL) rebel commanders who have returned to the jungle will try to acquire the weapons. In early September Agathon Rwasa, a former FNL guerrilla leader, declared war on the Burundian government. Rwasa is believed to be in the eastern Congo and is organizing a faction of former FNL fighters.

December 29, 2012: Burundian opposition groups are arguing that Burundi is now far worse off than it was before the 2010 elections. Over the past three months, several opposition leaders have accused the government of creating a one-party system in the country and of undermining the Arusha Accords. Signed in 1993, these accords provided the political framework for ending the Burundian civil war. The governing party, the National Council for the Defense of Democracy/Forces for the Defense of Democracy (CNDD-FDD), has certainly solidified control in the country. However, some of the responsibility for the emerging one-party system lies with Burundi's opposition leaders. After the CNDD-FDD swept the May 2010 local elections, many opposition leaders went into exile. The leaders claimed the vote had been manipulated, and it probably was. The opposition decided to boycott subsequent elections, including the presidential election. Only one opposition group (UPRONA) put up candidates in the July 2010 legislative election. The CNDD-FDD took control of over 80 percent of the parliament's seats and has since them faced no real parliamentary opposition. Many opposition leaders decided to go into exile because they feared for their safety. All of the major Burundian parties have youth wings that are little more than armed street gangs. The CNDD-FDD's youth wing, the Imbonerakure, is by far the most powerful, and it has conducted attacks on opposition party members. After the July 2010 elections Imbonerakure youths were reportedly conducting illegal arrests of opposition leaders. So the leaders had a reason to flee. Their absence, however, has thus left the CNDD-FDD completely in charge. The umbrella opposition group formed after the elections, the Democratic Alliance for Change (ADC-Ikibiri), is increasingly divided between leaders who want to revive the Arusha process and those who are ready to start a new civil war.

January 3, 2013: UN planners are providing more details about the international peacekeeping unit the Security Council would like to see deploy in the eastern Congo to help control and dismantle rebel militias like M23. The proposed Neutral International Force (NIF) would be formed as an intervention brigade of 2,500 troops to possibly 4,000. Both figures have appeared in print. The brigade would be assigned to MONUSCO. It would have quick reaction force capabilities so that it could quickly intervene to stop a rebel attack.

January 4, 2013: Congolese M23 rebel officers claimed that FDLR commanders are operating with Congolese Army units and Congolese security forces.

January 6, 2013: Rwanda continues to receive extensive criticism from the UN, major donor nations, and major non-governmental aid organizations for its alleged support of the M23 Congolese rebel movement. The criticism and condemnation, however, is not without irony. Rwanda is now a member of the UN Security Council (it was elected to one of the non-permanent member seats). Rwanda is also something of a darling among aid organizations and anti-corruption advocacy organizations. The 2012 Transparency International ranked Rwanda number 50 (out of 176 countries rated) on its corruption perceptions index. The index ranks from least corrupt (Denmark was number one) to most corrupt (at 174, a three-way tie among North Korea, Afghanistan, and Somalia). To put Rwanda's ranking in perspective, Burundi was ranked 165. Neighboring Uganda was 130 and Kenya 139. In other words, given its east and central African location the country rates as comparatively clean and corruption-free. In fact, Rwanda ranked higher than China (number 80). The government has focused on trying to reduce corruption, for several reasons. Aid donors want their money to go to the projects and people they target, not the pockets of corrupt officials. Less corruption makes Rwanda an attractive place for many aid NGOs. Honest government also attracts international businesses that might want to operate or invest in Rwanda. Rwanda has been touting itself as the best place to do business in east Africa. It has made starting a new business relatively easy and inexpensive for Rwandans and foreigners. Streamlining business registration has a counter-corruption angle. Streamlining registration business has eliminated some of the bureaucratic bottlenecks that a corrupt official of yesteryear would promise to resolve in exchange for a bribe. Imposing severe penalties on corrupt officials, however, has been the government's biggest tool. The government actually jails embezzlers and bribe takers. Several years ago President Paul Kagame said that his administration would have no tolerance for people who stole public funds. Since 2004 the government has an agency, the Ombudsman Office, which monitors fund distribution. The agency has a record for investigating high-level bureaucrats and government officials. (Austin Bay)

January 14, 2013: Rwanda announced that it will not support UN plans to employ unmanned aerial reconnaissance and surveillance aircraft (drones) in the Congo unless the UN provides very specific information about how, when, and where they will be utilized. The UN is discussing deploying UN peacekeeping troops to confront the M23 rebel group in the Congo's North Kivu province.

January 23, 20113: Tea isn't petroleum but there is an international demand for the product. Rwanda recently agreed to help form a tea producer's association, the International Tea Producers Forum. The other members are India, Kenya, Malawi, Indonesia, and Sri Lanka. These six nations produce over half of the world's tea. At the moment the association is not a cartel but for almost two decades Sri Lanka has tried to get other tea producers to agree to production quotas.

January 25, 2013: Burundi troops are to participate in the African Union's International Support Mission in Mali (AFISMA). The government did not provide a strength figure. Burundi has troops deployed in Somalia as part of the AU's mission in Somalia (AMISOM)

January 29, 2013: Belgium has noted friction is increasing between the Rwandan and Congolese expatriate communities in Brussels. This included shouting matches and street fights. The inter-community squabbling is a reflection of the continuing trouble between the two countries. Approximately 25,000 Congolese live in and near Brussels. Some 10,000 Rwandans live in the area. Members of the Congolese community recently held a protest march outside the Rwandan embassy in Brussels.

Meanwhile, the government is asking the UN and neighboring nations to pay attention to what it claims is the reviving threat posed by the Democratic

Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR). The FDLR was formed by radical Hutus involved in the 1994 Rwandan genocide. The

News Nigeria

AFRICAN Giant Leader, President of Rwanda General Paul Kagame has ordered for immediate deportation of 18 Chinese nationals, "the 18 investors were found guilty of mistreating Rwandan workers and grubbing land on which they operated their business". President Kagame said.

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

38m

BREAKING NEWS:

Chinese investors exploited Rwandan people and also took advantage of them by making them work abnormal hours like slaves. "Africa is for Africans. We can't be slaves in Africa. We don't tolerate the nonsense of discrimination here" General Kagame added

"Rwanda is for Africans and those who mean well for us. I am directing the 18 Chinese investors to leave Rwanda immediately and must never return back. Rwandan people must enjoy their rights in their country. Let this be a lesson to the remaining Chinese investors" President Kagame warned

Hutu radicals murdered 800,000 Rwandan Tutsis and Hutu moderates. The government is touting reports that the FDLR is regrouping in the Congo's North Kivu province. One Rwandan source contends that the Congolese Army (FARDC) is working with the FDLR. The UN peacekeeping mission in the Congo (MONUSCO) admitted there had been an increase in FDLR activity.

February 5, 2013: The Rwandan government continues to claim that it is not aiding the Congolese M23 rebel group. It is also claiming that it did not help create M23. The government, however, is acknowledging that it is concerned about the threats made by major donor nations to curtail aid to Rwanda. The threats are being used by donor nations to force Rwanda to help stop M23's rebellion. Despite the country's economic growth, aid provides between 40 to 45 percent of the country's budget. Several donors have curtailed financing for infrastructure projects and others are threatening to withhold funds.

February 15, 2013: The UN Security Council voted to extend for another year the mandate to maintain the UN Office in Burundi (BNUB). The office serves as the residual headquarters of what was the UN peacekeeping effort in Burundi.

February 19, 2013: The UN Security Council and the UN Secretary General once again accused Rwanda of providing external support to the rebel M23 group in the Congo. UN investigators concluded that M23's ability to provide its ground attacks with well-coordinated fire support demonstrated that it was receiving outside aid.

February 21, 2013: The UN announced that Burundi's political reconciliation program is making progress. Burundi's next national elections are scheduled for 2015. The UN wants Burundi to hold fair and credible elections.

February 22, 2013: The Rwandan military is reportedly holding around 300 deserters in a prison located on Iwawa Island in Lake Kivu. The island prison has not been inspected by the Red Cross.

March 3, 2013: The 2004 Arusha peace agreement stated that the Burundian Army had to undergo an extensive reform process. One requirement was that the army have a 50-50 ethnic balance between Hutus and Tutsis. However, at the moment no one is quite sure if the military has reached that goal. The army has around 30,000 soldiers and a billet in the Burundian Army is regarded as a prestigious job. Moreover, the pay is exceptionally good for Burundian soldiers who are serving with the African Union peacekeeping force in Somalia (AMISOM). When they are deployed, each soldier earns $1,028 a month. The government takes a cut in taxes (around $100) but the rest goes into a personal bank account in the soldier's name. In 2012 the Burundian military earned the country about $45 million, if the value of UN and AU provided equipment is included. In addition, international sources also pay for logistics costs. Burundian soldiers did not always make $1,028 a month. In 2010, Burundian soldiers, who were earning around $750 a month, learned that other UN peacekeepers were receiving more. They lodged a protest. Ultimately, the UN raised their pay.

March 10, 2013: Will Rwandan president Paul Kagame leave power in 2017? Though the next election is four years away Rwandan media are already asking what the county calls the big question. Rwanda's constitution says Paul Kagame cannot have another term. However, Kagame is the most powerful man in Rwanda and is regarded as the intellectual and political force behind the country's modernization effort. He also has the respect of the Rwandan Army. Kagame recently indicated he plans to step down in 2017.

March 20, 2013: The March 18 surrender of M23 rebel leader Bosco Ntaganda caught many Rwandans by surprise. Ntaganda was the rebel Congolese general who formed the M23 rebel movement. After a fight with a rival M23 faction Ntaganda fled to Rwanda. He formally surrendered at the U.S. Embassy in Rwanda (in Kigali). Ntaganda told U.S. embassy officials that he wanted to turn himself in to the International Criminal Court.

March 25, 2013: The government confirmed that a unit of the Rwandan Army (Rwanda Defense Force, RDF) has deployed to Nepal to participate in a multi-national peacekeeping exercise. The exercise is code-named Shanti Prayas II. The exercise will last two weeks.

March 27, 2013: Rwanda and Congo have released more information about Bosco Ntaganda's surrender. U.S. intelligence officers helped arrange Ntaganda's surrender at the U.S. embassy in Rwanda. Around 650 M23 fighters loyal to Ntaganda also entered Rwanda and surrendered. However, a rival M23 faction loyal to M23 commander Sultani Makenga is still operating in Congo.

March 28, 2013: The UN Security Council approved the creation of an intervention brigade for deployment in Congo's eastern provinces. The unit will deploy three infantry battalions plus a recon company, a special forces company and an artillery battery. Rwanda agreed to support the creation of the brigade.

April 1. 2013: Rwanda assumed temporary leadership of the UN Security Council. The Rwandan UN ambassador will preside over Security Council meetings throughout the month of April. Ironically, Rwanda was also a member of the Security Council in 1994, when the Rwandan genocide occurred.

April 2, 2013: The Rwandan government has moved 682 former M23 Congolese rebels from a border area to a camp inside Rwanda. Most of the M23 fighters have been identified as Congolese Tutsi tribesmen. They belong to the M23 faction that was loyal to Bosco Ntaganda but lost out in a fight with a rival faction which split M23 in March. The government said the move was made in order to comply with international conventions which state that refugees should be placed in camps at least 50 kilometers from the border of their home country.

Police reported that someone launched a grenade attack in a bus station in the Kirironko area of Kigali (Rwanda's capital).

April 3, 2013: The U.S. has put out a reward of five million dollar for information leading to the arrest of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) leader Sylvestre Mudacumura. In 2012 the International Criminal Court (ICC) issued a warrant for his arrest on charges of war crimes and crimes against humanity. Mudacumura was involved in the 1994 Rwandan genocide that killed over 800,000 people. Since then the Rwandan government has been asking for help in either arresting or eliminating Mudacumura.

April 11. 2013: Two international business and economic organizations have rated Rwanda in the top ten of African countries positioned to take economic and social advantage of digital communication technologies. Rwanda was the top ranked East African nation. It ranked sixth in Africa overall.

April 18. 2013: The Rwandan government announced that it wants all Rwandans who fled the country to return to Rwanda. The government intends to treat the returnees as citizens, not refugees.

April 21, 2013: Some 9,000 Rwandan Hutu refugees have been living in a Ugandan refugee camp located at Nakivale. Some of the refugees arrived in 1994 during and after the Rwandan genocide. Rwnada recently announced that it wants all Rwandan citizens to return to Rwanda. Many of the Hutus at the camp, however, have told Ugandan officials that they believe Rwandan Tutsis will harm them if they return to Rwanda. The refugees say they will not accept enforced repatriation. African investigators have reported that some of the Hutu refugees may have been involved in the genocide, making them liable to be prosecuted if they return.

April 22, 2013: The U.S. State Department issued a travel warning for Burundi. Because Burundi has a military unit involved in peacekeeping operations in Somalia, the Somali militant Islamist terrorist group al

Shabaab continues to threaten to carry out attacks in Burundi. The State Department said that U.S. installations, companies and citizens in Burundi could be targeted by al Shabaab.

April 23, 2013: In Rwanda 200 Burundi national police officers have begun a four months-long training program. The training program prepares police for deployment with peacekeeping forces. The Rwandan Police Training School (located in Gishari) sponsors the program.

May 2. 2013: The UN has come out full force in support of Rwanda's economic development strategy. However, it is not like the strategy is anything new. Rwanda has been pursuing international investment for a decade and implementing common sense economic reforms for the last five years. The government has also been cracking down on corruption, at least the bribe-taking government regulator form of corruption. So why the new vocal UN support? It looks like it is part of the pay-off for Rwanda agreeing to support the UN intervention brigade in the Congo and crack down on Rwanda-based support for the M23 Congolese rebel movement. There is also another read some African commentators have made. The UN response to the 1994 Rwanda genocide was haphazard and in retrospect very inadequate. Support for Rwandan economic reform is belated payback for that failure. This falls into the realm of maybe, but probably not. The UN Security Council was very hard on Rwanda regarding allegations and evidence that Rwandans supported M23. However, when Rwanda was elected to serve on the Security Council as a non-permanent member, it was seated, over Congolese objections. The Security Council seat makes more sense as a payback for the UN's 1994 failure.

May 19, 2013: Two people were killed when 15 armed men ambushed a bus near Gatumba (outskirts of Burundi's capital, Bujumbura). Police believe the attackers were former National Liberation Forces (FNL) guerrilla fighters who had crossed the border from a camp in eastern Congo. Ten people were wounded in the attack. Survivors reported that some of the attackers sang a song associated with the FNL.

May 28, 2013: The UN honored all UN peacekeepers who have died while serving on peacekeeping missions. Five Rwandan soldiers were among those honored. Four were slain in Sudan's western Darfur region while serving with the UNAMID operation. One was killed in Haiti while serving with the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH).

May 29, 2013: Burundi has started another campaign to try to get civilians with illegal small arms and explosives to turn the weapons in to the government. The last campaign (in 2009) was regarded as a success. Security agencies took control of 16,000 grenades, 160,000 rounds of ammo, 2,700 assorted rifles, and 5,000 explosive devices.

May 30, 2013: The Rwandan government and many Rwandans are upset that Tanzania has urged the Rwandan government to negotiate with the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) rebel group. The Tanzanian recommendation was made at a recent African Union meeting. The leadership of the FDLR includes Hutu extremists who helped organize the 1994 Rwandan genocide.

June 1, 2013: A growing number of South Africans are not convinced their country should provide troops for the UN's Intervention Brigade. The brigade is already deploying in the Congo's troubled North Kivu province. Senior members of South Africa's dominant political party, the African National Congress (ANC), have publicly mentioned that they are worried about foreign support for some of the rebel militias operating in the area. The South African politicians did not specifically mention Rwanda but Rwanda has been accused of providing the Congolese M23 rebel group with money, weapons, and training. A 2012 UN report provided documented evidence of support for M23 coming through Rwanda. This produced vehement official denials.

June 3, 2013: Rwanda, in response to a recent suggestion that it negotiate with the FDLR, said that it will never negotiate with individuals or groups who have promoted genocide. The official statement also employed the term "Genocide Ideology." Basically, genocide ideology means people who promote Hutu tribal supremacy. What the government is saying is that it will not negotiate – ever-- with the FDLR .

June 5, 2013: The UN insists that nations involved in the Framework initiative for stabilizing central Africa must be prepared to fight the Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) rebel group. The FDLR was founded by Rwandan Interahamwe Hutu extremists who organized and participated in the 1994 Rwandan genocide. The Tutsi-led Rwandan Patriotic Front invaded Rwanda from Uganda, stopped the genocide, and defeated the Interahamwe. Surviving Interahamwe fled into the eastern Congo. The Interahamwe were radical members of the Hutu tribe-dominated National Republican Movement for Democracy and Development (MRND), which ruled Rwanda from 1975 to 1994. Rwanda has claimed that the FDLR receives support from sources in the Congo. The UN statement follows a Rwandan government statement that it will not negotiate with the FDLR. The statement could indicate that the Intervention Brigade may include the FDLR on its list of targeted militias and rebel groups.

June 11, 2013: Opposition political leaders in Burundi accused the ruling CNDD-FDD (National Council for the Defense of Democracy-Force for Defense of Democracy) of using its party youth wing (the Imbonerakure) as a militia. The opposition parties made these charges before the last election and other observers concluded the charges were legitimate. The Imbonerakure conducted “security patrols” while armed with machetes and rifles. The opposition parties claimed that the patrols were really intimidation operations.

June 17, 2013: Burundi reported that the May 19 bus ambush was the first cross-border rebel attack since 2011. Members of the Burundi rebel National Liberation Forces (FNL) were responsible. This put the FNL back on the active list of rogue militia and rebel groups operating in the eastern Congo. That means the FNL could be a target of the UN’s new Congo Intervention Brigade.

June 30, 2013: UN investigators reported that Rwanda continues to provide limited support for the Congolese M23 rebel group. The UN acknowledged that the support M23 now receives from Rwandan sources is much less than it was in 2012. However, sympathetic Rwandans (including, allegedly, Rwandan military officers) provide low-level support. For example, the UN investigators said they have evidence that Rwandan officials let M23 recruit militiamen inside Rwanda. The UN said that M23 no longer receives support from Ugandan sources. The UN also looked into Rwandan allegations that the Congolese Army (FARDC) was collaborating with the Democratic Forces for the Liberation for Rwanda (FDLR) rebel group. The FDLR was founded by Hutu extremists who were directly involved in the 1994 genocide. UN monitors reported that there is evidence this occurred. The UN has asked the Congo government for more information.

July 2, 2013: Rwanda has signed on to the UN’s Framework peace agreement for stabilizing central Africa. This means that Rwanda has agreed to the deployment of the UN’s Intervention Brigade. The brigade is a peacekeeping unit with an offensive mission. It is authorized to target and neutralize armed rebel groups and militias in the Congo. The armed group most often and most prominently mentioned as an Intervention Brigade target is M23, a Congolese rebel group with ties to ethnic Tutsis living in the Congo. The Rwandan government has long been accused of providing aid for M23. The Rwandan government denies the accusations and a recent UN investigation indicates that this support has declined considerably in the last few months. Before that, UN investigators documented a lot of support for M23 coming from sources within Rwanda. At the moment, Rwandan Tutsis politically dominate Rwanda. So why does Rwanda support the Framework and at least indirectly agree to deploying the Intervention Brigade? There are several obvious reasons. Money was one. Rwanda relies on donations and several major donor nations, including Great Britain, either withheld aid or threatened to withhold aid unless Rwanda agreed to the UN peace process. The Congo and M23 could reach a peace deal. The rebels and the Congolese government have representatives in Uganda. Though negotiations are fitful, you cannot rule out the possibility of a peaceful resolution to M23's rebellion. However, Rwanda has repeatedly insisted that it will not compromise in its struggle with the extremist Hutus who orchestrated the 1994 genocide. The Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR) continue to operate from bases in the eastern Congo. M23 is a thug outfit. The FDLR, however, is run by genocidal Hutu supremacists. Could the Intervention Brigade target the FDLR? In early June UN officials made some rather suggestive comments about the FDLR. The destruction of the FDLR could be Rwanda's pay-off for good behavior. (Austin Bay)

October 5, 2013: Paul Kagame criticizes US sanctions over M23 child soldiers'

Rwadan President Paul Kagame has rebuked the U.S. State Department's decision to sanction his country over its alleged association with the M23 rebel group. President Kagame said the decision fits into the plan of exiled Hutu rebels in the Democratic Republic of Congo and elsewhere who, according to him, seek to destroy what the Rwandan people are trying to build. He also questioned why his country was being held accountable for the faults of others. The U.S. State Department announced that under the Child Soldiers Prevention Act of 2008, it is putting Rwanda, Sudan, Myanmar, Central African Republic and Syria on sanction for their use of or association with groups who use child soldiers. The sanctions particularly concern military aid. The U.S. Government announced that Rwanda would not receive U.S. International Military Education and Training Funds as well as U.S. Foreign Military Financing in the 2014 fiscal year. Linda Thomas-Greenfield, the U.S. assistant secretary of state for African Affairs said the U.S. government's goal is to work with these countries it has sanctioned to ensure that "any involvement and recruitment of child soldiers" are stopped.

The United Nations and the government of the Democratic Republic of Congo had earlier accused the Rwandan government of supporting the Tutsi-dominated M23 rebel group. But the Rwandan government has insistently denied this charge. Spokesman for the Rwandan Armed Forces, Brigadier General Joseph Nzabamwita said the U.S. has enough information about his country's activities to know it is not in any alliance with the rebel group. He said "Rwanda's commitment to a sustainable solution that seeks to bring an end to the DRC conflict and its consequences, including the use of child soldiers, remains unchanged." Many observers have questioned the sanctions, especially since three countries – South Sudan, Chad and Yemen – who are suspected of using child soldiers were exempted from the sanctions and two others – Somalia and the Democratic Republic of Congo – received partial waivers. It is unclear how deep the supposed alliance between the Rwandan government and M23 rebel group goes. But the Tutsi-dominated government has twice invaded the DRC to unsettle Hutu rebels. President Kagame of Rwanda came to power after the 1994 genocide – one of the most bloody events in the history of the nation which left close to 800,000 people dead. The country still struggles to overcome the effects of that violent outbreak.

April 6, 2014: Rwanda has begun a week of official mourning to mark the 20th anniversary of the Rwanda Genocide. In just 100 days in 1994,some 800,000 people were slaughtered in Rwanda. Ethnic Hutu extremists targeted members of the minority Tutsi community, as well as their political opponents, irrespective of their ethnic origin.

Side note: The genocide of the Tutsi as a "final solution" was planned meticulously by the ruling Hutu ethnic group. A huge sale of arms facilitated from outside including hundred thousands of machetes – the main weapon of choice for the coming genocide. As if on cue the genocide begun when a plane shot down carrying the two Hutu presidents of Rwanda and Burundi on April 6, 1994. It went on non-stop for 100 days during which time about one million Tutsis were massacared indiscriminately as the world looked on and refused to intervene to its eternal shame.

The following are the main ones who chose to be silent or assisted in the genocide directly or indirectly:

Former US President Clinton who refused to intervene to stop the genocide. Sadly his Secretary of State who blocked the assistance at the UN Security Council, Madeline Albright, was a Jew and a daughter of Holocaust victims of Nazi Germany.

Former French President Francois Mitterrand the socialist president of France who supplied the weapons to the Hutu regime and whose silence during the genocide was deafening. When the French troops intervened much later after the tide has turned it was to give cover and shelter to the defeated and retreating Hutu murderers when they fled to Eastern Congo.

Mr. Kofi Annan who heeaded the UN Peace Keeping Operations, for holding back the UN troops already stationed in Rwanda from intervening to stop the genocide as former Secretary General of the UN, and Nobel Prize winner

The Catholic Church which actively assisted the genocide by directing the Hutus to their churches where the Tutsi had taken refuge and watching while the Tutsis were murdered or burnt alive. This has been documented in many occasions but the Catholic Church did not even condemn the genocide even after it was over.

The Tutsis say that they were descendents of Ethiopians and it is widely believed that they may be ethnically closer to the Oromos. When Hutus in one of their methods of massacre pushed them en mass into crocodile infested waters they did that by shouting to them "go back to your country, Ethiopia if you survive the crocodiles" (as reminisced by Dr. Yacob who was a member of the UN War crimes Tribunal). In the wake of the Tutsi massacre the Crimes against Humanity, the UN War Crimes Tribunal and the International Criminal Court were established. Rwanda is not the end of genocide. There was Bosnia, and there may be others who might appear all of a sudden in any part of the world. Humanity has not yet got rid of its primitive instincts. The new Rwanda constitution, reminiscent of its tumultuous past, and to its credit outlaws revisionism, negativism, and trivialization of genocide. Let those who have ears to hear listen. No nation or people can survive through ethnic conflict. Two million of the Hutu criminals fled when the Tutsi took power in Rwanda. But as the saying goes 'you can run but not hide.'

They were initially supported by the dictator Mobutu but he was soon to die in natural sickness. In the ongoing conflict to hunt the Hutu criminals five million died in Eastern Congo, the highest since the end of the Second World War. It is believed that the vast majority of the Hutu criminals have been killed; the hunters are being hunted and systematically eliminated in the last 20 years – a feat which they have done to the Tutsi in a mere 100 days. So criminals beware there is Devine Justice, there is no crime that remains unanswered in due course. Those who issue tribal identity cards and who promote ethnic cleansing beware. Next time it may be their turn.

Interahawme which means "those whose strike in unison" is an anti-Tutsi youth organization of Hutu extremists. Could it have been a veiled threat directed to one ethnic group? These Hutu youth were at the forefront of the Tutsi massacre for whom machetes had been secretly distributed beforehand. Their aim was to kill every Tutsi living in Rwanda, to spare no one including babies – but to rape the women before killing them. They also performed sexual mutilation on them until they died. Those kept as sexual slaves were deliberately infected with HIV Aids. Their methods of killing were by grenade, machetes, and rifle or having them burnt alive. How savage and horrible! The magnitude of the horror is difficult to encompass. Some books have been written about it. Just to mention a couple: Shake Hands with the Devil; Hotel Rwanda, the latter has been made into a film

Ironically there was even a debate as to how to call this genocide by the UN thus adding insult to injury. Finally UN declared the Rwanda genocide as 'Genocide against Tutsi" All in all 70% of the Tutsi were massacred.

After such a terrible loss, it is difficult to imagine how a people can reconstitute themselves. But the Tutsi of Rwanda did. Like the legendary bird, the phoenix, which after being burnt rose from the ashes, the Tutsis of Rwanda just did that. Not only did they rise and prosper, they exacted sweet revenge on their killers. It is estimated that in the last 20 years twice as many Hutus has been killed to that of the Tutsi, but the meeting out of justice continues. As Paul Kagame said the Tutsi have to ensure “never again” similar to what the Jewish survivors of the Nazi holocaust said. But the Rwandans also said “never forget” It is a truism that a people who forget their past do not deserve to be remembered. Actually during this 20th anniversary Rwanda refused to invite the French Foreign Minister and when the French Ambassador in Kigali demurred, he was disinvited as well.

The 23-year-old with 24 kids: Genocide orphans form their own families’

In Rwanda, young genocide survivors are forming ‘artificial families’ to help eachother emotionally and financially.

CNN African Voices (April 24, 2014) -- It's a sunny April afternoon at the University of Rwanda College of Education in Kigali. Some students huddle in groups conversing in hushed voices; others hurry between buildings carrying books. Exams begin in a week. On a grassy knoll behind an office block, Jean Claude Nkusi is giving his 24 children a talking to. "Study hard everyone," he says. "If you work hard you can improve your life and make it better." This isn't your typical family. Nkusi is 23. None of his "children" share his DNA. In fact, the only thing linking them is that they're all genocide survivors -- ethnic Rwandan Tutsis who lost their families in the 1994 violence that killed 800,000 people.

'It's because of history': Creating "artificial families" to help young genocide survivors cope is the brainchild of an organization called the Association for Student Genocide Survivors (AERG). Originally founded by 12 University of Rwanda students in 1996, they've expanded to 43,397 university and high school students from across the tiny east-central African country today. AERG initially creates families from members based on the secondary school or university they attend, after which the newly-formed family meet to democratically elect a willing father and mother from among their ranks. Though they don't all live together, they do help each other out financially and attempt to pool their resources.

In the University of Rwanda's College of Education alone there are 21 such families, with hundreds more being set up across the country. "(We) Rwandans, we used to have big families but during the genocide many people were killed," says Daniel Tuyizere, AERG's second vice coordinator at the University of Rwanda. "To fight against that, we have to build artificial families so that we can go back to the way we were," he adds. "That's why you can find a father with 25 children -- it's because of that, it's because of history." AERG National Coordinator Constantine Rukundo explains that the concept stems from a basic necessity. "You need someone to care about you," she says, adding that the aim is that the families will stay together for life. "When you get married your family will be there; they'll be the first to help you."

Scarred by war: UNICEF estimates that 95,000 children were orphaned as a result of the genocide. Seventy per cent witnessed murders or injuries, while many were victims of violence and rape themselves. Their problems continued after 1994. By 2001, an estimated 264,000 Rwandan children had lost one or both parents to AIDS, a disease which was partly spread through the use of rape as a tool of war. Today many of these young people suffer disproportionately from poverty, homelessness, trauma and legal issues, including having had their deceased parents' land taken away from them when they were too young to claim it.

Bringing light back: Rwanda is currently in the middle of 100 days of mourning. The 20th anniversary commemorations have been upsetting for many of the young people who still carry both physical and mental scars from the past. Kelsey Finnegan, Project Officer at Survivors Fund, says that trauma permeates into many different aspects of their lives: "Many for example have difficulties studying, maintaining relationships, or have issues with drugs and alcohol." Kevin Mugina, 21, says that being in a family environment helps young people to deal with their emotions. "Some people used to be very angry." He says that together they discuss their feelings and how to control them enough so that they can live peacefully with their neighbors.

Yet, he adds, trauma among his peers is still a huge issue. "We have kids who have been so shocked from genocide that they have a permanent shock -- that is one of our big problems." But overall, it seems that they are in good hands. Augustin Nsengiyumua, 27, calls up his artificial mother for all sorts of small things. "For example if I don't have a pen, or I don't have soap," he says. Younger than several of his artificial offspring, Nkusi says that fatherhood is a lot of responsibility but he relishes it. "You have to know every situation that your children are in -- if they're studying without any problem, if they're eating, everyday life. If one of them is sick I have to be the first one to know it." He has named their family Urumuri. "Urumuri," Nkusi says, "means to light something up. It's when something was dark, and now it is bright again."

RWANDA: East African nations on high alert for Ebola’

East Africa News (August 11, 2014)

The east African region has been set on its toes following the revelation of an outbreak of Ebola infections in west Africa this March. This disease, which was first identified in the Democratic Republic of Congo and Sudan in the 70s, has been a recurring scourge in the region. However, the lastest outbreak in west Africa, where it has never been recorded, is regarded as the worst in history. Over 1,000 people have been reported infected and nearly 700 dead from the virus in Liberia, Sierra Leone and Nigeria. This has forced the World Health Organization (WHO) to designate Ebola an international public health emergency.

According to local sources, the relative inexperience of the local population with this disease and the unpreparedness of health facilities for such an infection has exacerbated its wide diffusion and fatality. Many west African nations have expressed concerns about a possible spread of this infection into their borders and have set up preventive measure to curb this possibility. In east Africa, where the population and health experts are well acquainted with the disease, the scene is quite similar. Meanwhile, health experts have raised concerns about the disease resurfacing in the region – particularly in countries like Uganda, DRC and Sudan, where it has a history.

Ebola surveillance and preventive measures: Last week, the Rwandan Health Ministry announced that mobile health centers have been created at all entry points into the country (including the country's main airport) to screen people. Rwandair employees are also set to be trained on how to deal with infected passengers. Local sources say health facilities across the country are on high alert for the virus and have expressed confidence in their ability to contain an infection. In Kenya, officials have also been screening passengers at the Jomo Kenyatta International Airport.

The Director of Medical Services, Dr. Nicholas Muraguri, told the VOA recently that the country has "a contingency plan that's been coordinated by an Ebola outbreak response team which has a number of sub-committees looking at various aspects." He also hailed the preparedness of Kenya Medical Research Foundation (KEMRI) to guide the collection and testing of samples from patients.

The Ethiopian Federal Ministry of Health has also set up its defenses against this scourge. Last week, a workshop was organized by the Ministry in Addis Ababa to educate health workers on the Ebola virus. Reports indicate that more than 200 participants attended the event. Meanwhile, the Ministry has reportedly also formulated a preparedness plan and equipped a unit of front line health workers with the necessary equipments to respond to an outbreak.

Patients with Ebola symptoms placed in quarantine: At least three people, suspected of being infected with Ebola, have been isolated from the public in three countries in the region in the past few days. On Sunday, the Rwandan symptoms consistent with the deadly disease. Reports indicate that samples have been collected from the patient and transferred to an international laboratory for testing. The results are expected to be released in about 48 hours.

Ministry of Health revealed that a German medical student, who recently returned from Liberia, had been quarantined after reporting

Meanwhile, in a press release on Monday, the Ministry allayed growing concerns after disclosing that the unidentified German national is recovering. “his temperature has significantly gone down and he is recovering well from malaria and other symptoms,” the press release noted. The Ministry further announced that other people, who had come in contact with the patient and were resultantly also quarantined, have shown no symptoms of infection. In Kenya, a Congolese traveler was detained last Friday at the Jomo Kenyatta International Airport after showing signs of Ebola.

However, over the weekend, the Health Ministry announced that tests results have revealed that the 43 year old was only suffering from food poisoning and has been responding well to treatment. In Uganda, another patient quarantined under the suspicion of being infected with Ebola has been set free after test results revealed that he did not have the disease. Reports indicate that the passenger, who was held up at the Entebbe airport, had been travelling from South Sudan. This is the second false Ebola infection scare in Uganda since the virus resurfaced in west Africa earlier in the year.

Regional Airlines defy health scare: As fears over the inability of local authorities to contain the virus continues to grow, airline operators have displayed some apprehension about visiting countries that have recorded cases of Ebola. At least two international airline operators have temporarily stopped flights to some west African destinations recently. The International Air Transport Association (IATA) has however failed to impose any travel restrictions on flights to/from countries affected by the virus.

According to reports, this is partly due to the fact that the disease isn’t airborne. Although the possibility of an infected patient travelling by plane and spreading the virus is credited, authorities say it does not warrant a total travel ban. Meanwhile, the World Health Organization (WHO) has published guidelines for airlines to deal with suspected cases of Ebola infection. The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) has reportedly also been collaborating with the IATA to control the spread of the virus.

Kenya Airways has announced that flights to west African destinations will not be stopped due to the outbreak of Ebola. The company’s CEO, Titus Naikuni, has however revealed that the airline is working closely with the country’s health authorities to monitor the spread of the virus. Ethiopian Airlines has instituted surveillance and preventive measures against Ebola. In a recent statement, the company noted that “The safety and well-being of our customers and staff always come first…Ethiopian has taken the lead in taking extraordinary precautions in connection with the outbreak of the disease in some parts of West Africa.”

Rwandair has also revealed that flights to affected countries will not be stopped. The company has further disclosed that measures have been put in place to ensure the safety of its passengers and staff. Reports indicate that the governments of Uganda and Kenya are set to dispatch health experts to assist west African nations contain the widespread Ebola infection. (Text ends)

'Term limits cannot solve Africa's problems' -Paul Kagame

New Vision (June 22, 2015)

Six Ugandan journalists visiting Rwanda on Thursday and Friday attended President Paul Kagame’s rallies in two remote districts. On their way back to Kigali they had a brief meeting with him at Karongi district headquarters. David Mukholi and Raziah Athman, who represented Vision Group, bring you excerpts of the interview.

QUESTION: For the last two days when meeting people in Rutsiro and Karongi districts, people raised issues concerning them but prominent among them was the call that you run for president in 2017. How do you feel when such calls are passionately made?

ANSWER: What is more important to me (and maybe that is the reading people should have had) is not that people want something for the sake of it. It is because of the benefit. It is not about somebody’s good looks. This person maybe has delivered something. You saw the women and men talk about their journey in their lives. They tell you how it has happened. The question of how do I feel. First, of all I must tell you I did feel good about it from the sense all of us are part of this transformation that is happening.

It is not just me, because it can’t be me alone. The others who utilise the opportunities and resources and change their lives have to be there. It is not the good story that I have told them, not my presence and kinds of lectures I give them. In the end if they go back home and don’t do things themselves nothing will happen. We share credit across the board. Those who implement and realise the difference deserve the credit because they could choose to sleep and do nothing. It is a good feeling I think for everyone, including myself and the country. It is a question of how we contextualise it.

If you look at where Rwanda is vis-à-vis others, meaning developed and even middle-income countries you start wondering where we have been. We feel challenged and feel we want to do more. There is no doubt at one point I will be very clear myself where I stand and what I intend to do. There is no hurry, 2017 is slightly over two years to finish this mandate. What follows after is something that will come out sooner or later. It has a context; we will see. I have not allowed any pressure on me to say where I stand. Of all problems I have faced in my life this is not a very different one. I have had complicated ones. I have dealt with more complicated challenges than making a decision to pronounce myself on this.

Are term limits good for Africa?

There are too many things said about it; in my view many times, exaggerated. I don't think the problems Africa faces have anything to do with one thing: term limits. I don't think the problem can be solved by term limits, neither, I would I say term limits are a solution to Africa's problems.

As you saw, when we were talking to the masses, the poverty, hunger they have and readiness to bring up solutions is not related to term limits. It may be related to politics but not to term limits or no term limits. It is related to politics, which politics can and do go wrong whether you have term limits or not. If we say no term limits, will you not find problems? What has to be done is completely different.

Have we managed to put in place institutions that define us and serve us beyond this single discussion of term limits? Creating rule of law, parliament that functions, civil society and private sector doing what they should do. Do we have government in places that are responsive to people's needs beyond thinking about these term limits or no term limits? Term limits have nothing to do with democracy. Because the proponents of term limits argue that if you overstay you get drunk with power. Yes, that is part of the problem but not the main problem. Look at Singapore. Lee Kuan Yew was there for 32 years.

What he managed to do for his people is incredible – transforming his country from a third to first world. If term limits had been the solution, I don't know. I am not sure. Even those who said all kinds of things about him when he passed away, they have good stories about him. When he was there he was being bashed all the time, I think he ignored it and concentrated on delivering; making sure transformation takes place.

In other places I have heard people saying, if I am elected for the second term I want to go for the third. But I will ask why? If limiting yourself is democracy, then why go for the second term why not finish the first and say I am done? If the shorter time you serve the better the legacy is, then why don't people do that?

Let us look at Nelson Mandela, he was a wonderful person for different reasons. The question is, if he left after serving one term and if you want to emulate him, then even those with term limits shouldn't have two terms they should go for one term and just serve and go. The arguments for term limits are sometimes confusing and convoluted. People put personal emotions than certain realities that are how things break away from the context.

We as African leaders should think about the people we lead. I have some kind of anger; we can't continue to be under the load for all these decades with all the resources the content is endowed with. And just continue with the names of poverty, disease and conflict. Why should that happen; is it because people have not observed term limits? No. In some places in Africa, term limits are observed but has it helped? I don't think so. So, therefore, what is the obsession with term limits? Even if it is a good thing, it is a good thing in combination with other things, it is not something that stands alone. The context and substance are important. Sometimes people are singing these songs from outside. Professors of democracy are good at being professors but not executing it.

Sometimes we want to appear like the West. The same people who shout about democracy don't have term limits. You have kingdoms then you have prime ministers who can go on as long as their parties get elected. So what is this nonsense about? (laughs)...

But there could be and there are some merits in limiting terms of service in a flexible way to act as those things for checks and balance. But if you check and don't balance you have a mess.

While addressing opinion leaders in Karongi district on Thursday night, you mentioned a country that is accusing Rwanda of stealing minerals; which is this?

It is not a matter of saying, which country.

It has been in the newspapers anyway. Some of the countries in question who talk about it are those neighbours who say we have exploited their resources. But then there are others who exploit those resources who also start saying this. You don't know how much we have gone through to try to prove. For example, coltan is the mineral used against Rwanda for political reasons, saying we get it from Congo and we don't have the mineral.

That is a fact. We have brought representatives of these countries and journalists to visit the mines where the coltan comes from. They found people making money from it but when they go back they accuse us of the same thing. Rwanda's coltan is better quality than any in the region including the Democratic Republic of Congo. But because they want to write different stories they have framed a narrative about Rwanda. In Congo, it is not about FDR; forget that the international community created a force on that basis. One hand they say they are 20,000 then another that they don't exist. They say these people are just there to exploit. They have now been exposed and people, if they continue with it, will get to see the truth and they will start losing their credibility.

You hinted at the gas in Lake Kivu and plans to generate power and considering starting the project?

We are launching it at the end of this month. We have a lot of methane gas but we have opted to convert it to power generation.

The process is complex. Methane gas is mixed with other gasses underwater. So, we shall extract all of them, separate them and retain the methane which we shall fire for electricity generation. Then return all the other gases into the water. Contour Global, the firm we have contracted, is trying to do this so as to keep the lake secure by avoiding any imbalances. We are going to have production starting with 25MW. This means, if we get it, then the technology is working; then it is a question of scaling up.

On the East Africa Community, especially the Northern Corridor infrastructure development. It seems Rwanda and Uganda are lagging behind as Kenya moves ahead.

I will not characterise it that way yet. Kenya had something existing, while between Uganda and Rwanda there was nothing existing so we have to create something from scratch in terms of railway and so on. The process is also complex involving mobilising resources, carrying out studies and organising significant amounts of money. Yet we are not about to invest in infrastructure and forget other areas. This is the challenge too. But I am happy that this whole thing started. It is a good step that we agreed to work together. It is something important.

As chairman of the Africa Union, President Robert Mugabe recently said African leaders put a yoke around their necks by having term limits and later trying to change them by justifying their actions. Its seems you are using the people to ask and not like your counterpart in Uganda?

Yes. I am not telling anybody to ask. If they asked me a different thing, I will respect. If many say you need to rest, I would say thank you so much. Let me argue for those others (not my case at least not yet); those others who put term limits in their constitutions and changed them because there is nothing that can't change. Which part of the world has never tampered with the constitution?

We put something in the constitution because it served a purpose at the time. But every tampering is not correct because some can change because they want to serve some causes that are not justified, just for things that suit them. This should not be for every case. We can take case by case and see which some have changed for a bad reason and those for good reasons. It is also possible that for those who put term limits in the constitution maybe it was on a wrong premise, under influence or pressure. We live in a not so black and white world, things many times are grey. May be in the beginning when they put them in the constitution they didn't think much about what they were doing. They were told what to do, whatever pressure, they just went with the fashion. Maybe they thought it was a good thing they tried and it served them for a time then released they need some adjustments when they found it unnecessary.

This President-public interaction: Why did you initiate it and how good is it? Given the history of this country, people are patriotic and they love their country. What have you done?

I will start with the second question. I don't think patriotism is to be pushed down people's throats. They become patriotic if they want to. We give them a message, we explain it around things they can do and benefit from. With these illustrations and explanations. Of course, things are being done that benefit them. Then out of the interaction the message goes down very well and patriotism becomes a reality. You must not ask people to become patriotic. It is a complex situation – interaction, illustrations sharing of lessons that people who want to make a difference; this amounts to a whole country changing for the better. It takes a time of its own. Only keep messaging to keep the fi re going.

The people then get together to fight anything that undermines the progress as a country. On accountability we are conscious, if we use the normal process from point A to F, a great amount of truth will be lost. Or so many things will be added to the truth, giving it a different colour. It is important to have this system running but support that with direct contact, interaction and interventions. Then you get to know what you have been feeding on is not always the truth. That is when you call people in the open to account.

The good thing about it is someone caught in it will not repeat it and others who are witnessing will not be involved. They leave not wanting to get involved because they know someone standing before a crowd shown how guilty he is, is a bigger punishment than sending people to prison for 10 months. Public accountability is a way of exposure. It is a good lesson, without hurting everybody. It is corrective as well as educative.

Where do you want to see Rwanda in 10 years from now?

Let me start from the other end. A prosperous country where poverty is not something that is our main preoccupation to deal with but rather our children have gone to school and acquired skills, advanced in technology, part of our way of life, incomes of families, a middle-class that being the minimum for the majority of our population which is that of the middle class level.

Of course there will be nothing if society is not stable. Rule of law and security are paramount. We can't make these gains without security. Twenty years from now I want to see GDP per capita as high as a couple of thousands. And Rwandans as happy as anyone wants to be. At least it is possible. I think some decent progress has taken place, which is good.

Can we do more? Of course, as the population increases, it brings with it more challenges. For every five or 10 years come challenges on top of the previous one, if they have not been addressed.

I foresee more challenges come when you have more tools to deal with them. (Source: New Vision Uganda)

RWANDA: Security Chief arrested in London -BBC

(BBC June 27, 2015) But Human Rights Watch reported that in their drive for military victory and to control the population, the RPF killed thousands, including government troops, members of the militia and some civilians in numerous executions and massacres.

Ignacio Jovtis, of Amnesty International in Madrid, said he hoped Gen Karake would be sent to face trial in Spain: "We think that Spain has started the investigation in 2008 and nothing happened until today. It is good news". Gen Karake is the first major RPF figure to be arrested under charges brought abroad. Source: http://www.bbc.com/news/uk-33238670

Don't terrorise me, Rwanda's Paul Kagame tells Western countries' By

ALPHONCE SHIUNDU in RUBAYA, RWANDA

Rwanda's President Paul Kagame led his people on Saturday in marking the 21st anniversary of the Liberation Day at a public meeting in a rural village where he criticised unnamed "powerful countries" that had dared question his human rights record.

In a hard-hitting speech delivered in Kinyarwanda in Rubaya, Gicumbi District in Northern Rwanda, Kagame said the Western countries “had no right" to tell him and the people of Rwanda what to do in the country's march towards development.

Addressing thousands of his citizens who had turned up at the grounds for the meeting, Kagame said his country did not need lessons on human rights "from the people who worked with and protected the people who committed the genocide".

"I have read in the papers that some very powerful countries are sending me a goodwill message as we mark the 21st Liberation Day, but then, they tell me that even as I develop the country, I need to respect human rights. I want to respond: Do you think those who fought for this liberation do not know what they were fighting for?" said Rwanda's Head of State.

"Do you think I am a person who needs to be reminded about what I should be doing for the people of Rwanda, especially, at this time when I am their leader? The one who is telling me about human rights is the same one who supported the regime that killed Rwandans 21 years ago. Some of them keep supporting and hiding those who committed genocide," said Kagame.

Dignity and prosperity

Kagame, who served as the chairman of the High Command of the Rwanda Patriotic Front in the struggle to rid Rwanda of the oppressive regime of Juvenal Habyarimana, said the "sacrifice" of the struggle made it difficult, even impossible, for Rwanda to bow to the pressure.

The choice of Rubaya, where the sickbay, garage and other logistics supplies for RPF were based, was a reminder to the military and the people of Rwanda about the origins of the struggle, and a symbolic "thank you" to the residents for the "protection and sacrifice" they made over two decades ago.

Liberation Day is marked every July 4 to remember the day when RPF, the army Kagame led 21 years ago, stopped the genocide with the takeover of the capital Kigali.

For Kagame, it was his chance to tell the people of Rwanda about "dignity and prosperity" – a call for them to ignore foreign ultimatums. "Liberation is our business! We have the will and the understanding required to develop our country. Nobody can love us more than we love ourselves. They can help us, and for that, we are grateful. But just because they help us, doesn't mean they can take away our dignity," said Kagame as the crowd cheered waving miniature flags of Rwanda.

The speech peppered with fervent patriotism and immense national pride, the Rwanda leader said all countries and all global leaders should engage with him and his government on a platform of “mutual respect”. (Text ends)

SEX & RELATIONSHIPS: Labia elongation still alive in Rwanda

By This Is Africa on August 12, 2015 — While some in the Western world undergo expensive surgeries to 'beautify' their vaginas by labia reduction, some Rwandan women engage in the age-old practice of labia elongation and may be reaping the rewards

The Great Lakes region is known for having well-established, women-centred practices surrounding sexual intercourse. For many generations, men in Uganda, Burundi, Congo and Tanzania have been expected to induce female orgasms (known as kunyaza) and even what’s commonly known as ‘squirting’ in the West.

To add to this, is a procedure of labia elongation colloquially referred to as ‘Guca Imyeyo‘ which means ‘to cut brooms’. The practice, traditionally kept secret from the knowledge of men, involves a pubescent girl gently pulling out her labia outwards by applying force and special herbs to them. The knowledge of these special herbs is passed on to the girl from older women in the community or within her family.

According to Orijin Culture, the girl would pull at her labia minora everyday for 10 – 20 minutes until well into adulthood and even marriage. Many women who participate in the practice believe that the elongated labia aid in ejaculation and kunyaza.

Interestingly, in the Western world, many women consider large labia to be unsightly. They even seek out surgical intervention and pay for labiaplasties to ‘beautify’ their vaginas. However, while being being a pragmatic ‘form follows function’ approach to sex, the World Health Organization had classified labia elongation as a form of genital mutilation, according to a Medical News Today report.

This ancient practice challenges the idea that sex and sexuality are, traditionally, taboo on the content. Is the shameful approach towards sex an African attitude or is it an outdated colonial inheritance like homophobia?

African women are increasingly talking about sex and voicing their concerns. In Kenya, some ladies are learning the technique of kachabali which also includes non-penetrative sex. With kachabali, large labia are beneficial to a woman’s pleasure sensation. (Text ends)

President Paul Kagame To Rwandans:

President Kagame End of Year’s Address to Rwandans and Friends of Rwanda "You requested me to lead the country again after 2017. Given the importance and consideration you attach to this, I can only accept.

What remains is to follow the normal laws and procedures when the time comes. But I do not think our aim is to have a President for life, nor is it what I would want. Sooner rather than later, this office will be transferred from one person to another in a manner that will serve a purpose, not merely set an example, whether for ourselves or ot...hers. That is why we need to remain fully engaged on Rwanda's journey of transformation."

TRENDING: Rwanda's mega solar project powers 15,000 homes in first year By Arthur Chatora on November 30, 2015

The $23.7m mega solar plant, which was completed last year in record time, created 350 jobs, increased Rwanda's generation capacity by 6 percent, providing energy to more than 15,000 households in its first year. This $24m project is the first utility-scale, grid-connected, commercial solar field in east Africa that has increased Rwanda's generation capacity by 6%.

Electricity consumption per capita in sub-Saharan Africa is one-sixth of the world's average. Rwanda has made a major stride in moving towards clean, renewable energy with the completion last year of a major solar plant, creating jobs and setting the country on the path to providing half its population with electricity by 2017, The Guardian reported.

Completed within a year, the project is the first utility-scale solar energy initiative in East Africa, a partnership of Gigawatt Global, Norfund and Scatec Solar. "The success of the solar plant is crucial to Rwanda's plan to provide electricity to 70 percent of its 11.8 million citizens by June 2018," CS Monitor reported.

The $23.7m plant, designed so that, from a bird's-eye view, it resembles the shape of the African continent, produces 8.5 megawatt (MW), according to The Guardian. Construction of the plant, built on a 17-hectare site has reportedly "created 350 local jobs and increased Rwanda's generation capacity by 6%, powering more than 15,000 homes".

According to the World Bank, Africa has an enduring energy problem and "power is inaccessible, unaffordable, and unreliable for most people. This traps people in poverty". "Solutions to this problem include: boosting cross-border power trade, improving existing utility companies, improving access to electricity on a large scale, while helping countries chart low-carbon growth paths," the World Bank says.

To stimulate economic growth, tackle poverty and boost job creation, Rwanda’s successful investments in solar energy have been applauded by many as the way forward.

LEGISLATION:
Rwanda Lawmakers Approve Swahili As The Official Language, Dropping French Completely

THE REAL AFRICAN March 26, 2017:
Rwanda is setting an example for the rest of the African countries. Its about time we drop the colonial legacy and go back to our roots. After all there is no European with an African name or African language as their official language…..Good job Rwanda, wake the rest of the sleeping countries up.

This is great development, if Rwanda still hold on that colonial tight with France, they would not have gone this far, France is evil blood suckered, they keep developing and building their country, But most Country they colonize are living in objective poverty, they dominated their entire existence.

What is Paul Kagame, nicknamed "the pilate", like personally?

Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Answered October 25, 2018 ·
Upvoted by Mutoni August lives in Kigali, Rwanda (2008-present)

Humble, calm, and composed.

PK biking around Kigali last Sunday (21 October 2018) during the Car-free day. After he went to do regular community sports with the residents of Kigali.

The guy is very HUMBLE, patriotic, and loves his people.

I have attended many meetings and conferences where Paul Kagame spoke. Rwanda Day events, different meetings, and conferences when I was working in the development sector.

As a Rwandan expat, I just happen to keep up with the politics of Rwanda, home and abroad. He kinda dominates the world of politics in Rwanda, at least outside of Rwanda.

In summer 2010, I actually got really close to interacting with him, but my friend got the opportunity. I will tell you what I saw in person, very close to him.

The guy in blue is a good friend of mine. All the young folks in this picture are my friends. My friend (JC), interacting with PK. He is explaining his research project while PK is telling him its potential applicability in Rwanda.

I was a university student in Arkansas. PK had come for a meeting in Bentonville, AR where Walmart has its HQ. If I am not mistaken, he had come to talk with Walmart about business opportunities in Rwanda.

His trip was business-related. I believe Walmart was exploring the African market and had invited PK for some market research meeting.

Once we knew he was going to be around, a meeting was organized to meet the Rwandan community in Arkansas. Many of the attendees were university students. His protocol agreed to organize a meeting on a really short notice!

During the meeting, we kept thanking him to come to speak with us, but he would respond that he never turns down an opportunity to speak with the Rwandan youth. He kept saying " you are the future of Rwanda", " Rwanda is counting on your success".

He talked about studying hard, discipline, remembering where we came from, expectations from friends and families back home, etc. Our meeting was very much like a father to son/daughter talk.

It was very inspirational. We were not that many, so the meeting was very informal and close. I was very inspired to have that kind of interaction with my president. He came across as humble, down to earth, yet serious, fatherlike figure, yet president.

I remember some of his advice to us. I was a sophomore in college, barely 20 years old. He challenged us to study hard, seek to improve ourselves and Rwanda and think about our families and friends back home.

He kept saying the following statements (I will paraphrase them, sorry its been too long).

You have the opportunities that your friends at home don't have.

You are attending some of the best universities in the world.

You have access to the best resources in the world.

Rwanda is counting on your success to move forward.

As you study here, don't forget your friends and family back home. They will need you, just like We (Rwanda) need you.

We talked about the progress Rwanda had made by then, the challenges along the way, and what we can do to help in the development of Rwanda.

Then came time to ask questions, pitching some projects that some of us were working on, etc. This is where he caught me by surprise.

A friend of mine was explaining his research he was doing and wanted to see if he could bring it home. I don’t remember the details but my friend was an electronic engineering student. During that session, PK was very attentive. He was following point by point, asking questions about applications and suitability in Rwanda. My friend was a junior in college then.

What surprised me was his humbleness, attention to details, care and passion for Rwanda. In the end, we took some photos after the session closed the session.

That was one of the most memorable times of my life. It speaks so much of his character, competence, and diligence. As a Rwandan, I am really glad he is my president. He comes across as approachable, humble, and open.

I don’t think I can say the same about the mayor of my district in Rwanda.

PK is the people’s president. African leaders are not known to be humble. PK cares about the people of Rwanda. When he is touring the country talking to the citizens, you can feel the connection with regular folks.

Didier Champion's answer to Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?

He is very motivational, inspirational, and always leads by example.

President Kagame, thanking his fellow African leaders for trusting him as the chairman of the African Union.

Didier Champion's answer to How did Paul Kagame rebuilt Rwanda after the genocide? Did I answer your question? I hope so.
Cheers to Rwanda Today.

Is Paul Kagame, nicknamed "the pilate"a good leader for Rwanda?

For Rwandans, this is not even a question. The facts on the ground speak for themselves. As a republic, Paul Kagame is the best leader Rwanda has ever had.

From 1962 to 1994, our politics was based on ethnicity and divisionism. It was identity politics. There was no content to it. After 3 decades of hate and divisionism, a genocide breaks out in 1994. It kills one million people in 100 days.

Rwanda was officially declared a failed state.
The international community sits back and watches the whole massacre unfold from beginning to end. The United Nations whose job was to prevent such events to happen again after the Holocaust ignores Rwanda completely. The whole country was destroyed. Infrastructure destroyed. Teachers, doctors, and many intellectuals are murdered. The country was brought to her needs.

It fell through a deep hole.
The kind you cannot get out of by yourself.
The kind of hole you need a hand to get back up.
The kind you need to open your eyes and see the sun again.
There is nothing poetic about this. Some of us did not think we were ever going to see the sun again.
It was a tough time. The kind of times you would not be able to describe to your kids.
It was indeed a difficult time. I mean, terrible times. Really, horrible times.
Who was there to save the day?

Paul Kagame and his Rwandan Patriot Army/Front.

If it was not the courage of these men and women, I don't know where Rwanda would be today. Their hope, resilience and determination saved Rwanda and Rwandans.

Paul Kagame and his Rwandan Patriotic Front. Our heroes who saved Rwanda and made it what it is today. We will always be grateful for their sacrifice and dedication to Rwanda. We can never thank them enough!

In the early 1990's, Paul Kagame was a respected General in the Ugandan Army. He already had the money and power in the Ugandan Army. He was very comfortable following some training and army courses in the United States military in Kansas.

He did not need to come home to fight for his rights as a citizen of his own home country.
He did not need to join the jungle, sleep in trenches, and other uncomfortable combat situations.

But he did accept to lose his ranks in the Ugandan Army to save his fellow Rwandans. Rwandan refugees who were scattered in neighboring countries (Uganda, Tanzania, Burundi, Tanzania, and elsewhere).

In 100 days, from April 7th to July 4th, 1994, his RPF was able to take over the whole country. Many people don't even know that Genocide stopped because his army had taken over the control of the whole country. Genocide did not stop because of any negotiation. It stopped because the good guys fought the genocidal government day and night, until its last breath.

On July 4th 1994, PK's Rwandan Patriot Front declared victory after taking over the whole country and the city of Kigali.

- From 1994 to 1998, this was a tough time for Rwanda.

Many thought the RPA was going to commit another genocide. They thought their purpose was to take over the country and vengeance for themselves. Many soldiers' families were wiped out completely. There was a possibility for revenge. The kind of revenge that would have erased Rwanda completely. Luckily, that did not happen.

Paul Kagame and his advisors had a different " master" plan.

- Take control of the whole country.
- Restore peace and security.
- Unite Rwandans again and bring back hope.

Only Light can take out darkness. Darkness combined with more darkness gives more darkness.

I am very thankful because they chose to go with light. There is a high probability that Rwanda would have been off of the map today had they chosen differently. I certainly would NOT be answering this question today. I would have gone to wherever dead people go. I would have been forgotten a long time ago.

Love always trumps hate.

PK is NOT power hungry. He is never been!

Initially, he did not even want to be the president. He had never been a politician. He had been in the military his whole life. After 1994, he was the minister of defense. Without him in charge, things didn't go as fast they wanted to initially.

Upon the pressure from his party, he was advised to take over as the chairman of RPF (Rwandan Patriotic Front). He had won the respect from his colleagues for his work and leadership during the liberation struggle.

As soon as he got in power in 2000, the slogan of unity, peace, and reconciliation was everywhere. In schools, these ideals were drilled in our heads before we could understand what they meant. The same way, American kids sing America the Beautiful or recite the Pledge of Allegiance.

President Kagame and Commander-in-Chief inspecting his troops on Liberation Day (July 4th 2017).

In villages, in urban centers, cities and communities, people were engaged to view themselves as Rwandan instead of their (old) ethnic groups. This was very hard to preach to the adults. But, talking about your " Hutuness" or "Tutsiness" became a huge taboo.

It was a tough strong medicine, but in my opinion the patient needed it.

These ethnicities were at the heart of Rwandan issues. The government did not have time to negotiate. They simply got rid of the meaning they used to carry before 1994.

1. They got rid of them in national ID's.
2. Instead of referring to people by Hutu or Tutsi on a daily basis, people started to be referred to as Rwandans.
3. In schools, you did not have to belong to a certain family to get admitted. Any kid had access to education regardless of their family background.
4. I can go on and on, but many things have changed for the better. You can read about them in this article in greater detail.

How is Rwanda, one of Africa's smaller countries, amongst the most powerful nations in Africa? What is their leverage?

This did not happen overnight. Change is always hard.

But, slowly and steadily, Rwandans got the gist of it. In schools, in churches, in community meetings, unity, peace, reconciliation was preached and advertised everywhere, radios and national TVs.

Later, after a solid foundation was laid, it slowly changed to unity, peace, and sustainable growth and development through hard work and patriotism.

Rwanda today is where it is because of Kagame's leadership, his love and passion for Rwanda. In Rwanda, the government is the main driver of everything.

- If Rwanda is peaceful and united, it is because of the work they are doing.
- If Rwanda is doing well economically, it is because of the government policies to boost tourism and investment.

More than economic growth or political stability, Paul Kagame deserves credit to restoring peace and unity among the Rwandan people. In the Rwandan context, there is no amount of money you can attribute to a united-peaceful Rwanda.

As long as we are united and peaceful, we will always prosper and figure out the rest; Economic growth and sustainable development. Rwandan people have always been hardworking and resilient. It is unfortunate that hate and divisionism plagued us after our so-called independence. We wasted 30 years as a country from the 1960's to 1990's.

The past is quite dark, ugly and shameful, but the future is bright and promising.

As the president of Rwanda,

- Paul Kagame inherited a small poverty-stricken country with many issues, politically and economically.
- He inherited a miserable country, recovering from a combination of a civil war and a brutal genocide.
- He inherited a society that had collapsed down in a big way.

I don't want to bother you with statistics and numbers. I have shared many articles already. I will leave them in the reference section for you.

However, I have been collecting some pictures of "then" and "today". I will share a few and let the facts speak for themselves.

The city of Kigali, before and after!

This is probably the most popular roundabouts in downtown Kigali. See the difference for yourself before 1994 and Today (2018).

The office of Kigali City before 1994 and today (2018).

It is remarkable to see the work that the leadership of Kagame has done for Rwanda. Even more surprising, it is quite impressive to see the passion and love that he has done it with. He loves the people of Rwanda and they love him back. Politics is never easy. In case of Rwanda, it is even more complex and complicated. However, the facts don't lie.

The fact of the matter is that even since he took over the presidency:

- Rwanda is more united and peaceful than ever.
- Rwanda is more developed and progressive than ever.
- Rwandan people are more hopeful than ever.

Paul Kagame is the kind of leader any African citizen would want to have. Passion, vision, and work ethic combined altogether in one.

- Hates corruption at its core.
- Promotes women rights in all aspects.
- Likes technology and how it can be used in Rwanda's economic development.
- Empowers the young folks and inspires them to be the best in their professions.
- Likes Rwanda and shows it in action, and not just in words.
- Says it like it is without any fear. He is fearless in his defense for Rwanda. He has never been apologetic to be Rwandan or African.

He is the man of action. A jack of all trades.

- A military general, a charismatic leader, a businessman, and an outstanding marketer. He is the complete opposite of what regular politicians do. African politicians are usually " all talk no action".
- Paul Kagame is more like a "do more and talk less" kind of leader. He gets stuff done and lets facts speak for themselves.

Do Rwandans like change all the time? NO! It is very hard to change habits. Especially the bad ones.

But over time, we have learned to adjust accordingly. I remember those days when the government banned plastic bags, required you to wear helmets on a motorcycle, encouraged you to clean the city, started the Umuganda (monthly community service), changed French to English, and many others. I thought these changes came too fast and that there is no way the changes were to be implemented and executed. I was very wrong!

Overtime, I have been wrong and wrong very many times. In fact, I have come to realize that whenever I am skeptical of something, it will probably work better. Even today, I am still hesitant about banning second hand clothes from the United States, and massive land consolidation to boost modern agriculture, and other development issues. Time and time again, I know I will be proven wrong over time and that is totally okay.

What surprises me even more is how humble and calm he has been throughout as a leader. He is always humble, motivational, inspirational and leads by example, not just in Rwanda, but also in Africa.

As a Rwandan, I can tell you that he is the best president we have ever had. He is the father of modern Rwanda. He is the master architect of the "Rwanda Project". This project was long overdue and failing badly, but he came in at the right time. He saved the day. As the CEO of Rwanda, Inc, he has kept the board members and shareholders happy and satisfied.

As a shareholder, I approve of his performance. It has been a pleasure to follow his leadership as a citizen of Rwanda. Wherever I am, I am no longer "ashamed" to say that I am a proud Rwandan. Keep calm and love Rwanda.

The easiest thing I do every 7 years is voting for this guy (Voting in presidential election 2017).

I sure hope we get more good passionate leaders after his presidency. He has laid out a good vision and a good foundation for the country. Those who come after will be able to build on what he has done to move this country forward to even greater heights.

I wish Rwanda more peace, stability and economic growth.

Cheers!

What will happen in Rwanda after Paul Kagame's final term in office comes to an end?

Didier Champion lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated July 29, 2018

After Paul Kagame, whoever is the RPF chairman or woman will be the president of Rwanda. Kagame has done an amazing job for Rwanda, but he is not Rwanda. The institutions will keep building the country on the foundation that his visionary and exemplary leadership has set for Rwanda today and tomorrow, for generations and generations.

Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?

Last year (2017), I proudly casted my vote for him. It was my second time voting and I could not have been happier with my choice.For 18 years under his leadership, I am not complaining. Rwandans are not complaining. There is a leadership crisis around the world today. Committed and passionate leaders like him do not come around too often. In Rwandan history, we have never had a leader like him. Thank goodness, we ignored lots of noise from the West and decided to keep the winning team.

As a brand new country, it is imperative that we focus more on the politics of actions and not that of words. The purpose of politics is to provide economic progress, political stability, peace and security for Rwandans and Rwanda.

He has been able to provide that and despite all the nonsense in the US and European media, I was happy that he respected our demands and decided to stay as the president of Rwanda.

As we continue to build our country, we need a strong and passionate leader who has been there from the beginning and know what it takes to lead a country like Rwanda. His expertise, his energy, love and passion for a peaceful, united, and progressive Rwanda.

As a Rwandan, I did not want to take any gamble on anyone else. This was not a time to play politics in exchange for our stability, peace, steady economic growth and long term visionary thinking.

Rwanda is still standing. Kagame is still the president.

- Rwanda is safer than ever.
- Rwanda and her people are more determined than ever.
- Rwanda and Rwandans are even more ambitious than ever.

No Rwandan shareholder (I know) wanted to change the CEO of Rwanda, Inc.

I actually don’t believe he wanted to stay. Rumour has it that the party elders had to convince him that he was still the man to take Rwanda to the promised land. That is why the signatures from Rwandans kept coming in from all over the world. Both from Rwandans, home and abroad. At many Rwandan Embassies around the world.

The board of directors wanted him to stay too. Although, he gives him hell about what it means to be a good servant of the people, they too did not hesitate to approve the people’s requests to extend his term limits as the president of Rwanda.

Again, as a Rwandan who knows my country better than any foreign national. A Rwandan whose family lives in Rwanda. I would have fought like hell if anybody wanted to change things. I want to keep him for another six years until 2024, then I would want him to go to the African Union leadership. By that time, Africa will need him more than Rwanda.

For 25 years, he would have laid a solid foundation of what Rwanda needs to be from 2025 to 2050. Today, we have so many leaders who will take on the challenge. Although, it is not going to be easy to be compared to Kagame all the time or to fill his shoes, I am sure we are going to manage fine without him.

Whenever that time comes, we are sure going to miss him badly. Thanks to him, Rwanda is here to stay.

- We have a beautiful country to be proud of.
- We have a clean, organized capital city to be proud of.
- He has promoted women's rights in Rwanda.
- He has restored hope and trust within the Rwandan community.

I am very proud to call him my president. My role model, and the kind leader I want to be one day, whether be in business, politics, or elsewhere.

Long live the forefather of Modern Rwanda. He has given his all to Rwanda and her people. He has challenged us to dream big and to stay accountable together. Finding solutions to our problems, working together in peace and harmony, prioritizing what unites us as Rwandans instead of a few differences.

His legacy is going to stay around forever. What excited even more is that an army of young ambitious minds he has mentored to understand what it takes to be an exemplary leader. Someone who does not just give instructions, but who leads by example by doing, motivating and inspiring all Rwandans, from the young to the old.

Whenever I go back and look at Rwanda in 1994–1997, I almost cry tears of joy and happiness. Those were difficult times for Rwandans. From the refugee camps, coming back home, starting from scratch, building new schools, hospitals, memorial sites, Gacaca Courts, restoring peace, unity and reconciliation process, Vision 2020, from Kigali, to 4 provinces, 30 provinces, and all corners of Rwanda. We really have come a long way.

Today, an attack on PK, whether tarnishing his image or discrediting his legacy in Rwanda, is an attack on Rwanda and Rwandans. I can't do that much about that but I can care less honestly. My passion for Rwanda is too big because I was born and raised in Rwanda. I was there from the beginning and know quite well what I am talking about.

Rwanda has come from afar. We have achieved so much. There is still work to do because we are not where we want to be. Sustainable development we want to achieve is and will always be work in progress. However, I will always look back, and remind my fellow Rwandans, and others that Rwanda Today is like a paradise for me.

I love Rwanda and wherever I am situated or working around the world. I always take the Rwandan pride with me.

For those travels out there, I highly recommend adding Rwanda to your list.

How can one differentiate between a Hutu and Tutsi in East Africa?

C.A. Spears

Studied MBA in Information Technology (Graduated 2019) Oct 26
You cannot always tell who is who because there has been intermarriage. Historically there were differences between them and they had different origins.

Hutu were bantu farmers, and Tutsi ancestors were mostly herders having ancestry from Northern/Northeast Africa - looks like Nilotic and even Middle Eastern ancestry.

On average Tutsi are taller, thinner, have a narrower face, and thinner nose. Hutu are basically the opposite.

*Once again we are talking about “averages”, there is variation within each population because they have been in contact with each other for a long time. There are no exclusive bloodlines anymore, but that does not mean there are not still some differences, and you can still split the populations genetically with enough SNPs (genetic variables), it won’t be clean, but most Hutu would fall on one side and most Tutsi would fall on the other. That’s because genetically “Remember that the Tutsi is 3/4 Tutsi, 1/4 Hutu. “

Source of image

Footnotes

[1] Tutsi Probably Differ Genetically from the Hutu
[2] Tutsis are less Nilotic than the Maasai
[3] Tutsi genetics, ii
[4] https://www.researchgate.net/figure/A-Charts-used-to-help-differentiate-Hutu-and-Tutsi-people-17-B-Symbolic-examples-of_fig1_324972132

Related Links

How can one tell whether someone is Hutu or Tutsi?

Why did the Hutu dislike the Tutsis and vice versa?

What is the difference between West and East Africa?

Why did the Hutu called the Tutsi, "Cockroaches?"

What do the people of Rwanda think of Kagame as their leader? (Both Tutsis and Hutus)

Why did Hutu and Tutsi hate each other so much that 20% of Rwanda population were murdered in the Rwandan Genocide?

Why didn't the Hutus get along with the Tutsis?

Who won the civil war in Rwanda, the Tutsi or the Hutu and how?

What are relations like between Tutsi and Hutu peoples in Rwanda in 2015?

How is the relationship between Hutus and Tutsis today?

What did it feel like to live in Rwanda before and during the 1994 genocide?

Didier Champion Rwandan Blogger (2016–present)July 16, 2020

Read the story of Mazimpaka, a genocide survivor, who survived the killings in 1994-Rwanda. Experience: I survived the Rwandan genocide.

When the president was killed in April 1994, we thought there might be some trouble in the capital, but we had no idea of the scale of what followed.

I was 17 and studying to be a nurse. I was shy, quiet and hard-working. I liked visiting my cousins, and playing football and basketball. My father was a teacher, my mother worked in the education department, and I had two brothers at home and two sisters studying in France and Belgium. We were a normal family.

My family is Tutsi, but there was no Tutsi land or Hutu land. People had mixed marriages. We went to the same schools, lived in the same villages, shared a language. We heard on the radio that Tutsis were being attacked, and that roadblocks were being erected, but we weren't worried for ourselves - we didn't think it would reach where we lived in Nyamasheke in the south-west.

We were wrong. The killings in my town didn't start until a week after the president was killed, but on 15 April a friend, the husband of a teacher, was killed. People with machetes came to steal from his house, and they killed him. Still we thought we were safe and that this was a one-off, but the next day in the neighboring town another teacher and his family were killed and we started to get worried.

A friend warned me our family was next - he was part of the militia, but I used to give him medicine for free and we played football together. We took his warning seriously and that night we stayed with a Hutu friend who had a Tutsi wife. When we went to look at our house the next morning, there was nothing left - everything had been stolen.

We went to the church. Refugees started arriving, too - mostly Tutsis, but some Hutus. Some had machete wounds. They were crying, hungry, desperate and confused. There had been violence in 1959 and 1973; the churches had been a sanctuary then, so people thought they'd be safe. Some of us suggested escaping in boats over Lake Kivu to the Democratic Republic of Congo, but the older people, including my parents, still believed we'd be OK, that we wouldn't be attacked in church.

The next day refugees began to arrive in large numbers. We convinced the school head to open up the supply of food so we could feed them - we still thought with food and water we would be OK.

On 18 April the militia arrived and we saw them preparing to attack. We gathered all the old people, women and children in the buildings and formed four fronts outside to protect them. Young girls found stones for us to throw, and we kept them away for four days. By then it wasn't just the militias, it was the rest of the population as well, including the friend who had warned us - everybody had been brainwashed by the militia to join in. They had machetes, sticks, clubs and grenades. I remember seeing one of my friends hit by a grenade - it scattered his body parts all around.

With some friends I managed to hide in a building that housed a herd of cows. I didn't know whether my parents were dead or alive, but there was no time to look for them and no time to think about it. We had to concentrate on hiding. We stayed hidden while the militia stole the cows. When they were gone, we decided to swim across Lake Kivu.

There were 12 of us - the other 11 drowned. I couldn't think about it, I had to keep swimming. After two nights I reached the other side. A fisherman gave me food and I went to find my uncle who lived there.

A year later, I went back to Rwanda. I was traumatized. I didn't want to go back to school, but a priest convinced me to. After school, I got a job but I wanted to leave. I had two cousins who survived, but everyone else was gone. I couldn't take the loneliness any longer, so in 1999 I came to the UK.

I met my wife, another survivor, through friends. We got married in 2005 and now have a daughter. It's hard for survivors to speak about what happened, and my wife doesn't like to talk about it to strangers. But it helps me, because I am doing something to continue the memory of what happened. I speak to groups about it through the charity Survivors Fund. People are shocked that it happened, that they didn't know. It is exhausting, but that is what we have left, the story of our loved ones.

Why is Rwanda's capital Kigali so clean as to other cities in Africa?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 2y
Originally Answered: Why is Rwanda's Capital Kigali soo clean as to other Cities in Africa?

The answer has to do with the culture of Rwandans and their leadership.

See this hardworking gardener (photo below) taking care of the garden in the middle of the streets. This lady is probably an employee of one of the many private cleaning companies that the city of Kigali use to keep the city clean.

How many people will litter the streets when they see the hard work that these ladies do? Not very many. In the end, you see the work that people do and you do your best to keep the city clean. Less money for cleaning can be translated into lower taxes. Nobody knows how it works, but it works.

In the background, you see another lady sweeping the roads. These ladies do a really good job. They start early in the morning, sweeping, and cleaning our roads. The main factors that make Rwanda a clean country are the following.

Culture. Rwandans do not eat in the streets. The fast food culture is virtually non-existent. If you want to eat, people will go and seat in restaurants to finish their meals. It is very rare to see Rwandans walking and eating. It is part of our culture. We respect the way we consume our food.
Banned plastic bags. This is an old story. Plastic bags are banned in Rwanda. They used to cause lots of trouble, but it's been over a decade without plastic bags in Rwanda. We use biodegradable paper bags instead.

Initiative. If you are downtown Kigali, or other areas on the main streets, you will see trash bins where people throw their trash. Things such as gums, coffee cups, water bottles are collected that way.

Privatize cleaning companies. The city of Kigali has contracted lots of companies to do the cleaning. This goes from lower-income and middle-income as well as upper-income neighborhoods. These companies have done a good job to collecting waste to deposit in landfills.

Awareness about keeping the environment clean and healthy. The monthly community service has made people aware of the importance of cleaning their neighborhoods and areas. With Umuganda, many Rwandans do not litter as much. This goes beyond cleaning, they talk about air quality and environment as well. Planting trees, etc.

Rule of Law. I have been to a few countries where people would burn trash for themselves to deal with waste. You will never see this in Kigali. Citizens will come to your house with complaints and next thing, your local officials will punish you according to the law. Rwandans take these matters very seriously.

Pride. Kigali has been nominated as the cleanest and most environmentally friendly city over 5 years in a row. The Kigalians do not want to lose this title, so they work hard to keep it. Nobody wants to lose to Mauritius and Seychelles.
There is more one could add, but the following tweet summarizes the rest.

Hope this answers your question, User-1102841296925861859 8.

Related Links

Why is Rwanda so clean and there's no poverty or many poor people in Rwanda?

What is it like to live in Kigali, Rwanda today?

What is a good business to start in Kigali, Rwanda?

How can I start a food services business with 500 USD in Kigali-Rwanda?

What advice would you give to someone who is moving to Kigali, Rwanda?
How much does living in kigali Rwanda cost? Could 500 U.S. $ a month be enough?

How did Rwanda develop without any resources? Is it because of the relationship between Rwanda and Congo?

Kevin Richardson, 😞 former Academic Researcher

Updated Feb 14 Former Academic ResearcherUpdated February 14

You have fallen into the trap of Didier Champion and other subversive individuals who used you for their dirty political games. Hitler was also capable of building up the German economy after WWI. It doesn't change the fact that his way was pathed with the worst crimes against humanity. In the case of Paul Kagame, the international community is aware of his crimes, but they turn a blind eye because he is looting the DRC.
There is not even this so-called "economic miracle" in the sense in which it was propagated all the time:

The Congo is a vast country in Africa which, if placed in the U.S., would span from California east to Kansas and from Texas north to North Dakota, filling almost half the United States:

The Congo has nine bordering countries and is in the midst of a worldwide geo-strategic battle for the precious minerals found there, including cobalt, gold, diamonds, copper, manganese, uranium, and others. The Congo produces USD 1 Billion of gold per year.

It is an understatement to say that everyone wants a piece of the Congo. These minerals are vital to the automobile industry, the aerospace industry, and jewelry and technology production. Since 1996 the Congo has been invaded by Rwanda and Uganda for their minerals and is suffering the war's effects to this day. In a country that has been ruled by colonialism and dictators since 1885, it has seen little peace. This police state has no free press, no open political space, and rulers are determined before, and the election even begins. Within the last few months, Congo has been enduring an election where neighboring leaders already determined the outcome before one ballot was cast. It is not for lack of other political groups rising to want to begin the long road of bringing democracy to a struggling nation, but their efforts were in vain, and now the people are suffering the consequences of the last election.

Since 1990, 6.4 million Congolese civilians have been massacred/depopulated with the full knowledge of the US, Britain, and other Western backers which are allowing rebel groups from neighboring countries to kill with impunity. It is the same atrocity as if the 9/11 tragedy in the United States happened every two days. Half of the dead are children under the age of five years old. That would get the attention of the media! Yet, why does this situation in the DRC continually go unreported? Violence is escalating consistently in the Congo, and tens of thousands are murdered every month, but there is no consistent or international reporting on these continued horrors. The dire situation begs the question, 'who will hold these perpetrators accountable?' Sadly, the answer continues to be nobody because the West is too dependent on the financial interests of minerals and money coming out of the Congo.

The world ignored the obvious signs of the pending Rwandan genocide in 1994 and did not intervene. The international community is doing the same thing today in Congo. The DRC was recently declared one of the worst places in the world to be a woman due to the use of rape as a weapon of war. These women and children are being held hostage morally and entire communities are being displaced by rebel groups in order to destabilize the region to gain access to mines and resources. Abject poverty is rampant throughout the Congo as refugees struggle to survive on a daily basis. Rwanda massacred hundreds of thousands of Hutu refugees that fled in fear after the 1994 genocide. Yet, why were children and women also massacred? Why were the sick and the elderly murdered in cold blood? Did they pose a threat to the stability of a new Rwanda under the RPF regime or was it done in revenge? While the death of one does not justify the death of another, I do not believe that anyone would disagree with Rwanda seeking out the Interahamwe to ensure peace in the region.

Today, the Congo is controlled by the corrupt dictatorial network of President Paul Kagame, Rwanda; President Yoweri Museveni, Uganda and the currently re-elected President Felix Tshisekedi (Joseph Kabila's pawn) with the full support of the US, UK, and other nations that have vested interests in the region. There have been no UN sanctions on the Sub-Saharan region for the ongoing atrocities committed in the Congo every day. U.S. President Barack Obama passed the most comprehensive Public Law,# 109-456, to protect the people of the Congo where he clearly noted in section 105 that:

"The Secretary of State is authorized to withhold assistance made available under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.), other than humanitarian, peacekeeping, and counterterrorism assistance, for a foreign country if the Secretary determines that the government of the foreign country is taking actions to destabilize the Democratic Republic of the Congo."

These requirements have been documented in the U.N. Mapping report of 2010 as well as other reports providing proof that Rwanda is destabilizing the region for monetary gain and exports. Yet, the U.S. has provided $1 Billion USD in aid to Rwanda since 2000.

The only way to stop the Congo's nightmare is for the International community to put pressure on Rwanda and Uganda to stop their daily murderous and controlling activities in Congo. The public law named above must be enacted for the Congo citizens to get the justice they deserve. This situation is a global issue affecting every continent. Yet, why does the international community bury their heads in the sand and not intervene? The answer is a complex web of political situations and peacekeeping missions that the US and other western countries do not want to intervene in therefore, if the West continues to allow Rwanda and Uganda to do as they wish in Congo, then they will also handle the peacekeeping missions in African countries such as Sudan and Darfur, so the US does not have to. This thinking proves the point that it is easier to have relations with dictators than democracies.

One has to wonder if the international community had asked the Congolese permission to mine the minerals without displacing, murdering, and raping them, what their answer would have been.

Is Rwanda more developed than most African countries?

Nope. Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated August 2, 2018

The people of Mauritius, Botswana, South Africa, Seychelles, Gabon, Namibia, Egypt, Algeria and Equatorial Guinea are not losing any sleep over Rwanda's rapid economic growth, friendly business climate, rule of law, safety and security and political stability in Rwanda. These are the most developed countries in Africa.

Rwanda is the most progressive country in Africa for the past 2 decades, but we are nowhere near the most developed nations in Africa.

- GDP per capita (PPP): $ 2,000.00 (2018); rank: 36th out of 55.
- HDI: 0.500 (2018); rank: 25th out of 55.
- Life Expectancy (2018); rank: 67 years.
- Corruption Perceptions Index, rank: 4th out of 55.
- Gini Index, rank: 38th out of 55.

In every single one of these economic indicators, Rwanda was ranked in the bottom five in the late 1990's. This is probably why people are very amazed by Rwanda's rapid economic growth, business friendly climate, safety and security, rule of law and accountability of their institutions for the past two decades.

We have been developing fast, but we are not developed yet. Let's talk again in 2040/2050.

Didier Champion's answer to Is Rwanda the most prosperous country in Africa?

Kigali, Rwanda

In fact, I can add more countries on this lists. See this link below.

List of African countries by GDP (PPP) per capita - Wikipedia

Looking at the GDP per capita, literacy rates, HDI, and education, healthcare, life expectancy, and other metrics, Rwanda would probably comes among the top 20. This is based on what country I would want to live in, achieve my goal to become a millionnaire one day (networth of one million bucks), security and peace, and other essential economic metrics.

In my opinion, the following are the prosperous countries in Africa. I am a big fan of Rwanda, and have shared my Rwandan experience and perspective on Quora. Our Rwanda's GDP per capita (PPP) is about $ 2,000.00 (As of 2018).

We have a long-long way to to be called the “ most developed” in East Africa, later on the whole African continent. See the ranking above.

If you are asking, the most efficient system of government in Africa. Rwanda would be number 1 along with Mauritius and Seychelles.

Didier Champion's answer to Why is Rwanda called the Prussia of Africa?

Work ethic, Rule of Law, and Efficiency of the Rwandan people today.

As the most popular writer about Rwanda on Quora, I was actually starting to feel “guilty” until I noticed that these questions are coming from more than one person. Haha, I feel better now. Every writer chooses what they want to write about on Quora, my time on Quora is spent writing and sharing positive stories about Rwanda and Africa. I make no apologies to showcase what Rwanda and Africa (my country and continent) have to offer to the world.

Africa is the future and the next economic frontier.

Below is the top 10 developed countries in Africa.

1. Mauritius (GDP per capita (2017): $ 21, 628.00)

2. Botswana (GDP per capita (2017): $ 18, 146.00)

3. South Africa (GDP per capita (2017): $ 13, 403.00)

Cape Town, South Africa

4. Seychelles (GDP per capita (2017): $ 28, 712.00)

5. Gabon (GDP per capita (2017): $ 19, 266.00)

6. Namibia (GDP per capita (2017): $ 11, 528 .00)

7. Egypt (GDP per capita (2017): $ 12, 994.00)

this.is.egypt
Alexandria, Egypt

this.is.egypt Amazing and beautiful old architecture in downtown Alexandria city , Egypt ..
📸 by @nourmohamedsaad .....

8. Algeria ( GDP per capita (2017): $ 15, 150.00)

9. Morocco (GDP per capita (2017): $ 8, 612.00)

Image source: Tangier, Morocco on the Mediterranean sea

10. Equatorial Guinea (GDP per capita ($ 34, 865.00), this should be number 1). The country runs on oil, corruption, nepotism, and other inefficiencies.

How is a Rwanda, one of Africa's smaller countries, amongst the most powerful nations in Africa? What is their leverage?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam
I am a Nigerian.Updated March 30, 2018
Been observing from the side of my eye Christoph, wondering if I'd ever get a chance to defend my rationale, so thank you for the A2A.
Paul Kagame, President of Rwanda is Africa's most successful living warlord.

His cohort includes men like Charles Taylor, Meles Zenawi, Yoweri Museveni, Gamal Abd el-Nasser, Jonas Savimbi you get the idea. The 20th century was a crazy time.

The man grows up a refugee, helps Museveni seize power in Uganda, gathers a demoralised band of rebels whose attempts playing at revolution had backfired terribly, three years later he seizes power in his homeland, a country shattered by one of the most horrific genocides in recent history. Yet two years later, he invades the continent's second largest country, one three times larger than Germany. He does this not once, but twice, installing his puppet the first go-around and only being prevented from repeating the trick again by a coalition of five African Governments. Till present, Rwanda maintains a great degree of influence, amounting to a de facto protectorate in Eastern Congo. Rwanda in Congo: Sixteen Years of Intervention - By William Macpherson - African Arguments

Mr Kagame is not a nice person, he objectively runs a Police State, his neighbours in control of larger resources do not like him, yet… he does not just survive, he is the Davos man, a reformer par excellence, the darling of everyone from the world's richest man to many an African tired of incompetent leadership.

WORLD
KAGAME

Power is generally divided into hard and soft power. Clearly, Rwanda has demonstrated its affinity for both. Consider that Saddam was spanked for pulling what Kagame succeeded in doing twice.

Most astonishing is how much they seem to imbibe Joseph Nye Jr's famous addition to the dual division. No country in Africa has been as adept as playing its cards smartly, they're approaching China level.

When one hears of Rwanda, you think women in power, immense recovery from a genocide, outstanding developmental indices, the goodwill that buys them, allows the stains from his foreign policy and internal governance to be akin to water on a duck's back. In Bevan's words, "he may be a bully, but he's a successful bully!" That,I think, seems to be the logic which drives so many to embrace him. He is successful.

Pardon the intertwining of Kagame and Rwanda, it's truly impossible to define the State any other way, if Louis XIV never said "l'état, c'est moi" (I am the state) then Kagame really ought to see into claiming it for himself, or he would, but he decided that Rwanda should stop speaking French. Rwanda to switch from French to English in schools

In thinking of power, it is often easy to fall into the trap of bean counting tech. However, power exists on a continuum, all States exercise power, some are just better at it.

I prefer a simpler metric:

What are the goals of a given State?
How effective have they been in achieving those goals?

You'll notice how in my rankings from the original answer, Nigeria is dead last among Africa's current powers? The metric guided the list.

The domestic policy of all States stem from a basic goal of survival. Clearly too, some States are better at it than others. More often than not, a State's foreign policy is merely an extension of its driving quest for survival, but, away from its borders.

So too the Rwandan State comprised of Kagame and his Tutsi veterans.

Remember, this is a generation of people who grew up as refugees due to the oppression meted out to them by the group comprising the majority of the country they now rule. Their logic has been simple: there are redeemable Hutus and irredeemable Hutus. The redeemables are appealed to by the soft power foreign policy, the pride that comes from seeing and hearing of one's country being admired, coupled with a rather authoritarian internal policy, a gloved fist wrapped in velvet as it were. The irredemables who are largely clustered in the DRC have been hunted down with a fury that'd make America in its war against terror blush.

Rwanda has been extremely successful at those. That is what makes it powerful, the capabilities it has shown, not what it could do.

In my experience, people often discount Rwanda because it is small and it is poor, they forget that it is organised. I think that is due to a mistaken application of the Western model of War and Power Politics to the African context.

The ultimate determinant of power is war. Rwanda possesses arguably one of the continent's most successful Command staff. That aside, in the event of a war, it won't be Western-style rally to the flag fight to the death with two conscript armies pummeling themselves with the latest tech across clearly defined lines, where production statistics will come into play.

What Flag? The Map is out of date, Egypt, Chad and Niger are no longer immune, nor South Sudan…Morocco and South Africa are vulnerable.

Paul Kagame, on Radio Rwanda:
"If our country ranks first in Africa, and the whole world is watching us today, it is not because we have the Vatican, the Kabba, the White House, the Elysee or the Taj Mahal here at home.

No more because you have a certain Paul Kagame as Head of State, but rather because you have sons and daughters of Rwanda in this country. Men and especially young people and Rwandan women who have forgiven each other, and who have taken the destiny of their country in their hands, by the meaning of work, innovations and patriotism as key to their progress and development . What we are doing here in Rwanda is not a miracle, nor is it impossible elsewhere, it is simply the commitment of an entire nation, especially Rwandan youth and women, but also political will.

Soon, we will have the best universities in the world in our country (NYU, Harvard, London School of Economics, MIT ...) We will also have the best hospitals in Rwanda. The intelligence and competence of our children will be equal to or greater than those of the great powers, and our country Rwanda will be a new door of opportunity, knowledge, technology and innovation for all African children and the world who want to learn from us or better still bring us their knowledge.

Rwanda will not only be at the rendezvous of civilizations, but also of science and technology and all the cultures that will dominate the world. Today, more than 40% of our agriculture is being dominated by technology, Africa as a whole can do better than us for essential food self-sufficiency, it is all about national interest and the African people.
Although we are now far from our past, let us make good use of the present to hit the future. Because the most difficult thing is no longer where we come from, but rather where we want and dream to go. In Rwanda, we desire and dream to go far thanks to these people and to this now conscious youth "

That strikes me as unlikely, if nothing else, based on the fact of how the continent's wars have actually been fought.

African wars are essentially tripartite, fought across a fluid front:

Poorly armed troops expected to live off the land facing the enemy.
Presidential Guards type troops to maintain order in the home front.
Armed dissidents on the enemy front attacking the enemy.
Whichever Government collapses first loses.

In that scenario, Rwanda's organisation and small territory suddenly become assets. "Organised and small"…memories of imperialist company-men traipsing through the continent ensues. That is its leverage: Strike hard, divide and rule. I believe it was Napoleon who bemoaned having come too late, in a time of enlightened men, I wonder what Kagame thinks of Napoleon…

P.S even if an African State tried to fight Western style, it'd quickly collapse from the financial obligations, South Africa aside and only if some of the recent news and rhetoric emerging from there leaves gaps which cannot be exploited…You'll notice that the last wars it fought at a time when those divisions were prominent, that it fought using precisely the model I outlined?

I'm torn on how much of it is a characteristic of the "African style", all States are repressive in wartime…maybe except Israel. I'll think more about it…

What's the similarity between Ethiopia and Rwanda?

Didier Champion

Hope this helps.

Both countries have very intelligent and bright leaders. President Paul Kagame and Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed.

PM Ahmed reminds me of PK, 20 years ago. They are both visionary leaders. There is no doubt that PM Ahmed is going to change Ethiopia for good.

There are some historical similarities between Rwandans and Ethiopians. Both countries have been through so many trials and tribulations, but they have managed to survive. Today, they are determined to make the countries great again.

Ethiopia
Both Rwanda and Ethiopia have a population growth problem. A small country like Rwanda has 12 million people. Ethiopia has about 110 million people.

DRC's is 90 times the size of Rwanda but their population is only 7 times that of Rwanda.

DRC is twice as big as the size of Ethiopia but her population is bigger than that of DRC.
Both Rwanda and Ethiopia have very ambitious plans to develop their manufacturing industries. Ethiopia processes 100% of their coffee and tea. The export market for both countries is dominated by coffee and tea.

Both countries have their own national airlines. Ethiopian Airlines for Ethiopia and RwandAir for Rwanda. Ethiopian Airlines is the largest airline carrier, based in Africa. RwandAir is an upcoming airline with potential to grow.

Beautiful capital cities. Addis-Ababa for Ethiopia and Kigali for Rwanda Kigali, Rwanda

In Africa, Ethiopia and Rwanda have the most beautiful women. The beauty is obviously in the eyes of the beholder. No need to argue too much. Take a look! Both countries have lots of history and their tourism industry is booming. Follow my blog Rwanda Today for Rwanda's travel and tourism.

Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?

Didier Champion Former Student Updated 2y

I am going to give you a brief history. I will let you be the judge.

RwandAir, the Rwandan national airline saoring high. This is the best analogy I can have to Rwanda as a country rising high through the skies.

For Rwandans, this is not even a question. The facts on the ground speaks for themselves. As a republic, Paul Kagame is the best leader Rwanda has ever had.

From 1962 to 1994, our politics was based on ethnicity and divisionism. It was identity politics. There was no content to it. After 3 decades of hate and divisionism, a genocide breaks out in 1994. It kills one million people in 100 days.

Rwanda was officially declared a failed state.
The international community sits back and watches the whole massacre unfolds from beginning to end. The United Nations whose job was to prevent such events to happen again after the Holocaust ignores Rwanda completely. The whole country was destroyed. Infrastructure destroyed. Teachers, doctors, and many intellectuals are murdered. The country was brought to her needs.

It fell through a deep hole.
The kind you cannot get out of by yourself.
The kind of hole you need a hand to get back up.
The kind you need to open your eyes and see the sun again.

There is nothing poetic about this. Some of us did not think we were ever going to see to the sun again.

It was tough times. The kind of times you would not be able to describe to your kids.

It was indeed difficult times. I mean, terrible times. Really, horrible times. Who was there to save the day?
Paul Kagame and his Rwandan Patriot Army/Front (RPF).
If it was not the courage of these men and women, I don't know where Rwanda would be today. Their hope, resilience and determination saved Rwanda and Rwandans.

Paul Kagame and his Rwandan Patriotic Front. Our heroes who saved Rwanda and made it what it is today. We will always be grateful for their sacrifice and dedication to Rwanda. We can never thank them enough!

In early 1990's, Paul Kagame was a respected General in the Ugandan Army. He already had the money and power in Ugandan Army. He was very comfortable following some training and army courses in the United States military in Kansas.

He did not need to come home to fight for his rights as a citizen of his own home country.

He did not need to join the jungle, sleep in trenches, and other uncomfortable combat situations. But he did accept to lose his ranks in the Ugandan Army to save his fellow Rwandans. Rwandan refugees who were scattered in neighboring countries (Uganda, Tanzania, Burundi, Tanzania, and elsewhere).

In 100 days, from April 7th to July 4th, 1994, his RPF was able to take over the whole country. Many people don't even know that Genocide stopped because his army had taken over the control of the whole country. Genocide did not stop because of any negotiation. It stopped because the good guys fought the genocidal government day and night, until its last breath.

On July 4th 1994, PK's Rwandan Patriot Front declared victory after taking over the whole country and the city of Kigali.

From 1994 to 1998, this was a tough time for Rwanda. Many thought the RPA was going to commit another genocide. They thought their purpose was to take over the country and vengence for themselves. Many soldiers' families were wiped out completely. There was a possibility for revenge. The kind of revenge that would have erased Rwanda completely. Luckily, that did not happen.
Paul Kagame and his advisors had a different " master" plan.

Take control of the whole country.
Restore peace and security.
Unite Rwandans again and bring back hope.

Only Light can take out darkness. Darkness combined with more darkness gives more darkness.

I am very thankful because they chose to go with light. There is a high probability that Rwanda would have been off of the map today had they chose different. I certainly would NOT be answering this question today. I would have been gone to wherever dead people go. I would have been forgotten long time ago.

Love always trumps hate.

PK is NOT power hungry. He is never been!

Initially, he did not even want to be the president. He had never been a politician. He had been in the military his whole life. After 1994, he was the minister of defense. Without him in charge, things did not go as fast they wanted to initially.

Upon the pressure from his party, he was advised to take over as the chairman of RPF (Rwandan Patriot Front). He had won the respect from his colleagues for his work and leadership during the liberation struggle.

As soon as he got in power in 2000, the slogan of unity, peace, and reconciliation was everywhere. In schools, these ideals were drilled in our heads before we could understand what they meant. The same way, American kids sing America the Beautiful or recite the Pledge of Allegiance.

President Kagame and Commander-in-Chief inspecting his troops on Liberation Day (July 4th 2017).

In villages, in urban centers, cities and communities, people were engaged to view themselves as Rwandan instead of their (old) ethnic groups. This was very hard to preach to the adults. But, talking about your " Hutuness" or "Tutsiness" became a huge taboo.

It was a tough strong medicine, but in my opinion the patient needed it.

These ethnicities were at the heart of Rwandan issues. The government did not have time to negotiate. They simply got rid of the meaning they used to carry before 1994.

They got rid of them in national ID's.

Instead of referring to people by Hutu or Tutsi on a daily basis, people started to be referred as Rwandans.

In schools, you did not have to belong to a certain family to get admitted. Any kid had access to education regardless of their family background.

I can go on and on, but many things were changed for the better definitely. You can read about them in this article in greater details.
How is a Rwanda, one of Africa's smaller countries, amongst the most powerful nations in Africa? What is their leverage?

This did not happen overnight. Change is always hard.

But, slowly by steadily, Rwandans got the gist of it. In schools, in churches, in community meetings, unity, peace, reconciliation was preached and advertised everywhere, radios and national TVs.

Later, after a solid foundation was laid, it slowly changed to unity, peace, and sustainable growth and development through hard work and patriotism.

Rwanda today is where it is because of Kagame's leadership, his love and passion for Rwanda. In Rwanda, government is the main driver of everything.

If Rwanda is peaceful and united, it is because of the work they are doing.

If Rwanda is doing well economically, it is because of the government policies to boost tourism and investment.

Watch this 2-min videos. It summarizes my whole answer in a nutshell.

More than economic growth or political stability, Paul Kagame deserves credit to restoring peace and unity among the Rwandan people. In the Rwandan context, there is no amount of money you can attribute to a united-peaceful Rwanda.

As long as we are united and peaceful, we will always prosper and figure out the rest; Economic growth and sustainable development. Rwandan people have always been hardworking and resilient. It is unfortunate that hate and divisionism plagued us after our so-called independence. We wasted 30 years as a country from 1960's to 1990's.

The past is quite dark, ugly and shameful, but the future is bright and promising. As the president of Rwanda, Paul Kagame inherited a small poverty-stricken country with many issues, politically and economically.

He inherited a miserable country, recovering from a combination of a civil war and a brutal genocide.

He inherited a society that had collapsed down in a big way.
I don't want to bother you with statistics and numbers. I have shared many articles already. I will leave them in the reference section for you.

However, I have been collecting some pictures of "then" and "today". I will share a few and let the facts speak for themselves.

The city of Kigali, before and after!

This is probably the most popular roundabouts in downtown Kigali. See the difference for yourself before 1994 and Today (2018).

The office of Kigali City before 1994 and today (2018).

It is remarkable to see the work that the leadership of Kagame has done for Rwanda. Even more surprising, it is quite impressive to see the passion and love that he has done it with. He loves the people of Rwanda and they love him back. Politics is never easy. In case of Rwanda, it is even more complex and complicated. However, the facts don't lie.

The fact of the matter is that even since he took over the presidency:

Rwanda is more united and peaceful than ever.
Rwanda is more developed and progressive than ever.
Rwandan people are more hopeful than ever.
Paul Kagame is the kind of leader any African citizen would want to have.
Passion, vision, and work ethic combined altogether in one.

Hates corruption at its core.
Promotes women rights in all aspects.
Likes technology and what it can be used Rwanda's economic development.
Empowers the young folks and inspires them to be the best in their professions.
Likes Rwanda and shows it in action, and not just in words.
Says it like it is without any fear. He is fearless in his defense for Rwanda.
He is never been apologetic to be Rwandan or African.

He is the man of action. A jack of all trades.

A military general, a charismatic leader, a businessman, and an outstanding marketer. He is the complete opposite of what regular politicians do. African politicians are usually " all talk no action".

Paul Kagame is more like "do more and talk less" kind of leader. He gets stuff done and allows lets facts speak for themselves.
Do Rwandans like change all the time? NO! It is very hard to change habits. Especially, the bad ones.

But over time, we have learned to adjust accordingly. I remember those days when the government banned plastic bags, required to wear helmets on a motorcycle, encouraged to clean the city, started the Umuganda (monthly community service), changed French to English, and many others. I thought these changes came too fast and that there is no way the changes were to be implemented and executed. I was very wrong!

Overtime, I have been wrong and wrong very many times. In fact, I have come to realize that whenever I am skeptical of something, it will probably work better. Even today, I am still hesitant about banning second hand clothes from the United States, and massive land consolidation to boost modern agriculture, and other development issues. Time and time again, I know I will be proven wrong over time and that is totally okay.

What surprises me even more is how humble and calm he has been throughout as a leader. He is always humble, motivational, inspirational and leads by example, not just in Rwanda, but also in Africa.

As a Rwandan, I can tell you that he is the best president we have ever had. He is the father of modern Rwanda. He is the master architect of “Rwanda Project”. This project was long overdue and failing badly, but he came in at the right time. He is saved the day. As the CEO of Rwanda, Inc, he is kept the board members and shareholders happy and satisfied.

As a shareholder, I approve of his performance. It has been a pleasure to follow his leadership as a citizen of Rwanda. Wherever I am, I am no longer “ashamed” to say that I am a proud Rwandan. Keep calm and love Rwanda.

The easiest thing I do every 7 years is voting for this guy (Voting in presidential election 2017).

I sure hope we get more good passionate leaders after his presidency. He has laid out a good vision and a good foundation for the country. Those who come after will be able to build on what he has done to move this country forward to even greater heights.

I wish Rwanda more peace, stability and economic growth.

Cheers!

References

If you want to learn more about Africa, I have written more articles on Rwanda Today. Feel free to check them out.

10 plus One Amazing Facts about Rwanda and Reasons to visit in 2018

Dear World, We are NOT Hotel-Rwanda: Rwanda Today is Peaceful, Developing, and Progressive.

Related Links

Why is Human Rights Watch always against President Paul Kagame?

How do Rwandans feel about Paul Kagame's vision of Rwanda as 'The Singapore of Africa'?

How do the Rwandan neighbors (in particular Burundi, the DRC, Uganda and Tanzania) consider or view Rwanda and its leadership under Paul Kagame?

What will happen in Rwanda after Paul Kagame's final term in office comes to an end?

Paul Kagame is seen as model leader for African states and turns Rwanda out of poverty into the “Singapore of Africa”, but why many Africans from countries like DR Congo, Tanzania, Uganda and Burundi don’t consider Paul Kagame as their model leader?

Paul Kagame has been an effective leader for Rwanda. Given that so few African leaders have done what is best for their country, is there concern who will succeed him?

What do Rwandans think of Paul Kagame?

What was the military rank of Paul Kagame?

What do the people of Rwanda think of Kagame as their leader ? (Both Tutsis and Hutus)

What is your opinion on Paul Kagame (the president of Rwanda)? Why are the opposition leaders in Rwanda all in exile or killed?

What is Paul Kagame like personally?

What are Paul Kagame's major accomplishments?

Does Paul Kagame of Rwanda kill his political opponents in order to safeguard his dictatorial rule?

What do you think of Rwandan president Paul Kagame?

If Paul Kagame is such a good leader, why does he call Paul Rusesabagina a genocide denier?

Why is Rwanda one of the fastest growing African countries, with neighboring Burundi one of the poorest?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda 2y

The main difference between the two countries is good governance.
In 2000, the economy of both countries was quite similar. These are twin countries. However, when Rwanda got Paul Kagame while Burundi got Nkurunziza. Almost 20 years later, It's sad to see how Burundi is going backward. See this quick comparison below to learn more.

countryeconomy.com

Burundi			Rwanda
Comptes nationaux - Government
Annual GDP [+]	2017	3,500M.$	9,100M.$	2017	Annual GDP [+]
GDP per capita [+]	2017	322$	745$	2017	GDP per capita [+]
Debt [+]	2015	1,360	3,161	2016	Debt [+]
Debt (%GDP) [+]	2015	45.26%	37.29%	2016	Debt (%GDP) [+]
Debt Per Capita [+]	2015	133$	265$	2016	Debt Per Capita [+]
Deficit (M.$) [+]	2015	-160	-197	2016	Deficit (M.$) [+]
Deficit (%GDP) [+]	2015	-5.31%	-2.33%	2016	Deficit (%GDP) [+]
Expenditure (M.$) [+]	2015	816.6	2,186.0	2016	Expenditure (M.$) [+]
Education Expenditure (M.$) [+]	2013	139.5	306.6	2016	Education Expenditure (M.$) [+]

Burundi has very serious issues with regards to governance. The current government has messed up their economy. Only a revolution to get rid of Nkurunziza would be the only answer for Burundi to get back on track.

Otherwise, it is actually going to be worse. No FDI, no tourism, no functional government, no good relations with neighbors, and many other macroeconomic issues.

Expect the situation to get worse as long as Pierre Nkurunziza is still there. People are very terrified to stand up against a very oppressive regime. Those who can leave the country go without any hesitation. We are talking about a dictatorship that nobody cares about, including the East African member states.

Didier Champion , lived in Kigali, Rwanda Answered Feb 5, 2019

The main difference between the two countries is good governance.
In 2000, the economy of both countries was quite similar. These are twin countries. However, when Rwanda got Paul Kagame while Burundi got Nkurunziza. Almost 20 years later, It’s sad to see how Burundi is going backward. See this quick comparison below to learn more.

countryeconomy.com

Burundi			Rwanda
Comptes nationaux - Government
Annual GDP [+]	2017	3,500M.$	9,100M.$	2017	Annual GDP [+]
GDP per capita [+]	2017	322$	745$	2017	GDP per capita [+]
Debt [+]	2015	1,360	3,161	2016	Debt [+]
Debt (%GDP) [+]	2015	45.26%	37.29%	2016	Debt (%GDP) [+]
Debt Per Capita [+]	2015	133$	265$	2016	Debt Per Capita [+]
Deficit (M.$) [+]	2015	-160	-197	2016	Deficit (M.$) [+]
Deficit (%GDP) [+]	2015	-5.31%	-2.33%	2016	Deficit (%GDP) [+]
Expenditure (M.$) [+]	2015	816.6	2,186.0	2016	Expenditure (M.$) [+]
Education Expenditure (M.$) [+]	2013	139.5	306.6	2016	Education Expenditure (M.$) [+]

Burundi has very serious issues with regards to governance. The current government has messed up their economy. Only a revolution to get rid of Nkurunziza would be the only answer for Burundi to get back on track.

Otherwise, it is actually going to be worse. No FDI, no

COMMENTARY by Anthony M Anderson , Advocate (2021-present)
Answered Feb 20

Rwanda is one of the fastest developing countries in Africa because of the Leadership led by Paul Kagame who has made the country great, Good Governance, Little Corruption and Getting rid of tribalism. Rwanda Today has transformed from a poor country and a failed state to a modern state.
See how Rwanda today is:

See how Kigali would be in a future

Paul Kagame cares for the Rwandan People and he loves his country and his people. He has done better things for the country.

Burundi is a poorest country because of Corruption and Tribalism. Burundian politicians don't care for the people and don't care for the country. Tribal parties still exists in Burundi, Corruption is high and Poverty level has increased to 60% https://www.crisisgroup.org/africa/central-africa/burundi/au-must-re-engage-burundi-push-inclusivity-way-out-violence

https://www.jstor.org/stable/161706?seq=1#page_scan_tab_contents

Related Links

Why is Rwanda safer than most other African countries, even though not as rich?

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

Why isn't Burundi as stable as its neighbor Rwanda?

How do the Rwandan neighbors (in particular Burundi, the DRC, Uganda and Tanzania) consider or view Rwanda and its leadership under Paul Kagame?

Can Rwanda and Burundi ever be united into one country?

Why is Rwanda doing so much better than Burundi?

When exactly is Rwanda and Burundi separated, and why?

What are the main differences between Rwanda and Burundi?

How is a Rwanda, one of Africa's smaller countries, amongst the most powerful nations in Africa? What is their leverage?

How can Burundi economically develop?

Why wasn't there a genocide in Burundi like there was in Rwanda?

Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?

What is it like growing up in one of the 10 poorest countries in the world?

What is it like to live in Burundi?

Paul Kagame is seen as model leader for African states and turns Rwanda out of poverty into the “Singapore of Africa”, but why many Africans from countries like DR

Quel président a le dossier militaire le plus accompli, et pourquoi ? Which president has the most accomplished military record, and why?

Paul Bobet Traducteur · 20 mai Morris Gad Lieu : Nairobi, Kenya Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Morris Gad dans Quora en anglais :

Le président Paul Kagame du Rwanda. Après que le monde ait abandonné le Rwanda pendant le génocide de 1994, Kagame a pris la tête d'une unité rebelle qui a effectivement mis fin au génocide. Il a ensuite fait du Rwanda l'un des pays au développement le plus rapide d'Afrique.

Questions similaires

Quel a été le coup d'État militaire le plus inattendu de l'histoire mondiale ?

Quel a été le moment le plus honteux de Donald Trump en tant que président ?

Quels sont exactement les limites du pouvoir du président américain en tant que commandant en chef des armées ? Peut-il, par exemple, ordonner la destruction de matériels ?

Les présidents devraient-ils saluer les militaires ?

Quels autres présidents américains ont retiré leurs troupes dans une zone de guerre avant d'en faire sortir les civils ?

Quel est le plus haut grade militaire de tous les temps ?

Quel a été l'avion militaire le plus longtemps utilisé de tous les temps ?

Quel grand acteur de cinéma (Vivant ou disparu) a eu le passé militaire le plus impressionnant ?

Quel président a le plus de pouvoirs (au sein de son propre pays), le président américain ou le président français ?

Des militaires ont-ils déjà déclaré victoire trop tôt et payé pour cette erreur ?

Est-ce que l'armée française est en situation, a les moyens, d'accomplir un putsch sur le territoire national ?

25 ans après sa suppression par Jacques Chirac, faut-il rétablir le service militaire ?

Jusqu'à quel grade militaire êtes-vous sur le front ?

Quel président a servi pendant une guerre ?

Quel président français était le plus coureur de jupons et lequel était le plus sage ?

Why is it that when Rwanda is compared to its neighbors i.e. Burundi, Tanzania, Uganda and DRC or to its East African neighbor (Kenya), it emerges as a model of good governance?

Babatunde Amutorunwa PhD in Geography & Medical Doctors, The British International School (Expected 2023)1y

Rwanda’s an interesting country. Kagame basically holds the country together and puts on a big show for foreigners as the next business hub of Central Africa, but behind that facade is a severely underdeveloped country with uneasy race relations at best. Kagame’s Rwanda is simply his own personal playground, because nearly 30+ years of hefty foreign aid (in comparison to Rwanda’s neighbours) and still we're yet to see them emerge from the low HDI category. But sure, Kigali's the cleanest city in Africa because that's the part the foreigners see.

Yet let's hope that Kagame stays on long enough for hateful memories to further dissipate-already there are increasing rates of intermarriage, but it's going to take a lot more because out in the Congo are the remnants of the Tutsi militias. Ok-this was a weird rant/hot take.

Related Links

How do the Rwandan neighbors (in particular Burundi, the DRC, Uganda and Tanzania) consider or view Rwanda and its leadership under Paul Kagame?

Paul Kagame is seen as model leader for African states and turns Rwanda out of poverty into the "Singapore of Africa", but why many Africans from countries like DR Congo, Tanzania, Uganda and Burundi don't consider Paul Kagame as their model leader?

Why does Rwanda always seem to have problems with their neighbors, Uganda, Burundi and the DRC?

Why isn't Burundi as stable as its neighbor Rwanda?

What is different about Tanzania that has allowed it to remain peaceful and prosperous, while neighboring countries like Rwanda, Burundi, Congo and Uganda were torn apart by ethnic strife, brutal dictators, and civil war?

How is a Rwanda, one of Africa's smaller countries, amongst the most powerful nations in Africa? What is their leverage?

By connecting the dots of the historical events in the African Great Lakes, why are some regions ungovernable from Burundi, Uganda, and Rwanda?

Why is Rwanda so nice compared to the rest of Africa?

Why is Rwanda one of the fastest growing African countries, with neighboring Burundi one of the poorest?

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world?

Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

What is found in the middle of these countries: Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, Uganda, and Burundi?

Why is Rwanda safer than most other African countries, even though not as rich?

What are the main differences between Rwanda and Burundi?

Why is the Rwanda-Uganda border closed?

How is Rwanda managing to develop while Burundi is still struggling to develop?

The amazing traditional Rwandan hairstyle of Amasunzu, 1920-1930

Snapshots of History Posted by Guy D. McCardle Dec 5

Amasunzu is a traditionally Rwandan hairstyle that was once worn by men, as well as by unmarried women in order to indicate to potential suitors that they were single and of marriageable age.

Follow Space

ALPHANUMERIC RWANDA

RWANDA and the World

The Republic of Rwanda is a young nation with a long history. A newly independent, undeveloped country, Rwanda is similar to many other developing nations in Africa, where new ideas and old traditions often clash on the road to economic and social progress. Rwanda is a tiny, landlocked nation in the heart of eastern central Africa. It's bordered to the north by Uganda, to the east by Tanzania, to the south by Burundi, and to the west by the Congo (formerly Zaire). The Indian Ocean lies more than 700 miles (1,126 km) to the east. Rwanda became an independent country just 54 years ago, but it's history dates back much earlier. Rwanda's first inhabitants, the Twas, settled in the region 35,000 years ago. Other tribes- the Hutus and the Tutsies settled there b/n the 7th and 15th centuries A.D. These tribal groups lived primarily by hunting, farming and cattle herding. Many of their traditional practices continue today. Farming with hand-held hoes is still the main occupation of most Rwandans. Belief in the spirit world of sacred gods and ancestors still pervades their religions. And the traditional language, Kinyarwanda, is one of three official languages in the republic along with French and English. These customs have and endured through different eras of Rwandan history, such as the followed periods b/n the 15th and 19th centuries.

RWANDA and Africa

One of Africa's smallest nations, Rwanda covers 10, 169 square miles (26338 Sq. Km), making it a little larger than the American state of Maryland. The Country is nicknamed "Land of a Thousand Hills" because of it's generally high, sloping terrain. Yet the landscape varies significantly and can be divided into distinct geographical regions: the Great Rift Valley along the western border, the virunga mountains in the northwest, the Congo-Nile Crest on the eastern edge of the Great Rift Valley, the central plateaus, and the lowland swamps and savannas in the eastern border zones.

From Kingdom to Colony

Rwandan history was first recorded by Europeans who explored the east and central regions of Africa in the late 1800s. But tribal folklore and archeological studies recount a much earlier history. The first people known to have lived in the area of present day Rwanda are the Twa's. They are related to the Pygmies, the first inhabitants of east central Africa. Archeological records indicate that the Twa settled in Rwanda as far back as 35,000 years ago.

Road to Independence
Rwand-Urundi remained a United Nation (UN) Trust Territory for nearly thirteen years. During this time the UN and Belgium often disagreed on how to run the country. Belgium wanted to concentrate on economic and social development because it felt that worth while political change could come only after the country's many economic and social problems had been resolved. The UN wanted immediate political change along with social and economic progress.

Continents: Africa: (55 countries) ~ 29.893.598 km²
Australia ~ 7.682.300 km²
North America: Canada + USA ~ 19.335.000 km²

Countries:
Russia ~ 17.075.000 km² ;
Canada ~ 9.971.000 km² ;
China ~ 9.573.000 km² ;
USA 9.364.000 km²
and in comparison with MONACO ~ 1,950 km²

Reference:
Britannica Book of the Year
Jocelyn Murray, Cultural Atlas of Africa

Do you want to know the real giant of Africa?

Follow Africa is Home blog to learn more or ask my primate boss. He might know the answer because he is the big boss of the jungle way up in the volcanoes.

No further comment.

Follow Didier Champion , lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated Oct 2, 2018

Originally Answered: How is the giant of Africa?

Who exactly is the giant of Africa?
Who nominated them for that title?
What criteria was followed to get that title?

At the moment, the giant of Africa is a network of 55 African countries, united together by the African Union.

Image source: Africa 101

Their combined economy before adjusted for inflation is about 3 trillion USD. Adjusted for inflation, they come down to $ 2.2 trillion. Follow Wolfgang Plückhahn

Related Links

How large is Africa?
Why is Africa so rich but so poor?
Is America bigger than Africa?
How big is Africa and Russia?
What countries are bigger than Africa?
How are all the maps? Why is North America bigger than Africa?
Is Russia larger than Africa by area?

How much bigger is the continent of Africa compared to the rest of the world? And, are the continent & country sizes proportionally reflected on Google maps?
Why do third world countries mostly belong to Africa?
Why isn't Africa one large country?
If civilisation started in Africa, and all people are believed to come from Africa, how come Africa remains poor and far behind the development?
Why is the true size of Africa never reflected on maps & Europe is always bigger than it actual is?
What is the biggest country in Africa? What is the smallest? What are five interesting facts about both?
Why is Africa so poor?
How much larger is Africa in size compared to North America?

What are the things Africans mostly spend on?

Andrew Gaston I am aware of a fair number of things without googling .3h Folks who live in African countries are not monolithic. There's no real way to discern what one culture/country/region to the next primarily spends on. If there was a definitive answer to your question it would be: "living expenses". That term encompasses myriad things that are exclusive to certain countries/cultures as well as things that are common throughout the globe. I'd be remiss not to state that the majority of folks living in African countries are not "well to do" or even "middle class". Many (if not all) African country's economies are deeply polarized.

Related Links

How do Africans feel about African Americans?
Are white Africans considered African by native black Africans?
Do Africans look like African Americans?
What would happen if the US would actually send all African-Americans to Africa?
Why are Africans so religious?
What do Africans think of the Chinese?
Why are Africans so nice? Is this rooted in culture or are there other contributing factors?
Why do South Africans hate other Africans?
What is something very common with Africans?
Are white South Africans racist?
What are the five most popular countries in Africa? What puts them on the map?

What do black Africans think about black Americans, and vice versa?
Which is the most powerful country in Africa?
What's the most westernised African country?
What African tribe are most African Americans descended from?

Quel animal serait le plus difficile à affronter pour les humains s'il décidait de nous combattre ?

Victor PA Les animaux c'est mon délire 1 jan

Très intelligents (ils se fabriquent des outils pour les aider au quotidien comme nous ou même des nids pour dormir en seulement 5 minutes dans les arbres ou sur le sol) et proches de l'humain (3ème espèce la plus proche après bonobo et chimpanzé), on peut bien sûr penser aux livres et films qui décrivent cette révolution (notamment la planète des singes). Bon, je pense pas qu'on en arrivera là mais cet animal est une force brute de la nature :

Du haut de leur 1,7m redressés, leur masse est très différente selon le sexe : 90 à 150 kg chez les femelles mais jusqu'à 275 kg chez les mâles.

Vivant 30 à 50 ans selon le lieu de vie, il a été prouvé que ces animaux ont conscience d'eux-mêmes grâce au fameux test du miroir.

Je parlais tout à l'heure de leur intelligence, saviez-vous que les gorilles ont un langage qui leur est propre ? Maintenant c'est fait, le langage est fait de signes : plus d'une centaine selon une étude[1] de 2009, de plus ce langage est universel, pas de jaloux : n'importe quel gorille peut le parler. D'ailleurs selon cette même étude, il n'a pas été inventé mais est inné, c'est la raison pour laquelle il est universel (si seulement on avait ça nous, ça changerait bien des choses).

Ils sont très sociables et pourront sans problème s'allier s'ils ont une bonne raison. Il reste environ 100 000 gorilles en regroupant toutes les espèces dans le monde mais malgré les mesures de protection de cet animal en danger d'extinction, ce nombre continue de baisser (1 500 par an environ : braconnage, déforestation et Ebola sont les principales causes…)

Autre exemple de langage mais cette fois assez unique : Koko (gorille) :

Cette femelle malheureusement décédée en 2018, parlait le langage des signes humain !! C'est l'éthologue Penny Patterson qui a éduqué Koko à l'image d'un humain, elle maîtrisait ainsi plus de 1000 signes différents dont la moitié couramment issus du langage des signes américain, elle ne pouvait pas parler, chose impossible en raison de sa morphologie mais comprenait pas moins de 2000 mots en américain !

Koko a également éprouvé assez tôt le désir de materner, malheureusement, jamais un gorille mâle avec qui Koko aurait pu s'accoupler n'a été trouvé, elle s'est donc penchée sur un animal de compagnie : un chat dont elle s'occupait comme le ferait n'importe quel humain.

Autres points démontrant l'intelligence des gorilles : Koko avait conscience de la mort, une perception du temps à l'image de l'Homme et était capable de ressentir des émotions complexes.

Quelle est la grande force de l'humanité ? Allonger son espérance de vie en se soignant bien sûr… Les gorilles aussi en sont capables ! Ils pratiquent l'automédication à partir de plantes et argilles. Je vous épargne les détails mais ça leur sert notamment à soigner leurs gastros et à éliminer les parasites vivants en eux (du genre ver solitaire chez nous).

Venons maintenant à sa force physique : sa musculature des bras est énorme, cela lui permet de soulever des charges jusqu'à plus de 800 kg !! Par ailleurs, c'est aussi un moyen de locomotion : ses bras sont tellement musclés qu'il peut aisément se balancer de branches en branches. Pour se nourrir, il peut abattre un bananier grâce à sa force musculaire, ce qui est pratique pour cet omnivore qui se nourrit de fruits, bambous plantes mais aussi d'insectes.

On a tendance à l'oublier mais sa morsure est aussi très puissante : deux fois plus forte que le lion. En parlant de lion, il me semble logique qu'il perdrait face à un gorille.

Fait bonus avant de terminer : Quand un gorille frappe sa poitrine, ce n'est pas pour montrer sa colère ou sa force, c'est un moyen de se reconnaître (ça fait partie de leur langage) ou encore de souhaiter la bienvenue à un animal étranger ! On est bien loin de la symbolique qu'on attribue à King Kong.

Tous ensemble, ils pourraient causer bien du tort à l'espèce humaine. Suivre Victor PA

A quel point les gorilles à dos argenté sont-ils forts ?
/How strong are silverback gorillas?/

Matthieu Dražić Suivre Etudiant chez Ecole polytechnique de l'université de MontpellierTraducteur · Mis à jour le 2 ans

Sean Kernan Son of Quora Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Sean Kernan dans Quora en anglais :

Un ami qui travaillait pour un zoo a dit que dans un zoo affilié, ils avaient un gorille à dos argenté.

Apparemment, le gorille s'ennuyait un jour et a commencé à tirer des poutres d'acier du plafond.

De plus, un gorille a récemment chargé la vitre de son enclos au zoo d'Omaha et l'a fendu.

Bien sur ce n’est pas une vitre normale (heureusement d’ailleurs).

J'exagère un peu l'évidence, mais un mâle alpha de 250 kg se moquerait d'un champion MMA poids lourd.

Ils ont juste une force génétique qui est conçue (a évolué) pour empêcher les prédateurs d'essayer de les attaquer.

Leur morsure est aussi l'une des plus fortes du règne animal, plus forte que celle d'un lion.

Ai-je besoin d'en dire plus ? Sinon ils ne font pas de musculation ou ne s'entraînent pas. Ils restent dans l'herbe toute la journée et ressemblent à ça : C'est de la pure puissance génétique.

Pas mal pour un végétarien, non ?

Image : Gorille à dos argenté

Notes de bas de page
[1] Les gorilles ont leur propre langage des signes

Questions similaires

Quel serait l'animal éteint le plus terrifiant s'il était encore en vie aujourd'hui ?
Pourquoi les humains ont-ils développé des capacités de combat/défense et une vitesse aussi médiocres par rapport aux animaux sauvages ? Nous ne vivrions pas un jour dans la nature sans une arme.
Quelle est l'animal le plus fort au combat de la planète ?

Cinq humains seraient-ils capables de battre un gorille ?
Quels animaux modernes seraient probablement en mesure de vaincre un Tyrannosaure Rex lors d'un combat face à face, sans armes ni assistance ?
Quel est l'animal le plus fort qu'un humain puisse battre ?
Quel est l'animal le plus dangereux sur Terre ?
Qui gagnerait dans un combat entre un humain et un chien (sans armes) ?
Y a-t-il des animaux qui nous trouvent nous les humains mignons ?
Existe-t-il un humain capable de battre un tigre à mains nues ?

Who is the most highly respected president in Africa?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, RwandaUpdated 3y

My fellow Quoran Mbogo has a good list already.
Paul Kagame of Rwanda, John Magufuli of Tanzania, Macky Sall of Senegal, Joao of Angola.

The advantage that Paul Kagame has over the others is that he has shown consistency over 18 years and counting. He has had enough time to mold his leadership style by adapting and learning to changing times.

In Africa, it is very hard to make a real impact in 5 years. For low and middle income countries especially, you need a good 10 years to really make positive change. In 2020, PK will be at his 20 years. After laying some solid foundation from 2000 to 2010, his impacts has started to show, not just in Rwanda, but all over Africa. From 2010, he combined all the things he had been learning and went beast-mode on transforming Rwanda.

With so many challenges and obstacles along the way, he earned lots of respect from other African presidents because they started to observe Rwanda's progress. Before then, Rwanda was an underdog really. After 2010, things started to change. Today, he is definitely on the top of the most respected presidents in Africa.

As the president of Rwanda, Paul Kagame inherited a small poverty-stricken country with many issues, politically and economically. After 1994, Rwanda was a miserable country, recovering from a combination of a civil war and a brutal genocide.

He also has a competitive advantage that he took over a inherited a collapsed country and has managed to take it to the promise land. No western media can disagree with the fact that he stopped genocide when they left Rwandans alone to die. For that, he has been able to lead Rwanda as he sees fit.

Whatever that needs to get done to move Rwanda forwards, no western country will object because they simply know he is not to be pushed around as they please. Whenever it is necessary, he goes head to head over the western hypocrisy and their nonsense.

He does not mince words about Africa and what we need to do to move forward.

In my opinion, that is why he is the most respected president in Africa.

He has strong views and he is very honest about African issues.

On Aid dependency to Africa

On Africa Intra-trade,

On Freedom and Democracy,

Hope this helps.

Didier Champion

Why did Germany colonize Rwanda?

Didier Champion Lived in Germany (2016–2020) 2y

Germany colonized Rwanda from 1896 to 1918 under the German East Africa -.

The German East Africa was a big empire of what is now Rwanda, Burundi, and Tanzania.

Why? for their own arrogance and self-interests to conquer more territories and the world.

Occupation and Domination

Like other European Empires (The British, the French, and the Portuguese), they saw Africa as land that was up for grabs. This is what the scramble of Africa was all about. Each empire wanted to expand their reach across Africa, which was at the time formed by many African Kingdoms and empires. Scramble for Africa -

The main reason to colonize was to occupy the land and rule it as if it was your own. Prior to colonization, the Europeans empires had to fight against existing African kingdoms. The African kingdoms were crashed and finally they accepted the unfortunate.

German colonial empire - Wikipedia

Related Links

What was Rwanda like under German colonialism?
Why didn't Germany colonize many countries?
Did Germany colonize any countries?
What would happen if India had been colonized by Germany?
What was Rwanda like under Belgian Colonialism?
What is it like to live in Rwanda?
Why did Germany want colonies in Africa?
What will happen if the Phillippines was colonized by Germany?
What if Germany colonized Vietnam?
What did the Belgians do in Rwanda?
Which countries did Germany colonize?
Why didn't Germany colonize Kenya and Uganda?
What events led to the Rwandan genocide?

While Germany had to pay the Allies after WW2, how come Colonizers did not have to pay the Colonized?

Why did Germany want Rwanda?

Pourquoi la France passe-t-elle son temps à s'excuser pour l'Algérie, le Rwanda, l'esclavage, Napoléon, etc.?

Didier Ernotte Scénariste 7 mo

Au-delà de la discussion sur les excuses réelles ou supposées du gouvernement français ou de Ségolène Royale en son temps. Revenons à la réalité…S’excuser ?? De quoi ? D’avoir fait comme tout le monde ? Oui, la France a fait des conquêtes, oui elle a colonisé et oui il y a eu de l’esclavage et bien sûr elle se sert en Afrique encore aujourd’hui. Comme TOUTES les grandes civilisations avant elle et après elle. On appelle cela l'histoire et ce n'est pas un roman à l'eau de rose. Alors si la France doit s'excuser, tout le monde doit le faire et à mon avis la France ne sera pas celle qui devra se morigéner le plus. Elle a au moins apporté aussi des bienfaits, ce qui n'est pas dans les moyens de tout le monde.

Ouvrons les dossiers que l'on balance un peu…

Les invasions Almohades au 8e siècle en Espagne et en France arrêtées de justesse par un certain Charles le Martel ? On en parle ? Viol, pillage, guerre. Que nous ont-ils laissé de bons, de brillant ? Rien, nada, que tchi !

La traite des esclaves en Centre Afrique et au Congo du fait des Berbères ça ne compte pas ? Ah non c'est vrai, ils ne sont pas blancs, alors on ne peut pas les critiquer. Faut les comprendre fallait bien qu'ils mangent hein.

Les invasions ottomanes, arrêtées de justesse aux portes de Vienne ? Atrocités habituelles et banales (viol, esclavage, etc.) Heureusement, on les a bien niqué à Lépantes, sinon ils seraient encore les maîtres de la Méditerranée. D'ailleurs faudrait voir à surveiller le nouveau maître de cette brillante civilisation turque notre petit moustachu version Reycep Erdogan. Ses ports sont la porte d'entrée des Chinois en Europe. Le génocide arménien, on en dit un mot ? Non… Dommage.

Les invasions mongoles ? Quand aura-t-on les excuses des descendants de Gengis, de Kubilai, de Temujin ? Le premier du nom aurait tué 20 % des populations sur son passage. Ah non c'est vrai, ils sont Chinois maintenant alors on ne peut rien dire. Laissons les Ouïghours mourir en paix. Silence on tue !

Nos bons amis anglais ? Aahhh là c'est du lourd madame, le dossier indien on l'ouvre ? Quand Chruchill en pleine guerre et même après, laisse crever de faim des millions (pas des milliers) d'Indiens ? Ne parlons même pas du pillage de l'Écosse, de l'Irlande, des tortures, etc. Le « common wealth » la richesse commune ah ah ah. Le « Royaume uni » est une farce tragique, son seul lien ce sont les baïonnettes anglaises. On le voit bien depuis le Brexit.

Et puis on les oublie, mais les gentils Danois et Norvégiens si propres si verts si sociaux ? Leurs ancêtres étaient des sauvages qui ont pillé et ravagé toutes les côtes Européennes pendant deux siècles ! Je parle des Vikings qui font les beaux jours de Netflix. T'es chrétien ? Pan un bon coup de hache.

Bon, je peux continuer encore très très longtemps, la liste est aussi longue que l'humanité elle-même. Et puis une dernière chose très importante…

Les excuses à quoi vont-elles servir ? Je suis désolé madame je ne le ferais plus sniff. Je promets de ne plus exploiter, asservir, piller mes petits camarades, de ne plus les harceler dans la cour de récréation.

Quelle blague ! Encore aujourd'hui, mais de manière plus hypocrite, le monde est un gâteau que tout le monde veut s'arracher. La Russie et l'Ukraine, la Turquie et les ressources gazières en méditerranée, la Chine et son appétit vorace en mer de Chine (appellation illégale). Et les grands vainqueurs toute catégorie, pillage, torture, guerre, bref le pack complet des atrocités « All-In » ce sont nos amis américains. Cela fait 50 ans qu'ils font la police du monde et nous le vende avec un paquet cadeau « Liberté, démocratie et libre marché » qu'ils en soient grandement remerciés.

Questions similaires

Finalement, si l'Algérie était restée française, la France ne serait-elle pas devenu un pays à majorité musulmane ? De manière générale, à quoi ressemblerait la France aujourd'hui si l'Algérie était restée française ?

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

Pourquoi la France ne s'excuse-t-elle pas une bonne fois pour toutes pour la colonisation vis à vis de l'Algérie ?

Pourquoi on demande tout le temps à la France de s'excuser envers l'Algérie pour les morts de la Guerre d'Algérie et pas à l'Algérie de s'excuser pour les actes du FLN durant la même période ?

Pourquoi la France ne s'est pas encore excusée pour ses crimes durant la guerre d'Algérie ?

Pourquoi Napoléon Ier est-il si vénéré par les Français malgré le rétablissement de l'esclavage et toutes les atrocités commises par son armée sous ses ordres?

Pourquoi le Vietnam ne s'est-il jamais plaint de la colonisation française contrairement à l'Algérie ?

Les avis divergent énormément . La France est-elle réellement complice du génocide des tutsis au Rwanda ? Quelle est la responsabilité de Mitterrand et surtout celle de Kagame (attentat avion) ?

L'Algérie a-t-elle reconnu les souffrances infligées à l'Europe pour avoir réduit en esclavage plus d'un million d'Européens en 2 siècles ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle perdu la guerre d'Algérie alors qu'elle a tué beaucoup plus d'Algériens qu'elle n'a subi de pertes ? (Question traduite)?

La France a-t-elle répandu l'analphabétisme en Algérie pendant la colonisation ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l'Algérie ?

Pensez-vous comme certains ont pu le dire que "l'Algérie n'était pas une nation, seule la France a fait du pays une nation" ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne s'excuse-t-elle pas auprès de la France pour sa tentative ratée de colonisation? Que se serait-il passé si les Sarrasins n'avaient pas été arrêtés à Poitiers?

La France doit-elle s'excuser perpétuellement pour avoir eu des colonies en Afrique ?

Est-ce que les léopards sont plus forts que les chimpanzés ? /Are leopards stronger than chimpanzees?/

Jerome Cohen . Suivre Un ami des animaux depuis toujours, de toutes espèces.Traducteur · 1 an

Serge Elia

Les léopards (appelés aussi panthères, ndt) sont effectivement des félins très puissants, capables de s'attaquer à des animaux plus gros qu'eux – dont les gnous, les gazelles, les cerfs, les crocodiles, les pythons, voire les jeunes ongulés comme les jeunes girafes ou les jeunes buffles, alors qu'il vaut mieux dédaigner les buffles et girafes adultes –, ainsi que de hisser une énorme carcasse (à l'image de celle d'un jeune rhinocéros comme vu dans la photo ci-dessus) dans un arbre avec peu d'effort. Ne l'oublions pas : de tous les félins, les léopards sont les grimpeurs plus habiles aux arbres.

Mais les chimpanzés sont bien plus forts et beaucoup plus puissants, et donc bien mieux bâtis que les léopards, grâce à un rapport spécifique de différents tissus musculaires, ce qui donne aux chimpanzés une performance musculaire supérieure à celle des êtres humains, dépassant de loin celle d'un culturiste typique.

En effet, les chimpanzés sont si forts qu'ils peuvent à eux seuls casser toute une tige de bambou, tabasser tout animal ayant le malheur de se trouver à leur portée (y compris nous-mêmes, ainsi que les autres chimpanzés), voire casser tous les meubles d'une maison. Ils possèdent également des dents acérées capables de trancher le nez d'un homme, ainsi qu'une force de morsure d'environ 1000 livres par pouce carré ayant la capacité de broyer le dos d'un félin – et ce, à l'inverse de la force de morsure plutôt faible de la panthère, qui ne dépasse pas les 300 livres par pouce carré. Sans parler de longs bras tellement puissants qu'un seul coup est capable de briser la colonne vertébrale d'un léopard !

Par conséquent, étant donné qu'ils sont plus forts et bien mieux bâtis que les léopards, les chimpanzés dominent ces félins tachetés lorsque leurs aires de répartition se chevauchent. En fait, une espèce de chimpanzé, jusqu'alors inconnue, le singe Bili, originaire des forêts tropicales congolaises, a un régime alimentaire très réparti, qui se compose régulièrement de lions et de léopards !

Vous avez bien lu : des chimpanzés mangeurs de lions ! Veuillez consulter l'article ici en anglais : Found: the giant lion-eating chimps of the magic forest

Questions similaires

Le tigre est le plus fort des grands félins, le lion le plus rapide et le léopard le plus arboricole et agile. En quoi le jaguar excelle-t-il ?

Quelles sont les différences entre un léopard, une panthère et un jaguar ?
Quelle est la différence entre un jaguar et un léopard ?

Qui gagnerait dans un combat entre les différentes espèces de félins : lion, tigre, léopard, jaguar, léopard des neiges, guépard et puma ?

Est-il vrai que le pouvoir de morsure du guépard est supérieur à celui du léopard?
Pourquoi n'y a-t-il pas de tigre noir et de léopard blanc ?
Quels sont les prédateurs du léopard ?
Qu'est-ce qui fait la particularité des léopards parmi les autres grands félins ?
Est-ce que les chimpanzés et les gorilles peuvent s'accoupler ?
Qui gagnerait dans un combat entre un léopard et un lion ?
Quel est le meilleur animal de compagnie, un anaconda ou un chimpanzé ?

Pourquoi les gorilles, les chimpanzés et les orangs-outans ont-ils des crocs et des yeux orientés vers l'avant alors qu'ils ne sont pas des prédateurs ?

Comment différencie-t-on le léopard du guépard ?
Quelle sous-espèce de léopard est la plus unique, et pourquoi ?
Le guépard est-il faible par rapport aux autres grands félins ?

If Rwanda essentially becomes the overall capital of Africa, would it gain the same prestige as other countries like Switzerland and Singapore? Are we seeing it influencing other nations?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda 3y

Even if Africa were to be the United States of Africa, Rwanda would never the capital. The probability of that happening is near zero.

Kigali, the capital city of Rwanda.
Singapore and Switzerland are very developed countries with an HDI of above 0.900. Rwanda is nowhere near the economic development of these two countries and we won't be for another 50 years or so.

Rwanda cannot even influence her troubled neighbors (Burundi, DRC, and now Uganda). How can we influence other nations?

Can Rwanda be the capital of "Africa"? Absolutely NOT.

- If West-Africa had a capital, it would be Lagos, Nigeria.
- In East-Africa, it would be Nairobi (Kenya) or Dar-es-Salaam (Tanzania).
- In Southern Africa, it would be in Johannesburg, South Africa.
- In Central Africa, it would probably be Kinshasa, DRC.
- In Northern Africa, their capital would be in Rabat, Morocco or Cairo Egypt.

If the impossible were to happen, the only feasible way would be to have 5 regions. Each region will then have their own capital. In each region, the wealthiest metropolitan city will have a big chance to be the capital of their respective region. South, West, East, Central, and North.

According to the article linked, countries come to Rwanda to shop for leadership techniques. This is the missing puzzle for Africa to take off like a rocket to the planetary system. Rwanda seems to have figured out a system of governance that has delivered some level of efficiency with regards to rule of law, productivity, and a balanced system for the benefits of the people.

Rwandan government officials have done study tours in other African countries to learn what they do better than us. We all exchange techniques in politics, economics, and leadership. After these tours, it’s up to the leaders of a country to implement their system as they see fit in their own countries.

Do many leaders look up to Paul Kagame as a star president? Yes.
Does Rwanda influence other nations? I really don’t think so.

Rwanda is a small landlocked country with a smaller market size that you would be lying to yourself if you said that we have some influence on other African countries. What we offer is a story of hope, unity, and economic stability and progress after hitting rock bottom. Tired of failing as a state and determined to work together as one united people, regardless of their differences.

Unity, hard work, and patriotism.

Hope this helps.

Didier Champion

Related Links

How is Rwanda, one of Africa's smaller countries, amongst the most powerful nations in Africa? What is their leverage?

Why did Belgium create two tiny and demographically similar countries next to each other and next to a giant colony of their own in Central Africa? Why wouldn't they make Rwanda and Burundi part of DR Congo?

When & how did Switzerland become so rich? It seems that a century ago, the country wasn’t so well off.

What are the chances of Rwanda becoming the 'Singapore of Africa'?
What is it like to live in Rwanda?

What is different about Tanzania that has allowed it to remain peaceful and prosperous, while neighboring countries like Rwanda, Burundi, Congo and Uganda were torn apart by ethnic strife, brutal dictators, and civil war?

How is it possible that Rwanda is developing at a faster rate than Nigeria when Nigeria has access to the coast, youthful population, and natural resources?

Why don't the leaders of Nigeria replicate the model of the leaders of Rwanda?

Is Rwanda the most prosperous country in Africa?
What has Rwanda done right to become the cleanest nation in Africa?
What does the future look like for Rwanda?

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

How do the Rwandan neighbors (in particular Burundi, the DRC, Uganda and Tanzania) consider or view Rwanda and its leadership under Paul Kagame?

If Paul Kagame doesn’t support Rwandan rebel group in Congo, then why did he threaten to kill former Tanzanian President, Jakaya Kikwete for advising him to negotiate with the Hutu rebels so that African Great Lakes can find peace in the region?

Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?
Why is Rwanda’s capital Kigali so clean as to other cities in Africa?

PRESERVING OUR ANIMALS IN THE WILD
Photo Shot at Senkwekwe Orphanage in DRC's Virunga National Park

Posted by · Follow Kathy Pennell Sun

This photo was shot at Senkwekwe orphanage in DRC's Virunga national park - the only one of its kind in the world. The work that André Bauma (pictured) and his colleagues do in this, Africa's oldest park, is some of the most important and (sadly) least publicised conservation work on this planet. Some of the gorillas are victims of poaching, others were orphaned when their mothers were deliberately murdered.

The goal is to return them to the wild where rangers protect 60% of the world's remaining mountain gorillas - just around 600 animals - living in Virunga.

Cr. @jamesgiff

Source Amazing Facts and Nature

Why is Rwanda called the Switzerland of Africa?

Didier Champion

Traveling around all 55 countries of the continent.2y

It is wrong to call Rwanda, the Switzerland of Africa. Why can't we be the Rwanda of Africa? There is no need to be obsessed with European countries.

10 plus One Amazing Facts about Rwanda and Reasons to visit in 2018

As a country, Rwanda has shown that African countries can stand on their own with their leaders, without any foreign people telling them what to do and how to do it.

We don't need to be the Singapore of Africa, the Luxembourg of Africa, the Switzerland of Africa, we are Rwanda, an African country with a beautiful future. That's enough for me. We are a united, peaceful, and progressive country.

Photo Credit: Rwanda the Heart of Africa

What makes Rwanda's development journey enviable

Related Links

Which country is called Switzerland of Africa?

How do the Rwandan neighbors (in particular Burundi, the DRC, Uganda and Tanzania) consider or view Rwanda and its leadership under Paul Kagame?

Which country is called the Switzerland of South Africa?
What is life in Switzerland like?

Paul Kagame is seen as model leader for African states and turns Rwanda out of poverty into the "Singapore of Africa", but why many Africans from countries like DR Congo, Tanzania, Uganda and Burundi don't consider Paul Kagame as their model leader?

When & how did Switzerland become so rich? It seems that a century ago, the country wasn't so well off.

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

Why is Rwanda safer than most other African countries, even though not as rich?

In the Rwandan Genocide, why did the Hutus so readily kill their neighbors?

Are people from South Africa called Africans?

What would it take to unite Africa as one country? Is it even possible, given the conditions there?

Why is Africa called Africa?
Why is Switzerland called a beautiful place?
What are the chances of Rwanda becoming the 'Singapore of Africa'?
Was Africa ever known as Ethiopia?

What did it feel like to live in Rwanda before and during the 1994 genocide?

Didier Champion Rwandan Blogger (2016–present) July 16, 2020

Read the story of Mazimpaka, a genocide survivor, who survived the killings in 1994-Rwanda. Experience: I survived the Rwandan genocide.

When the president was killed in April 1994, we thought there might be some trouble in the capital, but we had no idea of the scale of what followed.

I was 17 and studying to be a nurse. I was shy, quiet and hard-working. I liked visiting my cousins, and playing football and basketball. My father was a teacher, my mother worked in the education department, and I had two brothers at home and two sisters studying in France and Belgium. We were a normal family.

My family is Tutsi, but there was no Tutsi land or Hutu land. People had mixed marriages. We went to the same schools, lived in the same villages, shared a language. We heard on the radio that Tutsis were being attacked, and that roadblocks were being erected, but we weren't worried for ourselves - we didn't think it would reach where we lived in Nyamasheke in the south-west.

We were wrong. The killings in my town didn't start until a week after the president was killed, but on 15 April a friend, the husband of a teacher, was killed. People with machetes came to steal from his house, and they killed him. Still we thought we were safe and that this was a one-off, but the next day in the neighboring town another teacher and his family were killed and we started to get worried.

A friend warned me our family was next - he was part of the militia, but I used to give him medicine for free and we played football together. We took his warning seriously and that night we stayed with a Hutu friend who had a Tutsi wife. When we went to look at our house the next morning, there was nothing left - everything had been stolen.

We went to the church. Refugees started arriving, too - mostly Tutsis, but some Hutus. Some had machete wounds. They were crying, hungry, desperate and confused. There had been violence in 1959 and 1973; the churches had been a sanctuary then, so people thought they'd be safe. Some of us suggested escaping in boats over Lake Kivu to the Democratic Republic of Congo, but the older people, including my parents, still believed we'd be OK, that we wouldn't be attacked in church.

The next day refugees began to arrive in large numbers. We convinced the school head to open up the supply of food so we could feed them - we still thought with food and water we would be OK.

On 18 April the militia arrived and we saw them preparing to attack. We gathered all the old people, women and children in the buildings and formed four fronts outside to protect them. Young girls found stones for us to throw, and we kept them away for four days. By then it wasn't just the militias, it was the rest of the population as well, including the friend who had warned us - everybody had been brainwashed by the militia to join in. They had machetes, sticks, clubs and grenades. I remember seeing one of my friends hit by a grenade - it scattered his body parts all around.

With some friends I managed to hide in a building that housed a herd of cows. I didn't know whether my parents were dead or alive, but there was no time to look for them and no time to think about it. We had to concentrate on hiding.

We stayed hidden while the militia stole the cows. When they were gone, we decided to swim across Lake Kivu.

There were 12 of us - the other 11 drowned. I couldn't think about it, I had to keep swimming. After two nights I reached the other side. A fisherman gave me food and I went to find my uncle who lived there.

A year later, I went back to Rwanda. I was traumatized. I didn't want to go back to school, but a priest convinced me to. After school, I got a job but I wanted to leave. I had two cousins who survived, but everyone else was gone. I couldn't take the loneliness any longer, so in 1999 I came to the UK.

I met my wife, another survivor, through friends. We got married in 2005 and now have a daughter. It's hard for survivors to speak about what happened, and my wife doesn't like to talk about it to strangers. But it helps me, because I am doing something to continue the memory of what happened. I speak to groups about it through the charity Survivors Fund. People are shocked that it happened, that they didn't know. It is exhausting, but that is what we have left, the story of our loved ones.

How do modern Egyptians feel about Ancient Egyptian history?

Amr Rady

Interested in Ancient History Updated September 6, 2020

Akhenaton and Nefertiti carved by modern Egyptians

Everyday Egyptians does not acknowledge the division of ‘ancient’ and ‘modern’ Egypt. There is a political, cultural and genetic continuity between ancient and modern Egyptians. Egyptians are aware that they founded the oldest continuing state on earth. The pride in their ancient past is unmistakably vivid in their life. Although, Egypt is one of the leaders of Pan-Arab ideology, Egyptians feel that they are culturally and genetically distinct from the people in Arabia.

As to the 'cultural distinction' — it is true that Egyptians have always held a position of 'exceptionalism' within the Arab region. Egypt has been the cultural and intellectual heart of the Arab World — the center of art; the center of music; the center of literature; the center of cinema; the center of poetry; etc., to the point where the Egyptian dialect of Arabic has become a lingua franca in the Arab World. What happens in Egypt affects the surrounding Arab countries more often than not and its position as 'leader of the Arabs' (especially during the Nasser era 1952-1970) is something other Arabs acknowledge.

Modern Egyptian woman vs ancient Egyptian art

This exceptionalism can be attributed to several different reasons — it is the oldest continuous national identity and thus has never had to deal with sectarianism and ethnic conflict like its neighbors; its geography (Egypt is the nexus of Africa and the Middle East and is thus right at the center of the Arab World); or it's geo-strategic position (Suez canal, Red Sea, etc.) which means it was often courted and occupied by foreign powers.

Whatever the reasons, it is true that there is a certain 'Egyptian exceptionalism' when it comes to culture, and Egyptians are very aware of it. It is part of the modern Egyptian identity. This position of intellectual leadership within the Arab World, coupled with the long and storied past of Ancient Egypt makes for a very formidable and domineering national consciousness in Egyptians. This consciousness was bridled at the height of Arab nationalism and unity in the '50-'60s but the cost of several exhaustive wars meant that Arab nationalism experienced a backlash in Egypt, and Egypt's relationship and position within the Arab World was put into question. In times of crisis and polarization, national identity is heightened and many Egyptians feel that they should 'break away' from the Arab sphere and celebrate their own, individual Egyptian identity, instead of being subsumed into the pan-Arab identity.

It is noteworthy to mention that Egyptians feel that Arabs are half-Egyptian because Hagar, Abraham's second wife, gave birth to Ishmael that Muhammad, Islam's last prophet, has directly descended from.

Can one keep an adult and fully grown male chimpanzee as a pet without caging it? Are they more vicious than big cats?

Donna Fernstrom, Reptile breeder and keeper. Have also researched and cared for other animals. Answered Dec 16, 2017

Keeping a chimpanzee is almost exactly like keeping a human who has the mental capacity of a five-year-old, the emotional development of a two-year-old, and the anger-management issues of the average wife-beater who's been arrested 10 times for bar fights. Except with the strength of about five men, huge fangs, and a penchant for going for the face, hands, and genitals.

To say that it's more dangerous than keeping a big cat would be a vast understatement.

Let's be frank. Regardless of how they are legally classified, chimpanzees are near-sapient. The upper level of their normal IQ range overlaps the lower level of our normal IQ range. They may not have all of the mental skills we have, but they have most of them.

A chimpanzee is not a pet — it's an extremely dangerous, mildly mentally impaired person who has no impulse control, and responds to situations with instincts that are almost, but not quite, like ours.

It's as dangerous to think of them as 'just non-human animals' as it is to think of them as 'just like humans.' Think of them as space aliens. Aliens who, if you miss their social cues or catch them on a bad day, will tear you to pieces now and apologize for it later.

A chimpanzee enclosure has more in common with a high security prison than it does with a big cat enclosure. There's a reason for that.

No, you cannot trust a chimpanzee. Even if they love you, they'll hurt you. They hurt each other all the time. And you simply cannot physically compete.

Questions similaires

Peut-on avoir une hyène comme animal de compagnie ?

Quel genre d'animal de compagnie dois-je avoir pour tenir compagnie à mon chien pendant que je suis au travail ?

Avez-vous un animal de compagnie dangereux ?
Est-il possible d'avoir un rapace comme animal de compagnie ?
Comment dresser son corbeau ?
Les hyènes peuvent-elles être domestiquées ?

Selon vous, quel animal pourrait être un excellent animal de compagnie, mais ce n'est pas courant de le voir et pourquoi ?

Pourquoi les hyènes sont-elles si sûres d'elles ?
Un chien qui mord son maître peut-il être gardé comme animal de compagnie ?

Si une hyène peut briser la patte d'un lion en une seule morsure, pourquoi ne tuent-elles pas plus souvent les lions, d'autant qu'elles vivent en clans gigantesques ?

Un chien non dressé protégerait-il son maître ?

Si vous pouviez dresser n'importe quel animal dans le monde pour qu'il devienne votre animal de compagnie et votre protecteur, quel serait-il et pourquoi ?

Est-ce qu'il existe un animal de compagnie qui ne nécessite pas que l'on s'occupe de lui ?
Quel animal de compagnie nécessite le plus de soins et d'attention au quotidien ?
Pourquoi ne pouvons-nous pas garder un singe comme animal de compagnie ?

Pourquoi les gorilles à dos argenté sont-ils si doux et gentils comparés aux chimpanzés ? Why are silverback gorillas so gentle and kind compared to chimpanzees?

Aurélien Breton Suivre MaraîcherTraducteur · 17 sept.

Walter Smyth Fascinated by ancient history and genetics

Les chimpanzés sont plus comme les humains modernes. Ils s'entretuent et violent les femelles. Le bonobo est moins agressif que le chimpanzé, probablement parce qu'il est dominé par les femelles.

Les gorilles sont en grande majorité végétaliens et passent la plupart de leur temps à manger, ce qui est typique des herbivores. Comme la plupart des herbivores, ils sont moins agressifs que les carnivores et les omnivores.

Le livre Gorilles dans la brume montre la scientifique Dian Fossey en compagnie de gorilles sauvages mâles, énormes et puissants, qui auraient pu la tuer d'une seule gifle, mais qui au contraire sont si doux avec elle.

Dian Fossey avec des gorilles sauvages :

Dian Fossey avec son gorille mâle préféré, Digit. Après qu'il ait été assassiné par des braconniers, elle n'a plus jamais été la même :

Suivre Aurélien Breton

More answers from Walter Smyth

How come some Yazidis have light eyes and light hair?

If Ancient Egyptians were of black complexion, why are Egyptians today brown and beige?

Who are the lightest North Africans in average by facial features? Is it Riffians?

What are your thoughts about Dr. Shomarka Keita on the origin of Early Egypt?

Are the Copts today related to ancient Egyptians?

In other languages

In Spanish
¿Por qué los gorilas de espalda plateada son tan amables y y gentiles en comparación con los chimpancés?

In French
Pourquoi les gorilles à dos argenté sont-ils si doux et gentils comparés aux chimpanzés ?

In German
Warum sind Silberrücken-Gorillas im Vergleich zu Schimpansen so sanft und freundlich?

In Italian
Perché i gorilla silverback sono così gentili rispetto agli scimpanzé?

In Japanese
シルバーバックゴリラは、チンパンジーに比べてなぜあんなに穏やかで優しいのでしょうか？

In Portuguese
Por que os gorilas de dorso prateado são tão gentis e amáveis em comparação com os chimpanzés?

Comment les pays africains vont-ils pouvoir combattre le coronavirus ?

Kokou W. Tozo

Anciennement Affiliate Researcher à INSE, Peking University (2016–2019)Mis à jour le 1 an Voici la liste des pays les mieux préparés à affronter efficacement ce genre d'épidémies.

The Countries Best Prepared To Deal With A Pandemic
Index scores by level of preparation to respond to an epidemic/pandemic*
United States 83.5
United Kingdom 77.9
Netherlands 75.6
Australia 75.5
Canada 75.3
Thailand 73.2
Sweden 72.1
Denmark 70.4
South Korea 70.2
Finland 68.7
* 2019. 100=greater level of preparation. Index benchmarks health security on factors critical to fighting disease outbreaks.
@StatistaCharts
Source: 2019 Global Health Security Index statista

La preuve

The virus emerged in China in December 2019 and around 3,300 people there have died from the infection - but both Italy and Spain now have higher death tolls.

Coronavirus global cases, 29 March 2020

This information is regularly updated but may not reflect the latest totals for each country.

	Cases	Deaths
USA	124,509	2,187
Italy	92,472	10,023
China	82,120	3,304
Spain	78,797	6,528
Germany	58,247	455
Iran	38,309	2,640
France	37,575	2,314
UK	19,522	1,228
Switzerland	14,352	282
Netherlands	10,866	771
Belgium	10,836	431
South Korea	9,583	152
Austria	8,486	86
Turkey	7,402	108
Portugal	5,962	119
Canada	5,655	61
Norway	4,232	25
Australia	3,980	16
Brazil	3,904	117
Israel	3,865	14
Sweden	3,700	110
Czech Republic	2,697	13
Malaysia	2,470	34
Ireland	2,415	36
Denmark	2,395	72

Coronavirus: A visual guide to the pandemic . C'est sans commentaire, sinon personne n'était vraiment préparé.

Pour le moment, partout ailleurs, il n'y a ni vaccin, ni médicaments de traitement efficace, du coup nous sommes tous obligés, même en Afrique, de combattre le virus de deux façons:

Combat social
Ceci implique les mesures que nous connaissons presque tous déjà tels que le confinement, la distanciation sociale et l'hygiène (lavage des mains, tousser ou éternuer comme recommandé, port de masque si dispo).

Combat individuel
si vous avez un système immunitaire robuste, vous êtes donc naturellement armé/e contre le coronavirus. C'est souvent le cas des individus appartenant à la couche sociale des moins de 40–35 ans. Ceci ne veut en rien signifier que vous avez le droit de braver le virus, souvenez-vous du point 1.

Réalités sur le terrain

Maintenant, ce qui cloche avec le premier point c'est que d'une part, dans les pays d'Afrique subsaharienne, nous ne savons pas comment ne pas vivre ensemble, c'est notre culture, nous vivons en communauté; de 2, beaucoup n'ont pas la possibilité de stocker des vivres chez eux parce qu'ils n'ont simplement pas les moyens. Nos dirigeants ne veulent voir personne dehors, ce qui n'est pas mauvais, mais sans mesures d'accompagnement, la majorité risque ne pas pouvoir respecter les consignes. Par exemple quand les gens restent chez eux, leur consommation en eau et électricité augmente, au même moment ils ont moins d'argent parce que ne pouvant plus sortir bosser. Pour des populations qui vivent au jour le jour, c'est compliqué. Alors que faire? Voici, une bonne idée, googlez et vous verrez ce qui se passe au Rwanda.

My Media Prime
5 hrs ·

President Paul Kagame has ordered door to door free distribution of food to Rwandans and people living in Rwanda to announce other concessions like free Energy(Electricity) officials will move house by house to conduct equal distribution under his direct supervision to avoid favoritism.

525 151 Comments 152 Shares

Like Comment Share

Aux autres présidents Africains, essayez de copier votre confrère du Rwanda, ou du moins, demandez conseil. Je parie que cet argent n'est pas sorti de sa propre poche.

Revenons aussi au combat individuel, puisqu'ici les plus jeunes sont aussi les plus dangereux pourquoi? Ce sont eux les potentiels porteurs saints, et puisque ne présentant aucun symptôme dans la plupart des cas, ils parviennent facilement à infecter les plus vulnérables. Mais j'ai l'impression que nos amis se débrouillent déjà pas mal. Tenez, j'ai vu des jeunes volontaires, de braves types, soucieux de leurs communauté, qui se déplacent encourageant les populations au respect des mesures essentielles de prévention.

Lutte contre le coronavirus: à Dakar, des jeunes se mobilisent pour inculquer les bons gestes

Il est aussi à noter que certains centres de recherche travaillent sur des méthodes avancées de riposte contre le virus. Leur découverte pourrait être bénéfique au monde entier.

Au Sénégal

Des ‘kits de dépistage rapide’ du coronavirus seront fabriqués au Sénégal

Il est dit dans le post que ces kits de test, selon les scientifiques, permettront de diagnostiquer le coronavirus en 10 minutes. Et ils sont en cours de développement dans un laboratoire de Dakar.

En somme, nous n'avons peut-être pas les grands moyens, mais l'Afrique ne dors pas. Certes, nous avons des dirigeants médiocres, mais nous en avons aussi de très conscients et qui agissent. J'espère cette fois-ci qu'ils prendront tous les meilleurs décisions afin de répondre en cette période de crise, aux besoins des peuples qu'ils dirigent.

Mon dernier souhait, pour le futur, c'est que l'Afrique puisse diminuer sa dépendance excessive vis-à-vis de l'étranger. Nous importons presque tout. Sinon le coronavirus aurait put être évité tout comme ébola qui n'avait pas été exporté hors du continent.
Suivre Kokou W. Tozo

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le coronavirus ne fait pas de ravages en Afrique ?
Pourqui l'Afrique n'a pas été touché par le coronavirus ?

Pourquoi est-ce que les pays "pauvres" s’en sortent bien face à la pandémie du coronavirus ?

Pourquoi le continent africain est-il moins touché par le coronavirus ?
Pourquoi n'accuse-t-on pas la Chine du coronavirus ?
Comment attraper le coronavirus ?

Que fait la Chine pour arrêter la propagation du coronavirus ? Est-ce suffisant ?

Est-ce que les Africains (l’homme noir) sont résistants au coronavirus ? Et pourquoi ?

Que va-t-il arriver aux pays qui ne seront pas capable de stabiliser le Covid-19 (coronavirus) ?

Comment faire face au coronavirus ?

Est-ce que la Chine est responsable de la propagation du coronavirus dans le monde ?

Comment se fait-il que les pays africains soient moins touchés par le COVID-19 que les pays développés ?

Comment l'Afrique est-elle affectée par la pandémie de coronavirus ?

Faut-il blâmer la Chine pour le coronavirus qui s'est propagé dans le monde ?

Est-ce que L'Afrique est vraiment moins touchée par le coronavirus, ou est-ce simplement le cas du manque de tests ?

Does Rwanda have a dark side? It always seems really good.

If you are a tourist or expat in Rwanda,

Didier Champion

·
Follow

Lived in Kigali, RwandaUpdated 3y

I would stay away from any discussion involving politics and ethnic (Tutsi or Hutu) groups. Given our history of foreign intervention in Rwanda's politics, that is something you would not get away with in Rwanda. Rwandans and their government do not like anybody who lectures them about how they should be living their lives or leading their people.

- Criticising the president of Rwanda (Paul Kagame) would not fly well with many Rwandans. He is the savior of Rwanda and the forefather of modern Rwanda. Put some respect on his name and respect Rwandans and their opinions. Didier Champion's answer to How did Paul Kagame rebuilt Rwanda after the genocide?
- (Hint: Are you Tutsi or Hutu?). This question makes many Rwandans very uncomfortable. Lots of "discomfort" writing this because being Rwandan, one people is how we have been rocking after 1994. A united peaceful and progressive Rwanda is the result of that togetherness mentality. It is no-bueno bringing up ethnic group discussions because many Rwandans are simply not comfortable talking about this. Lots of bad memories come up when you bring it up. This is very different from Shona and Ndebele in Zimbabwe, or Kikuyu and Luo in Kenya, or Igbo and Fulani in Nigeria, very different. Those of you who keep asking me whether I am Hutu or Tutsi on Quora, please stop. I am Rwandan. How hard is that to understand? See the link here.

Together, Rwandans and their leaders understand what works in Rwanda better than anybody else. Whatever you do, I would stay away from politics. Otherwise, I have not heard any tourists complain about their safety and wellbeing in Rwanda. I have a much more detailed answer on what to " avoid" in Rwanda. It has most of the things you need to know if you are visiting.

Check out this answer below. If you have more specific questions, let me know.

Didier Champion's answer to What are the biggest mistakes people make when visiting Rwanda?

As a resident of Kigali, below is my main beef with my city.

Kigali is not a city for the poor anymore.

Kigali Master Plan 2040

Over a decade ago, I used to sell sugar canes and kerosene hustling make ends meet. When we were on school holidays, my siblings and I worked to afford food for our family.

In an effort to modernize the city of Kigali (capital city of Rwanda), some measures were taken to keep the city clean, building and housing regulations to modern standards, and other necessary measures to make Kigali, a beautiful city that it is today. By 06/07, I had to stop selling sugar canes because I would have gotten in trouble for dirting the city.

Like any city, you have the elites, the middle class, and people who are struggling financially. Today, I would encourage those at the bottom to move out to the outskirts of Kigali because the city has gotten quite expensive.

Thanks to winning the lotto in education, my family moved up to middle-class status today. So, we can enjoy the city and all it has to offer. But having been poor in Kigali long time ago, I can tell you that such people have a hard time today.

Live outside the city and come to work in the city. If you are financially fortunate, You can live like a king or queen in Kigali. If you are struggling financially, Kigali is not your city. Move out and live it to the middle class and rich people.

For local Rwandans, things have gotten really expensive. Rwandans abroad are coming home, many of which have been saving money from developed countries such as Canada, US, and Western Europe. They settle in Kigali and need modern housing to match their deep pockets. As the city grows, we have a growing number of Expats, living in Rwanda temporarily or permanently.

All of them needs housing. So, with supply and demand in the housing sector, prices have jumped up quite high. What the city calls " affordable" housing is not really affordable to many Kigali residents anymore. Buying a house in an affluent neighborhood, you need between $100K to $150K to get a decent house. If you don't have that kind of money, move to other neighborhoods for sure.

- Real Estate prices are through the roof, especially in Kigali.

Because of the Kigali master plan, some people live in constant fear that they have to be moved out. Even though they receive compensation, it is not emotionally easy to move out of a house you have known for years. For example, there is no amount of money you would give me to move out of my house. Why? Because I grew up in that house. My mom raised us there.

Some Things that Rwandans need to Change to Improve Rwanda.

However, if a big money business person were to come in, they might buy the whole neighborhood for a Kigali master plan type of project. Make no mistake, I like to see the city grow and become prettier, more modern, and bigger, but those times can be hard for those who find their house much more valuable than money. No amount of money can buy the emotional value I have for that little house.

- In tourism, some activities have been reserved for wealthy tourists.

Image source: Silverback Gorilla in the Virunga National Park in Rwanda.

Beginning of 2018, the price to see the Gorilla rose to $1,500.00. Come on, RDB! I don't know of any Rwandan who will go to see the gorilla for that kind of money. As a Rwandan, I used to go see them for $80. At the time, it was $750.00 for other tourists. That means I will only see them on TV. I have had my fair share though. My time is up. I don't have $1.5K laying around to climb a mountain and hang out with gorillas for a half day. I hate to do it but I will be taking my business to Uganda where it is a bit cheaper and manageable for EAC citizens.

Basically, my whole “ complaints” are based on the dilemma of a fast growing city and how regular citizens might not keep up. Kigali and Rwanda are growing fast and that’s good overall for our well-being and economy, but some people are not keeping up.

Folks like me can buy a plot in the outskirts of Kigali, and in 3 to 5 years, you can sell it 5 times the price. Today, I am in the process of buying a few plots nearby the new Bugesera Airport (under construction). I assume their prices are going to double even triple in no-time. Why? Because that’s how fast Rwanda is growing today. If you have some money, you can really get rich in Kigali. If you cannot keep up with the development, you get moved towards the rural area to match the power of your pockets.

That ‘s the reality of any country’s growing city as fast as Rwanda today.

See the video below produced by the Kigali Master Plan about Kigali in 2040.

This might look too ambitious for some people but the government is not playing around. They mean “ business” and the plan get followed to the “T”. When a new business comes around, he is shown a place to develop their projects and are given freedom and tax incentives as long as they abide by the master plan.

I would like to think that that is an ambitious plan for 2040. However, looking at how things are going, I would say that they can achieve that by 2050.

References

Didier Champion's answer to How did Paul Kagame rebuilt Rwanda after the genocide?

Didier Champion's answer to What are the biggest mistakes people make when visiting Rwanda?

Didier Champion's answer to What are the best ways of getting out of poverty?

Hope this helps.

Didier Champion

Related Links

Why is Rwanda so clean and there’s no poverty or many poor people in Rwanda?
How is dating life in Rwanda?
Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?

What is it like to live in Rwanda?
What do you know about Rwanda?
What are some profitable business ideas to start up in Rwanda?
What are the good and bad neighborhoods of Kigali, Rwanda?
What is a good business to start in Kigali, Rwanda?
What do you know about Rwanda? Is Rwanda, a safe place to live?
What country do Rwandans admire most?

Does Rwanda have a dark side? It always seems really good.

If you are a tourist or expat in Rwanda,

Didier Champion

.
Follow
Lived in Kigali, RwandaUpdated 3y

I would stay away from any discussion involving politics and ethnic (Tutsi or Hutu) groups. Given our history of foreign intervention in Rwanda's politics, that is something you would not get away with in Rwanda. Rwandans and their government do not like anybody who lectures them about how they should be living their lives or leading their people.

- Criticising the president of Rwanda (Paul Kagame) would not fly well with many Rwandans. He is the savior of Rwanda and the forefather of modern Rwanda. Put some respect on his name and respect Rwandans and their opinions. Didier Champion's answer to How did Paul Kagame rebuilt Rwanda after the genocide?
- (Hint: Are you Tutsi or Hutu?). This question makes many Rwandans very uncomfortable. Lots of "discomfort" writing this because being Rwandan, one people is how we have been rocking after 1994. A united peaceful and progressive Rwanda is the result of that togetherness mentality. It is no-bueno bringing up ethnic group discussions because many Rwandans are simply not comfortable talking about this. Lots of bad memories come up when you bring it up. This is very different from Shona and Ndebele in Zimbabwe, or Kikuyu and Luo in Kenya, or Igbo and Fulani in Nigeria, very different. Those of you who keep asking me whether I am Hutu or Tutsi on Quora, please stop. I am Rwandan. How hard is that to understand? See the link here.

Together, Rwandans and their leaders understand what works in Rwanda better than anybody else. Whatever you do, I would stay away from politics. Otherwise, I have not heard any tourists complain about their safety and wellbeing in Rwanda. I have a much more detailed answer on what to " avoid" in Rwanda. It has most of the things you need to know if you are visiting.

Check out this answer below. If you have more specific questions, let me know.

Didier Champion's answer to What are the biggest mistakes people make when visiting Rwanda?

As a resident of Kigali, below is my main beef with my city.

Kigali is not a city for the poor anymore.

Kigali Master Plan 2040

Over a decade ago, I used to sell sugar canes and kerosene hustling make ends meet. When we were on school holidays, my siblings and I worked to afford food for our family.

In an effort to modernize the city of Kigali (capital city of Rwanda), some measures were taken to keep the city clean, building and housing regulations to modern standards, and other necessary measures to make Kigali, a beautiful city that it is today. By 06/07, I had to stop selling sugar canes because I would have gotten in trouble for dirting the city.

Like any city, you have the elites, the middle class, and people who are struggling financially. Today, I would encourage those at the bottom to move out to the outskirts of Kigali because the city has gotten quite expensive.

Thanks to winning the lotto in education, my family moved up to middle-class status today. So, we can enjoy the city and all it has to offer. But having been poor in Kigali long time ago, I can tell you that such people have a hard time today.

Live outside the city and come to work in the city. If you are financially fortunate, You can live like a king or queen in Kigali. If you are struggling financially, Kigali is not your city. Move out and live it to the middle class and rich people.

For local Rwandans, things have gotten really expensive. Rwandans abroad are coming home, many of which have been saving money from developed countries such as Canada, US, and Western Europe. They settle in Kigali and need modern housing to match their deep pockets. As the city grows, we have a growing number of Expats, living in Rwanda temporarily or permanently.

All of them needs housing. So, with supply and demand in the housing sector, prices have jumped up quite high. What the city calls “ affordable” housing is not really affordable to many Kigali residents anymore. Buying a house in an affluent neighborhood, you need between $100K to $150K to get a decent house. If you don’t have that kind of money, move to other neighborhoods for sure.

- Real Estate prices are through the roof, especially in Kigali.

Because of the Kigali master plan, some people live in constant fear that they have to be moved out. Even though they receive compensation, it is not emotionally easy to move out of a house you have known for years. For example, there is no amount of money you would give me to move out of my house. Why? Because I grew up in that house. My mom raised us there.

Some Things that Rwandans need to Change to Improve Rwanda.

However, if a big money business person were to come in, they might buy the whole neighborhood for a Kigali master plan type of project. Make no mistake, I like to see the city grow and become prettier, more modern, and bigger, but those times can be hard for those who find their house much more valuable than money. No amount of money can buy the emotional value I have for that little house.

- In tourism, some activities have been reserved for wealthy tourists.

Image source: Silverback Gorilla in the Virunga National Park in Rwanda.

Beginning of 2018, the price to see the Gorilla rose to $1,500.00. Come on, RDB! I don't know of any Rwandan who will go to see the gorilla for that kind of money. As a Rwandan, I used to go see them for $80. At the time, it was $750.00 for other tourists. That means I will only see them on TV. I have had my fair share though. My time is up. I don't have $1.5K laying around to climb a mountain and hang out with gorillas for a half day. I hate to do it but I will be taking my business to Uganda where it is a bit cheaper and manageable for EAC citizens.

Basically, my whole " complaints" are based on the dilemma of a fast growing city and how regular citizens might not keep up. Kigali and Rwanda are growing fast and that's good overall for our well-being and economy, but some people are not keeping up.

Folks like me can buy a plot in the outskirts of Kigali, and in 3 to 5 years, you can sell it 5 times the price. Today, I am in the process of buying a few plots nearby the new Bugesera Airport (under construction). I assume their prices are going to double even triple in no-time. Why? Because that's how fast Rwanda is growing today. If you have some money, you can really get rich in Kigali. If you cannot keep up with the development, you get moved towards the rural area to match the power of your pockets.

That 's the reality of any country's growing city as fast as Rwanda today.

See the video below produced by the Kigali Master Plan about Kigali in 2040.

This might look too ambitious for some people but the government is not playing around. They mean " business" and the plan get followed to the "T". When a new business comes around, he is shown a place to develop their projects and are given freedom and tax incentives as long as they abide by the master plan.

I would like to think that that is an ambitious plan for 2040. However, looking at how things are going, I would say that they can achieve that by 2050.

References

Didier Champion's answer to How did Paul Kagame rebuilt Rwanda after the genocide?

Didier Champion's answer to What are the biggest mistakes people make when visiting Rwanda?

Didier Champion's answer to What are the best ways of getting out of poverty?

Hope this helps.

Didier Champion

Related Links

Why is Rwanda so clean and there's no poverty or many poor people in Rwanda?
How is dating life in Rwanda?
Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?
What is it like to live in Rwanda?
What do you know about Rwanda?
What are some profitable business ideas to start up in Rwanda?
What are the good and bad neighborhoods of Kigali, Rwanda?
What is a good business to start in Kigali, Rwanda?
What do you know about Rwanda? Is Rwanda, a safe place to live?
What country do Rwandans admire most?

Does Rwanda have a dark side? It always seems really good.

If you are a tourist or expat in Rwanda,

Didier Champion · Follow Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 3y

I would stay away from any discussion involving politics and ethnic (Tutsi or Hutu) groups. Given our history of foreign intervention in Rwanda's politics, that is something you would not get away with in Rwanda. Rwandans and their government do not like anybody who lectures them about how they should be living their lives or leading their people.
Criticising the president of Rwanda (Paul Kagame) would not fly well with many Rwandans. He is the savior of Rwanda and the forefather of modern Rwanda. Put some respect on his name and respect Rwandans and their opinions. Didier Champion's answer to How did Paul Kagame rebuilt Rwanda after the genocide? (Hint: Are you Tutsi or Hutu?). This question makes many Rwandans very uncomfortable. Lots of "discomfort" writing this because being Rwandan, one people is how we have been rocking after 1994.

A united peaceful and progressive Rwanda is the result of that togetherness mentality. It is no-bueno bringing up ethnic group discussions because many Rwandans are simply not comfortable talking about this. Lots of bad memories come up when you bring it up. This is very different from Shona and Ndebele in Zimbabwe, or Kikuyu and Luo in Kenya, or Igbo and Fulani in Nigeria, very different. Those of you who keep asking me whether I am Hutu or Tutsi on Quora, please stop. I am Rwandan. How hard is that to understand? See the link here.

Together, Rwandans and their leaders understand what works in Rwanda better than anybody else. Whatever you do, I would stay away from politics. Otherwise, I have not heard any tourists complain about their safety and wellbeing in Rwanda. I have a much more detailed answer on what to " avoid" in Rwanda. It has most of the things you need to know if you are visiting.

Check out this answer below. If you have more specific questions, let me know.

Didier Champion's answer to What are the biggest mistakes people make when visiting Rwanda?

As a resident of Kigali, below is my main beef with my city.

Kigali is not a city for the poor anymore.

Kigali Master Plan 2040

Over a decade ago, I used to sell sugar canes and kerosene hustling make ends meet. When we were on school holidays, my siblings and I worked to afford food for our family.

In an effort to modernize the city of Kigali (capital city of Rwanda), some measures were taken to keep the city clean, building and housing regulations to modern standards, and other necessary measures to make Kigali, a beautiful city that it is today. By 06/07, I had to stop selling sugar canes because I would have gotten in trouble for dirting the city.

Like any city, you have the elites, the middle class, and people who are struggling financially. Today, I would encourage those at the bottom to move out to the outskirts of Kigali because the city has gotten quite expensive.

Thanks to winning the lotto in education, my family moved up to middle-class status today. So, we can enjoy the city and all it has to offer. But having been poor in Kigali long time ago, I can tell you that such people have a hard time today.

Live outside the city and come to work in the city. If you are financially fortunate, You can live like a king or queen in Kigali. If you are struggling financially, Kigali is not your city. Move out and live it to the middle class and rich people.

For local Rwandans, things have gotten really expensive. Rwandans abroad are coming home, many of which have been saving money from developed countries such as Canada, US, and Western Europe. They settle in Kigali and need modern housing to match their deep pockets. As the city grows, we have a growing number of Expats, living in Rwanda temporarily or permanently.

All of them needs housing. So, with supply and demand in the housing sector, prices have jumped up quite high. What the city calls " affordable" housing is not really affordable to many Kigali residents anymore. Buying a house in an affluent neighborhood, you need between $100K to $150K to get a decent house. If you don't have that kind of money, move to other neighborhoods for sure.

Real Estate prices are through the roof, especially in Kigali.

Because of the Kigali master plan, some people live in constant fear that they have to be moved out. Even though they receive compensation, it is not emotionally easy to move out of a house you have known for years. For example, there is no amount of money you would give me to move out of my house. Why? Because I grew up in that house. My mom raised us there.

Some Things that Rwandans need to Change to Improve Rwanda.

However, if a big money business person were to come in, they might buy the whole neighborhood for a Kigali master plan type of project. Make no mistake, I like to see the city grow and become prettier, more modern, and bigger, but those times can be hard for those who find their house much more valuable than money. No amount of money can buy the emotional value I have for that little house.

In tourism, some activities have been reserved for wealthy tourists.

Image source: Silverback Gorilla in the Virunga National Park in Rwanda.

Beginning of 2018, the price to see the Gorilla rose to $1,500.00. Come on, RDB! I don't know of any Rwandan who will go to see the gorilla for that kind of money. As a Rwandan, I used to go see them for $80. At the time, it was $750.00 for other tourists. That means I will only see them on TV. I have had my fair share though. My time is up. I don't have $1.5K laying around to climb a mountain and hang out with gorillas for a half day. I hate to do it but I will be taking my business to Uganda where it is a bit cheaper and manageable for EAC citizens.

Basically, my whole " complaints" are based on the dilemma of a fast growing city and how regular citizens might not keep up. Kigali and Rwanda are growing fast and that's good overall for our well-being and economy, but some people are not keeping up.

Folks like me can buy a plot in the outskirts of Kigali, and in 3 to 5 years, you can sell it 5 times the price. Today, I am in the process of buying a few plots nearby the new Bugesera Airport (under construction). I assume their prices are going to double even triple in no-time. Why? Because that's how fast Rwanda is growing today. If you have some money, you can really get rich in Kigali. If you cannot keep up with the development, you get moved towards the rural area to match the power of your pockets.

That 's the reality of any country's growing city as fast as Rwanda today.

See the video below produced by the Kigali Master Plan about Kigali in 2040.

This might look too ambitious for some people but the government is not playing around. They mean " business" and the plan get followed to the "T". When a new business comes around, he is shown a place to develop their projects and are given freedom and tax incentives as long as they abide by the master plan.

I would like to think that that is an ambitious plan for 2040. However, looking at how things are going, I would say that they can achieve that by 2050.

Related Links

Why is Rwanda so clean and there's no poverty or many poor people in Rwanda?
How is dating life in Rwanda?
Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?
What is it like to live in Rwanda?
What do you know about Rwanda?
What are some profitable business ideas to start up in Rwanda?
What are the good and bad neighborhoods of Kigali, Rwanda?
What is a good business to start in Kigali, Rwanda?
What do you know about Rwanda? Is Rwanda, a safe place to live?
What country do Rwandans admire most?

Why didn't the US invade Rwanda to stop the genocide?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda 2y

Because the United states had simply no dog in the fight.

In the midst of the genocide, President Clinton Administration was given all the details, pictures, videos and all the facts and evidence of what was going on in Rwanda, his administration made it very clear that the United States had no desire to intervene in Rwanda.

These are words of Anthony Lake, the (then) National Security Advisor to President Bill Clinton, in May, 1994 when asked their reasons behind not helping.

"The United States has no friends. The United States only has interests. The US has simply no interests to pursue in Rwanda".

Should you want to read a very detailed answer, see Didier Champion's answer to Why did the US not want to intervene in the Rwandan genocide?

This documentary below " the Ghosts of Rwanda" have all the information you need to know about this genocide and the failure of international community to intervene in Rwanda (Viewer Discretion is advised).

Related Answer
Because the United states had simply no dog in the fight.

Didier Champion, lived in Kigali, Rwanda

In the midst of the genocide, President Clinton Administration was given all the details, pictures, videos and all the facts and evidence of what was going on in Rwanda, his administration made it very clear that the United States had no desire to intervene in Rwanda.

These are words of Anthony Lake, the (then) National Security Advisor to President Bill Clinton, in May, 1994 when asked their reasons behind not helping.

“The United States has no friends.
The United States only has interests.
The US has simply no interests to pursue in Rwanda”.

I am not sure how much the United States knew about their allies’ influence and involvement in Rwanda. At the time of the above statement, France was already down the ground training the Interahamwe Militia.

French Army training the Interahamwe Militia in Zone Turquoise (Rwanda).

The “Interahamwe” were civilians who were trained (militarily) by Rwandan government supported by the French military to kill the Tutsis.

The French government provided financial and training support to the Hutu led government. They managed to transform average citizens into hard-core killers via propaganda, military training in weaponry, and other traditional tools such as machetes, clubs, and so on.

French Army and Interahamwe Militia at work (Rwanda, 26 June, 1994)

France is one of the biggest allies of the United States.

Unfortunately, France had picked a side to support, which was the Hutu led government of Rwanda at the time. They had their vested interests in maintaining their stronghold in Rwanda.

The involvement of the United States in Rwanda would have stopped France's efforts to support their training operations in Rwanda? Did the US want that kind of confrontation with their biggest ally in Rwanda for "no reason"? I don't think so.

Whichever way you look at it, the odds were against the Tutsi people in Rwanda and in favor of the genocide government.

Who cares about black people in Africa?
Who cares about what is happening in a small country in Africa with no natural resources (no oil, or attractive mineral resources)?
The events of Mogadishu in Somalia did not help either. The American government had not recovered from all the critics yet.

Avoiding possible confrontations with France (a US ally), who was already doing the dirty works on the ground.
Till today, France does not want to be held accountable for their actions in Rwanda. Both governments (Rwanda and France) are always fighting in courts over this issue.

Despite all the evidence, Rwanda, a developing country in East-Africa, does not have enough “muscle” power to go against France in the international (western) courts. The Rwandan people wants to get some justice.

Although France might be ashamed of what they did in Rwanda, as a super-power, they don’t want to be held accountable for any of their actions at all.

I have no idea how this will go down, but it has not been pretty over the years.

France and Rwanda head for “showdown” over genocide investigation

Alain Juppe’s “genocides” In Rwanda

Never Again!

Feel free to check out other answers related to genocide against Tutsi in Rwanda. As a Rwandan, I have spent so much time learning about this genocide. It happened to my home country and affected many people I know. I hope you learned something new about this gruesome tragedy.

May we learn from history to build a better peaceful world.

May we notice that hate and divisionism sole purpose is to destroy.

May the truth sets us free to prevent such events to happen again anywhere in the world.

Hope for Rwanda Today and Tomorrow (24 years after)

24 years after this gruesome genocide, Rwandans learned their lessons the hard way and decided that enough was enough. The forces used to destroy this beautiful country, are now being used to build it. Yes, the past is ugly, but the future is bright and promising.

Rwanda Today is peaceful, united, and progressive.

Every year, from April 7th to April 13th we remember those who lost their lives in the terrible genocide against Tutsi. We call this week, a remembrance week. It is a very emotional time for Rwandans, home and abroad. We learn from our past while striving to build a better Rwanda for ourselves.

“Kwibuka” means “to remember” in our local language, Kinyarwanda.

This year, we commemorated this tragedy for the 24th times since 1994. It is an opportunity for us Rwandans to look ourselves in the mirror, look back at our horrific history and strive to create a new Rwanda with peace, unity, and sustainable development. This photo shows how progressive Rwanda has been been for the past quarter of a century.

Wish us the best as we continue to build our nation and to move our country forward.

The before and after photo of Kigali Today, the political and the economic capital city of Rwanda (April, 2018).

"We cannot turn the clock back nor can we undo the harm caused, but we have the power to determine the future and to ensure that what happened never happens again". President of Rwanda, Paul Kagame (April, 2018).

"We cannot turn the clock back nor can we undo the harm caused, but we have the power to determine the future and to ensure that what happened never happens again."

You might find below answers informative if you are interested to learn more.

Didier Champion's answer to Why did Hutu and Tutsi hate each other so much that 20% of Rwanda population were murdered in the Rwandan Genocide? (A detailed history of Hutu and Tutsi denominations before, during, and after colonization. This is where it all started, how it evolved, and how it went down).

Didier Champion's answer to Why were we so worried about the Jewish genocide but never stopped the genocide in Rwanda? (Failure of the international community to intervene in Rwanda and the role of the French government played in funding and supporting this massacre to happen).

Love and Respect.

Didier Champion

Related Answer

Why didn't the United States interveneand in the Rwandan conflict when they had high levels of genocide in that country?

Wes Frank Masters in American History from Northwestern University
Answered Nov 4, 2018

Because it was happening in a part of the world where America had little in the way of interests, allies, or available military resources and it really, really should have been someone else's job.

If Rwanda needed help from foreign nations, why was it the job of a nation on the far side of the globe? Why didn't the nations of East Africa intervene? Why should Americans die to save Rwanda when a hundred or so other nations already declined to do so?

As it was, the American government can count on being condemned for entering any given nation for any reason.

President Clinton intervening in Rwanda to save lives would have immediately brought him under massive attack by the mainstream media in the United States and by republicans. And it would have used as an precedent by the next republican president to intervene in a nation for less virtuous reasons. Say, claiming that a Middle Eastern nation is supporting terrorism and hoarding WMDs, but everyone knows its all about the oil.

Overseas, of course, the American humanitarian interventions in the Balkans, Somalia, and Lebanon are routinely described as "invasions" and denounced as aggression and war crimes. Likewise, President Obama's attempts to prevent the use of WMDs in Syria are routinely denounced as an invasion and a war against Syria.

Related Links

Why did the US not want to intervene in the Rwandan genocide?
Why did the rest of the world allow the Rwanda genocide?
Why didn't the US invade Cuba after the USSR fell?
What was the UN doing during Rwandan genocide?
What would have happened if the US had intervened in the Rwanda genocide?
During the genocide in Rwanda, why didn't anyone intervene?
Explain how UN failed to stop genocide in Rwanda?
Why didn't the UN intervene during the Rwandan genocide?

During the Rwanda genocide, why didn't the United Nations intervene to save the people?

What events led to the Rwandan genocide?

Is it true that white people shouldn't talk about the Rwandan genocide because it's not their issue?

Could the US be successfully invaded?
Why didn't any country intervene during the Rwandan genocide?
How is Rwanda now, 20 years after the genocide?
Why didn't the UN try to stop the 1994 Rwandan genocide?

Why does it seem that Rwanda is replacing Tanzania gradually in the East African Community?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda 2y

Rwanda will never replace Tanzania in the EAC. As a founding member, Tanzania plays a big role in the EAC. Without Tanzania, there is no EAC.

Compared to Tanzania, we are a much smaller economy; $25 billion versus $ 180 billion (GDP PPP). Regardless of what is happens, we cannot fill Tanzania's shoes. Here are a few reasons.

We are a densely populated landlocked country with 12+ million people. Tanzania is a much more spacious country of about 57 million people. By area size, Tanzania (red) is 36 times the size of Rwanda (blue). Yet by population, Tanzania has only 5 times our population. For agrarian economy who still rely on subsistence agriculture (heavily), this means that they have more land and space for agriculture and farming activities. This is the bedrock of both economies.

Access to the sea

The port of Dar-es-Salaam plays a big role in trade relations in the region. Aside of Kenya, which has their own trading port (Mombasa), the rest of the nations rely on Tanzania for importation. Rwanda, Burundi, Uganda, and South Sudan. Let's not forget that all our countries are agrarian economies and import all sorts of goods through these ports. Rwanda will never play the same role as Tanzania.

Historical context

Tanzania is one of the founding member of the EAC. Together with Kenya, they have been the most political stable country in the region. Since independence, there has never been a civil war or anything of that nature in Tanzania. While in other countries, genocide in Rwanda, ethnic conflicts in Burundi, multiple coup d'etat and wars in Uganda, shaky election seasons in Kenya, and so on.

Today, the region is much more stable and peaceful. But, if you have to select one country that has been consistent over the years, Tanzania would be the country.

This brings me to my next point.

Political and economic strategy

In order to survive, Rwanda has to be open to the world. We have been working very hard to attract foreign direct investments, promoting tourism, and overall relying on good governance and good economic policies to achieve the middle-income status.

On the other other hand, Tanzania has a different strategy. They have all resources necessary to develop themselves. So, their strategy is to work internally, develop the local capacity to take advantage of the resources of Tanzania. As of 2019, Tanzania is still hesitant of the approaches of Kenya, Uganda, and Rwanda. They have opposed the single tourist visa for EAC and other policies they don't agree it. Given their resources, geographical location, they can afford a very conservative development plan. Rwanda can't.

Kigali, Rwanda

Dar-es-Salaam, Tanzania.

Learn more at Africa is Home and/or Rwanda Today

Related Answer

Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?

Didier Champion, lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated Sep 15, 2018

I am a Rwandan millenial who has observed the political and the socio-economic transformation of Rwanda since the aftermath of 1994.

Photo Credit: Rwanda the Heart of Africa

The Social Economic Transformation of Rwanda for almost 25 years after 1994.

Side note: Many African states are developing as well. Rwanda is not the only one. Just look at the 2017 & 2018 fastest growing countries in the world. 2017 census show that six of the top 10 are African (Ghana, Ethiopia, Senegal, Djibouti, Tanzania, and Cote d'Ivoire).

Notice these countries GDP growth is bigger than Rwanda's. In my opinion, other African states are not telling their stories to the world. We live in a branding and marketing world. Rwanda has become "famous" partly because wherever Rwandans are on the globe, we are proud of our country and share what is going on the ground. Social media platforms have made things easier. We don't need CNN, BBC, and other western media news outlets to share our stories.

Six of the ten fastest growing countries in 2018 could be in Africa according to the World Bank's report "Global Economic Prospects" of January 2018, with Ghana (+8.3% growth) and Ethiopia (+8.2%) leading the charge (1st and 2nd) in improved economies, and Ivory Coast (+7.2%) in 4th and Djibouti (+7%) in 5th! Six of the top 10 Fastest Growing Economies in 2018 are African.Back to your question on Rwanda Development Success.

Rwanda gets praised a lot because of situation that we were coming from. A combination of a civil war in early 1990's and gruesome genocide in 1994. In less than 2 decades, we have managed to change the course of our history for good. We have made done so much with little resources. That's called " efficiency".

Our systems of government is one of the most efficient and transparent in Africa, rule of law and order, Ease of doing business, promoting tourism, investment in business and entrepreneurship. How did we do it? You ask! I will explain.

Rwanda, a country once known as a "failed state", it is now an "economic miracle" and a model for development to other African countries. Think about it.

We were like an "obese patient" who is told by their doctor that they only have 3–6 months to live if they don't change their eating and exercising habits.

To Keep Rwanda alive and on the map of Africa (after 1994), we had to change. We all knew we had ef-up big time. The change was urgently needed or Rwanda would still be a “war-torn” and “unstable” country today. For things to change, we had to change.

Genocide was our mistake. Being poor was our mistake.
Hatred, divisionism, tribalism, corruption, identity politics and their cousins in the that same “ugly” family was our mistake.

We had to change. Otherwise, we were in big trouble.
It was a collective efforts from every Rwandan. Starting from the president, the leaders and the people. Our development model is unique and somewhat of a special case. It can be summarized with the following:

The change of mentality, sense of urgency to survive first, live second and prosper later.

The political and social-economic transformation of the Rwandan society.

Working together, supporting one another and sticking together through “thick and thin”.

Forgiving one another even when it did not make sense. Putting the interests of the country before anyone else’s. This was the toughest of all.

Even a farmer in the (remote) rural areas will tell you that he is waking up early to go to the fields to “ build his country” before he mentions about supporting his own family, putting his kids through schools, and others.

It is a cultural thing today that Rwandans are very proud of their country and will do whatever it takes to maintain what we have buit and improve what need to take our country to greater heights of economic development/prosperity.
“Doing it yourself mentality”. After 1994, we were taught a harsh lesson.

Only Rwandans can build Rwanda.
Only Rwandans can fix our country.
Nobody else cares about Rwanda except us.
Genocide was stopped by Rwandans themselves.

Those who call themselves the “human rights” champions left the country when things got ugly and tough; The United Nations, the developed nations and everybody else.

This harsh lesson has stuck with us.

Just like we will never forget about the 1994-gruesome genocide, we will never forget when those nations who evacuated every white person in the country and left black Rwandans to die in desperation.

We will never forget. Only we can build and fix what needs to be fixed. Nobody else. Everything we do today goes back to those times.

The Rwandan development model is successful because it is based on the desire to be self-reliant and independent. Dignity and respect comes first. Whoever you are, if you don't respect us, we are not afraid to go "head to head" with you. We strive to respect everybody, from the developping to the developped countries, we expect that respect back through mutual bilateral relations, trade, business, entrepreneurship and tourism.

The "aid model" was designed in the 1970's with a colonial mindset of complex of superiority. It has kept Africans in poverty and helplessness for over a half century. The result of what it has produced speak for itself.

Why Foreign Aid Is Hurting Africa (Economist, Dambisa Moyo).

Mediocrity after mediocrity for more than 50 years.

A rich Africa who is the meal at the table of all G8-(western) countries.

Rwanda does not want to be part of that. In fact, by 2025, we are going to be an " aid-free" country. Today (2018 fiscal year), only 15% of our national budget comes from aid and soft loans, down from 86% in the 2000 fiscal year. By the 2025 fiscal year, we will be 100% self-reliant and independent, calling 100% of all our shots and decisions.

Our president is crystal clear on a truly-independent Rwanda. He does not tolerate mediocrity. Every macroeconomic policy today is designed to achieve that target by 2025. No excuse! If Rwanda can do it, every African country should have no excuse. It is all about changing your mindset, get angry about your poverty, get fired up and ready to go.

GO BIG or GO HOME. Great tweet and quote from President Kagame. The time for babysitting is over. At least for Rwanda, we are done with that dependence mentality.

Rwanda Today

This is a brief summary and a brief introduction about the Rwandan development model. Last but not least, good leadership also matters. You need a strong leader like PK who only answers to his people (and not the western countries). He is a special breed in the class of African politicians. Strong, fearless, businessman, marketer, and military general. He says like it is and Rwandans love him for that. It is all about business for him and how to make Rwanda better.

“Starting from the bottom, now we here”! All the way from the bush, now we here.

As the head of the African Union (2018), I hope he can move a needdle in the right direction for a independent Aid-free Africa. I am not sure if he will bypass all the bureaucracy and inefficiencies in the African Union system of governance though. I wish him the best of luck in that “useless” organization.

Just look at the people he is beeing meeting with in less than 2-months (April-June 2018). Quite a busy schedule, from China, Russia and the Western countries. Negotiating fair trade and investment deals on behalf of the African people.

More about Rwanda and her success story

I have compiled all my answers on Quora in a masterpiece of a course. I have averaged between 10k to 20k views on many of them, and 20k to 40k views on some of them. They are the best you can find on Quora and honestly anywhere.

I have designed this course to be easily readable. Short, sweet and concise.

All you need to know about Rwanda Today is summarized here; “ Free of charge”.

Rwanda 101: Introduction to Modern Rwanda (Rwanda Post-1994).

Rwanda, the Singapore and Prussia of Africa; Unity, efficiency, work ethic, and togetherness.

To understand Rwanda Today, you have go back to the aftermath of 1994-genocide times. After 1994, we knew we had to change our old ways of doing things. I analyze Rwanda’s political and social-economic in three different periods. Enjoy learning more about the new Rwanda today.

From 1994–2000: Recovery and healing time.

Law and order in the country.

Bringing back unity, peace and security.

From 2000–2008: President Kagame assumes the presidency.

Sustaining peace, safety and security; unity and peace; hope and excitement for today and the future.

Major economic reforms on both bottom-up and top-down approaches.

From 2009-Today: Economic growth and sustainable development

Moving away from the “ Hotel Rwanda” type of narrative.

Taking Rwanda to the next level of economic heights.

Marketing the “Rwandan Brand” to the world.

A small country with an ugly past set to change their course of history.

Sharing the success stories of the “new updated Rwanda”. I call it the Rwanda 5.0.
Boosting tourism and foreign direct investments.

Reducing aid dependency from 86% in the year 2000 to 17% in 2018 fiscal year.

Setting a deadline from an independent aid-free Rwanda (2025).

By the 2025 fiscal year, Rwanda wants to be rely to themselves only.

Today, Rwanda is on a good path to a middle income country by 2025. From there, we will keep growing together in peace and harmony, sustaining steady economic growth on the way to sustainable development. This is Rwanda Today and that’s how we have done it.
Cheers from Rwanda.

At Rwanda Today, we are on the top, baby! Good leadership matters!

10 plus One Amazing Facts about Rwanda and Reasons to visit in 2018

Kigali, the capital city of Rwanda and the most beautiful and organized city in Africa for 4 years in a row since 2014.

Didier Champion

Thanks for the A2A.

Est-il possible pour un animal de déclarer la guerre à un autre animal de la même espèce ?

Romain Collombon Démystificateur de furtivité depuis plusieurs années Mis à jour le 9 oct.

Les chimpanzés mènent naturellement des guerres. La première fois que cela a été constaté ce fut lors de la guerre des chimpanzés de Gombe. La violence du conflit a choqué la chercheuse Jane Goodall qui étudiait ces groupes de primates et les croyait, jusque là, plutôt pacifiques.
Comme chez les humains l'instinct guerrier est un avantage évolutif : ça permet d'accaparer les ressources d'autres groupes de congénères. Vae victis ! Malheur aux vaincus !

On y a juste ajouté progressivement de la technique.

Le début de développement technologique vu pas Stanley Kubrick dans "2001 l'odyssée de l'espace", où un primate s'aperçoit qu'un gourdin c'est bien pratique…

Est-ce que les hippopotames sont omnivores?/ Are hippos omnivorous?

Jerome Cohen , Matt Zietsman
Grew up in South Africa surrounded by animals
Officiellement, les hippopotames sont considérés comme des herbivores[1]
MAIS l'hippopotame de 4 tonnes, excessivement agressif et socialement déficient, ne s'en tient souvent pas à la catégorie de régime que les scientifiques lui ont attribuée.

Et pourquoi pas.

Contrairement à la plupart des herbivores, avec une bouche mesurant jusqu'à 1,2 mètre et des canines pouvant atteindre 50 cm, les hippopotames sont plus qu'équipés pour jouer le rôle de prédateur de temps en temps.

En fait, dans un article récent publié par le biologiste Joseph Doudley, ses chercheurs et lui ont observé un comportement carnivore dans les populations d'hippopotames [2] [3].

Doudley énumère des cas où des hippopotames sauvages ont tué et se sont nourris de certains des plus grands animaux d'Afrique, notamment :

Des éléphants,
Des gnous,
Des kudus

et parfois même d'autres hippopotames alors que dans les zoos, on a signalé que des hippopotames tuaient et mangeaient leurs voisins.

Quant à savoir pourquoi les hippopotames ont parfois envie d'augmenter leur régime alimentaire et sont d'humeur à manger de la viande dans leur menu habituel d'herbe, on ne sait pas trop pourquoi.

Des cas d'hippopotames devenant carnivores ont été observés :

pendant les périodes de sécheresse, lorsque la nourriture est rare (les besoins doivent être satisfaits) ; pendant les périodes d'abondance, en particulier lorsque la viande se présente littéralement aux hippopotames (comme lors des noyades lorsque des masses de gnous traversent les rivières) ou parfois en volant des produits tués par d'autres prédateurs dont les hippopotames pensent pouvoir se débarrasser (ce qui inclut probablement presque tous les prédateurs, étant donné que l'hippopotame est le troisième plus grand mammifère du monde).

Voilà, c'est fait.

Les hippos sont des herbivores et non des omnivores... mais essayez de leur dire cela.

Merci également à Claire Freund de m'avoir fait examiner ce sujet et de m'avoir fourni le lien vers l'un des articles sources.
Sources pour les photos :

Regardez ce qui se passe quand un crocodile entre dans un troupeau d'hippopotames. Watch What Happens When a Crocodile Walks Into a Herd of Hippos

Pourquoi faut-il se méfier d'un hippopotame qui rit ou qui bâille. Why you should beware a laughing or yawning hippo

Notes de bas de page [1] Hippopotamus | National Geographic

[2] Hippos Eat Way More Meat than We Thought, and It Can Make Them Sick

[3] Carnivory in the common hippopotamus Hippopotamus amphibius: implications for the ecology and epidemiology of anthrax in African landscapes

Merci également à Claire Freund de m'avoir fait examiner ce sujet et de m'avoir fourni le lien vers l'un des articles sources.

Sources pour les photos :

Regardez ce qui se passe quand un crocodile entre dans un troupeau d'hippopotames. Watch What Happens When a Crocodile Walks Into a Herd of Hippos

Pourquoi faut-il se méfier d'un hippopotame qui rit ou qui bâille. Why you should beware a laughing or yawning hippo

Notes de bas de page [1] Hippopotamus | National Geographic

[2] Hippos Eat Way More Meat than We Thought, and It Can Make Them Sick

[3] Carnivory in the common hippopotamus Hippopotamus amphibius: implications for the ecology and epidemiology of anthrax in African landscapes

Les grands singes sont-ils carnivores, herbivores ou omnivores ? Are apes carnivores, herbivores, or omnivores?

Jerome Cohen · Suivre

Serge Elia Animal lover

Bien que leur consommation soit principalement herbivore, les grands singes (chimpanzés, gorilles, orangs-outans) sont des animaux omnivores, c'est-à-dire qu'ils se nourrissent de feuilles, de fruits, de graines, de tiges, d'insectes et de vers, ainsi que parfois de viande animale.

Comme les humains, les chimpanzés chassent aussi régulièrement qu'ils cherchent de la végétation et des insectes dans la jungle. Ils chassent d'ailleurs le cerf et l'antilope, mais surtout d'autres primates tels que les singes colobes rouges et les gnous. Une fois la chasse réussie, les chimpanzés se gavent de viande et la partagent avec leurs congénères.

Les chimpanzés, les orangs-outans et les gorilles ont tous en commun la capacité de fabriquer des outils. En effet, ils fabriqueront et utiliseront de longs bâtons pour pêcher les termites et les fourmis hors de leurs termitières, et dans la bouche des singes. En fait, certains chimpanzés du sud-est du Sénégal ont été aperçus en train de forger des lances acérées pour chasser des proies (voir ci-dessous) !

Cependant, les gorilles ne mangent pas de viande, car leur régime alimentaire se compose principalement de fruits, de feuilles, de graines et de tiges, ainsi que d'insectes comme les fourmis, les larves et les termites, rien d'autre. Ils possèdent cependant des mâchoires acérées, qu'ils utilisent pour mâcher des plantes coriaces.

En résumé, bien qu'ils soient classés comme herbivores, les grands singes n'en sont pas moins de véritables omnivores.

Réponse similaire
Pourquoi les herbivores ont-ils des cornes mais pas les carnivores ?

Quentin Brémond, Master de L'Université Aix-Marseille (2020) Répondu 31 janv. 2020

Réponse originale : Pourquoi les herbivores ont ils des cornes mais pas les carnivores ?

En premier lieu sans doute pour se défendre des carnivores, ils développent des traits défensifs en réponse aux traits offensif développé par leurs prédateurs (musculature/griffes/comportement de chasse). En deuxième lieu, à l'instar de certains oiseaux dans la qualité du ramage et la présence d'ornementations, cela peut être également le résultat d'une mobilisation d'énergie allouée pour la sélection sexuelle, qui s'est rendue possible par le bon état de santé des populations d'herbivores.

En d'autres termes, il s'agit de deux trajectoires évolutives différentes ; sans raisonner sur le régime alimentaire à proprement parler, c'est simplement une question d'utilité qui se pose ici : un animal qui doit chasser a-t-il intérêt à développer des cornes, qui pourraient l'alourdir de précieuses centaines de grammes et réduire son équilibre pendant sa course à la nourriture, diminuer son aérodynamisme, le rendre plus détectable dans les fourrés, le gêner lors du dépeçage de sa proie ? La sélection naturelle à pesé le pour et le contre, et si les désavantages priment, on ne reverra pas ce caractère avant un long moment (avant d'être de nouveau avorté si n'étant toujours pas d'utilité publique…)

C'est ainsi que cet attribut a un rôle notable essentiellement chez les herbivores.

Réponse similaire
Pourquoi les insectes carnivores ne mangent-ils pas les humains ?

Julien Gravier, ancien(ne) Chercheur dans la recherche contre le cancer
Répondu 14 oct. 2020

Avant de demander pourquoi, il faut parfois se demander si. En négligeant les tiques, puces et moustiques dont on peut dire qu'ils sont hématophages et pas carnivores au sens strict du terme, il reste plusieurs espèces de mouches qui en ont bel et bien après notre chair.
On peut déjà commencer par parler de la lucilie bouchère, de son petit nom latin : Cochliomyia hominivorax, qui signifie littéralement mangeuse (vorax) d'humains (hominis). Contrairement à ce que le nom peut suggérer elle ne s'attaque pas qu'aux humains, mais à tout les mammifères en pondant aux bords d'une plaie pour que ses asticots se nourrissent des chairs. La plaie ainsi élargie sert de terrain de ponte pour d'autres lucilies, souvent jusqu'à la mort de l'animal.

Il y a également Dermatobia hominis et Cordylobia anthropophaga, où l'humain (hominis / anthropos) est toujours au menu des larves. Le pire, c'est qu'elles se sont adaptées différemment au fait que la plupart des mammifères sont assez intelligents pour repérer leur vol et les fuir. Dermatobia a pris l'habitude de pondre ses oeufs sur les moustiques ou les tiques, tandis que Cordylobia pond sur les vêtements et serviettes laissés à sécher (ou par terre à des endroits où les mammifères s'étendent). Dans les deux cas, les oeufs vont ensuite éclore lorsque la chaleur d'une proie va les activer, et la larve s'enfoncer dans la peau pour s'y faire un nid douillet et dévorer la chair jusqu'à ce qu'elle soit prête à se métamorphoser.

Si jamais vous allez dans des pays où vivent ces espèces, il est plutôt conseillé de prendre quelques précautions.

Pour les insectes prédateurs carnivores, ils ont un problème de taille. Littéralement. Le transport de l'oxygène n'est pas assuré par un système actif, comme les poumons et le sang pour nous, mais par diffusion. La taille maximale des insectes est donc dépendante de la vitesse de diffusion de l'oxygène, qui elle-même est limitée par la concentration de celui-ci dans l'atmosphère. Les plus grosses mante-religieuses ou les frelons peuvent s'attaquer à des petits oiseaux ou mammifères, nul doute qu'ils feraient de même s'ils avaient une taille suffisante pour menacer un humain.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les singes ne deviennent-ils plus des humains ?
Le singe est-il réellement l'animal le plus proche de l'Homme ?

Si on regarde bien, on ne mange que de la viande d'herbivore mais pas de viande de carnivore, pourquoi ?

Les humains sont-ils censés être végétariens ?

Un ami m'a dit que les humains ne sont pas censés manger de la viande, étant donné que nos dents sont plates comme des vaches mangeuses d'herbe, et non en crocs pointus comme des tigres, est-ce vrai ?

Pourquoi les carnivores ont-ils plus de jambes musclées que les herbivores ?

Que se passera-t-il si je donne de la viande à un animal herbivore ?
Pourquoi les herbivores ont-ils des cornes mais pas les carnivores ?

Est-ce que certains animaux herbivores deviennent carnivores à cause de la sécheresse ?

Quel est l'animal carnivore le plus intelligent ?

Est-il possible qu'une espèce animale herbivore évolue en une espèce carnivore ?

Pourquoi la plupart de nos animaux de compagnie sont-ils carnivores ?

A-t-on déjà fait l'expérience d'élever un animal carnivore comme herbivore et vice-versa ?

Les animaux carnivores préfèrent-ils manger certains herbivores, ou n'ont-ils pas de préférences ?

Quels animaux ne sont pas, étonnamment, strictement herbivores ?

Est-ce que les animaux herbivores sont les plus puissants ? Si oui pourquoi ?

Pourquoi parle-t-on si peu du génocide au Rwanda ?

Alexandre Roswilo · Suivre Précédent lieu : Afrique (1975–2019) 2 ans

25 ans exactement après , il faut comprendre que beaucoup y ont fait preuve d'incompétence remarquable et d'autres jouer un très sale rôle qui à la longue a fini simplement par surchauffer et faire exploser "la marmite rwandaise " :

(Juvénal Habyarimana)

-Les belligérants rwandais entre pro-hutus (FAR[5] leurs milices dont les Interahamwe[3]) et tutsi (FPR[4]) avec une haine qui s'est enracinée et transformée en guerre fratricide, attendaient depuis longtemps le moment opportun pour en finir une fois pour toute .

(Paul Kagamé)

-L'armée française[6] avait choisi dès le départ son camp mais cette fois , cela s'est avéré le mauvais pire catastrophique car leurs protégés ont non simplement perdu cette guerre mais ils ont été responsables de massacres à grande échelle qui devinrent l'un des pires génocides du continent africain.

-L'ONU à travers sa force MINUAR[8] a simplement craqué son chef , le général canadien Roméo Dallaire[10 en tête , par manque de moyen et de soutient de leur hirarchie et surtout de la communauté internationale dans ce cauchemar réel.

(Le général Roméo Dallaire)

-Les Belges[9] ont très vite été dépassé par la tournure des évènements et ont paniqué en retirant leurs troupes ce qui a considérablement affaibli les forces onusiennes pire laisser les populations encore plus à la merci des génocidaires .

-La communauté internationale se fichait pas mal de ce qui se passait au Rwanda . Il y avait plusieurs conflits ailleurs dans le monde . Le Rwanda intéressait peu .

Le génocide rwandais est donc en définitive le signe le plus palpable de la fin du XXémè siècle de l'incompétence de nos États et de nos institutions internationales dans le cadre de la résolution des conflits à travers le monde et en Afrique en particulier .

Pourtant sur place beaucoup on fait malgré tout preuve d'un courage incroyable et surtout à rappeler .

Mbaye Diagne ; le héros oublié d'un génocide

(Capitaine Mbaye Diagne)

Notes de bas de page
[1] Image on actunet.net
[2] Image on over-blog-kiwi.com
[3] Interahamwe — Wikipédia
[4] Front patriotique rwandais — Wikipédia
[5] Image on kigalilive.com
[6] Rôle de la France dans le génocide des Tutsi au Rwanda — Wikipédia
[7] Image on over-blog-kiwi.com
[8] Image on radio-canada.ca
[9] Tragédie à l'Ecole technique de Kigali
[10] Image on over-blog-kiwi.com
[11] Image on over-blog-kiwi.com
[12] Image on quoracdn.net

Do Hutus and Tutsi have the same origin?

Michael Davis Mar 12

Yes, they have the same origin, since both ethnic groups are natural to the African continent.
Hutu are tend to be more broad featured and of a more stockier robust build, while Tutsi are taller, more gracile with more slender elongated facial features, yet are unmistakably African. Both groups are predominantly E1b1a on their paternal DNA and are bantu speakers.

Both groups merely ehibit variations of a African physical construct and neither is more or less African/Black than the other despite the claim of white interlopers.

The natural variation of African people is immense, both genetically, and physically.

It was that variation that colonizers played upon to forment discord and violent conflict among the groups who, previous to white encroachment and invasion, got along relatively well with intermarriage between both groups being not uncommon.

Related Answer

Why is Rwandan President Paul Kagame silent on the Kipupu massacre perpetrated by the Ngumino rebel group (supported by Rwanda) which killed 220 people? Are Ngumino in Eastern Congo are there to protect Banyamulenge-Tutsi ethnic group?

Rebecca Davidson Studied Business Administration & Economics (Graduated 2020)1y

Firstly, if we have to talk about the death toll, the Bembe people, Furiiru people, Nyindu people and Shi communities have already lost more human beings than the Banyamulenge community.

Two elements:

The ethnic minority does not mean innocence or means that the ethnic majority cannot be protected from the violence of the minority.

The Banyamulenge combatants and Banyamulenge community are the most protected community in eastern Congo and are the best armed compared to some neighboring communities, hence the reason why they control various regions of eastern Congo and kill other tribes for no reason:

Here we can see Sultani Makenga, a Tutsi rebel military leader of M23 is now preparing Ngumino (Banyamulenge rebel group) militiamen to attack the native Congolese.

This is why I denounce once again with the greatest energy this attitude of excessive victimization by using inappropriate words which are likely to bring misfortune to the Congo. It has been more than two decades since the "Hutu/Tutsi genocide" of 1994 was instrumentalized to the point of causing the deaths of millions of Congolese and Rwandans on Congolese soil, the destruction of the Congo with its infrastructure, its social and economic fabric, looting. systematic. Through this instrumentalization, some have even granted themselves the “international license to kill Congolese”.

I particularly remember the capture of Bukavu by Laurent Nkunda troops and Colonel Jules Mutebusi. Not even two deaths! And for that, the whole city was looted, people killed, a hundred women raped in just 24 hours and the city’s central market (Kadutu) set on fire, thus ruining the economy of an entire province, a whole people.

Now coming back to Kipupu Massacre, we are in a region where each side has a habit of overestimating its losses and locking itself relatively into a victimization algorithm ignoring the pain of others. As I often say to our Banyamulenge brothers, they are not just victims. They are also executioners, and most often the triggers of violence.

What is important to remember is that there was an attack against non-Tutsi massacre in the locality of Kipupu in this past July, 16, 2020. The Banyamulenge (Tutsi) rebels under colonel Makanika, military chief of staff of the Ngumino, a rebel military group based in eastern areas of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, targeted the civilian population, killing, setting fire to the houses ... It’s called “crimes against humanity”!

These are kids who are slain like meat.

This is undoubtedly a crime against humanity. The person who supports the rebels who kill the Banyamulenge is the same person who had publicly advertised the "SaveBanyamulenge" campaign in Kigali. I had not stopped denouncing the hypocrisy of the Banyamulenge community (apart from a few courageous and "nationalist" individuals) to complain of being exterminated by the Burundian rebels without denouncing the responsibilities of Rwanda which supports these rebels who in addition are stuffed with elements of the Rwandan special forces.

I invite our Banyamulenge brethren not to let themselves being used by Rwandan oppressive regime without knowing it serve as an alibi for people of will and those who want to destroy the Congo.

Related Links

What are the differences between Ewe Kente and Ashanti Kente?
Who are the Kanembu people of Chad? What are their origins and genetics?
What are the names, myths, and responsibilities of deities in the Fulani tribe in Nigeria?
Why does Africa see their gods as inferior to Christianity brought by the Westerners?
Why is suya wrapped in used/Old newspapers in Nigeria?

What tribal cultural practices most appalled the 19th century Europeans who travelled to sub-Saharan Africa?

What are some good African proverbs that you have read?
How do you make bitter leaf soup?

What is one beautiful tradition in any of the African tribes do you think the world needs to know?

What is one African tradition you wish you could change?
Who are the Mende People of Sierra Leone?
Can you mention (with pictures) some traditional African dances?

The family of my fiancee in Ghana continues to ask me for large sums of money instead of buying traditional gifts as part of the marriage arrangement. Will this end with the marriage or do they just see me as a meal ticket?

Who are the Ijaws?

Why is Rwanda safer than most other African countries, even though not as rich?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 3y

Because more than anybody, Rwanda understand what it is like not to have peace and security in your own country. It is no-bueno.

We have been through enough and have seen enough. Peace, security and stability is not negotiable in Rwanda today. We are all on the same page on sustaining a peaceful-Rwanda.

Public Transportation Bus station in my hometown (Kigali, Rwanda).

The government has done a good job ensuring that safety is 100% maintained all over the country. This is the results of working together with the people of Rwanda. Community engagements at all levels of government institutions in cities, urban centers, and rural areas.

When regular citizens and their government understand the importance of safety and security in the country and have the will and determination to make it happen together, t*he rest is easy from there*. It helps the police force to eliminate inefficiencies and miscellaneous waste, which cuts costs down very considerably. This is what Rwanda has done sustainably for over 15-years now.

I would definitely give them an A+ if I was grading their performance over the last decade.

Their efforts have paid off big time that Rwanda is not just the safest countries in Africa, but also, the world. Guess who ranks 9th worldwide? Rwanda.

2017 Top 20 safest nations in the world by the World Economic Forum

THE TOP 20 SAFETY COUNTRIES IN THE WORLD

RANK	COUNTRY	SCORE	RANK	COUNTRY	SCORE
1.	FINLAND	6.65	11.	PORTUGAL	6.65
2.	UNITED ARAB EMIRATES	6.60	12.	LUXEMBOURG	6.60
3.	ICELAND	6.57	13.	NEW ZEALAND	6.57
4.	OMAN	6.49	14.	AUSTRIA	6.49
5.	HONG KONG SAR	6.47	15.	ESTONIA	6.47
6.	SINGAPORE	6.45	16.	SWEDEN	6.45
7.	NORWAY	6.41	17.	SLOVENIA	6.41
8.	SWITZERLAND	6.41	18.	SPAIN	6.41
9.	RWANDA	6.39	19.	NETHERLANDS	6.39
10.	QATAR	6.33	20.	MOROCO	6.33

To answer your question directly, Rwanda is safe because Rwandans values their safety and are willing to do whatever it takes to maintain it.

The collaboration between private and public sector as well as public engagement with the people.

Our police force is very professional, efficient and one of the best in Africa and honestly in the world. Say hello to Law and Order from RNP.

Rwanda National Police (RNP) for safety and peace in Rwanda.

Our Armed forces work hard (day and night) to protect the whole country. When I go to sleep at night, I know (damn well) that men and women in uniform got my safety in check.

By the way (FYI), majority of African countries are safe too! As of June 2018, I would not hesitate to go to 47-50 of all 55 countries today or tomorrow.

Hope this helps.

Didier Champion

Photo Credit: Rwanda the Heart of Africa

If you are new to Rwanda, you will love my "Intro to Rwanda Today".

Fun fact: Rwanda is small but they have the most expensive building in Africa too. Dreaming and achieving big stuff is what Rwanda is all about today.
10 plus One Amazing Facts about Rwanda and Reasons to visit in 2018

Related Links

Why is Rwanda so clean and there's no poverty or many poor people in Rwanda?
Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?
Is Rwanda more developed than most African countries?

How is it possible that Rwanda is developing at a faster rate than Nigeria when Nigeria has access to the coast, youthful population, and natural resources? Why don't the leaders of Nigeria replicate the model of the leaders of Rwanda?

What do you know about Rwanda as good country to live?

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

How is a Rwanda, one of Africa's smaller countries, amongst the most powerful nations in Africa? What is their leverage?

Why is Rwanda's crime rate so much lower than other African countries, and what could other African countries do to imitate their success?

What has Rwanda done right to become the cleanest nation in Africa?
What is it like to live in Rwanda?
Is Rwanda the most prosperous country in Africa?
How can Rwanda achieve being the 9th safest country despite their past?
Why is Rwanda so famous in Africa compared to other nations?
Which country is better in Nigeria and Rwanda?
When will Rwanda become a developed country?

Related Answer

How is it possible that Rwanda is developing at a faster rate than Nigeria when Nigeria has access to the coast, youthful population, and natural resources? Why don't the leaders of Nigeria replicate the model of the leaders of Rwanda?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 1y

A Rwandan here.

I will be careful not to compare Rwanda and Nigeria. This is like comparing Singapore and the United States. How could you possibly compare the two?

Nigeria (Red) is 35 times the size of Rwanda (blue). 12 million people versus 180–200 million, depending on who is doing the stats. Both countries are different.

From what I gather from Nigerians, the issues of Nigeria are related to tribalism, change in leaderships, which fails to put together a cohesive vision for the country, and good governance (zero tolerance to corruption, etc).

Rwanda is a small, landlocked country with a troubled past. Right now, they are fighting hard to get out of the poverty trap by branding their good governance to attract investments into their country.

On the other side, Nigeria is a very "rich" country. The issue of Nigeria is about allocation of resources to the common people. Having an efficient system to educate the masses, invest in healthcare to ensure a good quality of life for Nigerians, and investing in infrastructure to connect rural areas to the cities.

This is the whole concept of sharing the resources of their country among their people. Just look up how many billionaires and millionaires are based in Nigeria. You will be surprised.

Both countries are very different on any level you can think of. There are no lessons that Rwanda should be giving to Nigeria. Nigerian people are very smart. They have a very educated diaspora and can turn things around if they wanted to. They already know their problems and need nobody to lecture them about what they should do. Just see the examples below.

In Rwanda,

We have had one " mighty" president for over 2 decades. Do you want Nigeria to have one president for 20 years? No Nigerian I know will agree to that.

We have one dominant party, which wins election by over 90% or more. Can this happen in Nigeria? I don't think so in a million years.

Since the dominant party always wins election, their agenda and development plan never changes. Regardless of who is in the parliament, their agenda is always the same.
We have one language, one culture, and have kicked out tribalism due to our past. So, we are one people. This helps to communicate with one another, holding discussion about how to move our country forward, and making decision of how to get there.

We have the politics of cooperation and not antagonism. This is in part due to our past. We can disagree on ideas, but we try hard to stay civil about our differences. We don't have time to fight over politics.

What are the results? This is a humble brag of course, but it is something.

2nd most competitive economy in Africa.

2nd Easiest place to do business in Africa.

#1 Safest and most secure country in Africa (9th, globally).

1st most transparent government in Africa (9th, globally).

1st best place to be a woman in Africa (5th, globally).

2nd country in ICT (Information, communication, and technology) promotion globally.

After South Africa and Egypt, Rwanda ranks 3rd in hosting international conferences and assemblies in Africa.

The Rwanda today was prepared back in 2000–2003. The so called Vision 2020, which was designed to transformed from a low-income country to a middle income country. Since President Paul Kagame election in 2003, we have never looked back. We have been following the blueprint, checking each of the 44 measured goals, one by one. We are not where we want to be, but we are doing our best.

At the moment, we are already working on the new vision (Vision 2050), which will upgrade Rwanda from a (lower) middle-income country to an (upper) middle-income country. This will hopefully happen from 2025 to 2050. We are not worried because the agenda of the RPF will never change. They are not about to lose election anytime soon.

My answer to your question is that:

Nigerians do not need to replicate the model of Rwanda. I do not think that our model would work anywhere. Having one dominant party has been good for us given our past history of 1994. I don’t think it would work anywhere honestly.

The leaders of Nigeria in business, politics have all they need to form a model for Nigeria. Just see what Nigerian Artists, Musicians, Movie industry, and tech industry have done in less than 15 years? Naija has it all. There are a few missing screws to put the whole project together.

As a fellow African, I certainly wish them the best.

Follow Africa is Home to learn more about the socio-political and economic issues across Africa. Follow Rwanda Today to learn about Rwanda.

The OP should read this answer where I compared the socio and economic statuses of both countries.

Didier Champion's answer to Which country is the most developed, Rwanda, Kenya, Nigeria, or Angola?

For more about Rwanda and Africa through travel and tourism, feel free to follow my blogs. It’s worth it.

Africa is Home

Rwanda Today

Thanks for the A2A, Zhang Tianyi.

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

Hajo Mueller Lived in Darmstadt, Germany (1991–0)1y

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

Happiness cannot be meassured. No way anybody can determine the happened of the people of a Nation. The most recent human developement index shows Finnland as number1. Many people misinterpret this as an happiness indicator. But it is not. Finns are holding in comparison with other countries very good income, long life expectancy, good social support and freedom. Perhaps finns are basically content people, but they are more depressed and have a much higher suicide rate than many developing countries in Africa. Being a millionare doesn't make you happy, nor does a big house or a luxury car. Happiness is a state of mind. Happiness is not what you have. I don't know the people of Rwanda, but it is very possible that the population of Rwanda is much more happy than the population of Finland, Germany or the USA.

Related Links

Why is Rwanda so clean and there’s no poverty or many poor people in Rwanda?

How is it possible that Rwanda is developing at a faster rate than Nigeria when Nigeria has access to the coast, youthful population, and natural resources? Why don't the leaders of Nigeria replicate the model of the leaders of Rwanda?

What is it like to live in Rwanda?

Why is Rwanda one of the fastest growing African countries, with neighboring Burundi one of the poorest?

How is a Rwanda, one of Africa's smaller countries, amongst the most powerful nations in Africa? What is their leverage?

Why is Rwanda safer than most other African countries, even though not as rich?

Why is Rwanda's crime rate so much lower than other African countries, and what could other African countries do to imitate their success?

Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?

What do you know about Rwanda as good country to live?
Why is Rwanda so nice compared to the rest?

Is Rwanda more developed than most African countries?

Didier Champion

Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 3y

Nope.

The people of Mauritius, Botswana, South Africa, Secychelles, Gabon, Namibia, Egypt, Algeria and Equatorial Guinea are not losing any sleep over Rwanda's rapid economic growth, friendly business climate, rule of law, safety and security and political stability in Rwanda. These are the most developed countries in Africa.

Rwanda is the most progressive country in Africa for the past 2 decades, but we are nowhere near the most developed nations in Africa.

- GDP per capita (PPP): $ 2,000.00 (2018); rank: 36th out of 55.
- HDI: 0.500 (2018); rank: 25th out of 55.
- Life Expectancy (2018); rank: 67 years.
- Corruption Perceptions Index, rank: 4th out of 55.
- Gini Index, rank: 38th out of 55.

In every single one of these economic indicators, Rwanda was ranked in the bottom five in the late 1990's. This is probably why people are very amazed by Rwanda's rapid economic growth, business friendly climate, safety and security, rule of law and accountability of their institutions for the past two decades.

We have been developing fast, but we are not developed yet. Let's talk again in in 2040/2050.

Didier Champion's answer to Is Rwanda the most prosperous country in Africa?

Kigali, Rwanda

In fact, I can add more countries on this lists. See this link below.

List of African countries by GDP (PPP) per capita - Wikipedia

Looking at the GDP per capita, literacy rates, HDI, and education, healthcare, life expectancy, and other metrics, Rwanda would probably comes among the top 20. This is based on what country I would want to live in, achieve my goal to become a millionnaire one day (networth of one million bucks), security and peace, and other essential economic metrics.

In my opinion, the following are the prosperous countries in Africa. I am a big fan of Rwanda, and have shared my Rwandan experience and perspective on Quora. Our Rwanda's GDP per capita (PPP) is about $ 2,000.00 (As of 2018).

We have a long-long way to to be called the “ most developed” in East Africa, later on the whole African continent. See the ranking above.

If you are asking, the most efficient system of government in Africa. Rwanda would be number 1 along with Mauritius and Seychelles.

Didier Champion's answer to Why is Rwanda called the Prussia of Africa?

Work ethic, Rule of Law, and Efficiency of the Rwandan people today.

As the most popular writer about Rwanda on Quora, I was actually starting to feel “guilty” until I notice that these questions are coming from more less one person. Haha, I feel better now. Every writer chooses what they want to write about on Quora, my time on Quora is spent writing and sharing positive stories about Rwanda and Africa. I make no apologies to showcase what Rwanda and Africa (my country and continent) have to offer to the world.

Africa is the future and the next economic frontier.

Below is the top 10 developed countries in Africa.

1. Mauritius (GDP per capita (2017): $ 21, 628.00)

2. Botswana (GDP per capita (2017): $ 18, 146.00)

3. South Africa (GDP per capita (2017): $ 13, 403.00)

Cape Town, South Africa

4. Seychelles (GDP per capita (2017): $ 28, 712.00)

5. Gabon (GDP per capita (2017): $ 19, 266.00)

6. Namibia (GDP per capita (2017): $ 11, 528 .00)

7. Egypt (GDP per capita (2017): $ 12, 994.00)

this.is.egypt
Alexandria, Egypt

this.is.egypt Amazing and beautiful old architecture in downtown Alexandria city , Egypt ..
📸 by @nourmohamedsaad .....

8. Algeria ( GDP per capita (2017): $ 15, 150.00)

9. Morocco (GDP per capita (2017): $ 8, 612.00)

Image source: Tangier, Morocco on the Mediterranean sea

10. Equatorial Guinea (GDP per capita ($ 34, 865.00), this should be number 1). The country runs on oil, corruption, nepotism, and other inefficiencies.

Hope this helps.

Didier Champion

Related Answer
When will Rwanda become a “developed” nation?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 3y

From a “failed state” (1994–1997), to an “economic miracle” in 10 years (2000–2010), and a “model for economic development” in 20 years (2000–2020).

Didier Champion's answer to What are the chances of Rwanda becoming the 'Singapore of Africa'?

The projections and the targets from by the Rwandan government would be the year 2050. According to World Bank and IMF, a developed country is defined by two things.

Nominal GDP per capita of about $ 13,000 and HDI above 0.800 (2018). Rwanda’s nominal GDP per capita is $ 770 and HDI is 0.500 (2018)

In my opinion, this is quite an ambitious plan. I would be okay if we are an upper middle income country by 2050. Vision 2050 is going to depend on a few things.

If PK decides to step down in 2024, we won’t make it there. The pressure from the West has been too much that he did not even want to continue in 2017. Only the pressure from his party and Rwandan people made him stay.

If Rwanda ignores the noise and pressure from the West, PK can keep going until 2034. There, we have a good chance at being an upper middle income country by 2050. In PK model for leadership, goals are goals, targets are targets. We have “performance contracts” for a reason. At every stage, they are analyzed, assessed, and fine tuned for maximum efficiency and effectiveness.

Honestly, I am just not sure that the new guy or gal would be as agressive to our economic growth and self-reliant as he has been.

The government plan for the economic transformation of Rwanda is the following. Starting by 2020, Rwanda wants to move one economic ladder up to their goals every 15 years.

A lower income country to a middle income country by 2020.
Middle income ($ 1,026-$ 4, 035) & lower middle income ($ 4, 036-$ 8,000).
A lower middle income to an upper middle country by 2035.
Upper middle income ($ 8,001-$ 12,475).
An upper middle income to a higher income country by 2050.

Higher income ($ 12,476 and above).

The only way to achieve this ambitious goal by 2050, is to sustain an average GDP growth of about 8–10% for the next 30 consecutive years from 2020 to 2050. This is very hard to do.

For the past 15 years, from 2003 to 2018, Rwanda has averaged a 7.5% GDP growth. An average 6% growth rate would only make Rwanda an upper middle income by 2050 and not a "developed" country.

Given how much Rwanda has been branding and marketing themselves to attracts FDIs and tourism, I predict a ~8% from 2020 to 2030, ~7% from 2030 to 2040, and ~7% from 2040 to 2050.

You can do the math to see if Rwanda will make it up there by 2050 or not. Assuming that there are going to be some global economic shocks to affect Rwanda's economy during a 30 or 40 year period, whether be investment or tourism industry, it is fair to say that Rwanda will be a developed country by 2060.

If we can do it earlier than 2060, I am all good. To achieve that by 2050, our generation would have to work day and night to allow our children to live better lives. Sadly, I don't think the Rwandan millenials are working hard enough for 2050 goals. This is my honest and personal opinion as a Rwandan millenial.

The government has been very forward thinking and have done their best. However, people's mentality and change of mindset have not caught up yet. We still have a long way to go. The macroeconomic policies that the government has set are good for the economy, but on the microeconomic level, we have a long way to go.

Many young folks, our culture, and education system have not caught up to the realities of the 21st century. We still conduct business as if we are in the 80's. University graduates waiting for jobs instead of looking for many existing opportunities in the marketplace. In Rwanda, business and entrepreneurship is the way to go. This is the missing puzzle for our microeconomic policies and mindset.

That's all. Vision 2050 is when Rwanda will become a developed by World Bank and IMF standards.

To Visit Rwanda, read more at Rwanda, my home and pride. This is Africa..

For more about Rwanda (Rwanda Today), read my introduction below.

10 plus One Amazing Facts about Rwanda and Reasons to visit in 2018

Branding and Marketing for an aid free Rwanda by 2024.

Dear World, We are NOT Hotel-Rwanda: Rwanda Today is Peaceful, Developing, and Progressive.

Kigali, Rwanda

Hope this helps.

Didier Champion

Related Answer
Why is Rwanda so nice compared to the rest of Africa?

Jess Muheto I'm an african student 3y

As a Rwanda I feel very proud seeing this feeling from around the world. I makes you happy when the country you love is appreciated, but emotions aside here are some reasons why I think this is the case.great leadership: our president has received countless awards for leadership for clear reasons, that’s why

Rwandans keep voting for him.(that's actually the reason he went for his third mandate, presidents in Africa have a lot of power, we don't want that power falling into the wrong hands, "if It works, why change it") this is the first and biggest reason, the man nearly sacrificed his life for Rwanda during the genocide, the country he cares about relatively small country: allows for effective and efficient leadership. little to no direct resources (like oil or minerals) : though it may seem paradoxical, this helps leaders focus on developing the country instead of getting distracted by illusions of quick money.

Accountability of leaders:

One of the funniest programs on local tv is when the presidents goes to the countryside and listens to the citizens directly, they talk about there problems but sometimes snitch on local leaders which can sometimes lead to the firing of some of them, this not only serves to boost his approval rating but also to keep leaders on edge and effective.

General morale:

Due to the current state of things: peace, security especially compared to 25 years ago, citizen feel motivated to develop the country and themselves in their own way. by starting business, getting an education, joining the army, etc. they feel that they have been given an opportunity to rise above poverty and they are ceasing it. they have hope for the future unlike many other countries. as you may have noticed this many revolves around leadership, which explains a lot. the problem is that strong-man societies are a high risk, high reward business. but as many have said before " legendary leader is characterizes by how gracefully leave power". Kagame said it himself that he didn't really want a third mandate, his current challenge is finding a way to leave power without opening the typically-African can of worms

Ps:- All of the reasons above are the same reasons why the DRC is not developing

Related Answer

How did Rwanda go from being one of the most failed states in Africa, before the 1994 Genocide, to a successful state after?

Muhuza Didier Kayiranga

Studied Entrepreneurship at University of Central Missouri (Graduated 2015)
3y

Saul Martino and my country mate Didier Champion have both given good reasons as to why Rwanda has become a successful state after the 1994 genocide.

I'll add a few things and maybe give more details too.

The RPF government that took power in July 1994 made a few crucial decisions in my view.

First, they stopped revenge actions really early and fast and pacified the country. This allowed the people to trust and relatively unite under the government before the ancien regime forces made attacks on the country from the DR Congo. Without such a foundation, it would have been very hard to keep civil peace for long.

Second, they acted fast in ensuring that Tutsi orphans go to school, whatever age they were in, a fund was set up to pay school fees for these young people. This removed them from the streets and made them focus on education, not revenge and violence. This, combined with the fact that Hutu children were not barred from school, gave way to an educated youth. Looking at the current government, you can see the fruits, many people who were in secondary school or starting university at that time (1994–1995) are now decision makers.

Third, the then Vice President Paul Kagame, started talking about fighting corruption early on, and this led to Aid being well used, invested in the right directions and bearing fruits.

Fourth, the government didn't have enough funds but the RPF had enough after their military campaign, where a lot of Rwandans living in foreign countries contributed heavily. The RPF decided early on to use those funds in investing in key industries with a risks for a country out of a genocide, like dairy with Inyange Industries, in telecommunication with MTN Rwandacell, construction with NPD Cotraco, and so on (In fact, RPF owned Crystal Ventures is the second employer in the country, just behind the government)… This boosted the economy in a way that wouldn't have happened had the government been the sole willing investor.

The journey from 1994 to now has been miraculous to be honest though. Knowing for example that the first government ministers and their subordinates were paid in food stamps (no cash) during the first few months after the genocide, you wonder how it didn't all collapse at some point!

Is Rwanda truly a success story?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 3y

If you know Rwanda and her history of 1994, you would have to admit that Rwanda is one of the success stories of the 21st century. How many countries do you know who go through what Rwanda experienced and get back up alive and well, 25 years after? In the 21st century, I cannot think of any country.

A country who nearly collapsed on the face of the world map, but has managed to rebound hard and strong.

Today, the people of Rwanda are united.
Today, they have safety and security.
Today, the people of Rwanda have hope and are very excited for their future.

Their country keeps developping steadly and I predict if they keep up this moment, Rwanda is going to be a developed country by 2050.

Current GDP (PPP): $,2000.00 (2018). Keep an average GDP growth of 7% for the next 30 years, Rwanda will be a developed country by 2050. They are already planning for it in their Vision 2050.

Rwanda is the place to live, visit, and invest.

According to the World Bank Group's 2015 Doing Business Report, Rwanda is the best performing country in East and Central Africa and third easiest place to do business in Africa.

1. You can start a business in 48 hours in Rwanda. It takes 11.1 days on average in OECD high income countries.

Kigali, the capital city of Rwanda

2. Rwanda is leading Africa's digital revolution. The Smart Kigali initiative will create access to free wireless internet on public buses, in hospitals, taxi parks, commercial buildings and restaurants, while a partnership with Korea Telecom is creating access to 4G for 95% of the population.

3. Between 2001 and 2012, real GDP growth in Rwanda averaged 8.1% per annum. According to the Fitch rating agency, Rwanda is experiencing ‘rapid and inclusive economic growth driven by credible economic policy’.

Rwanda - Economic Indicators

4. Rwanda has the world's highest representation of women in parliament. 64% of Rwanda's members of parliament are women.

5. A dramatic improvement in healthcare delivery and health outcomes has seen life expectancy in Rwanda rise by 10 years in the last decade. Over 90% of Rwandans have access to medical insurance.

Figure 1. Overview of Rwanda's Decentralized Health Care System

Healthcare in Rwanda (Former minister of Health, Agnes Binagwaho)

6. Rwanda is one of the few African countries on track to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Net primary school attendance is at over 91%.

Rwanda

7. One million Rwandans overcame poverty between 2006 and 2011. Innovative homegrown development solutions have reduced poverty. For example, the Girinka programme, which provides every poor family in Rwanda with a cow, has reduced malnutrition, increased agricultural productivity and created small business opportunities.

An affluent neighborhood of my city (Kigali, Rwanda)

8. In 2007, Rwanda became the first country in the world to legislate an outright ban on plastic bags. It is estimated that the EU produces 3.4m tonnes of plastic bags in a year, creating carbon emissions and dangerous waste.

KIGALITODAY

9. On the last Saturday of every month, every Rwandan, starting with the President, participates in Umuganda, a day of national community service. Through Umuganda, Rwandans have built schools, medical centres, hydroelectric plants, and rehabilitated wetlands to create highly productive agricultural plots, and cleaned their cities, towns and villages – making Kigali one of the cleanest cities in Africa.

Public Transportation in our nation's capital, Kigali.

10. According to the Ibrahim index of African Governance, Rwanda is one of the only two countries to show consistent overall governance improvements since 2000. It is ranked number one in Africa for Gender, and is one of the top five most improved countries since 2000.

Photo Credit: Rwanda the Heart of Africa

Source website: 10 Interesting Facts About Rwanda (Number 9 Might Surprise You) - AB2020

Photo Credit: Rwanda the Heart of Africa; Kigali, my home and capital city of Rwanda. This is a combination of different photos of some of Kigali's landmarks and architectural skyscrapers and high rise buildings.

References

World Bank Open Data (Understand economic outlook of different African countries). This is one of the best sources out there in the marketplace.

Middle Income Countries (African Development Bank Group).

Africa's MICs (World Bank blog on African MICs).

Didier Champion

Related Answer

How did Rwanda attain good growth when compared to other African countries?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda 2y

Originally Answered: How did Rwanda attain good growth when compared to other African cities?

The OP must be talking about Rwanda's social and economic transformation since 1994. The best way to explain Rwanda's political and economic recovery is starting by the 5 pillars. Didier Champion's answer to What is the secret of the Rwandans' success story?

The pillars of Social Transformation in Rwanda Post-1994

Pillar #1: Unity, peace, and reconciliation.
Pillar #2: Safety and security.
Pillar #3: Sustainable leadership model built on homegrown solutions and institutional building and strength.
Pillar #4: Good governance system with rule of law, and accountability.
Pillar #5: Steady economic growth and sustainable development.

We have made some remarkable progress in reducing bureaucracy in government institutions. Low levels of corruption and other systems that make Rwanda an attractive place to do business through trade and investment.

For further reading, check out some of the following links.

Rwanda The Emerging Economy To Watch - Forbes Africa

What makes Rwanda one of Africa's fastest growing economies?

Rwanda, 20 years on: how a country is rebuilding itself (The Guardian)

5 things to know about Rwanda's economy (World Economic Forum)

Some of my answers are also a good starting point to learn about Rwanda's economic growth after 1994.

Didier Champion's answer to How did Rwanda go from being one of the most failed states in Africa, before the 1994 Genocide, to a successful state after?

Didier Champion's answer to Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?

Didier Champion's answer to How developed is Rwanda?

Hope this helps.

Related Links

Why is Rwanda so clean and there's no poverty or many poor people in Rwanda?
Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?
Is Rwanda more developed than most African countries?

How is it possible that Rwanda is developing at a faster rate than Nigeria when Nigeria has access to the coast, youthful population, and natural resources? Why don't the leaders of Nigeria replicate the model of the leaders of Rwanda?

What do you know about Rwanda as good country to live?

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

How is a Rwanda, one of Africa's smaller countries, amongst the most powerful nations in Africa? What is their leverage?

Why is Rwanda's crime rate so much lower than other African countries, and what could other African countries do to imitate their success?

What has Rwanda done right to become the cleanest nation in Africa?
What is it like to live in Rwanda?
Is Rwanda the most prosperous country in Africa?
How can Rwanda achieve being the 9th safest country despite their past?
Why is Rwanda so famous in Africa compared to other nations?
Which country is better in Nigeria and Rwanda?
When will Rwanda become a developed country?

Wake Up Africa!
In 2018, just a month ago after Rwanda closed hundreds of churches in Kigali, the Paul Kagame Govt also banned mosques from using loudspeakers duri...

Posted by Chibueze Royal N. Mar 25

In 2018, just a month ago after Rwanda closed hundreds of churches in Kigali, the Paul Kagame Govt also banned mosques from using loudspeakers during Muslim call to prayer in the capital city Kigali.

The residents reportedly complained that the calls, made five times a day were disturbing them.

The majority of Rwandans are Christian. Muslims make up around 5% of the population.

Some 1,500 churches were closed for not complying with building regulations and noise pollution.

The effort to reduce noise pollution is part of a programme of improvement called Kigali City 2040 to make it Africa's top business and tourism powerhouse within the next 22 years.

Many measures were popular, but the ban on loudspeakers – accused of disturbing residents – has been more controversial.

#PanAfricanDailyTV

News Nigeria
#MissRwanda2022: Nshuti Divine Muheto is crowned Miss Rwanda □□ 2022.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Mar 20

. Follow Posted by Frank Abah 1h

Hello from Kigali, Rwanda. Rwanda is the cleanest country in Africa and among top 6 safest in the world. Come visit us

Modern humans emerged more than 300,000 years ago new study suggests - The African History

CONGRATULATIONS □

My Africa is Beautiful !□□□

Why did Rwanda and Mozambique join the Commonwealth as neither were former British colonies?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 2y

I can only talk about Rwanda because that's the country I know best.
Rwanda joined the commonwealth in 2009 for political and economic reasons[1].

President Paul Kagame of Rwanda, chatting with Queen Elizabeth of the UK.

Politically, Rwanda had decided to switch their allies, favoring the United Kingdom over France. Prior to 2009, Rwanda had been a part of the Francophonie organization for almost 50 years. However, the relations between France and Rwanda had continued to get worse. There has been many complications between the two countries, given the role of France in the 1994 genocide against Tutsi.

When Rwanda got tired of the arrogance of France, they decided to pull the plug. At the time, Rwanda kicked out the France Ambassador to Rwanda and recalled theirs from Paris to come to Rwanda[2]. This happened multiples times between 2006–09.

The French Ambassador to Rwanda, Dominique Decherf has been expelled following the deepening dispute between the two countries. The extraordinary Cabinet Meeting chaired by President Paul Kagame at Village Urugwiro yesterday, resolved that Ambassador Decherf leaves Rwanda within 24 hours, with the Embassy Closing.

Diplomatic Language. In 2009, Rwanda changed the language of instruction from French to English. This was another sign that Rwanda was getting ready. From secondary schools, to university, English was favored over French.

In my opinion, the most reason that made sense was the economic benefits. The commonwealth is just more wealthier than the Francophone organization. The organization has the US, Canada, the UK, all of which had been good partners with Rwanda for many years. As a country who wanted to position themselves as a business hub in Africa, for tourism, banking, and technology, favoring English made more sense.

With the above conditions, Rwanda was accepted into the Commonwealth organization after waiting for one year for approval. They had applied in 2008 and was accepted in 2009. The rest as they say is history. Today, the relations between France and Rwanda are much better than they were in 2008. Today, Rwanda's former minister of foreigner Affairs is now the secretary general of the Francophonie!

Read Didier Champion's answer to Why did Rwanda join the Commonwealth while it is not a former British colony?

Edits (23 FEB 2020): The US is not part of the Commonwealth. However, it is an English speaking country and remains one of the Allies of Rwanda today.

Footnotes

[1] Rwanda Joins the Commonwealth
[2] https://allafrica.com/stories/200611271336.html

Related Answer

Why did Rwanda and Mozambique join the Commonwealth as neither were former British colonies?

Peter Topping, studied at Africa Answered Feb 26, 2020

Mozambique its about Geography:
Moz boarders:

Zimbabwe - Commonwealth

Tanzania - Commonwealth

Malawi - Commonwealth

Zambia - Commonwealth

Eswatini - Commonwealth

South Africa - Commonwealth

So for the purpose of sports, cultural exchange, trade and tourism it makes sense.

Any regional effort by Central Africa Zim/Zam/ Malawi includes Moz. That is a win, win.

Any regional effort by Southern Africa : SA, Botswana, Eswatti , Moz gets a ride.

Any Indian Ocean forum with Kenya , Tanzania , Mauritius, Seychelles, India, Sir Lanka, Maldives , Moz is in the Commonwealth team

So it makes sense that is her neighborhood, like Australia's neighbourhood should be ASEAN, the Indian Ocean Forum and the Pacific Forum, its where she lives and trades. Moz lives and trades within the Commonwealth more and more.

All the research says for African States the intraAfrica trade opportunity is the biggest , brightest, best, cheapest and easiest to access low hanging fruit available to boost GDP growth and alleviate poverty in the short term.

Rwanda.

France did not play the great game well in the lead up the events of the genocide, neither did she come clean afterwards.

Paul K is a canny operator , like him on not he has a vision for the nation and place for that nation which is with Tanzania, Uganda, Kenya, primarily and then on a wider basis with the regional bloc of S.Sudan, Somalia, Zambia etc.

The alternative is with Congo DRC , Congo Braziville, the CAR and Cameroon.

Ask your self which team would you want to be on economically, politically and militarily the Commonwealth East Africa block or the Central African Francophone block?

It was a no brainer in the end.

Related Answer
Why are former British colonies far more successful than former colonies of other European countries?

Edwyn Nicholson, Green Politics, Animal Rights, Internationalist
Answered Jun 10, 2021

They inherited the British way of doing things.
Canada, USA, Barbados, Bahamas, Trinidad, Jamaica, Malta, India, Singapore, Australia, New Zealand, and many of the current Overseas Territories, etc….

No other empire can boast such a list of success stories.

Obviously there were other colonies, especially in Africa, who haven't done well without British rule.

However, overall, the British Empire has a leading record of creating successful nations.

Related Answer
What is the main reason causes the under development of Africa?

Melvin Dinn, educator Answered Feb 3

Originally Answered: How come Africa is still underdeveloped with all her resources?

Here in New Zealand, we consider people as resources.

Smart brains can transform sand particles into microchips that run ITC.

Nobody gas invested in Africa. They have been given food and clothes, just to live and stay dependent. I have worked in Africa for 3 years in Teacher training colleges and as a team of UNESCO experts, we just made a dent no change because whenever a hint of change was mentioned, funds were red tapped.

Africa has to work on its real resource, which is its urban people first. IT and vocational education should be more important than athletics or long-distance runners. .

Divide each state into a maximum of 5 million manageable states/ substates

Each state is semi-independent with development issues.

Democracy breeds in corruption of a higher level. I know many African heads of state and Govt officials who own condos in the UK

Prepare a threshold group of vocational tradesmen/women, IT experts in the Army like structure.

No dysfunctional or greedy democratic set-up for 10 years.

Things will change within my lifetime, I give money back gaurntee

Related Answer
What is the main reason causes the under development of Africa?

Yoni Ariel, CEO at CISEc-Cyber Information Security (2017-present)
Answered Feb 12

Several reasons.

It's geography. Unlike Europe, with its broad river valleys and navigable rivers, Africa's msin rivers are not easily navigable. Navigable rivers promotes trade, exchange of goods and ideas, which promoted development.

Long distance land travel was also impacted by the Tsetse fly, since horses could not survive in the large swath of central Africa called the tsetse fly belt. Until the modern era, the horse was a vital means of transportation.

Western colonialism wreaked societal havoc.Almost every African country is a multi ethnic hodge podge. Soceities found themselves split between several of these artificial country's, which they shared with other groups with whom they had no joint history.

Societal cohesion is very important. We are evolutionary inclined to be less likely to steal from “our own” then from “others”. Even in the West, the more homogenous countries like the Nordic states and Holland are cleaner than countries that are less homogenous.

Related Links

Why didn't the African continent advance as fast as the rest of the world?
Why didn't Africa develop like Europe or didn't even create/invent anything? They had the same amount of time to do so, just as the rest of the world. Why is that?

If Africa is so rich, why hasn't it yet developed and recovered after colonization?
Why is Africa lagging behind the rest of the world in development?
Who is to blame for a lack of development in Africa?
Why hasn't Africa developed as well as other continents?
Why is Africa so far behind the rest of the world? Does it have to do with colonialism?

If race inequality doesn't exist, why has Africa lagged behind in economic growth despite having immense natural resources?

Why wasn't Sub Saharan Africa able to build advanced civilisations like many other parts of the world even despite humans living there longer than anywhere else?

What would have happened to Africa if it hadn't been colonized?
Why are many countries in Africa poor?

Why has Africa been less developed than Europe and Asia throughout human history? I'm referring to economies, architecture, technology, infrastructure, and military power. I'm not trying to be racist, it's an honest question I've always wondered.

Why did Africa fail to develop a sophisticated civilization that could compete with Asian and European civilizations?

What are possible strategies for developing Africa?
If Africa is actually the origin of humanity, why is it still underdeveloped?

Related Answer
Why are some former British colonies like Canada and Australia well off while former colonies in Africa are poor?

Peter Webb Answered Nov 28, 2018

Originally Answered: Why are some former British colonies like Canada and Australia well off while former colonies in Africa poor?

Well, somebody has to spell it out, even if it very un-PC.

Lets get the major point out of the way first. In Canada and Australia, we pretty much killed off the indigenous people. Not necessarily deliberately, disease killed a lot. But they became a minority very quickly.

Australia and Canada in particular had a huge “advantage” over other countries in this regard. The indigenous population density of Australia and Canada were both very low, as these are both hard climates. And the people were often nomadic. Which means they could be wiped out 50 or 100 at a time, the indigenous people had no population centres around which to amass armies.

So the Canadians and Australian colonists got to build the country how they thought a country should be built - using European ideas and institutions. Rule of law, railways, democracy, banks, grand buildings.

This didn’t work at all in Africa, and worked poorly in South America:

The indigenous population density was far higher. They weren’t wiped out, they were assimilated. Or rather the colonists became subsumed in the local population (as happened extensively in South America, where almost everybody is mixed race).

Disease wasn’t nearly as effective in Africa, as many European diseases were already endemic in Africa.

So in Australia and Canada most of the population were European, and they did the sorts of things that Europeans thought were a good idea - building roads, and dams, and schools, and ports, and starting banks and newspapers.

In Africa most of the population were Africans, and they did not have a European tradition to follow. Instead they largely did what they had been doing before - running tribal societies.

200 years later Australia and Canada are benefiting from these dams (do you even have dams in Canada?), roads and ports that we have been building for 200 years, but Africa in many places is still a tribal society.

Est-ce que les chimpanzés et les gorilles peuvent s'accoupler?/Can chimps and gorillas mate?

Jerome Cohen · Suivre Un ami des animaux depuis toujours, de toutes espèces.Traducteur · 1 an

David Goodman

Les chimpanzés et les gorilles ont chacun 24 paires de chromosomes, ils ont donc plus de chances de s'accoupler et de créer un embryon viable que les humains (23 paires) et les chimpanzés, mais ce sont des espèces très différentes, donc les chances sont encore très faibles.

Mais les chimpanzés et les humains sont génétiquement plus proches que les gorilles et les chimpanzés, il semble donc peu probable qu'un gorimpanzé résulte d'un tel accouplement.

En ce qui concerne le simple accouplement (pas de progéniture) ? Si un gorille à dos argenté mâle de 200 Kg décidait de devenir romantique avec une femelle chimpanzé de 40 Kg, si elle ne pouvait pas s'enfuir, que pourrait-elle faire ?

Certains pensent que le singe Bili du Congo est un hybride gorille/chimpanzé, mais la plupart des recherches indiquent qu'il s'agit simplement d'une espèce de chimpanzé plus grande.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi la plupart des acteurs et des films français sont nuls ?

Un acteur a-t-il déjà été choisi non pas pour ses qualités d’acteur mais parce qu’il collait parfaitement au physique du personnage qu’il devait incarner ?

Quels acteurs ne correspondaient pas au rôle pour lequel ils avaient été choisis ?

Comment les producteurs trouvent-ils des acteurs pour jouer le rôle d'une personne naturellement laide alors qu'un tel critère pour un acteur est insultant à accepter ?

Quelles sont les choses les plus intenses qu'un acteur ou une actrice a faites pour se préparer à un rôle au cinéma ?

Quel acteur ou quelle actrice est incapable de jouer un autre rôle que celui qui l'a fait connaître ?

Quels acteurs, dans un second rôle ou un rôle de soutien, ont volé la vedette à des acteurs principaux dans des films connus ?

Quel acteur pourrait incarner une version française de James Bond ?

Les acteurs sont-ils heureux ou excités à l'idée d'embrasser une autre acteur dans un film?

Y a-t-il des acteurs qui ont refusé un rôle à cause de la présence d'un autre acteur ?

PRESERVING OUR ANIMALS IN THE WILD

· Follow Posted by Jo Mburu Mar 27

An average silver back can dead lift 1800 lb and their grip can crush a crocodile's skull | They are 4 to 9 times stronger than an average human male.

Related Answer
Do chimpanzees avoid gorillas in the wild?

Nathaniel Rice · Follow Bi, animal researcher Jan 30

Mostly, simply due to their diets being different. In areas where fruit isn't particularly plentiful, gorillas simply shrug their shoulders and eat other forms of vegetation. In most cases, even when the two species happen upon one another in the wild, they mostly just go about their business.

Credit: Congo Apes

Of course, they have been recorded occasionally interacting:

"On many occasions, chimpanzees and gorillas feed in close proximity and engage in a range of social interactions, including social play, sexual interactions and spread of information. Our current research is unravelling the environmental phenomena and the dynamics of chimpanzees and gorillas associated shared strategies and promises to reveal a greater depth to their social awareness than previously imagined.''

Gorilla and Chimpanzee Coexistence - CONGO-APES

Chimpanzees reside in sympatry with western lowland gorillas throughout much of western equatorial Africa. Observations of interspecific interactions between these species are however rare and often fleeting. The Goualougo Triangle is the only site to habituate both species of apes to the presence of human observers, providing a unique opportunity to study interactions between these two great ape species. Over the course of this project we have documented a variety of contexts and revealed a greater diversity of interactions than previously recognized. On many occasions, chimpanzees and gorillas feed in close proximity and engage in a range of social interactions, including social play, sexual interactions and spread of information. Our current research is unravelling the environmental phenomena and the dynamics of chimpanzees and gorillas associated shared strategies and promises to reveal a greater depth to their social awareness than previously imagined. @SBroganGTAP The spectrum of interactions among sympatric chimpanzees and gorillas includes extended bouts of play among young individuals.

https://congo-apes.org/science/gorilla-and-chimp-coexistence/

Chimp and gorilla feeding in the same tree. Credit: Congo Apes

Occasionally, of course, these interactions have turned violent, ranging from gorillas simply issuing warning chest-thumps to overhead chimps, to full-on brawls. In these instances, chimpanzees are almost always the aggressors.

Lethal coalitionary attacks of chimpanzees (Pan troglodytes troglodytes) on gorillas (Gorilla gorilla gorilla) in the wild Intraspecies violence, including lethal interactions, is a relatively common phenomenon in mammals. Contrarily, interspecies violence has mainly been investigated in the context of predation and received most research attention in carnivores. Here, we ...

https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC8290027/

"Here, we provide the first information of two lethal coalitionary attacks of chimpanzees (Pan troglodytes troglodytes) on another hominid species, western lowland gorillas (Gorilla gorilla gorilla), that occur sympatrically in the Loango National Park in Gabon. In both events, the chimpanzees significantly outnumbered the gorillas and victims were infant gorillas.

Between 2014 and 2018, we observed nine direct interactions between individuals of the Rekambo community and unhabituated gorillas (N = 9; see Fig. 1). These events were always peaceful, and occasionally involved co-feeding in fruiting trees (N = 2). In 2019 however, we observed two encounters resulting, in both cases, in coalitionary lethal attacks. The first encounter involved a party of 27 chimpanzees and a group of five gorillas. The second involved a party of 27 chimpanzees and a group of seven gorillas (see Table Table1,1, and video clips 1 and 2 in the SA). The first event occurred after a territorial patrol during which the males made a deep incursion into a neighbouring chimpanzee territory. The second event happened at the start of a suspected territorial boundary patrol. Both events took place on the outer boundaries of the Rekambo territory (see Fig. 1). The main aggressors in both events were adult male chimpanzees (for details of involvement see Table Table11).

The two encounters lasted 52 and 79 min, respectively, involved both contact and non-contact aggressions and coalitionary displays from chimpanzees towards gorillas. The gorillas counter attacked and defended themselves using contact aggressions, displays and threat gestures. During the first encounter the silverback was present for 14 min, whilst in the second encounter the silverback was present for 10 min. The first encounter resulted in one dead gorilla infant and three injured chimpanzees; the second resulted in one dead gorilla infant. While there was no indication of consumption of the dead gorilla infant in the first encounter, the infant in the second encounter was almost entirely consumed by one adult chimpanzee female.''

TLDR, chimpanzees will occasionally attempt to drive away gorilla troupes and opportunistically predate upon gorilla infants.

Related Links

What do you think of orangutans?
Why do people say chimps are "evil"?
Which ape is more dangerous - a gorilla or chimpanzee?
How dangerous are orangutans compared to chimpanzees and gorillas?
Who would win in a battle between baboons and chimpanzees?

Let's say that we locked you, a gorilla, a chimpanzee, a monkey and an orangutan in a large room for 12 hours. What are your chances of survival?

What are the differences between a chimpanzee and a gorilla?

What would happen if a gorilla, an orangutan and a chimp were together in one enclosure? Would they fight or maybe even try to communicate?

Why do chimps attack the face and hands?
If apes and gorillas were to work out like humans, how strong could they get?

Related Answer
How did Rwanda beat Zaire so easily in the first Congo War despite being so much smaller?

Félix Desjours Answered Aug 15, 2021

Because the Rwandan Armed Forces under RPF were supplied with sophisticated weapons by the US and supported by most Western Nations such as the US, UK, the Netherlands, Germany, etc. except for France, Belgium, and maybe Canada.

Notice that Rwandan forces were only active in the eastern part of DR Congo because that's where the mineral resources such as coltan and cobalt are located. I believe that Rwanda gets it's revenue most by exporting those minerals to rich countries. It's so questionable why a landlocked country with few natural resources was able to make a huge stride or leapfrog and outperforming frontrunner African countries when it comes to development.

That's what you call democracy as designed by those countries for other poor and vulnerable countries that benefit them so much but are not applicable to their own countries.

Related Links

What sparked the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo? Did Paul Kagame's RPF from Rwanda enter eastern Congo and cause unfair crimes?

Is Rwanda responsible for the war in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of Congo?

Zaire is significantly larger than Uganda and Rwanda combined. How were these two countries able to defeat Zaire, which presumably had much more resources than their smaller neighbors?

Paul Kagame is seen as model leader for African states and turns Rwanda out of poverty into the "Singapore of Africa", but why many Africans from countries like DR Congo, Tanzania, Uganda and Burundi don't consider Paul Kagame as their model leader?

What is different about Tanzania that has allowed it to remain peaceful and prosperous, while neighboring countries like Rwanda, Burundi, Congo and Uganda were torn apart by ethnic strife, brutal dictators, and civil war?

I am currently deciding on what country to see the gorillas. I hear the terrain in Uganda is much more difficult than Rwanda. Does anyone have any experience with this?

Why does Rwanda always seem to have problems with their neighbors, Uganda, Burundi and the DRC?

What are the best ways for me to help Gorillas? Does anyone know which are the best charities involved in helping Gorillas? And can anyone recommend any specific tours to go and see them in Rwanda/Uganda/Congo from personal experience?

We are going to be in Rwanda this October 2021 and was planning on crossing the border into Uganda to continue our tour. Will Uganda allow tourists to cross?

How are the Virunga mountain gorillas in the Democratic Republic of the Congo?

How can I name a mountain gorilla in Rwanda?
What is your preffered country for gorilla tracking-Uganda OR Rwanda?
Which is the best country for a Gorilla safari between Uganda & Rwanda?
What are some cheap gorilla tours in Rwanda and Uganda?

Who do you think were and are pulling the strings in Kivu (a large region in the Democratic Republic of the Congo), Rwanda, Uganda, or other?

Related Answer
What does the British public think of sending asylum seekers to Rwanda? If you were in the shoes of a person escaping poverty / oppression would you be ok being sent to Rwanda?

Sue Modius Answered 13h ago

They aren’t escaping poverty and oppression - they are escaping from France. If the UK was Rwanda - they wouldn’t be interested. They are willingly spending months, even years, in France - just for that chance to get to the UK.

So, the boats will be filled with women and children and the disabled and elderly. Young men won’t give up trying to get to the UK - they will switch to travel that allows them to arrive covertly. Knowing that they will be allowed, under human rights legislation, to remain once they have established the UK as their home. There WILL be violence - extreme violence - if they are discovered by say a lorry driver or an outnumbered police officer or security guard at any time before they have established that right to remain.

So, as France and other countries have been saying for decades - we need to introduce ID cards and require them to be produced in everyday activities within the UK. We need to kill off the black economy.

Sending them to Rwanda will simply open up new opportunities for traffickers - routes from Rwanda to the UK.

Lequel est le plus intelligent, un chimpanzé, un gorille ou un orang-outan?/ What's smarter, a chimpanzee, a gorilla, or an orangutan?

Jerome Cohen, Ami des animaux depuis plus d' 1/2 siècle.Traducteur · 5 avr.

Thomas Musselman BA and then JD en Modern Intellectual History et Harvard Law School, Brown University (Diplôme obtenu en 1979)

La science n'est pas unanime sur la question (et ajoutez les bonobos). Leurs environnements ne sont pas identiques, donc leurs défis ne le sont pas non plus.

Je vote pour les orangs-outans qui volent les bateaux des humains pour traverser les rivières et ont été filmés en train d'utiliser des scies fabriquées par les humains.

Related Answer

Rwanda recorded double digit growth on Q3 of 2019. How long before Rwanda successfully goes from a developing economy to an emerging economy?

Didier Champion, lived in Kigali, Rwanda Answered Jan 26, 2020

The double digit growth have become the norm. For the past 18 years, Rwanda has averaged an 8% annual growth. As a new country, which has been building everything from scratch, we have definitely come along the way. I follow Rwanda very closely and it is my honest opinion that this decade (2020–2030) is going to get better. I have a feeling that this kind of growth will peak at 2030, and slow down to about 7–8%, for another decade (2030–2040).

Although we have been growing very fast, we are still a low-income country. Our current GDP per capita (PPP) is about $2,000. The government plan is to become a middle-income country by 2025. Given the current growth, this plan is achievable.

Rwanda has one of the best governance system in Africa. It ranks 2nd at World Bank's ease of Doing Business. According Transparency International, Rwanda is among the least corrupted countries in Africa, comes 2nd or 3rd, after Mauritius and Seychelles. For a developing nation, Rwanda is doing very well. They have the cleanest and most organized capital city in Africa, and their parliament has the highest share of women in the world. Clearly, Rwanda is well-governed country. They will continue to do well.

Related Links

Which country is the most developed, Rwanda, Kenya, Nigeria, or Angola?
Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?
What are the chances of Rwanda becoming the 'Singapore of Africa'?

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

Is Nigeria a failed state?
Why is Nigeria a poor country?
Why is Rwanda safer than most other African countries, even though not as rich?
Is Rwanda more developed than most African countries?
Is Rwanda the most prosperous country in Africa?
Which country is better in Nigeria and Rwanda?
What is it like to live in Rwanda?
What does Nigeria need to do to develop?
Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?

How do the Rwandan neighbors (in particular Burundi, the DRC, Uganda and Tanzania) consider or view Rwanda and its leadership under Paul Kagame?

Why is Rwanda so famous in Africa compared to other nations?

Related Answer
How is Paul Kagame transforming Rwanda into an African powerhouse?

Didier Champion, lived in Kigali, Rwanda Answered Feb 15, 2019

Originally Answered: How Paul Kagame is transforming Rwanda into an African powerhouse?

The video linked gives a very informative description of Rwanda under Paul Kagame. It is a good summary of the book Rwanda, Inc by Patricia Crisafulli and Andrea Redmond. As much as I liked the book, I would be very careful with the "African powerhouse" narrative because we are still a low-income country and have some challenges going forward. We are heading in the right direction, but we are not there yet. We have lots of work to do deserve the title.

Rwanda is doing nothing other than escaping the famous poverty trap. In his book, the bottom billion, Professor Paul Collier describes 4 major traps that keep poor countries in the cycle of poverty.

The conflict trap. Our history of civil war and a brutal genocide.

The natural resource trap. Thanks goodness, we don't have a big share of natural resources. our neighbor DRC isn't doing any better.

Landlocked with bad neighbors. Rwanda is situated in one of the unstable regions in Africa. Burundi, DRC, and Uganda are our neighbors.

Bad governance in a small country. We fit perfectly in this one, prior to 1994.

The development model of Rwanda is all about escaping these so called traps. Using good governance to bring rule of law, a business friendly climate, empowering the citizen to own their country, investing heavily in education to have a knowledgeable society of people, and above all maintaining peace, security, and long-term stability to become a self-sustainable country guided by the free market enterprise, trade, and tourism.

If we can maintain double digit growth like the following, we can escape the poverty trap for good. Hopefully, by 2025-2030 timeframe. First, by becoming a middle income (aid free) country, and taking all political and economic matters of our country in our own hands to achieve true independence.

Rwanda Today

To learn more about Rwanda Today, follow Rwanda Today.

Didier Champion's answer to How can Rwanda improve its economy?

Didier Champion's answer to What is the economic future of Rwanda?

Related Links

Which country is the most developed, Rwanda, Kenya, Nigeria, or Angola?

Why is Rwanda rated amongst the unhappiest countries in the world? Reading about Rwanda it looked like a miracle between the African countries rated as the safest country, fastest growing, cleanest, etc. In my eyes that doesn't make sense.

Is Nigeria the richest country in Africa?
Why is Rwanda safer than most other African countries, even though not as rich?
Why is Rwanda so successful in development, but not other African states?

Why is Nigeria one of the poorest country in the world with all the resources that can make her the one of the richest country in world?

Why is Nigeria a poor country?
What are the chances of Rwanda becoming the 'Singapore of Africa'?
Is Rwanda the most prosperous country in Africa?

Why is Nigeria the only black-led Subsaharan African country that manages to grow to have?

What other animals besides humans have wars?

Nathaniel Rice Bi, animal researcher & amateur wildlife historian 2y

Originally Answered: Are there any animals that make war like humans?

Yes, actually - here's a little-known conflict between two neighboring "tribes" of chimpanzees, the Gombe chimp war. This brutal conflict lasted nearly 4 1/2 years.

WARNING: DISTURBING IMAGES

This conflict between two chimpanzee factions is one of the most violent conflicts of animals in natural history. It's so violent and alarming that when Jane Goodall first described it, people thought she was making stuff up or over-anthropomorphizing them. But make no mistake, this was a real conflict.

Here's a chimpanzee from the Kasakela community

The Kasakela chimpanzee community, in Gombe national park, had a problem. The famous Jane Goodall noticed the community was slowly splintering apart. Goodall wondered if there would be an actual conflict.

There was.

Some background: the Kahamas, after splitting off, were very few in number - here's the stats

Kasakelas:

- eight adult males
- twelve adult females and their young
- 1 dead by the end of the conflict

Kahamas:

- six adult males
- three adult females and their young
- 10 dead by the end of the conflict

The newly-created Kahama group was soon under assault. In 1974, one lone Kahama male, Godi was ambushed and killed by several males of the Kasakela group. Another male, nicknamed Goliath, had been previously very friendly with the Kasakalas, was also killed by his former “friends’’.

The two factions continued to wage guerilla (no pun intended) warfare on one another, throwing and swinging heavy rocks and branches as weapons. The Kahama separatists were suffering heavy losses and, finally, the last young male (named Sniff) was killed. The Kahamas, being essentially disbanded, were no more; the Kasakelas were victorious. They took over all of the Kahamas' territory (only to promptly lose it to rival factions of chimpanzees).

While many species of animals will "go to war'' (IE the everpresent rivalry between felines and canines, and some ants raiding others' hives), none are as prominent as the Gombe chimpanzee war.

Steve Waters
Can the strongest known human fight a gorilla and win?

Guardian and Curator of Comic Book History at The Vault Updated 2y

The obvious answer is yes and no…

Through preparation and intelligence yes, without a doubt…

Warning …Warning…Warning…Warning…

“GRAPHIC PICTURE AHEAD” …..

Poachers in Uganda, Africa have been hunting and killing Gorillas for their hands and feet for decades to sell on the black market…

But even they realize that without rifles, it is surely a death sentence for them to even attempt to confront these large primates …

But if we are talking a hand to hand, one on one confrontation, no not a chance…

I mean really guys, what are you smoking…???

The common misconception is that even the largest and strongest humans like say “The Mountain” who at an impressive 6' 9 ft tall and 395- 400lbs is in fact comparible in strength to a Silverback Gorilla, this just isn't the case no matter how you try and slice it…

The average male Silverback Gorilla stands at 6'- 6' 2 ft tall standing erect and 395- 500lbs, and is anywhere from 4- 10× stronger than your average human according to scientific research on the strength of gorillas…

According to the Guinness Book of world records, testing done in research fields in the 1980's on the strength of large male Silverback Gorillas have them able to lift approximately 860 kilograms (1800 lbs) of dead weight easily, with even the best trained humans only able to lift 430 kilograms (900 lbs) at max…

But I'm pretty sure the human record has been surpassed in the past 30 or so years…

(Thank you steroids)

So we know that Gorillas can easily lift at least twice the weight of your strongest human without effort…

So if we were to make a human proportionate to a Silverback Gorilla in terms of strength, it would be something akin to this monster…

(Again, thanks steroids)

But it's not strength difference that would be the decisive factor here, it is the fact these are wild animals who fight with savage and primal ferocity that human flesh and bone are just not built to withstand..

Gorilla’s have 5× the bone density of humans and are designed to use their greater strength in ways we just aren't, hence they're lower center of gravity. Their muscle fiber and sinew has been compared to steel cable and is capable of exerting much more explosive reaction speed than humans, and their skin is as tough as dried leather...

If we compare skeletal structures of a Silverback Gorilla and an average human, there is definitely a very distinct difference in overall bone mass …

Gorillas have larger, thicker, and denser bones than human beings…

As you can see, Gorillas have more muscle mass per square inch than humans despite their shorter frame…

Humans on the other hand are quite fragile compared to Gorillas. It only takes 550 lbs of force (pressure) to crush a human skull, much less to break bone…

Silverback Gorillas have the strength to hit, grasp, or simply crush with 2,000-2,400 lbs psi with their hands and feet according to documented testing…

One solid shot or blow from a Silverback and you would most likely be crippled for life, comatose, dead, or damn sure wish you were…!!!

However, it is the 3″- 4″ canines and durable nails that would be most devastating in a close quarters combat scenario between a human and Gorilla or any large primate for that matter…

The Gorilla would literally rip and tear the flesh from human bone with those nails, and crush or break any bones with a bite force of 1,200 psi with those incisors…

I am 100% positive, a Silverback Gorilla could easily rip your arms completely off and literally beat you to death with them if it chooses to do so…

We have to remember there is a reason these creatures have to be tranquilized or sedated when in captivity in order to perform routine veterinary check- ups, or clean Gorilla enclosures…

Because simply put, these large wild primates can be extremely dangerous and even lethal to humans if they feel threatened or challenged within they're environment…

Although I am also quite positive, there isn't a human alive brave enough to test the theory that he or she could defeat a Silverback Gorilla in a hand to hand, one on one battle scenario…

Well possibly this guy, were he still alive…

(Just kidding guys…)
Even “Andre the Giant” wouldn't attempt such a crazy endeavor…

PRESERVING OUR ANIMALS IN THE WILD
3 Silverback Gorillas Protect a Group Of 22 Female Gorillas

· Follow Posted by Kathy Pennell

Typically, these great creatures travel alone or in small groups with other males, and it is uncommon for a family group to include multiple adult males.

However, one such group in Rwanda is going against the odds and is representing a beautiful story of brotherly love.

Typically, these great creatures travel alone or in small groups with other males, and it is uncommon for a family group to include multiple adult males.

However, one such group in Rwanda is going against the odds and is representing a beautiful story of brotherly love.

They have been tracking and protecting the mountain gorillas of Rwanda and the Grauer gorillas of Congo, both species are incredibly endangered.

The trackers have captured a number of adorable images, especially in the Musilikale family where the 3 gorillas lead 22 females.

Even though they are all grown up, two of the brothers nap and play together while Musilikale leads the females who he will defend with his life.

Trackers and researchers follow the groups of gorillas every day, and despite the gorillas being used to human presence, they stay at a distance.

The mountain gorilla population is severely endangered and is thought to be just over 1,000 all around the world, they are threatened mainly by poachers and habitat loss.

Grauer's gorillas are considered critically endangered with a small unknown amount left in the wild.

Source: Kingdoms

3 Silverback Gorillas Protect a Group Of 22 Female Gorillas

We all know silverback mountain gorillas as mighty apes, the largest of their kind and certainly the most powerful.

https://kingdomstv.com/silverback-gorillas-protect-a-group-of-female-gorillas/

Related Answer
Why is Rwandan President Paul Kagame silent on the Kipupu massacre perpetrated by the Ngumino rebel group (supported by Rwanda) which killed 220 people? Are Ngumino in Eastern Congo are there to protect Banyamulenge-Tutsi ethnic group?

Rebecca Davidson Master's degree Business Administration & Economics (2020) Answered Jul 25, 2020

Firstly, if we have to talk about the death toll, the Bembe people, Furiiru people, Nyindu people and Shi communities have already lost more human beings than the Banyamulenge community.

Two elements:

The ethnic minority does not mean innocence or means that the ethnic majority cannot be protected from the violence of the minority.

The Banyamulenge combatants and Banyamulenge community are the most protected community in eastern Congo and are the best armed compared to some neighboring communities, hence the reason why they control various regions of eastern Congo and kill other tribes for no reason:

Here we can see Sultani Makenga, a Tutsi rebel military leader of M23 is now preparing Ngumino (Banyamulenge rebel group) militiamen to attack the native Congolese.

This is why I denounce once again with the greatest energy this attitude of excessive victimization by using inappropriate words which are likely to bring misfortune to the Congo. It has been more than two decades since the "Hutu/Tutsi genocide" of 1994 was instrumentalized to the point of causing the deaths of millions of Congolese and Rwandans on Congolese soil, the destruction of the Congo with its infrastructure, its social and economic fabric, looting. systematic. Through this instrumentalization, some have even granted themselves the "international license to kill Congolese".

I particularly remember the capture of Bukavu by Laurent Nkunda troops and Colonel Jules Mutebusi. Not even two deaths! And for that, the whole city was looted, people killed, a hundred women raped in just 24 hours and the city's central market (Kadutu) set on fire, thus ruining the economy of an entire province, a whole people.

Now coming back to Kipupu Massacre, we are in a region where each side has a habit of overestimating its losses and locking itself relatively into a victimization algorithm ignoring the pain of others. As I often say to our Banyamulenge brothers, they are not just victims. They are also executioners, and most often the triggers of violence.

What is important to remember is that there was an attack against non-Tutsi massacre in the locality of Kipupu in this past July, 16, 2020. The Banyamulenge (Tutsi) rebels under colonel Makanika, military chief of staff of the Ngumino, a rebel military group based in eastern areas of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, targeted the civilian population, killing, setting fire to the houses ... It's called "crimes against humanity"!

These are kids who are slain like meat.

This is undoubtedly a crime against humanity. The person who supports the rebels who kill the Banyamulenge is the same person who had publicly advertised the "SaveBanyamulenge" campaign in Kigali. I had not stopped denouncing the hypocrisy of the Banyamulenge community (apart from a few courageous and "nationalist" individuals) to complain of being exterminated by the Burundian rebels without denouncing the responsibilities of Rwanda which supports these rebels who in addition are stuffed with elements of the Rwandan special forces.

I invite our Banyamulenge brethren not to let themselves being used by Rwandan oppressive regime without knowing it serve as an alibi for people of will and those who want to destroy the Congo.

Related Links

Could Mozambique authorities resist the Islamist insurgency in the north of the country? Or is it probable that the insurgents will step by step control more territories?

Is the Mozambique government using military conscription in the Cabo Delgado insurgency?

First it was Congo in the late 1990s to early 2000s, now it's Mozambique in 2021. Why can't the Rwandan Army stay within its own borders?

Is the Mozambique government going to ban Islam because of the insurgency in Cabo Delgado?

Why is the crisis in Mozambique being "ignored"?

Why is Rwandan President Paul Kagame silent on the Kipupu massacre perpetrated by the Ngumino rebel group (supported by Rwanda) which killed 220 people? Are Ngumino in Eastern Congo are there to protect Banyamulenge-Tutsi ethnic group?

Why is Portugal sending military troops in Mozambique? Does it always have many interests (economic, strategical) here since the independence of this country?

What was the situation in Portuguese Mozambique in 1972-1973 ? I have read that the insurgents were active in only a few provinces, that they were pretty much contained, and that they weren't a threat to the main cities. Is this true?

What is going on with the Islamist insurgency in Mozambique?

When we entered into Mozambique as refugees, my father lied about us being from Burundi, when we are Rwandans. Is there any way I can change it back, and be recognized as Rwandan?

AfriStar
Génocide au Rwanda : le procès d'un ancien préfet s'est ouvert à Paris

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK lun.

Après les procès d'un officier militaire, de deux bourgmestres et d'un chauffeur, il s'agit du plus haut responsable jamais jugé en France pour des crimes liés au génocide au Rwanda, une des pires tragédies du XXe siècle.

Vingt-huit ans après le génocide au Rwanda, une quatrième affaire devant la justice française: le procès de l'ex-préfet rwandais Laurent Bucyibaruta pour sa participation présumée à l'extermination des Tutsi en 1994 s'est ouvert lundi devant les assises de Paris.

Après les procès d'un officier militaire, de deux bourgmestres et d'un chauffeur, il s'agit du plus haut responsable jamais jugé en France pour des crimes liés au génocide au Rwanda, une des pires tragédies du XXe siècle.

Réfugié dans l'Hexagone depuis 1997, sous contrôle judiciaire, Laurent Bucyibaruta doit comparaître pendant plus de deux mois pour génocide, complicité de génocide et complicité de crimes contre l'humanité. Il encourt la perpétuité.

L'ancien fonctionnaire de 78 ans, qui souffre de problèmes de santé, est entré dans la salle d'audience en fauteuil roulant, une canne à la main.

Pantalon noir, veste beige, Laurent Bucyibaruta a demandé d'une voix hachée à pouvoir "rester assis" sur le grand fauteuil de bureautique mis à sa disposition, comme le lui proposait le président de la cour d'assises.

Après la constitution du jury, sa défense doit demander l'annulation de la procédure pour délai déraisonnable, les poursuites ayant été engagées il y a vingt-deux ans.

La cour devra d'abord statuer sur cette requête. Si elle refuse d'y faire droit, elle pourra commencer à examiner le fond de l'affaire.

- "Plaider l'acquittement" -

Ancien préfet de Gikongoro, une région du sud du Rwanda où les tueries furent particulièrement violentes, Laurent Bucyibaruta est accusé d'avoir encouragé et ordonné des exécutions de Tutsi.

L'accusé clame depuis le début son innocence.

Ses avocats, MMes Jean-Marie Biju-Duval, Joachim Levy et Ghislain Mabanga Monga Mabanga, ont indiqué avant l'audience qu'ils allaient "plaider l'acquittement".

Compte tenu de l'état de santé de l'ex-préfet, la durée des audiences sera en principe limitée à sept heures par jour.

Après l'examen de la personnalité de l'accusé, le procès doit revenir sur le contexte historique du "pays des mille collines", plongé dans un chaos destructeur entre avril et juillet 1994 qui fit au moins 800.000 morts, essentiellement issus de la minorité tutsi, mais aussi des Hutu modérés.

Les débats s'intéresseront également au rôle et aux pouvoirs d'un préfet et s'attarderont sur six scènes principales de massacres pour lesquelles la responsabilité de Laurent Bucyibaruta est questionnée.

Un total de 115 personnes doivent être auditionnées par la cour, dont des rescapés venus du Rwanda ou entendus par visioconférence.

Ce procès suscite "beaucoup d'attentes du côté des rescapés pour que justice soit rendue", a affirmé Alain Gauthier, président du Collectif des parties civiles pour le Rwanda (CPCR), qui traque les génocidaires présumés.

Au cœur du dossier: plusieurs réunions "de sécurité", de planification de massacres selon l'accusation, convoquées par Laurent Bucyibaruta ou auxquelles il a participé après l'attentat contre le président hutu Juvenal Habyarimana, le 6 avril 1994.

- Massacre à l'école -

Dans la préfecture de Gikongoro, comme ailleurs au Rwanda, les tueries débutent peu après dans les écoles ou les églises où Tutsi et Hutu modérés espéraient gagner un sanctuaire.

Il est reproché à Laurent Bucyibaruta d'avoir participé activement au massacre de l'école technique de Murambi en incitant les civils à s'y réfugier et en leur promettant ravitaillement et sécurité.

Le 21 avril 1994 vers 03h00 du matin, des dizaines de milliers de Tutsi rassemblés dans cette école en construction, entourée de barrages routiers, sont exécutés à la machette, à la grenade et au fusil par des militaires, des miliciens et des civils hutu.

Une poignée d'entre eux survivent en prenant la fuite ou en se cachant parmi les cadavres. Les tueries se poursuivent dans la journée dans deux paroisses voisines.

Laurent Bucyibaruta est également renvoyé pour sa responsabilité dans le massacre d'environ 90 élèves tutsi à l'école Marie Merci de Kibeho, le 7 mai 1994, et dans l'exécution de prisonniers tutsi, dont trois prêtres, à la prison de Gikongoro, des accusations qu'il conteste également.

Il a en revanche bénéficié d'un non-lieu concernant le meurtre d'un gendarme rwandais et les viols de femmes tutsi par des miliciens.

Le Tribunal pénal international pour le Rwanda (TPIR) avait un temps réclamé Laurent Bucyibaruta, mais il s'était finalement dessaisi au profit des juridictions françaises.

Une trentaine de procédures liées au génocide au Rwanda sont actuellement ouvertes au pôle crimes contre l'humanité du tribunal de Paris.

Related Answer
Quelle est la photo la plus horrible que vous ayez jamais vue ?

Iteri Ruta · Suivre Aucun de Nulle part 2 ans

Réponse originale : Quelle est la photo la plus écœurante que vous ayez jamais vue dans votre vie ?

1994: soldat français entraînant la milice extrémiste ("les hutus") au Rwanda, acteurs du génocide. La première photo illustre la traque des "tutsis", plus tard victimes du génocide…

Source: Euronews

Quelle est la photo la plus horrible que vous ayez jamais vue ?

Samo Med , Super Admin Répondu 24 juin 2020

La photo de cet enfant. Il a été brûlé vif par une foule dans la rue. Son crime, c'est d'avoir essayé de voler quelque chosé à manger dans une boutique.

Source: Nigeria : Un enfant de 7 ans a été brûlé vif pour avoir tenté de voler de la farine de manioc

Questions similaires

Quelle est la chose la plus horrible que vous ayez vue sur le dark web ?
Quelle est la photo la plus inquiétante et inexplicable que vous ayez jamais vue ?

Quelle est la photo la plus incroyable (et la plus réelle) avant et après la photo que vous avez vue ?

Quelle photo vous rend fou ?
Quelles sont les photos les plus effrayantes ?
Quelle est l'image la plus effrayante que vous ayez jamais vue ?
Avez-vous déjà vu une photo qui vous retourne le ventre rien qu'en la regardant ?
Quelles sont les photos les plus effrayantes que vous ayez vues ?
Quelle est la photo la plus troublante que vous ayez vue ?

Quelles sont les photos les plus incroyables que vous ayez jamais prises

What are the differences between the chimpanzee and the bonobo? Are they clearly visible or more behavioural? Do they interact?

David M. Prus · Follow Lifelong interest in animal behavior, ecology, and evolution

Both. As a rule of thumb, the bonobos are smaller, with shorter faces, darker skin, slimmer limbs and less hair

For those reasons, Bonobos look a little more like humans

Behavior is also very different. Social structure, gender roles, politics, and interaction is very different.

They have very different psychological makeups despite having similar intellects

Trait	Species Difference	Trait	Species Difference
Gaze Following	B > C	Tool Use	C > B
Food Sharing	B > C	Causal Reasoning	C > B
Cooperation	B > C	Spatial Memory	C > B
Social Play	B > C	Aggression	C > B

It’s often said that bonobos are the the lovers, chimpanzees are the fighters; both species use a combination of sex and violence for politics, but bonobos tend to use sex while chimpanzees violence. Bonobos have a more fluid, less stratified social structure, and form social bonds more easily

While chimpanzees are more organized, forming coalitions to hunt and war with other clans when resources grow scarce.

Of course, these are trends, not hard and fast rules: Bonobos are perfectly violent in their own right, while chimpanzees have a lot of love and cooperation in their own social groups. Nonetheless, they have very different psychology, society, and physiology.

Related Links

What are the differences between bonobos and chimpanzees?

If chimpanzees are humans' closest relatives, how much further away from humans do bonobos fall on the evolutionary tree?

Are chimps and bonobos currently evolving, and will one day be similar to us and walk upright, etc.?

Animal Behavior: What happens when chimpanzees and bonobos meet each other?
In what ways are humans similar to bonobos and chimpanzees?

Are bonobos the least aggressive primate or are Orangutans? Are humans or chimpanzees the most aggressive primate?

Why are chimps more aggressive than bonobos when they are so closely related?
Are bonobos a type of chimpanzee or are they their own species?
How do chimpanzees and bonobos compare in terms of intelligence?
Are humans more genetically similar to common chimpanzees or to bonobos?

Wake Up Africa!
· Following Posted by Yussif Issah Oyen May 5

PSG Players, Sergio Ramos, Keylor Navas, Thiro Kerler and Julian Draxler concluded their 3-day visit to Rwanda on Monday.

They said they had a good time and promised to visit again.Rwanda signed a 3-year deal with PSG in 2019. PSG opened a free football academy in the country.

AFRICA
A Beauty from Rwanda

Frank Abah Economist & Digital Entrepreneur

Credit: United Africa

AfriStar
près les Russes, Bamako veut l’aide des Rwandais

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK 18 h

Le chef d'Etat-major des armées maliennes qui a séjourné à Kigali pendant trois jours, a été reçu par le président Paul Kagamé.Comment remplacer l'armée française ? Le Mali qui vient de dénoncer les accords militaires avec la France en réponse au retrait en cours des soldats tricolores de son territoire, cherche de nouveaux alliés. Après avoir fait appel à Moscou, ou plutôt aux mercenaires russes de la compagnie Wagner selon plusieurs médias et diplomates, Bamako vient d'envoyer le patron de son armée au Rwanda dans le but d'obtenir le concours de Kigali dans la lutte contre les groupes jihadistes. Accueilli par son homologue rwandais, le général Jezn Bosco Kazura, le chef d'Etat-major des armées maliennes qui a séjourné à Kigali pendant trois jours, a été reçu par le président Paul Kagamé. « Le cas du Mozambique est vraiment impressionnant », a reconnu le Général Oumar Diarra en allusion à l'envoi depuis juillet 2021

d'un millier de soldats rwandais au Cabo Delgado, dans le nord du Mozambique pour combattre le groupe jihadiste qui avait envahi la région : « Ahlu Sunna wal Jama'a » communément appelé « shebabs », mais qui n'a pas de liens avec le groupe somalien du même nom qui est affilié à Al-Qaïda. Les jihadistes du Mozambique sont une filiale de l'organisation l'Etat islamique et appartiennent à la province d'Afrique centrale qu'ils partagent avec les Forces démocratiques alliées (ADF) qui sévissent dans l'est de la République démocratique du Congo. Responsables de plusieurs attaques dans le septentrion mozambicain, les islamistes mozambicains ont surtout fait parler d'eux en mars 2021 lorsqu'ils avaient surpris le monde entier en occupant la ville portuaire de Palma, obligeant le président Mozambicain, Filipe Nyusi, a appelé la communauté internationale à l'aide. Arrivés une semaine avant les forces de la Communauté de développement d'Afrique australe au Mozambique (Samim), les soldats rwandais ont très rapidement annoncé avoir repris des zones qui étaient sous le joug des insurgés. Décembre 2021, appuyée par les forces rwandaises, l'armée mozambicaine a récupéré la ville portuaire de Mocimbo da Praia restée pendant un an aux mains des jihadistes. Selon les confidences de sources sécuritaires à Apa news, les unités rwandaises réputées disciplinées et bien équipées ont vite réussi à forcer les insurgés à se replier dans les zones rurales, en adoptant une lutte proche de la guérilla. Le patron des armées maliennes qui n'a pas expliqué s'il veut lui aussi que Kigali envoie des soldats au Mali, s'est contenté de dire que sa visite au Rwanda était consacrée au « renforcement des capacités de l'armée malienne afin d'opérer en autonomie pour défendre le territoire national ». Depuis l'annonce par la France du retrait du territoire malien de tous les éléments de son opération Barkhane, qui en 2014 avait pris le relais de Serval engagée en janvier 2013 pour chasser les islamistes du Nord du Mali qu'ils occupaient alors depuis près d'un an, Bamako a lancé plusieurs offensives militaires dans certaines parties du pays. Appuyés par des « instructeurs » de la Russie, appellation officielle de combattants russes présents dans le pays, les militaires maliens auraient repris plusieurs localités aux jihadistes du Groupe de soutien à l'Islam et aux Musulman (Jnim, selon son acronyme en arabe) et à leurs frères ennemis de l'Etat islamique au Sahel. Début avril, l'état-major malien a affirmé que l'armée a tué plus de 200 jihadistes à Moura, un village du cercle de Djenné, dans la région de Mopti, au centre du pays. Selon plusieurs organisations de défense des droits humains qui ont réclamé l'ouverture d'une enquête sur le déroulement des événements, ces opérations auraient conduit à des « allégations de crimes contre les civils ». Ce que l'armée malienne a catégoriquement nié. Dans un communiqué daté du 5 avril, l'état-major des armées maliennes a affirmé que « le respect des Droits de l'Homme (DH) de même que le droit international humanitaire reste une priorité dans la conduite des opérations…» Mais il n'a pas indiqué pourquoi Bamako a empêché l'envoi sur le terrain d'une mission d'enquête de la Minusma. Son mandat devant être discuté en juin au siège de l'Onu, les autorités maliennes ne seraient plus en faveur du maintien de cette mission onusienne au Mali.

Réponse similaire

Pensez-vous que les animaux « sauvages » devraient être gardés comme animaux de compagnie ?

Royce Nestand , lieu : Terre Répondu 26 févr.

Non. Absolument pas.

De nombreux animaux sauvages sont nécessaires à l'équilibre de la faune et de la flore quand ils sont à l'état sauvage. Essayer de les domestiquer serait déplacer et les garder simplement comme animal de compagnie ne fonctionnerait pas puisqu'ils ne se laisseraient pas faire et cela reviendrait à les garder en captivité en fin de compte.

Un animal de compagnie est un animal qui peut évidemment vous tenir compagnie donc un animal domestiqué et non sauvage. Vous sentiriez-vous en sécurité avec un animal aussi imprévisible que lui…

Ou peut-être que vous apprecieriez mieux la compagnie de monsieur…

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les animaux devraient-ils être protégés ? Les dodos ne manquent à personne, non ? Je ne comprends pas pourquoi on doit conserver les animaux sauvages et dangereux.

Quels sont les exemples d'animaux qui sauvent délibérément d'autres animaux et/ou des personnes dans la nature ?

Quel est l'animal le plus dangereux sur Terre ?
Quel animal de compagnie préférez-vous entre le chien et le chat ? Et pourquoi ?

Est-ce que le fait de porter des vêtements décourage les animaux sauvages de vouloir attaquer les humains, ou est-ce que cela n'a aucun effet ?

Si quelqu'un élève un animal sauvage depuis qu'il est bébé, y a-t-il de fortes chances que l'animal, une fois adulte, s'attaque à son propre maître ?

Si les animaux sauvages, à la fois prédateurs et proies, ont adapté leur apparence pour devenir un camouflage dans leurs habitats naturels, pourquoi aucun d'entre eux n'est vert ?

Est-ce que les animaux sont racistes ?
Quelles sont les marques d'intelligence animale les plus terrifiantes ?
Existe-t-il des animaux sauvages élevant d'autres animaux pour leur propre

To what extent is the Belgian presence in Rwanda responsible for the genocide?

Roberto Muehlenkamp, legal adviser and amateur historian Updated 3y

Ladies and gentlemen,

Our subject is Rwanda. It is a small country, so small that on certain maps of Africa it is marked with only a dot. You must read the accompanying explanatory notes to discover that this dot, at the continent's very center, indicates Rwanda. It is a mountainous country. Plains and plateaus are more characteristic of Africa, whereas Rwanda is mountains and more mountains. That is why Rwanda is frequently called the Tibet of Africa – although it earned that moniker not only because of its mountains, but also on account of its singularity, distinctness, difference. It is extraordinary not only geographically, but also socially. As a rule, the populations of African states are multitribal (Congo is inhabited by 300 tribes, Nigeria by 250, and so on), whereas only one group inhabits Rwanda, the Banyarwanda, a single nation divided into three castes: the Tutsi cattle owners (14 percent), the Hutu farmers (85 percent) and the Twa laborers and servants (1 percent).

So commences the chapter "A Lecture on Rwanda" of the book The Shadow of the Sun by Ryszard Kapuściński, a must read for anyone interested in Africa. What the European colonists (first German, then Belgian) did was to promote Tutsi supremacy, assuming that the Hutu and Tutsi were different races. Here's how the Belgians viewed the supposedly different ethnic groups, clearly picturing who they considered to stand above the other (the image is from the page History of the Tutsi and Hutu):

If resentments between the three groups already existed and worsened as population grew (creating pastures for increasing numbers of Tutsi-owned cattle meant taking away farmland from an also increasing number of Hutu peasants, and that in a country where there is not only little space for agriculture but the land is, according to Kapuściński, poor and hard to cultivate), the Belgians deepened it by fostering the image of Tutsi superiority.

But they did more than that. In 1935, Belgium introduced identity cards labelling each individual as either Tutsi, Hutu, Twa or Naturalised. While it had previously been possible for particularly wealthy Hutu to become honorary Tutsi, the identity cards prevented any further movement between the classes.

This ID card system, which was maintained after independence, was a genocidal regime's dream, especially after it was computerized. It was easy to establish who was a Tutsi and thus to be killed. All one had to do was check ID cards, or even easier than that, print out lists of names and addresses of people recorded as Tutsis and go after whoever was on such lists. The nightmare with no way out could begin. Does anyone have doubts about the importance of data privacy?

Related Answer

To what extent is the Belgian presence in Rwanda responsible for the genocide?

Khalid Elhassan , History bookworm Updated Jan 29

The Belgians certainly set the stage for the Rwandan Genocide by implementing a divide and rule policy. They took what had been mainly Rwandan class divisions between a minority of Tutsis, who had ruled over a majority of Hutus, and transformed them into strict racial divisions.

But while the Belgians set the stage for future trouble and then exited, the 1994 genocide itself was the culmination of many factors in the decades after independence, over which the Belgians had little control . They include:

Hutu Backlash: The majority Hutus saw the minority Tutsis, who had been treated much better by the Belgians (who viewed the Tutsis as more racially "advanced", and used them as a favored group of local proxies to keep the Hutus in check), as collaborators and pets of the colonialists. Once the Hutus got started on that line of thinking, they started looking even further back, to before the days of colonialism, and figured that whole historic Tutsi domination thing had sucked.

The Hutus took it out on the Tutsis by transforming them into de facto second class citizens upon independence. They also massacred Tutsis by the thousands. Understandably, whatever the rights or wrongs of the past, whether under the Belgians or before, the post-independence mistreatment gave the Tutsis cause for grievance.
Hutu Fear: Many Hutus feared that the Tutsis were plotting to regain power and rewind the clock to return the Hutus back to an inferior class, dominated by Tutsis like back in the days. And they feared that the Tutsis would do that in a brutal fashion.
They weren't completely paranoid, given the example they had in neighboring Burundi. There, like Rwanda, there was a history of a minority ruling Tutsi class that had dominated a majority of Hutus. Unlike in Rwanda, however, the Burundi Tutsis retained power after independence, and clamped down hard on the Hutu majority. That triggered a Burundian Hutu revolt in the early 1970s, which the Burundian ruling Tutsi regime suppressed by massacring about 200,000 Hutus - in a country whose population at the time was something like 3 million or such.

To avert a future Hutu rebellion, the Burundi Tutsi regime carried out a genocide against the entire Hutu educated and upper class: Hutu professors, teachers, clergymen, businessmen, officers, or any other Burundian Hutus capable of becoming future Hutu leaders, were ruthlessly liquidated.

Hundreds of thousands of Burundian Hutus fled to safety in Rwanda. Their tales of mistreatment at the hands of Burundi Tutsis intensified the Rwandan Hutus' fears and resentment of Tutsis in Rwanda.

With that example of what Tutsis had done to Hutus in next door Burundi, the Hutus in Rwanda feared that their Tutsis would do the same to them. So they were on a constant lookout for any signs of a Tutsi uprising. Of course, the harder Rwanda's Hutus clamped on the Tutsis, the more alienated the Tutsis became, and the more they wanted to do something about it.

Among the thousands of Rwandan Tutsis who fled to safety in neighboring countries - mostly Uganda - an armed Tutsi liberation movement formed, and the exiles began raiding into Rwanda. The raids were ineffective for the most part, but they did serve to heighten Hutu fears and ratchet up their hostility and reaction against the Tutsis in their midst.

Long story short, Belgians got the ball rolling. However, a steadily worsening spiral of actions and reactions and counter-reactions (which could have been halted at many points along the way before things blew up), were more to blame than the Belgians.

Related Answer
What was the connection between the Rwandan genocide and Belgium?

Didier Champion, lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated Feb 24, 2020

Originally Answered: What was the connection between the Rwandan genocide and Belgium?

The connection between Belgium and the genocide against Tutsi in 1994-Rwanda.

As a colonial master, Belgium started the whole ethnic divide and institutionalized the tensions between the Hutus and the Tutsis. Identity cards were offered to distinguish who was Tutsi or Hutu. It was mandatory to carry an ID wherever you went.
The famous racial science was introduced to create some theories about the origins of the people of Rwanda. All these myths were printed and taught in schools to divide and conquer. Otherwise, the people in kingdom of Rwanda spoke one language and had had a homogeneous culture for hundreds of years. Dividing them was a colonial strategy to conquer their kingdom.

From a moral standpoint, they are to be held accountable for the crimes committed during colonization. Without their divide to rule policy during colonization (1918–1962), Genocide against Tutsi would never have happened.

The Belgians considered the Tutsis to be superior to the Hutus.

They considered the Tutsi as more like themselves; therefore, they took them under their wing and educated them and brought them up to be the upper-class of society.

Identity cards that distinguished Hutu from Tutsi became mandatory, thus requiring everyone to be classified according to their ethnicity and making these categories official. Their worst contribution was racial science.

The Belgians further increased the divide between the Hutus and Tutsis through the use of the eugenics. Skull measurements showing larger brain size, greater height, and lighter skin tones all reaffirmed the Tutsis' superiority over the Hutus, by providing proof of their apparent greater purity and closer ancestry to Europe

Post-Colonial Administration in Rwanda (1962–1994)

After colonization, the post-colonial administration led by Rwandan politicians never dismantled the ethnic divide created by Belgians. Instead, they built on those foundations to escalate tensions between the Hutus and Tutsis. However, this time, the Hutus were in charge and treated the Tutsis like second class citizens.
From 1962–1994, the Hutu regimes used tribalism to win elections and they delivered on making life miserable for the Tutsis. From there, It was all trouble waiting to happen. Read In the Rwandan Genocide, why did the Hutus so readily kill their neighbors?

Related Links

Why did the rest of the world allow the Rwanda genocide?
How involved was France in the Rwandan genocide?
What events led to the Rwandan genocide?
Explain how UN failed to stop genocide in Rwanda?

Did the Belgians cause genocide in Rwanda? I watched, Hotel Rwanda where a guy narrated how the belgians separated two groups, tall and thin nosed, and the short, or thick nosed and one group was left to be in charge of the others.

How was the UN responsible for the Rwandan genocide?
Who was responsible for the Rwandan genocide?
Who were the victims of the genocide in Rwanda?
Rwanda: How has Rwandan society changed since the 1994 genocide?
Why do France and Belgium not apologize and compensate Rwanda for..?

Quels sont les principaux prédateurs du gorille et comment le tuent-ils ?/ Do gorillas have predators?

Jerome Cohen Un ami des animaux depuis toujours, de toutes espèces.Traducteur · Mis à jour le 1 an

Serge Elia Knows a lot about animals

:

En raison de leur taille énorme (environ 150–160 kg) et de leur force intimidante, les gorilles n’ont aucun prédateur naturel à craindre. Parfois, les jeunes et les adultes faibles ou malades se retrouvent vulnérables aux attaques de léopards – en fait, le léopard est le seul grand prédateur des forêts tropicales africaines (l’aire de répartition naturelle du gorille), où les lions sont absents –, mais même à cet instant, un léopard en chasse doit être prudent, car les gorilles vivent en groupes et sont très protecteurs de leurs semblables.

Oui, même pour un léopard costaud, un gorille (surtout un mâle à dos argenté) est beaucoup trop gros et dangereux à affronter, surtout avec sa force de morsure désagréable – entre 70– 98 kilos par centimètre carré, contrairement à la force du léopard qui ne dépasse pas les 33 kilos par centimètre carré – et ses bras si longs qu'un seul coup suffit pour briser le dos du léopard. Ainsi, comme je l'ai dit précédemment, les gorilles n'ont pas de prédateurs naturels, mis à part l'homme.

En raison de la destruction de leur habitat par déforestation, ainsi que des maladies transmises par l'homme, des troubles civils et du braconnage excessif pour leur viande, les gorilles sont classés comme étant des espèces gravement menacées – en raison des activités humaines, les gorilles de plaine comptent entre 4 000 et 6 000 individus dans la nature, et ceux de montagne moins de 880 individus !

Heureusement, tout espoir n'est pas perdu : grâce à de lourds efforts de conservation, les populations de gorilles sauvages ont atteint une tendance à la hausse ces dernières années, à un point qu'elles ne figurent plus sur la liste des espèces menacées. Mais il reste encore beaucoup à faire pour assurer un avenir meilleur à ces magnifiques singes ; et c'est pourquoi il est plus impératif que jamais d’encourager les écologistes dans leur guerre pour sauver les derniers gorilles restants au monde.

www.cesarmarch.com

Related Links

Quels sont les prédateurs des hyènes ?
Quels sont les prédateurs des crocodiles ? Quels sont ses ennemis naturels ?

Lorsque les prédateurs avalent leur proie vivante et entière, qu'est-ce qui empêche la victime de mordre ou de gratter les entrailles du prédateur et de faire des dégâts ?

Un gorille adulte peut-il affronter un grizzli ?
Quels sont les prédateurs naturels des sangliers ?
Quels sont les prédateurs les plus meurtriers dans le règne animal ?

Quel est le prédateur le plus puissant du règne animal (individuellement et collectivement) ?

Quel animal, parmi tous les prédateurs, est le plus dangereux des combattants ?
Quel est le prédateur de l'hippopotame ?

Quel prédateur fait fuir de peur les gorilles ?

Related Answer
Has there ever been a documented case of interactions between gorillas and chimpanzees?

Serge Eli a . Follow Animal lover Updated May 15

Chimpanzees (on the left) and gorillas (on the right) share overlapping ranges in the tropical rainforests of Central and West Africa, where by habit they coexist peacefully without competition over food and territory, and without any hostile confrontations – to such an extent that the two apes ignore or even avoid one other in times, and in other times feed together in the same tree.

However, back in February 2019 – though it wasn't until July 2021 that various websites (see the sources below) talked about it –, one particular coalition, made of nine male chimps, paid no heed to the general rule when they launched an attack against a family of gorillas (a large male silverback, his harem of three adult females and a youngster) in Gabon's Loango National Park – a truly frightening event during which these chimps managed to outnumber and overwhelm the silverback despite his bigger size, before proceeding to kill the infant gorilla by beating it to death (in the usual way male chimps kill rivals); and it didn't stop here, for the exact same chimps also attacked another gorilla family and murdered their infant in December 2019.

Although it shouldn't be surprising to anyone that chimps (unlike the gentle giants that are gorillas) are renowned for their super aggressive and extremely territorial behavior – since violence is a natural way of life for them, which often makes them launch brutal assaults against any animal unfortunate enough to come across them; whereas gorillas (despite their intimidating look) are much more peaceful –, nevertheless this event was truly baffling because it was unprecedented, rare and practically unheard of, especially in light of the fact that gorillas and chimps normally live in peace as previously mentioned. But for all we know, it's possible that killings between the two species are actually more common than what the records show – and it proves how much we still don't understand about ape behavior.

The question remains: why did these lethal encounters happen in the first place? The reason why remains a mystery; and so, all we have are speculations, with some believing the attacks may have been triggered by heightened food competition, given that fruits are scarce and hard to find in February and December – and to make matters worse: climate change (the scourge of the 21st century) is currently contributing to reducing the amount of available fruits, which could lead to even more competition, and therefore drive these aggressive interactions –; whilst others think that the presence of human observers in both events may have had an effect that tilted the imbalance of power in favor of the attacking chimps.

A third speculation states that the chimps may have acted in the exact same way as they would towards neighboring chimps – and to be precise: in a territorial behavior that consists of targeting and killing individuals (mainly infants) from other groups after encroaching on their territory –, for it may be possible that the gorillas (just like rival chimp communities) were perceived as competitors for both space and resource use; and therefore, the attacking chimps sought to eliminate them at all costs. Scary, eh?

References: Chimpanzee troop beats and kills infant gorillas in unprecedented clash – www.livescience.com; Lethal chimpanzee attacks on gorillas seen for the first time in the wild – edition.cnn.com; Chimpanzees are killing gorillas unprovoked for the first time – nypost.com; First lethal attacks by chimpanzees on gorillas observed – www.independent.co.uk; Chimps and gorillas seen going to war in the wild for the first time – www.sciencealert.com; Lethal coalitionary attacks of chimpanzees on gorillas in the wild – National Center for Biotechnology Information; Chimpanzees attacking and killing gorillas in the wild – Reason and Nature

Related Links

How dangerous are orangutans compared to chimpanzees and gorillas?
Which ape is more dangerous: the gorilla or the chimpanzee?
Is it true a gorilla would win a fight against a lion?

Has there been any documented friendship between a gorilla and a chimpanzee?

Why are gorillas such gentle giants and chimps so vicious and aggressive (even though gorillas are much stronger)?

How many chimps would it take to kill a fully grown male gorilla?
Why are chimpanzees and gorillas not considered hominids?

Has a woman ever mated with a gorilla or an ape in modern times? If so, has it been documented?

How do gorillas and chimpanzees interact if they ever meet in nature or captivity?

Have you ever played with a chimpanzee?

Who will win in a fight between Chimp and Gorilla?

. Zach Maxwell , Warehouse Manager (2019-present) Answered Sep 14, 2018

Well, this is a chimp:

Actually a pretty terrifying little ape when pissed off. Crazy strong for their relatively diminutive size, and look at those teeth. They've been known to have full fledged chimpanzee wars between different families, and are capable of murder of rival chimps.

However, This is a Guerilla:

The gun pretty much gives this victory to the Guerilla.

You didn’t mean gorilla, right?

Related Links

Which ape is more dangerous: the gorilla or the chimpanzee?

Who would win in a fight between the strongest man in the planet and a Chimpanzee?

Can the strongest known human fight a gorilla and win?
Who wins, 1,000 humans or 10 gorillas?

Is it true a gorilla would win a fight against a lion?

Who would win a fight between an unarmed mixed martial arts fighter and an adult chimp?

Who will win a fight between a chimpanzee and a human?
Is there any animal that could beat a gorilla in a fight?
Who'd win the fight between a chimpanzee and a Neanderthal man?
How could a person fight a chimp?

PRESERVING OUR ANIMALS IN THE WILD
Affectionate Gorilla Couldn’t Stop Hugging Man Who Saved Her From Hunters

Posted by Kathy Pennell May 14

Many people think that animals are just dumb beasts, but in fact, they are smart creatures who have feelings and emotions. Just like us, they can understand and realize they are being helped. And of course, they know how to show their gratefulness to people who help or rescue them. And the gorilla in this post is a great example that will show you how affectionate and smart animals are.

Meet Pikin, a poor gorilla who was rescued by the group Ape Action Africa from being captured by hunters. She was so frightened that the rescuers had to give her sedatives to move her from one enclosure to another. When the sedatives wore off, Pikin awoke in the car. But amazingly, instead of being angry and scared, she was affectionate and calm in the arms of Appolinaire Ndohoudou, a man who joined in the rescue.

He has dedicated his whole life to helping and protecting wild animals, especially gorillas in CamerooThe tender moment between Appolinaire and the gorilla was captured by the talented photographer Jo-Anne McArthur. The captivating photo shows Pikin embracing the man after realizing that she was rescued and safe. Needless to say, the photo melted everyone's heart, and was chosen as the People's Choice Awards winner for Wildlife Photograph of the Year.

"I'm so thankful that this image resonated with people, and I hope it might inspire us all to care a little bit more about animals. No act of compassion towards them is ever too small," McArthur said. "I regularly document the cruelties animals endure at our hands, but sometimes I bear witness to stories of rescue, hope and redemption. Such is the case with the story of Pikin and Appolinaire, a beautiful moment between friends."

Source: Fascinating Nature

Affectionate Gorilla Couldn't Stop Hugging Man Who Saved Her From Hunters

Many people think that animals are just dumb beasts, but in fact, they are smart creatures who have feelings and emotions. Just like us, they can understand and realize they are being helped. And of course, they know how to show their gratefulness to people who help or rescue them....

https://aubtu.biz//33926?utm_source=Nav&utm_medium=ilovemy

https://aubtu.biz//33926?utm_source=Nav&utm_medium=ilovemycat&utm_campaign=CarolynMullet&utm_content=undefined

Why is the West interested in when Paul Kagame is leaving office rather than focusing what he has been doing throughout his presidential term for the Rwandan people?

Didier Champion

Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 2y

Other answers have already covered it. It's very ironic that they complain about foreign interference in their national affairs, but they go back and do the same thing to developing nations, across Africa. In Rwanda, the West has been pushing their agenda against President Paul Kagame, calling him, all sorts of names, and publishing propaganda in their media.

However, Paul Kagame has continued to stand strong. He had kept to deliver to the people of Rwanda. He is supported by his people. He has so much support from the Rwandan people and they are the ones who will determine his fate. For Rwandans, there are still more work to do and Kagame delivers the results. Follow Rwanda Today

Basically, there are some powers who feel they are entitled to how developing countries in Africa should be governed. In their infinite "wisdom", they want to dictate how Rwanda should be governed. The irony is that this is a country, which they ignored when they need the most help, many years ago. Now, the people of Rwanda, led by Paul Kagame, have managed to work together to rebuild their nation, some Western powers wants to disturb their well-being, peace and security.

Throughout the past 25 years, Rwandan people have had to make decisions that surprised the West. Rwanda ignored most of their suggestions and went on with their own homegrown solutions. Despite all the challenges, Rwandans have kept pushing through and have ignored the noise from the outside. Against all odds, Rwanda is here to stay.

President Paul Kagame is focused on building Rwanda and will continue to work for his people. As far as we are concerned, majority of Rwandans love and are enjoying the fruits of his leadership and governance system. If you really want to know about Paul Kagame, ask Rwandans. Read Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda? to learn more.

Follow Rwanda Today to learn more about Rwanda Today.

Related Links

Why does Rwandan President Paul Kagame order the killing of exiled political opponents and dissidents, when he is well-loved in his country and these dissidents pose no real threat to him?

Is Paul Kagame a good leader for Rwanda?
What will happen in Rwanda after Paul Kagame's final term in office comes to an end?
Why is Human Rights Watch always against President Paul Kagame?

How come Paul Kagame has done so much for Rwanda in the first 8 yrs while Johnson Sirleaf of Liberia has done almost nothing while the countries have similar civil war past?

How did Paul Kagame rebuilt Rwanda after the genocide?

Why does the West want to impose democracy on Rwanda? Rwanda needs stability and development.

What is your opinion on Paul Kagame (the president of Rwanda)? Why are the opposition leaders in Rwanda all in exile or killed?

What do you think of Paul Kagame's re-election in Rwanda with 99% of the vote?

Does Paul Kagame of Rwanda kill his political opponents in order to safeguard his dictatorial rule?

How come Paul Kagame and RPF never won a Nobel Peace Prize for stopping one of the most horrific genocides in modern history?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda 2y

The Nobel Peace Prize is reserved for people who serves the establishment. Those who actually serve the interests of the powerful countries. There is no way that Paul Kagame would receive the award to save poor Black Africans. Honestly, the award that is NOT deserve him. Let me explain!

FW De Klerk, the leader of the Apartheid regime in South Africa, who won the Nobel Peace Prize while he sold weapons to the genocide regime in Rwanda.

Guess who won the Nobel Peace prize in 1993? This guy was the leader of the Apartheid regime in South Africa. In addition to killing Black South Africans for over 50 years, the Apartheid regime sold weapons to the genocide regime in Rwanda. Can you guess who was in charge and who signed off on these deals? Yours truly De Klerk! In fact, the same year he won the Nobel Peace Prize is the same year he sold weapons to the regime that killed over one million people in 1994 genocide in Rwanda.

Read the following report to learn more[1].

Turns out that De Klerk — the Nobel Peace Prize-winning former head of an apartheid state — was in charge when South Africa sold arms to the genocidal regime in Rwanda, according to All Africa. In an eNCA interview with Thabo Mbeki (South Africa's second democratically elected president), the former head of state recalled receiving a delegation from the Rwanda Patriotic Front (RPF) — Inkotanyi who provided evidence that the South African government was selling arms to the then-Rwandan leaders and that those weapons were intended for carrying out genocide. Despite the efforts of the RPF to stop the sale, the apartheid government went ahead anyway.

In the end, it is fair to say that an award that was given to De Klerk, the leader of the Apartheid regime! It does NOT deserve Paul Kagame. He is better than that!

Learn more at Africa is Home.

Footnotes

[1] http://APARTHEID GOVERNMENT SOLD ARMS TO GENODICAL RWANDAN REGIME | AFROPUNK (https://afropunk.com/2019/05/apartheid-government-sold-arms-to-genodical-rwandan-regime/)

Related Links

Why did De Klerk win the Nobel Peace Prize in the same year that he sold to Rwanda the weapons to achieve the 1994 genocide?

Why hasn't Canadian Lieutenant General Romeo Dallaire been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his commendable work during the Rwandan genocide?

Was there a particular reason why President Obama won the Nobel Peace Prize?
Donald Trump: Why is Trump nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize?
How did Paul Kagame contribute to stop the Rwandan genocide?
What is the cumulative kill count of all Nobel Peace Prize winners?
Which country's people have won the most Nobel Prizes?
Who is the most undeserving person to win the Nobel Peace Prize?
Why was Mahatma Gandhi not honoured with the Nobel Peace Prize?
Should Malala Yousafzai have won the 2013 Nobel Peace Prize?

AGRO-PASTORALISM: Traditional cows from East Africa called Inyambo or Ankole cows.

Posted by Frank Abah

Munezero

Photo taken in Kayonza farms located in Eastern part of Rwanda.

What makes Rwanda special?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda 3y

The people of Rwanda, their beautiful country, their history (rebirth of a nation after 1994), etc.

In all honesty though, every country is special. The uniqueness of people, their cultural heritage, and so much more. That's the same with our country, Rwanda.

History.

We are a very resilient country who refused to disappear on the face of the African map. After the horror and misery of 1994 genocide against Tutsi, the entire world had already written an obituary for us. We were branded as "war-torn", "miserable" country, and virtually, any catchy headline you can think of.

In short, we were a failed state. However, that the world did not understand was that our ancestors had been around for many centuries and had survived all the trials and tribulations in their kingdom since the 11th century. We stand on the shoulder of giants, and all we needed, was to go back and learn from our ancestors.

Since the beginning of times, our ancestors fought together against their enemies, but they never turned against one another. They were united against anything that could destroy their kingdom. This is exactly what the government of national unity did after 1994. They united Rwandans, abolished divisive labels, and other ethnic denominations, etc. For 25 years after 1994, we have never looked back.

Rwanda Today is built on the foundation of unity, peace, safety and security. We have visionary leaders who have sacrificed so much for their country. The people of Rwanda understand the vision of their country and where it wants to go. We are not where we want to be, but we are working really hard to be a self-sustainable country.

Looking at where we have been and where we are today, I have no doubt that we will continue to progress as a country. What some have called an economic miracle, or the rebirth of a nation. Rwanda is indeed Africa's "success" story. It is a testimony that any African country, especially post-war or conflict societies.

A country who nearly collapsed on the face of the world map, but has managed to rebound hard and strong.

1. Today, the people of Rwanda are united.
2. Today, they have safety and security.

3. Today, the people of Rwanda have hope and are very excited for their future.
4. Their country keeps developing steadily and I predict if they keep up this moment, Rwanda is going to be a developed country by 2050.
5. Current GDP (PPP): $,2000 (2018). Keep an average GDP growth of 7% for the next 30 years, Rwanda will be a developed country by 2050.

They are already planning for it in their Vision 2050.

Rwanda is the place to live, visit, and invest.

According to the World Bank Group's 2015 Doing Business Report, Rwanda is the best performing country in East and Central Africa and third easiest place to do business in Africa.

1. You can start a business in 48 hours in Rwanda. It takes 11.1 days on average in OECD high income countries.

Kigali, the capital city of Rwanda

2. Rwanda is leading Africa's digital revolution. The Smart Kigali initiative will create access to free wireless internet on public buses, in hospitals, taxi parks, commercial buildings and restaurants, while a partnership with Korea Telecom is creating access to 4G for 95% of the population.

3. Between 2001 and 2012, real GDP growth in Rwanda averaged 8.1% per annum. According to the Fitch rating agency, Rwanda is experiencing 'rapid and inclusive economic growth driven by credible economic policy'.

Rwanda - Economic Indicators

4. Rwanda has the world's highest representation of women in parliament. 64% of Rwanda's members of parliament are women.

5. A dramatic improvement in healthcare delivery and health outcomes has seen life expectancy in Rwanda rise by 10 years in the last decade. Over 90% of Rwandans have access to medical insurance.

Healthcare in Rwanda (Former minister of Health, Agnes Binagwaho)

6. Rwanda is one of the few African countries on track to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Net primary school attendance is at over 91%.

Related Links

What is the uniqueness of Rwanda and how is Rwanda generally?

What are the best places to hike in Rwanda? What makes them special?

Why do so many foreigners go to Rwanda and think Rwanda is good?

What are some interesting facts about Rwanda?

What makes Rwanda great?

Why is Rwanda so famous in Africa compared to other nations?

Related: What do you know about Rwanda?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 4y

I am Rwandan, so I know this country very well. My question to you is what do you want to know about Rwanda? I will be happy to answer. Cheers!

I have shared my knowledge about " 15 things you did not know about Rwanda and reasons to add Rwanda on your wishlist". Enjoy!

Dear World, We are NOT Hotel-Rwanda: Rwanda Today is Peaceful, Developing, and Progressive.

I am from RWANDA! A beautiful country in the East African Region.

I am very proud to be Rwandan. Wherever I go, live or work, I take the Rwandan pride with me. However, one of the perks of being Rwandan in the diaspora, is the questions you get asked when you tell people that you are from Rwanda. The majority of the people I meet do not know where Rwanda is on the map. Even if they know something about Rwanda, 9 out of 10, is the Rwandan genocide in 1994. So, you can imagine how many of my conversations start.

*" You are from Rwanda? OMG, I have never met anybody from Rwanda before. But I have watched the movie, Hotel-Rwanda. That was some fucked up sh*t. How is it over there today? Is your family okay? Are you Tutsi or Hutu?"*

Rwandan Flag Colors Explained: "Blue" for peace and happiness, "Yellow" for economic development, "Green" for prosperity and "the sun" for enlightenment.

Depending on the setting and the timing of the conversation, some of conversations can really be awkward. Over the years, I used to simply lie about where I was from to avoid any further questions, especially if I knew I not have enough time to explain. But today, with pride and honor, I do say that I am from Rwanda and proceed to explain and answer any questions.

I used to shy away from giving too many details depending on the scenario. However, today I do usually take the time to explain; whether be in professional conferences or any other meetings. This is why I have started writing about Rwanda and why I am very proud of my country and what we have achieved for the past 24 years; from a failed state to a peaceful and a prosperous country, what the media has called an "economic and political miracle". Today, even if I don't have time to explain, I simply share my articles to give an overview of what Rwanda is today, our future potential and what we can offer to the world. It has saved me lots of time and effort. I love it!

Downtown Kigali, the capital city of Rwanda.

Rwanda wants to be seen as a vibrant economy with potential to attract tourists and foreign direct investments. As Rwandans, we acknowledge our past, but we don't want to be determined by it.

- We don't want to live on any one's mercy or pity.
- We want to be a self-sustainable city where investment and business rules.
- Kigali is amazing city on the rise. Rwanda is a country on the move.
  Rwandans are determined to build their country together with unity and peace.

15 things you did not know about Rwanda and why you should visit". Enjoy!

1. Rwanda is one of the Safest Countries in the World

According to the World Economic Forum, Rwanda is among the top 20 safest nations in the world. Rwanda ranks #9 out of the top 20. This is a big deal given the history of Rwanda. 20 years ago, the same census ranked Rwanda on the bottom 10, it was among the worst performers worldwide. Today, Only Rwanda and Morocco are the only African country to make it to the top 20 on this 2017 census.

THE TOP 20 SAFETY COUNTRIES IN THE WORLD

RANK	COUNTRY	SCORE	RANK	COUNTRY	SCORE
1.	FINLAND	6.65	11.	PORTUGAL	6.65
2.	UNITED ARAB EMIRATES	6.60	12.	LUXEMBOURG	6.60
3.	ICELAND	6.57	13.	NEW ZEALAND	6.57
4.	OMAN	6.49	14.	AUSTRIA	6.49
5.	HONG KONG SAR	6.47	15.	ESTONIA	6.47
6.	SINGAPORE	6.45	16.	SWEDEN	6.45
7.	NORWAY	6.41	17.	SLOVENIA	6.41
8.	SWITZERLAND	6.41	18.	SPAIN	6.41
9.	RWANDA	6.39	19.	NETHERLANDS	6.39
10.	QATAR	6.33	20.	MOROCO	6.33

2017 Top 20 safest nations in the world by the World Economic Forum

Not only is Rwanda safe, but its national army and police forces are involved in peace operations around the world. Under the UN peace operations, The Rwandan Defence (RDF) forces are involved in some peace operations in South Sudan, Republic of Central Africa, and Haiti.

2. Rwanda is one of the Least Corrupted Countries in Africa

According to Transparency International, Rwanda is among the least corrupted countries in the world. In Africa, Rwanda ranks 3rd after Botswana and Seychelles. Worldwide, Rwanda still has more room for improvement. Rwanda's CPI ranks 48th, globally. There has been some massive improvement in the fight against corruption in Rwanda. 20 years ago, Rwanda would have ranked 187th out of 195.

#Rwanda has been ranked 48th globally,the 3rd in #Africa after #Botswana & #Seychelles and the 1st in the EAC among the least corrupt countries according to the 2017 Corruption Perceptions Index (CPI) released on 21 Feb 2018 by Transparency International.

Corruption Perceptions Index 2017

This year's Corruption Perceptions Index highlights that the majority of countries are making little or no progress in ending corruption, while journa...

transparency.org

Rwanda's CPI index ranks 3rd in Africa and 48th, globally. Photo Credit: Ngango Elican

3. Kigali: The capital city of RWANDA

Kigali has been voted as the cleanest and one of the most organized cities in Africa. For the 4th year in a row, The United Nations nominated Kigali as the most beautiful city in Africa.

The beauty of Kigali combined in one! It is also a major tourist attraction

4. Environmental Sustainability (The first country to ban plastic bags in the world)

The streets of Rwanda, green, clean, and environmental friendly.

Since 2008, The use of plastic bags was banned. No plastic bag is allowed to enter Rwanda. Even at the airport, you give up your plastic bags, and they give you biodegradable reusable paper bag. It is amazing!

On a recent trip to Rwanda, my luggage was searched at the border, and the authorities confiscated some of my belongings. No, I wasn't trying to smuggle drugs or weapons. The offenders? Three plastic bags I'd use to carry my shampoo and dirty laundry.

You see, non-biodegradable polythene bags are illegal in Rwanda. In 2008, while the rest of the world was barely starting to consider a tax on single-use plastic bags, the small East African nation decided to ban them completely.

Check out this british journalist story at the Rwandan Airport (Credit: The Guardian UK)

5. Monthly Community Service in the whole country

It's called "Umuganda" in the local language, which means " working together". The last saturday of every month, each community delegates a place to meet up and do something positive to the community. Usually, activities involve cleaning up, planting out trees, building a house for the poor, infrastructure (a local school, hospital), or something of that nature. The idea is to work together for the betterment of the community, sharing ideas to benefit the Rwandan society at large.

Aerial view of Kacyiru, a neighborhood in Kigali

This community service is done by everybody. Nobody is excluded. From the rich, the poor, the middle class, the politicians, etc. See this man in the photo below? Yes, he is the president of Rwanda. He does the Umuganda too. In fact, every month, he goes to different locations around the country to do Umuganda with the people.

In this Photo, President himself is leading by example. The guy in white boots is also a member of the cabinet. The guys in Kaki jackets are the secret service, lending a hand and guarding his security.

6. Accountable Good Leadership, led by Paul Kagame, the best president in Africa, right now.

President Paul Kagame at the World Economic Forum, representing the African Union, meeting President Trump in Davos, Switzeland.

I can't think of any other president who has transformed his/her country, literally from being hopeless to hopeful, from a disaster to a economic recovery, from literally nothing to something. Perhaps, most importantly, he has inspired and motivated the next generation of young leaders, like myself. He is the ideal and the practical definition of a good leader. He motivates and inspires the young generation, and most importantly leads by example.

As a head of the African Union (AU), he has an almost impossible challenge to change and make major reforms in order to make the AU, a great organization it can be. If there is anybody who can start this mouvement, it's him. He is the man of action. He is the complete opposite of many African leaders, who are "all talk no action", with empty premises every presidential term cycle.

7. Gender Equality and Respect for women

The key reason for Rwandan success (after 1994 genocide) is attributed to promoting gender equality. Giving men and women equal opportunity to acquire skills and knowledge. Women have not only embraced the opportunities, they have taken it to another level in all sectors of the economy in both private and public sector.

64% of Rwandan parliament members are women

Rwanda is the first nation in the world have to have a higher representation of women in the parliament in modern history. Today, 64% of the members of the Rwandan parliament in both chambers (Senate and deputy) are women. No wonder why the country is doing well. Regulations mandates that at least 30% of all government institutions have to be women. From top-level ministers level to low-level leaders in the communities.

You talk about women's rights, equality and all that? In Rwanda, we don't just preach equality. We are doers. The population is 50% men, 50% women, so it makes sense to include women at all levels of decision making in the government. Doesn't it?

All women flight crew, Captain and her co-pilot of the RwandAir, the national air carrier and the Minister of Foreign Affairs. Very rare to see elsewhere, but not in Rwanda.

Women deserve respect and appreciation for what they have done for our country. We would not be where we are today without their hard work, effort, resilience, and determination.

8. Tea and Coffee (Some of the best coffee in the World)

Rwandan Coffee is second to none. Best quality coffee out there.

Every year, Rwanda coffee wins some of the best international awards for best quality coffee. Let me know if you have had any other coffee that competes with ours. I am a coffee stud myself. So, I would be interested to know who are our competitors!

Rwandan Coffee

9. Kigali Convention Center (The most expensive building on the African continent). It cost about 300 million USD.

Aerial view of Kigali Convention Center, Rwanda

It is a masterpiece of architecture combining arts, culture, and modern design together. it is a major venue for big national and international meetings and assemblies. It hosts major national and international meetings, forums, and summits. Some of the most notable meetings are African Union meetings, the World Economic forums, United Nations meetings, and many more.

10. Regardless of your nationality, you do not need a visa to come to RWANDA.

Visa upon arrival to the citizens of the world

Starting January 1st, 2018, you don't need to apply for a visa to come to RWANDA. Want to come to Rwanda? No problem. You will get a 90-day visa at all Rwandan borders and airports if you are African; and 30–60 days if you are from other continents. Other countries are closing, tightening up their borders, we are opening them and welcoming the world. I love it.

Come visit us and see it for yourself when you get a chance. Remember, no hustle with visa applications, and all that. Just come! We give it to you at your airport arrival. It only costs thirty USD dollars ($ 30) and takes 3-5 min.

11. Beautiful Mountain Gorilla and amazing Safaris Experience

Silverback Gorilla at the Virunga National Park in Northern Province

Rwanda has 50% of all the mountain gorillas in the world. They are endangered species, so Rwanda does a great job at preserving these treasures. You will have the best experience touring and visiting the amazing creatures.

My cousin, posing nearby (1 meter away) a gorilla and her two babies in the back.

Also, if you want to see all sorts of animals (Hippos, Lions, Zebras, etc) at their natural habitat, Rwanda has all you need. Akagera National Park and Nyungwe National Park are the main ones. Forget about the zoos, come to Rwanda. We will take you where they live. This is my cousin photo last time we were there. Amazing experience!

Zebras, my favorite animal and other animals at the Akagera National Park

Giraffes at the Akagera National Park

12. Rwanda's topography is beautiful and unmatchable

Rwanda is nicknamed "a country of a thousand hills" for a reason. The majority of the country is 1,000 meters (3,300 ft) above sea level. The central plateau is between 1500–2000 meters (4,950–6,600 ft) high. Rwanda's topography is composed of mountains, many small and average hills, and lakes. The highest pick is Mt. Karisimbi at 4, 519 meters (14, 826 ft) and the largest lake is Lake Kivu, which is situated at 1,460 meters (4,790 ft).

If you are an adventurer, who likes to explore and get lost in the wild, Rwanda is a perfect location for you. Over the years, I have had my fair share of many "once in a lifetime" opportunities. Below are a few of my favorites.

My fiancee and I at Lake Burera and Lake Ruhondo overlooking the Virunga National Park, a chain of 5 volcanoes.

My photo at the Canopy Walk on top of the largest tropical forest in Africa. Nyungwe Forest in Rusizi District, Western Province.

Tea Plantation with my lady overlooking the Nyungwe Forest.

My most recent and favorite photo. Proposing to my lady at the peak of Volcano, at 3,711 meters high. This is Bisoke Volcano, which has a crater lake on top, in Northern Province.

At Nyungwe Waterfall in Western Province.

13. Rich culture and Traditions (Amazing hospitality, great and friendly people.):

Rwandan Culture displayed by our beautiful ladies.

Rwanda is a very welcoming country. We have a rich culture of dance, music, arts and all that. There is nothing we enjoy more than sharing our culture with others. If you come visit us, we will be happy to share it with you. Below are a few photos of our sisters showcasing our amazing culture through dance and music.

Rwandan Traditional Dance at the Berlin International Tourism Festival (March 2018).

14. Rwanda, among the most Attractive Tourist Destinations in 2018.

2018 is an exciting year for my beautiful nation, Rwanda, and for travelers around the world. As a proud Rwandan, I am very happy that we are finally starting to get the recognition we deserve by many international tourism agencies around the World.

A few adventures that make Rwanda, an attractive destination for tourists.

Rwanda has been featured among the "must see" locations for the year 2018 by various international travel agencies such as CNN Travel, New York Times, Huffington Post, The Telegraph, the Vogue, and many others. Whatever your adventure you want, Rwanda will satisfy your exploration needs.

15. It takes 48 hours to Start a Business in Rwanda

According to the "Ease of Doing Business", a report published by the World Bank, Rwanda always come in the top performers in Africa and the world.

RDB BUSINESS EXCELLENCE AWARDS '17

In pursuit of Business Excellence

5TH EDITION OF THE RDB BUSINESS EXCELLENCE AWARDS

Every year, good businesses are awarded by the Rwanda Development Board for their job well done. This is a poster for the 2017 year awards.

None of these achievements would have been possible without massive amount domestic and foreign investments. Rwanda has made it clear to any investor regardless of their nationality that we are indeed open for business. To achieve this, the government created RDB, the Rwanda Development Board, an agency in charge of marketing different investment opportunities available in the country to the outside world.

Rwanda has lots of business opportunities in every sector of the economy. Agriculture, energy, financial services, mining, infrastructure, real estate, tourism, ICT(Information and technology), and manufacturing. Each sector still has more room for growth and early birds are making money given the good business climate in the country.

This agency is also in charge of advising the government on business-friendly policies and reforms in order to make investors feel at home in Rwanda. Today, it takes only about 2 days to register and start your business in Rwanda. This is a big deal given the fact that the same process takes 11.1 days on average in OECD high-income countries.

That's all for today. Unfortunately, I cannot fit everything I like about Rwanda in one article, but this is a good brief introduction. I hope you learned something new about my country, Rwanda, apart from Hotel-Rwanda. Once again, the movie shows what happens 24 years ago, but it is not what "Rwanda is Today". I wish many people knew that.

It makes me sad to go around and I have to explain that my family is safe and we are just as okay as you people around the world. We are moving on together, stronger and faster than anybody envisioned. As you can see, 24 years after 1994, Rwanda is definitely nothing like "Hotel-Rwanda". We are a peaceful, developing country, with an ambition to change the course of its history for the better.

One of the most popular Roundabout in Downtown Kigali, Rwanda

I am motivated to educate and inform people about my country. A beautiful nation that many people around the world know so little about. This article is a brief introduction to my home country, Rwanda. This is a list of things that many tourists are surprised to find out when they come to visit Rwanda. However, an average Rwandan takes them for granted by now, and does not think of it too much. In a way, they have become used to it and have become a way of life.

Help me spread the word by upvoting me so that this article reach many more people.

Thank you very much!

Cheers from #Rwanda!

Didier Champion

References

Check these above links out for more pictures about tourist attractions in arts, fashion, sports, economy, and other interesting stuff about Rwanda.

Photos Credit: Rwanda, the heart of Africa, facebook page

Photos Credit: Travel Rwanda, facebook page

Related: What is Rwanda known for?

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Updated 3y

Historically, Rwanda has mostly been known for the genocide against Tutsi in 1994, unfortunately.

However, Rwanda today, has better stories to tell. The country is peaceful and quite progressive. For a developing country, we have one of the most efficient government in Africa. We boast one of the most consistent and hardworking presidents in Africa. He has changed the game of politics and accountable leadership in Africa and the world.

Below are some of the most popular things that many people know about Rwanda. What are some interesting facts about Rwanda?

Related: What is only in Rwanda?

Solutions Architect, Data Scientist. Updated 4y

In early 2000's, President Kagame assumes the presidency of Rwanda.

President is going to work with his security people.
He sees some plastic bag along the streets of Kacyiru on his way to work.

He stops the convoy, gets out, picks out the trash, and give it to his security.

This happens about 3 times on different occasions. On the third time, a local reporter picks up the story. He asks the presidency office if he could publish the story about the president, picking up trash along the streets of Kigali on his way to work.

His office asks the president.

Can the reporter publish your story picking up trash along the streets?

PK responds. Why do you think I do that?

His office gives an official go ahead to the reporter.

Initially, the reporter thought that publishing a story like that of the head of state doing "janitarial" work was disrespectful. Little did he know that his story was about to start a mouvement to make Rwanda, a very clean and organized country.

What has Really Led Kigali in Rwanda Becoming The Cleanest City in Africa

Meticulously clean streets of Kigali and the order in public transportation of this fast growing city. Only in Rwanda ( in the African context).

By the time the story made it to the media, people were picking up trash in different corners of the city. We Rwandans do follow the chain of command. If the president could do it, we all could do it too. This kind of leadership of leading by example was very new to Rwandans.

For fellow Africans who ask how is Kigali and Rwanda so clean? This is your answer. It required the president himself to show that he was not requiring people to do what he could not do. From 2003-2005, Kigali and Rwanda has never been the same.

Rwanda is the place to live, visit, and invest.

He was willing to " walk the talk" and has never shied away from getting his hands dirty. Whether be at Umuganda, the monthly community service, sports day and car free zone in Kigali, and many other things. Whenever his busy schedule permits, he is always there with the people.

This is the president, leading by examples as he always do. Getting tested for blood sugar levels, heart rate and other vital signs. This is on a saturday morning after a sports day and car free day in Kigali. Sports day and car free day every month are there to encourage people to lead healthy lives, taking care of their bodies, physically and emotionally.

For 18 years and counting, under Paul Kagame's model of leadership, we take it for granted today. Only in Rwanda.

Rwanda Today

Didier Champion

The rest of the world doesn't really know Rwanda.

Didyne Hirwa Ndi Umunyarwanda, (literary means I am Rwandan) 6y

Rwanda as a "tiny" country (near Democratic Republic of Congo, a huge country) located in East Africa. Worldwide we are better known for the genocide happened 22 years ago (in 1994). It lasted 100 days from April to July, more than 1 million people were killed http://www.genocidearchiverwanda.org.rw/index.php/Welcome_to_Genocide_Archive_Rwanda

After that tragedy, the country has been on high rate development; per capita GDP is estimated at $1,784 in 2015, compared to $416 in

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda Upvoted by

Mutoni August lives in Kigali, Rwanda (2008-present) and

Reaggea Zone , lives in Kigali, Rwanda (1990-present) Updated 4y

BRANDING and MARKETING.

Rwanda today operates and is run like a public company, Rwanda, Inc. Rwanda understands that we are living in a world of branding and marketing.

The products have been worked on for sometime and are ready to go to the market.

If you want to sell something, you need to brand yourself big time.

In Rwanda, Inc

Paul Kagame is the CEO (PK) and Shareholders are the Rwandan people.

Board of directors are the ministers and other top level officials.

Board of Trustees are Presidential advisors and Friends of Rwanda from all over the world.

In Rwanda, Inc

Any type of waste is minimized

Didier Champion Lived in Kigali, Rwanda

I am Rwandan and have been writing about Rwanda on Quora. So, thanks for this wonderful question. Below is a list of a few of my amazing facts about Rwanda. Cheers!

15 things you did not know about Rwanda and reasons to visit in 2018.

Rwandan Flag Colors and their respective meaning. They represent the pillars of what Rwanda aspires to be. They provide purpose, direction, and motivation for Rwandans, home and abroad.

- "Blue" for peace and happiness,
- "Yellow" for economic development,
- "Green" for prosperity and "the sun" for enlightenment.

Downtown Kigali, the capital city of Rwanda.

Rwanda wants to be seen as a vibrant economy with potential to attract tourists and foreign direct investments. As Rwandans, we acknowledge our past, but we don't want to be determined by it.

We don't want to live on any one's mercy or pity.

We want to be a self-sustainable city where investment and business rules.

Kigali is amazing city on the rise. Rwanda is a country on the move.

Rwandans are determined to build their country together with unity and peace.

1. Rwanda is one of the Safest Countries in the World

According to the World Economic Forum, Rwanda is among the top 20 safest nations in the world. Rwanda ranks #9 out of the top 20. This is a big deal given the history of Rwanda. 20 years ago, the same census ranked Rwanda on the bottom 10, it was among the worst performers worldwide. Today, Only Rwanda and Morocco are the only African country to make it to the top 20 on this 2017 census.

THE TOP 20 SAFETY COUNTRIES IN THE WORLD

RANK	COUNTRY	SCORE	RANK	COUNTRY	SCORE
1.	FINLAND	6.65	11.	PORTUGAL	6.65
2.	UNITED ARAB EMIRATES	6.60	12.	LUXEMBOURG	6.60
3.	ICELAND	6.57	13.	NEW ZEALAND	6.57
4.	OMAN	6.49	14.	AUSTRIA	6.49
5.	HONG KONG SAR	6.47	15.	ESTONIA	6.47
6.	SINGAPORE	6.45	16.	SWEDEN	6.45
7.	NORWAY	6.41	17.	SLOVENIA	6.41
8.	SWITZERLAND	6.41	18.	SPAIN	6.41
9.	RWANDA	6.39	19.	NETHERLANDS	6.39
10.	QATAR	6.33	20.	MOROCO	6.33

2017 Top 20 safest nations in the world by the World Economic Forum

Not only is Rwanda safe, but its national army and police forces are involved in peace operations around the world. Under the UN peace operations, The Rwandan Defence (RDF) forces are involved in some peace operations in South Sudan, Republic of Central Africa, and Haiti.

2. Rwanda is one of the Least Corrupted Countries in Africa

According to Transparency International, Rwanda is among the least corrupted countries in the world. In Africa, Rwanda ranks 3rd after Botswana and Seychelles. Worldwide, Rwanda still has more room for improvement. Rwanda's CPI ranks 48th, globally. There has been some massive improvement in the fight against corruption in Rwanda. 20 years ago, Rwanda would have ranked 187th out of 195.

#Rwanda has been ranked 48th globally,the 3rd in #Africa after #Botswana & #Seychelles and the 1st in the EAC among the least corrupt countries according to the 2017 Corruption Perceptions Index (CPI) released on 21 Feb 2018 by Transparency International.

Rwanda's CPI index ranks 3rd in Africa and 48th, globally. Photo Credit: Ngango Elican

3. Kigali: The capital city of RWANDA

Kigali has been voted as the cleanest and one of the most organized cities in Africa. For the 4th year in a row, The United Nations nominated Kigali as the most beautiful city in Africa.

The beauty of Kigali combined in one! It is also a major tourist attraction

4. Environmental Sustainability (The first country to ban plastic bags in the world)

The streets of Rwanda, green, clean, and environmental friendly.

Since 2008, The use of plastic bags was banned. No plastic bag is allowed to enter Rwanda. Even at the airport, you give up your plastic bags, and they give you biodegradable reusable paper bag. It is amazing!

On a recent trip to Rwanda, my luggage was searched at the border, and the authorities confiscated some of my belongings. No, I wasn't trying to smuggle drugs or weapons. The offenders? Three plastic bags I'd use to carry my shampoo and dirty laundry.

You see, non-biodegradable polythene bags are illegal in Rwanda. In 2008, while the rest of the world was barely starting to consider a tax on single-use plastic bags, the small East African nation decided to ban them completely.

Check out this british journalist story at the Rwandan Airport (Credit: The Guardian UK)

5. Monthly Community Service in the whole country

It's called "Umuganda" in the local language, which means " working together". The last saturday of every month, each community delegates a place to meet up and do something positive to the community. Usually, activities involve cleaning up, planting out trees, building a house for the poor, infrastructure (a local school, hospital), or something of that nature. The idea is to work together for the betterment of the community, sharing ideas to benefit the Rwandan society at large.

Aerial view of Kacyiru, a neighborhood in Kigali

This community service is done by everybody. Nobody is excluded. From the rich, the poor, the middle class, the politicians, etc. See this man in the photo below? Yes, he is the president of Rwanda. He does the Umuganda too. In fact, every month, he goes to different locations around the country to do Umuganda with the people.

In this Photo, President himself is leading by example. The guy in white boots is also a member of the cabinet. The guys in Kaki jackets are the secret service, lending a hand and guarding his security.

6. Accountable Good Leadership, led by Paul Kagame, the best president in Africa, right now.

President Paul Kagame at the World Economic Forum, representing the African Union, meeting President Trump in Davos, Switzeland.

I can't think of any other president who has transformed his/her country, literally from being hopeless to hopeful, from a disaster to a economic recovery, from literally nothing to something. Perhaps, most importantly, he has inspired and motivated the next generation of young leaders, like myself. He is the ideal and the practical definition of a good leader. He motivates and inspires the young generation, and most importantly leads by example.

As a head of the African Union (AU), he has an almost impossible challenge to change and make major reforms in order to make the AU, a great organization it can be. If there is anybody who can start this mouvement, it's him. He is the man of action. He is the complete opposite of many African leaders, who are "all talk no action", with empty premises every presidential term cycle.

7. Gender Equality and Respect for women

The key reason for Rwandan success (after 1994 genocide) is attributed to promoting gender equality. Giving men and women equal opportunity to acquire skills and knowledge. Women have not only embraced the opportunities, they have taken it to another level in all sectors of the economy in both private and public sector.

64% of Rwandan parliament members are women

Rwanda is the first nation in the world have to have a higher representation of women in the parliament in modern history. Today, 64% of the members of the Rwandan parliament in both chambers (Senate and deputy) are women. No wonder why the country is doing well. Regulations mandates that at least 30% of all government institutions have to be women. From top-level ministers level to low-level leaders in the communities.

You talk about women's rights, equality and all that? In Rwanda, we don't just preach equality. We are doers. The population is 50% men, 50% women, so it makes sense to include women at all levels of decision making in the government. Doesn't it?

All women flight crew, Captain and her co-pilot of the RwandAir, the national air carrier and the Minister of Foreign Affairs. Very rare to see elsewhere, but not in Rwanda.

Women deserve respect and appreciation for what they have done for our country. We would not be where we are today without their hard work, effort, resilience, and determination.

8. Tea and Coffee (Some of the best coffee in the World)

Rwandan Coffee is second to none. Best quality coffee out there.

Every year, Rwanda coffee wins some of the best international awards for best quality coffee. Let me know if you have had any other coffee that competes with ours. I am a coffee stud myself. So, I would be interested to know who are our competitors!

Rwandan Coffee

9. Kigali Convention Center (The most expensive building on the African continent). It cost about 300 million USD.

Aerial view of Kigali Convention Center, Rwanda

It is a masterpiece of architecture combining arts, culture, and modern design together. it is a major venue for big national and international meetings and assemblies. It hosts major national and international meetings, forums, and summits. Some of the most notable meetings are African Union meetings, the World Economic forums, United Nations meetings, and many more.

10. Regardless of your nationality, you do not need a visa to come to RWANDA.

Visa upon arrival to the citizens of the world

Starting January 1st, 2018, you don't need to apply for a visa to come to RWANDA. Want to come to Rwanda? No problem. You will get a 90-day visa at all Rwandan borders and airports if you are African; and 30–60 days if you are from other continents. Other countries are closing, tightening up their borders, we are opening them and welcoming the world. I love it.

Come visit us and see it for yourself when you get a chance. Remember, no hustle with visa applications, and all that. Just come! We give it to you at your airport arrival. It only costs thirty USD dollars ($ 30) and takes 3-5 min.

11. Beautiful Mountain Gorilla and amazing Safaris Experience

Silverback Gorilla at the Virunga National Park in Northern Province

Rwanda has 50% of all the mountain gorillas in the world. They are endangered species, so Rwanda does a great job at preserving these treasures. You will have the best experience touring and visiting the amazing creatures.

My cousin, posing nearby (1 meter away) a gorilla and her two babies in the back.

Also, if you want to see all sorts of animals (Hippos, Lions, Zebras, etc) at their natural habitat, Rwanda has all you need. Akagera National Park and Nyungwe National Park are the main ones. Forget about the zoos, come to Rwanda. We will take you where they live. This is my cousin photo last time we were there. Amazing experience!

Zebras, my favorite animal and other animals at the Akagera National Park

Giraffes at the Akagera National Park

12. Rwanda's topography is beautiful and unmatchable

Rwanda is nicknamed "a country of a thousand hills" for a reason. The majority of the country is 1,000 meters (3,300 ft) above sea level. The central plateau is between 1500–2000 meters (4,950–6,600 ft) high. Rwanda's topography is composed of mountains, many small and average hills, and lakes. The highest pick is Mt. Karisimbi at 4, 519 meters (14, 826 ft) and the largest lake is Lake Kivu, which is situated at 1,460 meters (4,790 ft).

If you are an adventurer, who likes to explore and get lost in the wild, Rwanda is a perfect location for you. Over the years, I have had my fair share of many "once in a lifetime" opportunities. Below are a few of my favorites.

My fiancee and I at Lake Burera and Lake Ruhondo overlooking the Virunga National Park, a chain of 5 volcanoes.

My photo at the Canopy Walk on top of the largest tropical forest in Africa. Nyungwe Forest in Rusizi District, Western Province

Tea Plantation with my lady overlooking the Nyungwe Forest

My most recent and favorite photo. Proposing to my lady at the peak of Volcano, at 3,711 meters high. This is Bisoke Volcano, which has a crater lake on top, in Northern Province.

At Nyungwe Waterfall in Western Province.

13. Rich culture and Traditions (Amazing hospitality, great and friendly people.):

Rwandan Culture displayed by our beautiful ladies

Rwanda is a very welcoming country. We have a rich culture of dance, music, arts and all that. There is nothing we enjoy more than sharing our culture with others. If you come visit us, we will be happy to share it with you. Below are a few photos of our sisters showcasing our amazing culture through dance and music.

Rwandan Traditional Dance at the Berlin International Tourism Festival (March 2018)

14. Rwanda, among the most Attractive Tourist Destinations in 2018.

2018 is an exciting year for my beautiful nation, Rwanda, and for travelers around the world. As a proud Rwandan, I am very happy that we are finally starting to get the recognition we deserve by many international tourism agencies around the World.

A few adventures that make Rwanda, an attractive destination for tourists.

Rwanda has been featured among the "must see" locations for the year 2018 by various international travel agencies such as CNN Travel, New York Times, Huffington Post, The Telegraph, the Vogue, and many others. Whatever your adventure you want, Rwanda will satisfy your exploration needs.

15. It takes 48 hours to Start a Business in Rwanda

According to the "Ease of Doing Business", a report published by the World Bank, Rwanda always come in the top performers in Africa and the world.

RDB BUSINESS EXCELLENCE AWARDS '17

In pursuit of Business Excellence

5TH EDITION OF THE RDB BUSINESS EXCELLENCE AWARDS

Every year, good businesses are awarded by the Rwanda Development Board for their job well done. This is a poster for the 2017 year awards.

None of these achievements would have been possible without massive amount domestic and foreign investments. Rwanda has made it clear to any investor regardless of their nationality that we are indeed open for business. To achieve this, the government created RDB, the Rwanda Development Board, an agency in charge of marketing different investment opportunities available in the country to the outside world.

Rwanda has lots of business opportunities in every sector of the economy. Agriculture, energy, financial services, mining, infrastructure, real estate, tourism, ICT(Information and technology), and manufacturing. Each sector still has more room for growth and early birds are making money given the good business climate in the country.

This agency is also in charge of advising the government on business-friendly policies and reforms in order to make investors feel at home in Rwanda. Today, it takes only about 2 days to register and start your business in Rwanda. This is a big deal given the fact that the same process takes 11.1 days on average in OECD high-income countries.

That's all for today. Unfortunately, I cannot fit everything I like about Rwanda in one article, but this is a good brief introduction. I hope you learned something new about my country, Rwanda, apart from Hotel-Rwanda. Once again, the movie shows what happens 24 years ago, but it is not what "Rwanda is Today". I wish many people knew that.

It makes me sad to go around and I have to explain that my family is safe and we are just as okay as you people around the world. We are moving on together, stronger and faster than anybody envisioned. As you can see, 24 years after 1994, Rwanda is definitely nothing like "Hotel-Rwanda". We are a peaceful, developing country, with an ambition to change the course of its history for the better.

One of the most popular Roundabout in Downtown Kigali, Rwanda

I am very passionate about educating and informing people about my country. A beautiful nation that many people around the world know so little about. This article is a brief introduction to my home country, Rwanda. This is a list of things that many tourists are surprised to find out when they come to visit Rwanda. However, an average Rwandan takes them for granted by now, and does not think of it too much. In a way, they have become used to it and have become a way of life.

Help me spread the word by upvoting me so that this article reach many more people.

Thank you very much!

Cheers from #Rwanda!

Didier Champion

References

Check these above links out for more pictures about tourist attractions in arts, fashion, sports, economy, and other interesting stuff about Rwanda.

Photos Credit: Rwanda, the heart of Africa, facebook page

Photos Credit: Travel Rwanda, facebook page

Rwanda

7. One million Rwandans overcame poverty between 2006 and 2011. Innovative homegrown development solutions have reduced poverty. For example, the Girinka programme, which provides every poor family in Rwanda with a cow, has reduced malnutrition, increased agricultural productivity and created small business opportunities.

An affluent neighborhood of my city (Kigali, Rwanda)

8. In 2007, Rwanda became the first country in the world to legislate an outright ban on plastic bags. It is estimated that the EU produces 3.4m tonnes of plastic bags in a year, creating carbon emissions and dangerous waste.

KIGALITODAY

9. On the last Saturday of every month, every Rwandan, starting with the President, participates in Umuganda, a day of national community service. Through Umuganda, Rwandans have built schools, medical centres, hydroelectric plants, and rehabilitated wetlands to create highly productive agricultural plots, and cleaned their cities, towns and villages – making Kigali one of the cleanest cities in Africa.

Public Transportation in our nation's capital, Kigali.

10. According to the Ibrahim index of African Governance, Rwanda is one of the only two countries to show consistent overall governance improvements since 2000. It is ranked number one in Africa for Gender, and is one of the top five most improved countries since 2000.

Photo Credit: Rwanda the Heart of Africa

Source website: 10 Interesting Facts About Rwanda (Number 9 Might Surprise You) - AB2020

Photo Credit: Rwanda the Heart of Africa; Kigali, my home and capital city of Rwanda. This is a combination of different photos of some of Kigali's landmarks and architectural skyscrapers and high rise buildings.

References

World Bank Open Data (Understand economic outlook of different African countries). This is one of the best sources out there in the marketplace.

Middle Income Countries (African Development Bank Group).

Africa's MICs (World Bank blog on African MICs).

Related Links

What is the uniqueness of Rwanda and how is Rwanda generally?

What are the best places to hike in Rwanda? What makes them special?

Why do so many foreigners go to Rwanda and think Rwanda is good?

What are some interesting facts about Rwanda?

What makes Rwanda great?

Why is Rwanda so famous in Africa compared to other nations?

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location
In East central Africa

Official title of the state

Ripublika y'u Rwanda (national)
The Republic of Rwanda

Flag description:

Three horizontal bands of sky blue (top, double width), yellow, and green, with a golden sun with 24 rays near the fly end of the blue band; blue represents happiness and peace, yellow economic development and mineral wealth, green hope of prosperity and natural resources; the sun symbolizes unity, as well as enlightenment and transparency from ignorance.

Neighbours

Uganda on N., the Congo on W., Burundi on S., Tanzania on E. Land boundaries; total 893 km. Border countries; Burundi 290 km, The Congo 217 km, Tanzania 217 km, Uganda 169 km.

Founder of The Nation
Gregoire Kayibanda

Local division
4 Provinces (Intara), 1 City, Kigali (Umujyi).

Government type
Republic – presidential

Legislation chamber
Bicameral Parliament

Form of State
Republic

A multi-party system of government with two legislative bodies. The Senate 26 seats, members are elected by local councils, forums and the executive president to serve for eight-year terms and the Chamber of Deputies 80 seats, members are elected by popular vote to serve for five-year terms. Popular vote for Presidency every 7 years, eligible for a second term.

Executive branch

Separated by chief of State and head of Government.
President elected by popular vote to serve for seven-year terms without presidential term limits. Vice president & head of Government to be appointed by the president. Chief of State: President Head of Government: Prime Minister

Former Rulers

1961 - 1973 Gregoire Kayibanda

1973 – 1994 Juvénal Habyarimana

1994 Théodore Sindikubwabo

1994 – 2000 Pasteur Bizimungu

2000 – Present Paul Kagame

Judicial chamber

Supreme Court

Capital city Ville de Kigali Altitude 1567 mtrs/5140 ft. Geographic coordinates - 1.57S , 30.04E. It is situated near the geographic centre of the nation. Founded as a village in 1909. Became a national capital at independence in July, 1962.

Names of main towns

Butare, Gitarama, Ruhengeri, Gisenyi.

Date of independence

1st July, 1962.

Religions (Major)

Christian 70%, Traditional beliefs 23%, Muslim 5%, others 2%.

Main spoken languages

Kinyarwanda (national), French, Swahili widely spoken.

Currency unit

Rwandan Franc (RWF) = Centimes

Area in Km2

26,338.00

Country area up-down position

47 out of 55 states

Demographic terms ;-

Average annual population growth rate 2.818 %
Birth rate 37.26 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 10.19 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 57.46 years

Male 56.06 years ; Female 58.91 years;

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male:, Female:

Average per capita income

USD 1, 100

Population density

443/km2

Urban population

19

Contributor groups

Farming, Fishing: 42, Industry: 14, Social service: 44

Main Export Items

Coffee, tungsten, tin ore, tea, quinquina, pyrethrum

Economy is based on

Agriculture, Cattle breeding

Climate

Tropical; Moderated by altitude.

Extremes;-

Lowest point; Rusizi River 950 mtrs.

Highest point; Mt. Karisimbi 4,519 mtrs.

Weather of the Capital city (Kigali) average annual temperature 19oc.

Altitude 1567 mtrs/5140 ft

Hottest Month June-August.

Coldest Month December

Driest Month July-August Average monthly Rf is 85 mm.

Measures
Metric system

Time zone

2 hours ahead of GMT/UTC

Public holidays

1st July (Independence), All Catholic holidays

Ethnic groups

Ba-Hutu 84%, Ba-Tutsi 14%, Ba-Twa (Pygmies) 2%

Topographic & Environmental concern

Grassy uplands and hills cover most of the country, with a chain of volcanoes in the NW. The source of Nile river has been located in the head waters of the Kageira (Akageral) river SW of Kigali. Environment: deforestation results from uncontrolled cutting of trees for fuel; overgrazing; soil exhaustion; soil erosion; widespread poaching.

Economy Overview

Industry

Agro-products, cement, consumer goods, furnitures, leather-shoes, plastic goods, textiles, tobacco.

Chief crops

Coffee, tea, pyrethrum, bananas, beans, sorghum, potatoes : livestock.

National resources

Tin ore, Gold, Wolframite, Methane, Tungsten ore, Hydro-power, Arable land.

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 35

Grassland: 18

Forest woods: 22

Other: 25

Marine:

Coastline; None.

Commercial Sea port:-

An Inland State; Uses port of Mombassa (Kenya) and port of Dar-es-salaam (Tanzania).

Development prospect;-

Economic growth rebounded in 2011 thanks to improved agricultural output. The 2011 tea harvest is expected to increase to 26,000tn from 22,000tn in 2010, while the government expects Coffee production to increase to 22,000tn from 20,000tn. Under a programme to increase the area under tea cultivation, farmers are targeting 35,000tn and 21,000ha in 2012. However, mineral exports, which have overtaken coffee as the country's leading foreign revenue earner, are expected to be hit by the US legislation on conflict minerals that came into effect in 2011. Rwanda's international partners suggest that the economy needs to be diversified and the government needs to break its reliance on aid, which accounts for 40 percent of the 2011-2012 budget. Telecoms is a source of growth, but the government withdrew leading company Rwandatel's licence in April 2011 because it was 80 percent owned by Libya's LAP Green. The country has been a top global performer for improving the business climate, according to the International Finance Corporation's 'Doing Business' reports, but economic growth is constrained by weak infrastructure. Less than one fifth of the population has access to electricity, so the government has plans to invest about $1bn in geothermal projects that could generate 310MW.

War on Terror? US proxies Ethiopia and Rwanda terrorize their own People

Washington D.C.-based Ethiopian activist Obang Metho says that Ethiopian and Rwandan dictators have been allowed to terrorize their own people because they provide troops for the U.S. War on Terror. Metho is a founder of the Soldarity Movement for a New Ethiopia.

KPFA Weekend News Anchor Sharon Sobotta: Two hundred delegates from African governments and institutions met in Kigali, Rwanda, yesterday for a symposium on “democratization and development.” The symposium was organized by the Meles Zenawi Foundation and the African Development Bank.

Ethiopian Prime Minister Meles Zenawi’s successor, Hailemariam Desalegn, joined Rwandan President Paul Kagame in Kigali, where both spoke of the primacy of state power and African agency in development. Washington D.C.-based Ethiopian activist Obang Metho spoke to KPFA’s Ann Garrison about what was wrong with this picture.

Obang Metho: Thank you very much for giving me this opportunity. The whole picture is wrong. The whole picture is wrong being that Paul Kagame and then the former prime minister of Ethiopia, Meles Zenawi, these two gentlemen – we cannot talk about them and say that they can bring any new things to Africa.

Why? Because these are two men who came to power, not by the ballot, by the bullet. And if you look at it, these are people also who've been in power for long. Meles, he died in power. So the whole thing is wrong with the picture.

These are two men who came to power, not by the ballot, by the bullet.

Like they were talking about development democracy. Where is the democracy? Ethiopia is a country that, in just the election they had in May this year, the government won by 100 percent.

KPFA/Ann Garrison: I remember that. They won every single seat in Parliament. Now, are you saying that both these governments are minority dictatorships: Rwanda, dictatorship by the 14 percent Tutsi minority and Ethiopian dictatorship by the 6 percent Tigrean minority?

OM: Yes, yes, in Ethiopia the 6 percent is the Tigrean ethnic group.

KPFA: It seems that the United States military partnerships with Rwanda and Ethiopia, based on Rwanda and Ethiopia's willingness to cooperate with American forces, insulates both regimes against criticism from the West.

OM: Correct. Correct. Yeah, because if you look at it now, Obama went to Ethiopia last month. When he was in Ethiopia, the speech he gave was that Ethiopia had the top soldiers. He went there for a specific reason. He said Ehtiopia had the top soldiers.

So, in other words, instead of sending the Marines over to die in Somalie to fight Al-Shabab or to fight these which they call the terrorists, actually they send the Ethiopians there, pretty much like a contract. So, in the name of security, the Ethiopians work for the West for what they call War on Terror, but these people are actually known for terrorizing their own peoples.

So for that, the Ethiopian government, the ruling ethnic apartheid regime in Ethiopia that terrorizes their own people, they are not being criticized because they are the darling of the West. They're pretty much that from Bush till Obama. Anything that the West will ask of them, they will do that.

In the name of security, the Ethiopians work for the West for what they call War Terror, but these people are actually known for terrorizing their own peoples.

And the hypocrisy, what Obama did when he went there! He called the Ethiopian government a democratically elected government. There's no way – 100 percent – you know a group can't win an election by 100 percent. There's no way they can be democratic.

And then Obama called Burundi, the election there, illegitimate or not credible. Which one is that? The one that claims to win by 67 percent, or the one that claims to win 100 percent?

So my point is the Ethiopians, because of the so-called War on Terror, the regime has not been criticized in the West, not even by the media.

But in the long run, this thing will explode. So this kind of thing, where you side with a dictator and exclude the people, that will sooner or later haunt. If violence erupts in Ethiopia, and Ethiopians kill each other, that will be the legacy of Obama. There's no doubt about it, because he's the one who has supported this group that has isolated itself from Ethiopians.

So this kind of thing, where you side with a dictator and exclude the people, that will sooner or later haunt.

KPFA: That was Washington D.C.-based Ethiopian activist Obang Metho.

For Pacifica, KPFA and AfrobeatRadio, I'm Ann Garrison.

Oakland writer Ann Garrison writes for the San Francisco Bay View, Black Agenda Report, Black Star News,Counterpunch and her own website, Ann Garrison, and produces for AfrobeatRadio on WBAI-NYC, KPFA Evening News, KPFA Flashpoints and for her own YouTube Channel, AnnieGetYourGang. She can be reached at anniegarrison@gmail.com. In March 2014 she was awarded the Victoire Ingabire Umuhoza Democracy and Peace Prize for promoting peace in the Great Lakes Region of Africa through her Reporting (text ends).

What screams "I'm Rwandan"?

Innocent Ingabire

Lives in Kigali, Rwanda (2015–present)2y

I do not know why but I started laughing when I read this question. Can someone look at a stranger and deduce if she/he is Rwandan? My answer is YES. Few things loudly scream "I'm Rwandan":

You find it awkward to eat in Public

Rule: Do not walk and eat

It is not a norm but a custom: We do not eat in public. There is no street food and we will stay hungry until we find a nice place where we can sit and eat our lunch. I have always found it awkward to eat at a place when other people are not eating. I might walk for a mile to find a place where I can sit and eat the food I brought from home instead of eating in the class when other people are not eating. Do you know what foreigners do at my school? They just eat wherever they are but Rwandans do not.

Physicality

Rwandan girls are not generally fat but curvy (hourglass figure). Rwandan men are tall, fit but not muscular and they are likely to have a forehead. I am not good at describing figures but Rwandans will know that you are Rwandan based on your physicalities. Just google Rwandan girls and you will see they look alike, they have all things in common.

Seats in the empty rows are taken first on the bus.

This picture is close

If there are five people on the bus and it has five rows of seats; they will arrange themselves in a way that every row has one person. That is not the rule but It is what happens anyway. They will not sit next to you if there is an empty row of seats.

They rarely start conversations

I am in the bus and you come to sit next to me? I will say Hi and you respond but we are likely to stay quiet until one leaves the bus.

We are two at the bus station waiting for the bus? We will awkwardly stand next to each other and we might not talk for an hour (I hate it though).

We stare at people we find attractive

You are walking the streets, see a cute girl you had not met before who is going towards you and you say Hi when she gets closer. You say a pick-up line and you ask for the number. That is what happens in the movies, Rwandans have another strategy:

Your eyes say she is beautiful and your heart confirms before she passes you. Your mind starts thinking all could happen if you happen to be together and your blood pressure increases. You look at her for longer and you make eye contact. Do you know what happens when she is attracted to you? Staring contest.

As horrible as it sounds, We do not usually pick other people on the street. You meet them at the parties, coffee shops, libraries and some other places.

That is all I could think of.

With Love,

Innocent Ingabire

Didier Champion

.

Follow

Lived in Kigali, Rwanda2y

This one is particularly true for Rwandans abroad.

Showing the love for their country, miles away from their homeland. It might be from wearing clothes with Rwandan flag, or simply staying connected to Rwanda by culture, speaking Kinyarwanda (our native language), promoting MadeInRW products such as coffee, tea, and many more.

Taking the Rwandan pride everywhere and share with the world.

Getting connected with Rwandans wherever one lands through social media.

You are certainly Rwandan if you can dance like this.

Rwandan Traditional dance for men and women.

Follow Rwanda Today to learn more.

Didier Champion

Related Links

What screams "I'm Ugandan"?

What screams "I'm Sudanese"?

How do Rwandans who did the Rwandan massacre today explain what they did?

What exactly was the rwandan genocide?

What is it like to live in Rwanda?

Why do some Rwandans look like Ethiopians?

Did the civilian tutsis inside Rwanda try to fight back at all?

What screams "I'm from Laos"?

What do the people of Rwanda think of Kagame as their leader ? (Both Tutsis and Hutus)

What screams "I'm Middle Eastern"?

News Nigeria

RWANDAN SOLDIERS CAPTURED BY CONGO RELEASED AS TENSIONS ESCALATE

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

Jun 5

Tension between Kigali & Kinshasa are high with each country pointing a finger at another & accusing each other of sponsoring instability in the region. This comes after Rwanda accused DRC of firing rockets into its territory and said two of its soldiers have been captured while on regular border Patrol by FDLR a group labeled a terrorists by Rwandan government while Congolese officials claim the two soldiers were fighting for M23 a rebel group opposed to the government in Kinshasa.

Angolan President Joao Lorenzo has mediated to de-escalate the diplomatic row between the two after Rwandan Foreign Ministers said Rwanda won't sit idle while Congo attacks its territory. Congo has since released the two captured soldiers back to Rwanda.

CPJ joins call for Commonwealth leaders to urge Rwanda to res rights

The Rwanda Convention Centre Bureau is seen in Kigali on November 2, 2021. Ahead of the country's hosting of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting, CPJ called on Commonwealth leaders to urge Rwanda to respect human rights. (AFP/Simon Maina)

On June 10, the Committee to Protect Journalists joined 23 other civil society organizations in a letter expressing "grave concerns" about the human rights situation in Rwanda ahea d of the June 20 start of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting, where leaders of Commonwealth nations will meet in the country.

The organizations note that there have been "relentless harassment, attacks, and threats" against civil society groups and the media in Rwanda, and call on

Commonwealth leaders to urge Rwandan authorities to take concrete measures to respect human rights, including by releasing detained journalists and creating an “enabling environment for activists, bloggers and journalists to freely express their views.”

The letter also says the Rwandan media should be allowed to freely cover the CHOGM, and to raise human rights concerns without reprisal.

CPJ’s most recent prison census, a snapshot of journalists detained as of December 1, 2021, showed that Rwanda was one of the worst jailers of journalists in Africa, with at least seven behind bars.

The full letter can be read in English and in French.

Why is the United Kingdom's plan to send asylum seekers to Rwanda drawing so much criticism?

Harv Setterfield

Developer at Roughpaws StudioApr 16

Because bleeding heart liberals are having a nervous breakdown over it. Australia has done the same thing for years and it broke the people traffickers’ business model.

Personally I'm more than happy that a UK government is FINALLY doing SOMETHING to address the issue and will sit back for a while and see if the idea is working.

Denmark have been doing the same thing too since last year.

And for all of the people in this thread wringing their hands and are about to have a nervous breakdown over this I'd like to ask a question:

Can you suggest a decent alternative that isn't ‘just let EVERYBODY in the country regardless’ or ‘keep things exactly the same as they were before’..?

It's time to put up or shut up. If you have an issue with this then suggest a viable alternative.

Put up. Or shut up. Simple as that.

Related Links

The UK Govt now proposes to send asylum seekers to Rwanda. Priti Patel challenges critics of this policy to "Show their (alternative) proposals." My question is: Is it disingenuous to respond to criticism in those terms?

Is it a good idea for the United Kingdom to send asylum seekers to Rwanda?

The UK plans to deport undocumented asylum seekers to Rwanda, regardless of country of origin. Is this move ok for UK interest?

Are the UK's plans to relocate asylum seekers to Rwanda immoral?

What do the British public think of the government's plan to send asylum seekers to Rwanda?

Should MPs support the UK government's plan to send asylum seekers to Rwanda?

What are the benefits for Rwanda with the UK sending refugees and asylum seekers there?

Why is the UK shipping asylum seekers to Rwanda for 'processing'?

The UK is planning to send asylum seekers to Rwanda. Is this a good or bad idea?

What does the British government stand to gain from sending asylum seekers to

Charles to meet survivors and perpetrators of Rwanda genocide before CHOGM

Tony Jones - Yesterday 6:45 PM

he Prince of Wales will spend his first full day in Rwanda meeting survivors and perpetrators of the country's 1994 genocide, prior to attending a summit of Commonwealth leaders.

© PA WirePrince of Wales visit to Rwanda

Charles has been encouraged by former Rwandan footballer Eric Murangwa to visit a church outside the Rwandan capital where the remains of tens of thousands of genocide victims are buried.

Mr Murangwa was sheltered from the killings by teammates, and Charles made him an MBE in recognition of his efforts raising awareness of the genocide against the Tutsi. He is the founder of the organisation Football for Hope, Peace and Unity.

In April, Mr Murangwa was invited to watch as the prince planted a tree at Dumfries House in commemoration of the genocide victims.

In 1994 hundreds of thousands of members of the Tutsi community were slaughtered in Rwanda by ethnic Hutu extremists. The issue of genocide and reconciliation is said to be very close to the prince's heart and he will visit a village that was targeted.

Related video: Charles 'described Government's Rwanda migrant policy as appalling' (Daily Record)

Charles and Camilla in Rwanda for Commonwealth talks

The Prince of Wales and the Duchess of Cornwall have arrived in Rwanda ahead of a summit of Commonwealth leaders.

© PA MediaThe Prince of Wales and the Duchess of Cornwall have arrived in Rwanda ahead of a meeting of Commonwealth leaders

Prince Charles is representing the Queen, the head of the Commonwealth, at the event, which was postponed in 2021 and 2020 because of the pandemic.

The trip marks the first royal visit to Rwanda, which is one of a minority of nations the Queen has not visited.

It comes after it was reported that the prince privately criticised the UK's plan to send asylum seekers to Rwanda.

According to claims reported in the Times earlier this month, the heir to the throne was said to believe the policy was "appalling".

The first flight due to take asylum seekers from the UK to Rwanda was cancelled last week, minutes before take-off, following legal rulings by Europe's human rights court.

Prince Charles and Camilla arrived in Rwanda's capital, Kigali, on Tuesday night and were greeted by a small group of dignitaries.

Among those greeting the royal couple at the steps of the plane were the UK's High Commissioner to Rwanda, Omar Daair, Rwanda's High Commissioner to the UK, Johnton Busingye, special adviser Yamina Karitanyi and the prime minister's special representative on the Commonwealth, Lord Ahmad.

Ahead of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Chogm), Prince Charles said the partnership had the "potential" to make a difference on issues like climate change and providing opportunities for young people.

The Commonwealth can be "an unparalleled force for good in our world", he said.

© PA MediaSpecial adviser ambassador Yamina Kritanyi greeted the Prince of Wales and the Duchess of Cornwall

During the visit, the heir to the throne will meet survivors and perpetrators of the Rwandan Genocide.

In 1994, ethnic Hindu extremists slaughtered hundreds of thousands of members of the Tutsi community.

Encouraged by a former Rwandan footballer, Prince Charles will visit a church outside the capital where the remains of genocide victims are buried.

Eric Murangwa, the founder of the organisation Football For Hope, Peace And Unity, was sheltered from the killings by teammates and the Prince of Wales made him an MBE in recognition of his efforts raising awareness of the genocide against the Tutsi.

Prince Charles last represented the Queen at Chogm in Sri Lanka in 2013, and in 2018 he was appointed the monarch's designated successor as head of the Commonwealth.

The event is usually held in a different country every two years.

Deutsch Welle
Fact check: Just how safe is Rwanda for migrants?

ritain has struck a deal to deport undocumented migrants to Rwanda. British Prime Minister Boris John claims the East African country is one of the world's safest, with a track record of welcoming immigrants.

Britain has seen a sharp influx of migrants crossing the English Channel from France in recent years. Whereas in 2020 just over 8,000 made the crossing in small boats, last year that figure jumped to more that 28,000. British officials expect this year's figures to exceed 2021 numbers by far.

In a bid to deter people from crossing the Channel while simultaneously cracking down on human traffickers, Britain signed a deal to deport undocumented migrants to the East African country of Rwanda this April. Rather than coming to Britain, migrants are encouraged to apply for asylum, then settle and build new lives in Rwanda. In return, the British government has promised to pay £120 million ($157 million, €144 million) for Rwanda to integrate the new arrivals.

© Tayfun Salci/Zuma/picture allianceBritish Prime Minister Boris Johnson has praised and defended the Rwanda deal

A first plane with deportees was scheduled to leave Britain for Rwanda on June 14. A last-minute injunction by the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR), however, grounded the flight. But British Interior Minister Priti Patel has said the government will stick to the resettlement plan and schedule new deportation flights.

Claim: Prime Minister Johnson has praised the scheme, lauding Rwanda as "one of the safest countries in the world, globally recognized for its record of welcoming and integrating migrants."

DW Fact check: Misleading.

Political plurality

Rwanda has been touted as a poster child of development on the African continent due to its stability and economic growth. Its constitution guarantees the right to freely join political organizations, and protects Rwandans from discrimination on grounds of membership, or non-membership, in such organizations. It also states that "Freedom of press, of expression and of access to information are recognized and guaranteed by the State."
Yet Freedom House, a respected US nongovernmental organization (NGO) ranking political rights and civil liberties across the world, says Rwanda has "suppressed political dissent though pervasive surveillance, intimidation, torture, and renditions or suspected assassinations of exiled dissidents." It classifies Rwanda as "not free." A DW report lists over a dozen politicians, journalists and other figures who were killed, or have disappeared, in recent years after speaking out against long-time President Kagame or his ruling Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF). Similarly, a report by NGO Human Rights Watch finds that judicial authorities in Rwanda "are prosecuting opposition members, journalists, and commentators on the basis of their speech and opinions."

© Victoria Jones/empics/picture allianceDeported migrants were supposed to be hosted in Kigali's Hope Hostel

The country is evidently unsafe for individuals who express opinions that challenge or criticize Rwandan authorities. British deportees would be ill-advised to speak out against the Rwandan government.

LGBT people

Rwanda's constitution bars discrimination based on "ethnic origin, tribe, clan, colour, sex, region, social origin, religion or faith, opinion, economic status, culture, language, social status, physical or mental disability." And Rwandan President Paul Kagame in 2016 said LGBT (lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender) people living in Rwanda have not been a problem, "and we don't intend to make it a problem." The country also supports a raft of international conventions and statements affirming LGBT rights.

That said, many LGBT people report experiencing stigmatization and discrimination in Rwandan society. Human Rights Watch has documented several cases of LGBT people being rounded-up and arbitrarily detained ahead of major conferences in Rwanda. Most recently, LGBT people were taken off the streets and locked up prior to the planned but ultimately postponed June 2021 Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting. Human Rights Watch learned that detainees who identified as gay or transgender were mistreated and beaten.

Indeed, Britain's very own government travel advice page warns that in Rwanda, "LGBT individuals can experience discrimination and abuse, including from local authorities."

While Rwanda is legally safe for LGBT people, reports from inside the country suggest otherwise.

Rwanda's track record on integrating migrants

While Rwanda has a history of hosting migrants, their treatment has varied.

In 2013, Israel and Rwanda struck a secretive deal to transfer Eritrean and Sudanese migrants to the east African country. The scheme remained in place until April 2018.

Evidence suggests Rwanda was reluctant or loathe to receive and integrate migrants sent from Israel. A 2018 Oxford University report, compiled on the basis of interviews conducted with Eritrean migrants, found they had their identity documents seized upon arrival in Rwanda. The researchers write that the individuals were then "transferred to a guarded hotel and were prevented, under threat, from leaving." They also write that none "were given the opportunity to apply for asylum."

Those findings are corroborated by a report published in Israeli daily Haartez that same year, which found Rwandan authorities had not recognized migrants' right to be in the country and refused to issue residency permits to them. Without documents, the report finds, migrants were frequently "arrested and jailed." Many migrants later left Rwanda, eventually making their way to Europe, where they claimed asylum.

More recently, Rwanda agreed to take in scores of migrants stranded in squalid Libyan detention centers as part of a UN-African Union deal. They are under direct care of the UN and will be relocated to third countries. No reports of mistreatment or poor conditions have so far emerged in this context.

Author: Benjamin Restle

Can you see a difference between Africans?

Gamadiid Buraale

lifelong student of history and societiesUpdated 3y

I can, much of the time, and most people would be able to see these differences as well as they learn more about Africa and Africans.

For example, there are many different distinct peoples. There are variances even within each group but these features are also true for many in these groups.

Rwandans

Many Rwandans tend to be tall, fine-boned, and regal in appearance.

Photo of Rwandan women

Khoisan

They are a people that live in Namibia, Botswana, Angola, Zambia, Lesotho, Zimbabwe, and South Africa. They tend to have epicanthic folds, almond-shaped eyes, lighter skin, high cheekbones, and shorter stature. They are sometimes said to resemble East Asians. They speak languages that belong to the Khoisan language family that is now said to be an invalid grouping as Khoisan languages are more diverse than previously believed. They are believed to have originated in East Africa, later migrated further south.

Photo of a Khoisan individual

Khoisan mother and child

Nilotic

Nilotes are peoples who speak Nilotic languages (a branch of the NiloSaharan language family) that originated in the Nile Valley. They predominantly live in South Sudan, Kenya, and Uganda. They tend to be the tallest group in Africa (particularly the Dinka) and are a stately people with deep skin tones, soft and rounded features, long and slender limbs, and almond-shaped eyes.

The Maasai, however, can tend to have sharper facial features as a result of mixing with neighbouring Cushitic peoples. Most photos of Africans people will see are often of Maasai people.

Dinka supermodel Ajak Deng

Maasai women in Kenya

Bantu peoples

When people think of Africans, they often think of Bantu peoples. Swahili is probably the most well-known African language outside of Africa, and it is a Bantu language. Bantu languages are a branch of the Niger-Congo language family. They originated in West Africa (Cameroon).

Although Bantu peoples are a related group of peoples, they can vary in appearance, especially those that have mixed with neighbouring non-Bantu peoples, such as some Rwandans and Xhosas, however these are generalizations that sometimes signify Bantu ancestry.

They are the most widespread group in Africa, living in the general southern region of the continent.

Map showiing Guthrie's Bantu zones which includes parts of West Africa, Central Africa, Southeast Africa, and South Africa.

However, for the most part, many are about average in height to a bit shorter in stature than average. They also have wider features and a more robust build than neighbouring Khoisans, Cushites, or Pygmies.

Mucubal woman from southern Angola

Horn of Africa

The Horn of Africa is Somalia, Djibouti, Ethiopia, and Eritrea. The majority of people of this region are of Cushitic stock and speak Afro-Asiatic languages.

Despite misconceptions about these peoples, they are not mixed. They originated in the Horn of Africa, thus an ancient group indigenous to the area.

They tend to be tall, slender, with aquiline features, and often have curly to wavy hair textures.

Somali woman

Afar woman of Danakil

Pygmy peoples

They mainly inhabit Central Africa and Cameroon and are distinct for their short stature. They are known to be a peaceful, shy, and nature-loving people.

Pygmy men pictured with a non-Pygmy man

Pygmy child

Fulani people

The Fulani speak Fula languages, a branch of the Niger-Congo language family. They live in the Sahelian region of West and Central Africa.

Their appearance can be said to be somewhat of an intermediate between that of Chadic peoples, neighbouring Niger-Congo peoples, and sometimes Tuaregs.

They have distinct cultural garments, makeup, and hairstyles that instantly reveal their Fulani background.

Wodaabe girl in Niger

Fulani girl from Guinea

Related Links

In terms of physical appearance, what is the difference between East Africans and West Africans?

What is the difference between West and East Africa?

What is the difference between West Africans and Bantu people?

Why are East African women so beautiful?

Why do people assume East Africans are mixed?

How do you tell African ethnicities apart?

Why is West African hair different from African Americans hair?

What are some differences between the various African cultures?

Why are East Africans darker than West Africans?

What distinctions can be made among West Africans, Central Africans, Southern Africans, North Africa

Can you share a cute wild baby animal?

Journey into the Wild

Answered by

Victoria Ng

Jun 19
Two exceptional baby gorillas in the loving arms of their mother! So precious!
pinterest

Related Links

How do you tell if your dog is a coydog?

Can you share a picture of a rainbow in nature?

What are your favorite berries to pick in nature?

What is the most dangerous cave in nature that you know about?

Can you share a colorful snail/slug?

Can you share a cute wild baby animal?

What is one of your favorite winged animals?

What is your animal fun fact of the Day?

Can you share a beautiful picture of an island?

Can you share some native art?

Are there dangerous animals and insects in Japan?

Can you share pixel art of something involving nature?

What wild animal has the most interesting fur markings?

Can you share a picture of a thunderstorm?

Can you fish without bait?

SAO TOME & PRINCIPE

National Flag and Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT BRIEFLY HIGHLIGHTS: Diaries updates, key events, brief analysis and relating news articles in timeline

Overview

Sao Tome and Principe is a Portuguese-speaking island nation consisting of two islands; Sao Tome and Principe, off the north-western coast of Gabon.It was colonized by the Portuguese in the late fifteenth century and were used in the trade and transshipment of manpower (slaves), until slavery officially abolished in 1875. Sao Tomé & Principe was part of Portugal's African possessions for over 500 years.

São Tomé & Principe: The second smallest country in Africa.

Slave Trade & The Portuguese Slave Trading in the 16th, 17th, and 19th Century (By African History Expert) The island of São Tomé was discovered by the Portuguese in 1472 - part of the expanding European search for a route to the East, a source of suitable land to colonize for wheat, vine and sugar production, and access to the legendary gold mines of West Africa. In 1493 Avaro Caminha was granted the right to create a settlement on São Tomé (and begin plantations) by the Portuguese crown. In 1522, São Tomé came under direct Portuguese administration.

A Need For Workers

Initially settled by Portuguese overseers and convict laborers, São Tomé's climate proved unsuitable for European workers and an alternative workforce was needed. As the Portuguese extended their reach along the West African coast, they came into contact with Islamic slave traders who bought slaves in West African for their trans-Saharan market. Although the Portuguese at that time were predominantly interested in trading textiles, horses, tools, wine, and copper for gold, pepper, and ivory, a small but significant market developed for African slaves for São Tomé (as well as the other newly discovered islands along Africa's Atlantic coast: Madeira, the Canary Islands, and Cape Verde Islands).

Selling to the Islamic Slave Trade

During the first 15 years of the sixteenth century, slave exports to these islands totaled around 2,500 a year. From 1516 to 1521 the number of slaves transported rose to around 5,400 per year. This wasn't, however, due to an increased demand for slaves on the various plantation islands - it was the result of a developing slave trade from the Kingdom of Kongo, further down the Atlantic coast, and the discovery that a profit could be made selling slaves to the Islamic traders along Africa's Gold Coast.

São Tomé became a transit point for traders taking slaves from the Kongo for sale in the Gold Coast and to the other Portuguese plantation islands (a few hundred each year were even taken back to Portugal itself). Between 1510 and 1540, four to six slave ships continually transported slaves from São Tomé to the Gold Coast. The smaller caravels could carry 30 to 80 slaves; the larger vessels could carry between 100 to 120 slaves at a time.

The Portuguese had reached the Congo estuary in 1482. In 1489 the Kingdom of Kongo ruler, Manikongo (Nzinga Nkuma), formed a trading agreement with them, and missionaries and artisans were sent out from Portugal. These carpenters, masons, stock-breeders, etc., were heavily involved in the re-development of the Kongolese capital, previously known as Mbanza Kongo, which was now renamed São Salvador.

The Kingdom of Kongo

Manikongo was succeeded by his son Alfonso (Nzinga Mbemba), who ruled from 1506 to 1543. He modeled his court after that of Lisbon (creating Dukes, Marquises, and Counts, mostly from family members). Members of his royal court wore European dress. The Kongo court spent a considerable fortune importing fabric, wine, and luxury items, the money obtained from the sale of slaves and minerals. Slaves were obtained by Alfonso through border skirmishes with the Loango (to the north), Ndongo (to the south), and Mbangala (further inland), and through tribute collections. Although the Portuguese showed considerable interest in the Kongolese mining operations, Alfonso managed to maintain a monopoly on production.

Although the Portuguese tried to restrict the Kongo's access to other markets (the Gold Coast and even Europe itself) by refusing to sell him ships, the Kingdom of Kongo maintained a small maritime presence at the port of Mpinda. King Alfonso even 'owned' a couple of plantations on the island of São Tomé, operated by two members of the royal household.

Slave exports to the Americas began in the 1530s, and by 1550 the majority of the passing trade was destined for the Spanish Caribbean. The trans-Atlantic trade from São Tomé continued until the last quarter of the sixteenth century when it suddenly went into a rapid decline. By the end of the sixteenth century, except for slaves for the island's plantations, São Tomé was used only for ship repairs and provisions.

Economic Downturn

Three events had caused the downturn in São Tomé's prominence: the newly created sugar plantations in the Caribbean were much more productive, the Kingdom of Kongo was invaded twice (by the Tio in 1566-7, and by the Jaga in 1571-73) and had to be bailed out by the Portuguese military, and the Portuguese had come to far more beneficial terms with the Ndogo to the south. In 1576 the Portuguese shifted their attention to the newly formed post of St Paul de Luanda, and this became the primary Portuguese shipping port to the Americas.

Importance of Cash Crops

In the mid-1800s, after a lull of two centuries, the island of São Tomé once again blossomed - sugar-cane was replaced by new crops of cocoa and coffee. At the beginning of the nineteenth century, the abolitionist movement succeeded in halting the export of slaves to the Americas. Some European countries, however, successfully circumvented the legislation by 'hiring' contract laborers - the French and Portuguese were the worse offenders.

The Portuguese called these laborers libertos, serviçaes, livres, or ingnéuous, and while the contracts technically ranged from five to seven years, in reality they were bought and sold, and the contracts lengthened without consent. The libertos were, effectively, slaves.

The End of the Slave Trade

The British, who had exported by far the largest number of slaves in the previous century, expressed righteous indignation - but their bluster was not equaled by their ability to catch and prosecute the offenders. Only 10 contract laborers were allowed, by decree, to be transported at a time - the Portuguese regularly transported a hundred each trip. By the 1860s over 1,000 libertos a year were being carried to the islands of São Tomé and Principé. Very few of those transported ever returned to the mainland once their contracts had 'expired'.

Contrary to popular belief, the total number of slaves exported from São Tomé to the Caribbean in the mid-sixteenth century (when the trans-Atlantic trade operated on the island) is almost equal to the total number transported for sale along the Gold Coast in the beginning of the sixteenth century. If you take into account the libertos sent to work on the island in the nineteenth century, less than half the slaves shipped to São Tomé were actually sent on the trans-Atlantic route. The majority of Portuguese slaves shipped to the Americas went direct from continental Africa, and especially from their base at Luanda.

Main Sources

Transformations in Slavery by Paul E. Lovejoy, Cambridge University Press, 2000, ISBN 0-521-78430-1 Africa from the Twelfth to the Sixteenth Century, UNESCO General History of Africa, Vol. IV, edited by J Ki-Zerbo and D T Niane, James Currey, 1997, ISBN 0-85255-094-4.

Africa from the Sixteenth to the Eighteenth Century, UNESCO General History of Africa, Vol. V, edited by B A Ogot, James Currey, 1999, ISBN 0-85255-095-2.

The New Atlas of African History by G S P Freeman-Grenville, Simon and Schuster,

It was developed as a plantation economy, initially for sugar and later for cocoa, taking advantage of its fertile volcanic soils. By 1908, Sao Tomé had become the largest producer of cocoa in the world. Uninhabited when the first Portuguese settlers came, the islands were populated by the introduction of slave labour from Angola and neighbouring countries. Following the abolition of slavery in 1876, Portugal used forced contract labour from its other African colonies to work on the plantations. The makeup of the country's population reflects that history: many are mixed-blood or mestico, while others are direct descendants of African slaves. The population had agitated for independence from Portugal from 1960, mainly through the activities of the Movement for the Liberation of Sao Tomé and Principe (originally known as CLSTP in 1960, becoming MLSTP in 1972). But it was not until a military coup in Portugal in 1974 that the principle of independence was conceded. A transitional government was set up, elections were held for a 16-member constituent assembly (for which all seats were won by the MLSTP) leading to independence on 12 July 1975.

The constitution subsequently adopted in November 1975 vested absolute authority in the President and the Political Bureau of the MLSTP. Radical socialist policies were introduced, all land and property was nationalised, and the economy was run on central planning doctrine. These hard-line policies soon produced splits in the Party forcing a number of moderate politicians into exile. Two alleged coup attempts in 1978 and 1980, involving exiles, further underlined the ideological and personal divisions within the ruling party. In the late 1980s, the MLSTP changed direction, initiating a series of economic reforms together with liberalisation within the Party itself. This paved the way for the return of the exiles. But there were further coup attempts in 1995 and 2003, the latter over disagreements concerning the government's handling of oil exploration licensing.

Sao Tome and Principe is the second-smallest African country in terms of population next to Seychelles.

Sao Tome & Principe gained it's independence from Portugal in July, 1975.

Headship since independence; Head of State

The Sao Tome & Principe consists of the islands of Principe and Sao Tome, those were colonized by the Portuguese until the islands became an overseas territory of Portugal in 1951, achieves independence in 12th of July, 1975 with Mr. Manuel Pinto Da Costa it's founder-president, he was the president of Sao Tome & Principe from the country's independence until political reforms were instituted in early 1990's, and culminated in the establishment of a multi-party democracy when the constitution ammended in December, 1991, who he then succeeded by Mr. Miguel Trovoaada a former prime minister since July, 1975 until March, 1979.

A recent discovery of Oil in the gulf of Guinea promises to attract increased attention to the small island nation.

A Republic in the gulf of Guinea off-West coast of Africa on the Equator.

It was colonized by the Portuguese in the late fifteenth century and were used in the trade and transshipment of manpower (slaves), but slavery officially abolished in 1875. The Sao Tome & Principe consists of the islands of Principe and Sao Tome, those were colonized by the Portuguese until the islands became an overseas territory of Portugal in 1951 and achieved it's independence in 12th of July, 1975 with Mr. Manuel Pinto Da Costa it's Founder-president, he was the president of Sao Tome & Principe from the country's independence until political reforms were instituted in early 1990's, and culminated in the establishment of a multi-party democracy when the constitution ammended in December, 1991, who he then succeeded by Mr. Miguel Trovoaada a former prime minister since July, 1975 until March, 1979, he returned from exile to campaign & ran for the presidency, elected president unopposed in the first free elections of 1991 to 2001. In the country's history, two failed coup attempts were made in 1995 and 2003. In August, 1995, president Miguel Trovoaada was overthrown in a bloodless coup for a week period that orchestrated by the Army from 15th of August, 1995 to 21st of August, 1995. The Military ruling council who tookover power was headed by Lt. Colonel Manuel Quintas De Almeida who toppled Mr. Miguel Trovoaada, however, the coup leaders reconsidered to restore the government as it's term ending on the 3rd of September, 2001. Mr. Fradique Bandeira Melo de Menezes who sworn into office as head of state recently, was toppled earlier by a military coup d'etat led by Army Lt. colonel Fernando Pereira on the 16th of July, 2003 while he was in a visit to Nigeria, but after concession reached in the islands, he returned back to takeover power on the 23rd of July, 2003. It was the second failed coup event since Sao Tome & Principe gained it's independence from Portugal, law and order was restored by a politico-military intervention of the region's principal power, Nigeria. The recent discovery of Oil in the gulf of Guinea promises to attract increased attention to the small island nation.

Politics

Sao Tome’s embrace of democratic reform – the legalisation of opposition political parties (1990-1991) was nonviolent, free and transparent. The MO Ibrahim index on good governance lists Sao Tome and Principe among the top 10 in Africa. Sao Tome maintains close relations with other ex-Portuguese colonies in Africa, particularly Angola. Sao Tomean relations with other African countries in the region, such as Gabon and Congo-Brazzaville, are also good.

Economy

Geologists estimate that the Gulf of Guinea zone holds more than 10 billion barrels of oil, although no reserves have yet been proved. A joint oil project between Sao Tome and Principe and Nigeria has been underway since 2005. São Tomé is optimistic that significant petroleum discoveries under the exploration licence are forthcoming. With the development of Sao Tome's oil reserves, diplomatic and military ties with the USA have tightened. Relations with the USA since the development of oil have tightened. Sao Tome is one of the dwindling number of countries retaining diplomatic links with Taiwan. China retaliated by cutting off ties.

Major conflicts

Military Coup

When: July 2003

Who: The army seized power for one week

Why: Soldiers were complaining of corruption and that forthcoming oil revenues would not be divided fairly.

Outcome: An accord was negotiated under which President de Menezes was returned to office and guarantees of fairness given to the mutineers.

Side notes: Like twins, the two islands that comprise Sao Tome and Principe have to live together, but the sibling rivalry is intense, precluding even agreement on a national name that removes the need to include both. Fort Sao Sebastiao, built in 1575 and now the Sao Tome National Museum.

Accession to power of president Dr. Fradique Bandeira Melo De Menezes - 23th July, 2001 by election.

Tentative election calendar- Parliamentary, March.

Sao Tome & Principe – Timeline Diaries updates, and related key note:

16th century - Sao Tome colonised by the Portuguese, who bring in slaves to work sugar plantations. Becomes important staging post for slave trade.

1800s - Cocoa introduced. Sao Tome develops into one of world's main cocoa producers.

1951 - Becomes overseas province of Portugal.

1960 - Formation of nationalist group which later becomes the socialist oriented Movement for the Liberation of Sao Tome and Principe (MLSTP).

April 1974 - Military coup in Portugal. Portuguese government recognises islands' right to independence, acknowledges MLSTP as sole representative in negotiations. Unrest followed by exodus of Portuguese.

July 12, 1975 - Independence, with Manuel Pinto da Costa (MLSTP) as president; and Miguel Trovoada as prime minister. Plantations nationalised, strong ties built up with communist countries.

1978 - Government announces suppression of coup attempt, brings in Angolan troops for support.

1979 – Miguel Trovoada arrested, accused of complicity in coup attempt. He is released and goes into exile in 1981.

1980s - Government scales down links with communist world as economy deteriorates. Declares itself nonaligned, seeks Western support for recovery plans.

1988 – Military coup attempt.

1990 - New constitution allows opposition parties, provides for multi-party elections and restricts president to two five-year terms. Trovoada returns from exile.

1991 - First multiparty elections. Renamed MLSTP-PSD loses majority. Transitional government installed, pending presidential elections, subsequently won by independent candidate Trovoada.

1992 - Popular unrest sparked by austerity measures.

1994 - MLSTP-PSD regains power. Parliament grants Principe local autonomy.

1995 – Miguel Trovoada toppled and detained in bloodless coup by soldiers but is reinstated within days after pressure from donor countries.

1996 - Trovoada re-elected president. Popular protests over economic hardships.

1997 - Unrest over economic conditions.

Sao Tome establishes formal diplomatic relations with Taiwan at Trovoada's behest. The move is condemned by the government. China retaliates by suspending ties.

1998 - MLSTP-PSD wins general elections, Guilherme Posser da Costa appointed prime minister.

2000 - Civil servants strike to press for higher pay. Officials say country's external debt in 1998 amounted to US $270 million, more than five times the country's annual gross domestic product of around US $50 million.

2001 - Businessman Fradique de Menezes is declared the winner in the presidential election in July and is sworn into office in early September.

March 2002 - MLSTP narrowly wins parliamentary elections. De Menezes appoints Gabriel Costa as prime minister and both main political parties agree to form broad-based government.

August 2002 - President Fradique De Menezes announces plans for a US naval base in the country, which would aim to protect Sao Tome's oil interests.

October 2002 - President De Menezes names new government with Maria das Neves as premier. It replaces administration led by former prime minister Gabriel Costa, which was dismissed by De Menezes in September.

July 16, 2003 - Military coup topples the government. President De Menezes, in Nigeria at the time, returns to Sao Tome a week later after an agreement is struck with the junta. A general amnesty is given to the coup leaders.

October 2003 - Oil companies bid for offshore oil blocs controlled by Sao Tome and Nigeria. Bids are expected to generate hundreds of millions of dollars in licence money for Sao Tome.

March 2004 - Row between president, prime minister over control of oil deals threatens to topple government. Four cabinet ministers are replaced.

September 2004 - President De Menezes sacks the prime minister and government after a series of corruption scandals. A new prime minister is sworn in.

September 2004 - Parliament approves oil law designed to protect revenues from corruption.

February 2005 - Sao Tome - jointly with Nigeria - signs its first offshore oil exploration and production-sharing agreement with international oil firms.

June 2005 - Prime minister and government resign. Head of the central bank Maria do Carmo Silveira becomes the new premier.

March 2006 - Protests against poor living conditions disrupt parliamentary elections in some constituencies, delaying announcement of results. The president's Democratic Movement of Forces for Change (MDFM) is declared winner, taking 23 of the 55 seats in parliament.

March 2007 - World Bank, IMF forgive $360 million in debt owed by Sao Tome. This represents about 90% of the country's foreign debt.

Nigeria and Sao Tome agree to establish a joint military commission to protect their common oil interests in the Gulf of Guinea.

February 2008 - Opposition leader Patrice Trovoada becomes prime minister, but is dismissed in May after a no-confidence vote.

June 2008 - Rafael Branco, head of Sao Tome's second largest party, sworn in as prime minister at head of a new governing coalition.

December 2008 - Several high-ranking former government officials, including to ex-prime ministers, appear in court in Sao Tome's largest corruption scandal.

February 2009 - Government says coup plot foiled.

December 2009 - Nigeria and Sao Tome agree to set up a joint maritime military commission to protect offshore crude oil fields.

January 2010 - Opposition leader Arlecio Costa, jailed over February 2009 coup plot, is pardoned.

March 2010 - Sao Tome opens tenders for oil exploitation.

August 2010 - Opposition Independent Democratic Action (ADI) party wins parliamentary elections. Patrice Trovoada becomes premier.

August 2011 - Independence-era leader Manuel Pinto da Costa wins presidential election.

December 2012 - President Pinto da Costa dismisses Prime Minister Patrice Trovoada following a no-confidence vote in the national assembly

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location

In the gulf of Guinea about 128 miles off-West central Africa.

Official title of the state

Republica Democratica de Sao Tome e Principe (Nacional)

The Democratic Republic of Sao Tome & Principe: is a Portuguese-speaking (Lusophonie) island nation in the Gulf of Guinea, off the western equatorial coast of Central Africa.

Flag description.

Three horizontal bands of green (top), yellow (double width), and green with two black five-pointed stars placed side by side in the center of the yellow band and a red isosceles triangle based on the hoist side; green stands for the country's rich vegetation, red recalls the struggle for independence, and yellow represents cocoa, one of the country's main agricultural products; the two stars symbolize the two main islands. Note: uses the popular Pan-African colors of Ethiopia.

Neighbours

Nearest are Gabon & Equatorial Guinea on E.

Land boundaries; None

Founder of The Nation
Manuel Pinto Da Costa

Local division
2 Provinces /provincias/, Principe, Sao-Tome (self-rules), and 12 counties.
Government type

Republic - semi-presidential

Legislation chamber
Unicameral - National Assembly

Form of State
Republic

A multi-party republic with one legislative house. The National Assembly 55 seats, members are elected by popular vote to serve for four-year terms. President is the Head of State.

Executive branch

Power split by the President and the PM

Council of Ministers appointed by the President on proposal of Prime Minister, Unicameral Parliament. Separated by chief of State and head of Government. President elected by popular vote to serve for five-year, eligible for a second term. Head of Government is to be appointed by the president.

Former Rulers

1975 to 1991 – Manuel Pinto Da Costa

1991 to 2001 – Miguel Trovoada

September, 2001- Mr. Fradique Bandeira Melo de Menezes

Judicial chamber

Supreme Court

Capital city Sao tome Altitude 12 mtrs.

Geographic coordinates - 0.12N , 6.39E.

It's name came out of Portuguese name, meaning for "Saint Thomas", founded in 1485.

Names of main towns

Santo-Antonio (in Principe).

Date of independence

12 July, 1975.

Religions (Major)

Roman Catholic 70.3%, Evangelical 3.4%, New Apostolic 2%, Adventist 1.8%, other 3.1%, none 19.4%.

Main spoken languages

Portuguese (official), Forro, Angolar, Longwa (Sao-Tome), Principense widely spoken.

Currency unit

Sao Tome Dobra (STD) =100 centavos.

Area in Km2

964.00.

Country area comparison in Africa

54 out of 55 states.

Demographic terms ;-

Average annual population growth rate 2.112 %

Birth rate 39.09 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 8.45 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 62.73 years

Male 61.58 years ; Female 63.91 years;

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male: 7, Female: 17

Average per capita income

USD 1, 800

Population density

163.6

Urban population (%)

61

Contributor groups (%)

Farming, Fishing: 15, Industry: 14, Social service: 71

Main Export Items

Cocoa (80%), Copra, Coffee, Sugar, Bananas, Kernel, Palm oil

Economy is based on

Agriculture & fishery

Climate
Tropical; Hot & humid.

Extremes:

Lowest Loest point; The Atlantic coast 0 mtr.

Highest point; Pico de Sao tome 2,024 mtrs.

Weather of the Capital city (Sao Tome) average annual temperature Tropical.

Altitude
5 mtrs/16 ft

Hottest Month
March 23-31oc.

Coldest Month
July-August 21-28oc.

Driest Month
July 1mm average Rf.

Wettest Month
March 150mm average Rf.

Measures

Metric System

Time zone

1 hour behind GMT/UTC

Public holidays

All Roman Catholic holidays

Ethnic groups

African mixture /Mulattoes/, Africa, Potuguese minority i.e. Mesticos, Angolares (descendants of Angolan slaves), Forros (descendants of freed slaves), Servicais (contract labourers from Angola, Mozambique and Cape-Verdes), Tongas (children of servicais born on the islands), Europeans (mainly Portuguese).

Topographic & Environmental concern

Sao Tome & Principe islands part of an extinct volcanic mountains, are both covered by lush forests and croplands. Deforestation; soil erosion and exhaustion. Domestic food-crop production is inadequate to meet local consumption; so the country imports a good deal of its food. Coastal erosion due to sand extraction. Only 20% of the population has access to safe drinking water. Water treatment facilities are inadequate. Environment: deforestation; soil erosion and exhaustion

Economy Overview

Industry
Cocoa & Tourism

Small Scale Industry

Textiles manufacturing, construction, consumer goods processing, fish processing, timbering.

Chief crops

Cocoa (82% of exports), coconut products, cinnamon, pepper, palm kernels, coffee, bananas, papayas, beans : poultry, fish.

Natural resources

Fish, Hydro-power, off-shore Oil anticipated.

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 2

Grassland: 1

Forest woods: 0

Other: 97

Marine

Coastline; 209 km.

Commercial Sea ports:-

Sao Tome, Santo Antonio (in Principe)

Development prospect;-

The hope and the hype around São Tomé's potential oil reserves has now died down after first peaking in the mid-2000s. The oil sector would be announced as processing in couple of years.

Politicians are now fixing the country's economic hopes on the smallish cocoa sector and a budding tourism industry. São Tomé's cooperatives are not only competing on quantity, but are also partnering with Europe-based fairtrade firms to boost processing capacity and raise revenues.

In the coming months the government plans to offer a new telecoms licence and a contract to build a deep-sea port. The government is keen to attract investment from its larger Gulf of Guinea neighbours Nigeria and Angola. In January 2011, the São Toméan government awarded Angolan national oil company Sonangol a long-term management deal for the international airport and the port at Ana Chaves, giving the company an 80% stake in both. As part of the agreement, in addition to expanding port capacity, Sonangol will set up a free trade zone at the sea port. Plans for a container terminal at Fernão Dias, backed by the Terminal Link subsidiary of France's CMA CGM, have fallen flat due to problems in raising finance. The $570m project was initially agreed in 2008, but its backers now say it is unlikely that construction will start before 2015.

Oil majors have continued with little enthusiasm in their search for the estimated 11bn barrels of oil thought to be found around São Tomé's isles. The Joint Development Zone shared with Nigeria granted extensions to the Sinopec and Addax consortia until 2012 for their exploration activities on Blocks 2, 3 and 4. After buying Chevron's 45.9% stake in Block 1 in June 2010, France's Total and its partners have announced plans for a new drilling programme in the coming year.

It will be several more years before companies start exploratory drilling on licences in São Tomé's exclusive economic zone (EEZ) that were auctioned off by the government in 2010. In September, the government started talks with the smaller companies that took up EEZ acreage. Nigeria's Oranto Petroleum signed a production-sharing contract with the government in October on EEZ Block 3 and was followed by Equator Exploration on Blocks 5 and 12. US-based EHRC, which controls 100% of Blocks 4 and 11, was due to follow suit at the end of the year.

Donors warn that the government may again accumulate high levels of debt due to its spending needs and weak revenue base. The IMF and donor partners have encouraged the government to reform the loss-making energy parastatal and to seek more investment in agriculture, fisheries and tourism in order to boost revenue.

SENEGAL

National Flag and Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT BRIEFLY HIGHLIGHTS: Diaries updates, key events, brief analysis and relating news articles in timeline

Overview

First it was explored by the Portuguese in 1445 and in 1638 the French established a trading post around in exportation of Gold, slaves & ivories, during the period several hundred thousands of Africans have died as a result of being inslaved to the west or who were caught up in the violence and chaos unleashed as their communities suffered destruction during the raids by slaving European gangs. The areas of Senegal around Dakar and St Louis, colonised in the 1840s, were the earliest parts of the formal French empire in sub-Saharan Africa. Dakar was the capital of French West Africa from the early 1900s. Some Africans from this region were granted full French citizenship, and a handful of individuals became prominent in French public life, such as Blaise

Diagne and Leopold Sedar Senghor, both members of the French parliament in the colonial period. On independence in 1960, Senghor became the country's first President. Famous for his intellectual and literary achievements, his rule was peaceful and largely benevolent, although the country was a one party state from 1966 until multiparty democracy was introduced in 1974. In 1980 Senghor retired, handing the presidency to his Prime Minister Abdou Diouf, who subsequently confirmed his position by winning presidential elections in 1983 and again in 1988.

The presidential elections of 1988 were marred by allegations of fraud and followed by serious rioting. Opposition leaders were tried for incitement to violence, and some, including the veteran opposition leader Abdoulaye Wade, were convicted. The Socialist Party (PS) won legislative elections in 1993 and 1998 and President Diouf was re-elected in 1993. However, with the economy declining in the 1990s and with a series of splits within the PS, the party's old aura of invincibility began to fade.

Until independence on August 20, 1960, Senegal was part of the Mali Federation of French-West Africa. The founder-president of the republic was Mr. Leopold Sedar Senghor, Senegal was ruled by a socialist party for over fourty years under the late ex-president.

Headship since independence; Head of State

It's first president Leopold Sedar Senghor voluntarily resigned on the 31st of December, 1980.

In 1962, a new constitution was adopted from the previous parliamentary system to a presidential one. And Mr. Abdou Diouf, replaced him as president when the nomination comes.

On the 31st of December, 1980 the founder-president of the republic Mr. Leopold Sedar Senghor voluntarily resigned. And Mr. Abdou Diouf replaced Mr. Sedar Seghor as the nomination comes to him.

Maitre Abdoulaye Wade replaced, the second president Abdou Diouf who served two terms in office, after unsuccessfully vying for the presidency for almost twenty two years, and reelected in February, 2007 since he elected in 2000.

On 20th of December, 2001 the self-exiled ex-President Leopold Sedar Senghor passed away at age 91 in France. The late Mr. Leopold Sedar Senghor wrote a number of books, essays and poems, that have earned him an established literary prestige.

In 4th April, 2012 after 12 years in power, Maitre Abdoulaye Wade finally bowed out following defeat by his protégé and former prime minister, Macky Sall, in a run-off vote.

A Republic in West Africa on the Atlantic.

First it was explored by the Portuguese in 1445 and in 1638 the French established a trading post around in exportation of Gold, slaves & ivories, during the period several hundred thousands of Africans have died as a result of being inslaved to the west or who were caught up in the violence and chaos unleashed as their communities suffered destruction during the raids by slaving European gangs. The weight of suffering must have been unbearable- families had traumatised and torn asunder, community bonds have shattered, trust between peoples broken for forever.The French gained control over the area and made it part of French West Africa in 1895, it's inhabitants were made French citizens in 1946 when it became an overseas territory of France. Became an autonomous republic in 1958 merging with the French Sudan (formerly Mali) and granted their independence as the Mali-Federation in April, 1960, the union broke-up after only few months. The founder-president of the republic was Mr. Leopold Sedar Senghor, Senegal was ruled by a socialist party for nearly fourty years under the late ex-president. It's first president Leopold Sedar Senghor voluntarily resigned on the 31st of December, 1980. And Mr. Abdou Diouf, replaced him as president when the nomination comes. Mr. Leopold Sedar Senghor wrote a number of books, essays and poems, that have earned him an established literary prestige, until he passed away on the 20th of December, 2001 in France, where he self-exiled.

The current president Maitre Abdoulaye Wade elected, replaced the second president who served two terms in office until 2000. And reelected in February, 2007 Since he came to power in 2000, after unsuccessfully vying for the presidency for almost twenty two years, Maitre Abdoulaye Wade has been himself more than a leader just Senegal, from his role in the establishment of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) to his regular advocacy for a "United States of Africa", the 84-years old leader has made a hall of fame for himself well beyond the boundaries of his country of about 12 million people, he has become a regional and continental power broker, for example, , in August, 2010, he flew to neighbouring Guinea following a political deadloch over the transition of power to democratic civilian rule in Guinea. And to advise the Guineans to understand the situation and to contribute in unlocking the political situation. In April, 2010, he was invited by the stakeholders to mediate in the political crisis in Cote D' Ivoire, two months earlier, the regional Economic bloc, the ECOWAS had appointed him as a mediator in Niger's political crisis following a military overthrow there, thanks to his medition as elderman like him, Niger is still calm despite the fact that the ousted president Tandja Mamadou is still in military captivity. After a similar coup d'etat in neighbouring Mauritania in 2008, the elderman Mr. Abdoulaye Wade quickly took it upon himself to mediate b/n the coup leaders and the political elite, as in Mauritania now reinstated a civilian rule, thanks to his mediation. He was also involved in quite numbers of successful meditions in

Chad, Sudan, Zimbabwe and Madagascar, outside the frontiers of the continent, Maitre Abdoulaye Wade even offered to negotiate in the Middle East crisis and has invited both the Israelis & the Palestinian leaders to talkes in Senegal. In 2005, the UNESCO awarded him the Felix Houphouet Boigny peace prize to Maitre Wade for "his outstanding contribution to democracy in Senegal and for his role as meddler elderman in mediating political disputes in the region.

However, as he mediates crisis across the continent, when come back home, the conflict over secession in the southern Senegalese region of Casamance is today one of Africa's oldest wars, which that started in 1981 rebel attacks in the region have resulted in the death of at least dozens of soldiers and the displacement of thousands in recent years, when he came to power in 2000, he promised to resolve the conflict in hundred days time, but more than ten years into office, the Casamance rebels are still fighting. Thus, Maitre Wade has been under intense criticism from his own people for "failing to initiate a serious plan to end the Casamance crisis". In early 2010, Maitre Abdoulaye Wade launched a $27m bronze African renaissance statue of three figures looming over the Atlantic to "give flesh to African renaissance" and to serve as a symbol in the "fight against racism". The high unemployment rate in the country has forced thousands of Senegalese youngsters to emigrate to Europe. And education continues to be a luxury for most Senegalese. There is also a public discontent over Maitre attempt to groom his son to succeed him as president, namely, Karim Wade, of a French mother, Minister of Energy, International cooperation, Territorial management, Aviation, Air transport & Infrastructure, since many Senegalese see him as an outsider, his first official intry into Senegalese politics was in March, 2009 when local governmen telections were held and overwhelmingly won by the opposition. The supporters of Maitre Abdoulaye Wade, however, say he is still the rightman for the job, making reference to the tarred roads he has constructed mainly across Dakar, and other infrastructure. But Senegal remains one of the most stable countries with a well implemented multi-party democracy in Africa.

Politics

Senegal remains a vibrant democracy. Despite the Socialist party having monopolised power for decades after independence (until President Wade came to office), Senegal was one of the very few African countries that did not officially abolish multi-party practice.

Current political crises are rooted in the increasing centralisation of power in the hands of the presidency. Despite the population being overwhelmingly Muslim, secularism is strongly entrenched into the political system. Indeed, the founding president, Leopold Sedar Senghor, was a Catholicist. Economy

Since the 1990s, the State has gradually withdrawn from most economic activities

However, monopolies persist in crucial sectors, though they are subject to tender procedures

Despite occasional conflicts with the office of Prime Minister, President Wade's political leadership is capable of seeking pragmatic coalitions to pursue his political goals.

Social

Social indicators are low for the region. Spending on health (2.6%) and education (3.7%) as percentages of GDP are considered low.

More than half of the population is below 20 years.

Major Conflicts

Post-independence consolidation

When: 1960 - 1962

Who: President Senghor vs Prime Minister Mamadou Dia

Why: Power struggle between a scholarly President and a charismatic Prime Minister

Outcome: Senghor prevailed by pushing a new constitution that consolidated power under the presidency

Casamance separatism

When: In the 90s

Who: Movement of Democratic Forces of Casamance.

Why: Fought for autonomy for the Casamance region in the south, occupied by the Jola group.

Outcome: On December 30, 2004 President Wade announced that he would sign a peace treaty with the separatist group. This, however, has yet to be implemented.

Side note,- Clashes have erupted in Senegal's capital Dakar, after the top court said President Abdoulaye Wade could run for a third term in next month's poll. Angered by the decision, protesters threw stones at riot police, who responded by firing tear gas. Maitre Abdoulaye Wade, 85, has already served two terms. But the constitution was amended since he was last elected, and he has argued the law is not retroactive. In its ruling, the court barred famous singer Youssou N'Dour from running. The opposition had earlier warned it would hold street protests if Mr Wade's candidacy was approved, and crowds had gathered in central Dakar to await the ruling. After the decision came through, youths in the area around Place de l'obelisque set fire to tyres and engaged in running battles with police. There were no immediate reports of injuries in the clashes. The constitutional court's statement, issued lately on Friday, listed 14 candidates - including Maitre Abdoulaye Wade - as eligible to stand in the 26 February, 2012 election. The Goree Island, from where African slaves were shipped to America. Virtually every US president who has visited Africa has come to see the slave fort. Senegal is the only African country which was once headed by Leopold Sedar Senghor, a poet and a member of France's hallowed Academie Francaise. The current Senegalese president Maitre Abdoulaye Wade has been an active mediator in West Africa and is credited as a stabilising force among Senegal's troubled neighbours like The Gambia and Guinea-Bissau.

In 4th April, 2012 after 12 years in power, Maitre Abdoulaye Wade finally bowed out following defeat by his protégé and former prime minister, Macky Sall, in a run-off vote. The election followed weeks of riots in major cities and towns across the country over Mr. Abdoulaye Wade's decision to run for a third term. There were fears Senegal in it's over 40 years of independence would plunge into an election related civil war. In the run-up to the March, 2012 polls, opposition activists, mainly young people, took to the streets of Dakar and elsewhere for weeks, demanding that President Abdoulaye Wade withdraw his controversial third term bid. The riots resulted in at least six deaths, and the destruction of property worth millions of CFA francs. For at least two weeks, most shops and businesses in the city centre of the capital Dakar were closed, while schools and universities had shut downfor several weeks before that. Many people feared the worst as violence escalated and tension rose days before the polls. Foreign journalists flew in from around the world in anticipation of the "imminent" post-election violence. In contrast, tourists and some foreign nationals quickly flew out of the country in fear. Potential foreign investors stayed away to "wait and see" whether it would be safe to invest in the country. And rich Senegalese, including government officials, sent their families abroad for protection. But less than three hours after the first run-off result was announced on 25th March, 2012 Senegal proved the sceptics wrong, and showed the world how democracy worked. As early results showed a clear lead for Macky Sall, President Abdoulaye Wade, in the presence of his French wife and two children, telephoned Macky Sall to congrajulate him. "The results announced so far have shown that you are the winner of the election … I congrajulate you and wish you all the best," Maitre Wade was quoted as saying on the from the presidential palace, and that was enough to avoid whatever dangers or doubts anybody had anticipated might ensue. Within minutes,

Independence Square in the centre of town, which had been the epicenter of pre-election riots, saw thousands gathering to sing songs and dance, many of them shed tears of joy. World leaders quickly lauded the country for the democratic and transparent manner of the polls, and more importantly, for the swift transfer of power. The Senegalese politician called Macky Sall, 50 who was elected President of Senegal in March 2012; is set to take office on 3 April 2012. Under President Abdoulaye Wade, Macky Sall was Prime Minister of Senegal from April 2004 to June 2007 and President of the unicameral National Assembly of Senegal from June 2007 to November 2008.He was the Mayor of Fatick from 2002 to 2008 and has held that post again since April 2009. Macky Sall, a geological engineer by profession was a long-time member of the Senegalese Democratic Party (PDS). After coming into conflict with President Abdoulaye Wade, he was removed from his post as President of the National Assembly in November 2008; he consequently founded his own party and joined the opposition. Placing second in the first round of the 2012 presidential election, Macky Sall won the backing of other opposition candidates and prevailed over Abdoulaye Wade in the second round of voting, held on 25th March 2012. Senegal is relatively seen as one of the most democratic and stable countries in West Africa - it is the only country in the region never to have experienced a military coup.

Accession to power of president Macky Sall - 3rd April, 2012 by election.

Tentative election calendar-Presidential, March.

Senegal – Timeline Diaries updates and related key notes:

8th century - Present-day Senegal is part of the Kingdom of Ghana. 11th century - Tukulor occupy lower Senegal valley 12-14th centuries - Rise of the Jolof empire.

1440s - Portuguese traders reach Senegal river estuary.

1588 - Dutch establish slave port on island of Goree.

1659 - French found St-Louis at the mouth of the Senegal river; it becomes a key slave-trading port.

1677 - French take over island of Goree from the Dutch.

1756-63 - Seven Years' War: Britain takes over French posts in Senegal, forms colony of Senegambia. France regains its holdings during American Revolutionary War of 1775-83.

1816 - Britain returns French holdings captured during Napoleonic wars.

Late 1800s - France extends its influence, gains control of all the territory of Senegal.

1895 - Senegal becomes part of French West Africa.

1914 - Blaise Diagne elected as Senegal's first African deputy to French parliament.

1946 - Senegal becomes part of the French Union.

1956 - National Assembly established.

1958 - Becomes an autonomous republic, as part of the French Community.

1960 June - Senegal becomes independent, as part of Mali Federation.

1960 August - Senegal pulls out of Mali Federation, becomes separate republic with Leopold Sedar Senghor as founder president.

1962 - Attempted coup led by Prime Minister Mamadou Dia foiled. Mamadou Dia imprisoned until 1974.

1963 - First constitution drawn-up.

1966 – Leopold Senghor's Senegalese Progressive Union becomes country's sole political party.

1978 - Three-party political system introduced.

1981 - Leopold Sedar Senghor steps down; Abdou Diouf becomes president in 1981.

1982 – SeneGambian Confederation formed; Senegal and neighbouring Gambia aim to combine military and security forces.

1982 - Separatists in southern province of Casamance form Casamance Movement of Democratic Forces (MFDC).

1988 – President Abdou Diouf re-elected.

1989 - SeneGambian Confederation dissolved.

Dispute over grazing rights in southern Mauritania sparks violent unrest in Senegal and Mauritania.

1992 - Diplomatic relations with neighbouring Mauritania restored.

1993 – Prsident Abdou Diouf re-elected for third term

March 2000 - Opposition leader Abdoulaye Wade wins second round of presidential elections, ending 40 years of Socialist Party rule.

January 2001 - Voters back new constitution which shortens presidential term, limits holder to two terms, and gives president power to dissolve parliament.

March 2001 - Government signs peace accord with separatist rebels in Casamance. But there is little follow-up as separatists go through splits and leadership changes.

April 2001 - Abdoulaye Wade's Senegalese Democratic Party (PDS) wins an overwhelming majority in parliamentary elections.

December 21, 2001: Leopold Sedar Senghor, founding father of Senegal, dies in Paris, France.

The founder President of the Republic of Senegal, the Honorable Leopold Sedar Senghor has died at in-exile home in Paris, France. The late President Senghor was 95 years old. Leopold Sedar Senghor became the first President of the independent Senegal in 1960. He was among the generation of independence era leaders that were the pioneers of African Unity, and that only today are recieving their just tribute as founding fathers and giants of the African history and Literature. President Senghor was also a rarity in Africa, in that he voluntarily relinquished power. He stepped down from the Presidency in 1980, and was succeeded by his then Prime Minister, President Abdu Diouf. This was the precedent for the peaceful transfer of power following the elections of 2000, to the former long time opposition leader, the current President Abdoulaye Wade. It says much about Senegal and of President Senghor, that his long time advesary President Wade paid tribute to him and spoke of his own great admiration for the man even though they had been political opponents. President Senghor was also a giant in a field other that politics. He is generally regarded as one of the great African poets. Our heartfelt condolences to the people of Senegal and the family of the late president. Africa has lost a great elder

June 27, 2002: Senegal launched a huge military operation to track down armed separatist rebels in the West African country's southern Casamance region on 21 June. The operation in the Bignona department (northwest of the Casmance capital Ziguinchor) was a response to "recent acts by armed rebel groups that have threatened security". All residents were told to stay indoors while the army hunted down the rebels, but by 25 June Gambian radio reported that over 1,000 Casamance region citizens fleeing army operations had sought refugee in Gambia. The Bignona district is largely cut off from the rest of Senegal by the Gambia and its river.

Casamance has been beset for 20 years by a separatist rebellion led by the Casamance Movement of Democratic Forces (MFDC), who degenerated into a group of drug-smuggling extortionists. In addition to raising 70% of their funds from Cannibis smuggling, the MFDC will surround villages with antipersonnel mines and demand tribute in cash and livestock to remove them. The MFDC has disrupted Senegal's lucrative tourist trade (primarily from France) to Casamance's beaches.

In October 2001, MFDC leaders warned that the group was out of cash and claimed that a resurgence in violence in Casamance was driven by hunger among MFDC fighters. The Senegalese government describes the rebels as gangs who have recently been terrorizing civilians and carrying out raids, endangering people and property. On 29 April, suspected rebels killed seven people and wounded four near Bignona's Diouloulou village.

The MFDC movement has effected the political situation in Gambia, Guinea-Bissau and Senegal. Guinea-Bissau (a former Portuguese colony of 1.3 million people) has been troubled with repeated unrest since an army mutiny in 1998. Gambia (a former British colony with fewer than 1.5 million people) is separated from Guinea-Bissau by the former French colony of Senegal. These colonial-era borders bisected traditional tribal areas, creating the climate for a political witch's brew.

In early May 2002, an operation similar to June's, netted the Senegalese military 33 MFDC suspects. On 8 May, Gambian Army Chief of Staff Colonel Baboucarr Jatta revealed that the Gambian Army was monitoring the situation in the border villages of Dasilami and Kartong, where residents were caught in the latest flare-up between MFDC separatist rebels and the Senegalese Army. Jatta claimed that the presence of Gambian troops on the border was just to monitor the situation, but on 22 May about two dozen coup plotters were arrested in the capital Bissau. It wasn't until 11 June that Guinea-Bissau's president Kumba Yalla warned Gambia over its alleged role in coup plots, as the suspects had been trained in that neighboring country. The Gambian government described the allegations as "untrue and unfounded", while a Guinea-Bissaun threat to launch a punitive invasion was met with Gambian derision.

One alleged coup plotter, Guinea-Bissua reserve army officer Fode Conte, confessed that he feared that he and fellow Mandingo ethnic group members would be purged from the army, so they planned to preemptively kill President Yalla and other senior military officers (who are from the rival Balante ethnic group).

Kumba Yala also accused the MFDC of being involved in the alleged coup attempt. On 18 June, eight MFDC rebels detained in Bissau following that incident were handed over to Senegal through the United Nations. MFDC spokesman Alexandre Djiba, who was arrested in Guinea Bissau on 26 April, had already been released on 29 May and repatriated to Senegal. - Adam Geibel

September 2002 - Joola ferry disaster: 1,863 passengers are killed when the Senegalese vessel capsizes off the Gambian coast.

November 2002 - President Wade sacks the prime minister and the rest of the government; the move is said to be linked to the handling of the Joola ferry disaster.

December 2004 - Casamance Movement of Democratic Forces (MFDC) and government sign pact aimed at ending secessionist struggle in province of Casamance.

July 2005 - Former PM Idrissa Seck is charged with undermining state security, sparking clashes between his supporters and police. He is jailed for a time, but is released in February 2006 after the charge is dropped

October 2005 - Dispute with neighbouring Gambia over ferry tariffs on the border leads to a transport blockade. The economies of both countries suffer. Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo brokers talks to resolve the issue.

March 14, 2006: Near Sao Domingos, on the Senegalese border, a bus hits a land mine, killing twelve civilians. At the same time, Guinea-Bissau troops moved into the area and began fighting with Senegalese rebels. The Senegalese had been planting mines in the area, and generally demonstrating their power.

March 20, 2006: Soldiers continued attacking Senegalese rebels on the Senegalese border, near the town of Sao Domingos. So far, five soldiers have been killed, and perhaps as many rebels. The rebels appear to have retreated back into Sebegal. Some 5,000 civilians fled the fighting.

March 21, 2006: The fighting along the Senegalese border involves Senegalese rebels, led by Salif Dialo who had previously, in 1999, helped overthrow current Guinea-Bissau president Joao Bernardo Vieira (who became president again last year). The Dialo crew have bases on the Senegal side of the border, and accuse the Guinea-Bissau troops of entering Senegal to attack their camps. Guinea-Bissau says they attacked the Dialo men when they crossed the border to meet with weapons dealers in Sao Domingos.

The Senegalese separatists are demanding independence for the Casamance region which, is, literally, separated from Senegal by Gambia. The rebellion has been low key, and going on for two decades. This sort of situation is typical throughout Africa, where groups of armed men maintain control, or at least freedom, in an area, often on a border. The central government does not consider it worth the trouble and expense to deal with the situation.

August 2006 - The army launches an offensive against rebels from a faction of the Casamance Movement of Democratic Forces (MFDC).

Senegal and Spain agree to jointly patrol the Senegalese coast to curb the exodus of illegal migrants heading for Europe. Senegal is a favourite starting point for migrants setting off in rickety boats.

December 2006 - Spain and Senegal agree a series of measures to curb illegal migration to the Canary Islands. Spain is to give 4,000 Senegalese temporary work permits over the next two years.

February 2007 - President Wade wins re-election.

March 10, 2007: Senegal is one of the few African states that have had a continuous history of electoral transition, and social stability. But now that is threatened by a long simmering rebellion. The latest elections are dominated by disputes over to how to handle the rebels down south. The rebels call themselves the MDFC (Movement of Democratic Forces of Casamançe), and insist they represent a few percent of the population, living in the southern part of the country. The MDFC has been at it since 1982.

Casamançe is the narrow area between the Gambia river and the southern border of Senegal. There's a problem down there. In a quirk of colonialization,the region along the Gambia river was controlled by the British, while the rest of the region (modern Senegal) was run by the French. Thus Gambia became a separate country, when the colonies became independent 50-60 years ago. Thepeople of " Casamançe" were cut off from the rest of Senegal by Gambia, as well as tribal affiliations and economic activity. Compared to therest of Senegal, Casamançe was poor. Now, more prosperous Wolof tribesmen were coming south to establish businesses, and compete with the Casamançe natives. In the 1990s, groups of MDFC got guns and began shooting at government officials, and Wolof "invaders." The end of the Cold War in 1991 brought a flood of cheap (surplus) AK-47s, and the MDFC was now heavily armed, and breaking into factions. Some of theMDFC got involved in political violence in neighboring Guinea-Bissau. This backfired when one of the Guinea-Bissau leaders MDFC opposed, came to power. That,the factionalism and more peacekeeping efforts by the Senegal government, created a peace deal. That is now coming apart, and more men are taking to thebush with their AK-47s. The majority of the people in Casamançe are not interested in the MDFC, or the violence. But guys with guns cannot be ignored. This is the same violence that has ruined so much of the rest of west Africa. Cheap AK-47s and amoral, unemployed young men. Growing violence in neighboring Guinea, and Guinea-Bissau, threatens to spread into Senegal because ofthe spark set off by the MDFC

June 2007 - President Wade's ruling coalition increases its parliamentary majority in elections boycotted by the opposition.

September 2007 - Spanish authorities launch a campaign on national television in Senegal to discourage illegal migration.

November 14, 2007: US navy ship heads to Africa' A United States Navy ship will depart Spain for a seven-month deployment to central and west Africa - designed to help nations around the oil-rich Gulf of Guinea beef up maritime security, say officials. The amphibious ship USS Fort McHenry would provide training to officials on how to fight crime ranging from unlawful fishing to human and drug trafficking. It would be joined later by another US Navy vessel as part of the Africa Partnership Station Initiative, which also involved officials from Britain, France, Germany, Portugal and Spain as well as non-governmental organisations. "We all realised that a stable and prosperous Africa is not just good for Africans, it is good for the rest of the world," said US 6th Fleet Vice Admiral James A Winnefeld. 'We expect 150 students a day' Plans included visits to Cameroon, Cape Verde, Gabon, Ghana, Liberia, Senegal and the tiny archipelago of Sao Tome and Principe while possible stops in several other African nations were also being explored. British Royal Navy Commander Nigel May said: "In some of these countries we expect to have up to 150 students a day." Training will be provided in a broad range of areas, including logistics, search and rescue, maritime domain awareness and navigation. The plan was to involve more nations in the training in future deployments, which might be carried out on a civilian ship or a vessel belonging to the navy of another country. Vice Admiral Winnefeld said: "The Africa Partnership Station Initiative is designed to begin an enduring international effort to help our African partner nations become self-sufficient in maritime safety and security. "We don't have any illusions that we are going to solve this problem overnight." The USS Fort McHenry would also distribute 75 tons of humanitarian assistance worth $350 000 during its current mission. Source: IQPC Madrid

November 19, 2007: "French aviso The Commandant Ducuing departed Friday from Mombasa, Kenya, to accompany the cargo Rozen and Semlow. These merchant ships, chartered by the World Food Program (WFP) is set to send to the port of Merka, Somalia, food to the population. During this humanitarian operation, aviso from the Navy will until their return, the protection of Rozen and Semlow against possible attacks from hackers. "Since the beginning of 2007, more than 20 vessels have been victims of pirates off the coast of Somalia. This resurgence threatens the delivery of WFP humanitarian traveling over the sea at 80%, "said the General Staff of the Army. The President of the Republic announced on September 25 last in the UN Security Council, which ships french ensure the protection of cargo ships chartered by WFP, for a period of 2 months. Long of 80 meters for a displacement of 1100 tons, Cdt Ducuing is not a senior but its fire power was large enough to repel any attack from the Somali coast. Small vessels designed during the Cold War, Ducuing is, in fact, heavily armed for a boat in its class. Mis on hold in 1980 to the arsenal of Lorient (today DCNS), the F795 is the fifteenth aviso from the Series 17 A69 (three others, originally built for South Africa, were sold to Argentina). Nine buildings of this type, built originally for the anti Coast, are still in service in the Navy. They must be replaced during the next decade, by Frigate European Multi-Missions. The FREMM, which must be carried out 17 copies, also ensure the succession of 10 frigates ASM types F767 and F70, which 9 are still operational ."

December 2007 - President Abdoulaye Wade declares three days of mourning after Serigne Saliou Mbacke, leader of Senegal's richest and most powerful Islamic brotherhood, dies aged 92.

April 2008 - Senegal's national assembly amends the country's constitution to allow the trial of Chad's ex-leader Hissene Habre, who is accused of human rights abuses during his eight years in power.

March 2009 - Opposition parties win control of several cities in local elections, including Dakar, formerly a stronghold of President Wade.

April 2009 April - Belgium starts proceedings at the International Court of Justice in The Hague to try to force Senegal to bring former Chadian President Hissene Habre to trial for alleged human rights abuses during his time in power.

Prime Minister Cheikh Hajibou Soumare steps down after governing coalition suffers losses in local council polls. The president's son Karim is included in the new cabinet.

May 2009 - A UN court accepts Senegal's pledge to keep in the country ex-Chad dictator Hissene Habre, ahead of his trial for rights abuses.

September-October 2009 - Clashes between troops and rebels in the province of Casamance

April 6, 2010: Marines Hit the Beach in Senegal’ U.S. Marines disembark a landing craft during an offload of U.S. Navy Seabees and Spanish, Portuguese and British marines to Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 7 in Guereo, Senegal. The Marines and Seabees will work with the Senegalese army as part of Africa Partnership Station West, an international initiative developed by U.S. Naval Forces Europe and U.S. Naval Forces Africa to to improve maritime safety and security. U.S. Navy photo by Petty Officer 1st Class Martine Cuaron.

April 2010 - Senegal marks 50 years of independence.

France gives up its military bases in the country.

March 2012 - Macky Sall wins Senegal presidential elections.

July 2012 - President Macky Sall's coalition wins parliamentary elections.

August 21, 2012: Samori Touré, who led Mandinka resistance to the French (1882-1898), sent men to work in French arsenals in Senegal, using the knowledge gained to set up ammunition workshops, which helped to sustain the fight.

September 2012 - MPs abolish the upper house, the Senate, and the post of vice president in an effort to save money for flood relief. Critics say the aim is to weaken the opposition.

December 2011 - Several people killed in attack on a military base in the Casamance region.

July 20, 2012: The court Ruling In Dakar on Chadian ex-leader Hissene Habre: ICJ rules Senegal must try ex-Chad leader immediately.

The International Court of Justice has ruled that Senegal must begin proceedings to try Chad's former leader Hissene Habre "without delay". Otherwise, he should be extradited to face trial in Belgium, the court's legally binding ruling said. The 69 year old has been been under house arrest since 2005 in Senegal, where he fled after being deposed. He denies charges of killing and torturing tens of thousands of his opponents. The charges relate from 1982, when Mr. Habre came to power in a coup, until he was ousted in 1990. The UN's highest court has been investigating whether he should be tried in Senegal or extradited to Belgium, after Senegal previously refused four extradition requests. President Macky Sall, who came to power in April, has indicated that he would be willing to prosecute Mr. Hesene Habre in a special tribunal. Amnesty International called on Senegal to abide by Friday's ruling by the ICJ. "This is a victory for victims that's long overdue, and now it's high time the courts in Senegal delivered justice," said Michael Bochenek, Amnesty's law and policy programme director. Dubbed "Africa's Pinochet", Mr Habre was first indicted in Senegal in 2000 - but the country's courts ruled at the time that he could not be tried there. His alleged victims then filed complaints under Belgium's universal jurisdiction law, which allows the country's judges to prosecute human rights offences committed anywhere in the world. In 2005, he was charged by Belgium with crimes against humanity and torture. There have been years of wrangling in Senegal over what to do about Mr Habre. The government of former President Abdoulaye Wade changed its position on whether to try him several times - at one stage demanding international funding for a trial. Last year, it unexpectedly announced that it would repatriate Mr Habre to Chad, where a court in 2008 sentenced him to death in absentia for planning to overthrow the government.

This plan was stopped following a plea from the UN, which feared he could be tortured on his return. The BBC's Mamadou Moussa Ba in the Senegalese capital, Dakar, says unlike its predecessor, the government of newly elected President Macky Sall has made it clear it wants Mr Habre to be tried in Senegal. Legal experts from the African Union are currently in Senegal to discuss how the trial could take place, he says. Our reporter says Mr Habre and his wife keep a low profile in Dakar and he lives in relative freedom - guarded by two security agents - and is occasionally seen at a mosque for Friday prayers. A 1992 Truth Commission in Chad accused Mr. Habre of being responsible for widespread torture and the death of 40,000 people during his eight-year rule. He was accused of carrying out a deliberate policy of terror to discourage any opposition. Survivors of torture say that, among other things, they were subjected to electric shocks, near-asphyxia and "supplice des baguettes", when their heads were squeezed between sticks. (Text ends)

February 15, 2013: US Wary Of Africa "Terrorist" Threat, Senegal Detains Suspects'

Senegal has detained a Mauritanian and a Malian for suspected terrorist links, its government said on Friday, and a top U.S. defence official called for international teamwork to counter a growing presence of al Qaeda and its allies in Africa. The United States and African governments are backing a five-week-old French military campaign against Islamist rebels in Senegal's neighbour Mali, calling it a blow against jihadists who threaten attacks in Africa and elsewhere. After driving the bulk of the rebels from north Mali towns such as Gao and Timbuktu, French, Malian and African troops are pursuing the insurgents in the remote mountainous northeast where they are thought to be holding French hostages. But the French are struggling to secure the liberated areas from the threat of jihadist suicide bombers and guerrillas who have struck at Gao, raising fears al Qaeda and its allies could attempt reprisal attacks in the wider region. A Senegalese justice ministry official said the Mauritanian and Malian suspects were arrested this week by local gendarmes at Velingara, more than 600 km (375 miles) southeast of the Senegalese capital Dakar. "They are in custody for criminal conspiracy in collusion with terrorist organisations, aimed at undermining the country's military situation and its economic interests," Macoumba Mbodj, an adviser at the ministry, told Reuters.

Mbodj said an investigation was continuing and withheld further details. He would not comment on Senegalese media reports saying the detained Mauritanian was a member of al Qaeda who was trying to recruit young men to fight in Mali. In testimony before the U.S. House of Representatives Foreign Affairs Committee in Washington on Thursday, senior U.S. officials said the threat posed by al Qaeda's North African wing AQIM and allied groups extended well beyond Mali and would require long-term international efforts to "neutralise". "This is part of a growing terrorist presence in the region that threatens U.S. citizens, interests and partners," said Amanda Dory, U.S. Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defence for African Affairs. Senegal, which has sent several hundred troops to join a U.N.-backed African military force for Mali that is still being deployed behind the French advance, has tightened security on its southeast border with its West African neighbour. France has said it wants to begin withdrawing its 4,000 troops from Mali in March, but risks getting sucked into a tough counter-insurgency war in its ex-Sahel colony. French warplanes this week hit Islamist rebel bases and supply lines in Mali's desert northeast, especially in the Aguelhok region, the French defence ministry in Paris said. It said six buildings and a storage zone, as well as a training camp of "terrorist groups", had been destroyed.

EXTREMIST "NETWORK" IN AFRICA: In her Washington testimony, Dory pointed to an attack last year in Benghazi, Libya that killed the U.S. ambassador and three other Americans, and to a deadly January raid by jihadists on the In Amenas natural gas plant in Algeria. She said AQIM had the ability to attack western interests, and target or kidnap westerners for ransom. Dory cited danger from what she called "a network of violent extremist organizations in Africa, from Egypt to Libya to Somalia to Nigeria", describing a risk of "cross-fertilization and cross-pollination between affiliated groups". "The threat is dynamic and evolving and our efforts to counter it must be as well." U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs Johnnie Carson said the Mali intervention should be accompanied by reforms to foster good governance and economic development. "Terrorists prey upon fragile states," Carson said, and the success of the French-led mission would be "fleeting without a democratic and credible government that is responsive to the needs of Malians". Mali's interim government, formed after a March 22 coup that mired the nation in chaos and led to the north's occupation by rebels, said on Thursday it would hold a presidential election on July 7, and legislative elections two weeks later. Coup leaders have continued to meddle in state affairs, increasing foreign calls for a legitimate civilian government. In Mali's recaptured north, pro-autonomy Tuaregs - whose revolt last year was hijacked by the radical Islamists - are demanding direct talks with the central government in Bamako. Carson said that while there could be no dialogue with groups supporting "terrorism", the legitimate political, social and economic grievances of indigenous communities in northern Mali should be addressed.

April 16, 2013: Police detain son of Senegal ex-president on graft charges – Reuters’

DAKAR: Senegalese police arrested Karim Wade, the son of former president Abdoulaye Wade, on suspicion of illegally amassing some $1.4 billion during his father's 12 years in office, his lawyers said.' Karim Wade acted as right-hand man during his father's presidency of the poor West African state from 2000 to 2012, which was marked by major spending on infrastructure projects, including new roads and an airport. "They brought him a summons and they forcibly took him away," said Demba Cire Bathily, one of the lawyers for Karim Wade. "It was an arbitrary arrest."Monday was the deadline for Wade to present proof of his innocence after prosecutors accused him one month ago of illegally amassing the assets. Karim Wade simultaneously held the post of minister for infrastructure, international cooperation, energy and air transportation, with a total budget equivalent to one-third of state expenditure. "We presented 3,000 documents to prove the lawful origin of Karim's assets," said another of his lawyers, who asked not to be identified. President Macky Sall, who wrested the presidency from Wade at an election in March 2012, has promised to fight corruption and embezzlement in the former French colony of 13 million people. Special prosecutor Alioune Ndao had announced in November that Karim Wade and four former ministers were being investigated on corruption charges. Karim Wade has been banned from leaving the country, something which the ECOWAS bloc of West African states has branded illegal.

April 17, 2013: Senegal's Karim Wade charged with corruption'

Updates: The son of Senegal's former President Abdoulaye Wade is in police custody after being charged with corruption in connection with his personal fortune. Karim Wade denies the accusations that he illegally amassed about $1.4bn (£900m) during his father's rule. The 44-year-old was a senior minister during his father's rule from 2000 to 2012, and was in charge of major infrastructure and energy projects. Mr Wade is alleged to have acquired several foreign firms by illicit means. He was arrested on Monday, just hours after his lawyers submitted documents relating to his assets to a courthouse. 'Minister of earth and sky' Prosecutors announced an investigation into Mr Wade and five other former ministers last year. It followed the defeat of Abdoulaye Wade in the March 2012 presidential election by Macky Sall, who pledged to fight corruption. During Abdoulaye Wade's 12-year rule, Karim Wade held several ministerial posts simultaneously, including minister for infrastructure and air transportation. His large portfolio led to him being dubbed "the minister of the earth and the sky", but it also put him in charge of a large proportion of Senegal's government budget at a time of large-scale infrastructure spending.

April 17, 2013: Son of ex-Senegalese leader charged with corruption'

Updates: France24 - Karim Wade, the son of former Senegalese president Abdoulaye Wade, was charged with corruption, following an investigation into the $1.4 billion fortune he acquired during his father's rule. By News Wires (text) The son of Senegal's former leader Abdoulaye Wade was charged with corruption by detectives investigating his vast fortune, valued at more than $1 billion, his lawyer told AFP. Karim Wade, who held a number of cabinet posts during his father's presidency, "has just been charged with illicit enrichment and placed in custody", said El Hadji Amadou Sall. Wade is alleged to have acquired a number of foreign companies and real estate by corrupt means, including Dubai Port World, which runs the port container terminal in Senegal's capital Dakar and Moroccan bank BCME. The 44-year-old's arrest on Monday came just hours after his legal team had filed a dossier of more than 2,000 pages in response to an order from the anti-corruption court to explain the provenance of assets allegedly worth over $1.4 billion (1.07 billion euros). Wade, who was not present at the court, denies corruption and says his vast fortune is entirely legitimate.

Local press said Wade was detained along with a number of alleged "accomplices", including his former communications adviser, a businessman, a manager of an airport ground support company and an accountant. Local media said preparations were underway to send him to Rebeuss, the main prison in Dakar. Officials from Senegal's anti-corruption court on Tuesday set out the case against the former minister, a huge operation involving the movement of money through front organisations in tax havens across the world. "This is real financial engineering that has been exposed, with frontmen and complex structures. We discovered key sectors of the economy held by offshore companies based in Panama, the British Virgin Islands and Luxembourg," said prosecutor Antoine Diome.

Wade denies corruption and his lawyers said Wednesday the prosecution had violated anti-corruption procedures by circumventing the country's high court and making public details of the investigation. The former ruling Senegalese Democratic Party (PDS) accuses the regime of Macky Sall, who defeated Wade's father in presidential elections last year, of conducting a "witch hunt" against the PDS hierarchy since it came to power. Sall, who won a resounding victory in a March 2012 poll marred by violence over the octogenarian's efforts to seek a third term in office, launched a number of audits into the finances of political rivals shortly after his inauguration. Several leaders of the 2000-2012 Wade regime, including his son, have been repeatedly questioned by police and judges investigating allegations of "illegal enrichment". Karim Wade is also under investigation in France following a complaint by the Senegalese government over the alleged embezzlement of public funds, misuse of corporate assets and corruption, according to a judicial source. After he was last questioned by police in November, he was banned from leaving Senegal along with six other officials from the former regime. (AFP)

April 17, 2013: Son of ex-Senegalese president held in probe of US$1b assets – AFP’

Updates: The flamboyant "super minister" son of former Senegalese leader Abdoulaye Wade was detained in Dakar as police investigated his assets, valued at more than US$1 billion, his lawyer said. Karim Wade, who held a number of cabinet posts under his father's presidency, has been locked in legal battles with the current regime over his formidable wealth, alleged to be illicit gains from his time in office. Wade, who was arrested in his Dakar home on Monday, was "placed in custody at the request of the prosecution", said one of his lawyers, Demba Cire Bathily.Wade is alleged to own a number of foreign firms including Dubai Port World, which runs the port container terminal in Senegal's capital Dakar, Moroccan bank BCME and airport ground support company AHS. His arrest came just hours after his legal team had filed a dossier of more than 2,000 pages in response to an order from the nation's anti-corruption court to explain how he had come by assets allegedly valued at more than US$1.4 billion. Wade, who was not present at the court, denied the allegations and said his vast fortune came legitimately from the firms he owned as well as real estate and bank accounts. His lawyers have accused special prosecutor Alioune Ndao of "inventing" the facts in the graft case. "The regime is testing our resolve but the law is on our side," one of Wade's lawyers said. The former ruling Senegalese Democratic Party accuses the regime of Macky Sall, who defeated Wade's father in presidential elections last year, of conducting a "witch hunt" against the party's hierarchy since the new government came to power. Sall, who won a resounding victory in a March poll marred by violence over the 86-year-old's efforts to seek a third term in office, launched a number of audits into the finances of political rivals shortly after his inauguration.

Son of Senegal's ex-president charged with corruption'

Reuters – Updates: April 18, 2013 - Senegalese prosecutors formally charged Karim Wade, the son of the West African nation's former president, with corruption and ordered him to be detained without bail, his lawyer told Reuters. Wade, who was the most powerful figure in his father Abdoulaye Wade's government, was arrested this week on suspicion of illegally amassing $1.4 billion in assets via a network of shadowy holding companies. "He has just been charged and will be detained," Demba Cire Bathily, Wade's lawyer, told Reuters. The case brought has highlighted efforts by President Macky Sall, who defeated Abdoulaye Wade in a tense election last year, to crack down on corruption in the poor West African state. Karim Wade simultaneously held the post of minister for infrastructure, international cooperation, energy and air transportation, with a total budget equivalent to one-third of state expenditure. Prosecutors have accused Wade of having taken stakes in large sectors of the economy, including firms involved in managing Dakar's port, providing services at the current airport and building a second one outside the capital. Prosecutors say the former minister has been linked to these firms through a complex web of offshore companies based in locations including Panama, the British Virgin Islands and Luxembourg. Wade's lawyers have accused the new administration of a political witch hunt and claim they can lawfully account for all of his assets.

Senegal wins case against ArcelorMittal'

The West African Newsletter - September 10, 2013: WAN understands the arbitration panel of the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) in Paris has come out in favor of cancelling agreements signed in 2007 between the Senegalese government and ArcelorMittal concerning the Faleme iron ore mine in the north of the country because of the Indian steelmaker's failure to honor its commitments.

SENEGAL- Karim Abdoulaye Wade in a corner?

The West African Newsletter (October 2, 2013) The former president's son Karim Wade, who has been in preventive custody since April 12, has until October 14 to explain the origin of 28 accounts held in Monaco.

May 5, 2014: Not all peacekeeping requires peacekeepers, sometimes it just requires patience and an offer the troublemakers can't refuse. Such is the case in Senegal where the government believes it has finally worked out a peace deal with the MFDC (Movement of Democratic Forces of Casamance) separatist rebels. This deal might actually work.

The MFDC unrest has been going on since 1982, has left over 5,000 dead and made life miserable in Casamance an area that contains only about four percent of Senegal's 14 million people. The MFDC rebellion has been low key but persistent, with a spike in 1992-2001 that left over a thousand dead and caused a split in the MFDC. This sort of situation is typical throughout Africa, where groups of armed men maintain control, or at least freedom, in an area, often on a border. The central government does not consider it worth the trouble and expense to deal with the situation. Such was the case with MFDC.

Back in 2004 Senegal offered another amnesty for MFDC, after the rebels agreed to clear landmines from the southern Casamance region and the end a decades-old conflict. That did not work out. Hundreds of people have been killed or wounded by mines in Casamance, a former tourist attraction and fertile farming area bordering Guinea-Bissau and Gambia. Economic activity in Casamance has been crippled by three decades of separatist violence. MFDC demands more autonomy for the largely Christian and animist population in Casamance. Most Senegalese are Moslem but religious persecution isn't what keeps the rebellion going. MFDC quickly turned into a criminal gang, dominated by some of the local smuggling groups. Most of the mines were planted by the MFDC, either to discourage army or police patrols or as a form of extortion (local villagers would not be told where the mines secretly planted around their village was until they paid up). The MFDC no longer has much popular appeal and the government peace offer has a lot of popular support in Casamance.

April 26, 2014: Senegal ex-president Wade returns from exile’

(AFP) Abdoulaye Wade makes controversial return after two years in France to support son facing corruption charges. Abdoulaye Wade, Senegal’s exiled former president has made a controversial homecoming with security forces on high alert, two years after he lost office in an election marred by violent protests.

Wade, 87, who held power from 2000 to 2012, landed in Dakar late on Friday, his first time in the West African nation since he moved to France, Senegal's former colonial master, after a bitter defeat to arch rival and current leader Macky Sall. His return - a show of support for his son Karim, who is in custody on multi-million-dollar corruption charges - had been delayed by more than 48 hours after his flight was grounded in Casablanca on Wednesday. Wade has accused Sall's government of "manoeuvring" against him by deliberately withholding permission for him to land in Dakar in an attempt to disperse the supporters who had planned to welcome him on his arrival.

"I understood a long time ago that Macky Sall did not want this day to happen," he told AFP news agency in Casablanca on Thursday. Wade finally left Morocco's largest city in the early evening on a private jet which landed in Dakar around three hours later. Senegal has denied that it was behind the delay, with government spokesman Abdou Latif Coulibaly pointing to last-minute modifications to the flight plan which meant new permits were required. Wade had been expected earlier in the day, and his Senegalese Democratic Party (PDS) was planning a march from the airport to its headquarters on his arrival. But the area around the airport was sealed off by police and only a few senior PDS officials were allowed to welcome Wade. The former head of state was due to deliver a speech at a rally to be staged in defiance of a ban by the authorities at the party headquarters, where a large crowd of supporters had been gathering for several hours, surrounded by riot police. The announcement of Wade's return has dominated headlines since the start of the week, with daily newspaper Le Populaire splashing on "A Friday heavy with menace".

'State of high-alert' The media meanwhile described security forces as being in a "state of high-alert" over the visit. Anti-riot police with shields, helmets and batons, have been deployed across Dakar since Wednesday, with protests banned over fears of "public disorder". Wade has said that he will respect

Senegalese security measures and does not intend to destabilise the Sall government, but he has also vowed to press on with his outlawed party meeting. "I'm not a man to start a coup d'etat, not at my age... I have the fortune of being able to control my activists and supporters," he told Paris-based television news channel France 24 on Thursday. "They do what I tell them to. If I said 'go to the palace' they would. But if I wanted that, I could make it happen without even coming to Dakar."

Wade's son Karim, 45, whose wealth includes land in Dakar, a fleet of luxury cars and media and finance companies operating across Africa, has been on remand in Dakar for a year and is due to be tried in June. Senegalese authorities accuse him of using corrupt means to acquire a fortune of $246m when he was a so-called "super minister" in his father's cabinet. The younger Wade denies corruption and says his wealth comes legitimately from the companies he owns as well as real estate. The PDS accuses the Sall regime of conducting a "witch hunt" against its hierarchy since he came to power. (Text ends)

Why was the Arab slave trade worse than the transatlantic slave trade?

Jason Almendra Most Viewed Writer History of Slavery 18 Apr 2019
Sep 2

There was high demand for eunuchs. They guarded the harems of big shots in the Islamic world. However the process of castration had a 9:10 fatality rate. Hence the high demand. However a few were sold intact. Here are the Afro-Abkhazians in the Caucasus mountains. (So ironic.)

Over in the Atlantic, they let all the slaves keep their family jewels. Some Christian Ethiopians intentionally tattooed crosses on their faces. Islam does not believe in the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Related Links

How do I make it to the WWE from Nigeria?

What are the similarities between the Chaaga tribe from Tanzania and the Zulu tribe from South Africa?

What do you think about the governor inviting Mrmacaroni, Faz, and Seun Kuti for a peace walk? I think they should go for the walk.

Why does the country of "Niger" have a racist name?

Can someone who knows say if Idi Amin expelled the Indians because he was a Muslim?

Will Nigeria overcome current challenges?

How did 'agbero' (guys that stand on the road collecting money from commercial vehicles after loading and other stuff) start in Nigeria?

What happens to those that have purchased tickets already if any country bans travellers from Nigeria

How will the omicron variant affect the economic activity in Africa?

If Egypt were to have a drought, would Ethiopia be forced to open the dam?

Is Cush Ethiopia or Sudan? When I read in some websites it refers to ancient Ethiopia and another websites it referring to Sudan.

Why are African borders porous?

What steps can be taken to increase the prosperity of the people of West Africa?

How do we encourage a good quality of life in West Africa?

Wake Up Africa!

Solo is a childhood friend of Sadio Mané who is now a police officer in Guinea-Bissau. He grew up in the same village as the Senegalese striker and played football with him when they were children.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

On Saturday, after the Guinea-Bissau-Senegal match, Solo found Mané, whom he had not seen for 17 years, and showed him a childhood photo.

Touched by this reunion, Sadio Mané asked him for his number to stay in touch and promised to invite him one day to Liverpool to see one of his matches at Anfield.

What A Beautiful Reunion, Never Underate Anyone

Quelles sont les ethnies qui vivent au Sénégal ?

Marie Lou Anciennement Aime apprendre de la vie et de la nature 1 an Le Sénégal compte plus de 15 millions d'habitants appartenant à différents groupes ethniques. Les ethnies du Sénégal les plus importantes en nombre sont: les Wolofs, suivi des Lébous, puis des Peuls, Toucouleurs, Séréres, Diolas, Mandingues et enfin Bassaris. Ces peuples vivent aujourd'hui en parfaite harmonie et il est de plus en plus fréquent de voir des mariages inter-ethniques.

Ils ont su préserver leurs traditions et certains ont parfois fait le choix de rester dans leurs régions d'origines, malgré des conditions de vies parfois mises à rudes épreuves. Voici quelques-unes de ces fascinantes ethnies du Sénégal. Étant moi-même sénégalaise je loue cette cohésion inter-ethnique qui vaut cette stabilité cette faille contrairement à nos voisins de la sous-région.

Questions similaires

En tant que Maghrébin, vous sentez-vous Africain ? Si non, pourquoi ?
La colonisation a-t-elle eu également des effets positifs sur l'Afrique ?
En tant qu'Africain, êtes-vous capable de reconnaître le pays d'origine d'un autre Africain en observant simplement son physique ?
Combien y a-t-il de sénégalais vivant en dehors du Sénégal ?
Comment vivre au Sénégal?
Connaissez-vous le Sénégal ?
Que faut-il savoir avant d'aller au Sénégal ?
Quelles sont les principales différences culturelles entre la France et le Sénégal ?
Que savez-vous des Sénégalais(es) ?
Pourquoi le Sénégal reste toujours un pays sous-développé ?
Êtes-vous au courant de ce qui se passe au Sénégal ?

Quelles sont les meilleures choses à faire à Dakar au Sénégal ?

Pourquoi certains Sénégalais n'aiment pas rester au pays ?
Existe-t-il un camp de réfugiés au Sénégal ?
Que se passe-t-il au Sénégal ?

Comment puis-je réfuter l'idée selon laquelle la richesse de l'Occident serait due aux pillages auxquels il se serait adonné lors de la colonisation et du néocolonialisme ?

Jean Villani Suivre ven.

Les vrais raisons de la richesse d'un pays, cela a été dit déjà de nombreuses fois, les pays dans le haut du classement mondial du PIB, produit intérieur brut, ne sont pas ceux qui ont des grandes richesses dans leur sous-sol mais ceux qui ont une populations éduquée, instruite, travailleuse, ajoutez un système économique libéral, capitaliste.

La Chine, du moment quel a reprit à son compte cette recette occidentale à rattrapé ceux ci et les dépasser finalement, il y a bien sûr quantités d'autres exemple de pays qui reviennent de loin, le plus puissants état européen, l'Allemagne, était détruite à 90% après la guerre, le Japon, lui aussi ruiné en 1945 est devenu celui que l'on connaît, un autre pays d'Asie la Corée du Sud est actuellement un pays de premier plan dans le domaine des nouvelles technologies, après bien sûr les autres pays européens tout en étant dans le haut du classement tirent leur épingle du jeux à moindre mesure mais il ne faut pas y voir un manque de richesse dans leur sous-sol comme je l'ai dit au début, juste une population moins formées, moins dynamique.

Pour ceux en colère contre les méchants européens colonialiste qui sont responsables de leur misère sociale , leur économie pauvre qui ne décolle pas, vous connaissez maintenant la recette d'un avenir radieux, des écoles, des écoles, des écoles, une éducation libérale pour les garçons et les filles, ce sont eux, là vraie richesse d'un pays. Suivre Jean Villani

Questions similaires

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

Si vous venez d'un pays qui a été colonisé dans le passé, que pense votre peuple des pays qui étaient autrefois au pouvoir ? Que pensent les Vietnamiens des Français, les Brésiliens des Portugais, etc?

L'Afrique est-elle pauvre à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait l'Afrique ?

Comment se porterait le monde si l'Occident n'avait pas pillé l'Afrique et placé des marionnettes au pouvoir ?

Pourquoi la colonisation de l'Amérique du nord a-t-elle engendré des pays "riches" et celle de l'Amérique du sud, des pays "pauvres" ?

Pourquoi ne parle-t-on jamais des colonisations qui n'ont pas été faites par les occidentaux, comme les colonisations inter-africaines ou orientales ?

Que se serait-il passé si Philippe Pétain était mort avant 1940 ? Comment se serait passé la fin de la campagne de France et comment Pétain serait-il dans l'imaginaire collectif de nos jours ?

La colonisation a-t-elle eu également des effets positifs sur l'Afrique ?

Quelle est la meilleure façon pour un pays colonisateur de faire repentance sincère de ses actions passées, sachant que son peuple actuel n'est pas responsable des actions de ses ancêtres ?

Pourquoi la colonisation de Vénus dans des "villes flottantes" dans les hautes couches de son atmosphère est une meilleure idée que la colonisation de la surface de Mars ?

La France n'est-elle riche qu'à cause de la colonisation ?

De toutes les théories du complot, laquelle est la plus ridicule selon vous ? Pourquoi ?

Pourquoi les pays colonisés par les anglais sont-ils plus prospères que les pays colonisés par les français ?

Les adeptes de la colonisation sont-ils conscients d'avoir fait éclater des structures traditionnelles qui ont permis à des populations entière de traverser l'Histoire dans la paix et la sérénité ?

Quels sont les avantages de la colonisation ?

FRANCOPHONIE
La France a-t-elle encore un pouvoir sur ses anciennes colonies ?

Brian Gogarty Lieu : Ploemeur, Bretagne, France (1997–aujourd'hui) 1 an La France exerce encore une certaine influence sur ses anciennes colonies, notamment en Afrique occidentale. Toutefois, cette influence est surestimée et elle diminue aujourd'hui.

Mais c'est un sujet brûlant, j'en ai bien conscience.

La Françafrique

Tout d'abord, parlons de l'influence de la France en Afrique francophone. Cette influence existe réellement et elle est souvent néfaste pour les pays africains qui la connaissent. En tant que français, je me dois de le reconnaître.

Pour comprendre le pouvoir de la France sur ses anciennes colonies, il faut remonter à l'époque de la décolonisation, vers 1960.

À l'époque, la colonisation n'était plus possible car c'était déjà une pratique révolue. La France de 1960 n'avait plus rien à voir avec la France colonialiste du temps de Jules Ferry. C'était une époque dépassée, tout comme la marine à voiles.

Mais tout le monde ne l'avait pas encore compris. En revanche, de Gaulle l'avait compris. C'est pour cela qu'il a accepté d'accorder l'indépendance aux colonies.

Charles de Gaulle, le décolonisateur.

Cependant, cette indépendance n'était pas complète. En effet, de Gaulle ne voulait pas pour autant renoncer aux richesses africaines (bois exotiques, minéraux, pétrole, etc). Lui et plusieurs de ses successeurs ont donc fait en sorte de garder des relations avec les anciennes colonies.

Ainsi, la France soutenait les gouvernements de ces pays, même des dictatures féroces, dans tous les domaines. Et en échange, ils restaient sous la tutelle de l'Élysée et favorisaient ses intérêts. La France pouvait donc continuer d'exploiter ses anciennes colonies.

Paris est même allé jusqu'à effectuer des coups d'État. Par exemple, Léon Mba, le président gabonais qui était lié à l'Élysée, fut renversé en 1964 à cause de sa dérive autoritaire. L'armée française est donc intervenue pour le remettre au pouvoir. Et ce n'est pas le seul exemple.

https://www.google.fr/url?sa=t&source=web&rct=j&url=https://fr.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/L%25C3%25A9on_Mba&ved=2ahUKEwiA6JfpltXqAhU78uAKHQ59DEEQFjALegQIAhAB&usg=AOvVaw3yW5r0H5wHvUT3nnDqGc8N

Les Africains, premiers responsables

Toutefois, les premiers responsables de cette situation sont les Africains eux-mêmes. Lorsque ces nouveaux pays ont accédé à l'indépendance, rien ne les obligeait à garder une influence française dans leurs affaires.

Vers 1960, comme je l'ai déjà dit, la colonisation n'était plus possible. Les Français étaient contraints de se retirer de leurs colonies, ils ne pouvaient donc pas obliger les gouvernements africains à garder des liens avec eux.

Si en 1960, les nouveaux dirigeants africains avaient refusé de garder une influence française, que se serait-il donc passé ? La France aurait refusé de se retirer de ces pays et aurait continué d'y imposer le régime colonial ? Ces pays seraient alors restés des colonies françaises, comme du temps de Jules Ferry, jusqu'à nos jours ? Ce n'est pas du tout réaliste !

Affiche de propagande coloniale des années 1890. Mais en 1960, ceci était totalement révolu. Qu'en serait-il aujourd'hui ?!

La France était donc obligée de partir de ces pays. Si leurs gouvernements ont accepté néanmoins de garder des liens avec elle, c'est parce qu'ils le voulaient, cela les arrangeait. Ce sont eux, les premiers responsables.

Les temps changent

Mais aujourd'hui, la situation a bien changé, la France a perdu beaucoup de son influence sur ses anciennes colonies. La Françafrique a disparu progressivement au fil des décennies. La situation n'est plus comparable aux années 60 ou 70. La France ne mène plus de coups d'État en Afrique depuis longtemps.

Certes, de nos jours, l'Élysée conserve encore des liens avec certains États africains, et des entreprises françaises continuent sans doute d'exploiter des ressources naturelles au détriment des populations locales.

Une mine d'or. Les ressources naturelles sont abondantes mais elles sont souvent exploitées par des entreprises étrangères et leurs profits ne reviennent pas au pays. Il y a donc bien exploitation.

Cependant, cette exploitation se réalise uniquement en profitant de la corruption des élites incompétentes et cupides. Autrement dit, ces entreprises françaises (et pas que françaises) peuvent agir ainsi parce que les autorités africaines corrompues décident de les laisser faire.

De plus, et c'est probablement l'élément le plus important, les Français ne sont plus que des profiteurs parmi d'autres en Afrique.

En effet, d'autres puissances étrangères sont entrées dans le jeu ces dernières décennies, notamment les puissances asiatiques comme la Chine, le Japon, l'Inde. Et ces pays sont maintenant beaucoup plus populaires que la France auprès des États africains.

https://www.google.fr/url?sa=t&source=web&rct=j&url=https://www.nofi.media/2019/04/afrique-francophone/64812&ved=2ahUKEwjv9rjJkNXqAhVqxYUKHaU1CE4QFjAEegQIDRAI&usg=AOvVaw3Ye9j64ZG1mOazcyaQkewR

https://www.google.fr/url?sa=t&source=web&rct=j&url=https://www.lemonde.fr/afrique/article/2020/02/06/la-france-en-afrique-un-partenaire-d-affaires-de-moins-en-moins-particulier_6028642_3212.html&ved=2ahUKEwjj2tjKkdXqAhWrx4UKHaPHBtcQFjAKegQIChAB&usg=AOvVaw0TRfHro6aeDLLyJp7HN7JV

Cet élément est décisif parce que la France n'est maintenant plus la seule puissance étrangère à vouloir profiter des richesses de l'Afrique francophone. Et cela, les dirigeants africains le savent, ils en profitent donc pour jouer sur la concurrence.

Autrement dit, si la France ne les satisfait pas, ils menacent de se tourner vers la Chine, le Japon ou l'Allemagne. Ils en profitent alors pour s'opposer de plus en plus à la France. Évidemment, cette situation ne plaît pas à l'Élysée mais ils n'ont pas le choix.

Irresponsabilité

La France a donc perdu beaucoup d'influence sur ses anciennes colonies et elle continue d'en perdre. Elle s'est faîte largement détrônée par les puissances asiatiques.

Désormais, ce sont les Chinois qui exploitent le plus les richesses de l'Afrique francophone. Et encore une fois, ce sont les gouvernements africains corrompus qui les laissent faire, personne ne les force. Ce sont des irresponsables.

Il faut donc arrêter de dire que c'est la faute des autres. Les problèmes actuels de l'Afrique ne sont pas causés essentiellement par les pays étrangers comme la France ou la Chine. C'est aux Africains eux-mêmes de prendre leurs responsabilités. Suivre Brian Gogarty

Questions similaires

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

Pourquoi les anciennes colonies britanniques semblent-elles avoir moins de ressentiments envers l'Angleterre que les anciennes colonies françaises vis-à-vis de la France ?

Pourquoi la France n'a-t-elle pas comme toutes ses colonies viré tous les Français de chez elle ?

Que pense le peuple français de la surexploitation des ex colonies par la France ?

Quelle colonie était la plus importante pour la France ?

Que deviendra la France sans ses colonies d'Afrique ?

Pourquoi la France ne veut-elle pas se retirer complètement dans les affaires intérieures et extérieures de son ancienne colonie ?

Que serait la France aujourd'hui si elle possédait encore toutes ses colonies ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle du mal à regarder son histoire coloniale en face ?

Pourquoi la France ne peut pas laisser ces colonies de gérer ces problèmes sociaux et Qui sera le prochain président de l'Union Africaine ?

Slimane Azayri Suivre Maniaque des mains propresdim.

Qui sera le prochain président de l'Union africaine ?
Macky Sall, président du Sénégal, sera à partir de fevrier prochain, président de l'union africaine pour la période 2022-2023.

Suivre Slimane Azayri

Questions similaires

Si en 2019 un président africain décidait de sortir son pays du franc CFA, la France va-t-elle bombarder son palais comme elle l'a fait à Laurent Gbagbo de la Côte d'Ivoire ?

Pourquoi le fils du président Denis Sassou Nguesso est mis en examen en France ? Et pourquoi les politiques/PDG français qui ont des biens mal acquis ne sont pas jugés en Afrique ? Est-ce que la France est un pays impérialiste ?

Marine Le Pen peut-elle être élue présidente en 2022 ?

Qui sera, selon vous, le président de la République en 2022 ?

Quelle est la probabilité pour que l'Union européenne se désagrège au cours des prochaines décennies ?

Les peuples d'Afrique subsaharienne ne veulent pas de la présence militaire française. Les présidents du G5 sahels font la sourde oreille, suppliant Macron de continuer à spoiler les matières premières. Sont-ils les marionnettes de l'élite française?

Quelle sera la punition du type qui a giflé le président Macron ?

Si vous deviez choisir qui sera le prochain dirigeant de la France, qui serait-ce ?

En ce début de quinquennat, pensez-vous qu'Emmanuel Macron pourrait se faire réélire en 2022 ?

La France a-t-elle vraiment assassiné des présidents africains et déstabiliser plusieurs pays africains après la colonisation ?

Quelle est l'importance de la colonisation pour les Africains ?

Qui sera probablement le prochain président chinois en 2023 ?

Pourquoi beaucoup prétendent que l'Afrique nourrit l'UE, principalement la France ? L'intervention française en Afrique contribue-t-elle à l'économie de l'UE ? (QT)

Si les présidentielles 2022 se jouaient sur un ring de boxe, qui serait le prochain président selon vous ?

Quel dirigeant a le mieux géré la pandémie de la Covid-19 parmi tous les pays du monde ?

AFCON African Cup of Nations News
Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Dec 26

Senegalese-born former France international and Crystal Palace manager Patrick Vieira has insisted that the Africa Cup of Nations deserves more respect. "I respect and understand the passion and the importance to players to go and represent their country so I will never stop any player going to play the Africa Cup of Nations," the ex-Arsenal captain said. "I believe that that competition needs to be more respected - because this competition is as important as the European Championships."

Le gouvernement sénégalais a acheté un avion Airbus « A320 Néo flambant neuf pour les déplacements du président. Au regard de la crise économique que traverse le pays, comment le gouvernement justifie-t-il un tel achat ?

Anthony Lapeyre Anciennement Ancien militaire 7 mo

La question me parait est-ce que le président du Sénégal a besoin d'un avion de ligne moyen courrier neuf à 90 millions d'Euro pour ses tournées à l'étranger. Un A320 Neo c'est dans les 150 passagers, l'A319 c'était juste un peu moins… Le président sénégalais emmène souvent de telles délégations ?

Pour moins de 20 milllions vous trouvez de très beaux Jet Falcon, tout aussi prestigieux bien qu'ils n'emmènent une vingtaine de passagers et si vous voulez frimer de temps en temps ou emmener la famille faire shopping vous affrétez l'un des gros Airbus d'Air Senegal. Ca me parait plus économique. Suivre Anthony Lapeyre

Questions similaires

De quel droit la France a-t-elle détruit toute l'aviation ivoirienne en 2004 ?

Pourquoi les Beluga de chez Airbus ne sont pas mis à disposition de la nation en ce moment ?

Le gouvernement algérien a-t-il atteint le sommet de l'imbécillité en interdisant le survol de son territoire aux avions français ?

L'Algerie a décidé d'interdire le survol de son territoire aux avions de l'armée française. Comment cette décision pourrait-elle avoir des conséquences au Mali et au Sahel ?

Le fait que l'avion Rafale gagne tous les appels d'offres, cela ne prouve-t-il pas que ce sont les considérations techniques qui l'emportent sur les facteurs politiques ?

La maire de Poitiers supprime les subventions aux aeroclubs : trouvez-vous justifiées les prises de positions d'EELV sur l'aviation ?

L'A380 est-il en train de renaître ? De plus en plus de compagnies semblent vouloir le remettre en service.

Pourquoi un Mirage 2000 français s'est-il crashé au Mali ?

Après 7 années d'opération Barkhane et un résultat en demi-teinte, qu'est ce qui justifie encore la coûteuse intervention de la France dans le Sahel ?

Comment trouvez vous la gestion de votre gouvernement dans votre pays durant cette crise du Covid19?

Air Afrique, Camair : pourquoi tant de faillites dans les compagnies aériennes d'Afrique ?

Comment le Cameroun peut-il résoudre la crise dite Anglophone qui le secoue ?

Pourquoi le président du Tchad Idriss Déby participait-il à des actions militaires ?

Les pilotes de Boeing peuvent-ils piloter des avions Airbus ?

Pourquoi Ben Smith le patron d'Air France KLM est-il optimiste alors que le secteur aéronautique est très touché par la crise ?

Comment se faire de l'argent au Sénégal ?

Quelene Jacquelin Comment se faire de l'argent au Sénégal

Marketing chez Business-to-Business (2019–aujourd'hui) 28 déc.

Internet n'est pas que le meilleur outil de communication. Il regorge aussi d'opportunités qui vous permettent de gagner beaucoup d'argent. Il s'agit souvent d'activités commerciales, comme le commerce électronique, l'e-marketing ou encore l'e-business.

Beaucoup de personnes pensent que ce genre d'activités ne sont destinées qu'aux particuliers et aux entreprises. En réalité, toute personne peut mener une activité économique sur Internet, à condition que cette dernière possède les outils et surtout l'expérience qu'il faut.

Cerise sur le gâteau, vous pouvez mener ces différentes activités depuis votre domicile tout en exerçant d'autres activités parallèlement. Mais pour mener une activité commerciale en ligne à votre propre compte sur Internet, vous allez devoir acquérir des connaissances en matière de création de boutiques en ligne, et maîtriser les meilleures stratégies de vente et de campagne marketing en ligne.

Outre le fait d'être un e-commerçant à votre propre compte et de gagner de l'argent, vous pouvez également travailler en freelance pour des entreprises en tant que transcripteur, traducteur ou web rédacteur.

Vous pouvez aussi travailler pour une entreprise en tant qu'affilié sur les médias sociaux. En parlant de réseaux sociaux, beaucoup de personnes n'ont pas conscience qu'ils constituent de véritables marchés de consommateurs qui peuvent être utilisés pour développer votre petit commerce, un petit business ou encore votre petite entreprise.

En plus, ils sont faciles à utiliser, pratiques et ne nécessitent pas une des connaissances ni un diplôme particulier, juste un certain savoir-faire. Même sans Internet dans la vie réelle, vous pouvez également trouver beaucoup d'emplois rentables.

Notes de bas de page

[1] Votre boutique de produits digitaux

Questions similaires

Avec 50.000 FCFA qu'est-ce qu'on peut investir ici au Sénégal ?
L'affiliation est-il possible au Sénégal ?
Comment gagner facilement de l'argent sur internet sans travailler et sans dépenser le moindre centime ?
Connaissez-vous le Sénégal ?
Que faire pour me faire de l'argent sur le net étant en Côte d'Ivoire précisément en Afrique de l'Ouest ?
Comment vivre au Sénégal?
Comment gagner de l'argent en ligne en étant dans un pays africain ?
Que me proposez-vous pour gagner de l'argent étant en Afrique ?
Comment SEO fonctionne au Sénégal et pourquoi ?
Comment peut-on faire de l'argent avec internet ?

Black History & Politics

Follow Posted by Cheryl Brown Jan 11

Historian, anthropologist, physicist, and politician Cheikh Anta Diop born on December 29 1923 was a Senegalese who studied the human race's origins and pre-colonial African culture.

The institution of slavery was built on violence and intimidation, but it thrived on ignorance. Whites and Blacks alike were systematically instructed to believe that whites were superior and that Black people had contributed nothing to civilization. The battle for emancipation and the later civil rights movement in the United States as well as the liberation struggles of the various African nations depended in no small measure on the historians, scholars and writers who dedicated themselves to exposing these lies and uncovering the truth about Africa's place in the story of civilization.

One such scholar was #CheikhAntaDiop. Born in 1923 into an aristocratic muslim family, Diop came of age during the period after the second world war when the European colonies in Africa were demanding independence. A national hero in his native Senegal, Diop's research challenged the prevailing notion that Ancient Egypt was somehow not "African," and that any sign of advanced civilization in Africa - be it cultural, architectural or theoretical - was the product of contact with non-Africans, usually whites. He also argued that there is a "cultural unity" that connects African societies in numerous ways and dedicated his life to exploring and exposing the greatness of Africa's past and the richness of African culture.

Diop's best known work, The African Origin of Civilization, was translated into English and published in 1974. In it Diop asserted that the ancient Egyptian civilization so revered by European scholars of various disciplines was in fact the work of Black Africans, and that much of the prevailing scholarship of the time was tainted by racism. Although his work never gained universal acceptance, Cheikh Anta Diop has secured his place in history for his contribution to the fight to free our minds - the first step in any liberation movement.

#FredJohnson for #BHMD Art By: #reedrmccants

Sports | CAN 2022:
Mané porte les Lions de la Teranga sur le toit de l'Afrique!

Les stars d'Afrique · Suivre Publication par David-GDK dim.

Cest un match qui a démarré sur les chapeaux de roues avec un penalty sifflé pour les Sénégalais juste après sept minutes de jeu, et manqué par Sadio Mané. Les Lions de la Teranga ont largement dominé la première période sans trouver le chemin des buts.

C'est sur cette même configuration que les deux équipes ont repris la seconde période. Malgré plusieurs occasions obtenues, les Sénégalais ne sont pas parvenus à concrétiser au cours du temps réglementaire.

Il a fallu attendre les séances des tirs aux buts pour voir Sadio Mané et ses coéquipiers porter le Sénégal sur le toit de l'Afrique.

Les Lions de la Teranga remportent leur premier trophée continental après avoir perdu deux finales (2002 et 2019) !

20 ans après avoir raté un penalty en face au Cameroun, Aliou Cissé est champion d'Afrique dans la peau d'entraîneur.

News Nigeria
Fans waiting for the Senegalese players as they welcome them after their historic win yesterday.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Tue

…and today has been declared a public holiday

Sports | CAN 2022 : Mané porte les Lions de la Teranga sur le toit de l'Afrique !

David-GDK Connaissances : Anglais dim.

Cest un match qui a démarré sur les chapeaux de roues avec un penalty sifflé pour les Sénégalais juste après sept minutes de jeu, et manqué par Sadio Mané. Les Lions de la Teranga ont largement dominé la première période sans trouver le chemin des buts.
C'est sur cette même configuration que les deux équipes ont repris la seconde période. Malgré plusieurs occasions obtenues, les Sénégalais ne sont pas parvenus à concrétiser au cours du temps réglementaire.

Il a fallu attendre les séances des tirs aux buts pour voir Sadio Mané et ses coéquipiers porter le Sénégal sur le toit de l'Afrique.

Les Lions de la Teranga remportent leur premier trophée continental après avoir perdu deux finales (2002 et 2019) !

20 ans après avoir raté un penalty en face au Cameroun, Aliou Cissé est champion d'Afrique dans la peau d'entraîneur.

Aliou Cisse, the Senegalese coach who led his country to its first Africa Cup of Nations trophy, received a heroic welcome at home. Thousands of people in Dakar lined up to celebrate the new African champions

Aniekpeno Ekong Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria Tue

News Nigeria
SENEGAL ARE AFCON FINALISTS □□

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Feb 2

l ne veut pas entendre parler de l’homos3xualité à légaliser

Le président sénégalais Macky Sall est inébranlable dans ses convictions et sa prise de position sur l'homosexualité. Il n'entend pas être le chef de l'Etat sénégalais pour légitimer cette orientation sexuelle. Son geste, réitéré devant les responsables religieux musulmans, très préoccupés par le débat qui fait rage au Sénégal.

"Tant que je serai chef de l'Etat, le Sénégal ne dépénalisera jamais l'homosexualité", a réitéré le président McKisal devant ses hôtes. A ce titre, il réagit à une campagne perçue comme contre-productive au Sénégal sur la question. Devant les imams et les ulima de Dakar, McKeesaler se veut dur dans la répression de l'homosexualité. Dans ce sens, il a rappelé les dispositions de la loi sénégalaise en la matière.

Macky Sall assure à l'imam qu'il ne fera aucun compromis sur l'homosexualité au Sénégal. Son message était très clair. Il a ramené tous ceux qui craignaient de se disputer en vertu de l'article 319 du code pénal. L'article utilise ces termes pour réprimer l'homosexualité, punissant quiconque « commet un acte contre nature avec une personne de même sexe » d'une peine de prison entre un et cinq ans. Mais les treize délégués porteurs du nouveau projet de loi veulent aller plus loin. "Le but est de supprimer toute perversion dans les espaces publics.

DANS LA VIE CROYEZ EN VOS RÊVES QUELQUES SOIENT VOS MOYENS ET VOTRE RANG SOCIAL. Grand p et la légende du football @Cristiano Ronaldo vous passent le salam …
(plus)

David-GDK
Connaissances : Anglais12 févr.

L'histoire et l'ascension d'Édouard Mendy sont tellement motivantes :
2014 : Au chômage

2015 : Rejoint la réserve de l'OM

2016 : Signe à Reims (L2)

2018 : Promu en Ligue 1

2020: Signe à Chelsea

2021 : Remporte la LDC

2021 : meilleur gardien de la LDC

2021 : Remporte la Super coupe d'Europe

2022 : Élu meilleur gardien FIFA

2022 : Élu meilleur gardien FIFA

2022 : Élu meilleur gardien de la CAN

Edouard Mendy a gravi tous les échelons. Respect.

Edouard Mendy a gravi tous les échelons. Respect.

David-GDK

Sadio Mané : « Macky Sall nous appelait souvent au téléphone, il a beaucoup joué sur notre mental »Bonjour …

Dans quelle mesure le Sénégal est-il laïque ?

La constitution du Sénégal est basée sur une forme de laïcité proche de celle de la France.

Comme en France, l'état est laïc mais pas la population qui au Sénégal est très religieuse (comme dans la plupart des pays du monde en fait)

La majorité est musulmane : les chiffres divergent mais les plus fiables sont de 88% musulman et 12% catholique, mais je sais que tout le monde n'est pas d'accord sur ces pourcentages.

De façon étonnante pour un pays aussi pauvre, le Sénégal est assez imperméable à la pénétration islamiste.

Les raisons de cette résistance sont bien cette laïcité *à la sénégalaise historique, héritage français pour une part mais pas seulement, et également les confréries soufis.

Au pays de la Teranga, la liberté de penser et de parler existent. L'Etat manque cruellement de moyen mais arrive globalement à faire respecter la loi. Il est ainsi légalement possible de changer de religion, ou à une femme musulmane d'épouser un chrétien sans forcer celui-ci à se convertir : ceci est quasiment unique dans le monde musulman !

Musulmans et chrétiens vivent plutôt en bonne entente, s'invitent entre eux (ils sont pratiquement tous "sénégalais de souche" !) etc. Cette paix religieuse est principalement due au soufisme qui n'applique pas, de façon volontaire et explicite, certains passages du Coran.

En effet les musulmans sont dans leur très vaste majorité soufis : Tidjanes, Mourides, Qadres et Layènes. Les deux principales confréries sont un pouvoir religieux mais également politique, économique et financier de premier plan. Les Mourides sont les plus structurés et les plus riches. Les chefs de ces confréries voient d'un très mauvais œil la propagande islamiste, qu'elle soit salafiste ou des Frères Musulmans, car ces derniers sont une menace pour leur pouvoir.

Malgré l'attachement des Sénégalais pour leur laïcité, on voit malgré tout des mosquées au départ « non-soufis » puis islamistes se développer dans le pays, souvent grâce à des financements étrangers. C’est ainsi que plusieurs mosquées ont été rasées et l’imam mis en prison. Mais le Sénégal doit absolument rester sur ses gardes.

Pour mémoire, les chrétiens se trouvent majoritairement dans le Sine Saloum (au sud de Dakar) et en Casamance (au sud de la Gambie). On trouve quelques communautés près de Saint-Louis dans le nord et de très nombreuses paroisses à Dakar.

« Un peuple, un but, une foi »

THE FORGOTTEN HISTORY of the Almoravids

Aniekpeno Ekong Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria 4h

The almoravids were a fanatical group of islamized West Africans from deep within the Senegal river, who had gone up to the Iberian peninsula and taken over the lands of the Visigoths, an European tribe that was in what became Spain. This had collapsed the Visigoth kingdom, starting from 711 CE. The Almoravids had taken over what became Portugal as well, and had moved up into the South of France. Their advance into Europa was halted by Charles Martel.

Their control of the Iberian peninsula brought material civilization into the South of Europa that made Portugal and Spain the most Advanced places in Europa. This had made Portugal to become the maritime nation of Europa, followed by Spain. Britain and France were to join the seafaring countries of Europa in the 16th century CE.

During the rule of these Africans in Spain, the Jews in the south of Europa were liberated from the repressive control of the Visigoths. Street lighting was introduced into Spain for the first time during the reign of these Africans. Statecraft and organized agriculture was also introduced, modelled after the agriculture of the regions of the Niger river in West Africa. Before then, no European country had ever become an agricultural society. That was come into some societies of Europa in the 18th century CE. Soap was introduced by the Romans into Europa during the era of PAX Romana in the 1st century CE, but by the 7th century CE, after the fall of Rome, Europe had forgotten soap. Queen Victoria once boasted that she was 'the most clean person in Europe,' for taking one bath in a month. According to historian, Walter Rodney, in 'How Europe Underdeveloped Africa', the idea in Oxford of the 14th century CE was that "bathing was a dangerous affair" and Europeans desisted from bathing. This had brought about deadly plagues in Medieval Europe, so much so that historian and Anthropologist, Ivan Van Sertima(in the Golden Age of The Moor) stated that when people in Europe took out garbage in the morning, dead bodies were also collected and disposed of, daily.

The Almoravids had changed the situation by reintroducing bath houses and soap into the lands they controlled. This was to later spread into Europe over several centuries.

The university of Salamanca, in Spain, was the first university in Europe, it was modelled after the university of Djenne in West Africa, a university that began from the 3rd century CE. It was built and taught in by African scribes and later some Jews from north Africa. The number system, known to us today as hindu-arabic numerals(123) was brought into Europe by these Africans from the Senegal river. 'zero' was later introduced by the Arabs. Europeans of this era had rejected this number system as "signs of the devil." This had slowed down the development of mathematics and engineering in Europe until about the 13th century CE when Europe decided to connect back to Raman ways (and of course, Greek ways) that it had rejected in the 5th century CE; a situation that, among many other awkward events of that time, had led to the collapse of the western Roman empire.

Public water system, air-conditioning, eyeglasses (which were first produced in the university of Djenne in the 11th century CE), paved roads, literature, musical instruments, university education, science, medicine, organized architecture, alchemy and so on were introduced into most Europe from Spain where the Africans had settled. This was to later birthed the 'renaissance era' in Europa (which became Europe in the 17th century CE).

In the 14th century CE, these Africans began to fight among themselves, together with the Arabs. Almoravids, Almahads and Ummayads Muslims were often in disagreement, while at the same time, Christianity that had began to spread into most of Europe from the 9th century CE was unifying European tribes like the Magyars (under Almos), Lombards, Goths, Franks, Saxons, Gauls and so on under the Papacy.

In 1455 CE, Pope Nicholas V wrote a Roman bull (Romans pontifex), declaring all Moors, Saracens and non-christian black-skinned people to be sentenced to perpetual slavery and charged as heretics during the early stages of the inquisition. On February, 2, 1492, Africans that were known as Moors in Europe (like the Moor in Shakespeare's Othello) surrendered all their castles in the Iberian peninsula with Spain claiming more of the Moorish territories. The persecutions that followed was so great and inhumane, to a point that the new caliph of the Ottoman empire had to send ships to escort fleeing Jews to settle in his conquered lands. Those Africans who were Christians remained a parts of Europa up to the 18th century CE, even after racialism became prevalent in Europe. Among such was king Kasper (whose statue was erected in Schaffhausen, Switzerland in 1520 CE), St Maurice (who was from what is today Nigeria) and several notable African figures in Medieval Europe.

Some Africans had flee back to North and West Africa, especially into Mauritania, Morocco and the Songhai empire. This eventually brought unrest into West Africa that had spread down to the Songhai empire and led to its collapse in 1593 CE, under emperor Askia Ishaq. This had happened when the Moroccan crown hired Judar Pasha and European mercenaries to loot Songhai empire, using canons and gunpowder which was yet to be introduced at a large scale in West Africa. It had taken 1400 goldsmith to melt down the gold that was brought back to Morocco by Judar Pasha in 1599 CE. Judar Pasha was given 30 camels load of gold for his services to the Moroccan crown.

By this time, the Almoravids were long forgotten in history.

After the fall of the Songhai empire, West Africa split into different polities as can been seen in the maps. When Europeans began invading the coastal areas, there was no organized, central polity to stand up with 'one voice' and action against the foreigners.

"The Almoravids did not change the language of the people in Spain and Portugal, they did not suppressed their culture, they did not deny their humanity" -(Dr John Henrik Clarke).

Dans son livre Nations Nègres et Culture, Cheikh Anta Diop est-il vraiment impartial ?

Remi Beral grand passionné d'histoire Mis à jour le mer.

Je suis en train de le lire et j'ai découvert avec effarement que Diop n'hésitait pas à utiliser des sources complètement fausses ou périmées pour soutenir sa thèse. L'usage de telles sources montre qu'il était soit idiot, soit aveuglé par ses idées.

Je penche pour la seconde option. De plus je remarque qu'il ne prend jamais le temps de définir le mot "nègre" alors que c'est un des élément fondamental de son travail. Pourtant au lycée, l'une des première chose que l'on m'a appris en philosophie est de définir tous les termes du sujet, même les plus évidents, de manière à s'assurer que le lecteur et l'auteur parlent bien de la même chose. Faute de savoir ce que veut dire "nègre" pour Cheikh Anta Diop, on reste dans le flou.

Attention, je précise que cette réponse ne cherche pas à savoir si les égyptiens de l'antiquité étaient noirs ou non mais seulement à savoir ce que contient Nations nègres et culture comme erreurs graves.

Je précise également que Cheikh Anta Diop défendait deux thèses. La plus connue est celle de l'Egypte noire. L'autre est celle de la supériorité et de l'antériorité de la civilisation égyptienne. En commentaire on me rappel que Diop était également un des premier à défendre l'idée selon laquelle l'homme serait originaire d'Afrique. Sur ce dernier point il avait raison.

Quelques exemples choquant :

1 le trucage

Sur la couverture du livre apparaît cette image :

Sa légende :

les races humaines vues par les égyptiens sur ces fresques reproduites du tombeau de Ramsès III s'affirment ans équivoque : la parenté de l'égyptien (personnage A) ou Remetou "les hommes par excellence" avec le nubien (C) ou Nehesiou leur différence raciale évidente avec l'indo-européen (B) Libyen ou Temehou, et avec le Semite (D) ou Amou

Cependant quand je regarde cette image et que je me fie à la couleur de la peau, aux cheveux, aux vêtements et aux accessoires, je vois un nubien (A), un libyen (B), un autre nubien exactement semblable au premier (C) et un asiatique (D).

Curieux je suis allé chercher cette image sur internet pour savoir ce que veulent dire les textes hiéroglyphiques inscrits dessus. Je n'ai pas trouvé les traductions mais j'ai trouvé ça :

Il s'agit de l'image complète, non troquée, telle de Lepsius la produisit au XIXe siècle en rassemblant plusieurs personnages.

Ce qui saute aux yeux : Les trois premiers personnages (les deux bouchers et le premier grand personnage en partant de la gauche) correspondent parfaitement à l'égyptien de par leurs couleurs de peau, leur coiffure, leurs vêtements et accessoires. Ne lisant pas les hiéroglyphes, je ne peut que faire des suppositions pour les autres. Je vois donc dans l'ordre, après l'égyptien, un asiatique (terme utilisé en égyptologie pour englober le Levant, l'Anatolie et la Mésopotamie), un nubien, un Libyen (ou berbère). A la ligne en dessous j'ai déjà proposé ma description.

Le média Nofi, pourtant acquis aux idées de Diop, n'hésite pas à dire que sur cette image, "la représentation de l’Egyptien de manière identique au Soudanais ne peut être considéré comme une preuve solide de la ‘négritude’ des Egyptiens anciens."

Quatre mythes 'noirs' répandus sur l'Egypte ancienne

Le caractère négro-africain de l'Egypte pharaonique a et continue à générer un grand nombre de discussions.

https://www.nofi.media/2015/06/mythes-egypte-ancienne/19116

Pour vous convaincre que les premiers sont égyptiens et qu'il n'y en a aucun sur le registre du bas, voici quelques images (regardez les vêtements, ce sont de bons indicateurs) :

2 la manipulation

"D'après la Bible, l'Egypte était peuplée par la descendance de Cham, ancêtre des nègres" chapitre 1 Il y a d'énormes problèmes avec ce passage que je vous cite :

En ce qui concerne le témoignage de la Bible, il faut apporter quelques précisions.
Que vaut le témoignage de la Bible ?

Pour répondre à cette question il nous faut examiner la genèse du peuple juif. Qu'est donc le peuple juif, comment est-il né, comment a-t-il engendré cette littérature qu'est la Bible, et dans laquelle la descendance de Kam, ancêtre des nègres et des égyptiens serait ainsi maudite ? Quelle serait l'origine historique de cette malédiction ?

Ceux qui allaient devenir les juifs entrèrent en Egypte au nombre de 70 bergers incultes et craintifs, chassés de Palestine par la famine et attiré par le paradis terrestre qu'est la vallée du Nil.

Bien que l'égyptien eût une horreur particulière pour la vie nomade et des bergers, grâce à Joseph ils furent d'abord bien accueillis. Selon la Bible ils se seraient installés dans le pays de Gozen et devinrent les bergers des troupeaux de Pharaon… Après la mort de Joseph et du pharaon "protecteur" et devant la multiplication des juifs, des réflexes naquirent chez les égyptiens, dans des circonstances encore mal définies. La condition des juifs deviendra de plus en plus dure ; s'il on en croit la Bible ils seraient employés à des travaux de terrassement ; ils auraient ainsi servi de main d'œuvre pour la construction de la ville de Ramsès. Les égyptiens auraient pris des mesures pur limiter le nombre des naissances et éliminer les enfants mâles, de peur que cette minorité ethnique se développe et constitue un danger national qui, en période de guerre pourrait grossir le rang des adversaires.
[citation de la Bible]

C'est ainsi que commencèrent les premières persécutions dont le peuple juif restera marqué durant toute son histoire.

La minorité juive vivra désormais replié sur elle-même, elle deviendra messianique par la souffrance et l'humiliation. Un tel terrain moral fait de misère et d'espoir était favorable à l'éclosion ou au développement du sentiment religieux. les circonstances étaient d'autant plus favorables que ce peuple de bergers, sans industrie, sans organisation sociale (la seule cellule sociale étant la famille patriarcale), armé tout au plus de bâtons, ne pouvait envisager aucune réaction positive devant la supériorité technique du peuple égyptien.

C'est dans ces circonstances qu'apparaîtra Moïse, le premier prophète juif, qui en élaborant l'histoire du peuple hébreu depuis ses origines, nous la présentera rétrospectivement sous un angle religieux. C'est ainsi qu'il fera dire à Abraham tant de choses que celui-ci ne pouvait prévoir, tel que le séjour de 400 ans en Egypte, etc., etc.

Moïse vivait à l'époque de Tell el-Amarna, où Akhénaton tenta de rénover le monothéisme égyptien primitif qui s'estompait sous l'appareil sacerdotal et la corruption des prêtres.
Akhénaton semble avoir tenté d'appuyer le centralisme politique dans l'immense empire qui venait d'être conquis, sur un centralisme religieux : l'empire avait besoin d'une religion universelle.

Moïse aurait été touché par cette réforme religieuse. Il s'était fait, à partir de ce moment, le champion du monothéisme dans le milieu juif.

Le monothéisme dans toute son abstraction existait déjà en Egypte qui, elle-même lavait emprunté au Soudan Méroïtique, Ethiopie des anciens. [citation de D.P. de Pédrals, Archéologie de l'Afrique noire, 1950]

Dans l'atmosphère d'insécurité où se trouvait le peuple juif en Egypte, un dieu prometteur de lendemains sûrs était le soutien moral irremplaçable. Ainsi après les réticences du début, ce peuple qui ne semblait pas avoir connu le monothéisme jusque là, contrairement à l'opinion de ceux qui veulent en faire son inventeur, le porta néanmoins à un degré de développement considérable.

A l'aide de la foi, Moïse conduira le peuple hébreu hors d'Egypte. Celui-ci se serait lassé très vite de ce culte et ne serait revenu que progressivement au monothéisme (Vau d'Or d'Aaron au pied du Sinaï).

Entrés en Egypte au nombre de 70 berges organisés en 12 familles patriarcales, nomade, sans industrie, sans culture, le peuple juif en sort 400 ans plus tard au nombre de 600 000, après y avoir puisé tous les éléments de sa tradition future et, en particulier, le monothéisme.
Si le peuple égyptien a tant fait souffrir le peuple égyptien comme le dit la Bible, et si le peuple égyptien est un peuple de nègres descendants de Cham comme le dit la Bible, on ne peut plus ignorer en dépit de la légende de Noé ivre, les causes historiques de la malédiction de Cham issue de la littérature juive entièrement postérieure à cette période de persécution.

Aussi Moïse dans la Genèse attribuera à l'Eternel s'adressant à Abraham en songes, les paroles suivantes "Sache que tes descendants seront étrangers dans un pays qui ne sera point à eux ; Ils y seront opprimés et asservis pendant 400 ans (1). Mais je jugerais la nation à laquelle ils seront asservis et ils sortiront ensuite avec de grandes richesses" (Genese, XV, 13)

Nous sommes ici à l'origine de la malédiction de Cham.
Fin de citation. J'ajoute simplement la note (1) :

(1) si la version biblique est tant soit peu exacte, comment le peuple juif pourrait-il être exempt de sang nègre ? Pendant 400 ans il serait passé de 70 individus à 600 000 environ au sein d'une nation nègre qui l'a dominé durant cette période. Si les caractères négroïdes des juifs sont moins accusés aujourd'hui, cela est dû, vraisemblablement à leur mélange avec des éléments européens depuis leur dispersion. On est presque certain actuellement que Moïse était égyptien donc nègre. cf Moïse et le monothéisme de Freud.

Garez bien en tête que dans les années 1950 le concept de race était encore à la mode. Cheikh Anta Diop n'a fait que s'en saisir. Certains de ces propos peuvent nous paraître choquants mais ils était normaux pour l'époque.

Le premier problème grave est l'utilisation d'un récit mythologique issu de la Bible comme source historique. Je suis presque sûr que dans les années 1950–70 pratiquement plus aucun historien sérieux n'avait ce genre de démarche. Diop croyait il vraiment à ce que raconte la Bible ? Une telle utilisation de ce texte à cette époque était elle envisageable ? Je ne puis y répondre (Marc Laubier le pourra peut-être).

Mais s'il n'y avait que le problème de l'utilisation de la Bible comme source historique ce ne serait pas si grave.

Diop rabaisse les juifs pour mieux grandir les égyptiens "peuple de bergers, sans industrie, sans organisation sociale (la seule cellule sociale étant la famille patriarcale), armé tout au plus de bâtons, ne pouvait envisager aucune réaction positive devant la supériorité technique du peuple égyptien. " "nomade, sans industrie, sans culture"

Diop fait du mauvais souvenir que les hébreux ont eu de leur passage en Egypte l'origine de la malédiction de Cham "on ne peut plus ignorer en dépit de la légende de Noé ivre, les causes historiques de la malédiction de Cham issue de la littérature juive entièrement postérieure à cette période de persécution."

Diop raconte n'importe quoi sur les égyptiens, bien qu'une partie de ce n'importe quoi est peut-être attribuable à un manque de connaissance archéologique à cette époque. Quoi qu'il en soit, Diop fait les mêmes erreurs que les savants qu'il prétendait combattre :

"Bien que l'égyptien eût une horreur particulière pour la vie nomade et des bergers" Faux. Les égyptiens vivaient avec de nombreuses populations nomades qui parcouraient le désert et l'orient et qui entretenaient les principales voies commerciales terrestres. On sait de nos jours que les ancêtres des égyptiens étaient en partie des nomades.

"Akhénaton semble avoir tenté d'appuyer le centralisme politique dans l'immense empire qui venait d'être conquis, sur un centralisme religieux : l'empire avait besoin d'une religion universelle. " "cf Moïse et le monothéisme de Freud. " Dans les années 1950 cette idée de Freud était assez populaire il me semble. Depuis elle a été remise totalement en question.

"Le monothéisme dans toute son abstraction existait déjà en Egypte qui, elle-même lavait emprunté au Soudan Méroïtique, Ethiopie des anciens." Une petite approche de la religion égyptienne qui comptait des milliers de dieux permet d'évacuer immédiatement cette idée. L'idée que le monothéisme vienne du soudan est encore plus absurde. "contrairement à l'opinion de ceux qui veulent en faire son inventeur" Pourtant le premier véritable monothéisme connu est bien celui des hébreux. Akhénaton lui-même n'était pas monothéiste. "Celui-ci se serait lassé très vite de ce culte et ne serait revenu que progressivement au monothéisme (Vau d'Or d'Aaron au pied du Sinaï). " Ce qui confirme bien que les hébreux n'ont pas pris le monothéisme en Egypte.

"Moïse vivait à l'époque de Tell el-Amarna" Si Moïse a réellement existé, ce qui est moins que probable, la période de son existence est encore plus incertaine. Selon les auteurs elle se situe généralement quelque part entre le XVe siècle et le XIIe siècle.
Et le pire de tout "D'après la Bible, l'Egypte était peuplée par la descendance de Cham, ancêtre des nègres" Selon la Bible Cham est l'ancêtre des peuples d'Afrique et d'une partie du Moyen Orient. C'est tout. Il n'est jamais dit que Cham est l'ancêtre des nègres. D'où vient cette idée que les descendants de Cham sont noirs ?

Ham a commis un acte répréhensible mais c’est son fils Canaan qui est maudit. Nulle part il n’est dit dans ce passage que Ham et Canaan soient de couleur noire. On ne peut le penser que par induction, à partir de ce qui suit dans le chapitre 10, et encore de façon hautement problématique. Ce chapitre 10 présente en effet ce que l’on a coutume de définir comme la « table des nations », c’est-à-dire les généalogies fondatrices des peuples de l’humanité en tant qu’elles remontent aux trois fils de Noé. Nous y apprenons que Ham eut quatre enfants, Cush, Mitsraïm, Put et Canaan, ce dernier étant le père des peuples de Canaan.

De par l'usage ultérieur du nom (« Cushim », les « Noirs »), nous savons que Cush est identifié à l'Afrique noire (Mitsraïm est connu pour désigner l'Égypte et Put, la Libye) mais nous ne lisons jamais dans le texte biblique que les frères de Cush étaient noirs. C'est donc par déduction que l'on peut aboutir à l'idée que Ham, ayant un fils noir, aurait pu être noir. Nous ne lisons jamais pourtant que Canaan fut de race noire.

[…] C'est à l'époque post-biblique que le terme de Cush désigne l'Afrique noire. […] Pour revenir à l'identification problématique de Ham à la couleur noire, il existe aussi une autre piste que celle de Cush et des Cushim. Le mot de Ham, lui-même, peut se prêter à une telle interprétation. Ham, Hom / chaleur et / Hum-marron sont très proches. Il y a aussi Mefuham / carbonisé, noir comme le charbon. Une question se pose cependant : si Ham est Hom / marron, d'où lui viendrait sa couleur si ses autres frères et son père sont blancs ? C'est là que l'on retrouve les étiologies du péché de Ham, l'imaginaire qui se développe à partir du texte. La couleur de la peau tout comme la servitude sont mises en rapport avec le péché de Ham, péché en rapport avec le sexe. […]

La connotation morale des couleurs pourrait aussi venir de Philon. À ses yeux, les trois fils de Noé sont des symboles : Sem incarne le bien, Ham, le mal, Japhet, l'indifférent, le moralement neutre. Si la famille de Noé est l'ancêtre de l'humanité ayant survécu au déluge, les différentes races doivent en effet pour Philon y trouver leur source. Ainsi s'expliquent les tentatives d'identifier les trois fils à des races différentes […] L'islam fera un usage immodéré de la malédiction de Ham pour asseoir la légitimité de l'esclavage africain que la conquête islamique allait considérablement développer.
https://www.cairn.info/revue-pardes-2008-1-page-9.htm

Pour résumer, Cham est noir car un de ses fils a peuplé l'Afrique subsaharienne et que les population de cette région du monde sont noire. Les égyptiens étaient des descendants de Cham. Donc les égyptiens étaient noirs. Ca revient à dire que les égyptiens étaient noirs parce que les subsahariens sont noirs.

3 le mensonge

"l'organisation politique des états africains était égale - et souvent supérieure - à celle de leurs (les européens) propres états respectifs. […] Par contre, pour toutes les raisons déjà indiquées, le développement technique était moins accentué qu'en Europe. Le nègre, bien qu'il eut été le premier à découvrir le fer (ce qui est vrai il me semble) n'avaient pas construit de canons ; le secret de la poudre n'était connu que des prêtres égyptiens qui ne l'utilisait qu'à des usages religieux" Chapitre II

Je dois vous avouer qu'en lisant ce passage je suis passé des larmes de rire à la crise cardiaque.

l'organisation politique des états africains était égale - et souvent supérieure - à celle de leurs (les européens) propres états respectifs.

Ca ne veut rien dire. Cheikh Anta Diop qui se fait une mission de combattre le jugement négatif que les européens portaient à l'Afrique se met à porter un jugement négatif sur l'Europe. Diop utilise tout l'argumentaire européen à l'envers. Il porte un jugement sans fondement pour justifier je ne sais quoi. On appelle ça de l'afrocentrisme. Si quelqu'un est capable de me dire ce qu'est une organisation politique supérieure je suis preneur. le secret de la poudre n'était connu que des prêtres égyptiens

Bon… quand j'ai lu ça la première fois je n'ai pas compris. Comment Diop pouvait dire une chose pareille ? Heureusement il donne une source : Recherches sur les égyptiens et les chinois, M. de Paw. Titre bizarre. comment peut-on mettre les chinois et les égyptiens dans le même livre ? Alors j'ai cherché Monsieur de Paw sur internet. Je suis tombé sur sa page Wiki Corneille de Pauw Je n'ai pas été déçu. Corneille de Pauw était un sous-diacre catholique et philosophe néerlandais du XVIIIe siècle. Son livre sur les égyptiens et les chinois date de 1774 ! Son propos et de dire, contrairement à l'avis de certains savants, que la civilisation chinoise n'est pas issue de la civilisation égyptienne. Il le fait en abordant des questions alimentaires, sociales, artistiques, etc.

Je ne remet pas en doute le sérieux et la qualité du travail de de Pauw, cependant c'est un auteur du XVIIIe siècle ! Rien ne vous choque ? Je vais le dire autrement. La première fois qu'on a su lire l'écriture égyptienne c'était dans les années 1820. 50 ans après la parution du livre de de Pauw !

Autrement dit, de Pauw a analysé la civilisation égyptienne à partir de trois bouts d'objets qui devaient se promener en Europe, à partir de gravures, de croquis et de dessins et à partir des textes bibliques et antiques. De Pauw n'avait donc aucune connaissance réelle de la civilisation égyptienne !

Diop savait très bien que de Pauw ne pouvait pas connaître la civilisation égyptienne. Pourtant il le cite. Il se permet même de dire que les égyptiens avaient la poudre alors qu'on savait très bien dans les années 1950 que les chinois l'avait inventé ! Cette citation ne peut être une erreur. Diop cherche à tout prix tous les éléments qui peuvent aller dans son sens sans questionner leur intérêt. C'est ce qu'on appelle de l'idéologie.

4 Le mépris

Ici Diop parle de la Mésopotamie. Je ne sais pas l'étendue des connaissances que l'on avait sur cette civilisation dans les années 1950 mais le mépris sinon le jument de Diop est bien perceptible. Je ne prendrais même pas le temps de détailler tous les problèmes de jugements et de mépris que contient ce passage. Je vous laisse vous faire votre propre avis.

C'est donc en Égypte qu'on rencontre avec une certitude mathématique, la plus ancienne date historique de l'humanité.

Que retrouve-t-on en Mésopotamie ?

Rien qui soit susceptible d'être daté avec certitude ; en Mésopotamie, on construisait en brique crue, séchées au soleil ; ces briques étaient en argile que la pluie transformait en une masse de boue. [note de moi : il n'y a pas de pierre en Mésopotamie alors qu'il en en a partout en Egypte]

Au pyramide d'Égypte, à ses temples, ses obélisques, ses forêt de colonne de Louxor et de Karnak, ses allées de sphinx, ses colosses de Memnon et autres, ses rochers sculptés, ses temples souterrains aux colonnes protodoriques (Deir el-Bahari) de Thèbes, à toute cette réalité architecturale palpable de nos jours, à tous ces témoins historiques qu’aucun dogme ne peut volatiliser, correspondent en Iran (Elam) et Mésopotamie jusqu'au VIIIe siècle (époque des Assyriens) des tumulus d'argile informes.

On décrète que ces tumulus sont les restes de temples et de tours effondrées que l'on s'efforce de reconstituer. C'est ainsi qu'un archéologue américain, Seton Lloyd reconstitue l'intérieur d'un hypothétique temples Babyloniens du 2e au 3e millénaire reproduis par Breasted ; cette reconstitution serait fait d'après les fouilles entreprises par l'Institut oriental de l'Université de Chicago. De telles reconstitutions - y compris celle de la tour de Babel - sont d'une extrême gravité pour l'histoire de l'humanité de par l’illusion qu'elles peuvent créer.[...]

En Égypte l'étude de l'histoire est largement étayée par des documents écrits tels que : la pierre de Palerme, les tables Royal d'Abydos, le papyrus royal de Turin, la chronique de Manéthon. A tous ces documents authentiques, il faut ajouter l'ensemble des témoignages d'écrivains antiques depuis Hérodote jusqu'à Diodore, sans parler des textes des pyramides, du Livre des Morts et des milliers d'inscriptions sur les monuments.

En Mésopotamie on chercherait en vain quelque chose de semblable. Les tablettes cunéiformes ne portent que des compte de commerçant : reçu, factures, brièvement rédigés. Les anciens sont restés muets sur la prétendue civilisation mésopotamienne, d’avant les Chaldéens. Du reste, ces derniers n’étaient pour eux qu'une cast de prêtre astronome égyptien c'est-à-dire nègre.
[...]

La tour de Babel, pyramide à degrés semblable à celle de Saqqarah, connue aussi sous le nom de Birs-Nimroud et temple de Baal ne serait que l'observatoire astronomique des Chaldéens.
Dès lors tout rentre dans l'ordre car Nimroud, fils de Kousch, petit fils de Cham, ancêtre biblique des nègres est le symbole de la puissance temporelle. [...]

Qu'y a-t-il alors de plus normal que l'existence de pyramides à degrés à Saqqarah, à Babylone (ville Kouschite de Bel), en Côte d'Ivoire (sous forme de poids en bronze) et au Mexique où l'émigrations nègres, par l'Atlantique, est attesté par les écrivains et archéologues mexicain eux-mêmes ? [note de moi : je doute fort que les archéologues mexicains aient jamais dit de telles choses. On est là en plein discours afrocentriste][...]

En Asie occidentale on aurait rien de semblable : au lieu d'un royaume puissant et unifié on ne rencontre que des villes, Suse, Our, Lagash, Mari, Sumer, attestées parfois par des tombes anonymes qu'on décrète tombes royales sans aucune preuve.

On élève ainsi au rang de roi des personnages qui, dans les cas où ils ne sont pas fictifs, n'étaient que des patriarches de village ou de ville. Aujourd'hui au Sénégal, dans chaque village, on trouve une famille qui revendique sa fondation ; la personne la plus âgée d'une telle famille est souvent le patriarche du village en question et il est l'objet d'une certaine déférence de la part des cohabitants. Cependant il serait comique de lui donner le titre de roi dans 2000 ans et de parler ainsi du roi de Koki Kad, Koki Gouy, Koki Dahar,etc…[...]

En se reportant en effet au description même d'Hérodote, on se rend compte qu'il est impossible d'être plus sauvage et plus barbare que les Scythes. Nous sommes donc loin des traces d'une civilisation qu'on pourrait décrété mère de la civilisation égyptienne

Je crois avoir donné suffisamment d'éléments pour vous permette de voir le parti pris idéologique sinon la partialité de l'ouvrage. Nations nègres et culture a un grand intérêt historiographique car il fut une révolution dans la conception de l'histoire du monde et de l'Afrique. Toutefois il n'a aucun intérêt comme livre d'histoire. De son temps il était déjà contestable, de nos jours il est complètement périmé (comme à peu près tous les livres d'histoire des années 1950).

Merci d'avoir pris le temps de me lire. L'espace commentaire reste ouvert mais sachez que je supprimerais systématiquement tout commentaire tentant d'argumenter en faveur ou contre la thèse des égyptiens noirs.

NB : je le répète, mais ce qui m'intéresse dans ma réponse c'est uniquement la critique de Nations Nègres et culture et des méthodes de l'Auteur. Je ne critique pas l'ensemble du travail de Diop qui reste remarquable sur certains points et je critique encore moins l'homme qui, du témoignage de nombre de ces contemporains, avait une très grande culture. Je pense que dans les années 50 on avait besoin que quelqu'un donne un grand coup de pied dans l'étude de l'histoire de l'Afrique. Je suis très content qu'une université porte son nom malgré tous les défauts de son travail. Après tout, nous avons bien des établissement scolaires au nom de Jules Michelet, si contesté sur la méthode, et sur le fond pour le Moyen-âge. J'ai d'ailleurs trouvé sur Wikipédia une critique sur Michelet qui s'applique bien à Diop en général : "Il ne faut pas oublier ce qu'étaient les études historiques aux environs de 1825, quand Michelet les abordait. Documentation insuffisante? Mais il a dans ce domaine été un novateur. [...] Et un labeur immense, des recherches considérables ont assuré les fondements d'une œuvre qui aujourd'hui nous paraît ruineuse. [...] Mieux encore: n'oublions pas que les banalités d'aujourd'hui furent l'originalité presque révolutionnaire d'hier et d'avant-hier. Michelet a si totalement gagné certaines batailles que nous ne songeons même plus qu'il les fallait gagner."

Lucien Febvre Jules Michelet — Wikipédia
Homme en évolution de Toumaï à Homo Sapiens

Questions similaires

Que pensez-vous du livre “ Nation Nègre et culture” de Cheikh Anta Diop ?

Que pensez-vous de la théorie de Cheikh Anta Diop selon laquelle "la civilisation égyptienne serait une civilisation « nègre » et constituerait le berceau des cultures africaines subsahariennes" ?

Pourquoi les égyptologues européens nient jusqu'à présent le caractère africain des égyptiens antiques, alors que les preuves en sont surabondantes ?

À quoi ressemblaient les anciens Égyptiens sur le plan racial ? S'agissait-il d'un peuple homogène ou plus diversifié ?

Que pensez-vous de l'influence grandissante des théories afrocentristes sur l'Égypte antique ?

J'ai vu un documentaire sur les Néandertaliens dans lequel on disait que si nous les rencontrions dans la rue aujourd'hui, nous ne les distinguerions pas de nous. Seulement ils seraient un peu plus trapus que nous. Étaient-ils si semblables à nous ?

Cheikh Anta Diop est-il le plus grand savant de l'humanité ?
Quel regard portez-vous sur le livre “Sapiens” de Yuval Noah Hararri ?

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?

Que savez-vous de Cheikh Anta Diop?

Dans son livre "Sapiens", Yuval Harari situe le début de l'histoire à 70000 ans. N'était-ce pas il y a environ 4000 ans, avec l'émergence des systèmes d'écriture ? Y a-t-il un consensus sur la date qui sépare l'histoire de la préhistoire ? (QT)

L'affirmation selon laquelle les anciens Égyptiens étaient noirs (peau foncée) est-elle étayée par l'Histoire ? Si non, de quelle race étaient-ils et comment le savons-nous ?

Quel est le livre le plus interdit dans le monde ?

A-t-il existé une autre civilisation dans le monde autre que les égyptiens qui extrayait et taillait des blocs de granit avec des boules de dolérite ou autre roche plus dure que le granit ? Si oui, alors quelle roche ?

Quel est selon vous, le livre du siècle et pourquoi ?

News Nigeria
This is the DOOR OF NO RETURN in Goree island, Dakar Senegal, West Africa

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 11h

Many Africans walked through this door on chains on their way to the antebellum of the Americas to be enslaved 400years ago.

Once they walked through this door, never would you see your family and friends again. Their complete way of life were destroyed as soon as they walked through this door.

Au Sénégal, des artères de grandes villes portant le nom de personnalités françaises, héritage de la colonisation, vont être débaptisées. Pourquoi avoir attendu ?

Malick Youla Anciennement developpeur software macOS et iOS19 févr.

….parce que rien ne pressait. Un héritage est un héritage et il faut le prendre avec le bon et le moins bon car après tout, cet héritage, c’est grande partie de ce que le Sénégal est devenu. Le rejeter entièrement, c’est se rejeter soit même en tant que sénégalais. Je ne suis pas sénégalais mais c’est comme cela que je ressens.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi sur chaque continent (région), les colonies françaises ont été les moins lotis en ressources naturelles et demeurent après les indépendances les moins industrialisées, développées et figurent parmi les pays les plus pauvres de la planète?

Tous les supermarchés Auchan et les stations Total saccagés au Sénégal, qu'est-ce qu'il faut encore pour que la France comprenne qu'elle n'est plus la bienvenue en Afrique ?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Le futur porte-avions Français ressemblera enfin au porte-avions US en terme de taille pourquoi avoir attendu si longtemps ?

Les Français coloniaux ont beaucoup investi dans les pays d'Afrique du Nord, agrandissant les villes et des infrastructures. Pourquoi les Français n'ont-ils pas fait de même en Afrique de l'Ouest et dans leurs colonies en Afrique subsaharienne ?

Le Franc CFA utilisé en Afrique de l'Ouest et en Afrique centrale est-il une monnaie d'assujettissement des anciennes colonies de la France ?

Combien de personnes ont été tuées lors de la colonisation française de l'Algérie ?
Quels sont les inconvénients de la colonisation en Afrique ?
La France doit-elle s'excuser perpétuellement pour avoir eu des colonies en Afrique ?
Le président de la république française peut-il être musulman ?
Sans l'Afrique que deviendrait la France ?

Pourquoi les manifestants anti pass sanitaire ont-ils brandi des pancartes au nom de Didier Raoult ?

Quelle est l'importance de la colonisation pour les Africains ?

L'Afrique est-elle pauvre à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait l'Afrique ?

Si la France en a marre d’être accusée de néocolonialisme en Afrique pourquoi ne débarrasse-t-elle pas volontairement le plancher ?

Dans quelle mesure le Sénégal est-il laïque ?

Laurent N · Suivre J'ai eu plusieurs vies Mis à jour le 19 nov.

La constitution du Sénégal est basée sur une forme de laïcité proche de celle de la France.
Comme en France, l’état est laïc mais pas la population qui au Sénégal est très religieuse (comme dans la plupart des pays du monde en fait)

La majorité est musulmane : les chiffres divergent mais les plus fiables sont de 88% musulman et 12% catholique, mais je sais que tout le monde n’est pas d’accord sur ces pourcentages.

De façon étonnante pour un pays aussi pauvre, le Sénégal est assez imperméable à la pénétration islamiste.

Les raisons de cette résistance sont bien cette laïcité *à la sénégalaise historique, héritage français pour une part mais pas seulement, et également les confréries soufis.

Au pays de la Teranga, la liberté de penser et de parler existent. L'Etat manque cruellement de moyen mais arrive globalement à faire respecter la loi. Il est ainsi légalement possible de changer de religion, ou à une femme musulmane d'épouser un chrétien sans forcer celui-ci à se convertir : ceci est quasiment unique dans le monde musulman !

Musulmans et chrétiens vivent plutôt en bonne entente, s'invitent entre eux (ils sont pratiquement tous "sénégalais de souche" !) etc. Cette paix religieuse est principalement due au soufisme qui n'applique pas, de façon volontaire et explicite, certains passages du Coran.

En effet les musulmans sont dans leur très vaste majorité soufis : Tidjanes, Mourides, Qadres et Layènes. Les deux principales confréries sont un pouvoir religieux mais également politique, économique et financier de premier plan. Les Mourides sont les plus structurés et les plus riches. Les chefs de ces confréries voient d'un très mauvais œil la propagande islamiste, qu'elle soit salafiste ou des Frères Musulmans, car ces derniers sont une menace pour leur pouvoir.

Malgré l’attachement des Sénégalais pour leur laïcité, on voit malgré tout des mosquées au départ « non-soufis » puis islamistes se développer dans le pays, souvent grâce à des financements étrangers. C’est ainsi que plusieurs mosquées ont été rasées et l’imam mis en prison. Mais le Sénégal doit absolument rester sur ses gardes.

Pour mémoire, les chrétiens se trouvent majoritairement dans le Sine Saloum (au sud de Dakar) et en Casamance (au sud de la Gambie). On trouve quelques communautés près de Saint-Louis dans le nord et de très nombreuses paroisses à Dakar.

Questions similaires

Pensez-vous que le Sénégal est vraiment une démocratie ?
Quelles sont les raisons historiques du sous développement au Sénégal ?
Pourquoi le Sénégal n'est-il pas membre de l'organisation G5 Sahel ?
Pourquoi le Sénégal reste toujours un pays sous-développé ?
Quel est le niveau de développement du Sénégal ?
Le Senegal est-il une grande démocratie ?

Combien y a-t-il de sénégalais vivant en dehors du Sénégal ?
Est-il possible pour des pays arabes de devenir laïcs ?

Les Kabyles sont-ils plus civilisés et laïques que les autres nations nord-africaines ? Et pourquoi ?

Quelle est l'histoire la plus étrange qu'il vous soit arrivée à Dakar (Sénégal)?
Le peuple Malien n'est-il pas un peu responsable de la situation catastrophique du pays en ne luttant pas assez contre les groupes islamistes ?
Dans quelle mesure une guerre est-elle possible entre l'Algérie et le Maroc ?
L'affaire du burkini est-elle un combat politico-religieux qu'il faut dénoncer?
L'Afrique peut-elle se développer avec le christianisme et l'islam ?
Pourquoi ne parle-t-on jamais des maghrébins non-croyants ?

N'est-ce pas les musulmans marocains, algériens et sénégalés, diabolisés aujourd'hui, qui par leur courage et leur bravoure ont défendu la France contre l'invasion nazie ?

Art Multi · Suivre Lieu : France (1900–aujourd'hui) 27 janv.

Bonsoir. Vous êtes prié de respecter la mémoire de ces ancêtres au lieu de l'insulter.

Que ce qu'ils ont fait pour les générations futures fasse réfléchir votre génération et suivantes au lieu de revendiquer un héritage dont votre génération est loin d'être méritante. Bonne soirée.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Comment trouvez-vous le Maroc ?
Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Pourquoi les touristes européens raffolent tant des destinations comme Marrakech ?
Pourquoi le Maroc soutient-il le président autoproclamé du Vénézuela ?
Avez-vous déjà visité le Maroc ?

Tourisme: Est-il vrai que le Maroc est considéré comme l'un des pays les plus sûrs pour voyager ?

Qui aime visiter le Maroc et pourquoi ?
Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?
Que pensez-vous du Maroc en tant que touriste ?

Qu'est-ce qu'on doit jamais faire si je visite le Maroc ?
Comment voyez-vous le Maroc ?
Quelle est la meilleure destination touristique des Marocains en 2020 ?
Quelles sont les choses qu'on aime au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Wake Up Africa!
These underwater sculptures are located in the Caribbean Sea, along the coast of Grenada. It honours Africans who were thrown overboard from slave ships during the Middle Passage of the Transatlantic Slave Trade.

· Follow Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Dec 22

FOLLOW FOR MORE

Les stars d'Afrique
Barrages mondial 2022 : plainte de l’Egypte contre le Sénégal, le match rejoué?

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK 12 h

Les barrages du mondial 2022 en zone Afrique continuent toujours de faire polémique, alors que les cinq qualifiés du continent africain pour la coupe du monde au Qatar sont désormais connus. Eliminée à l'issue de la séance de tirs aux buts, l'Egypte a décidé de déposer plainte contre le Sénégal, son adversaire des barrages en zone Afrique.

Rebondissement aux barrages du mondial 2022 en zone Afrique avec une plainte déposée par l'Egypte contre le Sénégal. Après la finale de la CAN, égyptiens et sénégalais ont de nouveau pris rendez-vous dans le cadre des barrages de la Coupe du monde 2022 au Qatar. A l'issue de la double confrontation, ce sera le Sénégal qui obtiendra son ticket pour la prochaine coupe du monde de football prévue au Qatar. Mais pour l'un des 5 pays africains qualifiés lors des barrages du mondial 2022, les éliminatoires sont loin d'être terminés.

Après la défaite des égyptiens et leur élimination au prochain mondial, la fédération égyptienne de football a décidé de porter plainte contre le Sénégal : «La fédération égyptienne de football a déposé une plainte officielle contre ses homologues sénégalais auprès de l'observateur du match, de l'officier de sécurité, de l'AFF « Kaf » et de la FIFA « FIFA » avant le début du match entre les deux équipes qui arrive à la fin des qualifications pour la Coupe du monde», indique l'EFA dans un communiqué officiel tombé dans la soirée du mardi 29 mars, après l'élimination des pharaons par les champions d'Afrique.

En plus d'avoir été sifflés durant une bonne partie de la rencontre, les égyptiens ont également reçu des projectiles en pleine rencontre, et même pendant leur départ en bus, nous fait savoir la fédération égyptienne de football dans son communiqué officiel : «L'équipe nationale égyptienne est exposée au racisme après l'apparition de panneaux insultants sur le terrain du stade de match pour les joueurs, en particulier Mohamed Salah, le chef de l'équipe, alors que les fans ont terrorisé les joueurs en leur jetant des bouteilles et des pierres pendant l'opération d'échauffement».

La réponse de la FIFA a la plainte déposée par l'Egypte contre le Sénégal, devrait être incessamment connue. L'un des pires scénarios qui pourrait arriver aux sénégalais serait que la FIFA demande que le match retour des barrages du mondial 2022 soit rejoué. Dans son communiqué, aucune allusion n'a été faite à cette hypothèse par la fédération égyptienne de football. Seule certitude du moment, cette plainte de l'Egypte contre le Sénégal alimente une vive polémique entre spécialistes du football sur le continent africain.

News Nigeria

Egypt have lodged an official complaint against Senegal in which they claim their team was subjected to racism and "terrorised" by home fans in Dakar.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Wed

Les stars d'Afrique · Follow Posted by David-GDK 13h

Aliou Cissé, Coach des Lions : "La FIFA doit changer le mode de qualification des équipes africaines"

En conférence de presse après la victoire du Sénégal sur l'Égypte en barrages du Mondial E20 2022, le sélectionneur Aliou Cissé estime que la FIFA doit changer le mode de qualification très difficile des 5 pays africains en Coupe du monde, car le nombre est insuffisant.

« Au mois de juin, il y aura les éliminatoires de la CAN. J'entends beaucoup de gens dire: «qu'un jour une équipe africaine gagnera la Coupe du monde. C'est vrai, depuis un moment on y travaille. Il y a 54 nations sur le continent pour la Coupe du monde, c'est 5 équipes africaines qu'on prend. Cela explique la difficulté qui existe dans ces éliminatoires de Coupe du monde. Il n'y a qu'en Afrique que ces éliminatoires se passent ainsi.

Il est important que la FIFA fasse quelque chose. Cela ne doit plus continuer comme cela pour 54 pays. La FIFA doit faire quelque chose pour que notre football compte. Maintenant, si vous me dites que cette équipe sénégalaise est mieux armée pour aller à la Coupe du monde, je dirais oui, on a constitué une équipe pour aller à à la Coupe du monde. On partira avec une forte ambition. », nous dit le sélectionneur du Sénégal Aliou Cissé

Les stars d'Afrique
Sadio Mané explique pourquoi le style de vie glamour de Cristiano et Neymar n'est pas pour lui · Suivre Publication par David-GDK dim.

L’attaquant du Sénégal et de Liverpool, Saido Mané a pris ses distances avec le train de vie glamour que vivent certains footballeurs.

Mané, qui a marqué 12 buts en Premier League cette saison, dit qu’il préfère être humble, vivre une vie simple et attribue son éducation à son humilité.

Dans une récente interview, Mané a même déclaré qu’il suivait Cristiano Ronaldo et Neymar sur les réseaux sociaux, mais « ça lui suffit » mais que certaines valeurs de certains footballeurs « l’irritent« .

S’adressant à L’Equipe, Mané a déclaré: « Je ne veux pas donner l’impression que je suis une personne très critique, mais c’est vrai qu’il y a des valeurs dans le football qui m’irritent un peu par rapport à l’éducation que j’ai eue. Mais au lieu de critiquer, je préfère prendre mes distances. L’essentiel est de ne pas changer, et je crois que je ne l’ai pas fait. Pour un garçon qui vient d’une petite ville, c’est une grande victoire. »

On lui a également demandé s’il aimerait vivre comme Neymar ou Cristiano Ronaldo, ce à quoi l’ailier de Liverpool a répondu: « Non! Je les suis sur les réseaux sociaux et ça me suffit. J’aime la vie incroyable qu’ils mènent, mais je ne pense pas que ce soit pour moi. »

Le joueur de 29 ans a également confirmé que son rêve ultime dans le football serait la gloire de la Coupe du monde avec son pays d’origine.

« Gagnez] la Coupe du monde avec le Sénégal », a déclaré Mané. « Il faut d’abord garantir la qualification, mais je veux croire aux projets fous, et remporter la compétition avec mon pays en fait partie. De l’or chaque année. »

Les stars d'Afrique

L’Afrique peut-elle convaincre Poutine à mettre fin à la guerre en Ukraine ?

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK 10 mars

Ces derniers jours, les chefs d'Etat africains ont fait bloc pour convaincre le dirigeant russe, Vladimir Poutine, d'observer un cessez-le-feu avec son voisin ukrainien.L'invasion de l'Ukraine par la Russie entre dans son 13e jour et fait beaucoup de victimes notamment des civils. Mais Poutine écoutera-t-il les appels tacites d'un certain nombre de dirigeants africains pour mettre fin à la guerre ? Alors que le reste du monde, sous l'impulsion des gouvernements occidentaux, a condamné la Russie pour son invasion de l'Ukraine et imposé des sanctions en menaçant de les renforcer, les dirigeants africains se sont généralement montrés réticents, en particulier ceux qui entretiennent des liens étroits avec M. Poutine. Plusieurs pays du continent africain entretiennent des liens diplomatiques et commerciaux étroits avec la Russie de M. Poutine, qui a mené une offensive de charme sur le continent ces dernières années grâce au sommet Russie-Afrique, dont la première édition s'est tenue en 2019. Le prochain se tiendra plus tard dans l'année. La solidité de ces relations est mise à l'épreuve par le conflit russo-ukrainien. Ces derniers jours, au moins deux dirigeants, bien que parlant depuis une position de neutralité, ont essayé de convaincre Poutine de mettre fin aux hostilités. Les présidents égyptien et sénégalais Abdel Fattah al-Sisi et Macky Sall se sont entretenus avec l'homme fort de Moscou pour tenter de lui faire comprendre la nécessité de cesser les hostilités et d'engager des pourparlers avec l'Ukraine, pays que son armée a envahi le 24 février. M. Sisi a déclaré que si ses entretiens avec le dirigeant russe visaient principalement à cimenter les liens entre le Caire et Moscou, ils portaient également sur le caractère désespéré du conflit actuel d'un point de vue civil et sur la nécessité de suspendre l'invasion de ce pays pour permettre des pourparlers en vue d'un cessez-le-feu définitif. Le dirigeant égyptien est connu pour avoir entretenu des liens étroits avec M. Poutine et ce serait un énorme coup de propagande pour lui si ses paroles constituaient bien plus qu'un écho lointain face au tambour de la guerre qui résonne à Moscou. Poutine a prêté une oreille attentive à Macky Sall, qui a profité de son nouveau statut de président en exercice de l'Union africaine pour lui demander de mettre fin aux hostilités. Heureux de ses progrès, le bureau de M. Sall s'est réjoui sur Twitter de la nature des entretiens avec Poutine, qui a été félicité pour « sa volonté de maintenir le dialogue en vue d'une issue négociée au conflit ». Il reste à savoir si les paroles de Sisi et Sall finiront par porter leurs fruits, là où les sanctions occidentales n'ont pas réussi à dissuader Poutine de poursuivre le conflit.

Response similaire
Dans quelle mesure le Sénégal est-il laïque ?

Laurent N J'ai eu plusieurs vies Mis à jour le 19 nov.

La constitution du Sénégal est basée sur une forme de laïcité proche de celle de la France.

Comme en France, l'état est laïc mais pas la population qui au Sénégal est très religieuse (comme dans la plupart des pays du monde en fait)

La majorité est musulmane : les chiffres divergent mais les plus fiables sont de 88% musulman et 12% catholique, mais je sais que tout le monde n'est pas d'accord sur ces pourcentages.

De façon étonnante pour un pays aussi pauvre, le Sénégal est assez imperméable à la pénétration islamiste.

Les raisons de cette résistance sont bien cette laïcité *à la sénégalaise historique, héritage français pour une part mais pas seulement, et également les confréries soufis.

Au pays de la Teranga, la liberté de penser et de parler existent. L'Etat manque cruellement de moyen mais arrive globalement à faire respecter la loi. Il est ainsi légalement possible de changer de religion, ou à une femme musulmane d'épouser un chrétien sans forcer celui-ci à se convertir : ceci est quasiment unique dans le monde musulman !

Musulmans et chrétiens vivent plutôt en bonne entente, s'invitent entre eux (ils sont pratiquement tous "sénégalais de souche" !) etc. Cette paix religieuse est principalement due au soufisme qui n'applique pas, de façon volontaire et explicite, certains passages du Coran.

En effet les musulmans sont dans leur très vaste majorité soufis : Tidjanes, Mourides, Qadres et Layènes. Les deux principales confréries sont un pouvoir religieux mais également politique, économique et financier de premier plan. Les Mourides sont les plus structurés et les plus riches. Les chefs de ces confréries voient d'un très mauvais œil la propagande islamiste, qu'elle soit salafiste ou des Frères Musulmans, car ces derniers sont une menace pour leur pouvoir.

Malgré l'attachement des Sénégalais pour leur laïcité, on voit malgré tout des mosquées au départ « non-soufis » puis islamistes se développer dans le pays, souvent grâce à des financements étrangers. C'est ainsi que plusieurs mosquées ont été rasées et l'imam mis en prison. Mais le Sénégal doit absolument rester sur ses gardes.

Pour mémoire, les chrétiens se trouvent majoritairement dans le Sine Saloum (au sud de Dakar) et en Casamance (au sud de la Gambie). On trouve quelques communautés près de Saint-Louis dans le nord et de très nombreuses paroisses à Dakar.

« Un peuple, un but, une foi »

Questions similaires

Pensez-vous que le Sénégal est vraiment une démocratie ?
Quelles sont les raisons historiques du sous développement au Sénégal ?
Pourquoi le Sénégal n'est-il pas membre de l'organisation G5 Sahel ?
Quel est le niveau de développement du Sénégal ?
Le Senegal est-il une grande démocratie ?
Combien y a-t-il de sénégalais vivant en dehors du Sénégal ?
Est-il possible pour des pays arabes de devenir laïcs ?

Dans les pays arabes et islamiques, les religieux font tout, y compris des crimes, pour unifier leurs peuples dans un État théocratique. Pourquoi les laïcs de ces pays ne font rien pour unifier leurs peuples pacifiquement dans un État démocratique ?

Les Kabyles sont-ils plus civilisés et laïques que les autres nations nord-africaines ? Et pourquoi ?

Le peuple Malien n'est-il pas un peu responsable de la situation catastrophique du

AfriStar

Suivre Publication par David-GDK jeu.

Dans le cadre de la rencontre des reds de ce soir face à Benfica,
Klopp a tenu à rendre hommage à Sadio Mané, buteur dimanche à l'Etihad:

« tout le monde a contribué à un ce résultat important, mais je voulais mettre en avant Sadio.

« C'était son 30e anniversaire le jour du match et il semble toujours aussi frais et dynamique que lorsqu'il a rejoint ce club en tant que jeune professionnel.

« C'est une machine. Ce qu'il a fait pour ce club et continue de faire le place dans la catégorie des "légendes". Pour le LFC et le Sénégal, il joue à son plus haut niveau possible.

« Ce qui est passionnant, c'est qu'il est meilleur et plus solide. Quand on voit comment il prend soin de lui et son engagement qu'il a envers sa profession, on réalise que ses 30 ans ne sont vraiment qu'un chiffre pour lui.

«Son attitude et son caractère, c'est l'élite. Nous l'apprécions énormément et je suis sûr que les niveaux qu'il atteint en ce moment ne sont en rien des sommets - ce joueur très spécial a encore beaucoup à offrir.»

AfriStar

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK 8 avr.

Une image vaut dix mille mots : Le Sénégal est dans la bonne voie

Wake Up Africa!
Posted by Yussif Issah Oyen 2h

Senegalese Player, Krepin Diatta, lashed out at people, especially Africans, who mocked his physical look during the African Cup. This is what he had to say on social media:

"I am very sad to see some African brothers making fun of me. I work for our beautiful and dear African continent and what I receive in return are only insults, mockery of my brothers. This is too bad of you and racism comes from there.

I need your encouragement and not your insults. Thank you to everyone who supports me. Only God makes my strength and I am proud of my physical person. Your mockery won't change anything in my life. But one thing is for sure, we are all african."

Let's Discuss Ancient and Medieval Africa
Why was it so easy to colonise Africa?

Posted by Alton Allen , Knowledgeable In African and African Diaspora History Updated Feb 3

Originally Answered: Why was Africa so easy to conquer?

For example, “In 1446, two years later, a ship commanded by Nuno Tristao attempted to land in the Senegal region. It was attacked by African fighters in canoes, and the crew of the ship was wiped out. And in 1447, *a Danish raider commanding a Portuguese ship was killed, along with most of his crew,*when local African boats attacked.”

Was it tho? It took centuries to make landfall without going through immigration, matter of fact, there were a number of occasions when Europeans were defeated even at sea and on rivers, when the Portuguese and others tried to bully themselves past the coast

Although African vessels -- mostly canoes -- were not designed for high-seas navigation, they were fully capable of protecting the coast, even in the 15th century. As a result, in 1456, the king of Portugal dispatched his ambassador, Diogo Gomes, to negotiate treaties of peace and trade with the African rulers along the coast. From that point on, and for 400 years, the African slave trade was conducted as a matter of international commerce among equals.]

The Arjuran Sultanate also defeated the Portuguese.

Ajuran Sultanate – Wikipedia

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ajuran_Sultanate

The Malawi Empire

An interesting four way conflict between the coastal Swahili the Portuguese the Turks and an inland very powerful state called the Malawi empire, who control another people called the Zimba as shock troops..more shocking than most shock troops because they were reported to be cannibals.

I became aware of the Zimba yrs ago after read one of Dr Clarks books. and I knew they sacked the cities of the coast and eat some of the inhabitants but did not know the reasons why.

Here now is the why they were not some random group of un-controllable barbarians they were in fact a part of the military apparatus of a powerful inland state who could unleashed hell at will.

books.google.com/books?id=0K0p8wCNKTQC&pg=PA372&lpg=PA372&dq=the+lundu+civilization&source=bl&ots=_hzEbgqw81&sig=GfPmEJoSj www.jstor.org/action/showArticleImage?image=images%2Fpages%2Fdtc.3.tif.gif&doi=10.2307%2F182189

THE MARAVI EMPIRE

The name Malawi is thought to be a derivation of the word Maravi. The people of the Maravi Empire were iron workers. The name Maravi is thought to mean "rays of light" and may have come from the sight of many kilns lighting up the night sky. A dynasty known as the Maravi Empire was founded by the Amaravi people in the late 15th century. The Amaravi, who eventually became known as the Chewa (a word possibly derived from a term meaning "foreigner"), migrated to Malawi from the region of the modern day Republic of Congo to escape unrest and disease. The Chewa attacked the Akafula, who settled in small family clans without a unified system of protection. Using a system of destruction they would later employ in hunting predatory animals, the Chewa hunted down and butchered the Akufula.

Eventually encompassing most of modern Malawi, as well as parts of modern day Mozambique and Zambia, the Maravi Empire began on the southwestern shores of Lake Malawi. The head of the empire during its expansion was the Kalonga (also spelt Karonga). The Kalonga ruled from his headquarters in Mankhamba. Under the leadership of the Kalonga, sub-chiefs were appointed to occupy and subdue new areas. The empire began to decline during the early 18th century when fighting among the sub-chiefs and the burgeoning slave trade weakened the Maravi Empire's authority.

TRADE AND INVASIONS

The Portuguese

Initially the Maravi Empire's economy was largely dependent on agriculture, the majority being the production of millet and sorghum. It was during the Maravi Empire, sometime during the 16th Century, that Europeans first came into contact with the people of Malawi. Under the Maravi Empire, the Chewa had access to the coast of modern day Mozambique. Through this coastal area, the Chewa traded ivory, iron, and slaves with the Portuguese and Arabs. Trade was enhanced by the common language of Chewa which was spoken throughout the Maravi Empire.

The Portuguese reached the area via the Mozambican port of Tete in the 16th century and gave the first written reports on the people of Malawi. The Portuguese are also responsible for the introduction of maize to the region. Maize would eventually replace sorghum as the staple of the Malawian diet.

Malawian tribes traded slaves with the Portuguese. These slaves were sent mainly to work on Portuguese plantations in Mozambique or to Brazil.

www.san.beck.org/AC4_Africa_Middle-East_.htm#2

Remember the Zimba were working for the Malawian empire

It was planned aggression

Maravi

The Maravi people built bridges called Uraro due to changing river depth. These bridges were made out of bamboo. Bamboos were placed parallel to each other and tied together by bark (maruze). One end of the bridge would be tied to an existing tree. The bridge would curve downward 80 spans when entering. A bamboo on top would serve as a balustrade.

Africa did not end up like the Americas because although they will become outclassed by the time of industrial revolution, it took time.

Related Links

When did African countries gain independence peacefully?
What would have happened to Africa if it hadn't been colonized?
How did Africa gain independence?
Why can't Africa still unite to be as one country, likely the USA?

What are two countries that are historically independent in Africa? Why are they independent?

What is the last African country to gain independence? What was the process in which they obtained it?

Why doesn't Africa look like the US? When African nation-states gained independence, why did Africa not become unified as a country?

Which country was the first who started colonisation in Africa?

What would the continent of Africa look like today if Europeans decided never to set foot on it?

Why was Africa colonised so quickly?

Wake Up Africa!
Cheikh Anta Diop

Posted by Firew Afera 18h

Cheikh Anta Diop is considered to be one of the greatest scholars to emerge in the African world in the 20th century.

He was born in Diourbel, Senegal, a town in the west coast of Africa, in 1923. His birthplace has a long tradition of producing Muslim scholars and oral historians. This is where his inspiration and interest in history and humanities from an African point of view began.

The years of his life (1923-86) and the creation of his work were years of transition and change for the whole of the African world. In the United states, the Pan-African Congresses, under the leadership of W.E.B. Du Bois were well underway. The first of the trials of Marcus Garvey had already started, and the largest African-centered movement ever to be built was well underway in spite of the trials and tribulations of Garvey.

Cheikh Anta Diop lived through the African independence explosion that began with the independence of Ghana in 1958. The aftermath of this event was bright, However, this hope was short-lived. Diop lived to see Africans turn against each other, motivated in part by their colonial masters who were still behind the scenes controlling the destiny of the continent.

Diop lived to plan a solution for those African problems. However, that solution came to the attention of a few serious scholars at his time, and he passed away without reaching the level of renown he deserved. African people are more able to understand their history and future destiny thanks to Diop.

Some of Diop`s most influential books (in English) include:

1.The African origins of civilization: myth or reality (1974)
2.Precolonial Black Africa (1988)
3.The Cultural unity of Black Africa (1962)
4.Black Africa: The economic and cultural basis for a Federated state (1978)
5.Civilization or barbarism (1981), which is his most important book.

Wake Up Africa!

Abu-Bakir Waissi I read extensively about Africa 3y

Welcome everyone to Wake Up Africa! This space will be for everything Africa-related.
If anyone wishes to be a contributor, please message me.

Thank you to Daniel Ptashny for creating this space for us.

By far the continent least known by people (there are too many people who think that Africa is a country!) in this space, the diversity of Africa will be revealed.

Below is a collage of South Africa alone. In other parts of Africa, there is even more diversity when it comes to various factors, such as language (Democratic Republic of the Congo) or religion (Togo).

Home to the world’s largest amount of languages, very diverse religious traditions and interpretations, and thousands of different ethnic groups, the continent of Africa is a place that many are eager to learn more about, so we hope that you will on here!

For the politically invested, there will also be news updates on various parts of Africa, and politics will definitely be looked at. There was just an election in Nigeria, and the South African election is coming up and is very underreported on in the West. Earlier this year, the Democratic Republic of the Congo had an extremely important election too.

Africa is a CONTINENT and it is home to 55 countries!

All are welcome to follow the space and share it with their friends.

Welcome again to Wake Up Africa!

Senegalese gendarme beat journalist Pape Malick Thiam, file charge of contempt

Senegalese journalist Pape Malick Thiam was recently beaten by authorities, and has been charged with contempt. (Photo: 7TV)

Dakar, April 19, 2022 — Senegalese authorities should drop their prosecution of journalist Pape Malick Thiam, ensure he can work free of intimidation, and hold those responsible for beating him to account, the Committee to Protect Journalists said Tuesday.

Gendarme officers arrested Thiam, a reporter with the privately owned broadcaster 7TV, while he was on assignment at a court in Dakar, the capital, on April 14, according to media reports and 7TV Executive Director Maimouna Ndour Faye, who spoke to CPJ in a phone interview.

Faye told CPJ that officers "severely" beat Thiam, and when she visited him at the local gendarme office he had swelling in his face and blood on his clothes. He was released on unconditional bail the following day, Faye said.

Thiam is scheduled to appear before a Dakar court on April 20 for alleged "contempt of an agent in the exercise of his duties," according to Faye and those reports. If convicted, Thiam could face up to three months in prison and a maximum fine of 50,000 West African francs (US$83), according to the Senegalese penal code.

"Senegalese authorities should drop their prosecution of journalist Pape Malick Thiam and allow him to work free of harassment and intimidation," said CPJ Sub-Saharan Africa Representative Muthoki Mumo, in Nairobi. "Thiam's beating by authorities sends a chilling message that the press is not safe in Senegal. A thorough investigation should be carried out and those responsible should be held accountable."

On April 14, Thiam was covering a hearing at a Dakar court when a gendarme officer stopped him, accused him of filming in a restricted area, and confiscated the journalist's phone, Faye said. She told CPJ that Thiam protested the seizure, and the officer then accused Thiam of insulting him and beat the journalist until he lost consciousness.

Thiam regained consciousness later that day at the gendarme office, and his phone was returned upon his release, Faye said.

When CPJ called Lieutenant-Colonel Ibrhima Ndiaye, a spokesperson for the Senegalese gendarmerie, for comment and asked about Thiam's case, he said he was busy and requested to be called back later in the day; when CPJ called back, he again declined to answer questions at that time.

When CPJ called Thiam for comment, he said his lawyer advised him not to speak about the case and that any questions should be directed to his employer.

Quel est le joueur le plus important pour l'équipe de France de football en vue de la coupe du monde au Quatar ?

PronoMatteo, Suivre pronostiqueur professionnel 10 mai

On va faire un tour d'horizon des meilleurs joueurs par GROUPE
Groupe A - Sadio Mane - 80 millions d'euros

Sénégal v Mali : Préparation à la Coupe d'Afrique des Nations

Sadio Mane est actuellement l'un des meilleurs ailiers du monde.

Ses performances pour LIVERPOOL et le Sénégal se sont avérées les mêmes au cours des deux dernières années.

SADIO MANE ENVOIE LE SÉNÉGAL À LA COUPE DU MONDE !!!

SCÈNES INCROYABLES !

Mais c'était tout pour la qualification de son pays à la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA 2022.

African Cup Of Nations 2021

Following Teams are participating in African Cup of Nations 2019: Group A Egypt DR Congo Uganda Zimbabwe Group B Nigeria Guinea Madagascar Burundi Group C Senegal Algeria Kenya Tanzania Group D Morocco Ivory Coast South Africa Namibia Group E Cameroon Ghana Benin Guinea-Bissau https://www.sportskeeda.com/football/african-cup-of-nations-teams ont affronté l'Égypte lors des éliminatoires le mois dernier et ont perdu le match aller 1-0.

2021

Cependant, un retour au match retour avec une victoire aux tirs au but, a assuré que le Sénégal sera au Qatar en novembre.

Mane se méfiera du fait que son pays se retrouve dans le même groupe que l'Équateur, les Pays-Bas et les hôtes, le Qatar.

C'est un groupe délicat et l'ailier devrait sceller une place en phase à élimination directe pour sa nation lors du tournoi de cette année.

Groupe B - Harry Kane - 100 millions d'euros

Angleterre v Suisse - Match amical

Harry Kane sera l'homme principal de l'

https://www.sportskeeda.com/team/england

lors de la Coupe du monde de football 2022.

Les Three Lions n'ont pas levé d'argenterie majeure depuis 1966. Compte tenu de leur équipe actuelle, ils ont plus qu'une chance de remettre la main sur l'or.

 "Je veux participer à ce tournoi [World Cup] dans la meilleure forme possible."

Harry Kane s'adresse aux médias avant les prochains matchs de l'Angleterre et discute également de l'avenir de son propre club.

Kane mènera la charge pour atteindre cet objectif en novembre, d'autant plus qu'il pourrait devenir le meilleur buteur du pays d'ici là.

Après son dernier but contre la Suisse le mois dernier, la star de Tottenham Hotspur a égalé Bobby Charlton avec 49 buts.

Il est maintenant à quatre buts d'égaler le record de 53 de Wayne Rooney.

L'Angleterre affrontera l'Iran, les États-Unis et l'Écosse et le Pays de Galles en phase de groupes.

Gareth Southgate et co.

devrait atteindre confortablement la phase à élimination directe.

Kane jouera un rôle central à cet égard, comme il l'a fait lors de la Coupe du monde de football 2018 pour laquelle il a reçu le Soulier d'or avec six buts.

Groupe C - Lautaro Martinez - 70 millions d'euros

Argentine v Pérou - Qualification pour la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA 2022 au Qatar

Lautaro Martinez est certain de mener la ligne pour

Argentina National Football Team

Score updates every 5 overs

https://www.sportskeeda.com/team/argentina-football à la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA 2022, sauf circonstances imprévues.

L' équipe dirigée par LIOENL MESSI

a remporté le succès lors de la Copa America de l'année dernière et visera à remporter le plus gros prix du jeu cette année.

L'Argentine a marqué 27 fois (le deuxième plus) en 17 matches lors des éliminatoires de la Coupe du monde.

Ils ont également accordé 8 buts en 17 matches (deuxième meilleur).

Lionel Messi et Lautaro Martínez avec 7 buts chacun.

Ils ont certainement l'équipe pour le faire.

Alors que Gonzalo Higuain et Sergio Aguero ont été décents pour le pays au cours des 10 dernières années, Martinez a été beaucoup plus meurtrier.

Il a déjà 19 buts internationaux à son actif et se combine bien avec Messi dans le dernier tiers.

Ses performances pour l'Inter Milan ont également été de premier ordre au cours des deux dernières années.

Il a marqué 17 buts en 38 matchs en Serie A la saison dernière et en a déjà 14 en 28 matchs cette saison.

L'Argentine affrontera l'Arabie saoudite, le Mexique et la Pologne en phase de groupes.

Martinez espère augmenter son total de buts internationaux contre eux.

Groupe D - Kylian Mbappe - 160 millions d'euros

France v Suisse - UEFA Euro 2020 : 8es de finale a fait parler de lui lors de la Coupe du monde de football 2018.

La jeune superstar avait toutes les qualités d'un champion du monde et a capitalisé sur son potentiel depuis.

Il est maintenant prêt à aider la à conserver son titre cette année.

Dans une grande soirée d' action

#WCQ hashtag on Twitter

Magnifique

Kylian Mbappé (@KMbappe) | Twitter

https://twitter.com/KMbappe

Les Bleus sont les favoris du tournoi de cette année.

Alors qu'ils ont été éliminés au début de l'Euro 2020, ils ont remporté l'UEFA Nations League en octobre dernier.

Mbappe était également à l'épicentre de ce triomphe, marquant deux fois dans le tournoi.

L'attaquant éblouissant cherchera également à faire des ravages lors du tournoi de la FIFA de cette année.

La France a été tirée au sort dans un groupe relativement facile, comprenant le Danemark, la Tunisie et une équipe entre les Émirats arabes unis/Australie et le Pérou.

Mbappe et co chercheront à passer au bulldozer leurs adversaires de la phase de groupes avant de prouver leur qualité lors des huitièmes de finale.

Groupe E - Joshua Kimmich - 85 millions d'euros

Allemagne v Hongrie - UEFA Euro 2020 : Groupe F

Joshua Kimmich sera le leader de l'

Germany

Score updates every 5 overs

https://www.sportskeeda.com/team/germany-football à la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA 2022 et on attend beaucoup de lui.

Il faisait partie de l'équipe qui a été éliminée lors de la phase de groupes de l'édition 2018 et cherchera à réparer les torts de la dernière fois.

Joshua Kimmich sur les appels au boycott de la Coupe du monde 2022 et les protestations contre le bilan des droits de l'homme du pays hôte, le Qatar.

Milieu de terrain efficace, box-to-box, Kimmich est l'exemple parfait d'un général de milieu de terrain moderne.

Il peut dicter le jeu, briser la possession et même marquer des buts sur de longues distances, sans parler de trouver des passes menaçantes entre les lignes.

L'Allemagne a bien terminé le processus de qualification l'année dernière et a également conservé toute sa force lors des derniers matches amicaux.

Die Mannschaft a été placé dans le groupe le plus fort aux côtés de l'Espagne, du Japon et du vainqueur entre le Costa Rica et la Nouvelle-Zélande.

Par conséquent, Kimmich devra se produire à son plus haut niveau à tout moment pour son pays lors de la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA cette année.

Groupe F - Kevin de Bruyne - 90 millions d'euros

Pays de Galles v Belgique - Qualifications pour la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA 2022

Kevin de Bruyne est l'un des footballeurs les plus en vue de la génération dorée belge.

Cependant, les Red Devils n'ont pas encore remporté de trophée majeur malgré la profondeur de leur équipe au cours de la dernière décennie.

Kevin De Bruyne a été clinicien pour la Belgique cette année

La Belgique s'est extrêmement bien comportée lors de la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA 2018 en atteignant les demi-finales, avant d'être battue par les éventuels vainqueurs, la France.

Ils ont également atteint les demi-finales du Championnat d'Europe 2020 mais ont été battus par les éventuels vainqueurs, l'Italie.

C'est peut-être leur dernière chance de mettre la main sur un titre majeur avec la génération dorée.

Avec De Bruyne à la barre, beaucoup de choses sont possibles.

La star de Manchester City a remporté plusieurs titres à l'Etihad et a la mentalité de gagnant nécessaire pour conduire son pays à la gloire cette année.

Cependant, ils ne devraient pas avoir de mal à sortir de la phase de groupes car ils ont été tirés au sort contre la Croatie, le Canada et le Maroc.

Groupe G - Vinicius Jr - 100 millions d'euros

Brésil v Paraguay - Qualifications pour la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA, Qatar 2022

Les quintuples champions de la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA chercheront à remporter leur sixième trophée cette année et le Brésil a le talent dans son équipe pour le faire.

Ils ont beaucoup de jeunes talents dans leur attaque dont Vinicius Jr.

L'ailier a été sensationnel avec https://www.sportskeeda.com/team/real-madrid-cf cette saison, avec 31 contributions de buts en 40 matchs.

Vinicius Jr. a acquis 120 billets pour le match du Brésil contre le Chili dans l'espoir de célébrer son premier but international avec sa famille et ses amis

Il a livré

Chargé de talent offensif, Vinicius est l'un des choix du groupe d'ailiers de l'équipe brésilienne.

Alors que Neymar occupe le rôle traditionnel d'ailier gauche, il passe au centre lorsque la star du Real Madrid commence pour la nation.

L'as de 21 ans s'est imposé un rôle dans l'équipe nationale.

Il cherchera à rendre la foi à son entraîneur lors de la Coupe du Monde de la FIFA cette année.

Le Brésil affrontera la Serbie, la Suisse et Cameron en phase de groupes et espère sortir en tête des quatre équipes

Merci pour votre lecture

Pour vous remercier voici la liste des pronostiqueurs à suivre

Quel fait inquiétant la plupart des gens ignorent-ils ?/ What is a disturbing fact most people are unaware of?

Regardez l'image ci-dessous :

Que voyez-vous ?

Sans doute une famille pauvre, vivant dans une région reculée de l'Afrique, n'est-ce pas ?

Mais en fait non.

Ce sont les Siddis, des descendants d'un peuple africain qui vivent dans une petite contrée près du district de Karwar, dans l'État de Kartataka en Inde.

Oui, ce sont des Indiens. Et ils parlent les dialectes indiens avec la même fluidité que que vous et moi (NdT : l'auteur original est d'origine indienne).

Cet homme à droite sur la photo est Juje Jackie Harnodkar Siddi. Il travaille pour le gouvernement central à Mumbai.

Le forte adversité et le racisme auxquels son peuple et lui font face au quotidien, est quelque chose, qui selon moi, mérite d'être partagé.

Quand je prend le train ou le bus

Je subis le racisme

Une fois, quelqu'un m'a saisi par le col et m'a dit :

"Tu es un étranger dans ce pays"

Je me bats pour mes droits en tant qu'Indien

On nous fait savoir que nous sommes des citoyens de seconde zone

Partout à Mumbai, nous sommes mal vus

Un jour, ma femme aidait mon fils Julius à faire ses devoirs de maison

Elle lui montrait différents animaux dans un livre

Quand elle lui a montré un chimpanzé

Mon fils lui a dit qu'un homme l'avait appelé ainsi

Subir ce genre de traitement toute notre vie nous insupporte et nous fait mal

Les Siddis ont été sous les feux de la rampe en 1987, quand le gouvernement a décidé de les utiliser. Puisque plusieurs Africains sont génétiquement bons en athlétisme, il a été institué "Les Jeux Spéciaux de l'Inde" particulièrement destinés aux Siddis. Pour leur offrir un entraînement propre à eux et leur permettre de rapporter quelques médailles au pays.

Ce peuple a adhéré à ce projet avec beaucoup d'enthousiasme et de patriotisme. Tous voulaient prouver leur amour pour leur pays, l'Inde. Les personnes des deux sexes s'y sont inscrites.

Plusieurs Siddis ont participé aux jeux avec ferveur tant au niveau local qu'au niveau national.

Comme Kamala Babu Siddi, qui a battu le record national du pentathlon junior dame à l'âge de 15 ans.

Elle a battu le record d'alors de 200 points

Jeux sud-asiatiques, 1993

Tout le monde me demande ça

Mais ce n'est pas quelque chose dont on se sépare, même après la mort.

Avez-vous lu tout cette histoire? Combien d'entre nous savent qu'elle existe même après sa retraite ?

Tout allait bien et le programme se déroulait dans de bonnes conditions. Mais cette joie fut de courte durée :

Contre toute attente, en 1993, tous les enfants ont reçu une lettre les informant que

Le programme prenait fin

On leur a demandé de rentrer chez eux

J'ignore pourquoi cette décision a été prise, au vu des résultats satisfaisants

Plusieurs enfants ont pleuré et ont repris le chemin de la maison.

Et ils perdirent de nouveau leur identité, cette identité qu'ils étaient en train de retrouver petit à petit.

Mais ils n'ont toujours pas perdu espoir. Ils continuent de s'entraîner, en espérant qu'ils représenteront leur pays un jour et qu'ils remporteront des victoires.

Notre nation n'est même pas capable de glaner une seule médaille

C'est ce manque que nous cherchons à combler

C'est notre rêve

Edit : Je n'ai jamais écrit de réponse avec tant d'images, mais c'était nécessaire de le faire. Ces gens ont besoin de jouir de leurs droits et de bénéficier du même traitement que vous et moi.

What are the most European cities that are not in Europe?

Lawrence N I have had many lives 31 oct.

My candidate is Saint-Louis, in Senegal. Located on an island in the middle of the Senegal River estuary, it is a sleeping beauty, a city of the borders. A mythical city! I know it by heart, I had a house there on the “northern tip of the island” for a few years. I traveled it in all directions, day and night.

It's a trendy, ruined, proud, dirty and dreamlike city.

She is beautiful like a woman of little virtue on the return, classy like a Signare, classic like France, mysterious like Africa. You burn your health there, you drank your pay there, you dream of the simple past, you fall in love there every night. I pushed back the night there in the immense grayness of the ocean at the moment when the sun of an entire continent rises. We sleep badly...

But it has beautiful remains, it continues to attract tourists! People come here for the architecture that is still standing, to play billiards at La Résidence, to be accepted by old Saint-Louisians, for the outdated flavor of the colonies, to go up the river aboard an old raft renovated into a hotel of luxury, to fantasize rice farms as far as the eye can see, to fish big and to say shit to fate.

Saint-Louis is the former capital of Senegal and French West Africa, long before Dakar. It is the first western city in Africa (before Cape Town) between the Sahel, the Sahara and the ocean.

There are no reefs on the coast of Saint-Louis, everything is sand. But beware: danger of grounding!
(The Medusa knows something about it!)

MAYEGATOU SOW

Introverts and Shy people

Posted by Dasha Taran Oct 31

In 2021, Sadio mane after opening a hospital he funded, went back to his mother's house ,picked a huge ripe mango off the floor, washed it and had a huge bite .Everyone roared in laughter and said. " The big stars eat mangoes like all the villagers." One of the most loved footballers in the world♥□♥□

Who is Khoudia Diop?

Beautiful Pictures Answered by Mary Ann Besser

Jun 11

Often known as the Melanin Goddess, Khoudia Diop was born in Senegal. She was teased as a child because of her extremely dark skin color. But after moving to Paris at the age of 15, she was approached by fashion houses suggesting she became a model. In 2016, at the age of 19, she moved to New York City for college. After being featured in a campaign called the “The Colored Girl Project”, her Instagram followers grew to 300,000. She is now the face of the French cosmetics brand “Make Up For Ever.” She is undeniably beautiful. For those who made fun of her in her youth, there is no doubt they’re biting their tongues now.

Source:

Khoudia Diop - Wikipedia

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Khoudia_Diop

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location

At western extreme of Africa

Official title of the state

Republique du Senegal (national)

The Republic of Senegal: owes its name to the Sénégal River that borders it to the east and north.

Flag description:

Three equal vertical bands of green (hoist side), yellow, and red with a small green five-pointed star centered in the yellow band; green represents Islam, progress, and hope; yellow signifies natural wealth and progress; red symbolizes sacrifice and determination; the star denotes unity and hope. Note: uses the popular Pan-African colors of Ethiopia; the colors from left to right are the same as those of neighboring Mali and the reverse of those on the flag of neighboring Guinea.

Neighbours

Mauritania on N., Mali on E., Guinea, Guinea-Bissau on S., the Gambia surrounded on three sides. Land boundaries; total 2,640 km. Border countries; Gambia 740 km, Guinea 330 km, Guinea-Bissau 338 km, Mali 419 km, Mauritania 813 km.

Founder of The Nation
Leopold Sedar Senghor who became the country's first President during independence. He was famous for his intellectual and literary achievements, his rule wa peaceful and largely benevolent, although the country was a one party state from 1966 until multiparty democracy was introduced in 1974.

Local division
14 Regions including Dakar

Government type
Republic - semi-presidential

Legislation chamber
Bicameral Parliament

Brief Political History:
Independent from France in 1960, Senegal was ruled by the Socialist Party for forty years until current President Abdoulaye WADE was elected in 2000. Senegal joined with The Gambia to form the nominal confederation of Senegambia in 1982, but the envisaged integration of the two countries was never carried out, and the union was dissolved in 1989. A southern separatist group sporadically has clashed with government forces since 1982, but Senegal remains one of the most stable democracies in Africa. Senegal has a long history of participating in international peacekeeping.

Form of State
Republic

Executive President elected on five-year term which is renewable once. A multi-party republic with two legislative houses. The Senate 100 seats, 35 members indirectly elected, 65 members appointed by the executive president. The National Assembly 150 seats, 90 members are elected in direct popular vote, 60 members are elected in proportional representation from party lists, members in both houses to serve for five-year terms.

Executive branch

President, Prime Minister appointed by the President, Unicameral Parliament. Separated by chief of State and head of Government. President elected by popular vote to serve for five-year terms, eligible for a second term. Head of Government to be appointed by the president with the consent of National Assembly.

Former Rulers

1960 – 1981 Leopold Sedar Senghor

1981 – 2000 Abdou Diouf

2000 - Maitre Abdulaye Wade

April, 2012 – Current Macky Sall

Judicial chamber
Constitutional Court; Council of State; Court of Final Appeals; Court of Appeals

Capital city

Dakar Altitude 40 mtrs/131 ft.

Geographic coordinates - 14.40N , 17.26W. Dakar lies at the western-most tip of the African continent at the Cap-Vert (CapeVerdes) peninsula, on the country's Atlantic coast. Derived from Ndakaaru, its first name as a village. Founded in 1857 at Ndakaaru, which called later "Dakar".

Names of main towns

Thies, Kaolack, Saint Louis, Ziguinchor, Diourbel

Date of independence

4th April, 1960

Religions (Major)

Muslim 94% (Sunni), Christian 5% (mostly Roman Catholic), Traditional beliefs 1%.

Main spoken languages

Wolof, French (official), Jola, Mandinka, various ethnic languages.

Currency unit

African Franc (CFA)=100 Centimes

Area in Km2

196,722.00

Country area comparison in Africa

35 out of 55 states

Demographic terms ;-

Average annual population growth rate 2.68 %

Birth rate 36.36 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 9.55 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 59.38 years

Male 57.48 years ; Female 61.34 years;

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male: 41, Female: 58

Average per capita income

USD 1, 900

Population density

65.2/km2

Urban population (%)

42

Contributor groups (%)

Farming, Fishing: 16, Industry: 19, Social service: 65

Main Export Items

Groundnuts products, petroleum products, phosphates, fish

Economy is based on

Agriculture and fishery

Climate

Tropical; Hot & humid

Extremes;-

Lowest point; The Atlantic coast 0 mtr.

Highest point; Unnamed location (near Nepen Diakha) 581 mtrs.

Weather of the Capital city (Dakar) average annual temperature 23.60c.

Altitude
40 mtrs/131 ft

Hottest Month
September-October 24-32oc.

Coldest Month
January 18-26oc.

Driest Month
April 1mm average Rf.

Measures

Metric system.

Time zone

GMT/UTC+0

Public holidays

January 1 (New year), April 4 (Independence), May 1 (labour day), All Muslim holidays, Islamic holyday of Yamui-Ashura (10th day of the Islamic new year), December 25 (X-mas), Christian holidays of Easter, Ascension, All saints, Assumption.
Ethnic groups

Wolof 44 %, Pular 23 %, Serer 14 %, Jola 3 %, Mandinka 4%, Soninke 2%, others 9%, few Europeans and Lebanese 1%.

Topographic & Environmental concern

Low rolling plains cover most of Senegal rising some what in the S.E, Swamp and Jungles are in S.W. Deforestation, overgrazing, overfishing off-the Senegal Atlantic coast, desertification, soil erosion, wildlife populations threatened by poaching. Environment: wildlife populations threatened by poaching; deforestation; overgrazing; soil erosion; desertification; overfishing.

Economy Overview

In January 1994, Senegal undertook a bold and ambitious economic reform program with the support of the international donor community. This reform began with a 50% devaluation of Senegal's currency, the CFA franc, which was linked at a fixed rate to the French franc. Government price controls and subsidies have been steadily dismantled. After seeing its economy contract by 2.1% in 1993, Senegal made an important turnaround, thanks to the reform program, with real growth in GDP averaging over 5% annually during 1995-2004. Annual inflation had been pushed down to the low single digits. As a member of the West African Economic and Monetary Union (WAEMU), Senegal is working toward greater regional integration with a unified external tariff and a more stable monetary policy. Senegal still relies heavily upon outside donor assistance, however. Under the IMF's Highly Indebted Poor Countries debt relief program, Senegal will benefit from eradication of two-thirds of its bilateral, multilateral, and private sector debt.

Industry

Agro-processing, phosphates mining, fish processing, construction materials fertilizer production, petrol-refining, ship repair, mining i.e. iron ore, zircon & gold.

Chief crops

Peanuts (chief export), millet, rice, corn, sorghum, cotton, vegetables : cattle, poultry, pigs, fish.

Natural resources

Phosphates, Gold, Iron ore, Fish.

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 12

Grassland: 16

Forest woods: 20

Other: 52

Marine:

Coastline; 531 km.

Commercial Sea ports:-

Dakar, Ziguinchor, Kaolack

Development prospect;-

The European debt crisis and a slow global economy could weaken demand for Senegalese exports, mainly phosphates, fish, cement and gold. Remittances from emigrants, currently amounting to 10% of GDP, could also continue to fall. Senegal's agricultural sector, despite grand projects launched to boost food production, remains limited by insufficient rainfall and high costs of production. The relatively low value of cash crops such as peanuts, traditionally Senegal's main export crop, also hampers growth.

Large infrastructure projects, such as Dakar's new $460m airport due to open in 2012 and a new toll road linking Dakar with the suburbs and secondary towns, have helped reduce unemployment, but there are concerns over the quality of budgetary spending.

Senegal has mined phosphates for many years but is now looking to gold and oil to improve its economic performance. Oil companies plan to drill three wells in 2012, including two on blocks held by First Australian Resources and one in a block of the joint Senegal-Guinea-Bissau zone held by Ophir Energy and Noble Energy.

Gold projects offer the most immediate boost to export revenues. The Sabodala mine in the southeast produced 4.5tn of gold in its second year of production in 2010. South Africa's Randgold is developing the 60tn mine at Massawa, but its processing demands cannot be met with the country's current energy supply. The Oromin Joint-Venture Group plans to begin production at the 44tn Golouma mine in 2013. Meanwhile, the gold-producing region now hosts thousands of artisanal miners who have joined the rush. Things are developing at a much slower pace for the country's maiden iron-ore project. Global steel giant ArcelorMittal agreed to develop the 750m tn iron ore mine at Falémé in 2007. Since then, the company has not made many steps forward at the mine or with the associated port and rail projects. In September, mining minister Abdoulaye Baldé announced that he was starting judicial and other proceedings to cancel the deal.

Senegal says arrested breakaway Casamance rebels

Authorities in Senegal said Friday they had arrested members of a rebel group campaigning for the independence of the Casamance region, and bluntly warned "those who seek to destabilise" the country.

"There were indeed rebels who were arrested during the latest demonstrations," government spokesman Oumar Gueye said, responding to questions about reports in the press.

"Those who seek to destabilise our country are going to get cold feet," he said.

Gueye gave no details about the arrests, but social media said those detained were members of the Movement of Democratic Forces of Casamance (MFDC).

They had come to the capital Dakar to attend anti-government protests staged on Wednesday by an opposition coalition called Yewwi Askan Wi, according to those reports.

Yewwi Askan Wi's leading figure is Ousmane Sonko, mayor of Casamance's main town Ziguinchor.

Legislative elections take place in Senegal on July 31, and tensions are high after the Constitutional Cort banned Sonko and several other opposition leaders from contesting the vote.

Sonko and others threatened during Wednesday's protest to prevent the elections from taking place if Yewwi Askan Wi was barred.

Sonko's party did not reply to an AFP request to comment on the government's announcement.

Senegal's southern-most region, almost separated from the rest of the country by the tiny state of The Gambia, Casamance has a distinct culture and language, derived from its past as a former Portugese colony.

The MFDC has led a low-intensity campaign since 1982 that has claimed several thousand lives.

However, the conflict had mostly lain dormant until Senegal launched a major offensive last year designed to drive out the rebels.

In a clash on January 24, four Senegalese soldiers were killed and seven were captured alive and taken across the border to The Gambia. The rebels released the hostages the following month.

In March, the army launched a new operation in which it claimed to have destroyed several rebel bases for the loss of one soldier and eight wounded.

mrb/lal/sba/ri/bp

News Nigeria

Currently on holiday, Sadio Mané decided to head to his home village in Bambali to have a match with his childhood friends despite the torrential rain.

Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

32m

The Senegalese striker then presented the CAN trophy to the locals 🏆

Never forget your roots

News Nigeria
Sadio Mane is transforming his village to a town.
Posted by

Aniekpeno Ekong

56m

He built a £455,000 hospital and €250,000 school in his village, Bambali.

He gives each family €70 monthly.

He provided 4G internet for his people.

He is building a fuel station and post office in his village.

2,000 people live in his village.

Sadio Mane gave laptops and $400 each to the best performing students of Bambali High School.

He gives free sportswear to kids in the village.

Top 24 Richest And Poorest Countries Of Africa – 2020 Edition

By Stephanie Rheingold Last updated Oct 23, 2021

Senegal

Error! Filename not specified. Credit: Wikipedia

> Senegal is limited in natural resources, forcing most of its economy to be based in agriculture, tourism and foreign exchange of crops and fish. Senegal has a population of 16.74 million, a GDP of $25.32 billion and a GDP per capita of $1,510.20. Tourism in Senegal is a vital component of its economy, and they continue to pour money into that.
>
> Historic sites, national parks and nature reserves in Senegal are a significant source attracting tourists from all over the world.
> As long as the rest of the economy can stay strong, Senegal has a solid outlook going forward. As public investment in infrastructure, agriculture, and energy are keeping the fiscal deficit at 3.6% of GDP in 2018 and 2019, and expected to continue to do so during 2020.
>
> Nominal GDP Rank: #18
> Nominal GDP Per Capita Rank: #25

Dasha Taran

.

Follow

Controller at DeLine Box & Display (2019–present)Thu

Sadio Mané: "Why would I want 10 Ferraris, 20 diamond watches, or two planes? What will these objects do for me and for the world? I was hungry, and I had to work in the field; I survived hard times, played football barefooted, I did not have an education and many other things, but today with what I earn thanks to football, I can help my people. I built schools, a stadium, we provide clothes, shoes, food for people who are in extreme poverty. I do not need to display luxury cars, luxury homes, trips and even planes. I prefer that my people receive a little of what life has given me." 🙏

Senegalese ruling party member calls for attacks on Walfadjri media comp journalists

Senegalese policemen in Dakar on June 17, 2022. During a June 21 Facebook video, Talla Sylla, a member of the ruling APR party's youth branch, called for attacks on the privately owned Walfadjri media company and its journalists. (Seyllou/AFP)

Dakar, July 6, 2022 — Senegalese authorities should investigate a call by Talla Sylla, a member of the ruling Alliance for the Republic (APR) party's youth branch, to burn down the privately owned Walfadjri media company and attack its journalists, ensure the safety of the journalists and the outlet, and allow the press to work freely, the Committee to Protect Journalists said Wednesday.

Sylla, a member of Cojer (Convergence of Young Republicans), called for the arson and attacks on the Walfadjri journalists during a June 21 Facebook Live interview posted by privately owned news website Xibar24, according to CPJ's review of the video. Walfadjri shares offices and journalists with Walf TV, one of its subsidiaries, and its radio, daily newspaper, and website branches.

In the video, Sylla expressed displeasure over Walf TV's critical reporting on Senegalese President Macky Sall, although he did not cite a specific report, and added, "In other countries, they would have burned Walfadjri. Walfadjri must be burned. We need an attack on the journalists of Walfadjri to end this television," according to CPJ's review.

"Senegalese authorities should investigate ruling APR party member Talla Sylla over his public call to attack and burn down the Walfadjri media company, and ensure the safety of Walfadjri's staff and journalists," said Angela Quintal, CPJ's Africa program coordinator, in Durban, South Africa. "When a member of Senegal's ruling party advocates for violence against journalists, it sends a chilling message that such violence is acceptable in the eyes of the government."

On July 1, Sylla called Walf TV director Moustapha Diop and apologized for the remarks in the video, emphasizing that the animosity was directed toward the management of the broader Walfadjri company and not Walf TV staff in particular, Diop told CPJ by phone. CPJ called Sylla and Seydou Guèye, a spokesperson for Cojer and the ruling APR party, but Sylla's line did not connect, and Guèye did not answer.

Diop and Bamba Kassé, the secretary-general of the Senegalese journalists' union (SYNPICS), is working on filing a joint complaint against Sylla, they told CPJ by phone. On July 4, a bailiff was ordered to serve Sylla with a direct summons, as is necessary before the complaint could be filed to a prosecutor, but the bailiff has not been able to reach Sylla, Diop told CPJ.

In a statement posted on their Facebook page, SYNPICS called Sylla's comments a "threat to the entire Senegalese press."